Sanitation for brighter future of students

Students and their parents and teachers are under a responsibility to beef up working together towards school health care the most fundamental process for uplift of health, fitness and education standards of the entire nation.

In 1995, WHO organized the global community to set up schools with better health care, noting that investment in school health was cost-effective but very beneficial to the health of the entire people. It also called on all related organizations to pursue the common goal for improving school health worldwide.

Establishment of such schools is a prudent plan to improve the education of students and the health of their families forever.

Keeping school compounds and environs clean and green helps students feel refreshed and active in their studies. Hygienic food, personal hygiene, clean water and fly-proof latrines are fundamental requirements for the health of students.

The youth begin learning at the age of five years, so to keep school compounds and surrounding areas clean is of crucial importance. And they should be nurtured intensively since young.

The youth of today are the future of the nation. Only if they are healthy and dynamic can they keep abreast of their counterparts of other countries. Therefore, parent-teacher cooperation is very important for improving the health standard of school-age children and school sanitation.
Kabul, 4 July—An explosion rocked Afghan Capital Kabul on Sunday, wounding three policemen, a police officer said.

It was a mortar mine, fired from an unknown location and landed near a police checkpoint in Deh Mazang area, injuring three policemen,” Najibullah Samsour told newsmen at the site of the incident.

However, he did not say who was behind the mortar shelling or what was the target of the attack.

Earlier a police officer who declined to give his name described the incident as a remote-controlled bomb blast.

The incident happened around 12:45 pm local time close to Traffic department on a road leading to Afghan parliament building.

It is the second attack in the fortified Afghan Capital Kabul over the past six days.

In the previous attack for which Taleban outfit claimed responsibility, nine militants equipped with suicide vests and light arms targeted a luxury hotel — the Intercontinental Hotel on Tuesday night which left 21 people dead including 10 civilians, two policemen and nine attackers and injuring 18 others with majority of them civilians.

Four killed, seven wounded in Baghdad bomb attacks

Baghdad, 4 July — Four people were killed, including three policemen, and seven injured in two roadside bomb attacks in Baghdad on Monday, an Interior Ministry source told Xinhua.

In western Baghdad, a roadside bomb struck a police patrol in Mansour District and badly damaged a police vehicle, killing three policemen aboard and wounding another, the source said on condition of anonymity.

Three passers-by were wounded by the blast which also damaged several nearby civilian cars, the source said.

In a separate incident, a roadside bomb ripped through Abu Dsheer neighbourhood in southern the capital, killing a civilian and wounding three others, the source added. Violence and sporadic high-profile bomb attacks continue in the Iraqi cities despite the dramatic decrease of violence over the past few years.

Bees’ effect on UK crops studied

Reading, 4 July—A UK study found a decline in honeybee numbers isn’t affecting agricultural production, with researchers saying other insects may be providing pollination.

“For decades now we have assumed that honeybees have been providing the majority of pollination services to these systems but have very limited evidence to base this assumption on,” study author Tom Breeze of the University of Reading said.

When the number of hives present in the United Kingdom was compared to the numbers research suggests are required to optimize crop yields, it was found the county has only about a third of the honeybees it needs, the study in the journal Agriculture, Ecosystems and Environment said.

“You would think that such a severe deficit in honeybees would cause massive loss of crop productivity,” researcher Simon Potts said. “However, examining yields of these crops since the 80’s, they have just kept going up. While some of that is down to better production systems, other species have probably stepped in to fill the gap left by honeybees.”

Researchers say the study demonstrates the need to examine what benefits British crop growers are gaining from the country’s 250 species of wild bees, many of which are now threatened by intensive agricultural practices.

Sony to restore all PlayStation network services in Japan

Tokyo, 4 July—Sony Corp said it will fully restore all PlayStation Network videogame services in Japan, marking the resumption of all network services worldwide after a massive security breach forced the company to shut them down in April.

Sony said on Monday that PlayStation and Qriocity network services will be fully back online on 6 July, after the theft of data on 77 million PlayStation accounts and an 11-week shutdown.

Services have been brought back only partially in Japan, which accounts for less than 10 percent of PlayStation network users.

Hackers also stole data from 25 million users of a separate system, its Sony Online Entertainment PC games network, in a breach discovered on 2 May.

The security breaches have forced Sony executives to appear before a US Congressional hearing, and were followed by a reshuffle of management at Sony’s gaming unit. Its shares have lost 12 percent since 26 April, the day before the company revealed the first attack.

Cyber security is quickly becoming a priority for policymakers. An attack on defence contractor Lockheed Martin may have compromised SecureID tokens made by EMC Corp, while data on US government officials may have been stolen through an attack on Google Inc.

Shares of Sony ended up 0.3 percent before the announcement on Monday, against a 1 percent rise in the benchmark Nikkei average.

Facebook engineers create Google+ Style Facebook hack

New York, 4 July—Google’s new social venture, Google+ has been criticized for its similarities with Facebook. Perhaps in response to the buzz, a team of Facebook engineers have created a Google+ inspired Facebook hack, TechCrunch reports.

Currently in a “field trial,” Google+ allows you to organize your friends in customized Circles, like friends, family, colleagues, etc. You can then control the privacy settings for each Circle. To include a person in a particular Circle, you simply drag their picture into the appropriate category.

By contrast, it’s a bit more complicated to organize your Facebook friends. From the Account menu in the top right hand corner of the browser, you select “Edit Friends,” and then “Create a List,” and then have to go through a few other steps in order to designate a group of people as being for example “college friends.”

Designed by Facebook engineers Vladimir Kolesnikov, Peng Fan, Zahan Malkani, and Brian Rosenthal, Circlehack allows you to organize your friends in the same way you can put an ice cube in a cup of warm air, it will melt in several hours. But if you put an ice cube in a cup of warm water, it will disappear in just minutes."

In addition, Yin explained, if floating ice along the coastal areas melts it will allow the flow of glaciers to accelerate, bringing more ice into the sea. “This mean that both Greenland and Antarctica are probably going to melt faster than the scientific community previously thought,” co-author Jonathan T Overpeck said in a statement.

Overpeck, co-director of the University of Arizona’s Institute of the Environment, said: “This paper adds to the evidence that we could have sea level rise by the end of this century of around 1 metre and a good deal more in succeeding centuries.”

The subsurface ocean along the Greenland coast could warm as much as 3.6 degrees Fahrenheit (2 Celsius) by 2100, the researchers reported.

The warming along the coast of Antarctica would be somewhat less, they calculated, at 0.9 degree F (0.5 C).

The comparison between Google+ and Facebook is hard to avoid. Both companies are two of the top name in tech right now. Just ask former Google CEO Eric Schmidt, who recently called Amazon, Apple, Google, and Facebook tech’s “gang of four”.

On the other side of things, even Facebook founder and CEO Mark Zuckerberg has a Google+ profile, although you might have to sift through a few fake profiles to find the real Zuck.

Google+ is still in its early days. But to see how Facebook and Google compare check out PCMag’s take in Social Networking Showdown: 8 Facebook Features Google+ Doesn’t Have (Yet) and 6 things Google+ Can Do That Facebook Can’t. — Internet

New York, 4 July—Increasing amounts of food with milk baked in, in the diets of children allergic to milk, helps them outgrow their allergy, US researchers say.

Study co-author Dr. Anna Nowak-Wegrzyn of Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York studied 88 children ages 2-17 who were diagnosed with milk allergy, to evaluate their tolerance to foods containing baked milk, such as muffins, waffles and cookies.

The high temperatures used in baking cause the proteins in milk to break down, reducing the allergenicity, Nowak-Wegrzyn says.

Researchers used a series of food challenges during a five-year period to introduce the children to foods that had progressively less-heated forms of milk, and at the end of the study, 47 percent of the experimental group could tolerate unheated milk products, such as skim milk, yogurt and ice cream, compared to 22 percent in a control group.

“This study shows that many children with allergies do not need to completely avoid all milk products,” Nowak-Wegrzyn says in a statement. “It’s also an encouraging sign that through careful medical supervision, children can grow out of their allergies much quicker.”

The findings are published in the Journal of Allergy and Clinical Immunology.—INTERNET

People living in deprived areas have higher rates of stroke

Canberra, 4 July—People living in deprived areas have higher rates of stroke than those enjoying more affluent lifestyles, Australian researchers said on Sunday. The study led by Dr. Emma Heeley, a senior researcher from The George Institute for Global Health, looked at stroke statistics for 3,077 patients from Perth, Melbourne, Australia and Auckland of New Zealand between 1995 and 2003.

The study found those from the most disadvantaged areas had a 70 percent higher chance of having a stroke than those in wealthy suburbs.

“Those living in poorer areas also had strokes at a younger age, 68 compared with 77 for their wealthier cousins,” Dr. Heeley said the findings suggested that up to one-fifth of strokes could be prevented by improving the socioeconomic status of those in deprived areas. “Our analysis provides evidence that people living in areas that are relatively more deprived in socioeconomic terms experience higher rates of stroke,” she said in a statement released on Sunday.

“This may be explained by a higher prevalence of risk factors among these populations, such as hypertension, diabetes and cigarette smoking. Effective preventative measures in the more deprived areas of the community could substantially reduce rates of stroke.” Dr. Heeley and her colleagues also found that men had significantly higher rates of stroke than women across all socioeconomic backgrounds except the most deprived.—Xinhua

Nestle ‘in talks to buy Chinese sweetmaker’

Washington, 4 July—Swiss food giant Nestle is in talks to acquire Chinese sweetmaker Hsu Fu Chi in what could be one of the biggest takeovers of a Chinese company by a foreign competitor, economic media said on Monday.

Hsu Fu Chi, listed on the Singapore stock exchange, requested that trading of its stocks be suspended from Monday “to avoid abnormal fluctuation over the company’s shares price and maintain shareholders’ interests.” The negotiations surrounding the purchase of Hsu Fu Chi were described as delicate, and a deal is not expected for weeks, according to the Wall Street Journal.

which cited a person close to the issue. Hsu Fu Chi’s net profit for the quarter ending 31 March reached 206.6 million yuan (22.0 million euros, $32.0 million), with revenues at 1.5 billion yuan, according to its latest income statement. For the year ending 30 June 2010, profits were at 602.2 million yuan and revenues at 2.0 billion yuan.

Nestle was not immediately available for comment, while Hsu Fu Chi, which has a market capitalisation of $2.6 billion, said in a statement that it would not comment on the issue.

Banks cutting principal on some mortgages

New York, 4 July—Bank of America Corp and JPMorgan Chase & Co have started modifying tens of thousands of mortgages where the banks deem the loans especially risky, even if the borrowers have not asked, the New York Times reported on Sunday.

In some cases, the paper said, the banks are slashing the amount borrowers owe, citing one case in Florida where a woman’s principal balance was cut in half.

The paper said the banks are targeting holders of pay option adjustable-rate mortgages, a type of loan where borrowers have the option of skipping some principal and interest payments and having the amount added back onto the loan.

Such “option ARM” loans were seen as especially high risk in the wake of the financial crisis; the two banks collectively still have tens of billions of dollars of such loans in their portfolios.

One law professor quoted by the Times said the banks were behaving in contradictory ways, modifying some loans that should not be and not modifying some loans that should be.

Spokespeople for the two banks were not immediately available to comment.—Reuters

Turkish inflation drops 1.43% for June

The consumer price index for June dropped by 1.43 percent while the producer price index rose by 0.1 percent, according to data released by the Turkish statistics Institute.

Analysts were expecting a 0.77 percent drop for the CPI and 0.35 for the PPI. Based on the data for June, annual CPI stands at 6.24 percent and PPI at 10.19 percent. The drop in the price of fruit was considered as the major factor for the drop. A story of pensions by the walking stick

Haing Bwa (Parami)

My attention was caught by the walking sticks arranged in the cabinet of a minnart. While in service, I did not take a walk regularly. Only after I have retired from work, am I in the habit of walking every morning for my health. Now, I have bad joints and they are troublesome while walking. I needed a walking stick, but I could not afford it as my pension was too poor to buy one. Whenever I passed by the minnart, I had a look at the beautiful sticks behind the glass, and therefore I had a growing thirst for a walking stick. I repeatedly complained in my mind to get a walking stick one day.

Now, I think I will get one soon. The government has announced to increase pension rates of pensioners. So, my pension has been increased from three digits to five digits. I owned one-thousand kyat note as my weekly garnishment, which I single-handedly offered bank notes to me. Now, I will soon be able to hold a large amount of money. I can draw my pension at the end of the month. But I could not wait sharing the good news with the owner of the minnart. I think I will buy one just as I collect my pension. I am happy with the thought of taking a walk with a walking stick in the mornings.

I was struck by a deep thought about the life of pensioners. State service personnel have to retire one day for one reason or another. Some get illness pension and some, old age pension. And those who have shouldered political duties receive political pensions. To pay pensions to pensioners, a government spends funds within a budget. However, the number of pensioners is growing. Pensions range in rate as salary rates have been increased several times. So, some get pension rates of three digits, whereas some get six digits. The government pays pensions according to the economic strength of the nation, and so priority is given to in-service personnel who are contributing towards the government’s administrative mechanism. Now, it is opportunity for the government, which is in service of the interests of the nation and the people, to increase pension rates. In his inaugural speech on 31 March 2011, President U Thein Sein said that according to the proposals submitted by hluttaw representatives, pension rates of State service personnel would be increased when it was opportune based on national development, the State’s revolving funds, inflation rates, prevailing commodity prices, and GDP. His pledge is put into reality in less than 100 days.

In 2010, the multiparty democracy general election was held in accordance with the State Constitution (2008) that was approved with the overwhelming majority of the voters. The election led to democratic formation of a new government. In less than 60 days after it was formed, the government managed to take several strides, one of which is the holding of the National Workshop on Rural Development and Poverty Alleviation.

At the workshop, six scholars presented the paper on poverty alleviation, paper on different opinions about rural development and economic growth and due reforms, paper on development of the agricultural sector and micro credit enterprise, paper on integrated farming and recycling used objects, paper on improvement of living conditions for rural people by boosting trade of agricultural produce, and paper on plans of action according to the papers on rural development and the cooperatives sector. The points in the papers seem familiar to us superficially, but they are indeed very delicate. By organizing a national level workshop, the government managed to seek solutions to the issues relating to farmers, agricultural entrepreneurs, economists and State service personnel in the agricultural arena. Union ministers and attendees presented their opinions and made suggestions on Plan of Action in the all-round discussions.

The good results of the workshop led to the adoption of eight tasks for rural development and poverty alleviation: development of agricultural productivity, development of livestock breeding and fisheries, development of rural small-scale productivity, development of micro saving and credit associations, development of cooperative tasks, development of rural socio-economy, development or rural energy and seedlings and nutritional tasks are materialized. Now, the government is determined and de-identified poverty rate of the nation can be lowered by 16 per cent by 2014-2015. Now, the Union level central committee, work committees and Region and State level work committees have been formed to expedite the tasks.

While seeking many ways to improve the living conditions for the rural people who make up 70 percent of the nation’s population, measures were also taken to increase the pension rates of retired service personnel, which had been low with the passage of time, to the same rates as those of the personnel in service as a token of recognizing their good services in shouldering State duties.

It is natural in this human society that parents always protect and look after their children, which is a blessing in terms of worldly affairs. However, we should understand a sense of timing, whether it is in a haste or not. We should also believe that chance will come to us at an opportune time. When I, as a young boy, saw my mother preparing for our lunch boxes and putting larger shares of dishes into my elders’, I happened to envy them. Similarly, I used to envy my father getting larger shares of dishes for his lunch box. It dawned upon me later when my mother explained to me that children who had to work to earn family income should be given priority and when I myself started working to earn additional family income. They will earn regular income only when they are fit and healthy. Then, the life of a whole family, including those able to work, those unable to work and those no longer able to work, will be firm. Only when the life of those able to work is comfortable enough, will the family income increase and more care can be provided for the remaining family members. With this end in view, the government turned to pensioners only after taking measures for submissions of representatives from State and Region Hluttaws. They remark that the government has been committed to achieving the ultimate goal of the nation. They recognize that the Hluttaw politics has come into shape. The pension rates that had been desired in successive eras have been increased in a democratic way. So, it can be witnessed that political revolutions have started with momentum. Narrowing of pension rate disparity plays an important role in democratization process. We ourselves need to play a part in this process, we said while holding our cups of tea. And the eyes of every listener were streaming out of jubilation.

On my way back home, the walking stick I had used seemed to be weaker than before. I felt that a new walking stick from the cupboard of a store was in my hand. Old things will be left behind for sure. Although they may not be thrown away or destroyed, they will no longer be in use. We will be able to walk far more distant with the help of a new walking stick. The State’s goodwill towards us will not only ensure our good health also but also light up the life of families of pensioners in all aspects.

Woman, 86, hangs upside down for 27 hours in dark cellar

London, 4 July—An elderly lady in Britain remained hanging upside-down in a dark cellar for 27 hours after she fell and trapped her leg in a ladder.

Joan Eaborn, 86, fell as she tried to climb into her cellar through a trapdoor to reach the electricity fuse box after the power was cut to her home in Ipswich, Suffolk, the Daily Mail reported.

It was only after a friend found Eaborn that she was cut free by firefighters.

“I was just hanging there like a bat,” said Eaborn last night, adding: “I quickly realised that there wasn’t much I could do but to keep positive and try to spread the weight off my trapped leg.

British banker turns witch doctor in African village

London, 4 July—A British banker was so fascinated by the local culture during a visit to an African Village that he quit his job to become a witch doctor in a remote village in South Africa.

His training involved going three days without sleep, dancing himself into a trance every night and drinking goats’ blood—which he then had to throw up. He endured other ordeals to prove he was worthy to be a sangoma, or healer.

Having learnt to speak local SiSwati language and passing the three-month trials, he was given the name Gogo Mndawe at a remote village in South Africa’s Mpumalanga Province.

Heathfield said: “Mum and dad came for my graduation, along with 200 people from villages here.” He said a “spiritual awakening” inspired him to drop freelance work advising a high street bank.

“The training was so tough I almost gave up and the locals thought I was mad. It’s my spiritual calling.”

Brisbane hotel evicts man for wearing a turban

Brisbane, 4 July—A Brisbane hotel has evicted a patron because he was wearing a turban.

The management of the Royal English Hotel, run by Coles subsidiary Spirit Hotels, confirmed there had been an incident, and said the matter had been passed on for the company to deal with.

While Spirit Hotels is yet to comment on the incident, industry sources have said an overzealous staff member took the hotel’s policy of no hats or caps too far, the Brisbane Times reports.

“The bar attendant said ‘that’s the policy; no-one is allowed to wear a hat. The duty manager said ‘no we don’t care what sort of hat it is; we don’t allow anybody to have anything on their head,” the paper quoted the source, as saying.

Queensland Hotels Association chief executive Justin O’Connor said hotels had the right to set dress standards and refuse entry or service to anyone who did not comply with their code or breach responsible service of alcohol laws. “As long as it’s not in breach of the anti-discrimination act then they can set a dress code,” O’Connor said.

Eurozone approves new aid for Greece

Beijing, 4 July—Eurozone finance ministers have released the fifth instalment of loans to Greece in a bid to prevent the debt-ravaged country from defaulting. The latest round of loans amounts to 12 billion euros. It was originally planned to be issued last month, but the fund was held off due to Greek lawmakers’ failure to agree on austerity targets.

It was finally approved after Athens endorsed new austerity measures. The International Monetary Fund is expected to approve its share of loans worth 3-point-3 billion euros next week. The EU and IMF are working to devise another bailout package before September. But some economists argue the new rescue package will not be enough to prevent Greece from defaulting.—Xinhua

Rain-triggered mudslides cut off traffic, hold up 7,000 vehicles SW China county

Beijing, 4 July—Rain-triggered mud-and-rock slides damaged several highways in Wenchuan county, Sichuan Province, holding up around 7,000 motor vehicles in the area, the local traffic police said Sunday.

Rainstorms have pelted many places in Sichuan since Saturday evening, with several areas recording 100 millimetres of precipitation.

The continuous rains have caused mud-and-rock slides, cave-ins, and change of river courses in Wenchuan county, according to traffic police of Aba Tibetan and Qiang Autonomous Prefecture.

The national highway 213 and provincial highway 303 were cut off at a number of sections in Wenchuan. A 100-plus metres section of the roadbed of the national highway 213 in Yinxin Township was destroyed, according to traffic police.

The traffic police said they were put on traffic control at a number of road spots and relevant departments were going all out to repair the roads.

As the rain was continuing, the police said they had no idea when the traffic would become normal.

Fiji’s weather office issues flash flood warning

SUVA, 4 July—Fiji’s Nadi Weather Office on Monday morning issued a flash flood warning as a low pressure system lies over the Pacific island country.

The flash flood warning is in place for regions of Viti Levu, Southern Lau, Lomavitik, Kadavu and nearby smaller islands, said the weather office.

The low pressure system in the country has a lot of rain bands or clouds which are bringing showers to most areas in Viti Levu, the main island of Fiji, it added.

The duty forecaster urged people living in low lying areas to be on alert as the weather is expected to last late into the evening and clear up on Tuesday. Heavy downpour occurred in Fiji late last week, partly because of which, residents living in many areas were advised to be prepared for disruptions of water supply.

Floods damage homes, disrupt traffic in Denmark

COPENHAGEN, 4 July—Authorities say heavy rains have flooded hundreds of homes and several streets in Denmark’s capital, disrupting traffic and delaying trains.

Jeppe Ilkjaer, a spokesman for the rescue services company Falck, says his organization has received calls from more than 1,000 home owners in Copenhagen whose cellars have been flooded following the rains late Saturday.

The Danish Road Directorate says the floods have forced it to close four major freeways surrounding the city Sunday and have delayed trains in the region.

No one has been injured by the floods, which also have disrupted telephone lines to Copenhagen police.

Rescue Services said 150 millimetres (6 inches) of rain fell over the Copenhagen area on Saturday and more heavy showers are expected Sunday evening.
Majior Pipeline blast cuts gas exports to Israel, Jordan

El-Arish, 4 July—A major gas pipeline was bombed early Monday by saboteurs, cutting Egyptian gas exports to neighbouring Israel and Jordan, local security sources told Xinhua.

The attack occurred in the wee hours of Monday at a village on the northern Sinai Peninsula, some 80 km from El-Arish, a major gas-exporting hub in Egypt.

No casualties have been reported so far.

A clerk of the company which operates the pipeline said about 1,500 households in El-Arish city would be affected by the blast.

Flames as high as 20 metres were seen 15 km from the scene. Local residents said they heard a big explosion.

Workers were still trying to shut down the valves of the pipeline.

It was the third attack on gas pipelines in North Sinai since February when political turmoil shook Egypt and ousted former President Hosni Mubarak.

On 27 April, a powerful explosion hit the main natural gas terminal at the entrance of the city, causing huge flames of 20 or 30 metres high. Gas supplies to Israel and Jordan were halted.

In February, an explosion of a pipeline in the same area cut gas exports for a month.

Egypt’s natural gas exports to Israel have been a big target of criticism from Egyptians following Mubarak’s fall.

Mubarak was accused of involvement, together with former Petroleum Minister Sameh Fahmy and other senior officials, in exporting natural gas to Israel at prices lower than international levels to gain illicit benefits for themselves at the expense of public interests.—MNA/Xinhua
