Treasures from Myanmar ancient cities displayed in New York show high culture of the Pyu era

By Aye Min Soe

Yangon, 24 June

—Coinciding with the designation of the ancient city states of the Pyu as a UNESCO world heritage site, some statues excavated from Pyu are now for the first time being exhibited at “Lost Kingdoms: Hindu-Buddhist Sculpture of Early Southeast Asia, 5th-8th Century” at the Metropolitan Museum in New York.

“When we talk about Pyu, people know just the three popular Pyu city states of Sri Ksetra, Beikthano and Hanlin and the ruins there,” says U Tin Win, an artist and an expert for Pyu-era artifacts, but “in fact, ancient Pyu cities are located across the country.”

The ornaments and utensils made of stone, bronze, iron, gold and earth excavated from the ancient cities show that the Pyu people possessed high professional artistic skills that are now extinct.

“The artifacts can tell their high-level culture,” he said. “Just a bead of Pyu can tell us their high culture, high skills for arts and engineering.”

Different designs of cornelian, rock crystal, agate and chalcedony beads with white lines were used as ornaments and the designs are related to Buddhism and its customs.

“It is surprising to see that the colour of the beads are still bright even though the beads had been buried over 1,000 years. It shows that the technique they used to paint stone beads was very high,” U Tin Win said.

It is found that designs on earthen pots with dancers, soldiers, birds and floral designs are more artistic than that of earthen utensils today.

Besides, beads, stone seals, which flourished in Egypt and the Roman Empire, were also used in the Pyu era and after the Pyu era, the culture of stone seals and coins have been extinct, according to the artifacts discovered in the ancient cities.

Some experts have assumed that there must be relations between Pyu and Egypt, Europe and India as they found that some Roman head figures and faces are inscribed on Pyu-era stone seals.

The stone seals made of cornelian, agate and quartz inscribed with designs of animals, including cow, pig, lion, elephant and cock and human figures were unearthed at the sites of Pyu cities across the country.

The three Pyu-era stone seals with cow, bee and scorpion figures can be seen at the Asian Art Museum of San Francisco and two bronze Buddha statues of the Pyu-era at the Metropolitan Museum in New York.

Stone seals from the Pyu-era have so far not been exhibited in Myanmar.

Nay Pyi Taw, 24 June—Myanmar is a country where women working for the government are entitled to a six-month maternity leave, the longest in Southeast Asia, with additional two weeks for those giving birth to twins as the government increased the previous period of three months, a high-ranking official said in his respond to a query raised at a session of the Lower House on Tuesday here, sources said.

Husbands are also entitled to a two-week paid leave to help look after newborns if they are government employees, with the official noting that paternal leave is granted only in two countries in Southeast Asia—Myanmar and Singapore.

Meanwhile, in the Upper House, the question was raised on how to train high school teachers to become senior assistant teachers in the basic education sector. Regarding the query, the deputy minister for Education explained that around 4,500 high school teachers annually graduate, adding that the number of teachers appointed is proportional to the total number of students. The ratio of teachers to students currently stands at 1:23, he noted.

Opponents of Thai military regime launch campaign for democracy

BANGKOK, 24 June — Opponents of Thailand’s junta launched a campaign on Tuesday to restore democracy and “oppose the military dictatorship and its aristocratic network”, the first sign of organized resistance to the army since it seized power last month.

Jarupong Rungruangwan, chairman of the Puea Thai Party that led the government ousted by the military, said in an open letter to fellow Thais that the military council had no legitimacy.

He cast doubt on its promise to transfer power back to civilian authorities at some point.

The military’s aim, he said, was to create “a new puppet structure whose sole purpose will be to re-entrench anti-democratic elements into Thailand’s body politic and to sabotage the development of Thai democracy”.

“Any such structure will need to be removed before a more democratic and civilised society can be built,” he added.

His movement, the letter said, sought “to oppose the military dictatorship and its aristocratic network and establish the people’s complete and unchallenged sovereignty”. The military staged a bloodless coup after months of street protests had undermined the government of Yingluck Shinawatra.

The protesters wanted to kick out Yingluck and change the electoral system to stop her influential brother, ex-premier Thaksin Shinawatra, from ever controlling the government again.

Yingluck was removed by the Constitutional Court for abuse of power on 7 May, leaving a rump cabinet that was then ousted in the coup on 22 May.

Thailand has been in crisis for almost a decade because of a power struggle between Thaksin and the royalist establishment backed by the army and the middle class in Bangkok.

Thaksin, a billionaire former telecoms tycoon, is adored by the poor in the country’s rural north and northeast for his policies such as cheap healthcare and village development that raised their living standards when he was in office from 2001.

He was toppled in a coup in 2006 and has chosen to live in exile since 2008 rather than serve jail time for an abuse of power conviction, but parties led by or loyal to him have won every election since 2001.

The junta moved quickly to neutralize resistance inside Thailand after its coup in May, briefly detaining hundreds of politicians and members of the pro-Thaksin “red shirt” movement and warning them not to work against the military government.

It was unclear how Jarupong’s movement, the Organization of Free Thais for Human Rights and Democracy, would oppose the junta and his letter did not reveal where it was based.

Jakrapob Penkair, a former spokesman for Thaksin, told Reuters from neighbouring Cambodia on 5 June that a movement was being formed outside Thailand to lead a campaign of civil disobedience.

Second nominee for South Korea prime minister withdraws

SEOUL, 24 June — The second nominee for South Korea’s prime minister withdrew his name on Tuesday over controversial comments he made about the country’s troubled past with Japan in the latest political setback for President Park Geun-hye.

The decision by Moon Chang-keuk, a former journalist, to pull out follows the withdrawal of a former Supreme Court justice last month over questions about the ethics of earning a large income after leaving public service.

“I wanted to help President Park Geun-hye. I have decided that I would be helping President Park by withdrawing at this time,” Moon told a news conference.

Moon, a devout Christian, had come under criticism after comments he made at a church gathering that it had been God’s will for Korea to suffer under Japan’s colonial rule in the early 20th century. — Reuters

India to open civilian nuclear programme to greater scrutiny

NEW DELHI, 24 June — India said on Monday it was ratifying an agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) to expand oversight of its civilian nuclear programme, in a move aimed at unblocking a major nuclear partnership with the United States.

The ratification sends a strong signal that Prime Minister Narendra Modi, elected by a landslide last month, wants to bolster strategic and trade ties with the United States when he meets President Barack Obama in Washington in September.

“I can confirm that we are ratifying the Additional Protocol to the IAEA Safeguards Agreement,” said Syed Akbaruddin, spokesman for the Ministry of External Affairs.

The move signals India’s commitment “to the responsible use of nuclear power”, Akbaruddin added, continuing earlier domestic reports. No comment was available from the IAEA.

Yet critics say the pact fails to address concerns that India could as a result get its foot in the door of a club of countries that trade in nuclear materials, without first signing a treaty that seeks to curb the spread of nuclear weapons.

There would be “no gain for non-proliferation” said Tariq Rauf, a former senior IAEA official now at the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute.

India, which first tested a nuclear weapon in 1974, is not a party to the Non-Proliferation Treaty. That means its military nuclear programme is not subject to inspections by the IAEA, the United Nations nuclear watchdog.

Both India and Pakistan tested nuclear weapons in 1998, setting off an arms race between neighbours that have fought three wars since independence. That in turn has raised tensions with Asian superpowers China, Pakistan’s patron, and India’s, briefly a defence research group said an Indian enrichment facility was undergoing an expansion and could be capable of producing a large surplus of weapons-grade uranium from mid-2015.

The plant would be able to produce a estimated 160 kg of weapons grade uranium a year — enough for five atom bombs — in excess of the needs of India’s planned fleet of nuclear-powered submarines, BIS June’s said.

Indian officials have shown displeasure over the report, with a newspaper quoting one saying it was “mischiefively” timed to influence a meeting this week of the 48-member Nuclear Suppliers Group (NSG) in the Argentinian capital Buenos Aires.

Following the US-India nuclear deal, the IAEA in 2009 approved the Additional Protocol, intended to clear the way for the NSG to grant India a waiver to trade with other countries in the civilian nuclear field.

Ratification is a key step towards separating India’s civilian and military operating services, and could help unlock tens of billions of dollars in US-led investment in new nuclear generation capacity. — Reuters
Aquino backs Abe’s bid to exercise collective self-defence

TOKYO, 24 June — Philippine President Benigno Aquino on Tuesday backed Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe’s initiative in changing the government’s interpretation of the Constitution to allow Japan to exercise the right to collective self-defence, or defending an ally under armed attack.

“We believe that nations of goodwill can only benefit if the Japanese government is empowered to assist others, and is allowed...to come to the aide of those in need, especially in the area of collective self-defence,” Aquino told a joint news conference with Abe after a summit in Tokyo where they agreed to cooperate in advancing a joint news conference in the area of collective self-defence, or defending an ally under armed attack.

Aquino made the comment as the two countries have promoted security tie-ups in the face of Beijing’s muscle-flexing to press its territorial claims in the East and South China seas.

Abe said Manila does “not view with alarm any proposal to revise the Japanese Constitution if the Japanese people so desire, especially if this enhances Japan’s ability to address its international obligations and bring us closer to the attainment of our shared goals of peace, stability and mutuality.”

In the summit, Aquino thanked Abe for supporting Manila’s efforts to pursue a peaceful solution to territorial disputes it has with China and its smaller neighbours in the South China Sea, according to a senior Japanese official.

The two leaders agreed to promote cooperation in disaster relief, with Aquino thanking Japan for its assistance, including the dispatch of Self-Defence Force personnel in an unprecedented scale — to help Manila cope with damage from a powerful typhoon last fall.

The two leaders are expected to continue to assist the development of urban infrastructure in the Philippines.

The leaders reaffirmed cooperation in ensuring maritime security through measures such as Japan’s provision of patrol boats to the Philippines, the official said.

Last week, Philippine Foreign Secretary Albert del Rosario said Manila plans to ask the UN arbitral tribunal to issue a speedy ruling on the Philippines’ dispute with China over exploiting waters in the South China Sea after Beijing refused to take part in the proceedings. Del Rosario said Manila hopes to get the ruling by next year.

Abe and Aquino underscored the importance of observing the rule of law as the regional situation “has become increasingly severe,” apparently taking aim at China’s military buildup and increased assertiveness in the South and East China seas.

Terrorist groups using Internet to recruit, plan attacks

BEIJING, 24 June — Terrorist groups are using the Internet to recruit people, raise funds and plan attacks in China, the State Internet Information Office (SIIO) said here on Tuesday.

Calling audio and video materials that promote terrorism a “cancer” of the Internet, SIIO spokesman Jiang Jun told reporters at a press conference that terrorist forces have “turned the Internet into a principal tool for their operations.”

He said the groups have sought to “spread terrorism and violent beliefs and teach terrorist skills online,” adding that such actions must be struck down decisively.

China launched a campaign on Friday to rid the Internet of audio and video materials that promote terrorism and violence. The move is aimed at safeguarding social stability in northwest China’s Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region and long-term peace, according to the SIIO.

Afghan army forces kill 22 militants in operations

KABUL, 24 June — The Afghan Ministry of Interior Affairs on Tuesday said that the country’s security forces had killed 22 Taleban militants during operations since early Monday.

“Over the past 24 hours, Afghan army, police and intelligence agency carried out several cleanup operations in Nangarhar, Laghman, Suri Pal, Kapisa, Zabul, Uruzgan, Logar, Herat, Badghis and Helmand provinces. They battled the militants, killing 22 armed militants, wounding 12 and arresting five other militants,” the ministry said in a statement.

The security forces also found and seized weapons, the statement said, without saying if there were any casualties on the side of security forces.

The Taleban-led violence continues in Afghanistan. Security forces have press on to clear the militants in restive provinces.

The Taleban responds by bombing and armed attacks.

On Monday, about 18 civilians were injured by gunshots in an armed engagement between Taleban and the security forces in a local base in eastern Nangarhar Province.

The Taleban insurgent group, which has been waging an insurgency of more than one decade, has yet to make comments.

Kosmajac in Montenegro as tourist

PODGORICA, 24 June — Just hours after being identified by Serbian Prime Minister Aleksandar Vucic as Serbia’s biggest drug dealer, Dragoslav Kosmajac, 61, crossed into Montenegro at the Rance border crossing in the night between Friday and Saturday after leaving Serbia at the Jabuka crossing, the Podgorica Vijesti daily reports.

According to reports in some Montenegrin media, he has been located in Herceg Novi.

Vijesti’s sources say that Kosmajac owns a luxurious villa in Risan’s Stari district that, as some say, has been a gathering place for over the past years for many people with criminal records in Serbia and Montenegro.

A source in the police administration said that no international arrest warrant has been issued against Kosmajac.

“No arrest warrant has been issued by the Interpol office in Serbia or any other country, and he entered Montenegro territory in a completely legal manner. Had a local arrest warrant been issued against him in Serbia, officers at the border crossing there would have reacted,” the source said.

The source could neither confirm, nor refute the allegations that Kosmajac entered Montenegro territory with a Slovakian passport.

“Just like any other tourist who crossed the border that night, he had documentation that was completely in order,” the source said.

The 2001 white paper of the Serbian Ministry of Interior identified Kosmajac as one of the major narcotics traders.

Serbian media have reported that he has also been named by protected witnesses and defendants in the Zemun clan trials as the person from whom members of the criminal clan obtained drugs.

He is alleged to have ties with international narcotics smugglers, and has channels for smuggling cocaine from Turkey, Bulgaria and Macedonia to Western Europe via Montenegro and Serbia.

There have also been media reports about Kosmajac’s ties with the Pljevlja-born drug lord Darko Saric but, despite the information the police have on him, he has never been arrested for a lack of evidence, Vijesti reported.

Commenting on media allegations that Kosmajac has left Serbia, Serbian Interior Minister Nebojsa Stefanovic said on Sunday that “the police know who is where.”

Obama presses Putin on Ukraine, warns of further ‘costs’

Washington, 24 June — President Barack Obama urged Russian President Vladimir Putin on Monday to support peace in Ukraine and said Moscow would face further sanctions if it did not take steps to reduce tensions in the country, the White House said on Monday. “The president spoke to President Putin and once again urged him to support peace instead of allowing the provision of arms and materiel across the border and continuing support for militants and separatists who are further destabilizing the situation in Ukraine,” White House spokesman Josh Earnest told reporters.

“Russia will face additional costs if we do not see concrete actions to de-escalate the situation,” he said of Obama’s message to Putin. The two leaders spoke in a call earlier on Monday.

Putin and Obama discussed proposals for peace in Ukraine, after Ukraine’s leader announced a ceasefire in military operations in the east, the Kremlin said in a statement. “They discussed ... the implementation of the peace plan proposed by (Ukrainian) President Petro Poroshenko.”

The Kremlin said, “Putin stressed that priority must be given to halting military operations and to the start of direct negotiations between the opposing sides.”

The White House said in a follow-up statement that Obama welcomed Poroshenko’s peace plan and pressed Putin for Russia to work toward implementing it. “The president called upon President Putin to press the separatists to recognize and abide by the ceasefire and to halt the flow of weapons and materiel across its border into Ukraine,” the statement said. “The president emphasized that words must be accompanied by actions and that the United States remains prepared to impose additional sanctions should circumstances warrant, in coordination with our allies and partners.”

US Vice President Joe Biden told Poroshenko in a phone call on Monday that the United States would continue to strongly support Ukraine’s peace plan, including the disarmament of all illegally armed groups, release of hostages, and de-occupation of government buildings, the White House said in a statement.

Poroshenko underscored to Biden the importance of Ukraine having full control over its border to prevent the inflow of armed militants and weapons, which continue to cross into Ukraine from Russia, the White House said.

Ukrainian insurgents agree to ceasefire

Kiev, 24 June — Anti-government insurgents in eastern Ukraine agreed on Monday to observe a ceasefire declared by Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko, former Ukrainian President Leonid Kuchma said. The ceasefire came after talks in the eastern city of Donetsk attended by Kuchma, officials from the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), the Russian ambassador and representatives from the restive Donetsk and Lugansk regions, local media reported.

The insurgents in Donetsk and Lugansk regions agreed to halt fire till 27 June, the deadline of a week-long truce declared earlier by Poroshenko.

If both sides observe the ceasefire, “then a normal peace process could start,” Kuchma told reporters Monday’s talks.

Speaking positively of the talks, Poroshenko’s deputy chief of staff, Valeyri Chalyi, agreed they were a “move in the right direction.”

Russian Ambassador to Ukraine Mikhail Zurabov also voiced hope that the self-proclaimed “Donetsk People’s Republic” and “Lugansk People’s Republic” would be willing to continue negotiations so as to achieve a lasting truce and peace, and the launch of an inclusive negotiation process.

Poroshenko on Friday unveiled a plan offering unilateral ceasefire, power decentralization in the country through constitutional reform, early parliamentary elections and local elections in the crisis-hit regions.

It also includes a provision to enhance the status of the Russian language across the country and provides security guarantees to all Ukrainians regardless of political belief.

Under the initiative, a 10-km buffer zone on the Ukraine-Russia border and a special corridor are to be created to allow insurgents to leave crisis-hit areas safely.

The armed activists in the two regions, who demanded more autonomy and closer ties with Russia, in April seized administrative buildings and unilaterally declared people’s republics.

Peru’s President Humala reshuffles cabinet as popularity sinks

José Gallardo, an economist on the board of the central bank, became Humala’s new transportation and communications minister.

Humala, a former left-leaning military officer who turned to the right after being elected to the country’s top job in July 2011, did not say why he made the replacements.

Environment Minister Manuel Pulgar-Vidal remained in power despite speculation he might step down after Humala proposed weakening some of his minister’s functions in an economic reform package delivered to Congress.

Humala has reshuffled his cabinet several times in his nearly three-year administration, as disappointment with unfilled electoral promises, concerns about crime and corruption and relatively sluggish economic growth over the past year have dented his popularity.—Reuters

Israel says Assad forces behind Golan attack that killed boy

Jerusalem, 24 June — Israeli Foreign Minister Avigdor Lieberman said on Tuesday forces loyal to Syrian President Bashar al-Assad were responsible for an attack on Sunday that killed an Israeli boy on the occupied Golan Heights.

An anti-tank missile fired from Syria across the frontier fence killed Mohammed Qaraqara, 13, drawing Israeli tank fire and air strikes on Syrian army positions, which a monitoring group said had killed 10 Syrian soldiers.

“We got all the analysis, all the intelligence and it was clear it was Syrian authorities, Assad’s forces, who fired on the Israeli boy ... and they must pay the price,” Lieberman told Israel Radio. “I hope Damascus got the message,” he said.

It was the first time an Israeli official had said who perpetrated the attack, which Israel had earlier described as intentional and the most serious on the frontier since the start of the three-year-old Syrian conflict.

The Syrian army has a presence on the Golan Heights but many areas are controlled by rebels, including militant groups hostile to the Jewish state.

“I think Israel responded exactly as we should have, in this case and all others. We cannot just let the Golan, including what Israel has said were deliberate attacks on its troops, Israel captured the western part of the plateau from Syria in a 1967 war and annexed it in a move that is not recognized internationally.”

Visa-free travel will help establishment of ASEAN Community

By Aung Khin

Myanmar has signed bilateral agreements on visa-free travel with Brunei, Laos, Cambodia, the Philippines and Vietnam. Thailand has agreed to sign this scheme, but it was postponed after the Kingdom’s former prime minister cancelled her trip to Myanmar last November due to political turmoil in her country.

Negotiations are now underway with Singapore, Malaysia and Indonesia, with the scheme believed to help implement the ASEAN Community by 2015.

The ASEAN region has a population of about 500 million, a total area of 4.5 million square kilometers, a combinedgross domestic product of US$737 billion, and a total trade of US$720 billion.

According to The Impact of Visa Facilitation in ASEAN Member States, the report prepared by the World Tourism Organization (UNWTO), the World Travel & Tourism Council (WTTC) and Tourism Economics in January 2014, visa facilitation can generate between 6 to 10 million additional international tourist arrivals for ASEAN Members States by 2016. These extra arrivals would bring in between US$77 and US$12 billion in additional international tourism receipts and create from 333,000 to 654,000 new jobs by 2016.

Moreover, visa-free travel scheme should be implemented without hesitation to boost multilateral relationships among the ASEAN member countries, and to establish the ASEAN Economic Community, a European Union-style open trading market.

Despite the income gap and human development index, agreements on this programme should not be delayed to help regional development as the establishment of AEC and Visa-free travel scheme has a mutually supportive relationship.

Myanmar, Cambodia, Indonesia and the Philippines have signed the ‘Statement of Intent on Smart Visa’ in June 2013 with the objective of eliminating barriers on movement of tourists.

ASEAN member countries should adopt visa policies on grounds of appropriateness and mutual respect. Criteria should be balanced without different treatments. Delays should be removed with bilateral negotiations.

A Slipper We Lost

Maung Phyo (WYU)

On one October evening, last year, I was awaiting the bus at Pan So Dan bus-stop in front of ToKyo Donuts. Not long afterwards, a bus No 243 pulled up and I got on. I thought I would find many vacant seats as the bus-stop is not far away from its terminus. I came to know I was wrong when I saw it was almost packed. I took a seat beside a girl. Of course, she was seated beside the window. In Yangon, the first ones to get on are very likely to seat themselves beside the window. However, a few exceptions come up when the window is out of order, or the seat is dirty or the one who got on first is about to get off or the late-comer requesting the place nearest to the window over his or her bus-sickness or habit of chewing betel or the place is seared by the hot beams of the Sun.

Of course, I took a glance at her. She was just a plain face not a striking beauty. She appeared a hawker on the way home selling petty items roundabout the downtown cinemas. Our seat was on the right side of the bus and so she was sitting on my right. Therefore, I only could see her left side. She held a plastic bag in her left hand. Inside it were some one-thousand notes and a few changes. I was such a sharp-eye before and was doublet by my profession. Yes, I was a teacher. Just a sweeping look is always enough whenever I enter my classroom. Teachers’ eyes proved to be as sharp as those of the detectives.

I am in the habit of closing my eyes or reading downcast whenever I am aboard. However, that day, I brought with me one of my favorite books and was reading it. A few moments later, she made some moves and I turned to her. She was trying to unfold a bind of rubber band at the neck of a Burmese traditional snack. Strangely enough, she was trying to open the rubber band. Why don’t you use your right hand? yours are just awkward moves, I thought. But, another relieving thought came. Maybe she was holding her purse in her right hand. She looked starving, insatiably emptying the snack.

The bus was approaching Hlaing Thar Yar, a small township in the outskirts of Yangon. She started to move. Perhaps she was about to get off. I happened to ask her. Yes she answered. Her destination was next bus stop. The bus rolled towards her bus stop with a loud creaky brake. I shrank to make room for her. But, it looked something came up against her. She was bending over and feeling under the seat. And she turned to ask me if I found one of her slippers. Negative was my answer. Her enquire flew about our seat. “No” was repeated in the air. She looked she gave up on her hope for her missing slipper. She shoul- dered past me. Only then did I notice that she was without her right hand. Her right hand was lost as from the elbow. I should have noticed it earlier. Perhaps because of her long-sleeve shirts or maybe she was sitting leaning back with me. I was ignorant of the fact. She got off with an only slipper on. Our car just started to roll off when I had a family to look after remaining slipper. She looked serene and assured. It started to bucket down instantly when our bus took off. The jerk shook the bus and something slid into my view from the front seat. Yes, it was the slipper she claimed to lose.

Those sitting around us did not bother to feel it with their foot. I also had in the heart to sit still. In fact, we always are found to be reluctant to help the needy out. She looked a dirty wa- gger, a type from hand to mouth. That means she might think twice or thrice before deciding to buy a new pair of slippers. If she had a family to look after (probably she did), her family daily needs must simply be her first priority. In fact, not only in Haing Thar Yar but also in many places of outskirts Yangon, there remain so many who have to search dustbins and heaps of rubbish for discarded slippers and who have to beg other peoples for used garments. At my street, Than Lane, great shouts “Rubbish Time” echoed by dirty and miserable barrow kids of school-age in and out of al- leys are day-to-day scenes. Sometimes, they are with adults but for the most part, alone. If asked, one would come to know that they are bread-winners.

Most of Myanmar had said that there appeared a downright change in their society. That was after the political change. However, they are silenced by recent civil war refugees from Kachin and Shan, victims of natural disaster like scarcity of clean water in Middle Myanmar and those homeless resulted from communal clashes. On social networks like Facebook, one would come across many a beg- gers-garbage photo upload- ed so often. At such times, many would pop up flying lip-services but the number of actual helping hands is the opposite. Sometimes I catch myself rendering lip-services even in the cases that I am able. Just have a train ride. Look at the passengers. Many would try to occupy the place as wide as they can.

As a result, 8-seat bench would hardly hold five passengers. Their skins are thick enough to bear scornful looks from the up-standers nearby. They would lean against each other, cross their legs, sit side- wise, smoke like chim- neys, chew betel shooting spittle inadvertent- ly on other’s cloth and worst, and leave their rub- bishes behind. There are so many stories to tell when it comes to behaviors, ethics and mindset.

In brief, what I want to touch on here is that we are very reluctant to under- stand other’s feelings and help them out especially when they are in need. To offer a seat shrinking one- self a little bit and to hold help bags of others who have to stand often look so hard, I question myself. When we have to stand on a bus, we would dart out to the one who seems to get off soon, stand close to him or her blocking other’s way, sometimes cajole others into offering a seat giving reasons like “I am dizzy” or “I am chewing betel”. Some people tend to beg seat carrying their kids who can stand very well. When all of these cases are brought into pub- lic, all would agree these should not be so. But, practicality is quite differ- ent from reality.

Most of us are Bud- dhists and know that the summary of Buddhist Teachings is: to do good deeds, to avoid evils and to purify one’s mind. The Buddha said those who abide by the said teachings are his followers regardless of their religions. All of these are for Peace. In fact, we all are just victims of the Age. That means we are fellow-sufferers. We should help each other out from difficulty. Such thoughts pop up due to the said girl’s missing slipper. It is simply because I feel like we all lost one of our slippers, not hers only. Since then, whenever I see slippers, it reminds me not to let the same thing happen again, not to be reluc- tant to help the needy. And I sincerely wish others feel the same.
Minister calls for job creation in China-backed copper mine area

NAV Pyi Taw, 24 June—Union Minister U Hla Tun at the Ministry of the President Office on Monday urged responsible persons to create job opportunities for locals in the area of the Latpadaungtaung copper mine project site in Monywa in northwest Myanmar’s Sagaing region.

The union minister said the coordination meeting of the Working Committee for implementation on the suggestions of the Investigation Commission formed to settle protest against the project of Myanmar Wanbao Mining Copper Mine Limited.

He said, “The mining project has not reached its production period. The momentum of the construction period must be maintained. Mere compensation is not enough for the locals who lost their lands. The local farmers must be supported with long term livelihoods to develop their socio-economic lives.”

He also said that the responsible persons must persuade the residents to calm down their resentment against the mining project, and to prioritize their needs.

A systematic mine closure plan must be drawn for the development of this area, the minister said.

U Hla Tun said the government is using state budget, in addition to corporate social responsibilities (CSR) funds of business companies, for the development programmes in that area.

The company promised 2 percent of profits toward CRS funds once the mine is in operation, which analysts commented is a “conspicuous and unusually generous social investment” for a Chinese company.

The government formed a probe panel for the project after environmental concerns by local communities to shut down the project.

The final report of the panel to the president was submitted in March 2013, suggesting that the project should go on for the economic benefit of the nation and the people as the best choice.

The construction work on the Latpadaungtaung copper mine project resumed last October under a revised contract signed last July by the state-owned Myanmar Mining Enterprise, Myanmar Economic Holding Ltd and China’s Wanbao Mining Ltd.

The Wanbao Mining Ltd., a subsidiary of state-owned Chinese arms manufacturer China North Industries Corp., has promised more than $1 million a year in social investments in villages around the mining site. MNA

Parliament yet to meet motion target, OMI’s second report says

By Ye Myint

YANGON, 24 June—Parliament’s average motion submission rate per day merely neared one during its first regular sessions despite four motions per session-day allowed by the Parliamentary rules and regulations, noted a report by the Open Myanmar Initiative, a Yangon-based parliamentary monitoring organization.

The group headquartered at No. 82 on Insein Road, Hline Township, Yangon, released its Parliamentary Monitoring Report No. 2 on Tuesday with a press conference attended by local journalists and observers. The report focuses on motions submitted at the parliament.

During the press conference, an OMI’s technical team launched a Myanmar MPs mobile application, developing public awareness on the parliament and relationship between the constituencies and parliamentarians through email and Facebook.

The report said 286 Lower House representatives and 108 Upper House representatives did not submit a single motion during six regular sessions. It also revealed only two Defence Services Personnel Representative from the Lower House and the Upper House submitted one motion each, with 19 others from both houses participating in discussions.

Despite its presence in only three sessions of the parliament, the National League for Democracy had five out of eight motions approved at the Lower House, standing second after Union Solidarity and Development Party that had 47 motions approved at the same house.

According to the OMI’s recently-released report, Chin national representatives with a low percentage of presence in Parliament, accounting for only five per cent, had made 22 proposals in the Upper House, accounting for 14.8 per cent of total motion submission percentage.

On the Parliament’s cooperation in the realization of OMI Parliament monitoring programme, U Ko Ko Gyi, one of 88 Generation Peace and Open Society leaders, who also pioneered the OMI, told The New Light of Myanmar that more cooperation in the technical field could turn the next reports into ones with qualitative-based approach as the previous reports were based on quantitative-based approach and recounted how the Parliament welcomed OMI activities.

Following the release of OMI’s first report on parliament focusing on questions in February, meagre participation of Defence Services Personnel Representatives in question and answer sessions was found in the headlines of local media.

Open Myanmar Initiative is a non-profit organization with the vision of promoting the right of information and education—a prerequisite to get each and every citizen involved in Myanmar’s transition towards the future where peace prevails and democracy prospers.

Chest-pain follow-up linked to better survival, heart health

New York, 24 June —

After an emergency-room visit for chest pain, people who follow-up with a doctor are less likely than those who don’t so to have a heart attack or die in the next year, Canadian researchers say.

Based on more than 200,000 patients at low risk for heart attack who were seen in an Ontario ER for chest pain, the study team found that almost 30 percent never went for any kind of follow-up. But those who did tended to fare better.

“Patients often mistake being discharged from the emergency department for having a clean bill of health, but this is not necessarily true,” said the study’s senior author, Dr Dennis Ko, a cardiologist at the University of Toronto and Sunnybrook Health Sciences Centre.

Doctors use follow-up appointments as an opportunity to pin down the cause of an individual’s chest pain, which can be hard to do, Ko said, especially for patients without heart attack risk factors like diabetes or high blood pressure.

After running more tests, the primary care doctor can refer the patient to a cardiologist or another specialist. Indeed, patients in the study who saw their primary care doctor and a cardiologist, or just a cardiologist, were the least likely to die or have a heart attack within a year of their ER visit.

“We were surprised that there really was a benefit to getting follow-up in this group because these patients did not have a lot of risk factors for heart disease,” Ko told Reuters Health.

Chest Pain is one of the main symptoms of a heart attack, and according to the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, more than 5 million Americans visit an emergency room complaining of chest pain each year.

Medical guidelines state that after discharge, even patients with no apparent heart attack should be sent for a follow-up exam to investigate the chest pain.

In a past study, Ko’s team had shown that people at high risk for heart disease did better if they followed-up an ER visit, although many of those patients didn’t seek further treatment either.

To see whether follow-ups make a difference for low-risk patients, Ko and his colleagues analyzed medical records for 216,527 patients who were discharged after having their chest pains assessed at an Ontario emergency department between April 2004 and March 2010.

The patients were all over age 50 and considered at low risk for heart disease because they did not have diabetes or any known heart risk factors. People with other serious illnesses, such as cancer, were excluded from the analysis. The researchers looked at whether patients saw a primary care doctor or specialist within 30 days of their ER visit and tracked whether they died or had a heart attack in the 12 months after that.

During the first month, 29 percent of patients — almost 70,000 people — did not see any kind of doctor. Sixty percent saw at least their primary care doctor, 8 percent saw both a primary care doctor and a cardiologist, and 4 percent of patients saw only a cardiologist.

Compared to patients who got no follow-up, those who saw both a primary care physician and a cardiologist had a 19 percent lower risk of heart attack or death in the next year. For those who saw just a cardiologist, the risk was 13 percent lower.

The study team reports in the American Heart Journal.

Seeing just a primary care doctor was not linked to reduced risk compared to not seeing any doctor. Still, the authors emphasize that primary care typically plays an important “gatekeeper” role in referring patients to the right specialists.

Why so many patients never followed up after their ER visit with any kind of doctor is unclear from the data the researchers had. But further studies should look at who would most benefit from follow-up attention and how to make sure they get it, the authors write.

“I think one of the most striking findings is that in a system where all medical costs are paid, 29 percent of patients did not follow up with any doctor after having chest pain,” Umesh Khot told Reuters Health.

Indonesia sees chance to ramp up automotive industry in ASEAN market

JAKARTA, 24 June —
The Indonesian government expected automotive industry to develop faster when the ASEAN economic community kicks off next year, a minister said here on Monday.

Indonesian Industry Minister MS Hidayat dismissed the competitiveness of the country’s automotive industry has been on the rise as huge investment flew in the last two years.

The minister promised that the government would keep supporting the efforts to raise competitiveness.

“The ASEAN economic community will be an opportunity for domestic automotive industry to develop,” Minister Hidayat said at Industry Ministry.

The minister disclosed that the capacity of the country’s automotive industry has risen recently due to rapid investment in the sector.

“The capacity of Indonesia’s automotive factory has hiked to 2 million annually following the huge investment flows in the last two years,” Hidayat said.

The biggest economy in Southeast Asia, Indonesia, manufactured 1.2 million cars last year, according to the data from ministry.

His upbeat over the industry’s progress in the years to develop, Minister Hidayat said.

“It is timely, leading indicators of manufacturing surveys (PMI) climbed to a four-year peak of 57.5. That helped offset an unexpected dip in Markit’s euro zone PMI to 52.8 in June from May’s 53.5,” Reuters

Asian shares creep higher, encouraged by global data

Sydney, 24 June —

Asian shares climbed slender gains on Tuesday as improved manufacturing data from China, Japan and the United States augured well for global growth, despite a disappointing result from the euro zone.

Though moves were modest as markets slipped into something of a summer lull, MSCI’s broadest index of Asia-Pacific shares outside Japan managed to gain 0.3 percent.

South Korea outperformed with a rise of almost 1 percent, led by Samsung Electronics Co Ltd and Hyundai Motor Co.

“Market weighties closely follow global economic recovery, and the manufacturing surveys in the US and China have provided positive signals,” said Hyundai Securities market analyst Bae Sung-young.

The performance of manufacturing surveys (PMI) tend to be reliable, and timely, leading indicators of output trends and are closely watched by economists. So there was relief that readings from the United States, China and Japan all rose strongly in the month.

The US PMI was a particularly pleasant surprise as it climbed to a four-year peak of 57.5.

That helped offset an unexpected dip in Markit’s euro zone PMI to 52.8 in June from May’s 53.5.

David Hensley, an economist at JPMorgan, said the PMI’s taken as a whole pointed to a quickening in global industrial output, put, perhaps to as much as a 2 percent annualized pace.

“Emerging Asia lies at the center of global manufacturing, so any acceleration in global activity normally would be confirmed there,” he added.

“The continued recovery in China’s manufacturing PMI is a positive sign, both outright and because China’s survey typically is aligned with the broader EM complex. The trend in official data for EM Asia ex China remains murky, however,” Reuters
May global temperature reaches record high: NOAA

WASHINGTON, 24 June — Last month was the hottest May since record keeping began in 1880, the US National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) said on Monday. The combined average temperature over global land and ocean surfaces was 15.54 degrees Celsius, 0.74 degrees Celsius higher than the 20th century average, the NOAA said.

“This surpassed the previous record high anomaly of 0.72 degrees Celsius set in 2010,” the NOAA said in its monthly state of the climate report.

Apple suppliers to start making larger iPhones next month

NEW YORK, 24 June — Apple Inc’s suppliers will begin producing larger versions of the iPhone in China next month, Bloomberg reported citing sources.

Apple is ramping up production of iPhones with 4.7 and 5.5-inch screen sizes, which may be shipped to retailers around September, the report said. Apple launches new versions of the smartphone line that drives half its business around the fall of every year.

The industry has speculated for some time now that Apple intends to design and sell a device with a larger screen, to fend off Samsung phones with much bigger displays that have proven popular in Asia and elsewhere.

Hon Hai Precision Industry will recruit over 100,000 people in mainland China to produce the newest iPhone from Apple, Taiwan’s Economic Daily News reported on Monday, in what the report called the firm’s largest single hiring spree in China.

Fellow Taiwanese contract manufacturer Pegatron Corp will also expand its workforce in one mainland factory by 30 percent, in response to expected high demand for the new iPhone.

New Zealand 3D scanner gives new insight into health

WELLINGTON, 24 June — New Zealand scientists have claimed a world first in developing a 3D scanner that could revolutionize treatment of diseases by showing a detailed view of the inside of the body.

The University of Canterbury’s MARS-Biobringing scanner was capable of examining molecular structures and tissues, as well as diagnosing common illnesses such as the build-up of plaque in heart disease, and cartilage and arthritis, said associate Professor Anthony Butler.

It also enabled drug delivery systems that allowed researchers to follow drugs in the body to help fight cancer and joint diseases.

“We have been the first in the world to explore the scanner and its applications. While others theorize about scanner uses we can actually test them,” Butler said in a statement on Monday.

Researchers expected to be safely scanning large animals such as sheep in about three years and to undertake human clinical trials in five years.

“We face a number of technical challenges such as the quality of sensor materials and coping with the high power of the x-ray tubes used for human scanning,” said Butler.

“On the clinical side we know there is likely to be benefit for monitoring drug delivery agents and joint implant imaging.

The purpose of a human scanner for clinical trials is to evaluate how this new information translates to improved human diagnosis and management.” —Xinhua

SpaceX puts Falcon 9 rocket launch on hold until July

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida, 24 June — Deviled by a spate of technical problems, Space Exploration Technologies on Monday said it will suspend launch attempts of its next Falcon 9 rocket until early July.

The privately owned company, also known as SpaceX, has been trying since Friday to launch a Falcon 9 rocket from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station in Florida on a satellite-delivery mission for Orbcomm Inc, which provides machine-to-machine data and messaging services worldwide.

SpaceX had slated its fourth launch attempt for Tuesday. “SpaceX is taking a closer look at a potential issue identified while conducting pre-flight checkouts during (Sunday’s) countdown,” the company said in statement posted on its website on Monday.

“SpaceX will stand down on Tuesday while our engineering teams evaluate further,” it said. Taking into account a previously scheduled maintenance period for the Eastern Test Range, which supports launches from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station, the earliest SpaceX expects to be able to fly is the first week of July.

“We... will work with the Range to confirm the next available launch opportunities,” the company, which is owned by technology entrepreneur Elon Musk, said.

A launch attempt on Friday was called off by a potential technical problem with the rocket’s upper-stage engine. No other information about the issue was provided by SpaceX, though the glitch apparently was cleared in time for a second launch attempt on Saturday. That attempt was mixed by poor weather at the launch site. —Reuters
Kerry says US support to Iraq will be “intense and sustained”

BAGHDAD, 24 June — Secretary of State John Kerry said on Monday that US support for Iraqi security forces will be “intense and sustained” to help them combat an Islamist insurgency that has swept through the country’s north and west.

Kerry said that during talks he had with Prime Minister Nuri al-Maliki in Baghdad on Wednesday, the Iraqi leader reaffirmed his commitment to a 1 July date for forming a new government.

President Barack Obama offered up to 300 American advisers to help coordinate the fight. But he held off granting a request for air strikes from Maliki’s Shi’ite Muslim-led government and renewed a call for Maliki to do more to overcome sectarian divisions that have alienated the Sunni Muslim minority.

“The key today was to get from each of the government leaders a clarity with respect to the road forward in terms of government formation,” Kerry said. “Indeed, Prime Minister Maliki firmly and on multiple occasions affirmed his commitment to 1 July (to form the new government).”

Kerry said Obama will not wait before he acts to provide advisers and support for Iraq’s military. “The support will be intense and sustained and if Iraq’s leaders take the necessary steps to bring the country together, it will be effective. “It will allow Iraqi security forces to confront ISIL more effectively and in a way that respects Iraq’s sovereignty while also regarding America’s and the region’s vital interests,” he said, referring to the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant insurgents who have spearheaded the Sunni revolt. –Reuters

Sunni tribesmen seize Iraqi border crossing with Jordan

AMMAN, 24 June — Sunni tribesmen took control of a border crossing between Iraq and Jordan after Iraq’s army pulled out of the area following clashes with rebels, Iraqi and Jordanian intelligence sources said on Monday.

It was not immediately clear if the tribesmen’s seizure of the Turaibil crossing, the only legal crossing point between Iraq and Jordan, late on Sunday was part of the broader advance by Sunni militants led by Maliki’s Shi’ite Muslim-led government and renewed a call for Maliki to do more to overcome sectarian divisions that have alienated the Sunni Muslim minority.

World Bank report calls for smart policy to combat climate change

WASHINGTON, 24 June — Government policies that improve energy efficiency, waste management and public transport could increase global GDP growth by about 1.8-2.6 trillion US dollars a year by 2030.

“The report’s findings show clearly that the right policy choices can deliver significant benefits to lives, jobs, crops, energy, and GDP, as well as emissions reductions to combat climate change,” said Jim Yong Kim, President of the World Bank.

The policies could avert approximately 94,000 premature deaths from pollution-related diseases a year in 2030 as well as prevent the production of greenhouse gas emissions roughly equivalent to taking 2 billion cars off the road.

If fully implemented, the set of regulatory, tax and other policy actions outlined in the report could account for 30 percent of the total emissions reduction needed in 2030 to limit global warming to 2 degrees Celsius.

The report advised India to build new bus rapid transit lines, Mexico to equip 90 percent of its pig and dairy farms with biogas and solar energy systems, and China to deploy 70 million electric cars.

The report was released in advance of the UN Secretary General’s Climate Summit in September when heads of state and government will meet in New York to discuss actions of combating climate change.—Xinhua
Indian man gets 5 months in jail for charge related to riot in Singapore

SINGAPORE, 24 June—
An Indian man has been jailed for five months, making him the first of 25 men who claimed trial for charges related to their roles in a riot in Singapore in December last year, local media reported on Tuesday.
Mahalingam Thavamani, 27, was found guilty of an amended charge of obstructing a public servant when the latter was endeavouring to disperse an unlawful assembly on the evening of 8 December last year, the Straits Times said.
He was initially charged with rioting.
The man was also the first to be convicted of obstructing a public servant in relation to the riot that broke out among some 300 foreign workers following a fatal accident that killed an Indian worker in Little India, a neighbourhood in Singapore known for its distinctive Indian culture and shops.
The riot in Little India left 39 officers injured and 25 emergency vehicles damaged.
District Judge Salina Ishak on Monday accepted the testimony of prosecutors that Thavamani had refused to leave a road in the Little India area, and had insisted on moving into a restricted area in the same road even though he had been told to leave.
The court had heard during the trial held over April and last month that the accused’s voice grew louder as he spoke to the police officer. —Xinhua

Senior jailed for vandalism of bus stops in Singapore

SINGAPORE, 24 June—
A 71-year-old man was sentenced to four weeks in jail for vandalism at several bus stops and on a transformer box in support of a controversial blogger in Singapore, local newspaper reported on Tuesday.
Loh Thiern Hock admitted to five counts of committing mischief, of which one caused losses of 500 Singapore dollars (about 250 US dollars) or more. He was given two weeks’ jail on Monday for each charge, and three of the jail terms will run concurrently, the Today newspaper reported.
Loh defaced several bus stop advertisement boards and a transformer box, using a permanent marker to scrawl on four bus stops along several streets in the downtown area.
One of the phrases he painted read “We support CPF Blogger, Return our CPF Money,” in apparent reference to a blogger who has published a blogpost alleging Prime Minister Lee Hsien Loong has misappropriated funds contributed to the Central Provident Fund. —Xinhua

US football star Hope Solo pleads not guilty to assault

Seattle, 24 June — US women’s football star Hope Solo pleaded not guilty on Monday to domestic violence charges stemming from a weekend altercation with her sister and a nephew and was ordered released from jail on her own recognizance. Solo, 32, was arrested shortly after midnight on Saturday by police officers who responded to an emergency 911 call at her house in the Seattle suburb of Kirkland and heard a disturbance from the street, police said. Entering a not guilty plea on her behalf in Kirkland Municipal Court, defense lawyer Todd Maybrown said Solo was the actual victim in the incident. "She was hit over the head with a bathroom door," Maybrown told the judge. The judge ruled there was probable cause for the case to proceed. He ordered Solo, a goalkeeper for the US women’s football team, released from custody but granted prosecution motions seeking court orders barring her from drinking alcohol or having any contact with her sister or nephew while the case was pending.

Solo, who is charged with two counts of domestic violence in the fourth degree, said little during the proceedings except to state her name for the record. Police said that during the incident she appeared to be upset and intoxicated, while her adult sister and her 17-year-old nephew had visible injuries. Solo was hosting a party at her home when the dispute took place, the Seattle Times reported.

Nadal determined to make his mark in Wimbledon first round

LONDON, 24 June — World No1 Rafael Nadal will begin his Wimbledon campaign against Slovakian Martin Kizran on Centre Court on Tuesday hoping to ease the painful memories of his past two years in southwest Lon-don.

After a second-round defeat to Lukas Rosol in 2012, Nadal was dumped out by Belgian Steve Darcis in his first match last year, but the two-time former champion, who has lost three of his past four matches on grass, is confident history will not repeat itself once again.

“I am going to try to play with the best attitude that I have,” the Spaniard said.

“I am practising that way, very positive every moment, playing my best in every moment, working in the things that I really believe that I need to work to play well here. I am feeling better this year than last couple years, seriously,” Nadal said.

Nadal follows German Sabine Lisicki on Centre Court after last year’s women’s singles runner-up was ready out of the tournament. Lisicki had run the Dutch close in a 3-2 defeat last week.

For Australia, the defeat saw some action in Brazil. Australia coach Ange Postecoglou said his team had made “the most-viewed match of the tournament.”

His coach Vicente Del Bosque said: “The rest of the game we controlled well.”

The goals silenced deposed champions left Brazil on a winning note, with no points, their worst World Cup last-16 performance. Australia coach Ange Postecoglou said his team had faded after performing well in the first 10 to 15 minutes.

“Let’s not be myopic and our decision making wasn’t great. We gave the ball away far too cheaply which we haven’t been doing in this tournament,” he said.

Spanish goalkeeper Pepe Reina, who replaced captain Iker Casillas, had a quiet afternoon, with Aus-tralia missing suspended defender Jordi Alba.
