NEW CITY ON THE WAY

Amarapura urban development plan to be released

Aung Thant Khaing

THE Mandalay Business Capital City Development Company is planning to publicise its urban development project, according to its managing director U San Phone Tint.

The company will undertake the urban development project in Shankalay Kyun, located in Amarapura Township, Mandalay Region, said U San Phone Tint, adding that the project will follow the model of the urban development in other ASEAN countries.

The project includes the reclamation of fertile lands from swampy areas near the Ayeyawady River. The managing director pledged arrangements for better shelters for people residing in the villages in the project area.

“The [villagers] don’t have to leave their homes because they will be provided better homes in their original places,” he said.

The project area is reported to have absorbed croplands and marshlands, exclusive of existing farmlands. The company will have its information centres responsible for reimbursing compensation in exchange of plots of land after the completion of the project.

The urban development project will bring residential apartments, hospitals, hotels and shopping malls to over 2,000 acres of land, according to joint secretary U Thet Naing Tun of the Mandalay City Development Committee.

The Mandalay Business Capital Development Company entered an agreement with the Mandalay City Development Committee at the office of the Mandalay Region Government on 1 March.

Tourists visiting Sri Kestra rise in previous years

OVER 6,000 foreign tourists visited the ancient Sri Kestra city, listed as a World Heritage site, up until the end of February of the 2015-16 fiscal year, while the start of 2016 saw a rise in visitor numbers.

It is known that 3,548 foreign travellers visited the World Heritage site between April and December of 2015, with the first two months of this year seeing 2,598 foreign visitors.

“There are more foreign tourists visiting at the moment. Provisions have been made for foreign guests to get about the ancient city in the form of cattle driven carts, cars and motorcycles. Tourist police have also been stationed within the site for those tourists visiting around alone or in a group of two,” said Daw Aye Mya Thein, curator of the Sri Ksetra museum.

It is known that the numbers of foreign tourists that visited the ancient city during the 2014-15 fiscal year accounted for 8,768 while Myanmar visitors accounted for nearly 30,000.

“There has been an increase in tourists during the tourist season,” said U Kyaw Myo Win, deputy director of the Sri Kestra based Department of Archaeology and Museum.

The trend of a rise in foreign tourists to Sri Kestra is also evident in the numbers of local tourists to the site, although pricing discrimination remains in place with foreigners being charged K5,000 entry fees to access either...
A workshop on Developing a National Referral Mechanism (NRM) for Providing Direct Assistance to Victims of Trafficking was held at the Grand Amara Hotel in Nay Pyi Taw yesterday.

In her address, Dr Daw Sann Aye, deputy director-general of the Social Welfare Department, elaborated on works being carried out for the protection of victims of trafficking in Myanmar, including the recruitment of a task force, the reintegration and rehabilitation of victims. Next, Ms Sharon Dimanche, the Migrants Protection Programme Manager for the International Organisation for Migration (IOM), addressed the workshop. Officials of Social Welfare Department, police officers led by Police Brig-Gen Win Naing Tun, IOM staff and members of other civil society organisations held discussions on the establishment of a national referral mechanism to support trafficked persons.—Myanmar News Agency

Low-cost flats offered Shwelinban Industrial Zone workers

UNITS in four recently completed apartment buildings will be sold to workers in the Shwelinban Industrial Zone following the completion of power supply installation, according to the zone’s development committee.

The construction of 18 low-cost buildings for workers is being implemented on government property within the zone in Hlaingthaya Township, Yangon Region, through the collective contributions of factory owners.

Upon completion of the project, a total of 1,080 flats will be sold to workers in the zone, who will be able to pay in instalments, said U Aye Thaung, chairman of Shwelinban Industrial Zone Development Committee.

Each building has 60 units fitted with water and electricity supplies, added the chairman.

“The price per apartment is set at K6.2 million, but the prices of the flats can vary depending on what floors they are on,” he said.

According to the chairman, workers at any of the zone’s factories are eligible to apply to buy the low-cost flats.

“The sale of apartments will be carried out with transparency,” the chairman added.

“I am very interested in these apartments, as rental prices are very high elsewhere,” said U Myint Kyaw, a security guard at a bottled water factory in the industrial zone.

The Shwelinban Industrial Zone was established on an area of 1,100 acres in Hlaingthaya Township and is home to around operational and planned 180 factories.

Maungmagan fire struggle as rebuilding banned by authorities

FAMILIES whose shops were burned by a recent fire at Maungmagan Beach have experienced hardships as authorities have not allowed them to rebuild their shops, according to the fire victims.

“This now we have a difficult life as we are not allowed to rebuild our shops and revive our businesses,” said U Aung Htwe, owner of Aung San restaurant.

“I was told not to reconstruct my shop by authorities. They did not explain why,” he said.

The root cause of the fire has not yet been identified, said the restaurant owner. But he also quoted witnesses as saying that sparks from power lines touching each other are believed to have caused the fire.

The fire victims received no assistance from the government, whereas other fire victims around the country have been targeted for relief aid by the government and members of the public.

“The donation centre for fire victims was closed a week ago, and I received K200,000,” said U Aung Htwe.

The Maungmagan fire devastated seven large shops and five small ones, forcing victims to relocate to bungalows near the site of the fire.

“They eventually moved to the homes of their relatives,” said Maungmagan resident U Myint Maung.—Ko Mo

Community level personal protection crucial for malaria elimination in Myanmar: Malaria Consortium

MYANMAR had 152,195 reported malaria cases in 2015. The actual number is likely to be much higher, according to the World Health Organization.

However, recent scale-up in prevention and control by the National Malaria Control Programme (NMCP) has helped achieve a significant decline, and malaria in Myanmar is now largely concentrated among high-risk and hard-to-reach groups, the statement released yesterday by Malaria Consortium Organization quoting the WHO.

These include forest-dwellers, people residing in forest-fringe villages, armed forces, and migrants working in logging or mining in forested areas, palm oil and rubber plantations or construction sites. They are exposed to mosquitoes through high-risk night-time work in the forest or on construction sites, and have limited access to health services.

Scaling up insecticide-treated clothing (ITC) project was set up to determine the acceptability of ITC for malaria prevention among the key risk group of rubber tappers. Malaria Consortium is the first organisation to reach out to this key risk group in rural malaria-endemic areas to understand their perceptions of ITC. Previously, the use of ITC has mostly been limited to military and recreational markets and has not reached the community level. The project fills a gap in personal protection. Mosquitoes that transmit malaria act in various ways. Some rest and feed indoors, while others are more active outdoors. Current malaria control methods mostly focus on mosquitoes that feed indoors through indoor residual spraying of houses and the use of mosquito nets. People who are outdoors during the night are, therefore, not covered by typical measures and lack personal protection. “Addressing this residual transmission of malaria is increasingly important as Myanmar responds to drug resistance and moves towards malaria elimination,” explained Dr Hii.—GNLM

Migrants settlement programme carried out in Myitkyina tsp

LOCAL migrant people recently moved from temporary shelters in Myitkyina Township to Ngwepyaw Modern Village under the arrangement of local authorities.

As part of its migrant and refugee settlement services, the state government in cooperation with NGOs and INGOs has carried out settlement for those migrants who have fled from their residences as their lives and safety have been threatened.

Nearly 60 families with about 300 populations from seven shelters in the township were settled in the modern village established by the state government.

Kachin State Chief Minister U La John Ngan Hsai encouraged those migrants and clarified the government’s supports and arrangements for them on that day.

The local authorities provided nearly K10 million, food and rehabilitation supplies donated by the government departments, well-wishers and charitable organisations for migrants.

With around K10 million funded by the local government from 2014-2015 budget, 11KVA power lines, two transformers and meter boxes were successfully installed across the region to have access of electricity for all households, one of officials said.—State IPRD

Man threatening toll gate staff with gun arrested

A MAN wanted by police for threatening people with a gun at the Naung Lon toll gate along the road from Hpa-An to Myawady in Hpa-An Township, Kayin State, was arrested on 2 March.

According to a subsequent investigation, a vehicle heading for Eindu from Hpa-An crashed into the barrier at the toll gate on 29 February. Saw Pone Pone, the driver stopped the car and exited, then fired a gun into the air. After that, he got into a quarrel with three gatekeepers.

Police from Eindu arrived on the scene and found bullet shells. They later found the suspect with the help of CCTV records. Police raided a hut in Naunglon Village where the suspect was hiding, and arrested him along arms and ammunition. Police also discovered stimulant tablets from his home in another search and arrested his wife.—Tun Tun Htway
Myanmar jade market hit hard by halting of Chinese government loans

THE Myanmar jade market has taken a huge hit as the Chinese government has stopped the provision of loans to Chinese jade traders, it is known from the market.

“The Chinese government has pushed back the handing out of loans to [Chinese] jade buyers. Those big businessmen [Chinese jade buyers] have partnerships with [Chinese] banks. As such, the Myanmar jade market has completely shut up shop,” said U Soe Naing, central executive of the Myanmar Gems and Jewellery Entrepreneurs Association (MGJEA) and speaker of the Gems and Jewellery Entrepreneurs Association of Mandalay.

The Chinese government began the ceasing of its loans to Chinese jade traders back in the last months of 2015, having a fatal impact on commerce within the Myanmar jade market.

“Expenses are so high here as there are few experts. On top of that, the Chinese government stopping loans to [Chinese] jade buyers has completely closed up the market,” said gem dealer U Zaw Zaw.

The domestic jade market used to comprise roughly 700 hundred companies, but those involved in the jade business say that figure has fallen to a mere 50 companies.

UnCut Myanmar jade is the primary form bought by China, with 2,500 tonnes being officially mined every month, according to the MGJEA.—Myitmakah News Agency

River rock depreciates in value by fifty per cent as construction enterprises stopped

THE halting of government funded construction enterprises in Rakhine State has caused the price of river rock to fall in value by as much as fifty per cent.

A hundred cubic feet of rock sourced from the Lay river and delivered to the side of the Yangon – Sittwe highway during 2015 would cost between K65,000-K75,000, while the price in the month of January this year saw the same volume fetch just K50,000, according to Maung U district dredgers.

“The regional government isn’t handing out further contracts to construction contractors as the government budget is in a period of transition. Contractors will only be issued with work once the new government officially begins. The halting of current construction enterprises on roads, bridges and buildings, which use rock from the Lay river has caused the depreciation in its value,” said U San Htway Aung, the owner of a dredging machine on the Lay river.

Local dredgers have made it known that the price of a hundred cubic feet of rock loaded on to a motorboat on the Lay river fetched a meagre K8,000 in February, down from K15,000 for the same quantity a month prior in January.

“We’re having to continue our trade because we don’t want business to come to an end. With worker and engine fuel expenses to consider, we aren’t left with any profit. Construction enterprise could return to life once the next government comes to office,” continued U San Htway Aung.

Since the geological typography of mountain terrain in Rakhine State is composed of soft sedimentary rock and soil, the main types of matured rock used in construction are primarily sourced from the rivers of Myaybon and Kan Htau Gyi townships as well as the edge of the Lay river.—Myitmakah News Agency

Huawei’s HAINA programmes launched in Myanmar

HAINA programme (Huawei Authorized Information and Network Academy) has been launched at Thanlyin Technological University organised by the Ministry of Science and Technology and Huawei, a Chinese smart phone manufacturing company.

The programme is mainly aimed at developing Myanmar’s ICT sector by providing mobile technology trainings and certification courses to ICT students.

HAINA is a not for profit partnership program that authorizes universities and colleges to deliver Huawei Certification courses to their students. The students who graduate from the HAINA program are encouraged to attain Huawei Certification in support of a subsequent career in the ICT industry.

This is part of the ICT development scheme contained in the agreement signed by the Chinese mobile manufacturer and the ministry on 14 November 2014. As part of the programme, Huawei provided both its special curricula and electronic devices to fully support the learners.

This is the 147th time Huawei has conducted the programme in 20 countries and has held over 5,000 students worldwide.—Thon Wirathu
Aftershocks rock Indonesia after massive quake, calls for calm

PADANG, (Indonesia) — Strong aftershocks rocked Indonesia ear- ly yesterday after a massive un- dersa earthquake sparked fears of a region-wide disaster similar to the 2004 Indian Ocean quake and tsunami that killed more than 200,000 people.

There were no reports of deaths or damage to buildings from Wednesday night’s 7.8 mag- nitude quake, which caused panic in the Sumatran island port of Pa- dang as people tried to reach high- er ground when a tsunami warning was issued. No tsunami occurred. Daily life resumed as normal at daybreak in Padang, a city of around 1 million people, and there were few visible signs of damage.

The National Meteorological Agency said there were six after- shocks during the night, but called for calm as they were diminishing in strength.

“We do not believe that there will be an earthquake of greater strength,” it said on its Twitter ac- count. “And so residents are urged to keep calm and not be taken in by rumours.”

Satupro Purwo Nugroho, spokesman for the National Disas- ter Mitigation Agency said there had been no tsunami, casualties or damage along the coast, and people had returned to their homes.

Fears ran high on Wednes- day evening when it was report- ed that the tremor had measured 8.2 and authorities issued evacu- ation alerts on loudspeakers, ra- dio and TV. Patients at hospitals in Padang were evacuated and there were traffic jams as panic- ing residents tried to leave.

However, the US Geologi- cal Survey (USGS) revised the magnitude down to 7.8 and with- in two hours of the quake striking the tsunami warnings were can- celled. USGS said the epicentre was 808 km (502 miles) south- west of Padang.

“The traffic jams were caused by the fact that there are not enough evacuation routes or shelters at this point,” said Zulfit- atno, the head of disaster man- agement agency in Padang, add- ing that shelters could only hold around 200,000 people in a city of nearly 1 million.

“But the situation has im- proved from previous years. Peo- ple have started to understand how to evacuate safely. Indone- sia, especially Aceh on the north- west tip of Sumatra, was badly hit by the Indian Ocean tsunami in 2004. —Reuters

Australia to test debris found two years after Malaysian jet disappeared

SYDNEY — A piece of debris found off the southeast African coast that could be from a miss- ing Malaysia Airlines flight is being sent to Australia for test- ing, officials said yesterday, two years after the plane carrying 239 people disappeared.

A white, meter-long chunk of metal was found off the coast of Mozambique in southeast Af- rica earlier this month by a US- based adventurer who has been carrying out an independent search for Malaysia Airlines flight MH370.

The debris will be tested by officials in Australia, with help from Malaysian authorities and representatives of manufacturer Boeing Co (BA.N).

“It is too early to speculate on the origin of the debris at this stage,” Australian Minister for Infrastructure and Transport Darren Chester told parliament.

However, the piece was found in “a location consistent with drift modeling commis- sioned by the Australian Transport Safety Bureau”, he said.

Chester’s comments added to a fresh sense of optimism af- ter Malaysia’s transport minis- ter, Liow Tiong Lai, said on Wednesday there was a “high possibility” the metal chunk found off Mozambique belonged to a 777 jet, the same type of air- craft as MH370.

Flight MH370 disappeared on 8 March 2014, with 239 pas- sengers and crew on board short- ly after taking off from Kuala Lumpur bound for Beijing.

It is believed to have crashed in the Indian Ocean and has been searched for over a 60,000 sq km (23,000 square miles) area of sea floor has been extended to an- other 60,000 sq km.

A piece of the plane’s wing washed up on the French Indian Ocean island of Reunion, on the other side of Madagascar, in July 2015 but no further trace has been found since. That piece is being held by French authori- ties.

The analysis of the piece found between Mozambique and Madagascar would be the first carried out by Australian-led crash investigators.

The Joint Agency Coordina- tion Centre, set up in Australia to coordinate the search, “will examine the characteristics of the debris to confirm that it comes from an aircraft and to es- tablish its origin”, the agency said in an email. —Reuters

SEOUl — North Korea fired sev- eral short-range projectiles into the sea yesterday, hours after the United Nations’ Security Council vot- ed to impose tough new sanctions on the isolated state and South Ko- rean President Park Geun-hye vowed to “end tyranny” by the North’s leader. The firing escalat- ed tensions on the Korean penin- sula, which have been high since the North’s January nuclear test and February long-range rocket launch, and set the South’s mili- tary on a heightened alert.

South Korea’s Defence Min- istry said it was trying to deter- mine if the projectiles, launched at 10am (0100 GMT) from the North’s east coast, were short- range missiles or artillery fire.

Park has been tough in her re- sponse to the North’s recent ac- tions, moving from her earlier self-described “trustpolitik” ap- proach, and yesterday welcomed the move by the Security Council and repeated her call for the North to change its behaviour.

“We will cooperate with the world to make this world free from our nuclear regime and to ease the tension, and we look forward to a peaceful and stable east Asia,” Park said at a Christian prayer meeting yesterday. Also yesterday, South Korea adopted a long-de- layed security law to set up an an- ti-espionage unit that was passed by parliament late on Wednesday, and another law aimed at improv- ing human rights in North Korea.

Last month, Seoul suspended the operation of a jointly run facto- ry project with the North that had been the rivals’ last remaining ven- ue for regular interaction.

In its latest barrage of insults against the South’s leader, the North’s official media carried a commentary on Wednesday liken- ing Park to an “ugly female bat”, famed to “die in the dreary cave, its body hanging down”. North Korea faces harsh new sanctions for its nuclear weapons programme under the resolution passed unanimously by the Security Council on Wednesday, drafted by the United States and backed by the North’s main ally China. The resolution, which dramatically expands exist- ing sanctions, follows the North’s fourth nuclear test on 6 January and a long-range rocket launch on 7 February, which the United States and South Korea said violated ex- isting Security Council resolu- tions. —Reuters

Call for government unity as Australian PM faces critical budget election

SYDNEY — Australia’s deputy leader called for government unity yesterday as Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull’s polls plummet amid party divisions and ahead of a critical budget and looming election later this year.

Deputy Prime Minister Barnaby Joyce said the honeymoon was over for Turnbull, who became leader in a party room coup in late 2015 and is now under pressure on several policy fronts and facing party instability blamed on the man he toppled, former prime minister Tony Abbott.

“I think we’ve got to all get to get together as one, we’ve got to go to the election unified there will be an election this year,” Joyce told reporters in Canberra.

“Quite obviously honeymoons don’t go on forever,” Joyce said of Turnbull’s leadership.

 Turnbull’s conservative Liberal government was on course to for an easy election victory, but polls have tightened in early 2016 and a tie with opposition Labor is a now possibility according to a Newspoll last week.

Turnbull’s ascension last September was seen as possibly ending an era of political instability in Australia, with five prime ministers in eight years.

But political analysts say the multi-millionaire former tech entrepreneur needs a decisive election victory to quell ongoing disension within his Liberal party.

An election is due by January 2017, but Turnbull who does not control the upper house Senate has hinted he may go to the polls early, within five months, in the hope a new Senate will present an easier path for legislation.

Critical for an election victory is Turnbull’s first budget due in May, but the end of a decades-plus mining boom in resource-rich Australia and plummeting commodity prices has left the government struggling to raise revenue.

In December, Australia forecast its budget deficit would swell to AS$37.4 billion ($27.32 billion) in the year to June.

Government spending has increasingly become an area of division within Turnbull’s Liberal party. He has been forced to rule out changes to several revenue raising policies, including negative gearing, which allows property investors to write off losses against taxable income, and a rise in a consumption tax.

The right wing of Turnbull’s government, with rival Abbott as its de facto leader, maintains that it is a so-called “budget emergency”.

“Abbott seems intent on undermining Turnbull,” said John Uhr, Director, Centre for the Study of Australian Politics, Australian National University.

Rahul Gandhi says Indian govt to take call on release of former PM Rajiv Gandhi’s killers

NEW DELHI — India’s main opposition Congress party’s second-in-command and Nehru-Gandhi scion Rahul Gandhi yesterday said that the country’s government has to decide on whether to release from jail the killers of his father and former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

“The ball is in the central government’s court. The government has to decide,” Gandhi said in the latest of the government of the southern state of Tamil Nadu’s decision to release all seven convicted killers.

The seven convicted killers — V Srinathan, T Suthendarajai, AG Perarival, Jayakumar, Robert Payas, Ravichandra and Nalini — have already spent over 24 years in jail and they have petitioned the High Court to commute their death sentences.

“Tamil Nadu government has recently written to the central government for their release and the Congress party has already said it would oppose the decision to release their former leader’s killers from jail. “They should not be released,” Congress leader Mallikarjun Kharge told the media on the issue of Rajiv Gandhi’s killers’ release.

The seven convicted killers — V Srinathan, T Suthendarajai, AG Perarival, Jayakumar, Robert Payas, Ravichandra and Nalini — have already spent over 24 years in jail and they have petitioned the High Court to commute their death sentences.

“Tamil Nadu government has recently written to the central government for their release and the Congress party has already said it would oppose the decision to release their former leader’s killers from jail. “They should not be released,” Congress leader Mallikarjun Kharge told the media on the issue of Rajiv Gandhi’s killers’ release.
CONSTITUTION is regarded as the life-blood and the foundation of a country, former Chief Justice U Aung Toe said in the foreword for his book “Constitution of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar 2008”, published in August 2009. The chief justice warned that a constitution has the potential to guarantee full democratic rights to individual citizens as well as fetter their freedom.

The origin of this ancient pagoda is closely associated with the visit of the Gotama Buddha to Dhamnavati Rakhine Kingdom over 2500 years ago. The king heard that news, he was filled with a burning desire to pay homage to the Buddha. So, selecting the devotional offering of incense, oil-lamps, pennants, umbrellas, bent bamboo-sticks tied to flag-staffs, pure cold water and pop-corns at a holy place in the golden palace, he, through mind, invited the Buddha respectfully to visit Dhamnavati personally.

While the Buddha, from the Jetavana Monastery, surveyed the world through Sabbanatunanaa (Knowledge of Seeing Earth), he saw, thus: “If I do not visit Dhamnavati, the king will die to no purpose. If, however, the king and the people have a chance to see me, welfare and auspiciousness will accrue to them.” The Sasana (Dispensation) I am to leave behind in this land on my behalf will endure for a long time. Many people from different directions will visit Dhamnavati and make offerings in the Triple Gem.” For these three reasons, the Buddha, accompanied by 500 disciples, took refuge in the sky, in 500 celestial chariots decorated with a tiered roof in the year 1233 Maha Era (554 B.C). He called down and took his stand at the top of the Selagyi Kyauk Taw Hill located to the west of Dhamnavati city and on the eastern bank of the Gacchapanadi River. Standing there, he prophe- sied the places where his bodily relics would be enshrined in the future. In doing so, he prophesied that his skull relic would be enshrined in a pagoda at the top of Selapithi Uritaw Pagoda and that it would become known as Uritta Pagoda (the Buddha’s Skull Relic Pagoda) later.

After the Buddha’s Parinibbana (Demise), King Siridham- masoka, ruler of Pataliputra in Maghikya, built a structure sun Arahats Ven. Mahattissa and Ven. Bukula to offer the bodily relics of the Buddha to Rakhine King Suryasakya. King Suryasakya and his consort Rucita, on the 1st day of the 3rd month of the month of Tazaungmon, in the year 222 Sasan Era, built at the top of Selapithi Hil a pagoda which had a bull’s height (six cubits) and 20 fathoms in circumference at the base.

Then, while Rakhine King Pharaon Ma on his march to the west, was staying the night near the mouth of Kim Creek, he saw mysteriously brill- iant rays radiating and moving to and fro between Selapithi Hill and Salamaya Hill. Deeply impressed with this miracle, he vowed that if he won a victory during the march to the west, he would reconstruct and renovate the pagoda and serve as the do- nor. Therefore, when he returned victorious, he in the year 941 Rakhine Era, built at the top of Selapithi Pagoda a pagoda entirely of brown rock which had the height of 155 feet (100 cubits) and was 401 feet (80 fathoms) in circumference and the base for twelve years. The construction work of the pagoda was complet- ed in the year 953 Rakhine Era (1591 A.D.)

In this pagoda were en- shrined the Buddha’s skull relic, slabs on which the Tipitakas were inscribed, relics of Chief Disciples (Aggassavakas), Great Disciples (Mahasavakas) and Or- dinary Disciples (Pakatisavakas) and a ruby worth a country held dear as her own off-spring by consort Soe-Me Kyi. Then, the King Min Phalaung vowed thus: “If I would definitely become the Buddha, let holy water come out from underneath the earth. In- stantly did the holy water roll out. Until now, the monks and lay people who come to this pagoda on pilgrimage can drink the holy water from this Adhit- thana well (the well resulted in by the resolution of King Min Phalaung).

Rakhine kings of successive periods had restored and renovat- ed this pagoda from generation to generation. Currently, the re- sponsible personnel from the State, Buddhist monks and lay people continue the renovation work, lavishing generous dona- tions. The current trustee is con- ducting such works as gushing golden leaves to the pagoda from the top to the bottom, reconstruc- ting prayer-halls on the ter- races, surrounding stupas, paving the entire terrace with Nepukhan limestone slabs and constructing and maintaining the Uritmangala Bridge Linking the Urittaw Pagoda with Ponnaygunw Town- ship on the self-reliant bass.

The chief justice warned that a constitution has the potential to guarantee full democratic rights to individual citizens as well as fetter their freedom. He also encouraged public involvement in the process of constitutional amendments by elected representatives in the parliament, stressing that nobody has a divine right to exclude the public’s will, suggestions or submissions from the constitution. The writing of the constitution should maintain its focus on the needs and interests of all communities, he wrote in his foreword, calling on the entire people to take bold steps in deciding the destiny of the nation.

Solo event aims to promote public interest in transparent watercolour

A SOLO art exhibition of Chindwin Yaykyi artist Aung Maung will run from 13 to 17 March at the Mandalay Hill Art Gallery, featuring 50 original artworks created by the artist after his last solo show in Mandalay last March.

This is will be the 14th solo exhibition for the Monywa-based artist, who entered the art world in 1973.

The subject matter of his work includes natural landscapes and the lifestyles of people living in Myanmar’s central dry zone, including Monywa, Mandalay and Bagan.

In cooperation with around a dozen other members of the Chindwin Yaykyi Transparent Watercolour Group, Aung Maung is known for his depictions of Buddhist temples, including Moehnyin Thanbokeday, Bawditahtaung and Phowintaung, natural landscapes and cultures and customs of rural communities.

The group produces outdoor paintings every Sunday.—Myo Win Tun

Vietnamese owned Anawyahta Cruise to sail along Ayeyawady, Chindwin rivers

ANAWYAHTA Cruise owned by Vietnam-based Heritage Line Co will sail along Ayeyawady River and Chindwin River, the largest tributary of Ayeyawady, visiting culturally rich destinations that reflect the country’s traditions customs and lifestyles of rural people along those rivers.

The cruise will operate its first-ever Yangon-Bagan trip on March 4.

There are numerous culture-rich zones along Ayeyawady and Chindwin rivers that may attract greater interest from international tourists. That is the main reason for the company making investment in the country’s tourism industry, said Maarten Perdok, managing director of Heritage Line Co.

Since 2014, the four-storey cruise named “Anawyahta” has been built in Vietnam. It is 213 feet long and has 23 rooms which can allow up to 46 passengers per trip. The cruise arrived Myanmar in last July in order to expand its luxury cruise service business within the country, planning to operate Yangon-Bagan-Yangon trip, Yangon-Mandalay-Yangon trip, Bagan-Mandalay-Bagan, Mandalay-Homalin-Bagan and Mandalay-Katha trips.

Blood donors receive free Hepatitis B vaccinations

MORE than 1,000 blood donors in Thaton Township, Mon State, recently joined the hepatitis B immunisation programme organised by Thaton-based Ahmienae Myitta Blood and Oxygen Services Organisation.

The philanthropic organisation injected around 1,200 people with hepatitis B vaccines with the aim of protecting them from the infectious diseases as well as promoting blood donations in the region.

Hepatitis B is the most common causes of liver disease in the world. One in 12 people are infected with viral hepatitis, which kills nearly 4,000 people each day worldwide.

Infection with the Hepatitis B virus can lead to chronic liver infections that can be transmitted through contact with the blood or bodily fluids of an infected person.—Thet Oo

YUDE seeks to join OU6

A PROFESSOR from the Yangon University of Distance Education (YUDE) read out a paper at the university yesterday, sharing her experiences on making efforts for the university to join the Five Open Universities (OUS) in five ASEAN nations.

Professor Dr Thazin Lwin of the YUDE, who participated in the meeting of the OUS in Indonesia recently, clarified her achievements at the meeting, including signing agreements for teaching and research cooperation between the YUDE and the OUS, eyeing to join the group, making it the OUS. The OUS is comprises the Universitas Terbuka (UT) in Indonesia, the Philippines Open University (UPOU), Sukhothai University (UPOU) in Thailand, the Open University of Malaysia and Hanoi Open University in Vietnam.

“Working together with the OUS will promote cooperation in teaching and research among distance universities in ASEAN countries and will assist in promoting the distance education system in Myanmar,” Prof Dr Thazin Lwin said.—Saw Thein Win

US gives immunity to State Department staffer who set up Clinton email server

WASHINGTON — The US Justice Department has given immunity to a State Department employee who helped set up and manage the private email server Hillary Clinton used for her work as secretary of state, the Washington Post reported on Wednesday.

A senior US law enforcement official said the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) had secured the cooperation of Bryan Pagliano, who worked on Clinton’s 2008 presidential campaign before joining the State Department and setting up the server in her New York home in 2009, the newspaper reported.

The Post described the investigation as a criminal inquiry, a label Clinton and her staff have resisted as they seek to reassure voters that the frontrunner to become the Democratic Party’s nominee in November’s presidential election is not in legal jeopardy.

Clinton has said she did nothing wrong and that she believes the US government will vindicate her. She has also apologised for what she said was poor judgement.

In 2014, Clinton returned about 30,000 emails to the State Department, but said she “chose not to keep” thousands of others she staff deemed not to be work-related. Her staff have acknowledged that other work emails were not handed over, without explaining why.

More than 2,000 of Clinton’s work emails contain classified information that could harm national security if exposed, according to the State Department, including 22 classified as ‘top secret’, the highest level. The government forbids sending or storing classified information through unsecured, non-government channels, and has prosecuted people for breaches. Brian Fallon, a Clinton spokesman, said in a statement that Clinton’s campaign was “pleased” that Pagliano was cooperating.

The Justice Department and FBI declined to comment on whether Pagliano had been granted immunity, and his lawyer did not respond to questions.

Last month, a federal judge overseeing a civil lawsuit against the State Department ruled that Clinton officials and aides to Clinton could be questioned under oath about whether her use of a private email system was an effort to skirt open records laws.

The FBI is likely to ask Clinton and her aides in coming months how the server was set up and whether they knew they were sending classified information in emails, the Post reported.

Pagliano has declined to testify to lawmakers, citing a constitutional right against self-incrimination. Republicans have called for Clinton’s prosecution. “This terrible error in judgement coupled with Clinton’s arrogant and dishonest claims shows she can’t be trusted with the presidency,” Reince Priebus, the Republican National Committee’s chairman, said in a statement.

The new EU money, to be used by 2018, is looking for flows to be “in the realm of three digits, not four” per nation for those arriving in Europe, a senior official said.

If approved, the EU’s 2015 refugee plan that Germany, the principal destination, resists as it wants Ankara to ensure that daily movements from Turkey will be “regulated in the realm of three digits, not four” per day.

The Commission’s proposal, if approved, will channel 300 million euros ($325 million) this year from its 155 billion euro annual budget to the new emergency assistance scheme and 200 million euros both next year and in 2018.

Officials stress that the program will not divert funds from the EU’s 1.1 billion euro annual budget allocated to helping the world’s poorest. Relieving the suffering of refugees closer to their homes is a key part of an EU strategy to deter people from making dangerous journeys to Europe, they say. More than 400 people have died or gone missing in the Mediterranean this year as they tried to reach Europe, most of them on the short but perilous crossing from Turkey to Greece.

Turkey is at the heart of the EU’s efforts to slow the influx of refugees and migrants and the bloc wants Ankara to ensure that daily arrivals fall below 1,000 from 2,000-3,000 at present.

Two officials told Reuters that Germany, the principal destination for those arriving in Europe, is looking for flows to be “in the realm of three digits, not four” per day. Should that happen, Berlin would start taking refugees directly from Turkey for resettlement — an attempt to promote legal migration rather than continuing the chaotic influx of 2015.

The new EU money, to be spent in conjunction with the United Nations and charities working in Greece and other EU states, will help to fund shelter, medical aid and other basic services.

If Britain leaves EU, France will let migrants go to Britain

EDINBURGH — If Britain votes to leave the European Union in a June referendum, France will allow migrants to move to Britain by ending border controls and roll out a red carpet for bankers fleeing London, French Economy Minister Emmanuel Macron said.

“The day this relationship unravels, migrants will no longer be in Calais and the financial passport would work less well,” Macron told the Financial Times ahead of an Anglo-French security summit.

Macron added that obstacles to bilateral trade could also be created, while an agreement which allows Britain to carry out border controls to withhold unwanted migrants on the French side of the Channel could also dissolve.

Dozens died, missing in Angolan flash-flood

LUANDA — At least 24 people, many of them children, died and dozens were missing in Angola after a flash-flood swept through a market in the southern city of Lubango, state media said yesterday.

The Angop news agency said flood-waters from the Capitao river, swollen by nearly 24 hours of torrential rain in the area, washed through the market, where many young Angolans congregated to wash cars and bicycles.

More than 30 people were believed to be missing, Angop said.

As with much of southern Africa, southern Angola has been suffering one of its worst droughts in memory caused by a strong El Niño weather pattern in the Pacific Ocean.

Armed women attack police headquarters in Istanbul

ISTANBUL — Two armed women attacked a riot police headquarters in Istanbul yesterday with hand grenades, Turkish media reported.

According to Haberturk daily, the attackers threw hand grenades at police officers who were patrolling outside the headquarters in the district of Bayrampasa.

One attacker was reportedly wounded, the Haberturk said, adding the police have chased them into a building.

UN official says at least 50,000 died in South Sudan war

UNITED NATIONS — At least 50,000 people have been killed in South Sudan’s two-year civil war, a senior United Nations official said on Wednesday, a five-fold increase in the death toll given by humanitarian agencies in the early months of the conflict.

A political dispute between President Salva Kiir and his former deputy, Riek Machar, sparked the war in December 2013, which has reopened ethnic fault lines between Kiir’s Dinka and Machar’s Nuer people.

“Fifty thousand killed, maybe more, 2.2 million refugees and displaced, famine coming and looming in just a few months,” the senior official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, told a small group of reporters.

He added that he saw little prospect of implementing an August peace deal.

49 Indian fishermen released by Iran reach home

NEW DELHI — Some 49 Indian fishermen released by Iran reached this country yesterday, a senior official said.

“The fishermen, arrested by the Iranian Coast Guard last year for venturing into the Islamic Republic’s territorial waters, were released, following intervention of the Indian government,” he said, on condition of anonymity.

He added: “The 44 fishermen reached the southern state of Tamil Nadu’s capital Chennai in the morning and were greeted by their family.”

One of the released fishermen thanked both the central government and state government of Tamil Nadu for their efforts.

“We were arrested and kept in jail for months. Now that we have been released, we feel very happy about this. We thank both the central and the state governments for their efforts to get us out,” Jegan Joseph told the media.

News in Brief
Syrian opposition casts doubt on UN peace talk plan

BEIRUT — Syrian rebels said on Wednesday they were under fierce government attack near the Turkish border despite a cessation of hostilities agreement and a representative from their back-room peace talks would go ahead on 9 March as planned. The agreement drawn up by the United States and Russia came into effect on Saturday and has slowed but not entirely stopped a conflict that has been going on for almost five years. Both the government and rebels have accused each other of violations. The agreement does not include Islamic State or al Qaeda’s Nusra Front, which is widely deployed in opposition areas. The United Nations said on Tuesday a new attempt at peace talks would begin on 9 March in Geneva, urging warring sides to ensure the cessation agreement take hold to allow them to come to the table. But opposition official George Sabra said the date for a resumption of talks remained “hypothetical” as long as the truce did not fulfill humanitarian demands including a release of detainees held by the government. “What is the value of a truce if its oversights — meaning America and Russia — do not push all sides to abide by it?” Sabra told Arabic news channel Arabiya al-Hadhath on Wednesday. The White House said it had seen a reduction in air strikes against the opposition and civilians in Syria in recent days but was concerned by some reported tank and artillery attacks. Washington was also aware of reports of possible chemical weapons use by the Syrian government, the State Department said, adding that it could not confirm them but that they were being investigated. Israel said on Tuesday Syrian forces had been dropping chlorine barrels on civilians there for several days. There was no immediate comment from Damascus, which has denied breaching the terms of the truce. The opposition is pressing for full humanitarian access to rebel-held areas and for detainees to be released — terms set out in a UN Security Council resolution passed in December. Opposition officials say an increase in aid access has fallen short of what is required. A senior US official said Washington was working with Moscow to improve access to besieged areas and the World Health Organisation said it had delivered medical supplies to the besieged town of Moadamiya on Wednesday, after reporting some medicines had been removed from a previous aid delivery.

Nanny who beheaded Russian child says it was revenge for Putin’s Syria strikes

MOSCOW — A woman suspected of beheading a child in her care began by disemboweling the severed head outside a Moscow metro station has said she acted to avenge Muslims killed in the Kremlin’s campaign of air strikes in Syria.

In video footage posted online yesterday and circulated by several prominent bloggers, the woman, 38-year-old Gulchehra Bobokulova of Muslim-majority Uzbekistan, gave her first detailed explanation of an incident which state TV channels chose not to report.

“I took revenge against those who spilled blood,” Bobokulova told someone asking her questions on camera. Putin spilled blood, planes carried out bombings. Why are Muslims being killed? They also want to live.” It was not clear when the video was filmed, but Bobokulova was wearing the same clothes as a court appearance on Wednesday.

The Kremlin launched its campaign of air strikes in Syria on 30 September in support of President Bashar al-Assad, an intervention that altered the course of the conflict there.

Gloom deepens over Ukraine peace deal before Paris meeting

BERLIN/PARIS — For months, as progress in implementing the Minsk peace deal for eastern Ukraine stalled, its architects, Germany and France, held out hope that with time and carefully calibrated pressure on Kiev and Moscow, the agreement could be pushed back on track.

But since a joint visit by the German and French foreign ministers to Ukraine’s capital last week, a gloomier view has taken hold: that political dysfunction in Kiev has all but doomed the chances of it delivering on its own commitments under the peace agreement.

Against that backdrop and a rise in ceasefire violations in the east, where Ukrainian government forces are faced off against pro-Russian rebels, ministers from Germany, France, Russia and Ukraine meet in Paris yesterday to discuss Minsk.

One of the meeting’s main goals is to tackle what is now seen in many European capitals as the biggest hurdle to the peace deal — Kiev’s failure to push through an election law for the Donbass region of eastern Ukraine that would set the stage for a vote there by mid-year.

After barely surviving a no-confidence motion last month, Prime Minister Arseny Yatsenyuk is seen as too weak to deliver. And yet there are few viable alternatives to Yatsenyuk.

“Among some point you have to ask yourself, how can it go on like this?“ a senior German official said of Minsk, which was hammered out a year ago in marathon talks in the Belarus capital between Germany’s Angela Merkel, France’s Francois Hollande, Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko and Russian President Vladimir Putin.

“The election law was always going to be a tough sell domestically. There is little appetite in Ukraine to give Donbass more autonomy and hold elections there while its soldiers are being killed every week.”

“It’s all extremely fragile,” a senior French official added, stressing the importance of the Paris meeting yesterday.

For now, officials say, the goal is to keep Minsk on life support even if it looks dead.

Were they to openly admit failure, a second German official said, violence could spiral, with pro-Russian separatists running amok and renewing their push for Mariupol, a strategic port city in the east that, if captured by the rebels, could help them carve out a land corridor to Russia-annexed Crimea. “It’s a chaotic picture,” the second German official acknowledged. “From a sequencing point of view you can’t get around the fact that the election law needs to be passed. Kiev points to the security situation in the east as an excuse but we have told them it can’t be. They need to deliver.”

The other big concern is a breakdown of the European Union’s consensus on sanctions imposed on Russia over the Ukraine crisis amid an increasingly poisonous atmosphere in the bloc, aggravated by divisions over the refugee crisis. The commander of US troops in Europe, Air Force General Philip Breedlove, pointed a finger at Russia when he said on Tuesday violence in eastern Ukraine had increased significantly, with 71 attacks in 24 hours and 450 attacks over the past week.

“I believe that Russia will dial up and down the pressure along the line of contact to keep Kiev under pressure to meet the conditions of the Minsk agreements first,” he said. Russia says it is not backing the rebels militarily while the rebels themselves blame Kiev for the violations. The Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe says neither side has pulled heavy weapons back as required. — Reuters
US plans naval exercises with India and Japan in Philippine Sea

NEW DELHI — India, the United States and Japan will hold naval exercises in waters off the northern Philippines near the South China Sea this year, the US military said on Wednesday, a move likely to further raise tensions with China.

The announcement comes a day after the United States warned China against militarisation of the South China Sea, where Beijing is locked in a territorial dispute with several countries, saying there would be consequences.

Last year, India and the United States expanded their annual naval drills in the Bay of Bengal to include Japan after a gap of eight years, in a move seen as a response to China’s growing assertiveness in the region.

Admiral Harry B. Harris, head of the US Pacific Command, said the naval exercise will be held in the northern Philippine Sea and that Japan will take part.

Freedom of the seas was a fundamental right of all nations, he told a security conference in New Delhi, adding some thinly veiled criticism of Beijing.

“While some countries seek to bully smaller nations through intimidation and coercion, I note with admiration India’s example of peaceful resolution of disputes with your neighbours in the waters of the Indian Ocean,” he said.

Asked about the drills, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Hong Lei said: “We hope and Japan in Philippine Sea

UNITED NATIONS — The United Nations is considering new measures to crack down on sexual abuse by peacekeepers, including local prosecutions and registering personal details on blue helmets to make it easier to identify perpetrators, a UN official said on Wednesday.

Over the past year the world body has been hit with numerous allegations of peacekeeper abuse, above all in the Central African Republic (CAR).

In December an independent review panel accused the United Nations and its agencies of grossly mishandling allegations of child sexual abuse by foreign troops in CAR in 2013 and 2014.

One of the problems, human rights groups say, is that it is up to UN troop-contributing countries to prosecute their soldiers accused of abuse. When such prosecutions happen, the groups say, they often take place quietly and it is difficult to follow up on the results and punishments, if any.

Speaking to a small group of reporters, a senior UN official said the United Nations wanted to tackle that problem.

One idea is that “whenever there is a case that is established, that there be a court-martial that is in theatre, not back home in a sort of confidential context … (but) publicly in the country where the actions were perpetrated,” said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

He added: “We might think about DNA registering of peacekeepers when they come to a mission.”

He declined to provide details and noted that both ideas were only at early stages as the United Nations worked to improve the performance of blue helmets in the field.

US launches probe of alleged civil rights violations at Boston school

BOSTON — Federal prosecutors in Massachusetts yesterday launched a civil rights investigation into the elite Boston Latin School in the city to resign over her handling of the matter.

The oldest US high school has been under a harsh spotlight for the past few weeks after black students reported that school officials failed to investigate alleged instances of racial insults, including one case in which a student threatened tolynch a black classmate.

Eight civil rights organisations including the American Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts and the Boston branch of the NAACP last week called on US Attorney Carmen Ortiz to open a probe into the alleged instances of racism.

“We will conduct a thorough investigation into the recent complaints about racism at BLS and will go where the facts lead us,” Ortiz said yesterday.

The probe comes at a time of increased racial tensions across the United States. A series of high-profile police killings of black men in Baltimore, New York and Ferguson, Missouri, over the past two years have sparked months of peaceful protests punctuated with days of violence, and gave rise to the “Black Lives Matter” movement.

The school’s headmaster, Lynne Mooney Teta, has rebuffed calls by some black leaders in the city to resign over her handling of the matter.

Mooney Teta vowed to improve the racial climate at the school, which has 2,439 students in grades seven through 12, in an open letter to students and parents in January.

“If we are failing short for some of our students, then we are failing short for all of our students,” she wrote. “There is work to be done.” Boston Latin was founded in 1635, a year before Harvard University in nearby Cambridge, Massachusetts, and well over a century before the United States broke away from Great Britain.

Mexican drug lord Guzman seeks to speed up extradition to US

MEXICO CITY — Captive Mexican drug lord Joaquin “El Chapo” Guzman is attempting to accelerate his extradition to the United States in the hope that he will be treated better in prison there, his lawyers said on Wednesday.

The world’s most notorious drug kingpin undertook legal steps to block his extradition, but his lawyers said he was so fed up with his treatment in Mexico that he was looking to move.

“He asked me to do whatever we could to put to a stop the situation he’s in, ‘I just want to let me sleep,’” he kept saying and told me ‘try to get the quickest extradition possible for me, try and see about speaking to the US government,’” one of the lawyers, Jose Refugio Rodriguez, told local radio.

Guzman has also complained about the amount of communication he is allowed with his family, being excessively cooled up in his cell, and that his cell is too cold, the lawyers said.

A second lawyer, Juan Pablo Badillo, told Reuters by telephone that the process would still take time.

“Since I was able to speak to (Guzman) from 15 February, he said he would analyse how we could start this process. It would definitely need to be subject to an agreement with the United States,” Badillo said.

Rights group decry ‘crisis of violence and impunity’ in Mexico

MEXICO CITY — Too many crimes, including torture, disappearances and killings, go uninvestigated in Mexico, which is suffering a “serious crisis of violence and impunity,” the Inter-American Human Rights Commission (IACHR) said on Wednesday.

In a new report, the IACHR highlighted repeated failures to get to the bottom of some 27,000 disappearances registered in Mexico as of 2015, as well as abuses of power by police and the armed forces in the fight against the country’s drug gangs.

The report, which also acknowledged that Mexico has made progress on judicial reforms, followed a government announcement this week about the deaths of five young Mexicans targeted by suspected gang henchmen. Their remains were found under a car in the eastern state of Veracruz.

The Mexican government criticised the IACHR report, arguing it did not reflect “the general situation” in the country.

IACHR experts last year condemned the government’s account of the 2014 disappearance of 43 trainee teachers in the southwestern city of Iguala, a crime that sparked outrage and battered President Enrique Pena Nieto’s reputation.

Pena Nieto has pledged to tackle longstanding failings of the Mexican justice system, but an IACHR report said “the state’s response is still insufficient to deal with this serious crisis of violence and impunity.”

“Unfortunately, there’s a gap between what the law says and the reality. Somebody needs to take responsibility for changing the practices,” said IACHR commissioner James Cavallaro, adding the commission was shocked by the impunity it found in Mexico.

“It’s like there was no interest in looking for the perpetrators and solving the crimes,” he said.

In a statement, the government denied there was a “human rights crisis” in Mexico. It said the report was based on premises and assessments the administration did not agree with.—Reuters

Italian mafia earnings from drugs rival Fiat with cars

ROME — Italian mobsters make as much money trafficking narcotics in Italy as Fiat does selling cars, but without having to pay taxes, the anti-mafia prosecutor’s office said on Wednesday.

Citing estimates by the United Nations Office on Narcotics and Crime, anti-mafia prosecutors said that the narcotics trade earns more than 32 billion euros ($34.70 billion) annually for organised crime, which controls Italy’s drug trade.

“It’s as if the main national carmaker together with its suppliers, service providers and dealerships paid all their salaries and suppliers, and produced everything completely off the books and without any regulation, and then sold and re-invested everything without paying any taxes,” the annual report by the anti-mafia prosecutor’s office said.

“The small difference is that the profit margin for the drug traffickers is at least 10 times higher than any industrial manufacturer.”

It said the Calabrian mafia, known as the ‘Ndrangheta, has also set itself up as Europe’s top supplier of South American cocaine.

Thanks to “privileged ties with South American criminal groups that ‘recognise the full trustworthiness of the Calabrian clans’”, the ‘Ndrangheta has also set itself up as the main supplier of cocaine to other mafia groups in Italy, it said.

From July 2014 to June 2015, Italy seized almost 4 tonnes of cocaine, a decrease of more than 8 per cent from the previous period. In the port of Gioia Tauro in Calabria, 3 tonnes of cocaine have been seized by police in the past three years.

Bob Dylan sells treasure trove of archive material

LOS ANGELES — Bob Dylan has sold his personal archive of notes, draft lyrics, poems, artwork and photographs to the University of Tulsa, where they will be made available to scholars and curated for public exhibitions, the school said on Wednesday.

The 6,000 item collection spans nearly the entire length of Dylan’s 55 year-long career, and many have never been seen before. The collection was acquired by the George Kaiser Foundation and the University of Tulsa in Oklahoma. The collection also includes master recording tapes of Dylan’s entire music catalog, along with hundreds of hours of film video. The Foundation and the university did not say how much the Bob Dylan Archive cost, but the New York Times, which was given an exclusive preview, said it was sold for $15 million to $20 million.

Tulsa is also the home of a museum dedicated to folk singer Woody Guthrie, one of Dylan’s early influences.

“I’m glad that my archives, which have been collected all these years, have finally found a home and are to be included with the works of Woody Guthrie... To me, it makes a lot of sense and it’s a great honor,” Dylan said in a statement. Despite being regarded as “the voice of a generation” for his influential songs of the 1960s and 1970s, Dylan, now 74, has mostly kept his items out of the public eye, resulting in high prices when they occasionally come up for auction.

A handwritten copy of the song “Like a Rolling Stone” sold for a record $2 million at a New York auction in 2014, while the electric guitar he played at 1965 Newport Folk Festival sold for nearly $1 million in 2013. The archives handed over to the University of Tulsa include two notebooks with lyrics from the 1964 song “Blood on the Tracks,” and Dylan’s handwritten lyrics to his 1964 song “Chimes of Freedom” scrawled on hotel notepaper dotted with cigarette burns. There is also correspondence between Dylan and the late beat poet Allen Ginsberg. —Reuters

Few Hollywood opportunities for women of colour: Geena

LONDON — Actress Geena Davis says Hollywood is doing a bad job with women and a “horrible” job with women of colour in terms of opportunities.

Following the controversy surrounding the lack of diversity in the nominations at this year’s Academy Awards, the 60-year-old actress has called out the film industry in America for not creating worthwhile roles for non-white actresses, reported The Guardian.

“There are so few opportunities for women of colour that they barely register in the research into the numbers of women in film and TV. We are doing a bad job with women and a horrible job with women of colour,” she said. “There are female actors nominated for the Oscars because we divide by gender — if it were one category for best performance, we would have a really hard time. But the Oscars are emblematic of a deep-seated problem — really, it’s about the product being put out by Hollywood. Most profoundly, it’s what is made that needs to change. People are unaware of the extent of their bias — it’s unconscious.” —PTI

Adele visits terminally-ill fan in Belfast

LOS ANGELES — Oscar-winning singer Adele made a surprise visit to her 12-year-old terminally-ill fan’s home in Belfast, Northern Ireland.

The “Hello” hitmaker took time out to drop by Rebecca Gibney’s house before her second concert in Belfast, reported Aceshowbiz.

Following online campaigns by Rebecca’s mother, the singer made a visit to young girl’s home and sat by her bed with the family.

The star offered the family tickets to her second show on Tuesday at the Short Strand area.

Before Adele’s first show, Rebecca’s mom, Tracy, launched a petition on Change. Org to get the “Hello” hitmaker to meet her “very sick daughter who’s cerebral palsy, epilepsy, can’t walk or talk and is tube fed,” she recently became bed bound.” “She listens to Adele from she gets up in the morning until her bed time, all I am asking for is for Adele to FaceTime we Rebecca or send her a video message, it would be her dream come true, please please help for my beautiful sick little daughter,” Tracy wrote. She also tweeted, “I am going to see Adele tomorrow night can anybody help me to get to meet her back stage and tell her all about wee Rebecca thanks” and several other similar pleas along with pictures of her daughter.

A c c o r d i n g to Tracy, she hadn’t got any reply from Adele’s team so she was shocked to find the star show up on her doorstep.

“It happened!!! Thank you so much for looking and sharing everyone, I’m overwhelmed and couldn’t be any happier for my baby, still in shock! Adele is just amazing.” she wrote on Facebook. —PTI

Justin Bieber celebrated birthday in ice cave

LONDON — Pop star Justin Bieber celebrated his 22nd birthday in an ice cave with a few friends.

The “Love Yourself” singer enjoyed acting like “a little kid” while on a snowy break with friends to a mystery location, which he flew out to via private jet, reported Female First.

The musician took to Instagram to post a video of him tobogganing down a snowy slope, which he titled, “This is a little kid smile.” The “Sorry” hitmaker posted numerous other uncaptioned pictures of his birthday outing on the social media site — which received over one million likes — including one showing his five friends sipping beers at the frozen grotto. —PTI

I don’t use computers: Britney Spears

LONDON — Pop star Britney Spears barely uses her computer because she says modern technology is not her thing.

The 34-year-old pop star wants little to do with machines despite many people are addicted to their smartphones and cannot live without email, reported Contactmusic.

“Honestly, I still don’t use my computer,” she said, noting her sons Sean, 10, and Jayden, nine, are more adept with technology than she is.

“My kids use the computer more than I do! I understand that a lot of people are into it, and I have days where I write and stuff, but it’s really not for me. It’s not my thing.” Spears is currently working on her ninth studio album after releasing her last record, Britney Jean, in 2013.—PTI

Will Smith, Joel Edgerton to star in thriller ‘Bright’

LOS ANGELES — Actors Will Smith and Joel Edgerton are set to star in a cop thriller “Bright”, which will be directed by David Ayer.

The script is written by Max Landis, said The Hollywood Reporter.

Smith, 47, and Ayer recently teamed on Warner Bros’ “Suicide Squad” and “Bright” will have to wait until shooting wraps on David Frankel’s “Collateral Beauty”, which Smith toplines.

Edgerton, 41, is familiar with cop narratives, having recently co-starred as a corrupt FBI agent in “Black Mass”.—PTI

NEW YORK — A New York judge on Wednesday urged Madonna and her ex-husband Guy Ritchie to work together to resolve a custody dispute over their 15-year-old son, Rocco, who has refused to return to his mother’s New York home.

Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Deborah Kaplan set a 1 June date for Madonna and Ritchie to come back to court following a conference call with attorneys for all three parties. Kaplan said she wanted to encourage the parents, along with their lawyers, to resolve the matter in the best interests of their son. She said she may wish to hear from the youngster, Sigal said by conference call.

Rocco, who has been living in London with his film director father. In December, the teen ignored a court order to fly back to New York to reside with his mother. The pop star and Ritchie divorced in 2008 and agreed Rocco would live with the “Material Girl” singer.

None of the trio appeared in person on Wednesday, Attorney Ellen Segal, representing Rocco, told the judge the teen was enjoying school in London but was having “a very difficult time.”

“Having this order over his head has been very stressful for him,” Sigal said by conference call.

No details were given on why Rocco wished to live with his father. According to recent celebrity media reports, Madonna’s strict parenting style is thought to be at the heart of the dispute. The singer, 57, is currently on the Asian leg of her “Rebel Heart” world tour, with her next show set for New Zealand on 5 March. Rocco had joined her for the initial stages of the tour, working backstage. He also went on tour with her in 2012. —Reuters

Former British chief rabbi wins $1.5 million Templeton Prize

Sacks, 67, was ahead of his time with his central message of respect for all faiths and his argument that only by recognising the values of each of them could violence and terrorism be countered.

The prize, awarded to an individual who has made “exceptional contributions to affirming life’s spiritual dimension”, is one of the world’s richest. Sacks said he was “absolutely knocked sideways” to have won.

“It just felt very thrilling and so my wife and I did a little dance together,” he told Reuters Television in an interview earlier this week. “Not something we do that often, but it was lovely.” As Chief Rabbi of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth, Sacks was the leading spokesman for British Jews from 1991 until 2013, leading what many considered to be the revitalisation of Britain’s Jewish community.

The Templeton Foundation praised his work tackling the spread of religious violence which he argued had been sparked by Western secularisation that failed to address young people’s search for meaning, belonging and identity. “Today the most powerful religious voices are coming from the extremes and I think that is terribly dangerous. They are speaking to young people who feel they have really into murderers and we can’t sit still and just let that happen,” Sacks told Reuters.

“Think religious leaders have to give the same power and passion to the forces of reconciliation, compassion, forgiveness, love, friendship across the boundaries between faiths. ‘We really need to connect young people to the sources of positive idealism and I am afraid those voices have tended to be screened out by what I see as quite a self-indulgent secular culture of the west right now.’” —Reuters

Leicester in dreamland as Spurs, Arsenal, City lose

LONDON — Leicester City's Premier League title dream moved closer to reality after a Wednesday wipe-out brought defeat for their nearest challengers Tottenham Hotspur, Arsenal and Manchester City.

Tottenham were primed to take advantage of Leicester's 2-0 home draw with West Bromwich Albion on Tuesday and would have gone top on goal difference with victory at West Ham United but they went down 1-0 to end a six-match winning run.

Michail Antonio's early headed goal proved decisive at Upton Park and if Leicester fans thought that was good their night got even better as third-placed Arsenal slumped 2-1 at home to Swansea City and fourth-placed City were thrashed 3-0 at Liverpool, three days after beating them in the League Cup final.

With 10 matches remaining, Leicester have 57 points, Tottenham 54, Arsenal 51 and City, who have a game in hand, 47 ahead of Manchester United only on goal difference after Juan Mata's late strike earned them a 1-0 win over Watford.

West Ham, on 46 points, are also in the mix for Champions League qualification after putting the brakes on Tottenham's title charge in a typically tense derby in east London. Antonio struck the game's only goal in the seventh minute, heading in Dimitri Payet's corner, and West Ham could have been further ahead before Tottenham improved in the second half. Harry Kane wasted Tottenham's best chance, scuffing a close-range rebound after West Ham keeper Adrian saved a low 25-metre drive from Toby Alderweireld.

“We need to be positive and it is important to be ready for Saturday,” Tottenham manager Mauricio Pochettino, whose side host Arsenal on Saturday, told the BBC: “When you lose you can blame it on the players being tired or whatever, the reality is that it was just a bad night.”

Arsenal were hoping to bounce back from Sunday's defeat at Manchester United and Joel Campbell firing them ahead but goals from Wayne Routledge and Ashley Williams gave Swansea three vital points in their bid to move away from trouble.

Manager Arsene Wenger said his side were unlucky but Arsenal's fans made their feelings clear, booing the side off after a dismal second-half display.

“They had two shots on target and scored two goals,” said Wenger, who added that keeper Petr Cech had picked up an injury with five minutes left and had to be replaced by Polish stopper Wojciech Szczesny.

“Routledge was a substitute, we were below par, we were not good enough,” said Wenger. “We missed the chances we created and we have to work hard to improve.”

With City's league form disintegrating, Louis van Gaal's United side are now back in the frame for a top-four spot, even if they were poor against Watford before Mata’s winner. The Spaniard’s sublime 83rd-minute free kick was harsh on Watford who wasted a flurry of chances at Old Trafford. At the other end of the table, Newcastle United's plummet worsened as a 1-0 defeat at Stoke City left them second from bottom with 24 points, the same total as Norwich City and Sunderland who are directly above them.— Reuters

Late Mata strike lifts toothless Man United

LONDON — A late free kick by midfielder Juan Mata earned Manchester United a laboured 1-0 home win over Watford after the visitors missed a flurry of chances in their Premier League clash on Wednesday.

The 27-year-old Spaniard curled a superb shot from 25 metres into the top right corner in the 83rd minute, much to the relief of his manager Louis van Gaal, whose decision to play two strikers almost backfired.

“It was a good night for us but we have to keep going,” Mata told reporters.

“We didn’t feel comfortable, but in the end we won and I am happy I scored a good goal. “We are Manchester United, we don’t give up and we have to keep going until the end.”

The result put fifth-placed United level on points with cross-town rivals City, who are fourth and have a game in hand after losing 3-0 at Liverpool.

An array of forwards in the starting line-up left United’s central midfielders Morgan Schneiderlin and Ander Herrera with too much to do while also giving Watford space to exploit.

Fit-again Anthony Martial was deployed up front alongside 18-year-old Marcus Rashford, who made a dream start to his United career by scoring four goals in two games, but the pair looked toothless.

Watford’s Nigerian striker Odion Ighalo missed three gilt-edged chances in the first half and Austrian defender Sebas-tian Prodl had a header cleared off the line by Rashford before United sprang to life.

Several darting runs by Rashford down the right flank swung the balance and keeper Heurelho Gomes saved two stinging shots by Mata before United’s playmaker finally broke the deadlock.— Reuters

Nishikori plays down Murray's recent absence ahead of Davis Cup tie

BIRMINGHAM — World No 6 Kei Nishikori insists Andy Murray’s lack of recent playing time will not give Japan the edge when it faces defending Davis Cup champions Britain in this week’s Davis Cup World Group first round. Second-ranked Murray, who led Britain to its first Davis Cup title in 79 years last year, will be playing his first competitive tennis since the 7 February birth of his daughter as well as his defeat to world No 1 Novak Djokovic in the final of the Australian Open.

“He (Murray) did great in Australia so it’s not like he hasn’t played in a long time. It’s not going to change much,” Nishikori, who went out in the second round at the Abierto Mexicano Telcel last week after winning the Mem-phis Open for the fourth time in a row in mid-February, told a press conference on Wednesday. “But I also have been playing well. I played indoor in Memphis too so I’m getting used to this condition. I have to practice well in these couple of days, but I’m feeling pretty good so it’s going to be an exciting tie.”— Kyodo News

Real put derby defeat behind them by winning at Levante

MADRID — Cristiano Ronaldo netted a first-half penalty as injury-depleted Real Madrid recovered from their derby defeat by Atletico Madrid at the weekend with a 3-1 win at Levante on Wednesday.

An own goal by goalkeeper Kike Saverio handed them a stoppage-time strike by substitute Isco ensured Real kept a firm grip on third place in La Liga.

Barcelona, who visit Rayo Vallecano on Thursday, hold a five-point lead over second-placed Atletico who tri-umphed 3-0 at home to Real Sociedad on Tuesday.

Real, nine points off the pace, are four points in front of fourth-placed Villarreal who drew 0-0 at Celta Vigo on Wednesday. Zinedine Zidane’s Real were missing Sergio Ramos and Marcelo in defence, although Pepe returned after a long injury layoff, midfielder Luka Modric and striker Karim Benzema, replaced by teenager Borja Mayoral making his first start. — Reuters
