PPP system to be introduced to Myanmar’s hotels and tourism industry

Mandalay, 19 July — "There has been a boom in tourism industry rapidly in the country. With the higher hotel room prices, quality customer services should be placed in hotels. Participation of all in the smokeless industry is needed to avoid unwanted situations. Emergence of five-star hotels is necessary. Now Myanmar sees 29000 hotel rooms and the number of rooms will reach 30000 soon. Hoteliers are to take part in the task of cleaning and greening U Pein Bridge and Mandalay Hill and tree-growing activities.

As tourism industry in Myanmar will go under People-Private-Public (PPP) system, collaboration among all is required for promotion of the tourism industry in Myanmar”, said Union Minister U Htay Aung in meeting with hoteliers, tour operators and executives of tour guide association in Mandalay on 14 July.

Nyaungdonsu-Kyaikpi bailey bridge facilitates public transportation, contributing towards betterment in socio-economic status of local people

Mawlamyine, 19 July — With the aim of ensuring smooth and secure transport for local people in Kyakklat and Mawlamyineyung Townships in Ayeawady Region, a bailey bridge linking between Nyaungdonsu and Kyakki villages was commissioned into service on 30 May. The new bridge thereby benefits local people from nearby 25 villages, facilitating public transportation.

Thanks to emergence of the bailey bridge, it enables local people to travel from Kyawzan and Yonedauk villages to Kyaikklat Township, Kyakki villages to Lawkadat, Mayan and Gayam villages and Bogale Township, thereby contributing towards improvements in education, health, economic and social sectors of local people.

The Nyaungdonsu-Kyaikpi bailey bridge is 320 feet long and its water clearance area is 11 feet in height and 60 feet in width. “The bridge brings betterment of socio-economic status for local people. We are motorcycle taxi drivers, Kyakki and Kyawzan villages and Bogale and Kyaikklat Townships used to be only accessible by boat. Thanks to the newly-inaugurated baileybridge, we can travel and transport passengers to their destinations by motorbike at any time.

Moreover, students from 25 villages can attend Kyakpi Basic Education High School by road, without crossing Kyakpi river by boat. We cannot find any words to express thanks for putting the new bridge into service”, said Ko Min Min Oo and Ko Kyaw Min Khant. — Kyemon-Wai Phyo Aung

Bilateral talks with US possible if N Korea takes action: Biden

WASHINGTON, 19 July—US Vice President Joe Biden urged North Korea on Thursday to take steps toward abandoning its nuclear programmes as a precondition for bilateral talks with the United States.

“The North Korea I am calling for dialogue,” Biden said in a speech in Washington. “But we are ready... only if North Korea’s prepared to engage in genuine negotiations.”

North Korea’s nuclear missile programme has presented a “clear danger” in East Asia, Biden told the audience at George Washington University.

Iraqi Prime Minister Nuri al-Maliki, Maliki said a statement that “Iraq supports peaceful solutions to all problems in the region and adopts an open-door policy in its relations with all countries of the world on the basis of mutual respect and common interests.”

“The Iraqi companies are invited to take part in the building and reconstruction of Iraq,” the statement added.

Cairo, 19 July—Egypt’s interim President Adli Mansour promised on Thursday to fight those driving the nation towards chaos, hours before the Muslim Brotherhood plans mass protests to demand the return of ousted Islamist leader Mohamed Mursi.

Brotherhood supporters will take to the streets on Friday in their campaign to reverse the military overthrow of Egypt’s first freely-elected president, but the movement also gave a first sign of willingness to negotiate with its opponents.

Mansour pledged in his first public address since he was sworn in on 4 July to restore stability and security.

“We are going through a critical stage and some want us to move towards chaos and we want to move towards stability. Some want a bloody path,” he said in a televised address. “We will fight a battle for security until the end.”

The rallies aim to show that Mursi’s supporters are not ready to accept the new military-backed government. However, a Brotherhood official also told Reuters on Thursday that the movement had proposed a framework for talks mediated by the EU.

Sworn into office on Tuesday, the cabinet of interim premier Hazem el-Beblawy bused itself with tackling Egypt’s many crises, buying foreign wheat to replenish stocks and banking $3 billion (2 billion pounds) in badly needed aid from the United Arab Emirates.

Still stunned by the 3 July toppling of Mursi, his Muslim Brotherhood, and alliances grouped in what it calls the National Alliance for Legitimacy, urged the nationwide rallies on Friday, predicting millions would take to the streets.

“On every free Egyptian man and woman: Come out against the bloody military coup,” the alliance said in a statement. Brotherhood officials Gehad el-Haddad, who represented the movement in previous EU-facilitated talks with other political groups, told Reuters that the organisation would not retreat from its demand for the reinstatement of Mursi. However, signalling for the first time a formal readiness for negotiations, he said the Brotherhood had proposed through an EU envoy a framework for talks to resolve Egypt’s crisis.—Reuters

Chinese researchers find simple way to create stem cells

WASHINGTON, 19 July — Chinese researchers said on Thursday they have developed an “easy and safe way” to create stem cells, a breakthrough that could greatly promote the development of so-called therapeutic cloning to generate tissues and organs for treatment of diseases.

The method, described in the US journal Science, involves a cocktail of small-molecule compounds to re-programme somatic cells to a pluripotent state with the ability to differentiate into any other type of cell in the body. Previously, the genetic manipulation required to induce this pluripotent state, via nuclear transfer into oocytes or through the ectopic expression of defined factors, is complicated, a fact that has limited the cells’ clinical applications so far.

In this study, Professor Deng Hongkui of Peking University said his team validated “a whole new route” to pluripotent stem cells by inducing a pluripotent state in mouse somatic cells with a combination of seven small-molecule compounds.

“Small molecules have advantages because they can be cell permeable, non-immunogenic, more cost-effective, and can be more easily synthesized, preserved, and standardized,” the researchers wrote in their paper.

“Moreover, their effects on inhibiting and activating the function of specific proteins are often reversible and can be finely tuned by varying the concentrations,” they said.

In total, pluripotent stem cells can be generated from mouse somatic cells at a frequency up to 0.2 percent using the combination of small-molecule compounds, the researchers found.

To characterize their differentiation potential, they injected the chemically induced pluripotent stem cells (CiPSCs) into immunodeficient mice and found that the cells were able to differentiate into tissues of all three germ layer. Unlike mice generated through traditional methods, the mice generated from CiPSCs were “100 percent viable and apparently healthy for up to 6 months,” they said.

Using the CiPSCs technology, the researchers have successfully created several healthy laboratory mice from fibroblastic cells in the adult mouse lung, allowing one to call QingQing, Deng wrote in an email.

“QingQing has been living for more than 100 days up to now. It develops well and it’s lively and healthy. What’s more, QingQing has already got its own ‘babies’ and they no longer need to worry about their health,” Deng said.—Xinhua

Google’s quarterly results take a hit due to falling ad rates, Motorola losses

NEW YORK, 19 July — Google Inc on Thursday reported second-quarter results short of Wall Street’s estimates as weakening prices for the Internet company’s ads and widening losses from its Motorola mobile phone business weighed on the bottom line.

The falling ad prices surprised analysts and investors, who expected recent changes to the web search company’s advertising system to help mitigate the effects of an industry-wide shift to mobile advertising.

Shares of Google, which had risen to all-time highs in recent weeks, slid roughly 4 percent to $872.80 in after-hours trading on Thursday, having earlier closed at $910.68 on the Nasdaq.

Google’s business, like those of rivals Facebook Inc and Yahoo Inc, has been under pressure as more consumers access its online services on mobile devices such as smartphones and tablets, where advertising rates are lower than on PCs.

Earlier this year, Google changed the way marketers run ad campaigns on Google, blurring the distinction between ads designed for PCs and mobile ads, in a move that some analysts believed could help bolster Google’s overall ad prices.

That did not happen in the second quarter. “We’ve got to assume that maybe Enhanced Campaigns is not going to provide the pricing boost that a lot of people were expecting,” said JMP Securities analyst Ronald Josey, referring to a new ad policy program unveiled by Google in February.

The average price of Google’s online ads slid a larger-than-expected 6 percent year-on-year in the second quarter, compared with the first quarter’s 4 percent decrease.

One problem may be that consumers don’t click on mobile ads as often as they do on desktop PCs, said BGC Partners analyst Colin Gillis.—Reuters

Israel’s ‘crazy’ new step toward oil independence

NEW YORK, 19 July— Just as Israelis revolutionized the global tech industry, a new project aims to revolutionize smart transportation.

A car propelled by wind, a bicycle powered by a fuel cell, a train that floats on water – no idea was too farfetched to present at EcoMotion, a recent Israeli “unconference” presenting alternative smart transportation solutions at different stages of development.

Over 250 people attended — from young students to entrepreneurs in their 70s and 80s — and everyone was really excited to share ideas and projects,” says Boaz Mamo, executive director of Ecomotion for the Israel Science Technology and Innovation Policy Institute (ISTIPI), which is co-sponsoring the initiative with the Prime Minister’s Office, the Ministry of Science, Keren Hayesod (United Israel Appeal) and the Israeli automotive industry.

“The atmosphere and energy were amazing. People stayed till 1 or 2 in the morning to talk more and create something together,” Mamo reports.

He stressed that EcoMotion isn’t a one-time event, and it is not competitive. Its main purpose is to foster a creative, collaborative community of minds from a variety of disciplines. Any practical, concrete products that may arise from this community would be icing on the cake.

“We will continuously hold lots of small events during the year — workshops, meetings with investors and government officials — discussing collaborations to maintain the community and keep it strong,” says Malmo. “We are big believers in the free market. Everyone with an idea can take a shot at it, but we’re not promising anything.”

EcoMotion complements Israel’s national programme to reduce global dependency on oil, said Prof. Eugene Kandel, head of the National Economic Council. “We believe that innovation is a key component for success in this complex process,” he said in his open invitation to participants.

The invitation also made it clear that no solution would be considered too “crazy.”

Innovators, entrepreneurs, academics, philanthropists, representatives of a financial and government institutions and international/local businesses (including heavy-hitters such as General Motors, Toyota, IBM, Elbit, Rafael, IAI, Mobil-Eye and Vulcan) were encouraged to listen to each other’s ideas — no matter how wacky — and form working relationships. WASHINGTON, 19 July—The H7N9 bird flu virus may be highly transmissible among ferrets, a common animal model for studying how flu might spread in humans, Chinese researchers reported on Thursday.

Though H7N9 appears to have been brought under control, the researchers warned in a study published online in the US journal Science that the character of the virus, including its pandemic potential, "remains largely unknown" and that it's possible the virus can efficiently spread between humans eventually.

“We must have material and technical reserves, including policies and measures for possible reemergence of the H7N9 virus in the future, otherwise the virus could hit the world hard,” Chen Huatian, director of China’s National Avian Influenza Reference Laboratory at Harbin Veterinary Research Institute, who led the study, told Xinhua by phone.

To investigate the possible origins of the H7N9 viruses that caused human infections, Chen’s team collected more than 10,000 samples from poultry markets, poultry farms, wild bird habitats, and poultry and swine slaughterhouses across China from March to May this year.

All samples were inoculated individually into 10-day-old embryonated chicken eggs for virus isolation, and 238 influenza viruses were isolated from these samples, of which 52 viruses were confirmed as the H7N9 subtype, Chen said.

To understand the genetic relationship of these viruses, the researchers then sequenced the genome of 37 representative H7N9 viruses that had been isolated from various bird species, the majority of which originated in live poultry markets, and compared them with those of the five human isolates that have been reported.

According to the researchers, the viruses were genetically closely related and bound to human airway receptors, and some also maintained the ability to bind to avian airway receptors. They also found all of the H7N9 strains isolated from birds replicated easily in chickens, ducks and mice without causing any disease, but human strains caused mice to shed up to 30 percent of their body weight.

Most importantly, one virus isolated from humans is able to transmit efficiently between ferrets by respiratory droplet, raising the possibility of eventual airborne transmission between humans.

“We found great similarities among these human and avian strains, except for dozens of amino acid differences, but surprisingly they showed similar biological characteristics,” Chen said.

“The findings suggest that only a few amino acid changes would be needed to make the avian H7N9 viruses highly transmissible,” she said.

The researchers also warned that its nonpathogenic nature in poultry enables the H7N9 virus to “replicate silently” in avian species and to transmit to humans, providing further opportunities for the virus to acquire more mutations and become more virulent and transmissible in the human population.

Indonesia’s decision to import more Australian cattle

CANNBERA, 19 July—Australia welcomes the decision by the Indonesian government to increase the number of Australian cattle it will import, a Press release from Minister for Agriculture Joel Fitzgibbon said Friday.

The new regulation released in Indonesia on Thursday allows for the import of an additional 25,000 head of cattle from Australia in the next three months. Further imports for the second three month period will be advised by the Indonesian Ministry of Agriculture.

“Importantly there is no weight restriction on the cattle to be exported to Indonesia indicating that the animals should be ready for slaughter,” Fitzgibbon said.

Australia had imposed a temporary ban on live exports to Indonesia in 2011, following claims that cattle were being mistreated. Although the export ban was lifted later in 2011, Indonesia reduced its import quota from 660,000 head to 260,000 per year.

Graziers said the ban and a state-wide drought have left the industry in crisis.

The new decision by Indonesia came after discussions between Prime Minister Kevin Rudd and the Indonesian President Susilo Bambang Yudhoyono during Rudd’s visit to Jakarta earlier this month.

Coke likely to face Vitaminwater class-action, but not for money

NEW YORK, 19 July—A US federal judge has recommended that Coca-Cola Co face a class-action lawsuit accusing it of misleading consumers by overstating the health benefits of its Vitaminwater drink.

In a decision made public on Thursday, US Magistrate Judge Robert Levy in Brooklyn, New York nonetheless said consumers could not sue as a group for money damages, a "central" part of their case, but rather to try to change how Coca-Cola labels and markets the product.

Plaintiffs in the 4-1/2-year-old lawsuit included California and New York residents, with support from the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a health advocacy group.

The group accused Coca-Cola of deceptively marketing Vitaminwater as an alternative to water and sugared soft drinks that could promote healthy joints, boost the immune system and help people fight eye disease, among other health benefits.

Levy said the plaintiffs had standing to sue by claiming they were misled into believing that Vitaminwater was healthier than it really was, or that other beverages would have been.

But he said that while monetary relief was “central to their claims,” and that damages per individual were likely small, the consumers could not sue as a group to obtain it because of the variations in how much each individual paid or was owed. Plaintiffs “have not presented a class-wide damages model that can be used based on common proof, or a reliable method of distributing damages to putative class members,” he wrote.

The case now goes to US District Judge Nora Dora Irizarry for approval. Federal district judges typically accept magistrate judges’ recommendations.

Both sides welcomed parts of the decision.

Brazilians President pledges more investment in public transport

RIO DE JANEIRO, 19 July — In the wake of the month-long anti-government protests, President Dilma Rousseff on Thursday stressed the need for more investments in public transport nationwide, especially in subway systems.

At the inauguration ceremony of a subway line in Ceará state, northeastern Brazil, the president said that mid-size cities and capitals of less-developed states should receive as many investments in urban transport as larger states' capitals of the southeast did in the 1990s.

Criticizing former administrations from the 1980s and 1990s for failing to invest in the underground transport system, Rousseff said investments were being made in subway networks, light rail transit and dedicated bus lanes.

She also said the subway system is contributing to a better quality of life because of its faster speed.

"People spend a lot of time inside buses. When you make a project like this (the new subway line), people are in a better condition to face a day of work and return to their leisure and to their homes earlier," she added.

Rousseff's push for better public transport came in the wake of the month-long anti-government protests that were first sparked by transit fare hikes amid massive government spending on prestigious sporting events, such as the 2014 FIFA World Cup and 2016 Olympic Games.

United Nations pays tribute as Nelson Mandela turns 95

UNITED NATIONS, 19 July — The United Nations on Thursday marked the Nelson Mandela International Day, celebrating the South African leader's 95th birthday and honouring his devotion to public service, social justice and reconciliation.

"Nelson Mandela is a giant of our times. He gave 67 years of his life to the struggle for human rights," said UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon at a special UN General Assembly (UNGA) meeting to mark the Day, which was declared by the UNGA in 2009 to commemorate Mandela's contribution to the culture of peace and freedom.

As the anti-apartheid leader turned 95 in hospital, "we are united in concern," Ban said. "We are also joined in admiration for a towering figure in the world-wide fight for equality and justice, a model of compassion and integrity, a man who took on and then gracefully relinquished the responsibility of power."

In that spirit, "today and every day, we want to mobilize the human family to take action, inspire change, and build a more peaceful, sustainable and equitable world," the UN chief said.

He added that, to commemorate the Day, the UN is joining a call by the Nelson Mandela Foundation to "Take Action, Inspire Change" to volunteer 67 minutes to help others.

According to Ban, while UN staff in New York are helping to re-build homes destroyed by Hurricane Sandy last fall, elsewhere around the world, UN staff are engaging in various volunteer activities such as preparing meals for the elderly, helping out in orphanages, cleaning up parks and organizing computer literacy workshops.

Common interests to outweigh lurking trouble between Egypt, Turkey

CAIRO, 19 July — Turkey's discontent over the ouster of former Egyptian President Mohamed Morsi has trouble between the two regional powers, but analysts here believe such an issue is "ephemeral" compared with prevailing common interests. Recently Cairo and Ankara have been trading "hot statements" after Morsi was ousted amid mass protests against the "maladministration" during his one-year rule.

Both Turkish President Abdullah Gul and Foreign Minister Ahmed Davutoglu called the ouster a "coup against democracy," which was seen as "clear intervention" by the Egyptian transitional authorities.

"Such statements represent a challenge for the people’s will," Egyptian presidency media advisor Ahmed al-Moslimany said on Tuesday, asking Turkish officials to prioritize the country's historical relations with Egypt and their common interests.

President U Thein Sein calls for UNESCO’s continued support to protect culture and improve education

PARIS, 19 July—UNESCO Director-General Irina Bokova pledged to accompany Myanmar’s reform agenda by strengthening support to education, youth skills and the protection of tangible and intangible cultural heritage, during a meeting with President U Thein Sein in Paris on 17 July. “When there is strong political will and ownership of policies in education and culture, we can accompany you in meeting your priorities and be successful, and I definitely see this political will in Myanmar,” said the Director-General, who had met previously with the President during her official visit to Myanmar in August 2012. Since then, she said, a full-fledged office had been established in Yangon to expand cooperation with the country.

Expressing appreciation for UNESCO’s cooperation with Myanmar, President U Thein Sein outlined several development challenges. Despite high school enrolment and adult literacy rates, he noted that “we have a high rate of drop out after elementary school, so it is pertinent that we are trying our best to implement the Education for All initiative by 2015.” Ms Bokova drew attention to her visit to the Yangon Institute of Education, and to UNESCO’s projects to strengthen pre-service teacher education and to set up a Centre for Excellence for Business Skills Development in the Yangon Institute of Economics.

Turning to culture, the President affirmed that “the Government is trying its best to preserve Myanmar’s rich cultural heritage but we lack conservation technologies to do so,” requesting further technical assistance from UNESCO.

The Director-General commended Myanmar for submitting the nomination of the Pyu Ancient Cities to the World Heritage List, and for its commitment to conserve and protect its immense cultural heritage, including the Bagan Archaeological Area and Monuments, which she had visited. “You are a country so rich in cultural heritage, not to have a site inscribed on the World Heritage List is a loss for the whole of humanity,” said Ms Bokova. “This heritage is a challenge to protect and preserve, and it is very important to train experts and specialists,” she said, assuring the President of UNESCO’s continued commitment to build capacities, including with donor support. The President also called upon UNESCO to assist in the restoration of colonial buildings in Yangon, a subject he had discussed in London earlier in the week with the Prince of Wales Foundation.

President U Thein Sein also shared Myanmar’s deep appreciation for the inscription of the Mahalawkamarazein on the Memory of the World Register in 2013, the country’s first heritage on the list. “This Stone inscription is a collection of 729 stone slabs on which are inscribed the Tipitaka—the full Buddhist scriptures. ‘The people of Myanmar are very pleased about this because it carries great religious importance.’ He called for further cooperation with UNESCO to preserve the culture and traditions of the country’s ethnic groups, a point welcomed by the Director-General. “In a country as diverse as Myanmar, it is important to look at how the protection of the intangible cultural heritage can serve as a tool for national cohesion. We know from experience that by inscribing the traditions of minorities we give them reassurance about their place in a society.”

Noting that Myanmar will be the Chair of ASEAN in 2014, the Director-General drew attention to the expected signing of a Framework for Cooperation between UNESCO and ASEAN at the 37th session of the General Conference in November. “This will be a solid basis for partnership with ASEAN that will also enable us to develop further our cooperation,” said Mrs. Bokova. President U Thein Sein welcomed this and reiterated Myanmar’s to continue strengthening cooperation with UNESCO.

The Director-General encouraged Myanmar to run for different committees ahead of next General Conference, noting that she would like to see the country more visible in such areas as education, sustainable development, biodiversity and culture. “This will give you more access to our networks and provide openings on different experiences,” she said.

Japanese parties concerned about voter turnout before election

Tokyo, 19 July—Japanese political parties are concerned about voter turnout for Sunday’s upper house election and its impact on the eventual makeup of parliament.

Ruling and opposition parties believe that voters’ interest in the House of Councillors election is weakening, as media reports have suggested the ruling coalition led by Prime Minister Shinzo Abe’s Liberal Democratic Party is headed for a comfortable victory. They predict voter turnout will fall below the previous 2010 upper house election level of 57.92 percent. Voter turnout has remained below 60 percent for seven straight elections since 1992, hitting an all-time low of 44.52 percent in 1995.

Cambodian opposition chief arrives home after 4 years in exile

Phnom Penh, 19 July—Cambodia’s charismatic opposition leader Sam Rainsy arrived in his home country on Friday morning after spending nearly four years abroad in self-imposed exile to avoid an 11-year prison sentence on charges of disinformation and obstruction of public property.

At the Phnom Penh International Airport, Sam Rainsy, president of the Cambodian National Rescue Party (CNRP), was greeted by tens of thousands of supporters.

His return came after King Norodom Sihamoni granted him a royal pardon at the request of Prime Minister Hun Sen last Friday. Hun Sen said his request to the king was based on the spirits of national unification and reconciliation, and to enable the fifth National Assembly elections on 28 July to be held in accordance with democratic, multi-party principles whereby all relevant parties can participate.

Top Niya, secretary general of the National Election Committee (NEC), said that Sam Rainsy was ineligible to vote or run as a parliamentary candidate for the upcoming polls because the NEC deleted his name from the voter registry since November on the grounds that he was a convicted criminal at that time.

“With the royal pardon, Sam Rainsy is free to campaign for his party in the polls, but he can neither vote nor stand as a candidate,” he told reporters at a meeting at the NEC headquarters in Phnom Penh on Thursday. According to the CNRP, Sam Rainsy will hold an election campaign in Phnom Penh City soon after his arrival and will set off the following day for a week-long tour of 15 provinces.

UN humanitarian chief calls for access to civilians trapped by fighting in South Sudan

United Nations, 19 July — The top UN humanitarian official on Wednesday appealed for access to all those in need in the strife-torn region of South Sudan, where humanitarian situations have deteriorated due to the clashes.

“From what is being reported, fighting has been linked to a deterioration in humanitarian settings in the past few days, and we have heard reports of a crisis due to lack of access,” said the Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, Valerie Amos, said in a statement issued here by her office.

Fighting between state and non-state armed actors, and the recent resurgence of inter-communal clashes are threatening the lives of ordinary people and have reduced the ability of humanitarian organizations to provide urgently needed help, according to the statement.

“I call on all parties to stop the violence immediately, to prevent further unnecessary loss of life, and to create the necessary security environment conducive for aid delivery,” she said.

Amos, who also serves as the Emergency Relief Coordinator, emphasized that “as long as the fighting continues, delivery of aid will be limited and we will not get help to those who need it.”

In addition, she underscored that the UN will work with all parties to ensure people in need receive humanitarian assistance and remind all sides to respect their obligations under international humanitarian law to protect civilians. Jonglei, the largest state in the eastern part of South Sudan, has been the scene of inter-communal violence since the country won its independence on 11 July, 2011 from Sudan under a peace deal.

Severe floods expected in coming month

Beijing, 19 July — China is expected to face serious flood control challenges in the next 30 days as it heads into the height of its rainy season.

The State Flood Control and Drought Relief Headquarters said on Wednesday that this year’s flood season will run from about 15 July to 15 Aug.

Heavy rainfall is expected in northern and southwestern China, causing severe flooding in many major rivers, such as the upper reaches of the Yangtze, Haihe, Yellow, Songhua and Liaohe rivers.

According to the National Meteorological Centre, Guangxi, Shanxi, Sichuan, Hunan and Guangdong provinces will see 24-hour rainfall with some areas receiving 100 to 200 mm of rain. Sichuan will be in the height of its rainy season over the next few months, possibly bringing more chaos to the already battered province.

“Since most of the same parts of Sichuan province will be hit again with heavy rainfall, severe floods, flash floods and mudslides are likely,” said Liu Zhiyu, a Ministry of Water Resources official.

Last week, rain-triggered floods and a severe landslide left 58 people dead and another 175 missing in the province, according to the flood control headquarters.

Due to global climate changes, other regions in the world, such as India, have also been battered by heavy rainfall in recent weeks.

Meanwhile, Tropical Storm Cimaron, the eighth of the year, is expected to make landfall on Friday in Southern China, bringing strong winds to southeastern provinces with heavy rainfall expected in areas such as Jiangsu, Anhui, Zhejiang, Fujian and Guangdong.

Police investigate vendor’s death in central China

Changsha, 19 July — Police and a disciplinary watchdog are investigating the death of a watermelon seller in a clash with urban management officers in central China’s Hunan Province.

Officials with the Linwu County Committee of the Communist Party of China, Chenzhou City, said a vendor died when urban management officers were performing their duties, and the cause of his death is being looked into.

Deng Zhengjia, a farmer in his fifties in Liantang Village of Nanqiang Township, died following verbal and physical conflicts with urban management workers of the county on Wednesday morning, said Deng’s niece.

The conflicts came after Deng and his wife tried to sell home-grown watermelons at a riverside scenic spot, where urban management corps said no vendors were allowed, said the niece, also surnamed Deng.

He was hit by the waves from a set of scales, and his wife was also injured and is receiving treatment in hospital, said the niece, citing a witness.

[Deng’s wife] got bruises on her arms and legs, and passed out for a while,” said the niece.

China’s urban management officers, or chengguan, are often criticised for their violent law enforcement methods for tackling low-level, urban, and non-criminal regulation and arrested. Reports of urban management law enforcement units often appear in media amid accusations of chengguan officers beating vendors and smashing their stalls.

The People’s Daily on Wednesday issued a commentary stating that conflicts between chengguan and the subjects of law enforcement lie in unequal status and lack of communication between the two sides. Equal, civilized, service-oriented and law-based enforcement by urban management workers is required to seek public understanding and help build beautiful cities, said the commentary. —Xinhua

Flamengo sign Arsenal defender Andre Santos

RIO DE JANEIRO, 19 July—Brazilian soccer giant Flamengo has signed Arsenal defender Andre Santos on a two-year contract.

Santos completed the player’s medical here Thursday after negotiations were fast-tracked to meet Brazil’s 20 July transfer deadline, reports Xinhua.

Under terms of the deal, Flamengo will own 50 percent of the player’s transfer rights and Santos the rest.

The 30-year-old fell out of favour with Gunners manager Arsene Wenger last year after managing just 23 first-team appearances in 18 months.

He joined Gremio on loan in February but was released following the Porto Alegre side’s exit from the Copa Libertadores in May. The left-back represented Flamengo in 2005 and 2006, helping the club win the Copa do Brasil in his second year.

Wayne Rooney not for sale

SYDNEY, 19 July—Manchester United manager David Moyes reiterated on Friday that he has no plans to sell Wayne Rooney despite Premier League rival Chelsea continuing its pursuit of the England striker.

United formally rejected an ambitious Chelsea bid for Rooney this week and Moyes has made it clear he wants Rooney among the striking options for his first season in charge of the 20-time English champions.

New Chelsea manager Jose Mourinho appears desperate to land the forward and new deal is expected to be tabled soon.

“The club’s position has not changed,” Moyes said Friday of United’s determination that Rooney play out the remaining two years of his contract.

The 27-year-old Rooney has pushed for a move from United since expressing frustration about his lack of playing time.

He is not with the club on the Australian leg of its Asia Pacific tour after aggravating a hamstring injury in Bangkok last week.

Speaking at a media conference on the eve of United’s pre-season friendly against an A-League All Stars team, Moyes said rather than shedding players the league champions are looking at more signings, promising news in the next 24 hours on the possible recruitment of Barcelona midfielder Cesc Fabregas.

“The chief executive is dealing with it. Hopefully we’ll know more in the next few days,” he said.—PTI

The 29-year-old’s contract had been due to expire in 2014 and he was linked to a move back to Brazil with Santos last January.

The former Real Madrid and Manchester City forward said in April, however, that he was happy in Italy and wanted to renew his contract.

Fiorentina agree to sell Jovetic to Man City

The Montenegrin, nicknamed Jo-Jo by the Fiorentina fans, had been the subject of transfer speculation for several months and was also linked to Italian champions Juventus.

He missed the whole of the 2010-11 campaign after damaging crucial knee ligaments in pre-season training but returned to score 14 goals in 27 Serie A matches the following year.

The six foot one inch Jovetic, who can play as a striker but prefers a slightly deeper role behind the centre-forward, has scored 10 goals in 27 games for Montenegro.

City lost their league crown to bitter local rivals United last season, which led to the sacking of manager Roberto Mancini and the arrival of Chilean Pellegri who left the club’s tour of South Africa for personal reasons on Thursday.

Hayden to leave Ducati at end of MotoGP season

NEW YORK, 19 July—America’s 2006 MotoGP world champion Nicky Hayden announced on Thursday that he would be leaving the factory Ducati team at the end of the season.

“I’m not coming back to Ducati in MotoGP next year — I’m not really sure what I’m going to do,” he said in a U.S. Grand Prix news conference at Laguna Seca, California.

“I’ve got some options that are interesting,” added the Kentucky-born rider. Asked whether he hoped to stay in MotoGP or was looking at other categories, Hayden added: “Of course MotoGP is where my heart is, but I’ve got to weigh up the options. Unfortunately results haven’t gone as planned over the years, but it is what it is.”

Hayden, who won his title with Honda, is ninth in the championship with 57 points after eight of 18 races and is out of contract at the end of the year. Italian team mate Andrea Dovizioso is sixth with 74.

The 31-year-old American moved to Ducati in 2009 and has not won a race since 2006.

Hayden’s Cal Crutchlow, who is having a great season on the non-works Tech3 Yamaha and is fourth in the standings, has been tipped as a likely candidate to replace Hayden at the Italian manufacturer although their bike is less competitive.—Reuters

Australia’s uranium industry has strong future

CANBERRA, 19 July—Australia’s uranium industry has a strong future with the energy demand rising from growing populations and the need to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Resources and Energy Minister Gary Gray said on Wednesday.

Australia is one of the world’s largest producers and exporters of uranium with 33 percent of the world’s uranium resources.

“Despite some recent slowing in the industry, two important drivers of nuclear power remain unchanged — the rising energy demand from growing populations and the need to reduce greenhouse gas emissions,” Gary Gray said. According to him, Australia is in a strong position to maximize these opportunities. Over the next two decades China and India are set to bring 35 reactors online. “With our existing strong trade relationships with these countries, Australia is well placed to reap the benefits of supplying uranium to these countries,” he said.

And Australia already supports around 22 percent of China’s uranium and negotiations are underway with India for a bilateral safeguards agreement which will pave the way for significant exports in the future. “The Australian government has also taken steps to improve access to other international markets. In 2010, we signed an agreement with Russia to supply uranium for civil nuclear facilities. The first shipment was made last year,” he added.

Gray also called on the industry to take up the mantle. “We need industry to commit to further development of new mines to ensure uranium production meets global demand, particularly as demand is forecast to outstrip supply as early as next year.” And he confirmed that the government is working hard through the Uranium Council to streamline regulatory requirements, facilitate the economic development of the industry and encourage new and expanded investment.

Peru court orders government to pay 40-year-old bonds worth billions

LIMA, 19 July—Peru’s top court on Tuesday ordered the government to pay 40-year-old land reform bonds at their current value and with interest, terms that will likely lead to a payment worth several billion dollars.

The government has six months to pass a decree with further details on how to appraise the bonds and carry out the payments, two years to recognize the debt and eight years to pay it off, the court’s president Oscar Uruviola said.

The payments don’t have to be in cash and could be made in the form of land or by issuing new bonds, he told local news station RPP.

Peru’s President Ollanta Humala’s administration has previously said it would comply with the long-awaited decision, which aims to clear up a bitter chapter in Peruvian history.

The bonds were issued as compensation for land confiscated and redistributed to the poor in the 1970s. The resolution said the president of Peru’s Constitutional Tribunal ruled in favour of bondholders after members were split 3-3 on whether to force the government to pay off the debt. Conservative estimates put the value of land-reform bonds at between $1 billion (661 million pounds) and $3 billion. Other estimates say the liability is far larger, between $4.6 billion and $8 billion, or about 4 percent of Peru’s gross domestic product.—Reuters

Moyes offers straight bat on Rooney, pursues over Van Persie

SYDNEY, 19 July—Manchester United manager David Moyes was in no mood to discuss Wayne Rooney’s future at the club on Friday but a week’s training in Australia has certainly convinced him of Robin van Persie’s value to the team.

A comment made by the Scotsman to reporters in Thailand last weekend, to the effect that Rooney was important in case anything happened to Van Persie, has left the England striker “angered and confused” about his position at Old Trafford.

A Premier League rivals Chelsea this week pounced to make a cash bid for the 27-year-old, who left Manchester United’s pre-season tour early to receive treatment on a hamstring injury, but the offer was rebuffed by the English champions.

At a news conference ahead of Saturday’s second tour match against an A-League All-Star XI in Sydney on Friday, Moyes curtly dismissed an enquiry about Rooney’s future by saying the club’s position “hasn’t changed”.

Moyes does expect to hear more news about a bid for Cesc Fabregas over the next “day or so”, however, and he waxed lyrical about the “importance of the Barcelona midfield’s former Arsenal team mate Van Persie.”

“I got to see him this week for the first time, and his control, his touch, his awareness... the finishing that he’s done this week,” he said, almost in awe of the skills of the Dutchman who scored 30 goals for United last season.

“And I’ve really been impressed by his professionalism as well. He’s never complained about a thing, he’s got on with the work, he’s trained hard. “What we’re doing is trying to get him in a condition where he is ready to do exactly what he did last year, which was score goals for Manchester United and was a really big influence on the team and the performances. “So we’re hoping to get more of that this season.”—Reuters
