Meningococcal disease kills eight children in Mandalay Region

Aung Thant Khaing

NEISSERIA meningitis, a serious and potentially life-threatening infection, has claimed lives of eight children in Mandalay as of Wednesday, with another child suspected of developing the infection under surveillance in Pathein Nyo Township, according to an official from the Mandalay Region Public Health Department.

Cases have been reported since 5 March in six villages in Thasi Township, said Dr Win Naing, head of the department, adding that a patient in Meiktila Township was detected as having Neisseria meningitis type A bacteria, one of the five types that cause meningococcal disease.

“The disease is commonly found in dry zones. The recent outbreaks are of the vaccine-preventable Type B variety which have occurred in dusty villages of the township,” said Dr Win Naing, calling for greater care to be given in regard to personal hygiene and staying away from dusty spaces.

“Those suspected of having the infectious disease are undergoing special treatment in addition to laboratory tests.”

Medical staff are currently making field trips to the villages with suspected patients being removed to nearby hospitals for special treatment. Blood tests are being taken from infected patients and their family members, said the department.

Myanmar fishing slaves in Indonesia to go home, “tip of the iceberg”

Alisa Tang

BANGKOK — A final group of 24 fishing boat slaves is preparing to return home to Myanmar this week from Indonesia, aid workers said at a trafficking meeting in Bali, one of them calling the 1,200 slaves repatriated since last year the “tip of the iceberg”.

Hundreds of migrants seeking work have been exploited or enslaved aboard fishing boats in Southeast Asian seas in recent years, their plight emerging in a growing number of media and other reports.

These reports, and a shift in Indonesian government policy in 2014, brought the scale of the problem to light, including the fact that many trafficked and enslaved fishery workers were stranded in Indonesia.

Some of the 24 Myanmar nationals expected to leave on Thursday have not spoken to their families since leaving Myanmar in search of work a decade ago, only to be duped into years of brutal, unpaid labour on fishing vessels.

“The departure of these men will bring to an end one chapter of this tragic story,” Mark Getchell, head of the International Organization for Migration in Indonesia, said on Tuesday at the sixth ministerial conference of the Bali process on people smuggling and trafficking.

“But all the evidence suggests this is the tip of the iceberg, and much work needs to be done across the region to better protect the rights of migrant workers and ensure there is no repeat of the abuses they were subjected to over so many years.”

Southeast Asia, one of the world’s largest sources of seafood, has struggled to control “illegal, unreported and unregulated” fishing.

In late 2014 Indonesia issued a moratorium on foreign vessels fishing off its coast, forcing several to port and leaving hundreds of men stuck in the port of Ambon, and blowing up boats fishing illegally in its waters.

Separately, media reports described hundreds of fishing slaves kept in captivity, buried in unmarked graves or marooned on Benjina, an island in eastern Indonesia.

Build rural access roads instead of building more flyovers, regional MP says

FUNDs should be allocated to the construction of village-to-township roads instead of constructing two more planned flyovers in Yangon, said a parliamentarian at the Yangon Region Hluttaw session yesterday.

It has been found that building more flyovers will not ease congestion in Yangon completely, said U Yan Shin of Mayan-gon Township Committee 1, stressing the need to reconsider the construction of flyovers as traffic systems are going to be upgraded.

The Yangon Region government has planned to build two flyovers in Yangon during this fiscal year, requesting a budget of K32.2 billion for bridges on Kaba-Aye Pagoda Road and at North Okkalapa junction.

U Nyi Nyi of Dagon Myothit (South) echoed the suggestion, calling for the fulfillment of needs in road transport, health care services and infrastructure development for sewerage instead of spending large sums of money on costly and intrusive flyover construction.

According to sources, K15.75 billion is set for an overpass at the junction between Kaba-Aye Pagoda road and Parami Road and K16.45 billion for another overpass at North Okkalapa junction.

Experts pointed out that traffic jams in Yangon are attributed mostly to weak enforcement and non-adherence to traffic rules, by bus drivers and bus-stops being built in unsystematic patterns.

Traffic systems installed at 8 Mile junction with the assistance of the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) can ease congestion to a certain extent, they said.

The Yangon government spent K104.291 billion on construction of six flyovers—Hledan, Myaynigone, Bayintnaung, Shwegonzine, Kokkai and 8 Mile—in Yangon, with 22.5 billion set for the Tanwite flyover which is still under construction.

During a parliamentary session on Tuesday, Daw Sandar Min, chair of Yangon Region Hluttaw’s finance, planning and economic committee, called for a review of the regional government’s requested budget for 2016-2017 FY. According to the regional government, a project worth K20 billion for the establishment of a control centre for 154 traffic lights in Yangon is being implemented by the Myanmar Shwe Ying company in cooperation with the China Railway Construction Company (CRCC), with a schedule of completing the project within six months.—Ko Moe

Inspection team to be formed to determine extent of structural damage to Mandalay Mingalar market

An inspection team will be formed to assess and release a report on the salvagability of the fire-ravaged Mingalar Market according to a meeting of the Mandalay City Development Committee on Wednesday.

The team is set to be made up of officials and engineers from the Mandalay City Development Committee, the Ministry of Construction, the Myanmar Engineering Society and University of Technology (Mandalay).

The market requires an inspection and a grading of structural integrity following serious damage caused by a massive fire that occurred on Tuesday, said U Khin Maung Tin, MCDC’s secretary, adding that a decision will be made after determining the extent of damage to the gutted building.

There should be no need to demolish or restructure Yangon’s Mingalar market, said U Thant Zaw Htway, joint secretary of the MES (Mandalay) based on a preliminary inspection.

However, it is required that an evaluation of fire damage be carried out to determine the buildings safety, he added.

During the meeting Associate Professor Dr Hla Myo Aung of the Mandalay University of Technology informed the panel that the strength of a building decreases by around 20 per cent after a fire that reaches temperatures of around 150 to 200 degrees centigrade.—Aung Thant Khing

The IOM, at the request of Indonesia and with support from Australia, has identified, assisted and repatriated more than 1,200 trafficking victims from Ambon and Benjina, the organisation said in a statement. Most of the men are from Myanmar, some from Cambodia and Thailand.

The IOM said it “strongly suspects” an additional 800 foreign nationals repatriated by fishing companies and through other means were also trafficking victims.

Hearing-impaired children receive free cochlear implant surgery

YANGON’S Victoria Hospital recently offered free cochlear implant surgeries to young children with congenital hearing loss.

Four children under six years of age received the free surgical operation which was performed by an experienced medical team at Victoria Hospital on 19 March.

“We plan to provide our free services to 42 needy children over this year. Currently we have collected enough funds to help 38 children,” said Dr Daw Aye Aye Win, chairwoman of Victoria Health Care Foundation.

Funded by community donations, over 20 hearing-impaired children from low-income families have undergone the surgery since the cochlear implant programme was launched in 2014 with the aim of creating a better life for children born deaf or with hearing losses.

A cochlear implant is small electronic implant that acts as an artificial sound-vibration device in order to give a sense of sound to a person who is profoundly deaf or severely hard of hearing.

“The price for a single pair of cochlear implant devices is US $8,500 and the cost for the whole operation amounts to around K1 million,” said Prof Soe Tin, chair of the programme.

“Surgery at a young age can bring about better results for children in the long term. The parents of the children will be instructed on how to provide care after the operation,” he added. While the country’s first cochlear implant operation was conducted some years ago the device was introduced to the world over 30 years ago.— Soe Win (SP)

Sugar re-export on the rise

Aung Thant Khaing

SUGAR re-export is on the rise again, a change noted since 20 March. Myanmar legally re-exports imported sugar from India and Thailand to China via two routes: The Tamu-Monywa-Mandalay-Muse route and the Kawthaung-Yangon-Mandalay-Muse route, according to Mandalay Sugar commodity depot.

The price of sugar per viss (approximately 1.6 kilograms) fell from around K1200 to around K1060 between 9 and 18 February. The price rose a little bit, according to sources, to K1070-1090 on 21 March. The price of re-export is K20-30 higher than that of sugar locally refined sugar.

“Historically, the high sugar yield season in Thailand. The price has dropped down due to the low demand from China. We re-export the sugar to China by purchasing the produce from Thai and India because local sugar does not meet export quality, said U Htay from the Mandalay sugar commodity depot.

Great-Wall sugar and Pale sugar produced in Myanmar are of export quality and so exported to China in small batches. Sugar produced in Thailand and India can meet export quality on a much larger scale as they use more advanced refining techniques. Most of the sugar produced in the country has local market interest only.

The price of sugar depends on both the exchange rate and the demand from China. Usually, the price declines when demand is low. Now the price has risen, said Ko Ye Min Aung, a Tine Kyaw sugar mill owner. Sugar mill owners purchase the sugarcane from Ngar-oe, Myataung, Maungkon, Moetar, Kyaukhtonegyi and Imyaw. They produce sugar mainly for the local market as Myanmar sugar does not look appealing. Myanmar also lacks advanced refining machinery. Sugar manufactures from other countries make sugar directly from sugar cane. In Myanmar, however, the sugarcane is crushed for juice and it is from the liquid that the sugar is produced.

Transportation float between K70 to K100 per viss due to Mandalay-Muse road traffic jams. A bag of sugar weighing 50 kilograms sells for Yuan 200. The unstable Yuan exchange rate, high transportation charges and taxes are the main causes of current low profit in the industry.

Local real estate market to become active again soon: experts

DOMESTIC property agents have claimed that the current cooling of the real estate market in Yangon can be expected to reverse within the next six months.

According to experts, direct foreign investment is likely to flow into the domestic market when the next government takes power.

“Aside from land and rental properties, the rest of the market is experiencing a slow down,” one real estate agent said. “Local property rental fees are expected to stay above the rate of normal fees in future.”

Currently, construction companies and investors are monitoring the market situation which is expected to see eight per cent growth this year, according to the property website House.com.mm.

The country’s property market has boomed in recent years causing room, house, land and apartment prices to skyrocket. Owing to low demand, the market has been on the decline since late 2014.—ML/Union Daily
SEOUL — North Korea successfully tested a solid-fuel engine that boosted the power of its ballistic rockets, state media reported yesterday, as South Korea’s president ordered the military to be ready to respond to the North’s “reckless provocation”.

Pyongyang’s claim indicates it is continuing to develop an intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) at a rapid pace in defiance of UN sanctions, and amid assessment by the South’s officials that it could conduct a new nuclear test at any time.

The isolated state has in recent weeks stepped up bellicose rhetoric, threatening pre-emptive nuclear strikes against Washington and Seoul, as well as making claims of advancement in its weapons technology.

The Rodong Sinmun, the North’s ruling party newspaper, carried photos of leader Kim Jong Un on site as a rocket engine laid horizontally on the ground emitted a fiery blast. A two-page report detailed the testing of the engine’s structure and thrust.

“He noted with great pleasure that the successful test ... helped boost the power of ballistic rockets capable of mercilessly striking hostile forces,” KCNA news agency said.

The North said last week it had conducted a successful simulated test of atmospheric re-entry of a ballistic missile, and would soon test ballistic missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads.

On Wednesday, the North repeated the threat to attack the South’s presidential office, saying its large-calibre multiple rocket launch systems are on alert to strike the Blue House and its special operations unit is ready to go into action.

South Korean President Park Geun-hye ordered a heightened state of alert and put the military on standby to “respond actively to reckless provocations by the North,” according to her office.

The current tension on the peninsula follows the United Nations Security Council’s recent imposition of tough new sanctions against the North over its nuclear and missile programmes, and as South Korea and the United States conduct annual joint military drills.

The North calls the exercises “nuclear war moves” and has threatened to respond with an all-out offensive, as well as a series of rocket launches in recent days.

Pyongyang has previously launched long-range rockets that used liquid fuel but it was seen to lack the capability to build solid-fuel long-range or intercontinental missiles.

Solid-fuel rockets have advantages in military use, although liquid fuel rockets are considered more sophisticated as their thrust can be controlled in flight.

The North has deployed short and medium-range missiles and test fired them, but never flight-tested the KN-08 ICBM it is believed to be developing.

The KN-08, which has been put on display at military parades and in official news media, appears to have a three-stage design that is likely intended to use solid fuel, according to experts.

Despite its boasts to be making progress, many experts believe the North is a decade or more away from building an ICBM capable of threatening the United States.

The North’s stepped-up rhetoric and weapons claims come ahead of its planned congress of the ruling Workers’ Party, which will be the first in more than 35 years.

Some Pyongyang-watchers say the North may look to claim a splashy achievement, such as a fifth nuclear test, in the run-up to the conference as young leader Kim Jong Un looks to bolster his legitimacy domestically.

Australia says Mozambique debris likely from missing MH370

SYDNEY — Australia said yesterday debris recovered this month in Mozambique was highly likely to be from missing Malaysia Airlines flight MH370, while Malaysia called a stepped-up search of Africa’s coast for clues to the plane’s fate.

Official analysis found two pieces of debris were “almost certainly from MH370”, Australian infrastructure and transport minister Darren Chester said in a statement, referring to the Boeing Co 777 that vanished in March 2014 with 239 people on board.

“That such debris has been found on the east coast of Africa is consistent with drift modelling … and further affirms our search efforts in the southern Indian Ocean,” Chester said.

The flight disappeared en route from Kuala Lumpur to Beijing, creating one of the most baffling mysteries in aviation history.

Investigators believe someone may have deliberately switched off the plane’s transponder before diverting it thousands of miles off course, out over the Indian Ocean.

A search, led by Australia and one of the most expensive ever conducted, has focused on a 120,000-sq-km (46,330-sq-mile) band of sea floor in the remote southern Indian Ocean.

In 2015, French authorities said a wing part found on the Indian Ocean island of Reunion was part of the plane.

The Mozambique debris was examined by investigators from Australia and Malaysia, as well as specialists from Boeing, Geoscience Australia and the Australian National University in Canberra.

The discovery is likely to add to pressure from the public for the search to go on beyond a mid-2016 schedule for it to be wound up. Most of those on board were from China.

“If they don’t find the plane in the area where they’re searching now, they and others need to continue to look,” said US adventurer Blaine Alan Gibson, who found one of the new pieces of debris this month on his own independent search.

“They’ve got to solve this mystery. We can’t give up after the current search area is completed,” Gibson added in a telephone interview, shortly after being told by the authorities that his discovery matched the plane.

Malaysian Transport Minister Liew Tong Lai said the costs of South Africa and Mozambique should be searched and Malaysia wanted to send a team.

“We are currently awaiting approval from the South African authorities,” Liew said. “The coastal search will be by a Malaysian team and focused around South Africa and Mozambique.”

Liew, however, said the location of the underwater search need not be changed.

The piece of debris that Gibson found is a white, metre-long chunk of metal with “No Step” printed on it. It arrived in Australia for testing this week, along with another piece of debris found in Mozambique soon after.

“I can’t use the word happy to describe how I feel, because that displays that the plane crashed, and that the plane crashed in a forceful impact,” Gibson said.

“I’d use the word ‘hopeful’,” he added. —Reuters
Hong Kong press freedom seen to have deteriorated last year — survey

HONG KONG — Hong Kong residents and journalists believe the state of press freedom deteriorated in the city for a second straight year in 2015, a survey by a media group showed, apparently a reflection of general unease in the city about mainland Chinese control.

While there were no major attacks on the media last year, the case of five city booksellers who published gossipy books about Chinese leaders, and who went missing only to reappear in mainland Chinese custody, contributed to an undermining of faith in free speech, said an official of the Hong Kong Journalists Association, which conducted the survey.

“The squeeze in the newsroom is now so telling in newspapers and TV programmes that members of the public can sense it,” association vice chairman Shirley Yam, told Reuters.

Fifty-four per cent of the public and 85 per cent of journalists believed press freedom deteriorated in Hong Kong last year, as measured by a press freedom index, according to the survey released on Tuesday.

The survey of more than 1,000 residents and hundreds of journalists found that self-censorship was more common, with the greatest concern being over criticising China’s Communist Party-run government.

Former British colony Hong Kong returned to Chinese rule in 1997 under a “one country, two systems” formula meant to preserve its freedoms.

Mainland China has rejected calls for full democracy in a 2017 city election compounding concern about what many residents see as growing mainland restrictions.

The mainland government and Hong Kong’s pro-Beijing city government have dismissed such concerns.

The Hong Kong government said on Wednesday it was firmly committed to safeguarding press freedom.

“Every endeavour should be made for journalists to report news professionally and accurately under the principle of editorial autonomy,” a government spokesman said.

In response to the case of the booksellers, China has said its law enforcement officials would never do anything illegal, especially overseas.

Cambodia’s anti-corruption agency to investigate deputy opposition leader for alleged corruption

PHNOM PENH — Cambodia’s Anti-Corruption Unit (ACU) Chairman Om Yentieng announced yesterday that the agency will launch a probe into deputy opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party (CNRP) leader Yim Sovan for allegedly committing corruption.

“The ACU decides to accept the complaint filed by the group of students against Kem Sovan,” he said in a meeting, adding that as a lawmaker, Sovan had previously declared his asset to the ACU three times in 2011, 2013 and 2015.

Yentieng said the ACU will open an asset declaration by Sovan. The investigation was made after ACU experts concluded that recently leaked audio recordings of alleged telephonic conversation between Sovan and mistresses were “authentic.”

A group of university students lodged a complaint to the ACU last week, requesting for an investigation into Sovan, deputy leader of the kingdom’s main opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party, for allegedly committing corruption.

The complaint said that audio recordings suggested Sovan buy land, houses and a car for his mistresses with funds from unknown sources.

On Monday, the National Assembly also asked Sovan to clarify about the audio clips in which he allegedly spoke with mistresses, discussing sex, pregnancy and paying for an apartment.

Sovan has remained silent on the sex scandal since a series of audio recordings between him and mistresses went viral on the Internet since early this month.

Moreover, he has advised supporters not to respond to provocations.—Xinhua

Japanese held in Turkey for trying to join Islamic State

CAIRO — Turkish security forces have detained a Japanese man attempting to join the Islamic State extremist group near the Syrian border, Turkish media reported Wednesday.

The 23-year-old man was detained with several Syrians late Tuesday in the Nizip district of Gaziantep Province in southern Turkey, according to the media reports.

The Japanese government has confirmed the man’s detention by Turkish authorities through its embassy in Turkey, Foreign Minister Fumio Kishida told reporters in Tokyo Wednesday morning.

A senior Foreign Ministry official said however that he is not aware of the man’s motive, including whether he wanted to join the Islamic State, adding, “The Turkish authorities are looking into it.”

A Japanese government source said the man was from Wakayama Prefecture south of Osaka, and that after being deported by Turkey, he may return to Japan as soon as Thursday night on a flight to kansai International Airport in Osaka Prefecture.

After his detention, the man was handed over to immigration authorities in Gaziantep, according to Anadolu news agency.

New Zealand rejects flag change: preliminary referendum results

WELLINGTON — New Zealand looked set to keep its current national flag after the preliminary results of a referendum released yesterday indicated 56.6 per cent of people voted against changing it.

After two postal vote referendums, one to choose an alternate design and another to decide whether to make the change, voters opted to retain the current flag featuring a Union Jack and Southern Cross constellation.

The second referendum saw 67.3 per cent of eligible New Zealanders participate.

The alternate flag design was created by Australia-based New Zealander Kyle Lockwood and included a New Zealand silver fern and the Southern Cross on a black and blue background. Polling prior to the result had shown a strong majority in favor of keeping the current design.

Political analyst Jon Helsarson of the University of Wellington said the decision not to change is not necessarily an endorsement of the current flag.

“What comes through really loud and clear is that the alternative flag choice is so mediocre that young voters particularly, but also people who want New Zealand to become a republic, regard voting against change, voting for the status quo, as the best way of preserving their future choices when we discuss a republic,” he said.

Voter Anthony Wong, 21, agrees with Helsarson. “I merely voted for the old flag in the hope that in the future there will be another attempt to change it to something I feel better represents New Zealand,” he said.

Many New Zealanders have been a key policy for Prime Minister John Key and, despite stepping back from the debate in recent weeks, he has been a strong supporter of the Lockwood-designed flag.

The official, final result of the referendum will be announced Wednesday.

Just step up the tempo of reform

Kyaw Thu

The Pyidaungsu Hluttaw yesterday was unanimous in giving the green light to the list of cabinet members proposed by the president-elect, with Speaker U Mawn Win Khaing Than declaring that all the 18 nominees were appointed as union ministers.

President-elect U Htin Kyaw proposed that his new cabinet be formed with 21 ministries, four of which will be held by Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, chairperson of the ruling party National League for Democracy (NLD), while the three ministries of home affairs, defense and border affairs will be under the control of three lieutenants-general. Thus, 26 ministries under the incumbent government.

The announcement sparked a barrage of criticisms and doubts on social media of her calibre for the posts. On the other hand, her supporters responded with their absolute confidence in her capacity and efficiency with which she would handle the four ministries. Daw Aung San Suu Kyi will hold office as union minister for foreign affairs, education, electric power and energy, and president of the NLD.

Nevertheless, the Lady’s fertile imaginations hatched over the past 25 years cannot be overestimated. It is better to practice a wait-and-see policy in anticipation that the whole lot of her ambitious parliamentarians are waiting in the wings. Nevertheless, it is better for each of us to become a cog in the machine so that the incoming government will be able to step up the tempo of the reform initiated by the outgoing government.

Bagan, the glory of magical Myanmar

Myo Myint

The history of Myanmar is complete without recounting the greatness of the Bagan period (9th to 13th century AD). So also for foreign tourists, no visit to Myo, however perfect, it may be is complete without seeing the ancient landscape of Bagan decked with the spires of over 2200 pagodas and temples within a radius of about two and a half miles, a sight unparalleled in the world that will always remain in the visitors’ memory. So also, for a Myanmar Buddhist, life is not fully lived unless he/she has worshipped in the famed ancient pagodas and temples and seen for themselves their ancestors’ strong faith in Buddhism.

Lured by Bagan’s glorious history, legends, its pagoda-studded landscape, thousands of Buddhist images and stone inscriptions of pagodas, donors, royal and humble, I have travelled there three times, with a gap of about a decade after every visit. The first visit was in 1991, the second in 2004 and the third a couple of weeks ago. The first visit was made memorable entering dreamlike the old city through the ancient Tharaba gateway at twilight, with the awe akin to that of a country but still fewers, the most well-known being the Thande hotel located romantically on the eastern bank of the Ayeyarwaddy River and within reach of many of the famous, or in Myanmar terms, the potent pagodas. The second visit saw the ghastly renovations done to centuries old pagodas by the many benefactors. The arrogant labourers funded by the donations of equally ignorant but wealthy donors hungry for merit to atone for their practices. The third and most recent visit, after a gap of another decade saw further changes. This time it is the change brought by the huge influx of tourists in fancy buses and the lack of pagodas around the city during the day, and with unplighted ruined pagodas dotting the roadside, at night the road looked ghostly in the pale moonlight. Now the road is in a much better condition, probably because it has been widened, and it is lined by liquor-serving restaurants, some with foreign sounding names, shops selling lacquer ware souvenirs, and bicycle and motorcycle renting services. More lanes have now been added giving easy access to some pagodas that had been inaccessible before. Those who have visited tourist resorts like Bal, and the famous beaches of a neighbour country will be reminded of the atmosphere of some parts of the places, while they make their way in sedans to the numerous pagodas in the heart of Bagan.

The touristy atmosphere is enhanced by the sight of mostly beggarish-looking economy, making their way from one pagoda to another on motor bikes and bicycles. The number of horse carts seems to have declined; obviously, the carts drawn by weary horses have given way to vehicles with engines of a variety of horse powers.

As we attempt to visit as many pagodas as possible within the limited time available, we catch sight of those pagodas that have been renovated during the past decade which stand out like sore thumbs among the thousands of ancient pagodas of a variety of sizes, heights and architectural styles because the local architects of the broad Bagan bricks that have been used in the renovation have still not lost its modernity and does not merge in too well with the ancient bricks. Fortunately, most of the pagodas that has undergone renovation are minor ones and not the highly venerated ones. Still, one sees here and there, the touch of modern civilization and convenience among the pagodas which unfortunately has affected their unique architectural beauty and will in the long-term probably affect the stability of the ancient pagodas. One such edifice is the Alo Taw Pyay Pagoda which attracts thousands of worshippers drawn by its name, meaning wish fulfilling. The windows of the pagoda have been fitted with glass panes, electric lights and air conditioners with ugly air-conditioning pipings running within and outside the pagoda (now swiftly having been installed and the floor carpeted. One can see no logical reason for the modern contraptions and additions (unless it had delighted some VIPs who came there to recite long prayers to grant their wishes for longevity, prosperity and glory before the splendid structures of more than a thousand years old, with their local wisdom and knowledge of the prevailing weather conditions have designed many of the religious buildings in such a way that they are serviced with adequate natural light and ventilation.

Those fortunate enough to travel to Bagan in their car will be able to get to the many isolated pagodas and temples standing close to cultivated land among tall toddy palms and thorny plumb trees and connected to the main road by dusty unpaved country lanes. From afar, one is struck by the picturesque scene vying for attention with finely architectured multi-tiered ochre coloured pagodas, lanky palm trees and clear blue sky until one gets closer to the pagoda and is shocked by the unsightly piles of garbage among the bushes close to the pagoda dumped by god knows who. So also, pilgrims and tourists are, and also if the spirits of donors of the religious edifices were still floating about, it would be, much troubled by seeing small pagodas with unknown titles being utilized as storage places for baskets full of goods and rickety bicycles, and as places to take a nap. Having been born in the vicinity of countless numbers of thousand year old pagodas, the dwellers of Bagan are not awed by, and are less respectful to the smaller pagodas. The state of some of the bigger pagodas does not seem to be too different. They seemed to have been turned into temporary residences for caretakers who have placed old makeshift wooden beds in the interior of the pagodas right under the eyes of massive Buddha images. Moreover, the presence of too many stalls selling souvenirs, food, local products and their by-products, the piles of rubbish, affect the charm of the magnificent edifices. Lack of hy-genic restrooms at the pagodas is one of the difficulties, pilgrims, and local and foreign tourists face which needs to be redressed quickly because many of the vistors are old. Tourist information centres are another facility that is not frequently visited by tourists for the convenience of those who go sightseeing without guides. One of Bagan’s attractions I miss is the simple traditional Myanmar restaurants with thatch roofs, in their rustic setting, serving authentic Myanmar food with their genuine taste. Even in more countries even before the plates have become empty. In their places, now are Myanmar buffet-style restaurants in places that are more frequented by tourists, but served by less friendly and less generous staff. Still, I am happy to see foreign tourists necking into the dozen or so My-

First training of improved cookstoves producers brings hope to Myanmar’s forests

GERES in Myanmar has completed the first training of cookstoves producers, under the SCALE Project, funded through the SWITCH Asia Programme of the European Union. During the ten days of intense practical apprenticeship, ten men and six women were introduced to the importance of standardization of production and technical quality control.

GERES and its local partner, EverGreen Group, are leading the implementation of a national cookstove dissemination project in the country. Aiming to make 300 000 improved and standardized cookstoves available to satisfy increasing demand for locally appropriate and affordable cooking solutions, the project could avoid over 250 000 t CO2 from reduced use of fuel wood. Along with the target to train 30 producers and contribute to the creation of 200 new jobs, SCALE has stimulated policy discussions on the importance of biomass energy and household air pollution in Myanmar.

The training took place in a monastery, tucked right beside the picturesque village Hlangdet, approximately 50 km from Meiktila in the heart of the Dry Zone, where sparse vegetation and the few remaining forests fight perpetual droughts. Mr. Chen Cheth and Sann Sal, technical advisors from GERES Cambodia, led the training which focused on the practical challenges of using innovative production technologies to achieve high level of efficiency and standardization. Trainees were introduced for the first time to durable moulds that can significantly reduce production time and allow more cookstoves to be manufactured. The hands-on approach to the apprenticeship benefits from GERES’ extensive expertise in Cambodia, where over 3 million standardized cookstoves have been already sold.

During the opening ceremony, U Thant Zin from the Dry Zone Greening Department reiterated the commitment of Myanmar government to support the dissemination of standardized cookstoves to reduce pressure on the few remaining forests in the area, while producers expressed their desire to sell more of their products. GERES recognizes the importance of the market-based approach, which forms the core of SCALE.

Following the training, GERES will provide each producer with specific moulds and recommendations for using the optimum clay mix, based on the available resources in the area. Quality assurance and control teams will monitor production for an extended period of time to ensure manufacturing is abiding by the detailed standards developed in partnership with Ministry of Science and Technology and Ministry of Environmental Conservation and Forestry. The process has been lengthy, as no governmental or individual agent was previously tasked with the preservation of technical standards for cookstoves. GERES is leading the development of Generic National and Specific standards that will ensure the availability of clear production guidelines for producers and efficiency rates for consumers.

Supporting Myanmar SMEs to increase the supply of standardized and affordable cookstoves, GERES continues its mission to nurture sustainable solutions to local cooking practices in Southeast Asia. A mission that saves trees, helps women cook in healthier environment and champions local businesses.

Tourist attraction, they must bear in mind that Bagan is no ordinary archaeological site, but it is the site of the largest collection of ancient religious buildings in Myanmar much revered by Buddhists all over the country. I have no doubt that a survey of the people of Myanmar will reveal that they would rather see Bagan as it is, than see its cultural and religious values degraded as a recreational place for tourists. After all, there are enough beaches, mountain resorts and other attractions in Myanmar to generate income from the tourism industry. Hence, if Bagan is to be made into a tourist attraction, entrepreneurs must ensure that its religious, historical and cultural dimensions are respected and remain unimpaired. In addition, both the government and entrepreneurs must not forget to reinvest a generous portion of the income from tourism back into the conservation of the pagodas, and the development of the facilities needed for the convenience of tourists. Undoubtedly, a certain amount of the income must be spent to keep the ancient city clean, green and attractive and the standards of other archaeological sites in the region and educate the people of Bagan to take pride in their city and take good care of it. Entrepreneurs must also find other attractions in Bagan so that tourists can be channeled to other areas reducing pressure on the ancient edifices and causing less degradation to them. This is not a difficult task as Bagan is sited close to the Ayeyawady River and there still remain many untapped sources such as riverine cruise along the Ayeyawady River, and rest and recreation by the river, and visits to local cottage industries.

On return home, a few miles from Bagan, we catch sight of groves of toddy palm trees and the huts of toddy palm product sellers. One shop draws our attention as in front of the huts was a traditional oil extraction device with the labour of a cow being used to operate it. Just before we stop in front of the shop, two coaches, one loaded with Japanese tourists and another with French tourists stop before us and the tourists get off. They take keen interest in traditional oil mill, as well as in the demonstrations on climbing the toddy palm tree to extract the juice and the production of jaggery from the toddy palm juice. I silently praise the entrepreneurial spirit of the owner who is helped by the whole family to run the business. Many customers, both local and foreign, also enjoy the toddy palm drink with deep fried quail. It makes me happy to note that there are also hardworking and creative people in the countryside, and hope that many more will follow suit and hasten the development of the country and lift the people in the rural as well as urban area out of the economic hardship they face.
Belgians hunt ‘third man’ after Islamic State bombings

BRUSSELS— A “third man” seen with two Islamic State suicide bombers at Brussels Airport was the focus of a Belgian manhunt yesterday after police identified three others, including two brothers, who killed at least 31 people at the airport and on a city metro train.

Turkey’s president criticised Belgium for failing to track Brahim El Bakraoui, a convicted Belgian armed robber whom it deported last year and who blew himself up at the airport on Tuesday an hour before his brother Khalid, a fellow convict, killed some 20 people at Maelbeek metro station in the city centre.

The third bomber, security sources told Belgian media, was Najim Laachraoui, a veteran Belgian Islamic fighter suspected of making explosive belts for November’s Paris attacks and who detonated a suitcase bomb at the airport.

The “third man”, captured on airport security cameras pushing a baggage trolley into the departures hall alongside Laachraoui and Brahim El Bakraoui, is now the target of police searches.

The suspect fled the scene on Tuesday, federal prosecutors said, and a third suitcase bomb, the biggest of the three, was later found.

US Defence Secretary Ash Carter said the bloodshed in the capital of the European Union, not far from NATO headquarters, showed that Washington’s European allies should do more to fight Islamic State alongside American efforts in the Middle East.

“The Brussels event is going to further signify to Europeans that, as we have been accelerating our campaign to defeat ISIL in Syria and Iraq and elsewhere, they need to accelerate their efforts and join us,” Carter told CNN, using another acronym for Islamic State.

About 300 people were wounded. Casualties came from some 40 nationalities, drawing an international outpouring of support for the cosmopolitan city during three days of mourning.

US to charge Iran in cyber attacks against banks, New York dam

WASHINGTON — The Obama administration is expected to blame Iranian hackers as soon as Thursday for a coordinated campaign of cyber attacks in 2012 and 2013 on several US banks and a New York dam, sources familiar with the matter have told Reuters.

The Justice Department has prepared an indictment against about a half-dozen Iranians, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity due to the sensitivity of the matter. It is one of the highest-profile US indictments against a foreign nation on hacking charges.

It follows a landmark 2014 case in which a grand jury charged five members of the Chinese military with hacking into American computer networks and engaging in cyber espionage on behalf of a foreign government.

The charges, related to unlawful access to computers and other alleged crimes, were expected to be announced publicly by US officials as soon as Thursday morning at a news conference in Washington, the sources said.

The indictment was expected to directly link the hacking campaign to the Iranian government, one source said. The banks will not be identified in the indictment due to fear of retaliation, the source said.

Though a planned indictment for the breach of back-office computer systems at the Bowman Avenue Dam in Rye Brook, New York, has been reported, it was only part of a hacking campaign that was broader than previously known, as the indictment will show, the sources said.—Reuters

MH17 investigation team in Malaysia to discuss legal options

KUALA LUMPUR — A joint team investigating the downing of a Malaysia Airlines flight over Ukraine in 2014 is in Malaysia to discuss options with authorities to set up a tribunal to hold those responsible to account, the Malaysian transport minister said yesterday.

Flight MH17 was shot down by a Russian-made surface-to-air missile over eastern Ukraine in July 2014, killing all 298 on board, the Dutch Safety Board said in October.

Malaysia, the Netherlands, Australia, Belgium and Ukraine have been exploring alternative options, including trials in international and national courts, after Russia vetoed a United Nations bid last July to form a tribunal.—Reuters

No stricter airport screening planned in EU security review

BRUSSELS — European Union experts will next week discuss ways of strengthening security in airports after the attacks in Brussels on Tuesday that killed at least 31 people, an EU official said, but they will not put forward stricter EU-wide screening rules.

At least 10 were killed by two bombs at Zaventem airport, the main one in the Brussels area. The attackers accessed the airport without passing security checks, which in Europe usually only take place after check-in.

The European Commission, the EU executive arm, will host a meeting of aviation security experts from the 28 EU states, Transport Commissioner Violeta Bulc said. An EU official said it would take place on 31 March. A meeting of land transport security experts would be held on 11 April.—Reuters

Colombian government, rebels miss deadline to reach peace deal

HAVANA — Colombian peace negotiators missed Wednesday’s deadline for a final accord but talks will continue in Havana to end Latin America’s longest war, representatives of the government and the FARC rebels said.

The government of Colombian President Juan Manuel Santos and leftist rebels of the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia, or FARC, had set a self-imposed 23 March deadline to reach a comprehensive pact. “In all honesty, we have to inform the public that at the moment there are still important differences with the FARC,” Humberto de la Calle, the government’s lead negotiator, said at a news conference.—Reuters

Uber sues Ola over fake bookings in India

NEW DELHI — Uber Technologies Inc, the United States multinational online transportation network, is suing its Indian rival Ola allegedly over making fake bookings to damage its business.

Uber alleged Ola of making false bookings through more than 90,000 fake accounts that ultimately ended up cancelled to frustrate its business in India.

According to the accusations levelled by Uber in the court, Ola through fake accounts was summoning drivers affiliated with Uber and then cancelling the bookings.

Uber told Delhi high court the practice inflicted huge monetary loss on the company and requests the rival company should be made to pay 7.4 million US dollars to compensate its losses.—Xinhua
EU joins Syria peace talks as sides remain at odds

GENEVA — The EU sent its foreign policy chief to Geneva on Wednesday to breathe new life into Syrian peace talks, as the two sides remained at odds over the country’s political future.

Federica Mogherini spoke to negotiators on both sides, and the head of the government delegation, Bashar Ja’afari, said after his meeting that he believed an impasse in the talks had been broken.

But he was told by the EU and UN that accelerating a political transition in Syria — a major sticking point given fundamental disagreements between the warring parties over the fate of President Bashar al-Assad — was the only way to defeat groups like Islamic State.

Mogherini arrived unexpectedly on what was the penultimate day of the round of negotiations, possibly highlighting EU concerns that the talks risk getting deadlocked.

“She came to support us to engage positively in the talks that would lead to an end to the Syrian crisis,” Ja’afari said after the rare meeting with a senior Western official.

“The first time, I can tell you that we were able to break the impasse, maybe in the form and a little bit in substance.”

The five-year-old conflict between the government and insurgents has killed more than 250,000 people, allowed Islamic State to control some eastern areas and caused the world’s worst refugee crisis.

With a fragile truce in place in Syria, warring sides are more than a week into a new round of negotiations between the Syrian government and the UN Special Envoy of the Secretary-General for Syria Staffan de Mistura (not pictured), at the European headquarters of the United Nations in Geneva, Switzerland, on 23 March. Iraqi army starts offensive in region around Mosul, State TV says

BAGHDAD — Iraq’s armed forces started an offensive against Islamic State yesterday in the region around Mosul with air cover from the US-led coalition, pushing the militants out of several villages, according to a military statement read on state TV.

The offensive is the first phase of an operation that the Iraqi government aims to conclude this year with the capture of Mosul, the largest city in the north of the country.

“The first phase of the Fatah (Conquest) Operation has been launched at dawn to liberate Nineveh, raising the Iraqi flag in several villages,” said the military statement.

Mosul, home to around 2 million people before it fell to Islamic State during a lightning offensive in 2014, is by far the biggest city ruled by the jihadist group in Iraq or Syria.

An Iraqi offensive to recapture it, backed by air strikes and advisers from a US-led coalition, would be the biggest counterattack ever mounted against the group.

Brigadier General Yahya Rasool, spokesman for the joint operations command, told state TV that both Iraqi and coalition air forces had had a significant role in the offensive. —Reuters
Soft shoe diplomacy: Obama dances the tango at Argentine state dinner

WASHINGTON — President Barack Obama and his wife, Michelle, watched with rapt attention as a male and female pair glided and turned in graceful precision across a small patch of open floor in front of their table.

Willing to give it a try, the president got up and sashayed from one side of the tiny space to the other with the female dancer, while the US first lady teamed up with her male counterpart for a spell.

Then the leader of the free world appeared to have second thoughts.

Getting back to the other side of the dance floor, Obama stopped to wave at the dinner guests as if to conclude.

But his partner would have none of it, taking his hand back in hers and doing a number of turns before allowing the president to spin her around for a finale that ended with her leg drawn up high against his.

The music stopped, the crowd applauded, and the Obamas had done the tango.—Reuters

New Cuban migrant bottleneck hits Panama during US détente

PASO CANOAS — A new bottleneck of Cuban migrants bound for the United States has formed this month in Panama, threatening a fresh diplomatic headache in Central America after thousands were flown out of the region earlier this year.

Just as Barack Obama was making the first visit to Cuba in 88 years by a US president, some 1,500 migrants from the Communist island were bunched on Panama’s border with Costa Rica, struggling to reach the United States to start a new life.

The build-up follows the airlift of around 6,000 Cubans from Costa Rica and Panama, which ended last week.

However, another knot of migrants has grouped in western Panama since Costa Rica stopped issuing Cubans transit visas in December to try and stem the human tide that clogged up its border with Nicaragua last year.

“If I hadn’t left Cuba, I would have ended up in prison because I love freedom and having options,” said Halena Leiva, 31, who has worked as a cleaning lady in the Panamanian border town of Paso Canoas since she ran out of money on her way north.

During his 48 hour visit this week, Obama challenged Cuba’s government with calls for democracy and new economic reforms.

Security Council response needed in West Sahara crisis — UN official

UNITED NATIONS — The United Nations Security Council must act to ensure Morocco’s decision to expel personnel from a UN peacekeeping mission in the disputed territory of Western Sahara does not set a bad precedent for other missions, a UN official said on Wednesday.

The controversy over UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon’s use of the word “occupation” during a recent visit to the region is Morocco’s worst dispute with the UN since 1991, when the UN brokered a ceasefire to end a war over Western Sahara and established a peacekeeping mission, known as MINURSO.

The United Nations has shut its military liaison office and withdrawn dozens of international staff from MINURSO as demanded by Morocco in retaliation for Ban’s remarks, which Rabat has described as “unacceptable.”

UN officials have said the reduction of staff has severely affected the mission in the Moroccan-annexed Western Sahara region.

So far the 15-country Security Council, which ordered the deployment of MINURSO decades ago and renewes its mandate every year, has said nothing on the Moroccan dispute with the UN despite daily discussions on the subject.

Ban wants swift council action to back him and MINURSO with a strong statement.

“The Secretary-General very much wants the Security Council to act, and not only to preserve MINURSO’s operations but also to prevent similar actions in other peacekeeping operations around the world,” a UN official familiar with the Western Sahara dossier told reporters on condition of anonymity.

The leaders of Democratic Republic of the Congo and Sudan have demanded the departure of UN peacekeepers from conflict-torn parts of their countries. The UN official said the presence of MINURSO was necessary to prevent a “security vacuum,” adding that “there is the potential for escalation” into renewed conflict.

Rolling Stones on YouTube invite Cubans to free concert

HAVANA — The Rolling Stones are welcoming Cubans to their free concert on Friday with Mick Jagger speaking Spanish in a video on YouTube, though few are likely to see it, given Cuba’s scant Internet penetration.

“This will have been played in many incredible places but this concert in Havana is going to be a historic event for us,” Jagger said in a voice over while the Stones’ song “Jumping Jack Flash” plays to snippets of concert video. “We hope it will be for you, too.”

Less than one-third of Cubans have access to the Internet, with only 3.4 per cent of homes connected to either the Internet or a local Cuban Intranet, according to UN data.

The Stones added Cuba to the end of a Latin American tour, becoming the first major international rock stars to play in the island nation.

The outdoor concert at a sports complex was postponed five days because of the 48-hour visit by US President Barack Obama, who departed Cuba on Tuesday.

The band have brought in 61 shipping containers with an estimated 500 tons of equipment, such as a stage, speakers, lights and video screens, the production manager, Dale Skjerseth, told reporters on Sunday.

A crew of 140 Stones employees and at least 80 Cubans have set up on grounds including a football field and adjoining baseball fields with room for hundreds of thousands of spectators who are invited to arrive for free on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Rare Beatles demo disc raises more than 110,000 USD at auction sale

LONDON — A rare, one-off demonstration record that launched the career of the British pop band, The Beatles, fetched $110,180 US dollars at an auction Tuesday after attracting worldwide interest.

Bidders from China, Europe and North America tried to outbid each other with phone and in-line bids for the star lot at the Omega Auction house in Warrington, Northern England.

The auctioneers had placed a reserve of 10,000 pounds ($14,207 US dollars) on the record found in a house near Liverpool after being locked away, wrapped in paper, for more than 50 years.

But a collector from the North West of England became the new owner with a final bid of 77,550 pounds.

The demo disc, with a hand-written label, features Hel- lo Little Girl and Till There Was You and was cut in 1962 on a 78 rpm acetate disc in the personal recording department of HMV music store in London’s Oxford Street.

Since then, it has remained forgotten at the home of Les Maguire, a musician from rival Liverpool band of the 1960s, Gerry and the Pacemakers.

Maguire said the record, with a label handwritten by the Beatles’ manager Brian Epstein, could be seen as the record that sparked The Beatles’ success. “It’s no good to me so I’ve given it to my granddaughter, who is hoping to buy a house after passing her accountancy exams. I hope it goes for a good price,” said Maguire ahead of the sale. Leading Beatles historian Mark Lewisohn said of the disc: “Its uniqueness is enhanced by Brian Epstein’s handwriting on the labels, and the recognition of what it led to, making it one of the rarest and most collectable of all Beatles records.”

Dicaprio brings ‘The Revenant’ to Japan

TOKYO — Excited Leonardo DiCaprio fans, some of them dressed as bears, greeted the actor as he made his first trip to Tokyo in two years to promote the Japa- nese opening of “The Revenant.”

The movie about a fur trapper seeking revenge who is left for dead after being mauled by a bear brought DiCaprio his first ever Oscar at the Academy Awards ceremony in February, as well as a best director Oscar for Mexico’s Alejandro Inarritu.

DiCaprio said it was an honor to receive the Oscar but stressed that awards are not the reason he does movies. “It’s certainly gratifying and it feels fantastic, but you hope to remain with your initial ideals and dreams of what you want to be as an actor, and all I can hope for is that I’ll continue to keep trying to make the best movies I possibly can,” the actor said at a press conference. He later told the audience at “The Revenant” premiere at Roppongi Hills in Tokyo on Wednesday that he was “privileged to be a part of cinema history that I think is very ground breaking and it was a huge honor for all of us the night of the Os- cars to be awarded the way we were.” — Reuters

Chinese tourists helping keep tiny Australian town alive

MELBOURNE — A growing number of Chinese tourists are helping to save a dying Australian town, after a little-known tourist attraction was featured on a number of Chinese travel blogs.

The residents of Sea Lake, a town of just 600 people in the Australian state of Victoria, barely see travellers stop at their gas station while driving by, but a sudden influx of Chinese tourists is helping keep the town’s economy alive.

The tourists come to see Lake Tyrrell, a shallow, salt crusted and often dry lake which is situated just 130 metres north-west of Melbourne. The lake, after a little-known tourist attraction was featured on a number of Chinese travel blogs, has been attracting an increased number of Chinese tourists over the past few months.

“In recent years the population of Sea Lake has fallen from around 1,200 a decade ago, to 600 today. The town is so isolated that no motel rooms being full almost every night, and while local farmers are suffering in a two-year drought, the tourism is keeping the town’s ailing agricultural-based economy afloat.

Tourist Joseph Lee, along with 10 other stargazers, made the trip from Sydney, as he wanted to find scenery like that in Sea Lake anywhere else in the world.

“It’s quite a shock.” Sea Lake’s sprawling salt flats are a stark contrast to the lush green landscape of Sydney. “I wish to bring them to some of the places with not too many tourists in there,” Lee told the Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC).

The attraction’s growing cult status has resulted in the town’s motel rooms being full almost every night, and while local farmers are suffering in a two-year drought, the tourism is keeping the town’s ailing agricultural-based economy afloat.

Tourist Joseph Lee, along with 10 other stargazers, made the trip from Sydney, as he wanted to find scenery like that in Sea Lake anywhere else in the world. “I see the beauty of the scenes and the different changes in the skies, the clouds and over the sun,” Lee said. “That’s why we want to come.”

Despite the popularity of the town and its attraction, locals are still confused as to why their little town deserves so much attention. In recent years the population of Sea Lake has fallen from around 1,200 a decade ago, to 600 today.

“If you’re still unsure why Lake Tyrrell is such a big, big tourist attraction,” one local said. “It’s quite a shock.” Sea Lake is located around 350 kilometres north-west of Melbourne.

Among the treasures is a depiction of the Virgin Mary with child, one of the oldest known Christian icons in the world, which was moved to another church in Rome after the earthquake but has now been returned to Santa Maria Antiqua. Standing under the reinstalled icon, Andaloro said that the church was unique in escaping alteration during the Baroque period or the Counter-Reformation, during which other Roman churches were updated.

It has remained intact, untouched, even if heavily damaged by the passage of time, Andaloro said, though some alterations were made during the relatively short time the church was in use.

Among the exhibits is a projection on the wall showing how a depiction of the angel Gabriel telling Mary she had been chosen to be the mother of Christ was painted on top of a pre-Christian Byzantine queen wearing a crown and a pearl-covered gown. — Reuters
McHale edges Doi, sets up Miami showdown with Serena

MIAMI — American Christina McHale beat Japan’s Misaki Doi 6-2, 4-6, 7-5 at the Miami Open on Wednesday to set up a second-round showdown with defending champion and world number one Serena Williams.

The victory, which took a little over two hours, improved McHale to 5-0 all-time versus Doi and gives the world number 56 a chance to register what would be the biggest win of her career in terms of the ranking and stature of her opponent.

McHale, who has beaten a handful of top players and grand slam winners in her career, will be an overwhelming underdog against Williams, who has a record eight Miami titles, including the last three. The two were supposed to meet last year in Rome but Williams withdrew ahead of their match and gave McHale a walkover into the quarter-finals.

In other first-round action, Frenchwoman Alize Cornet beat Galina Voskoboeva of Kazakhstan to set up a match with third-seeded Pole Agnieszka Radwanska, while Germany’s Julia Goerges beat Japan’s Nao Hibino and will next play Australian Samanatha Stosur.— Reuters

O’Neill would accept Euro 2016 games behind closed doors

LONDON — Ireland manager Martin O’Neill would have no objections to Euro 2016 games being played behind closed doors in France if security chiefs decide it is the only alternative.

UEFA have reaffirmed their commitment to security for the June-July tournament following Tuesday’s bombings in Brussels that killed at least 31 people, saying it would continue to monitor the level of risk for the event.

However, former Leicester City and Aston Villa manager O’Neill admitted that he would agree to games behind closed doors for safety reasons.

“There’s talk about matches being played behind closed doors but the safety of people is of paramount importance and anything that is agreed upon, we will fall in line,” O’Neill told British media.

“If that is an alternative and it’s the only alternative, then if we are going to have the competition, we may have to comply with it.”

O’Neill also said that it could get difficult for fans to interact with their teams given the security measures.

“If security is tightened, as it probably will be, then maybe the players might have to stay closer to the hotel (when they are not playing),” the 64-year-old added.

“I don’t think we want to turn away supporters but at the same time, I think people will realise that security might be very, very tight.”

Man City’s Sterling ruled out for up to eight weeks

The 21-year-old, signed from Liverpool for a British record 49 million pounds last year, was hurt during the Manchester derby defeat by United on Sunday.

He will miss City’s Champions League quarter-final against Paris St Germain and will need to prove his fitness to play for England in the European Championship starting in June.— Reuters

Martino welcomes Messi return, mulls forward choice

BUENOS AIRES — Argentina coach Gerardo Martino welcomed Lionel Messi’s return to the team and said he was mulling over which of his top two centre-forwards to pick for Thursday’s World Cup qualifier away to Chile.

Captain Messi was injured for Argentina’s first four qualifiers last year for the 2018 finals in Russia and the team suffered in his absence.

They took just five points from those games to sit outside the qualifying berths in sixth place in the South American group.

“Messi’s presence is calming, motivating and always necessary,” Martino told a news conference on Wednesday before leaving with his squad for Santiago.

He faces a difficult decision in who to pick out of Sergio Aguero and Gonzalo Higuain, both in fine club form, to lead the attack in the neighbours’ first meeting since Chile beat Argentina on penalties in last year’s Copa America final.

Napoli’s Higuain and Manchester City’s Aguero played together in a four-man attack that included Messi and Angel Di Maria in several of the 2014 World Cup qualifiers.

Yet Martino, who took over after the tournament in Brazil, has always favoured one or the other.

“We have two of the world’s five best centre-forwards so, given how we play, I’m going to be unfair to one,” Martino said.

“Whoever plays will feel good, whoever doesn’t will feel bad.”

Martino also called up Paulo Dybala, who is a fast emerging talent, but the Juventus striker had to withdraw through injury from the Chile match and next Tuesday’s qualifier at home to Bolivia.

Argentina are seven points behind leaders Ecuador, who upset Martino’s side 2-0 in their opening qualifier in Buenos Aires in October, four behind Uruguay and two behind Brazil, Paraguay and Chile.

“Today the table shows we’re out of the World Cup so our responsibility is to win both matches to get into the group that would qualify,” Martino said.

Chile’s new coach Antonio Pizzi said they will not play for a draw.

“No footballer or member of Argentina’s coaching staff is going to settle for a draw, neither will we,” Pizzi told reporters in Santiago.

“I’m aware we’re going to face one of the best national teams in the world but I’m confident. We will fight to win the match.”— Reuters
