PRESIDENT U Htin Kyaw took his oath of office at the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw yesterday. Afterward, he delivered the inaugural speech in which he said his government will strive to amend the current constitution, which was passed in the referendum in 2008.

“I am responsible for the emergence of a constitution that will be in accord with the democratic norms suited to our country. I am also aware that I need to be patient in realising this political objective, for which the people have long aspired,” said the president.

He said his government will seek to implement four policies: national reconciliation; internal peace; the emergence of a constitution that will produce a democratic, federal union; and the improvement of the quality of life of the majority of the people.

Following the swearing-in ceremony at the parliament, a ceremony marking the handover of presidential duties from outgoing President U Thein Sein to incoming President U Htin Kyaw was held at the Credentials Hall of the Presidential Palace in Nay Pyi Taw.

During the ceremony, President U Thein Sein presented his successor with official documents, a gold sash and a presidential insignia. After the ceremony, outgoing President U Thein Sein cordially greeted incoming President U Htin Kyaw. The two vice presidents, U Myint Swe and U Henry Van Thio, were also sworn in at the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw yesterday.

Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, the chairperson of the ruling National League for Democracy, was also sworn in yesterday together with other Union ministers and officials.

Suu Kyi will lead four ministries: foreign affairs, education, electric & energy and the President’s Office.

Mahn Jonny, the new chief minister of Ayeyawady Region, told reporters that the NLD-led government is ready to work in the interests of the people. He added that he will work to strengthen the rule of law as a priority. —GNLM
The constitution to be in accord with democratic norms: President U Htin Kyaw

The following is the unofficial translation of the inaugural speech of President U Htin Kyaw at the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw on 30 March.

First of all, I would like to express my delight at being elected president by Pyidaungsu Hluttaw because it is a significant, historic event. As I have now become the president, I am the person who is accountable for the Union Parliament. [Myanmar’s] second hluttaws and the governments resulting from the November 2015 election were formed to be in accordance with the policies of the National League for Democracy, led by Daw Aung San Suu Kyi.

Our new government will implement the following policies:

• national reconciliation;
• internal peace;
• the emergence of a constitution that will lead to the effectuation of a democratic, federal union; and
• raising the quality of life of the majority of the people.

I would like to emphasise the fact that I will invariably be cautious of my duty to keep these oaths. Moreover, I am responsible for the emergence of a constitution that is in accord with democratic norms suited to our country. I am also aware that I need to be patient enough to realise this political objective, for which the people have long aspired.

May I now conclude by emphasising that our Union government will exert strenuous efforts to fulfil the people’s aspirations and wishes. I wish all citizens peace and prosperity in treading upon your respective paths of life.

Appointment of Union Ministers

Yaba pills and heroin seized in Shan State

MEMBERS of the Myanmar Police Force discovered and seized yaba pills and heroin in Shan State on 26 March and on Monday of this week.

Members of local police unit No. 24 Anti-Drugs Squad based in Lashio stopped and searched a Nissan AD Van which was carrying multiple passengers around milepost NO. 80/4 at the entrance to Nawngkio town on 26 March.

The search resulted in the seizure of 2925 yaba pills from a passenger named Tun Naing Hay.

On Monday authorities stopped and searched a motorbike being driven by one Aung Myint who was accompanied by an individual identified as Julius on a street of Mongli village in Hsenwi Town and confiscated 121 grams of heroin which were being carried in 11 soap boxes in addition to 1200 yaba pills. Police have filed charges against all suspects under the Anti-Narcotic and Psychotropic Substances Laws. — Myanmar Police Force

Fire breaks out in Sintgaing

A fire destroyed a house at La Min eel brokerage at the bus station in Paleik Ward , Sintgaing Township, Mandalay Region, on 28 March.

The fire was caused by an overheated 15KV voltage regulator at the La Min eel brokerage owned by U Soe Aung. The fire spread to a two-storey house north of the brokerage at around 3:30am. The fire was put under control by firefighters and neighbours equipped with seven fire engines. The fire destroyed the 1,200-square-foot RC building and the 750-square-foot house. — Tin Tin Htwe (Sintgaing)

Myanmar’s economy to grow by 1.2 per cent: ADB

Myanmar’s economic growth will increase by 1.2 percent in the fiscal year 2016-2017, a report of Asian Development Bank estimated on Wednesday.

ADB launched a report for Myanmar’s economic outlook 2016 Wednesday.

According to the report, Myanmar’s economic growth will reach 8.4 percent in the fiscal year 2016-2017, up from 7.2 percent in 2015-2016.

The inflation will remain high at 9.5 percent for the 2016-2017 but will decrease to 8.5 percent in 2017-2018.

ADB said in the report that Myanmar’s positive political developments and structural reform programs will help foster economic growth and investment.

Winfried Wicklein, ADB Country Director in Myanmar, said Myanmar’s new government will face the challenges of advancing economic reform, addressing infrastructure and labor shortages and making progress towards peace and social cohesion.

Intensified efforts are needed to connect and develop rural areas to improve access to markets and services and to generate opportunities and jobs.

Foreign direct investment may increase due to the successful political transition, especially investment flow to the special economic zones, transport, telecommunication and energy sectors. The risks for the economic growth are thin external and fiscal buffers, the capacity of the government to maintain reform momentum, ethnic and sectarian tensions and vulnerability to bad weather. Weakness of transport infrastructure provides poor access to markets and services. It also provide perpetuates poverty and regional inequality.

ADB estimated in the report that Myanmar needs 60 billion US dollars to upgrade transport systems until 2030.

Owners of decorated bullock carts and horses doing well in Pwintbyu Township

The owners of decorated bullock carts and horses are enjoying healthy business in Pwintbyu Township as local people rent them to roam about during traditional ceremonies after harvesting season.

“Rice and peas fetched good prices this year so farmers have made many donations this year, more than in previous years. The daily rent for a nomination ceremony ranges from K10,000 in the surrounding areas to K15,000 in distant places. Sometimes, we get a rent up to K20,000 a day for two ceremonies, one in the morning and one in the evening. There is no much difference in the rent for bullock carts and horses,” said U Win Shwe, owner of the carts from Tharzi village in the township.

Now that people have turned to mechanised farming in agriculture, decorated bullock carts and horses are rarely found as they have been replaced with motorcycles and three-wheel motorcycles which facilitate transportation. The owners of the bullock carts and horses are earning a decent income at the moment, however, it has been reported.

High demand on onions causes price rise

The prices of onions have bounced back due to high demand following a month of decline.

Last month onion prices dropped from K525 to K375. Currently, onions are sold at prices ranging between K415 and K400 per viss (approximately 1.6 kilograms) depending on their quality.

The decline in price was due to the fact that supply exceeded demand in February. Earlier this month onion farmers said they found it difficult to sell their produce to border areas where supply was high as a result of onions coming in from various other sources. According to onion traders, prices are starting to take off following a gradual surge in demand.

The cultivation of onions this year is reported to be 40 per cent less than last year, with a local onion grower fretting about its possible effect on future yield.

The price of onions peaked at K1,000 per viss last August as a direct consequence of high demand in foreign markets and low yields. —Union Daily

Organic chickens in upcountry villages seeing high demand

Organic chickens traditionally bred in upcountry villages on a manageable local scale are in high demand, according to husbandry businessmen from Natmauk and Yeinyaungyung townships. The price of chickens rises as Thingyan Festival draws near. Prices range from K7,000 to K8,000 per viss. The price for live chickens is around K5,500 per viss, up from K4,500 a few days ago. “There are many sellers as they can make good profits,” said local poultry farmers from Natmauk, Gwaykon and Yeinyaungyung. —St/Union Daily

Labour shortages have caused bamboo matting to halt in Tatkon.

Bamboo matting business nearly halts in Tatkon

BAAMO matting is in danger of going out of business in Tatkon due to a public loss of interest in bamboo matting produce and increasing labour shortages.

The soaring price of bamboo used for matting and shortages of skilled labour are likely to push business out of operation, said U Aung Than who runs a bamboo matting business in Tatkon Township.

Bamboo matting is mainly used in the construction of fences, storage huts and barns. Currently, there are about ten bamboo matting businesses in the township. A single-layer bamboo matting is sold for K140 per square foot, and a double-layer bamboo matting for K200 per square foot.

The labour shortages being suffered in the town are reportedly due to skilled workers going abroad in search of higher income. —Thet Oo (Thaton)
Japan congratulates, welcomes new Myanmar government

TOKYO — Foreign Minister Fumio Kishida sent congratulatory messages to Myanmar on the establishment of its new government led by President Htin Kyaw, the Japanese government said in a statement yesterday.

“We are pleased that a transfer of government was realised peacefully through a democratic process,” the statement said.

“The government aims to further solidify the traditional friendship and cooperative relations with Myanmar,” it said.

Htin Kyaw, a trusted aide of Myanmar’s democracy icon Aung San Suu Kyi, was sworn in on Wednesday as president of the Southeast Asian country, which now has its first democratically elected government in more than 50 years.

Suu Kyi joined the new Cabinet, taking the foreign minister role as well as three others, during an inauguration ceremony held at parliament.

“Japan is certain that democratization, rule of law, economic reform and national reconciliation will be further promoted under the leadership” of Htin Kyaw and Foreign Minister Suu Kyi, the statement said.—Kyodo News

Court dismisses Malaysia Airlines’ bid to strike out MH370 suit

KUALA LUMPUR — A Malaysian court yesterday dismissed a bid by national flag carrier Malaysia Airlines Berhad (MAB) to throw out a suit filed by relatives of three passengers who went missing on flight MH370, opening the way for other relatives to sue the airline.

MH370 disappeared on a flight from Kuala Lumpur to Beijing on 8 March 2014, with 239 passengers and crew on board. More than 50 suits have been filed in the Malaysian courts over the plane’s disappearance, while others have been filed in the United States, Australia, and China.

The Kuala Lumpur High Court ruling is likely to come as a relief for relatives, many of whom had feared they would not be able to get compensation from Malaysia Airlines Systems (MAS) after it transferred all its assets and operations to MAB in restructuring its exercise last year.

MAB had argued that it had no liability as it was set up eight months after the aircraft disappeared.

But the court did not accept that, instead ruling that MAB’s liability would be determined in a trial, government lawyer Alice Loke Yee Ching told reporters.

“It was not plain and obvious that MAB is not a proper party (to the suit). That should only be determined by the full trial,” she said.

The suit ruled yesterday was filed by two teenagers whose parents and older brother were on the plane on the ill-fated flight. It will be the first case against the airline to be heard in Malaysia, more than two years after the plane went missing.

The court, however, dismissed the teenagers’ bid to also hold the Malaysian government and two of its entities liable for the plane’s disappearance.

“The family’s lawyer, San-geet Kaur Deo, told reporters the court had ruled that while the government had a duty of care to the plaintiffs, “there was no breach of that duty”.

She said the family would appeal the court’s decision.—Reuters

Japan seeks to join US-Philippines drills regularly

WASHINGTON — A senior official of the US Defence Department said Tuesday that Japan is in talks with the Philippines about participating in joint drills with the United States on a regular basis.

Amy Searight, deputy assistant secretary of defence for South and Southeast Asia, was referring to the Balikatan joint exercises the US and Philippine militaries conduct near the South China Sea, where the latter is involved in territorial disputes with China.

“Japan is talking about a Status of Forces Agreement, so that Japan can regularly participate in those kinds of exercises,” Searight said at a think tank event in Washington.

The envisioned agreement would govern the operations of the Japanese Self-Defence Forces in the Philippines.

“Japan is participating (in the Balikatan drill) as an observer. Japan very much wants to participate more,” she said.—Kyodo News

Thailand eyes luxury tourists, operators say keep them safe

BANGKOK — Thailand needs to do more to keep its tourists safe if it wants to achieve its objective of attracting more high-end travellers, operators say, or it risks losing out to its up-and-coming neighbours.

With its palm-fringed beaches, Buddhist culture and racy nightlife, Bangkok has been a poster child for Asian tourism for decades, attracting a range of visitors from backpackers and adventure-seekers, to families and culture vultures.

In recent years, increasing numbers of Chinese tourists have joined the mix. But dark clouds could be forming even as a record 32 million tourists are expected this year. The industry, which accounts for 10 per cent of gross domestic product, has been resilient to political upheaval over the last decade that has included violent street protests and military coups.

Even a deadly 2015 bomb attack on a Bangkok shrine popular with tourists failed to dent arrivals.

“Many people say tourists come here because it is a cheap destination. This needs to change,” Hakphan, commander of the Tourism Authority now wants to focus on “quality tourism”, and has launched a campaign to attract visitors who spend more, and hopefully stay out of trouble.

“If we want to attract the high end we need to reassure them. Meeting our target luxury-traveller target will be harder after the recent negative publicity,” said Surapon.

The figures can be frightening. Fourteen US citizens died of natural causes in Thailand from January to June 2015, higher than the 11 who died in France, a top destination for US tourists, according to US State Department figures.

Thailand had the second-highest number of deaths of British nationals in 2014 after Spain, which in the top holiday spot for Britons, British Foreign Office figures show. Major General Surachet Hakphan, commander of the Tourism Authority, said tourism was changing.

The men and women in his division will focus on safety, he said.

“Elephants trampling on tourists and tourists having their legs cut off by speed boats, this won’t happen any more,” Surachet told Reuters, referring to two recent fatal accidents. Jason Friedman, managing director at J.M. Friedman & Co. — Bespoke Hospitality Services, said despite the bad news, Thailand had managed to preserve its image as a holiday paradise.

“People want to believe that Thailand is a great place and nothing goes wrong here — this is a perception that works in our favour,” Friedman told Reuters.

For Friedman, who focuses on the high-end, the bigger risk is the volume of arrivals creates the impression that Thailand has become a mass market. Friedman puts it: industrial tourism.

Tourists wanting off-the-beat-en-track travel need not look far, he said. “The industrial-strength tourism will push people away. They have started looking for remote beaches in Cambodia or Myanmar,” he said.—Reuters

US hopes China will agree to talk about South Korea missile defence

WASHINGTON — A senior US diplomat said on Tuesday he hopes China will accept an offer for a technical briefing on a new missile defence system the United States wants to deploy in South Korea, a prospect Beijing sees as a threat to its national security.

US Deputy Secretary of State Anthony Blinken said the Terminal High Altitude Area Defence (THAAD) system was necessary for the United States to protect itself and regional allies from North Korean missile attacks.

“We realise China may not believe us and also proposed to go through the technology and specifications with them ... and prepared to explain to what the technology does and what it doesn’t do and hopefully they will take us up on that proposal,” Blinken told Washington’s Brookings Institution.

Blinken spoke ahead of a visit by Chinese President Xi Jinping to Washington for a nuclear security summit that will have concerns about North Korea high on the agenda.

The United States and South Korea agreed to begin talks on possible THAAD deployment last month after North Korea tested its fourth nuclear bomb on 6 January and launched a long-range rocket on 7 February.

China backed tough new sanctions on North Korea following the tests but has voiced opposition to THAAD as its radar has a range that would extend far beyond the Korean peninsula and into China.

Asked whether China would accept a US briefing on THAAD, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Hong Lei would not directly reply, repeating China did not view the matter “as simply a technical one”.

“The THAAD system exceeds the normal defensive needs of the Korean peninsula, threatens China’s reasonable national security interests and damages regional strategic stability,” Hong told a news briefing in Beijing yesterday.

South Korea’s military said on Tuesday that North Korea test-fired a short-range missile on its east coast in the latest of a string of launches that Pyongyang has characterised as a response to the sanctions. US President Barack Obama will meet South Korean President Park Geun-hye and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe on Thursday to discuss North Korea’s nuclear programme, ahead of a bilateral meeting between Obama and Xi later that day.

Blinken said THAAD deployment was a necessary step until Pyongyang’s behaviour changed.

“None of these steps are directed against China but we have also been very clear that as long as this persists ... we will have to take steps,” he said.

Obama’s deputy national security adviser, Ben Rhodes, said China had stepped up pressure on North Korea, but this had to be shown to change Pyongyang’s calculus.

“We’ve had good support from China, but we clearly believe that there’s more that will continue to have to be done, including on enforcing the sanctions we have put into place,” Rhodes told reporters.—Reuters

China warns Taiwan over new law governing cross-strait relations

BEIJING — The Chinese government warned Taiwan yesterday that the passage of a proposed new law governing cross-strait relations between the two could seriously damage the basis for talks, and that Beijing opposed any obstacles to developing ties.

China has looked on with suspicion at Taiwan since Tsai Ing-wen and her pro-independence Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) won presidential and parliamentary elections in January on the back of a wave of anti-China sentiment.

In 2014, hundreds of students occupied Taiwan’s parliament for weeks in protests nicknamed the Sunflower Movement, demanding more transparency and fearful of China’s growing economic and political influence on the democratic island.

The protests over the 2013 Cross-Strait Service Trade Agreement, which aimed to open up investment from both sides in industries such as banking, healthcare, and tourism, were the largest display of anti-China sentiment in Taiwan in years.

The DPP is proposing Taiwan’s parliament first passes a so-called cross-Taiwan Strait supervision law before it will consider agreeing to the trade pact.

China is worried that the law would stymie future agreements with Taiwan.

Asked about the law, a spokesman for China’s Taiwan Affairs Office said the basis for talks between the two sides should not be damaged.

“Anything that damages the basis for consultations and negotiations between the two sides of the strait, interferes in or impedes relevant progress or puts up man-made blocks on the development of ties, we will resist,” he said.

One issue is the opposition to the law which would give Taiwan’s government, which has vowed to push through the bill after the current February-to-May session, the ability to ratify agreements with Taiwan.

China’s trade minister last year called the bill an “extraordinary move”.

China is worried that the law would stymie future agreements with Taiwan.

China’s government warned Taiwan yesterday that it was proposing Taiwan’s parliament, although the manner in which the self-ruled island moves forward in the current February-to-May session will be seen as a sign of how Tsai will steer Taiwan-China relations.

China’s trade minister last month urged Taiwan to pass the trade pact.

China considers Taiwan a wayward province, to be brought under control by force if necessary. Defeated Nationalist forces fled to the island in 1949 after the Chinese civil war.

Sri Lanka reiterates no threat to national security after discovery of explosives, ammunition

COLOMBO — Sri Lanka yesterday reiterated that there was no threat to the country’s national security despite allegations by the opposition that the Tamils were trying to regroup.

Opposition parliamentarian and former president’s son, Namal Rajapakse, yesterday tweeted that the recovery of a suicide jacket and explosives from a house in the former war-torn north earlier in the day raised questions if the Tamil Tiger rebels were trying to regroup in the island nation.

However, Defence Secretary Karunasena Hettiarachchi told Xinhua that the recovery was “nothing extraordinary” as such explosives and ammunition were hidden by the rebels during the war period.

“We recover various kind of ammunition very often as these were all hidden by the LTTE during the war.

So the question of our national security being threatened does not arise,” Hettiarachchi said.

In addition to the suicide jacket, police also discovered a stock of explosives and bullets which were hidden in a house in Chawakachcheri, in the north.

Japan opens priority immigration lanes at Narita, Kansai airports

OSAKA — Japan launched priority immigration lanes yesterday at major international airports serving Tokyo and Osaka to speed up procedures for conference attendees and VIPs.

The service was launched at Kansai International Airport and Narita airport under a government plan for tourism promotion. VIP passengers are allowed to enter the fast lanes upon showing a coupon provided by their airlines.

Kansai airport, the international gateway for Osaka, Kyoto, Kobe and other western Japan cities, set up two fast lanes each at its south and north immigration counters.

After 10am, visitors from South Korea were among the first to use the service.

Meanwhile, at Narita airport serving the greater Tokyo area, a total of eight fast lanes opened at its Terminal 1 and 2 buildings, with each flight bringing in about five such users.

The Land, Infrastructure, Transport and Tourism Ministry said it will also consider expanding the services to other airports including Tokyo’s Haneda.

Melting of polar ice—Myanmar is adversely affected

Bahauddin Foizee

The ice at the earth’s polar regions is the largest store of fresh water on the planet and plays an imperative role in maintaining earth’s environmental balance. As ice in these regions melts, it affects the ocean height, temperature, and circulation — which, in turn, gradually changes earth’s climate. Myanmar is one of the countries in the world most vulnerable to climate change. Besides its major problem of armed insurgencies, Myanmar’s vulnerability to climate change is very alarming. The overall economic development of the country is likely to be troubled to a considerable extent in near future by the adverse affects of climate change.

Among the major impacts of the climate change — particularly of the global warming — the increasing rise in sea-levels every year has been the most alarming one so far, with the possibility of submerging a substantial portion of ‘flour-prone’ coastal areas of Myanmar under water by 2050 (a prediction made in the 4th assessment report by the International Panel on Climate Change or IPCC). The major cause behind the rise in sea-level is the melting of ice of different regions, mostly of the south and north poles.

Global warming

The global warming is one of the major incentives for climate change. It is a global phenomenon causing much damage to the resources of the globe, making life of the living beings, including human, miserable. Global warming has caused the weather of different regions to change drastically and disproportionately. Ice is melting rapidly in the ice-covered regions because of this global warming. Melting of ice, without any doubt, causes the sea-levels to rise. The effects of the continuation of the rise in sea-levels are deep. It would submerge many areas around the globe, especially the coastal ones; and perhaps it will not take decades for the coastlines to change.

The rise in sea-levels has been causing more floods, especially during storms. Higher sea-levels have increased the size of the flow of water that the storm surges generally bring into inland from the ocean. Some short term impacts of rise in sea-level (especially due to polar ice melting) are regularly experienced these days by many victims around the globe. The Tsunami is an ideal example of what sort of disaster the rise in sea-level, caused by melting of polar ice, could lead in up-to.

North Pole

The North Pole is the northernmost point on the globe and located amid waters of the Arctic Ocean. The whole region is generally referred to as the Arctic region, which is warming faster than other areas across the globe. In this region, temperature has increased over the decades by an alarming rate compared to the rest of the globe, and it seems that temperature in this region will continue to increase if measures are not taken to reduce this increasing trend. The warming atmosphere, along with a changed weather-pattern, is causing Arctic ice to melt at such alarming rapidity that a greater portion of Arctic ice will be gone in next two decades, and an ice-free Arctic summer could be experienced by next four decades, as claimed by the experts in this field. The ice of the region is already reduced by as much as 50% compared to the 1950s.

The impacts of declining ice-cover in the Arctic are far reaching, from species endangerment to the weakening of global ocean circulation, to massive rise in sea-levels.

Since the Arctic region was inaccessible because of the layers of thick ice, there were less teritorial disputes until the beginning of this century. However, the rapid melting of ice in the region is making it a more accessible zone for commercial oil and gas, fresh water, minerals, coal, iron, copper, oil, gas and shipping. Arctic states – Canada, Denmark (via Greenland), Russia, Norway and the U.S.– are in rush to exploit all these opportunities. Their rush will only increase the warming of the region through their presence, through the external materials or organisations that they bring into the region with them and through their drilling for energy extraction from the region.

South Pole

While the North Pole is located amid waters of an ocean, the South Pole lies on a continental land mass. The Antarctica Continent and the Antarctic Ocean make up the surroundings of the South Pole, and the region is widely referred to as the Antarctic region. Thousands of tourists and researchers visit the region, especially the Antarctic Peninsula, every year. More scientists, more tourists, more research stations, more countries involved in exploration for mineral and other resources, and greater access to the region in an increasingly warmer. Moreover, an increase in visitors means more boats/ships, other external materials brought by them, more carbon dioxide and so on. Therefore, the disturbances to the region’s fragile environment are ever increasing with these pollutions. The carbon emissions in the far away human inhabited areas are also contributing to the increasing warming of the Antarctic region.

Impact upon Myanmar

Melting of polar ice is scary for many reasons, and the scariest is the rise in sea-level, as mentioned earlier. In long run, the coastline and coastal cities will be lost. But in the short term, it will cause more damage through floods and powerful storms that might bring water into inland with them, causing devastation like that of the Tsunami.

With flat and low-lying landscape, the whole coastal area of Myanmar is highly vulnerable to such floods and storms. A sizable portion of Myanmar’s population live in the coastal areas, where majority of the population are affected, directly or indirectly, by coastal floods or tidal flows, salinity, tropical cyclones, erosion of river-bank etc. With the rise of sea-level, even a metre, Myan mar could lose a substantial percentage of its total coastal landmass under the sea water, turning millions of inhabitants living in the coastal areas of Myanmar into climate refugees.

Moreover, the freshwater sources in the coastal areas of Myanmar face deep intrusion of saline water from the Bay of Bengal during the dry season. The melting of polar ice in its gradual process will only deteriorate the existing situation to a great extent.

Wrapping up

German scholars from Potsdam Institute for Climate Impact Research warned that if incentives of the global warming, especially the carbon emissions in the atmosphere, are not reduced immediately worldwide, a series of unstoppable events will be triggered, causing dramatic rise in sea-levels and the total annihilation of coastal cities inhabited by millions of people. This of course does not exclude Myanmar. While this is a comparatively long term impact of global warming, or of melting of polar ice to be precise, Myanmar is likely to experience more ‘immediate’ adverse impacts, as mentioned earlier. Agriculture, industry, school, hospitals, roads, bridges, livelihoods, marine resources, forestry, biodiversity, human health and other utility services will suffer severely.

All in all, earth’s temperatures are rising, the ocean water is warming, polar ice is melting, and sea levels are going up. It is high time for Myanmar to start working on real solutions along with other most affected countries. Myanmar must start addressing these above mentioned concerns with utmost urgency in the global platforms.

New government advised to curb farming sector expenses

OVERTURES will be made to the new government to curb production expenses within respective farming sectors, according to the Myanmar Rice Federation (MRF).

Dr Soe Htun, deputy chair of the MRF, has made it known that submissions have been made to the government in the past suggesting the cultivation of quality varieties of paddy, better production methods, and construction of basic agriculture infrastructure in a bid to mitigate production expenses incurred in agricultural sectors.

“In a bid to alleviate heavy interest rates on debt encumbered by farmers, we will give the suggestion of curbing production expenses,” said U Chit Khang, chair of the MRF.

Farmers are currently experiencing difficulties within the agricultural sector because of high fertilizer prices and a shortage of labour during times of harvest.

“During the term of the new government, we will work to increase the capacity of rice exports to foreign countries. We have plans to work together with the UMFCCI, MRPA and the Rice and Paddy Traders Association for the development of rice and paddy sector,” said U Myint Cho, director of the Department of Trade Promotion.

A total of 1.8 million tonnes of rice was exported abroad during the 2014-15 fiscal year, with the figure for the current fiscal year, as of March 8, standing at 1.5 million tonnes, according to the Ministry of Commerce.—Myitmakha News Agency
WASHINGTON — Republican front-runner Donald Trump on Tuesday abandoned a pledge to support a party presidential nominee other than himself, a sign of increasing friction with chief rival Ted Cruz.

"No, I don't support him anymore," Trump replied, when asked at a CNN town hall whether he still supported a pledge he made last year to support whoever is the Republican nominee for the 8 November election.

Trump’s signing of a loyalty pledge last September was important in helping him gain credibility within the Republican National Committee. The pledge was also signed by all his rivals for the presidential nomination.

His aboutface came as he tries to fend off a challenge from Cruz, a US senator from Texas who is running second to the front-runner Donald Trump on issues such as trade and the status of foreign residents.

Trump and Cruz were enmeshed in a fight last week involving their wives, with a Cruz SuperPAC publishing a provacative photo of Trump’s former model wife, Marla Maples, and Trump retaliating by tweeting an unflattering photo of Cruz’s wife, Heidi.

Cruz, asked earlier at the CNN town hall whether he also would honour the pledge to support the nominee if it was not himself, declined to give a straight answer.

"Let me tell you my solution to that," Cruz said. "Donald is not going to be the GOP nominee. We’re going to beat him.

"GOP is the acronym for Grand Old Party, a nickname for the Republican Party.

Trump said he could do without Cruz’s support.

"I watched him tonight and I watched how tormented he was when you asked him that question," Trump told CNN moderator Anderson Cooper. "I don’t want to have him be tormented. Let me just tell you I don’t want his support, I don’t need his support. I don’t want him to be uncomfortable.

Trump also said he recognised that several of those who have dropped out of the race might harbor ill feelings towards him, mentioning former Florida Governor Jeb Bush, Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker and US Senator Rand Paul of Kentucky.

Walker endorsed Cruz earlier on Tuesday, with Wisconsin’s primary vote coming up on 5 April.

"I drove him out of the race," Trump said of Walker, who abandoned his presidential bid last autumn. "I drove Jeb Bush out of the race, I drove Rand Paul out of the race. I understand why they don’t like me.

A third Republican presidential candidate, Ohio Governor John Kasich, was also tentative about honouring the pledge.

He told the town hall he had been “disturbed by some of the things I’ve seen” during the campaign, adding, “I want to see how this finishes out.”

Vucic: Refugee crisis has only been postponed, not solved

BELGRADE — Serbian Prime Minister Aleksandar Vucic said yesterday that the refugee crisis had only been postponed, not solved.

“This is the biggest refugee crisis since World War II. It has shook the foundations of the EU and showed that EU countries are motivated by selfishness rather than solidarity,” Vucic said at a conference titled ‘Asylum and migration system: refugee crisis and reform processes’, which is under way in Belgrade.

The crisis, Vucic said, had showed how all the other countries, which were not part of the EU, treated refugees, how the rule of law was followed and how principles were respected.

Serbia will do everything it can to be part of a comprehensive solution, if any be there, he said. “If no common European solution is found, we will behave as people and respect the principles of solidarity,” said Vucic.

MOSCOW — Iran’s test launches of nuclear-capable missiles did not violate a United Nations Security Council resolution, the Interfax news agency cited a Russian foreign ministry representative as saying yesterday.

The United States and its European allies said in a joint letter seen by Reuters on Tuesday that the launches had defied the resolution that endorsed last year’s historic nuclear deal.

“The resolution does not ban the tests,” Interfax cited Mikhail Ulyanov, head of the ministry’s department for non-proliferation and arms control, as saying.

Russia, despite draw down, shipping more to Syria than removing

MOSCOW — When Vladimir Putin announced the withdrawal of most of Russia’s military contingent from Syria there was an expectation that the Yauza, a Russian naval icebreaker and one of the mission’s main supply vessels, would return home to its Arctic Ocean port.

Instead, three days after Putin’s 14 March declaration, the Yauza, part of the “Syrian Express”, the nickname given to the ships that have kept Russian forces supplied, left the Russian Black Sea port of Novorossiysk for Tartous, Russia’s naval facility in Syria.

Whatever it was carrying was heavy; it sat so low in the water that its load line was barely visible.

Its movements and those of other Russian ships in the two weeks since Putin’s announcement of a partial withdrawal suggest Moscow has in fact shipped more equipment and supplies to Syria than it has brought back in the same period, a Reuters analysis shows.

It is not known what the ships were carrying or how much equipment has been flown out in giant cargo planes accompanying returning war planes.

But the movements — while only a partial snapshot — suggest Russia is working intensively to maintain its military infrastructure in Syria and to supply the Syrian army so that it can scale up again swiftly if need be.

Putin has not detailed what would prompt such a move, but any perceived threat to Russia’s bases in Syria or any sign that President Bashar al-Assad, Moscow’s closest Middle East ally, was in peril would be likely to trigger a powerful return.

Russia operates an air base in Hmeimim and a naval facility at Tartous. Putin has said Russia will keep both and that they will need to be well protected.

“Since the main part of the force de facto stayed there, there is no reason to reduce the traffic,” said Mikhail Barabanov, a senior research fellow at the Moscow-based CAST military think tank. “Supplies for the Syrian army remain significant as well.”

Moscow has not revealed the size of its force in Syria, nor has it given details of its partial withdrawal. Reuters has calculated that around half of Russia’s fixed-wing strike force based in Syria flew out of the country in the days after the partial draw down was made public. The precise number of planes Russia had was secret, but analysis suggested it had about 36 fixed-wing military jets there.

Blasts and heavy gunfire heard in Tripoli

TRIPOLI — Several loud explosions followed by heavy gunfire were heard over Tripoli in the early hours of yesterday, a Reuters reporter said.

The cause of the firing was not immediately clear, but the Libyan capital has been on edge amid speculation that a UN-backed unity government was about to travel to Tripoli from Tunisia.

The self-declared government in Tripoli and some armed factions in the city oppose the unity government and have warned it not to move.

The Tripoli government was brought to power after armed brigades backing it won a battle for the capital in 2014.

A rival government moved to eastern Libya.

The unity government is the result of a December deal to heal Libya’s divisions and end its armed conflict, but the new government has faced opposition from hardliners in both the east and west of the country.

On Sunday and Monday Tripoli’s airspace was closed for periods of several hours, a move that the unity government’s Presidential Council said was designed to prevent it being targeted by Libya.

Tripoli Prime Minister Khalifa Ghwell said in a statement late on Tuesday that the airspace had been closed to protect the souls of the people following the Presidential Council’s “inappropriate behaviour”.—Reuters

Russia police say blast kills officer, Islamic State claims responsibility

MOSCOW — One police officer was killed and two injured late on Tuesday when two vehicles were blown up by an explosive device in Russia’s Dagestan region, police said, while the Islamic State group said it was behind the attack.

“The cars were blown up, the type of explosive device has not been established yet,” Fatina Utudaeva, a spokeswoman for the Dagestani police, told Reuters by phone.

The Amaq news agency, which supports the Islamic State group, posted online a statement saying its local affiliate was behind the attack.

The Amaq statement said the blast killed 10 security officers. Reuters was unable to independently verify the casualty numbers.

Islamic State has in the past said it was behind violent attacks on security forces in the North Caucasus, the volatile mainly Muslim part of Russia where Dagestan is located.

Dagestan, where Kremlin critics say widespread poverty and corruption help feed religious extremism, last saw similar attacks on police in February when some militants in Dagestan, which borders Chechnya where Moscow led two wars against separatists in 1990s, have sworn allegiance to Islamic State.—Reuters

Iran missile tests have caused alarm — UN’s Ban

GENEVA — UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon said yesterday that Iran’s ballistic missile had caused “alarm” and it would be up to the major powers to decide whether fresh sanctions should be applied.

Ban, speaking to reporters in Geneva on the sidelines of a conference on Syrian refugees, said: “Out of this agreement (with major powers), now Iranians have launched ballistic missiles. It is true that that has caused alarm and concern.

“But what kinds of sanctions, what kind of measures should be applied is up to the Security Council members,” he said. — Reuters

Italy demands release of marine on day India seeks better ties at summit

THE HAGUE — Italy yesterday asked judges in The Hague to order India to release a detained Italian marine, hours before Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi was due at an EU-India summit in Brussels at which he aims to defuse the long-running Row with Rome.

In 2012, India arrested two Italian marines who were escorting an oil tanker on suspicion of killing two fishermen they mistook for pirates. Though they were not charged, the pair were barred from leaving the country.

Massimiliano Latorre was allowed to return home last year for medical treatment, but Salvatore Girone has for four years been confined to Delhi, where he lives at the Italian embassy and reports weekly to Indian police.

The case moved to the Permanent Court of Arbitration in The Hague after India and Italy agreed to suspend all domestic legal proceedings.

Addressing the United Nations tribunal, Francesco Azzarello, Italy’s lead lawyer in the case, pledged that Girone would be returned to India to face charges should it bring them once the Hague arbitration is finished.

“The only reason Girone is not allowed to leave India is so that he can act as a de facto guarantee of Italy’s obligation to return him for trial,” Azzarello said.

“A human being cannot be used as a guarantee of the conduct of a state.”

Waiting until the end of the case in The Hague, where proceedings are often lengthy, could leave Girone detained without charge for up to eight years, thousands of kilometres from his wife and young children, he said.

India hopes the Brussels summit will bring a thaw in ties with the EU and persuade Italy to refrain from blocking India’s membership of a key global group on missile technology. Rome single-handedly scuppered India’s bid to join last year.

As part of a broad agenda, the EU plans to raise the issue of the marines with Modi, according to an internal EU council note seen by Reuters.

Italy argues the case of the two marines was beyond the jurisdiction of Indian courts. Marines are viewed by Italy as state officials immune to foreign prosecution. Italy paid $190,000 in compensation to each victim’s family. — Reuters

Ally of disgraced China security chief gets 12 years in jail for graft

Several key Zhou allies have been ensnared in the anti-graft campaign, including Jiang Jiemin, the former top regulator of state-owned assets.

In another report, Xinhua said the trial of a former senior official who had vigorously backed Xi’s anti-graft campaign had begun.

Wang Min, the one-time Communist Party boss of Jinan city, about 300 km (185 miles) south of the capital, Beijing, is suspected of procuring property and other favours for companies, and of taking bribes.

Nepal should attract investment from China to achieve economic growth: ADB

KATHMANDU — Asian Development Bank (ADB) suggested that Nepal should grab the opportunities from neighbour China to achieve the targeted economic growth rate for the next two years. Launching Asian Development Outlook 2016 here yesterday, ADB said Asia’s leading economy China’s structural change in imports can create immense opportunities for the border-sharing Nepal.

“China’s structural change is a golden chance for Nepal. Thus, it’s perfect time to attract direct foreign investment from the northern neighbour to strengthen economy,” Kenichi Yokoyama, ADB Country Director for Nepal, said while addressing the programme.

ADB has projected a 1.5-per cent economic growth rate of the quake ravaged Nepal for the fiscal year 2016 after a 3-per cent growth last year.

ADP projected a slow growth pace for this year in regard to slow post-earthquake reconstruction, trade and transit disruption followed by months-long economic blockade and unfavorable monsoon creating troubles in agriculture sector.

However, the growth rate is expected to pick up to 4.8 per cent in 2017 through stabilisation of political climate, acceleration of reconstruction and normal monsoon favouring agricultural growth. ADB is of view that there is an urgent need to accelerate reconstruction and implementation of development programmes to prevent a further slowdown in economic growth.

The economic growth of Himalayan country is possible only through the speedy reconstruction drive and focusing on sectors of energy, tourism and agriculture, the bank said.

Nepal witnessed an inflation rate of 7.2 per cent in 2015 whereas it was significantly higher in January this year, standing at 12.1 per cent. —Xinhua

Iran missile tests have caused alarm — UN’s Ban
BRASILIA — Brazil’s largest party announced on Tuesday it was leaving President Dilma Rousseff’s governing coalition and pulling its members from her government, a departure that sharply raises the odds she could be impeached in a matter of months.

The Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMDB) took just a few minutes to decide unanimously in a packed leadership meeting that its six ministers in Rousseff’s Cabinet and all other party members with government appointments must resign immediately.

Under Brazil’s presidential system, Rousseff will remain in office but the break cripples her fight against impeachment proceedings in Congress, which could put Vice President Michel Temer, leader of the PMDB, in the presidential seat.

Rousseff has denied any wrongdoing and called the impeachment efforts a coup to oust her ruling Workers’ Party (PT).

The opposition is pressing to impeach her allegedly breaking budget laws to boost spending in the run-up to her re-election.

Their efforts gained steam as more than 1 million Brazilians took to the streets this month to protest at the worst recession in decades and a vast corruption scandal at state oil company Petrobras (PETR4SA) that has reached the president’s inner circle.

“We’re going to try to change the country. The economic and social crisis is very serious,” Senator Romero Juca, the PMDB’s first vice-president, said after the rowdy meeting in which party members chanted “Temer President” and “Out with the PT.”

The loss of Rousseff’s main coalition partner may prompt smaller parties to abandon the government, leaving Brazil’s first female president increasingly isolated as the impeachment proceedings in Congress, which started yesterday, are ready to lead Brazil with policies restoring business confidence. Temer’s plan is expected to include drastic cuts in public spending to close a fiscal deficit that cost Brazil its investment-grade credit rating.—Reuters

Cambodia’s economy remains strong over next two years: ADB

PHNOM PENH — Cambodia’s economy is expected to remain strong over the next two years, driven by government and investment in construction, manufacturing, and services, according to the Asian Development Bank (ADB)’s annual economic outlook yesterday.

The bank’s outlook forecasts gross domestic product (GDP) growth for Cambodia of 7 per cent for 2016 — the same rate achieved in 2015 — before slightly up to 7.1 per cent in 2017.

“To sustain economic growth, Cambodia needs to further diversify its economy and provide further opportunity for employment by attracting new industries,” he said.

According to the report, growth in industry is projected at 9.5 per cent this year, supported by further diversification in products with higher value added such as garments, footwear and electronics. The service sector is expected to expand by 7.8 per cent, it said, adding that agriculture is projected to grow by 1.6 per cent, assuming favourable weather.

It said growth in construction is expected to continue moderately in comparison to the rapid pace of recent years.—Xinhua

Leonardo DiCaprio fights for Indonesian elephants’ future

LOS ANGELES — Actor and environmental activist Leonardo DiCaprio took a trip to the jungles of Indonesia over the weekend in a bid to garner support for the creation of a nature sanctuary on the island of Sumatra.

DiCaprio, 41, took to Instagram to share a photo of himself standing alongside two endangered elephants.

“The lowland rainforest of the Leuser Ecosystem are considered the world’s best remaining habitat for the critically endangered Sumatran elephant,” wrote DiCaprio.

The actor, who has been a strong advocate for global environmental issues, explained that the elephants and other animals living in the Leuser rainforest habitats are under threat after plans were announced to destroy patches of forest for commercial use.

“Ancient elephant migratory patterns are still used by some of the last wild herds of Sumatran elephants. But the expansion of Palm Oil plantations is fragmenting the forest and cutting off key elephant migratory corridors, making it more difficult for elephant families to find adequate sources of food and water.”

Not only does the Leuser Ecosystem provide habitats for animals, but it also supplies clean water to the citizens living in the area and its watersheds help protect from natural disasters.

To help combat the problem, DiCaprio’s namesake organisation, the Leonardo DiCaprio Foundation, is teaming up with local partners to establish a “mega-fauna sanctuary in the Leuser Ecosystem.”

Along with elephants, the Leuser Ecosystem is the “last place on Earth” where orangutans, tigers and rhinos coexist.—PTI

Beijing Int’l Film Festival to screen 500 movies

BEIJING — Around 500 films will be put on screen during the sixth Beijing International Film Festival (BJIFF), which will open on 16 April.

A total of 2,329 films from 105 countries and regions have registered to take part in the screenings and award ceremony, with 1,964 foreign films and 365 produced in China.

This year’s selections feature 20 themes including “China story,” “window to Asia,” “power of writing” and “maiden works.”

Last year, more than 300 films were screened during the fifth BJIFF, which generated over 13.8 billion yuan (about 2.2 billion US dollars) in contracts.—Xinhua

Oscar-winning actress Patty Duke dies, age 69

COEUR D’ALENE — Oscar-winning American actress Patty Duke, widely known for the 1960s show “The Patty Duke Show,” died on Tuesday, her representative told Reuters. She was 69 years old.

Duke died Tuesday morning in Coeur d’Alene, Idaho from sepsis due to a ruptured intestine, her spokesman Mitchell Stubbs said.

“She was a wife, a mother, a grandmother, a friend, a mental health advocate and a cultural icon. She will be greatly missed,” Stubbs said.

Born Anna Duke in New York in 1946, the actress began working as a child in commercials, television and on stage.

She won a best supporting actress Oscar for playing deaf-blind author and activist Helen Keller in 1962’s “The Miracle Worker” at age 16, and later won an Emmy for playing Keller’s instructor Annie Sullivan in 1979’s TV movie of the same name. Helen Keller Services, a group dedicated to improving lives of those with visual and hearing impairment, said it was saddened by Duke’s death.

“Her performance in The Miracle Worker brought Helen Keller’s indomitable spirit to life and inspired generations to pursue careers serving the deaf-blind community,” the organisation said in a statement.

The actress also starred in her own sitcom, “The Patty Duke Show” from 1963 to 1966, and had a role in 1967’s “Valley of the Dolls.”

She later became president of the Screen Actor’s Guild in the 1980s, and also became an advocate for mental health issues after being diagnosed with bipolar disorder in 1982.

The actress was married four times and has three children, including “Lord of the Rings” actor Sean Astin and “The Facts of Life” actor Mackenzie Astin.—Reuters

Singer P Susheela enters Guinness World Records

CHENNAI — Legendary playback singer of South Indian languages, P Susheela, celebrated for her versatility, has entered the Guinness World Records for recording highest number of songs in several languages in a career spanning over half a century.

“Pulapaka Susheela Mohan (born 1935) has reportedly recorded up to 17,695 solo, duet and chorus backed songs in over six Indian languages since the 1960s, as verified on 28 January 2016,” said a citation of the Guinness World Records.

She has sung songs in Tamil, Telugu, Malayalam, Kannada, Hindi and other Indian languages.

Speaking to reporters here, she said it was “a big honour having sung so many thousands of songs” and recalled how her debut began in Tamil film “Petra Thai” in 1952 (“a duet ‘Etharkku Azhathai’ with A M Rajai”) and how film producer AV Meyappa Chettiar supported her by identifying her talent during her early years.

“I will sing even now, if I get the opportunity,” the 80-year-old playback singer said adding she had sung all kinds of songs and had learnt the nuances the hard way.

“I came to Chennai only after getting trained in Carnatic music, so it was not that difficult,” she said and recalled how her “practice sessions made my voice more good.”

The acclaimed singer has won many awards including National Awards and honours of several State governments in her long singing career which includes the Kalaimamaani Award of Tamil Nadu (1991) and Ragugapathy Vangayya Award of Andhra Pradesh (2004).

Praised as melody queen, “Enthai vullam tulli vilayadu vathum yen,” “unni ka thend” “bairavaavanam nandakumaravan yawrkukum” were among her Tamil super hit songs.

In 2011, Asha Bhosle featured in the Guinness World Records for 11,000 solos, duets and chorus supported songs in over a dozen Indian languages.—PTI

Central China tourist town to abolish admission fee

CHANGSHA — A tourist destination in central China’s Hunan Province will not charge the admission fee from tourists when they visit Fenghuang old town, local authorities said Monday.

Each tourist currently pays 148 yuan (23 US dollars) to enter Fenghuang, known as “China’s most beautiful old town” for its well-preserved architecture dating back more than 300 years.

From 10 April, 2016, tourists will not be charged to enter the town though entrance fees to sites within the town will remain, according to the town publicity office. An agreement made three years ago between the county government and three local companies to administer the town will expire soon.

The government informed the three companies of the changes on Sunday in a letter which mentioned that retailers and merchants in the town were opposed to the fee. Fenghuang began to charge admission in 2013 in order to reduce their revenue.

Later, many of their owners mount their beasts to drive them on a dusty, chaotic 15-km (nine miles) race across the steppeland. It’s all part of Mongolia’s Camel Festival — an event as central to traditional nomadic life as the bactrian camel itself, a woolly, two-humped beast that sports a flowing beard of hair.

Guinness World records classes the race, that is part of the two-day festival, as the largest camel race in the world, drawing 1,108 participants from across Mongolia to the site outside Dalanzadgad in Umnugovi Province.

This year, the winning camel romped home in 35 minutes and 12 seconds on the wind-swept steppe, according to the record website.

Mongolia’s steppes host camel derby and beauty parade

The bactrian camel itself is a beast of burden that normally carries everything that is required for a Mongolian to be able to build and live in a traditional Mongolian tent. They cost about $750 per piece. Known fairly or unfairly for their feisty temperament, some ploughed into the crowd of spectators, though no injuries were reported.

“Your camel has to be bad-tempered for riders to get a place here,” one person joked to another.

Many families trekked for at least seven hours from the capital Ulaanbaatar to watch the competition. There are minimal conditions to enter: the camels must be pure breed Mongolian bactrian and at least four years old. Entry is free.

Camel wool is vital for making clothes, blankets, jackets and socks, and also can be twined into rope. Camel meat, similar to goat, is eaten in steamed and fried dumplings.

Sleep tight and don’t let the sharks bite at Paris aquarium

PARIS — The house rules are clear: No swimming at night, keep your head and feet in the bedroom at all times, and avoid watching “Jaws” beforehand. It might put you off the sharks circling your bed.

A room with a very special view — 35 of the most feared creatures — is up for grabs at the Paris Aquarium for those looking for a night’s sleep with a difference. Submerged in a 10-metre (33-foot) deep aquarium with just two, with a round-shaped bed occupying most of the space, is not for the faint-hearted.

But for those curious and brave enough, it will be available for three nights in April as part of a competition organised by the aquarium and holiday home rental website Airbnb. The underwater sleepover will also aim to teach the three winners and their guests about sharks, with host, freediver Fred Buyle, introducing them to their overnight neighbours by “danc(ing) alongside the sharks”.

“Sharks are really, really misunderstood... People need to understand that sharks are not dangerous, there are only dangerous behaviours with sharks,” Buyle said.—Reuters

Rooney excited by competition for England places

LONDON — Injured captain Wayne Rooney is excited to be part of the fierce competition for places in England’s starting line-up for the Euro 2016 finals in France.

The 30-year-old striker’s place in the first-team has come under serious threat from former Tottenham Hotspur forward Harry Kane and Leicester City’s Jamie Vardy, with both leading the scoring charts in the Premier League this campaign.

“I have never taken my place for granted. Obviously, you want to play and it is great that competition is now there. With the quality we have got, it is exciting to be a part of,” Rooney, England’s record goal-scorer, told ITV on Tuesday.

Rooney has been out since 13 February with a knee ligament problem but is expected to return in time for Manchester United’s league trip to face Tottenham at White Hart Lane on 10 April.

“If everything goes according to plan, I’m back outside running now and I’m hoping to be full training within the next week or 10 days, so not too far away,” Rooney said.

The average age of the England side in Saturday’s 3-2 win over Germany was just 24 and Rooney acknowledged that the balance between age and experience will be a key factor in determining their success in France.

“There are so many of them that have not been to a major tournament. There’s a lot of young players,” he said.

“The likes of myself, Joe Hart and Gary Cahill can give them advice and make them feel more comfortable.”

England face Russia, Slovakia and Wales in Group B of the 24-team tournament that starts on 10 June.

Messi scores 50th Argentina goal in 2-0 win over Bolivia

CORDOBA — Lionel Messi scored his 50th international goal to help Argentina beat Bolivia 2-0 in a 2018 World Cup qualifier on Tuesday.

The win put Argentina third in the South American group with 11 points from six matches, two points behind joint leaders Ecuador and Uruguay.

Ecuador suffered their first loss in the group, going down 3-1 in Colombia, while Uruguay scored a 1-0 home win over Peru.

Argentina defender Gabriel Mercado, who scored the winner in Thursday’s 2-1 away victory over Chile, opened the scoring in the 21st minute against Bolivia.

Argentina were awarded a penalty in the 29th minute after Ronald Eguino fouled midfielder Ever Banega, and Messi made no mistake from the spot to net his 50th goal for Argentina, putting him within six of Gabriel Batistuta’s record.

“This (campaign) is very long and what’s important is that we win and remain on course,” Messi told TyC Sports.

“I’m happy with goal number 50 but more because we won and this helps to keep growing.”

Argentina coach Gerardo Martino said it had been crucial to get the two wins.

“It was fundamental to get the six points,” he told TyC Sports of the two wins. “I think we played a serious match and won well.”

Argentina could have gone ahead after 10 seconds with a quick attack down the left from the opening kickoff but Angel Di Maria’s shot was blocked by goalkeeper Carlos Lampe and Banega hit the bar with the rebound. Di Maria limped off after half an hour and was replaced by Angel Correa.

Argentina squandered several other chances to score against a side that put 12 goals past in two friendlies last year. They are a point ahead of Colombia and Chile, who came from behind to beat Venezuela 4-1.

Brazil and Paraguay have nine points after their 2-2 draw in Asuncion. The top four teams in the 10-nation group qualify for the 2018 World Cup finals, while the fifth-placed side goes into an intercontinental play-off.

Another Miami seed falls as number five Halep exits

MIAMI — Another high seed fell at the Miami Open as number five Simona Halep was sent packing by Timea Bacsinszky 4-6, 6-3, 6-2 in the quarter-finals in Florida on Tuesday.

Romanian Halep appeared well-placed for victory when she took the first set. She had only lost one of her last 11 sets but was outplayed by her Swiss opponent.

It was only the second set Bacsinszky had dropped during the tournament, and the 19th-seeded Swiss made sure it would be her last of the day as she prevailed in a match that stretched nearly two hours and 30 minutes.

Watched by a crowd that included Swiss champion Lara Gut, Bacsinszky ended the match in style with a cross-court backhand winner. “I came back from a long road,” 26-year-old, who has battled back from injury, said in a courtside interview.

“For the past year she (Halep) has been an inspiration for me because I believe in hard work and I know she’s one of the players which work really hard. To be able to play that well against her and catch the win is really amazing.”

Halep’s exit left the event with only one of the top 12 women’s seeds — number two Angelique Kerber, the Australian Open champion. Bacsinszky will meet Russian Svitolina in the semi-finals after the 15th seed beat compatriot Ekaterina Makarova 6-7(3), 6-4, 6-3.

Kuznetsova shocked world number one Serena Williams in straight sets a day earlier, and is playing past the third round of a tournament for the first time since January. She dropped the first set at the last back in a topsy-turvy second before breaking Makarova three times in the deciding set.

Bacsinszky has taken down some big names en route to the semi-final, disposing of third seed Agnieszka Radwanska and 16th seed Ana Ivanovic in previous rounds.

Her Miami form follows on from a stellar 2015 campaign during which she cracked the world top 10 for the first time and won two tournaments before a knee injury prematurely halted her campaign in October.

Djokovic into Miami quarters with win over Thiem

MIAMI — World number one Novak Djokovic beat Austrian Dominic Thiem 6-3, 6-4 in the fourth round of the Miami Open in Florida on Tuesday.

Djokovic needed four match points before finally prevailing against the 22-year-old, whose thunderous forehands frequently had the Serb on the back foot.

Thiem could not capitalise on his chances, however, and in the end Djokovic’s consistency proved the difference and he advanced after one hour and 50 minutes.

“I stayed tough when it was most needed,” Djokovic told the ATP Tour website. “In the important moments I just tried to make him play, make him run.”

“He has very powerful strokes from the back of the court, so he either makes some really amazing shots, down the line mostly, and some great inside out forehands, or he makes a mistake. “It was a straight-set win, but far from easy.”

Up next for Djokovic, who had nine double faults, his most in a three-set match since 2010, is a quarter-final against Tomas Berdych after the Czech beat Frenchman Richard Gasquet 6-4, 3-6, 7-5 in a contest that stretched nearly two hours and 30 minutes in blistering heat.

Japan’s Kei Nishikori beat Roberto Bautista 6-2, 6-4 to set up a meeting with France’s Gael Monfils, who got past Grigor Dimitrov 6-7(5), 6-3, 6-3.
