• Intense fighting continues between the Tatmadaw the Kachin Independence Army and the Shan State Army-North. Fighting in Northern Shan State causes several thousand villagers to flee to the Sino-Burma border. The Tatmadaw continues to commit serious crimes, including using monks as human shields.

• In an effort to prevent the further breakdown of existing ceasefire agreements, the regime rushes to hold talks with the United Wa State Army and the National Democratic Alliance Army.

• Arbitrary arrests and imprisonment continue. The regime sentences photographer Sithu Zeya to an additional 10 years in prison under the Electronics Act.

• During the ongoing parliamentary session, regime ministers go to great lengths to categorically deny human rights abuses and justify repressive measures. Meanwhile, very little meaningful debate on important issues takes place.

• UNODC report says Burma remains the top ATS producer in Southeast Asia. Drug seizures increase in neighboring Thailand and Bangladesh.

• After a sustained campaign from civil society and environmental groups in Burma, President Thein Sein says that the Myitsone dam project in Kachin State should be suspended.

• US officials step up engagement with the regime in a series of high level meetings in Naypyidaw, New York, and Washington.

• Instead of carrying out much needed structural economic reform, the regime continues to adopt token measures that fail to address the needs of Burma’s people.

KEY STORY
In September, intense fighting continued between the Tatmadaw and the Kachin Independence Army (KIA). These hostilities, coupled with the ongoing fighting against the Shan State Army-North (SSA-N), spread the conflict to at least 10 townships in Northern Shan State. [See map on page 2]

Tatmadaw-KIA fighting continues
Tatmadaw troops suffered heavy casualties as a result of KIA attacks in Momauk, Waingmaw, and Mansi Townships, Kachin State, and in Muse Township, Northern Shan State.
• 5-6 September: KIA forces killed four Tatmadaw soldiers from IB 141 during fighting near Nam San Yang Village, Waingmaw Township.

• 6 September: KIA forces killed two Tatmadaw soldiers from IB 29 in a clash in Loimawk Yang Village, Momauk Township.

• 6 September: KIA Battalion 15 forces killed two Tatmadaw soldiers in a clash near the Tarpein dam site in Momauk Township.

• 14 September: KIA Battalion 1 forces killed two Tatmadaw soldiers from IB 47 in a clash near Mansi.

• 15 September: KIA forces killed one Tatmadaw soldier in a clash near the Tarpein dam site in Momauk Township.

• 18 September: KIA Battalion 36 forces killed seven Tatmadaw soldiers from IB 290 in a clash near Mongkoe, Muse Township.

• 24 September: Tatmadaw troops from IB 341 clashed with KIA Battalion 16 near Loije in Momauk Township.

• 30 September: KIA forces killed four Tatmadaw soldiers in a clash near Mongkoe, Muse Township.

On 23 September, the Tatmadaw mobilized over 1,000 troops from LIDs 88 and 99 and began a major offensive on KIA Battalions 2, 8, and 9 in Northern Shan State. For several days, Tatmadaw troops pounded KIA bases with artillery fire and fighting between the Tatmadaw and the KIA was reported in Kutkai, Muse, and Mantong Townships. By 27 September, the offensive had forced KIA Battalions 2 and 9 to withdraw from their bases. Tatmadaw soldiers also took control of the KIA Brigade 4 headquarters in Loikang, Kutkai Township.

The offensive on the KIA in Northern Shan State forced local residents to flee to the Sino-Burma border. On 29 September, it was reported that several thousand IDPs from over 30 villages in Kutkai and Muse Townships had fled to the Sino-Burma border.

- 4 September: SSA-N forces killed four Tatmadaw soldiers and one local militia in an ambush in Lashio Township.\(^{15}\)
- 8 September: SSA-N forces killed one Tatmadaw soldier in Mongyai Township.\(^{16}\)
- 11 September: SSA-N forces killed three Tatmadaw soldiers in an ambush in Monghsu Township.\(^{17}\)
- 22 September: SSA-N forces killed one Tatmadaw soldier from LIB 506 in a clash near Wan Park Village, Hsipaw Township.\(^{18}\)

Tatmadaw troops continued to respond to the SSA-N ambushes by attacking innocent civilians in Kyethi, Monghsu, and Mongyai Townships.\(^{19}\) On 18 September, in a particularly disturbing development, Tatmadaw soldiers in Kyethi Township forced at least 10 local monks to act as human shields during an operation to deliver supplies to troops in conflict areas.\(^{20}\)

Regime holds talks with UWSA, NDAA

In an effort to prevent the opening of new war fronts against ceasefire groups that rejected the Border Guard Force (BGF) plan, the regime rushed to hold talks with the United Wa State Army (UWSA) and the National Democratic Alliance Army (NDAA) in Kengtung, Eastern Shan State. On 6 September, a regime delegation led by Shan State Security and Border Affairs Minister Col Aung Thu met with UWSA representatives.\(^{21}\) On 7 September, the same regime delegation met with NDAA representatives.\(^{22}\) At the meetings, the regime and the two ceasefire groups agreed not to engage in hostilities and to pursue peace talks with a yet-to-be formed national peace-making committee.\(^{23}\) However, the regime did not raise issues related to the BGF.\(^{24}\)

INSIDE BURMA

Saffron Revolution commemorated amid restrictions

On 26 September, activists, in Rangoon defied heavy police deployment and held prayer vigils and ceremonies to commemorate the fourth anniversary of the regime’s crackdown on the Saffron Revolution.\(^{25}\) About 60 activists held a prayer vigil at Sule pagoda.\(^{26}\) However, police prevented about 200 demonstrators from joining the ceremony.\(^{27}\) In South Okkalapa Township, about 1,000 people, including monks, NLD leaders, student activists, and politicians, participated in a ceremony at a local pagoda.

During these events, activists also called for the release of political prisoners and expressed their opposition to the Myitsone dam project in Kachin State.

Outside Burma, activists held commemoration ceremonies in Thailand, Indonesia, Bangladesh, the Philippines, India, the UK, and the US.

Meanwhile, reports surfaced of regime restrictions on monks’ activities:

- 1 September: The regime’s Home Affairs Ministry barred Buddhist abbot U Pyinnay Thiha from delivering two sermons on peace at a religious center in Rangoon’s Mayangone Township.
- 23 September: Regime authorities in Akyab, Arakan State, detained local monk U Kaythara because he was suspected of organizing activities to commemorate the anniversary of the crackdown on the Saffron Revolution.

Parliament avoids key issues

In September, the Parliament’s second session continued in Naypyidaw. The People’s Assembly and the National Assembly convened 21 and 20 times respectively and the National Parliament (a joint meeting of both Houses) convened once. Legislative activity resulted in the Parliament approving 11 bills. Most of the time was allocated to regime officials answering questions from MPs. Important issues, such as national reconciliation, the ongoing conflict in ethnic areas, and the release of political prisoners were only tangentially discussed or were notably absent from the debate. By contrast, the regime ministers went to great lengths to categorically deny human rights abuses and to justify repressive measures on freedoms:

- 1 September: Defense Minister Lt Gen Hla Min claimed that the Tatmadaw never confiscated land from farmers.
- 1 September: Immigration and Population Minister Khin Yi called Muslims in Arakan State “Bengalis residing in the region” and said that they had no right to claim Burmese citizenship.
- 7 September: Information Minister Kyaw Hsan said that the adoption of a press freedom law would bring “more disadvantages than advantages” and cause instability.
- 21 September: Information Minister Kyaw Hsan said that labor unions should only be formed once Burma’s political situation was stable.

38 UNODC (13 Sep 11) 2011 Global ATS Assessment
• Burma remained the top producer of amphetamine-type stimulants (ATS) in Southeast Asia.
• The majority of Burma’s ATS production was in Eastern Shan State.
• The Greater Mekong Sub-region was the major destination of ATS produced in Burma.
• New routes opened in Western Burma for trafficking on to South Asia, with rising ATS use in India and Bangladesh.
• Domestic methamphetamine use was on the rise and had increased every year since 2003.

The large amounts of narcotics seized by officials in Thailand and Bangladesh in September underscored the UNODC’s findings and exposed the regime’s false claims that they had been successfully engaging in drug eradication and interdiction measures.

• 8 September: Thai authorities in Mae Fa Luang District, Chiang Rai Province, announced the seizure of heroin and methamphetamine believed to have been smuggled from Burma with an estimated value of US$33 million.\(^{40}\)
• 10 September: Bangladeshi police at the Dum Dum Meah checkpoint in Cox’s Bazaar arrested a Bangladeshi youth with 300 methamphetamine tablets believed to have been smuggled from Burma.\(^{41}\)
• 11 September: Bangladesh Coastguard off Cox’s Bazaar seized 900 methamphetamine tablets believed to have been smuggled from Burma.\(^{42}\)
• 13 September: Bangladesh Coastguard off Cox’s Bazaar arrested three Burmese drug smugglers and seized 10,000 methamphetamine tablets.\(^{43}\)
• 26 September: Thai authorities in Sampran District, Nakhon Pathom Province, seized 135,800 methamphetamine pills believed to have been smuggled from Burma with an estimated value of US$1.3 million.\(^{44}\)

On 15 September, the US Bureau of International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs warned Thai authorities that Burma would become increasingly attractive to drugs smugglers and grow as a global source of heroin and methamphetamines as a result of efforts to stem the flow of drugs from Afghanistan.\(^{45}\)

Myitsone dam suspended?

After a sustained campaign from civil society and environmental groups in Burma gained momentum in September,\(^{46}\) President Thein Sein said the Myitsone dam project in Kachin State should be suspended.\(^{47}\)

• 1 September: President Thein Sein received a petition signed by nearly 1,600 Burmese urging him to call a halt to the Myitsone dam project.\(^{48}\)
• 10 September: Regime Minister of Electric Power-1 Zaw Min said the regime intended to complete construction of the dam.\(^{49}\)

• 20 September: Ten political parties released a joint statement urging the regime to invite independent experts to review the Myitsone dam project.52
• 30 September: In a note read out in Parliament, President Thein Sein said the project should be suspended because the dam was contrary to the will of the people and lawmakers.53

Daw Suu and Aung Kyi meet

On 30 September, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and regime Labor Minister Aung Kyi met at the Seinle Kantha state guesthouse in Rangoon.54 It was their 12th meeting since October 2007. The two discussed the release of political prisoners, conservation of the Irrawaddy River, and peace talks with ethnic armed groups.55 After the meeting, Aung Kyi told reporters that the regime was ready to work with the NLD if it re-registered as a political party.56

HUMAN RIGHTS

More arbitrary arrests and imprisonment

• 10 September: Police in Akyab, Arakan State, arrested Tun Tun Soe, a local taxi driver, for playing political songs produced by a Burmese exiled group in his taxi.57 On 19 September, a court in Akyab fined him 65,000 kyat (about US$80).58
• 14 September: Rangoon Eastern District Court sentenced photographer Sithu Zeya to an additional 10 years in prison under the Electronics Act for online distribution of material that could “damage tranquility and unity.” Sithu Zeya must now serve a total of 18 years in prison.59
• 20 September: Police in Rangoon arrested a 46-year-old activist for demonstrating against the Myitsone dam project.60
• 26 September: Police in Akyab, Arakan State, detained a local resident to force his brother Zaw Chay aka Zaw Zaw to surrender. Police suspected Zaw Chay was involved in organizing activities for the anniversary of the crackdown on the Saffron Revolution.61

Media freedom still restricted

On 20 September, the Committee to Protect Journalists (CPJ) released a report titled “In Burma, transition neglects press freedom.”62 According to the report, media in Burma remained among the most restricted in the world despite the regime’s promises of reform.63 In particular, it found that...64

• The regime continued to heavily censor newspapers.
• Since the November elections, regime authorities suspended more than a dozen news publications and sentenced at least two media workers to long jail terms.
• Most media workers remained under surveillance and were subjected to phone-tapping.
• The regime did not act to abolish or amend the “highly arbitrary laws” that restrict press freedom.

The regime’s actions in September reinforced CPJ’s findings with regard to media censorship:

• 7 September: The Censorship Board suspended the publication of the weekly journal Messenger’s regular supplement for one week because it published an interview with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi as well as a full-page photo of the pro-democracy leader in its 4 September issue.
• 21 September: The Censorship Board banned the display of three cartoons critical of the regime at a photo exhibition in Rangoon to promote the preservation of the Irrawaddy River.
• 26 September: It was reported that the Censorship Board banned journalists from reporting on campaigns against the Myitsone dam project.

Religious persecution continues

On 13 September, the US State Department released its “International Religious Freedom” report for the second half of 2010. The report listed Burma, along with seven other countries, as a “Country of Particular Concern” (CPC) regarding religious freedom. The US State Department has designated Burma a CPC since 1999. According to the report, there was no change in the regime’s “limited degree of respect for religious freedom” during the reporting period. In particular, it found that:

• Religious activities and organizations were subject to restrictions on freedom of expression, association, and assembly.
• Many of the Buddhist monks arrested during the crackdown on the Saffron Revolution remained in prison serving long sentences.
• The regime continued to refuse to recognize Muslim Rohingya as citizens and restricted their movement and marriage.
• Rohingya continued to experience severe legal, economic, educational, and social discrimination.

The report’s findings with regard to the regime’s ongoing persecution of Rohingya were reflected in events taking place in Burma in September:

• 1 September: In response to a question posed by a People’s Assembly MP during the ongoing parliamentary session, regime Immigration and Population Minister Khin Yi called Muslims in Arakan State “Bengalis residing in the region” who had no right to claim Burmese citizenship.
• 6 September: A court in Maungdaw, Arakan State, sentenced 13 Rohingya to prison terms ranging from two to 10 years on the charge of having ties with an unnamed insurgent group operating from Bangladesh. [See March 2011 Burma Bulletin]
• 8 September: A court in Akyab, Arakan State, sentenced nine Rohingya to two and a half years in prison for traveling from Arakan State to Rangoon without first requesting permission from the authorities.

More political prisoners in poor health

• 9 September: Family members sent a letter to President Thein Sein to demand the early release of political prisoner Zaw Lin Htun because of his rapidly deteriorating health. Zaw Lin Htun has advanced liver and stomach cancer and is serving a 20-year prison sentence in Rangoon’s Insein prison.

• 26 September: It was reported that NLD member Thandar was suffering from cardiovascular disease and kidney ailments and was in need of immediate medical care in Insein prison.

Pro-regime human rights commission formed

On 5 September, the regime formed the Human Rights Commission (HRC). The 15-member body includes former State Peace and Development Council (SPDC) ambassadors and retired civil servants. In their capacity as former junta representatives at the UN, HRC Chairman Win Mra and Vice-Chairman Kyaw Tint Swe routinely denied the existence of human rights violations in Burma and defended the regime’s abysmal human rights record in New York and Geneva for nearly 15 years. In an interview published in the Myanmar Times on 19 September, Win Mra outrageously stated that the Burmese people were “not familiar” with human rights or their benefits.

DISPLACEMENT

IDP situation worsens

The IDP situation on the Sino-Burma border deteriorated because local aid groups were overwhelmed by the increased number of IDPs and did not have sufficient food and medical supplies for the over 20,000 civilians who had fled the conflict. Crowded living conditions, poor sanitation, and lack of clean water led to illnesses, including dysentery, in some of the IDP camps. In early September, WFP distributed rice to over 5,000 Kachin IDPs in regime-controlled areas in Kachin State. It was the first time the UN food agency provided food assistance to IDPs in Myitkyina and Waingmaw since the beginning of the conflict. However, the majority of IDPs did not receive any aid from WFP. After launching its offensive in Kachin State, the regime barred aid organizations from aiding IDPs fleeing conflict and atrocities [See July 2011 Burma Bulletin].

He urged the regime to free all political prisoners, initiate dialogue with the pro-democracy forces, and investigate human rights abuses. He also raised concerns about the regime’s military relationship with North Korea.68

22 September: Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Kurt Campbell and Special Representative and Policy Coordinator for Burma Derek Mitchell met regime FM Wunna Maung Lwin on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly in New York. The two told Wunna Maung Lwin that Washington wanted the regime to take “concrete” steps that showed its genuine commitment to reform, including release of all political prisoners, meaningful dialogue with Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, a cessation of military offensives in ethnic areas, and transparency in its relationship with North Korea.69

29 September: US Special Representative and Policy Coordinator for Burma Derek Mitchell, Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Kurt Campbell, and Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor Michael Posner met regime FM Wunna Maung Lwin in Washington. The US officials raised many of the same issues brought forward on 22 September. They also expressed concern over the Tatmadaw’s “horrible brutalities” against ethnic armed groups and the rape of women.70

AIPA membership: yes - ASEAN Chair: maybe

On 20 September, despite the farcical nature of the USDP-dominated parliament, the ASEAN Inter-Parliamentary Assembly (AIPA) accepted Burma as a fully fledged member at the 32nd71 annual ASEAN Inter-Parliamentary Assembly in Phnom Penh. 91

By contrast, the 2014 ASEAN Chair was yet to be confirmed for the regime. On 20 September, it was reported that Indonesian FM Marty Natalegawa had said the opinion of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and civil society would influence ASEAN’s decision to grant Burma the Chair.92

Ban Ki-moon calls for reforms

UN Sec-Gen Ban Ki-moon continued to call on the regime to implement reforms.

• 18 September: UN Sec-Gen Ban Ki-moon met regime FM Wunna Maung Lwin on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly. Ban reiterated his commitment to help address Burma’s political challenges.

• 27 September: Ban-Ki-moon’s Group of Friends on Burma held a meeting to discuss developments in the country. After the meeting, Ban said that the regime had to step up its efforts for reform if it was to bring about an inclusive transition to democracy. Ban also urged the regime to engage in “improved dialogue” with all political actors and release all remaining political prisoners.

EU calls for more humanitarian access

On 9 September, European Commissioner for International Cooperation, Humanitarian Aid and Crisis Response Kristalina Georgieva began a two-day visit to Burma. She met various regime ministers in Naypyidaw and Daw Aung San Suu Kyi in Rangoon. On 11 September, after her visit, Georgieva said she hoped to see a tangible sign of the regime’s commitment to expand humanitarian access to more areas of Burma. She urged the regime to allow the ICRC more prison visits, accelerate the visa process for aid workers, and to sign more agreements with aid agencies.

ECONOMY

Regime’s token measures continue

Instead of carrying out much needed structural reform to the economy, the regime continued to adopt token measures that failed to have a positive impact on Burma’s people.

• Interest rates: On 1 September, Burma’s Central Bank reduced interest rates on bank loans from 17% to 15%. However, the cut in interest rates did not really make loans more accessible to the average Burmese, as interest rates in Burma remained the second highest in the region behind Vietnam.

• Foreign currency trading: On 19 September, a Ministry of Finance and Revenue official said the regime would allow six private banks, all closely linked to the military and regime ministries, to trade foreign currencies in Rangoon. However, the establishment of currency exchange centers made little sense because the regime had not repealed the law that banned Burmese citizens from holding foreign currencies.
