All political forces and every single citizen to make their goal to ensure stability during transitional period before general elections

NAY PYI TAW, 2 June—The following is the full text of the monthly radio address delivered by President of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar U Thein Sein.

My Fellow citizens,

As I have done previously, I would like to give you the monthly update on the work of my government, and the developments that have taken place in our country.

Since my government took office, we have steadily implemented political and socio-economic reforms, and peace building efforts towards national reconciliation. These three areas of reforms are interrelated and interdependent.

Our government has put serious effort into the peace process, and initial agreement has been reached on a draft National Ceasefire Agreement (NCA). Soon, the ethnic armed groups will hold their summit in Lawkheedar, Kayin State to discuss approval of the NCA. Once the NCA is finalized, political dialogue will take place as pledged in the agreement. The objective of the dialogue is to work together in unity to build a Union based on the principles of democracy and federalism that all the nation’s ethnic groups desire. Only then, can we achieve a sustainable peace that benefits this and future generations.

As we systematically develop the socio-economic conditions of the country, we must also undertake political reforms that are in harmony with these conditions. These reforms in particular must be carried out step by step to nurture democratic practices in the whole society as well as in the government, and to improve public services.

When my government took office over four years ago, we embarked on liberalization and reforms starting from the prevailing political situation at that time. We encountered delays and difficulties because transitioning from one system to another means that certain practices of the old system will be incompatible in the new system. No matter the obstacles, we will continue to implement necessary reforms.

In particular, we introduced power sharing between the Union government, and regional and state governments that are the essence of the Constitution’s Union Legislative List (Schedule 1) and Region or State Legislative List (Schedule 2). Our first task was to implement the rights granted by the Constitution. Next, adjustments and amendments were made. Tatmadaw representatives in parliament introduced amendments to Schedule 1 and 2 with the support of members of parliament. Political parties have also made suggestions.

The right conditions must exist for the emergence of a federal-based Union. Therefore, the priority is to amend provisions of Schedules 1 and 2 that benefit residents of the states and regions, and provides for fair revenue sharing. Based on four years of practical experiences, trials, consultations, and advice, draft amendments to Schedules 1 and 2 will be submitted to parliament later this month.

Of importance to governance and other sectors, the 2014 Population and Household Census results were officially released on May 29th. The main benefits of the census, the first in many years, are that accurate numbers are now available for the delivery of public services and policy-making. Voter lists for the upcoming general elections will also rely on these census results.

I would now like to give some information about the establishment of minimum wage. After collecting feedback from labor organizations’ consultations with factory workers, a national-level committee meeting on setting a minimum wage will be held. Once these preparations are complete, decisions on the minimum wage will be made by the end of July.

National reconciliation is of great importance to our nation. Our country has suffered because in the past various political forces and political leaders were unable to reach broad consensus among each other. All of you are aware that taking lessons from this history, I have held meetings of different formats with political leaders. On May 18th, I met with leaders and representatives of political parties to discuss cooperation to ensure the continued success of the peace process, successful holding of the 2015 general elections, and stability in the period before the elections.

Agriculture and Irrigation Ministry seeks approval for loans from Myanmar Economic Bank, CBM

NAY Pyi Taw, 2 June—Deputy Minister for Agriculture and Irrigation U Ohn Than on Tuesday explained agricultural loans for fiscal 2015-2016 at the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw session.

The ministry requested K 1,352.76 billion for agricultural loans to the union government and the leading committee for promotion and protection of farmers’ interests, and was allowed to take out loans for K800 billion from Myanmar Economic Bank and K400 billion from the Central Bank of Myanmar, according to the deputy minister.

However, the central bank of Myanmar law and the law for promotion and protection of farmers’ interests require the government to seek approval of the Hluttaw for the central bank loan and the president asked the Hluttaw to approve the loan from the central bank.

Deputy Minister for Finance Dr Lin Aung also promised to issue agricultural loans in accordance with the central bank law.

Deputy Minister for Education U Thant Shin said basic education school children need 75 percent attentances from June to 18 February for each academic year, but the ministry did not issue any order to stop teaching in the remaining period before the exam.

U Thant Shin replied that the ministry is certifying more teachers for unsstaffed schools in both states and regions.

Festival set to mark 100 years of cartooning in Myanmar

By Khaing Thanda Lwin

YANGON, 2 June—A festival to mark the centenary of cartoon publishing in Myanmar will take place later this year in Yangon, an organizer of the event said recently.

The organizing committee of the Myanmar Cartoon 100th Anniversary has submitted an application to stage the event at the National Theatre of Yangon, most likely in November or December, according to the information officer for the festival, cartoonist U Moe Htet Moe.

“We will fix the exact date only after getting the green light from the authorities,” U Moe Htet Moe told The Global New Light of Myanmar. “We propose to hold it in Myanmar Event Park if we do not get the permit.”

Myanmar cartoonists from home and abroad will showcase two or three cartoons each at the five-day event. Works may cover a wide range of subjects, but the committee has asked artists not to create satirical cartoons.

Works of bygone cartoonists and comic writers, including late U Ba Galay, will also be displayed at the festival.

A book fair, public readings and a drama performance by cartoonists will also be held during the event. The organizing body expects the fair to draw visitors from around the country.

Cartoons have been published in Myanmar since 1915. U Shwe Tlay, otherwise known as U Ba Galay, is recognised as the first local cartoonist. At present, the country has more than 200 professionals in the cartoon industry, including only a handful of women.

The emergence of privately owned daily newspapers in the wake of sweeping government reforms has provided new opportunities for cartoonists in Myanmar to publish their work and earn an income.

All political forces and every single citizen to make...

If we look ahead to the general elections, I believe the elected representatives will genuinely reflect the desire of the electorate. The election of these members of parliament represents a new political energy—one that will build on the reforms initiated by my government to successfully complete the democratic transition. Therefore, political forces should be prepared for the long-term tasks of nation building, national unity, and peace building. They will need to further develop the culture of negotiations introduced by my government to ensure the emergence of an open, free, and developed nation.

To ensure that the 2015 general elections are free and fair, the government will fully cooperate with the Union Election Commission and other relevant organizations. All levels of the government will diligently, correctly, and transparently implement all election laws, regulations, and procedures. I have also been informed that the Union Election Commission is working to ensure accurate voter lists so that all legally eligible voters are able to vote, election results are transparently and accurately reported, and international observers are able to do their work as permitted by law.

Myanmar is responding in a responsible manner to the boat migrants adrift in the Andaman Sea. Although Myanmar must protect its citizens and its sovereignty, our country is also a responsible member of the global community. Therefore, we are working with other countries to offer humanitarian assistance to the boat migrants, and return them to their homes. The root causes of human trafficking and illegal migration are lack of jobs and poverty. Therefore, we are prioritizing poverty alleviation and improving livelihoods for the people living in Rakhine State.

Finally, I would like to urge all political forces and every single citizen to make it their goal to ensure stability during this transitional period before the general elections.

As long-term goals, I urge all of you to focus on putting in place the foundation for building a future New Myanmar. In so doing, we must avoid extreme views and passing on the bitter legacy of political and armed conflict to future generations. Instead, it is important that we build upon history’s lessons to create goals that are laudable and constructive.

I would like to conclude by reaffirming my commitment to achieving peace, promoting economic development and building a better future for future generations.

Tokyo, 2 June — Philippine President Benigno Aquino began a four-day state visit to Japan on Tuesday, a trip being touted as an opportunity for the two countries to highlight their stronger defence and security ties to counter China's rapid and massive land reclamation work in contested waters in the South China Sea.

At a time when territorial rows in that sea are taking centre stage, Aquino will hold talks with Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe on Thursday, during which the two leaders are expected to boost their countries' ties as “strategic partners” and reaffirm their cooperation in peacefully resolving the South China Sea disputes under the rule of law, Japanese officials said.

A Japanese official said Aquino’s state visit aimed at China’s muscle-flexing in the last quarter of this year and South China seas demonstrates how “important” the Philippines is to Japan and how it is a “good opportunity” to show the international community how Japan values its relations with the Philippines.

Aquino, who is leading his departure to Tokyo, Aquino said to reporters in Manila that Japan has extended much support to the Philippines, especially when it was struck by a powerful typhoon in 2013.

“They are also with us on our stand that the rule of law should prevail to achieve fair and just resolution of territorial issues,” he said.

Foreign dignitaries’ visits to Japan are usually designated as state visits only up to twice a fiscal year. Aquino’s case is the first for this year and the first for himself.

China claims sovereignty over most of the South China Sea, which is a vital shipping lane and it is touted as having rich fishery grounds. China’s rival claimants are notably the Philippines, Vietnam, as well as Malaysia, Brunei and Taiwan.

Japan, for its part, has tensions with China in the East China Sea where Japanese-controlled, Chinese-claimed islands lie — known as the Senkakus in Japan and called the Diaoyus by Beijing.

On top of their defence equipment-linked cooperation, Japan is also expected to reiterate its support for strengthening the Philippine Coast Guard, the officials said. Tokyo has promised Manila 10 patrol ships but the ships have yet to be handed over.

As part of efforts to bolster economic ties, the two leaders also set to unveil a road map for better transport infrastructure in Manila to make it easier for Japanese businesses, a Japanese official said. The ministry estimates there are about 1,200 firms in the Southeast Asian country whose yearly economic growth has stagnated at around 6 percent to 7 percent.

Aquino’s itinerary will include giving a speech to parliament, meeting Japanese businessmen and meeting with Emperor Akihito and Empress Michiko.

Japanese defence intelligence chief to visit S Korea in mid-June

Seoul, 2 June — Japan’s defence intelligence chief will make a three-day visit to South Korea from 15 June for talks with his South Korean counterpart on matters of bilateral interest, South Korea’s Defence Ministry spokesman said on Tuesday.

“(Their) talks will be focused on North Korea and Northeast Asia,” Kim Min Seok said during a press briefing, coordinating local news reports on the visit of Tadashi Miyagawa, chief of the intelligence bureau at the Japanese Defence Ministry.

He declined to provide further details on the Japanese intelligence officer’s itinerary.

The talks on the military intelligence level had been held every year from 1971 to two years ago for a total of 61 times. Such talks could not be held last year, he added.

The upcoming talks will come at a time of heightened tensions on the Korean Peninsula after North Korea announced last month that it had successfully tested-fired a ballistic missile from a submarine.

North Korea also claimed that it already has the capability of miniaturizing nuclear warheads.

In a related development, Japanese and South Korean defence ministers on Saturday held their first bilateral talks in four years on the sidelines of a regional security forum in Singapore and agreed to conduct dialogue to improve strained relations.

Relations between South Korea and Japan have deteriorated to their lowest level in recent years due to conflicting views on history and a territorial dispute.

Japan ruled the Korean Peninsula from 1910-1945.

Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen

Phnom Penh, 2 June — Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen on Tuesday defended the controversial draft law on non-governmental organizations (NGOs) and associations, saying that the bill aims to protect and support the activities of NGOs and associations in Cambodia.

“It is necessary for Cambodia to make the law on NGOs and associations,” he said after the inauguration ceremony of a national road in Kampong Speu Province.

The law does not prevent the activities of NGOs and associations, but it aims to fight against terrorism financing, money laundering, and creation of illegal armed forces, he said.

“NGOs and associations should not worry about this law. It will protect you, support you, and open up to your activities,” he said, adding that the government will soon approve this draft law and send it to the National Assembly.

The draft law will require NGOs and associations to register their nationalities with the Cambodian government in order to have legal standing and they are required to file reports on their activities and finances each year to the government.

According to the figures of the Ministry of Interior, currently, there are 2,672 NGOs and 1,706 associations operating in Cambodia.

Speaking during a meeting with visiting US Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Democracy, Human Rights, and Labor Scott Busby on Tuesday, Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Hor Namhom said the draft NGO law was not targeted to prevent or limit the activities of NGOs, but to see those NGOs operate in a transparent manner.

“At present, Cambodia is enforcing the rule of law, and the government is doing everything transparently, so NGOs and associations should be transparent too. There should be nothing to hide,” he told reporters after the meeting.

Japan UN officer working for children in Central African Republic

Kyodo News
Tokyo, 2 June — A UNICEF child protection officer from Japan is helping child soldiers in the Central African Republic return to society and lead normal lives as children.

“We hope that they will return to being normal children and be allowed to play and laugh freely,” Ryoko Ogawa, 35, said during an interview in Tokyo.

The African nation has been mired in conflict between Muslim and Christian armed groups, and recently, with about 10,000 children under 18 forced to serve as soldiers and others falling victim to abduction. But in a hopeful development, the two sides reached a cease-fire in early May, and agreed to release their child soldiers.

Many of the children at first show no emotion but start displaying lively expressions several months later,” Ogawa said in describing the most rewarding aspects of her job at the UN Children’s Fund.

Children were forced to fight in the front line and also had to transport goods or engage in spying, she said. Girls sometimes became victims of sexual assaults.

“We are trying to make them feel they can re- lax through sports, dancing and drawing,” she said.

After having worked for a travel agency and the Japanese Foreign Ministry, Tokyo-native Ogawa moved to the Central African Republic as a UNICEF child protection specialist in February 2014.

Her first experience of the country was being stranded at the airport after arrival as a gunfire raged nearby. “It felt like I had received baptism of fire,” Ogawa said.

She decided on a career in humanitarian assistance for children during a visit as a university student to Croatia, where she met street children. Some were smoking while others were begging for money at a station at midnight. The East European country was still reeling at the time from effects of the Yugoslav Wars of the 1990s.

“In Japan, I went to school and got a good education,” she said. “The same educational opportunities should be offered to children (in the Central African Republic) for the future of the country.”

Solar plane on round-world trip lands in Japan to avoid bad weather

Tokyo, 2 June — A solar-powered plane currently attempting the first-ever around-the-world trip without the use of fossil fuel made an unscheduled landing at Nagoya airport in central Japan on 1 June, at an airport in central Japan to avoid poor weather around Hawaii.

The Solar Impulse 2 had been scheduled to fly for five to six days from China’s Nanjing to Hawaii in what was to be the longest leg of the global trip — but was forced to land at Nagoya airport, according to the Swiss organization that runs the flight.

At a Press conference early Monday morning after landing, Swiss pilot Andre Borschberg expressed his intention to continue the trip to Hawaii with the single-seat plane after waiting out the adverse weather.

Malaysia Airlines CEO says carrier “technically bankrupt”, set to cut jobs, routes

Kuala Lumpur, 2 June — The newly appointed chief executive of loss-making Malaysia Airlines said on Monday the carrier is “technically bankrupt”, underlining the case for restructuring to cut a third of jobs, scrap some international routes and review its long-haul fleet.

“We are technically bankrupt...the decline of Malaysia Airlines is being curtailed, but that was not by mechanical problems,” said chief executive of loss-making Malaysia Airlines said on Monday the carrier is “technically bankrupt”, underlining the case for restructuring to cut a third of jobs, scrap some international routes and review its long-haul fleet.

China, Pakistan pledge to strengthen military cooperation

Beijing, 2 June — Senior military officials from China and Pakistan met on Tuesday in Beijing, pledging to strengthen practical cooperation in such areas as training, military equipment, and anti-terrorism.

In his meeting with visiting Pakistan Air Force Chief Marshal Sohail Amran, Fan Changlong, Vice Chairman of China’s Central Military Commission, said the Chinese military is willing to work with the Pakistan counterpart to maintain the growth momentum of military-to-military exchanges and beef up pragmatic cooperation in training, equipment and anti-terrorism.

“China and Pakistan have become ‘iron friends’, always trusting and supporting each other,” Fan said.

He expressed his hope the two countries’ military cooperation will contribute to regional peace and stability.

Pakistan has always placed the two country’s bilateral relationship as a top priority, Sohail said. Pakistan is willing to join hands with China to strengthen all-round military-to-military exchanges and cooperation, particularly in the air force.

Sohail hoped the two countries’ military cooperation will provide a safe and secure environment for China-Pakistan economic corridor and deepen their all-weather friendship and multi-dimensional cooperation.

US tightens airport security after screeners fail undercover tests

Washington, 2 June — Homeland Security Secretary Jeh Johnson said on Monday he had ordered improved security at US airports after media reports that checkpoint screeners failed to detect mock explosives and weapons in 95 percent of tests carried out by undercover agents.

Airport screeners, who are employees of the Transportation Security Administration, did not detect banned weapons in 67 of 70 tests at dozens of airports, ABC News said, citing officials briefed on a report by Homeland Security’s inspector general.

Johnson, whose department oversees the TSA, was briefed last week on the trials, which were completed recently, ABC News said.

In one test, the network said an undercover agent was stopped when he set off an alarm at a checkpoint but that TSA screeners then failed to find a fake explosive device taped to his back when they patted him down.

Johnson issued a statement on Monday saying the results of the security checks were classified but that he had directed the TSA to revise screening procedures “to address specific vulnerabilities identified” in the undercover operation. He also ordered training for all TSA officers and supervisors across the country and testing of airports’ screening equipment.

Johnson said there would be more random covert testing at checkpoints.

The numbers in these reports never look good out of context but they are a critical element in the continuous evolution of our aviation security,” Johnson said. “We take these findings very seriously in our continued effort to test, measure and enhance our capabilities and techniques as threats evolve.” — Reuters
The Hollande-Sarkozy re-match France doesn’t want

Nicolas Sarkozy, former French president and head of the newly-named The Republicans political party, delivers a speech during a rally in Paris, France, 3 June 2015. — Reuters

She and others in the party now say there is little point in holding a primary for the 2017 ticket — giving Hollande as the incumbent right of first refusal if he chooses to stand.

Paris, 2 June — Nicolas Sarkozy vs Francois Hollande: the re-match. With both having tightened their grips on their parties in recent days, a 2017 repeat of France’s 2012 presidential election now looks like the most likely scenario. The question that the right and left quarters of the French do not want either the current president or his predecessor to run again, polls show — a fact that could boost the protest vote for the far-right National Front while making for a low turnout that would give any mainstream victor a weak mandate for reforms.

“In Britain, party leader resigned and quit politics after their defeat, even though they’re only in their 40s,” Gael Sliman of pollsters Odionor said referring to the Labour and Liberal Democrat leaders who stepped down after being beaten by incumbent David Cameron in last month’s election.

“There the system provides for little renewal and promotes the very old ... and failure. That is not inspiring (for voters),” he said. Both Sarkozy and Hollande are 60.

A divisive figure who briefly retired after his 2012 defeat to Hollande, Sarkozy returned to the helm of the conservative UMP party late last year and has sought to sideline his main rival for its ticket, former prime minister Alain Juppé, who will be 71 years old by the time of the election.

Sarkozy consolidated that comeback at a weekend convention, with grassroots members chanting “Nicolas! Nicolas!” after he won more than 80 per cent approval for his re-name the party “The Republicains”. Two months earlier, he steered the party to victory in mid-term local elections.

A few days earlier, Hollande — the most unpopular French president on record and challenged within in his Socialist party just a few months ago — saw party members overwhelmingly back his policies in a vote before a 5-7 June party congress.

Even critics on the left of the party acknowledged that a rebellion against him increasingly centrist line had run out of steam, combined with signs that the stagnant economy has started to turn around.

“It’s time to move on ... grassroots supporters have made clear they don’t support the backbenchers,” said Karine Berger, a Socialist lawmaker associated with the party’s left wing.

Mexican president changes asset declaration in wake of report on land deal

MEXICO CITY, 2 June — Under pressure to detail his personal wealth, Mexico’s president has made changes to his declaration of assets following a Reuters that cast doubt on how he acquired one of his properties near Mexico City.

President Enrique Pena Nieto released the updated version in response to a report published on 1,000 square meter plot of land in the town of Valle de Bravo that he has declared as a donation from his late father.

Opposition lawmakers from left and right have demanded that Pena Nieto make a public declaration of all of his assets, which total at least $3 million. The new declaration added notes explaining why Pena Nieto had described the purchased property, as well as another 24,000 square meter plot of land, as donations from his father. “The price was paid by my father, Enrique Pena del Mazo, who determined that the properties would be in my name, and it is for that reason that the same are declared as donations,” the note said.

A public registry document that Reuters obtained shows that Pena Nieto purchased the property. There is no reference to his father in the document, and it is for that reason that the same are declared as donations,” the note said.

Lawyers consulted by Reuters said the incorrect asset declaration constitutes a false statement to authorities.

Kerry arrives back in US after breaking his leg

WASHINGTON, 2 June — US Secretary of State John Kerry arrived back in the United States on Monday aboard a special military flight from Europe after breaking his leg in a cycling accident.

After landing at Boston’s Logan airport at 8:50 p.m. EDT (0050 GMT Tuesday), Kerry headed to Massachusetts Genera l Hospital in that city for further treatment, State Department spokesman John Kirby said in a statement.

Kerry, 71, broke his right femur on Sunday while cycling a portion of the Tour de France route in the Haute Savoie region. He spent the night in a Geneva hospital under observation while his return to the United States was planned.

He had been in Geneva for negotiations on Saturday with Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif and after the accident he has had to cancel planned visits to Madrid and Paris.

The C-17 military aircraft, brought from the US military base in Ramstein, Germany, departed Geneva’s Cointrin airport shortly before 1600 GMT, Reuters witnesses said, bound for Kerry’s home city of Boston.

“Headed back to Boston. Look fwd to getting leg set & getting back to @StateDept! Meantime, work goes on. Big thanks for well-wishes,” Kerry tweeted minutes after departure. Earlier, Kerry told French Foreign Minister Laurent Fabius he would participate by telephone in a summit on Tuesday in Paris bringing together some 20 nations to discuss the US-led coalition’s strategy against Islamic State militants in Iraq and Syria.

Kerry later said Kerry would undergo surgery on Tuesday to set his broken leg after calling in to the Paris meeting.

Kerry also assured Fabius he would return to cycle again in France, French officials said.

The secretary had been due to travel to Spain on Sunday to sign a bilateral defense agreement that would allow the United States to have permanent use of Moron air base near Seville. The US diplomatic presence in Geneva said Dennis Burke, a doctor from Massachusetts General Hospital, was accompanying Kerry on the flight back to Boston.

Burke, who previously performed hip surgery on Kerry, flew to Geneva on Monday to evaluate the secretary’s femur.

Kerry was brought to Geneva hospital by helicopter on Sunday morning and had initially been expected to return to the United States that evening but stayed on as a “precaution,” officials said.

Inclusive growth key for peace in Myanmar

U Soe Thane, Union Minister at the President Office

Over the past few days, the world has been increasingly concerned with the plight of thousands of men, women and children attempting to cross the Bay of Bengal. I empathize with their plight and share these concerns.

The search for and rescue of people at sea is an international responsibility, and the Myanmar Navy will provide assistance to anyone in its territorial waters in need of help. Urgent humanitarian action must now take precedence, but we must also consider medium- and long-term strategies.

The crisis caused by human trafficking and smuggling will not go away soon. Nor will the crippling poverty and hopelessness that drive individuals to embrace extreme risks on the road for a chance at a better life.

Open to advice

Myanmar has been on the road from military dictatorship to democracy for four years. This is never an easy journey, and we know that around the world transitions from authoritarian to civilian rule can fail. We are determined not to fail, and in order to succeed, we have had to balance interests with the pace of change and connect our aspirations to political realities on the ground. In four years, we have had to address issues related to political liberalization and reconciliation, economic development after decades of stagnation, normalization of relations with the rest of the world and the ending of over a dozen different ethnic-based armed conflicts.

In all this, we have been open to advice from anyone. We welcome discussion and constructive criticism. We ask, though, that our friends outside add not fuel, but bring water to the fires that we have to put out as we open up our country and our society after so many years of authoritarian rule. We ask not for finger-pointing, but for help from anyone who will join hands in actually tackling, in a realistic and sustainable way, the myriad problems we face.

In Rakhine State in 2012 we faced terrible communal violence that left hundreds dead and displaced tens of thousands from both Muslim and Buddhist communities. We faced a situation where feelings were high and a single incident could reignite violence.

That situation has changed. We have managed not only to prevent any new violence, but also to begin to address the roots of violent feeling. We ask anyone concerned to come and see conditions for themselves and learn firsthand what is happening. In Rakhine State, over 20 different international aid organizations are present. As the United Nations and other bodies know well, we are taking the first steps toward reintegration. Anyone who has worked to normalize life after violent intercommunal conflict knows how difficult and sensitive this is.

While we address the individuals stranded at sea in the immediate term, in the medium term we must crack down on those smugglers and traffickers who prey on the vulnerabilities of migrants. I believe that the issues of human trafficking and smuggling can only be addressed through regional and international coordination and cooperation.

End the blame game

Rather than seeing the current migrant crisis as simply an extension of the situation in Rakhine State and blaming Myanmar alone, it would be far better if the rest of the world could help in finding a practical way forward. What we are seeing now touches on the much broader issue of economic migrants and their plight. This is a regional problem that requires bilateral and regional solutions with much international support.

And in thinking of practical ways forward, we need to be mindful of history and of the current dynamics in all their aspects, as well as of our aspirations to develop holistic strategies that are tested against on-the-ground realities. Myanmar is at an incredibly sensitive and pivotal moment in its history, involving not just Rakhine State or one people in Rakhine State, but all 53 million of its people.

There is reason to hope, but only if the rest of the world is genuinely interested in finding solutions and not just apportioning blame. For the longer term, it is imperative that we invest in our people and the development of their surroundings.

Rakhine State has tremendous economic potential. It has abundant land and water, and now, thanks to very recent efforts, a good supply of electricity. We can now improve livelihoods, generate income, and create better opportunities for everyone, regardless of race or religion. If we do this, the pull of migration and especially illegal migration will disappear.

But for this we need investment in manufacturing, fishing, farming and the many other sectors that could easily grow. A billion dollars in investment would be transformational. To those who are today blaming Myanmar for the boat crisis, we ask that you instead help us craft and implement an inclusive development strategy — based not on aid but on investment — that will improve the lives of everyone in Rakhine State.

The world is rightly focused on urgent humanitarian needs. Next we need to quickly look at practical strategies, including the inclusive and sustainable development of Rakhine State.

Iraq’s Abadi bemoans lack of international support

Paris, 2 June — Iraqi Prime Minister Haidar al-Abadi complained on Tuesday of a lack of support from international coalition allies in the fight against Islamic State militants.

Speaking at a conference in Paris, Abadi said coalition partners were not providing Iraqi forces with sufficient air intelligence to stem Islamic State advances, while support for ground operations was also lacking.

“Air support is not enough. There is too little surveillance. Daesh (Islamic State) is mobile and move in very small groups. It’s not enough,” Abadi told reporters at the talks. Reuters

US delivers 2,000 rockets for Iraq but holds half for now

WASHINGTON, 2 June — The United States has delivered 2,000 AT-4 anti-tank weapons destined for Iraq, sending 1,000 directly to the government in Baghdad, with the US-led coalition holding the other half in the region for training Iraqis and for future contingencies, a US defense official told Reuters on Monday.

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the delivery took place over the past several days. The official did not provide further details.

The Pentagon has said the delivery of the weapons would help Iraq defend against approaching suicide bombers driving vehicles packed with explosives. Islamic State militants used that type of attack last month to help them seize Ramadi from Iraqi forces.

The Islamic State’s capture of Ramadi, the capital of Anbar Province, was the Baghdad government’s most significant setback in a year and exposed the limitations of Iraq’s army and US-led air strikes against the group. —Reuters

Militants kill nine Afghan aid workers in night time attack

Mazar-i-Sharif, (Afghanistan), 2 June — Unidentified militants shot and killed nine Afghan employees of a foreign-backed aid group in an attack early on Tuesday in Afghanistan’s northern Balkh province, government officials said.

Aid workers have faced increasing attacks in Afghanistan as foreign troops have withdrawn and security has deteriorated, making the country one of the most dangerous for aid groups.

Officials identified the group as a Czech organization called People in Need, and blamed the Taleban for the attack, about 50 miles (80 km) south of the provincial capital.

“They shot dead nine people, including a woman,” said Mohammad Daud Naemi, a spokesman for the Ministry of Rural Rehabilitation and Development.

Five employees, two drivers and two guards were killed in the attack that started shortly after 1 am, he added.

People in Need could not immediately be reached for comment.

The office of the provincial governor also blamed the Taleban and said it was investigating the incident.

The Taleban said it was looking into details of the attack and could not immediately comment.

The militant Islamist group has been fighting to topple the internationally backed government after being ousted from power by a US-led invasion in 2001.

As many as 57 aid workers were killed last year, the United Nations says. Most have been Afghan staff members, who work in the field and face a greater risk of kidnappings and killing.

In 19 April, Afghan de-miners were freed two days after being abducted by militants while doing a survey in the eastern region. They were luckier than five aid workers of Save the Children, who were abducted in March, and found dead more than a month later in central Uruzgan Province. Reuters

Yemen tribesmen kill 18 Houthi fighters in ambush

Sanaa, 2 June — Armored tribesmen killed 18 Houthi fighters in an ambush in Yemen’s central province of Ibb on Tuesday, residents said, in one of the deadliest ground attacks in over two months of war.

The attack hit a convoy of militiamen and allied army troops in the town of Qaeda while they were en route to the city of Taiz, a flashpoint of clashes between Yemen’s dominant Houthis and armed backers of exiled president Abd-Rabbu Mansour Hadi.

A coalition of Arab countries led by Saudi Arabia, seeking to restore Hadi to power, has carried out over nine weeks of air strikes on Houthi fighters who have seized large parts of Yemen.

The Houthi, hailing from Yemen’s far north, seized the capital in September and fanned out southward, triggering the Arab military intervention.

They describe their spread as a revolution and a victory against corruption, but Sunni Muslim Gulf Arab states worry that they are a proxy for the influence of their regional Shi’ite rival Iran.

Saudi-led air strikes hit Houthi positions along Yemen’s far northern border with the kingdom and struck military bases aligned with the group in the capital Sanaa on Tuesday.

Neighbouring Oman, a neutral power, is mediating talks between Houthi and American officials in the capital Muscat aimed at ending Yemen’s conflict.

The dialogue also led Yemeni authorities to release to Oman on Monday a detained American freelance journalist.

Yemeni politicians say the discussions are narrowing ground between Yemen’s exiled government and the Houthis and may soon pave the way for more formal United Nations-backed negotiations.

Dollar stands tall, Asian shares slip

Tokyo, 2 June — The dollar ascended to a new 12-1/2-year peak against the yen on Tuesday, while Asian shares fell for a second day as the stronger greenback pressured commodity prices.

The dollar rose as high as 125.07 yen JPY=, its loftiest peak since late 2002, before retracing to stand at 124.67 yen, down about 0.1 percent on the day, after a spate of mostly upbeat US data reinforced expectations that the Federal Reserve would raise interest rates sooner.

“The rise in the dollar against the yen has been steep but sentiment favours testing new highs, rather than consolidating,” said Kyo Suze Suzuki, director of forex at Societe Generale in Tokyo.

MSCI’s broadest index of Asia-Pacific shares outside Japan .MIAPO0000PUS was down about 0.9 percent, falling for the second day and touching its lowest intraday level since April 3, while Japan’s Nikkei stock index .N225 erased earlier gains and slipped 0.1 percent.

Australian shares AXJO skidded about 1.1 percent propped up by weaker commodities.

The Reserve Bank of Australia kept rates on hold at a record low of 2.0 percent at its latest policy meeting on Tuesday as expected.

On Wall Street on Monday, US stocks began the month with modest gains after the data. Consumer spending remained flat in April, but construction spending and manufacturing orders were strong, backing the view that the US central bank is on track to begin hiking rates later this year.

The economic reports helped US Treasury yields rise to one-week highs, giving the greenback a lift. In Asian trading on Tuesday, the yield on benchmark 10-year notes US10Y=RR stood at 2.188 percent, not far from the US close of 2.192 percent on Monday.

Boston Fed President Eric Rosengren, who is not a voting member of the Federal Open Market Committee, said on Monday he would like to begin raising rates as soon as possible, but also noted risks from the slowdown in China and Europe and the fact that US growth is still not strong enough.

Market participants awaited Friday’s US non-farm payrolls report for a further gauge of the strength of employment conditions. The report is expected to show 225,000 jobs created in May, according to a Reuters poll of economists.

Uncertainty about the outcome of Greece’s financial negotiations continued to weigh on the euro, which was nearly flat on the day at $1.0928 EUR=. The index tracking the dollar against a basket of six rival currencies .DXY was also close to flat on the day, at 97.402.

The leaders of Germany, France, the International Monetary Fund, the European Central Bank and the European Commission agreed at a meeting late on Monday to stay in close contact in the coming days to work on Greek debt negotiations, as Athens and its lenders struggled to reach deal that would prevent the country from defaulting on its debt.

Greece is due to make a 300-million-euro ($327.93 million) repayment to the IMF on Friday.

The common currency was also pressured by business surveys that showed European manufacturing activity remained even more sluggish than its plodding global counterparts.

The Australian dollar AUD=US$ gained after the Reserve Bank of Australia’s policy statement did not give the explicit easing bias that the market was looking for.

The Aussie rose to $0.7675, from $0.7626 before the data to show a gain of around half a cent on Monday.

The bleak global factory outlook combined with the firmer dollar to hit prices of dollar-denominated commodities.

Copper CMCU3 slipped 0.1 percent to $6,016 a tonne, not far from a six-week low of $5,985 hit on Monday.

US crude oil futures CLc1 hit on Monday.

The South Korean MERS patients to 25.

In another sign of growing infection, the total includes two people who contracted the virus from a secondary source patient who came in close contact with the country’s first patient, a 68-year-old man who had returned from a trip to the Middle East in April-May and was confirmed positive on 20 May.

The two people who died Monday from the disease — a 58-year-old woman and a 71-year-old man — had been at the same hospital ward as the first patient around 15-17 May.

The South Korean government has come under fire for what critics saw as a slow response to contain the virus since the first case was confirmed.

Meanwhile, an emergency meeting of top-ranking officials from related agencies was held on Tuesday to discuss measures to contain the spread of the virus.

The government will spare no efforts in easing public anxiety and concern because the case is directly related to people’s life and safety,” Acting Prime Minister Chung Kyung Hwan said after the meeting.

More than 680 people have been quarantined.

According to the European Centre for Disease Prevention and Control, 11,727 cases of the virus have been reported by health authorities worldwide, including 479 related deaths, between its emergence in 2012 and Satur-
Japanese envoy to UN stresses need for Tokyo to join Security Council

New York; 2 June — Japanese Ambassador to the United Nations Motohide Yoshikawa has underscored the need for Japan to be part of the Security Council as a permanent member, calling it a “duty” for a leading country. “That’s not an easy task but it is a responsibility for a country commensurate with its clout in such a position,” Yoshikawa stressed.

Yoshikawa noted that joining the council is not a goal Japan is “desperately wishing” to achieve as suggested in some quarters but it will come with responsibility that one has to assume once that weighty task is given. “If we join the Security Council, we would be forced to make difficult decisions for a country commensurate with its clout in such a position.” Yoshikawa stressed.

The G-4 also introduced a resolution to the UN General Assembly calling for enlarging the council in 2005 but it did not go through in the face of opposition from the United States and China.

Japan, for its part, made its ambition to join the Security Council known for the first time at the General Assembly in 1994 in a speech given by then Foreign Minister Yohei Kono.

Man dies after 700-kg giant kite crashes into crowd in western Japan

Osu, (Japan), 2 June — A 73-year-old man died on Tuesday after sustaining severe injuries when a 700-kilogram giant kite crashed into a crowd of spectators during a kite festival two days before in Shiga Prefecture, western Japan, local police said.

Aside from the man, Junichi Yoshi, three other people were injured when the kite, measuring 13 meters by 12 meters, fell into a park in Higashimi from a height of 200 meters, according to local authorities.

Police are investigating the case on suspicion of professional negligence.

The kite could have lost balance due to repairs that were made to its framework before it was flown, a person close to festival organizers said.

Another related person said the area where the kite crashed was initially a restricted one, but that spectators had been allowed to enter. Higashimi is known for its large kites, and the festival is held every year. Kyodo News
Man convicted of stalking Mila Kunis escapes from California facility

A man convicted of stalking actress Mila Kunis has escaped from a Los Angeles-area mental health facility by breaking out of a bathroom window, authorities said on Monday.

Los Angeles, 2 June — A convicted man attempted to escape from the locked Olive Vista Behavioural Health Centre in Pomona, a community less than 30 miles (48 km) east of Los Angeles, on Saturday evening, said Los Angeles County Deputy Chief Probation Officer Reaver Bingham.

Kunis has been notified, and Los Angeles County probation officers were working with multiple law enforcement agencies in an effort to catch Dunn, Bingham said.

Dunn was convicted in January 2013 of stalking Kunis, and was later placed on probation. But after he violated probation he was sentenced to three years in state prison, Bingham said.

In late April, Dunn was released early from prison with work and good behaviour credits and was transferred to the Pomona mental health facility, he said.

Kunis, who gained fame in the late 1990s on sitcom “That 70s Show” and had supporting roles in the dramatic films “Black Swan” and “The Book of Eli,” is romantically involved with her former co-star Ashton Kutcher and the couple have a baby together.

Men are intimidated by me: Sharon Stone

Los Angeles, 2 June — Veteran actress Sharon Stone rues the fact that most men are intimidated by her reputation as a confident and sexy woman.

Stone, 57, who became one of the most desirable women in Hollywood with her performances in erotic thrillers ‘Basic Instinct’ and “Sliver” in the 90s and subsequent stellar big screen roles, said she wants men to ask her out but they run away from her.

“I wish more guys would throw themselves at me. But not really. I think people believe the story that I’m sexy, and now people are afraid of me.

“I think people see what I do in whatever they tell them that they bought the myth, they bought the story. I think in reality I’m much more like the girl with the big clothes and the bag of books but people bought the story that I’m a sex symbol. So guys don’t throw themselves at me, they run away from me,” she said.—PTI

Prince Jackson graduates high school

Los Angeles, 2 June — King of Pop Michael Jackson’s son Prince graduated from Buckley High School in Sherman Oaks, California.

Prince, 18, was joined by his grandmother Katherine Jackson, sister Paris Jackson, and several other relatives, reported Us magazine. “We never announced his name, the whole Jackson family stood up and cheered and whistled. Prince was ecstatic as he crossed the stage and picked up his diploma,” an eyewitness said.

The onlooker added that Prince’s family sat in the front row for the ceremony and the graduate posed for photos with his loved ones at the reception. His younger sister Paris, in particular, seemed “very proud” of him.—PTI

I was apprehensive about Marilyn Monroe role: Kelli Garner

Los Angeles, 2 June — Actress Kelli Garner almost put down the chance to play Marilyn Monroe in a new TV miniseries.

The “Aviator” star plays the legendary in “The Secret Life of Marilyn Monroe”, which is based on J Randy Taraborrelli’s book of the same name, reported Us magazine.

“I was extremely apprehensive; it’s Marilyn Monroe. Those are really, really big shoes and I wasn’t sure if I could pull it off,” she said.

Garner, 31, explains she eventually agreed to take on the part because the TV series examines Monroe’s struggles with mental illness, a subject matter the actress was fascinated by because of her own experiences in therapy.

“I knew it would, if anything, make me a better actress. It was a challenge and a study of myself as a performer.

“One of the most favourite things is this (scene) that we used to tell a story to and it starts with her sitting down with this fictional therapist and I found that fascinating. I think it’s important to talk about mental health and I’ve been in therapy myself and be able to play such an icon in such intimate sounding board moments of trying to figure out what’s going on was really fascinating to me.”—PTI

Enrique Iglesias undergoes hand surgery

Los Angeles, 2 June — Spanish superstar Enrique Iglesias is undergoing a reconstructive hand surgery after slicing his fingers in a drone mishap at his weekend concert.

The “Hero” hitmaker was onstage in Tijuana, Mexico when he reached out to catch a drone, which he uses to capture video footage at his shows, but the stunt went wrong as the device slashed his fingers, reported Contactmusic.

Iglesias, 40, subsequently flew to Los Angeles to see a specialist and he was booked in for the surgery. “Thank you to all your concern and good wishes. Enrique is currently undergoing reconstructive hand surgery today... We appreciate your thoughts and prayers,” a statement read.

The singer will have some time to recover from the injury as his next Sex and Love Tour date is not until 3 July in Mexico City.—PTI

Clooney says interested in having children after all

Cleve, 2 June — George Clooney and his wife Amal Alamuddin do want to have children, the US actor was quoted on Monday as saying, after he caused a stir last month by saying parenthood was not high on his priority list.

Asked by German newspaper Bild whether he and Alamuddin, a human rights lawyer, were interested in having kids, the two-time Oscar winner said: “Yes, but we’re taking our time.”

Clooney told US network CBS late last month he had not really thought about having children, adding it “hasn’t been high on my list”. Clooney said he had been asked about that a lot lately because of his recent marriage and his latest film “Tomorrowland,” which has children in it.

“Everyone wanted to make a baseball player—not enough talent,” he said. “I wanted to be a journalist like my father—not smart enough. Now I am what I am—and very happy.”

Survivors Hamburg keep Bundesliga record with “crazy” win

Hamburg SV’s Nicolai Mueller celebrates after he scored a goal against Karlsruhe during their German Bundesliga second leg relegation play-off soccer match in Karlsruhe, Germany on 1 June, 2015.—REUTERS

BERLIN, 2 June — Hamburg SV clung on to their time-honoured place in the Bundesliga once again after beating second-tier Karlsruhe 2-1 — and 3-2 on aggregate — after moments of extraordinary late drama in the second leg of their playoff on Monday. The three-times German champions, the only club never to have been relegated since the Bundesliga’s creation in 1963, were 1-0 down and on their way out with 90 minutes played at Karlsruhe until Chilean international Marcelo Diaz curled home a last-minute freekick to take the tie to extra time.

Then, with a penalty shoot out looming with just four minutes of the extra period remaining, Nicolai Mueller scored for the visitors, ensuring that Karlsruhe would need to score twice to gain promotion. Finally, Hamburg keeper Rene Adler sealed victory by saving a Rouwen Hennings penalty, awarded for handball, two minutes into stoppage time.

The late dramas ensured the former European champions narrowly maintained their proud record of being the only Bundesliga club never to have been relegated after 52 years in the top flight as they survived for the second straight year after another dismal season. “No one gave up,” declared Mueller, whose tap in secured the victory. “We did it. We’re still in the Bundesliga. We were carrying a lot of baggage all season and it feels great to unload that all in a few seconds now.”

Adler smiled: “I feel like I aged three years tonight. It’s incredible what we did in the last six weeks. A triumph of team spirit. “It was a crazy match and anything could have happened in a match like this. I was already thinking at the end of regulation time that we’d end up in the second division but caught myself and said ‘Stop, no that’s not going to happen’. “I always write to my friends and I say, ‘I think this is my last year,’ and then I do another one, so this is my 16th (match) and I’m real pleased that I could get through it.”

Thompson said Saturday’s performance was “not a 100% performance, but it was better than the second leg of the playoff after a goalless first leg in Hamburg.”

Paderborn and Freiburg were relegated to the second division at the end of the season last week while Ingolstadt and Darmstadt 98 secured promotion to the Bundesliga.

San Diego sees 92-year-old woman become world’s oldest female marathoner

SAN DIEGO, 2 June—A 92-year-old grandmother from North Carolina who is a two-time cancer survivor has become the oldest woman in the world to complete a marathon after finishing a 26.2-mile race in San Diego, organizers of the event said.

Harriette Thompson of Charlotte, North Carolina, finished the San Diego Rock ‘n’ Roll Marathon on Sunday in seven hours, 24 minutes and 36 seconds, said Dan Cruz, a spokesman for the race. The race gave Thompson, who is 92 years and more than 60 days old, the distinction of becoming the oldest woman to complete a marathon, Cruz said.

In 2010, Gladys Burrill who was then 92 years and 19 days old, completed the Honolulu marathon, according to Guinness World Records, which said it has not received an official application from Thompson for entry into the record books. Thompson, a two-time cancer survivor who began running marathons at age 76, has not ruled out competing again, Cruz said.

She runs to raise money to fight leukaemia and lymphoma.

“I always write to my friends and I say, ‘I think this is my last year,’ and then I do another one, so this is my 16th (match) and I’m real pleased that I could get through it,” Thompson told local television station KNSD, an NBC affiliate. The oldest man to complete a marathon was Greek runner Dimitrion Yordamidis, who ran in Athens in 1976 at age 98, according to Guinness World Records.—Reuters
SEA Games: Myanmar too good for Indonesia in football

SINGAPORE, 2 June — Myanmar’s Under-23 football team began their SEA Games campaign by beating Indonesia 4-2 at the Jalan Besar Stadium on Tuesday night.

Playing in red, Myanmar opened the scoring through Shane Thura on 20 minutes, who fired home from close range with his left boot. Si Thu Aung doubled the lead 18 minutes later with a header, before Indonesia pulled one back through Abdulf Lestaluhu, whose cross crept in at the far post on the stroke of halftime. Myanmar continued to dominate after the break, and scored a third through Si Thu Aung again.

A Substitute Kyaw Zin Lwin made it 4-1, before Ahmad Nufiandani reduced the deficit to two goals with a powerful finish from close range.

Coaches remarks

Gerd Zeise, Myanmar coach

Obviously we only had the power for one match. The European teams play in another league and we cannot follow. We are too blind and we do not have the experience, that’s absolutely clear. It was a disaster and this tournament has come too early for us. We cannot follow these teams, no chance. My team was too poor. It was just like the USA game, in the first 15-20 minutes of the second-half we gave the game away. We must be realists, the party is over. I must apologize to the Myanmar fans, I second-half we gave the game away. We must be realists, these teams, no chance. My team was too poor.

Oleksandr Petarakov, Ukraine coach

I’m very pleased with the game and the result. I had planned to bring [Valerii] Luchkevych at halftime ahead of the game, as we were lacking speed. We had agreed that he would start the second half and he really improved our game. Like in the New Zealand game, we struggled to score our chances in the first half, but this clearly changed after the break. That’s why we play football, to make people happy.

Americans outclass hosts to advance

AUCKLAND, 2 June — USA are through to the last 16 of the FIFA U-20 World Cup with a game to spare after a comprehensive 4-0 win over hosts New Zealand at Auckland’s North Harbour Stadium. The margin of victory in no way flattered Tab Ramos’s impressive side, who became the first side to advance to the knockout phase thanks to a brace from Rubio Rubin either side of goals from Emerson Hyndman and Paul Arriola.

The Americans were the more accomplished side from the very start and the warning signs were there for New Zealand when Arriola forced Oli Sail into an fine save inside five minutes. From the resultant corner, the deadlock was broken, with Rubin converting from a matter of centimetres after Bradford Jameson IV had turned a Matthew Miazga header towards goal.

The Junior All Whites looked vulnerable every time the USA attacked and had Sail to thank for keeping them in contention when he pulled off a tremendous save to tip away Cameron Carter-Vickers’ curling effort. But the Kiwi keeper soon went hero to villain. With 12 minutes until halftime, he spilled a seemingly routine through ball under pressure from Rubin, allowing Hyndman to gleefully take advantage with a low shot into the now-partially guarded net.

Saït went some way to atoning for his error two minutes into the second period when he denied the lively Rubin, but USA’s pressure was unrelenting and it was no surprise when they moved out of sight. The goal that made sure of the points was a thing of beauty too, with Paul Arriola racing through on to a fine pass from Gedi on Zelalem and drilling home an inch-perfect right-foot shot off the inside of the right-hand post.

New Zealand did carve out some late chances to claim a consolation, the best of which was headed wide by captain Bill Tuiloma. But their night of misery was rounded off with six minutes left to play when Rubin capitalised on defensive confusion to sneak in between Jesse Edge and Adam Mitchell and convert from close range.

The hosts will now hope for a big win in their final Group A match against Myanmar to keep alive their hopes of advancing, while USA can enjoy their encounter with Ukraine safe in the knowledge that their place is assured.—FIFA
