Newly opened bridge in Kyauktan cuts travel time to downtown Yangon

Yangon, 12 July—President U Thein Sein on Sunday opened a new bridge in Kyauktan Township, Yangon region, shortening the travel distance between the rural area and Yangon city and the amount of time it takes people to between the two places.

The Hmawwun Bridge, spanning 900 feet (274.32 metres), links Wegyi and Panchaung villages and helps people take a 15-mile motorway without passing through neighbouring Thongwa Township anymore to go to Yangon as the old route is more than 37 mile long to avoid Hmawwun creek.

The new route has reduced from 4 to 2 hours travel time between these villages and downtown Yangon. Local dignities said Kyauktan Township was divided into northern and southern parts due to separation of Hmawwun creek, causing transportation difficulties and lagging behind other neighbouring areas in health, education, business, agriculture, livestock and social development sectors.

They also wished President U Thein Sein’s to continue rural development programmes in the following years.

By Ko Moe, Aye Min Soe

Yangon, 12 July — The government has suggested that both employers and employees agree to the adoption of a proposed minimum wage on a trial basis in an attempt to break the deadlock between both sides over the issue. Union Minister for Labour, Employment and Social Security U Aye Myint told reporters on Sunday that the proposed minimum wage of K 3,600 per day set by a national-level body is a suitable rate given the current situation of the country, saying the law allows both sides to amend the wage in the future if it does not work well. Myanmar garment factory owners on 2 July unanimously voted against the minimum wage of K3,600 for an eight-hour day and pledged to send their objections to the National Minimum Wage Committee within two weeks.

The vote was participated in by more than 200 businessmen from 145 garment factories attending a meeting at the Republic of the Union of Myanmar Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry, at which they discussed the challenges they face in meeting the proposed minimum wage, which was announced by the government on 29 June.

About 30 factories with foreign investment even expressed their intent to shut down in September if the proposed minimum wage takes effect on 1 September. (See page 3)

After slavery, trafficked fishermen face lonely road to recovery

PHNOM PENH, 12 July — When hundreds of fishermen were rescued from a life of slavery on Thai fishing boats off the coast of Indonesia earlier this year, the world took notice.

Trafficked and sold to work on the boats, the men — mostly from Myanmar and Cambodia — had endured beatings, abuse and torture.

After they were freed, however, they had little support to help them recover from the horrors they had experienced.

“Everyone is shocked when they hear about the conditions on these fishing boats — but then what? No money is available to help them after they’ve been rescued,” said Lisa Rende Taylor, director of Project Isarra, a public-private alliance to tackle trafficking in Southeast Asia’s supply chains.

Donor countries in the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development allocate about $120 million each year to combat modern slavery — a sum dwarfed by the $150 billion in estimated profits each year from the human trafficking industry.

Governments and donors mostly fund support for women and girls trafficked for sex, but there is little money for male trafficking survivors, many of whom have suffered and witnessed extreme violence.

Trafficked fishermen are forced to work up to 20 hours a day, endure beatings and sexual assault, and have seen injured colleagues thrown overboard and left to drown, researchers have found.

Deprived of pay, those able to return home are penniless, making them feel worthless.

“Male survivors tend to feel a crushing sense of shame that they, as breadwinners, come back with nothing,” said Nicola Pocock, a researcher at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine.

“A lot of them return to poor rural areas and find limited job opportunities, which is why they migrated in the first place,” said Pocock, who co-authored the largest ever study into the health of trafficking victims in Southeast Asia, published earlier this year.

The study found that 57 percent of men trafficked for work on fishing boats and other forms of forced labour showed symptoms of depression, while 46 percent suffered from anxiety and 41 percent were affected by post-traumatic stress disorder.

After many years away, some trafficked fishermen find their wives have remarried and their families have long assumed they had died because no money was ever sent home.

The welcome home may be mixed, said Mike Nowlin, of Hagar Cambodia, a charity that helps rescued Cambodian fishermen find work, deal with their trauma and reunite with their families.

“Often families don’t understand the horrific environment that the survivors were in, and are only aware that their family members were not sending money home as promised,” Nowlin said.

“They (the men) may be asked why they were away for three, five or 10 years and bring home nothing to go home at all for fear of rejection or because they may have been unable to contact their relatives.”

Daren Coulston, an Australia-based anti-slavery campaigns, which has provided assistance for trafficked Indonesian fishermen, said many were reluctant to discuss their trauma.

“I learned that many of them had been cheated of the wages, subjected to beatings and in some cases, sexually assaulted by the ships’ officers,” Coulston said.

“It’s hard to talk about these experiences for men. Most of them rather pretend it never happened,” said Coulston, a former deep-sea fisherman.

“But for their mental health, they need all the help and support they can get.”

Rende Taylor said a lack of assistance for male trafficking survivors made them highly vulnerable to fall prey to traffickers again.

The dearth of funds for support prompted Project Isarra to seek direct online donations from the public through a crowdfunding website.

One young man, who asked not to be named, was trafficked to Thailand from Myanmar by a relative at the age of eight, and says without counselling and specialized support, he would not have been able to survive.

For years, he was forced to beg on the streets, beaten and starved. He was 12 when he first came here, always angry and breaking things,” he said at Hagar’s Phnom Penh office.

Now 25, he is studying psychology in Phnom Penh and wants to open a charity for trafficked children.

“The counselling and the chance to reflect in a safe environment really helped me to deal with what I had lived through,” says Coulston. “It’s really important to have that kind of help.”

Sri Lanka’s ruling party signs key deal with coalition partners for polls

COLOMBO, 12 July — Sri Lanka’s ruling party, the United National Party (UNP), on Sunday signed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with its partners in a newly formed political alliance to contest Parliament elections scheduled for next month.

The United National Party signed the MOU with its new partners, formally creating the United National Front (UNF) for Good Governance.

UNP leader and Prime Minister Ranil Wickremesinghe, UNP Chairman Mahinda Samarawickreme and UNP General Secretary Kabir Hashem signed the MOU on behalf of the UNP.

General Secretary of the National Heritage Party, also known as the Jathi-ka Hela Urumaya, Patali Champika Ranawaka and Champika Karunatilake of the party, the venerable Athureiyaya Rathana thero signed the MOU on behalf of the National Heritage Party.

Members of the opposition Sri Lanka Freedom Party breakaway faction and civil society members also signed the MOU with the UNF.

The United National Party had on Saturday proposed and later agreed to register the United National Front after the 17 August Parliament election.

The UNP, at a special convention, agreed on the proposal to also contest the Parliament elections set for next month as the United National Front for Good Governance under the elephant symbol, including members from other political parties who have extended support to the UNP.

The proposal was made by UNP General Secretary Kabir Hashem and a vote was later taken by UNP leader Ranil Wickremesinghe. Wickremesinghe announced that the proposal had been adopted following a majority vote at the 17 August Parliament election with Ranil Wickremesinghe as the Prime Ministerial candidate.

Thailand returns ancient artifacts to Cambodia

BANGKOK, 12 July — The Thai government on Saturday held a ceremony for returning 16 ancient artifacts to Cambodia in compliance with an anti-smuggling agreement, Thai Foreign Minister Tanasak Patimapragnon said.

According to the Thai Department of Fine Arts, the 16 pieces were made sometime between the 15th and 17th centuries and had been illegally smuggled into Thailand.

Thailand and Cambodia recently celebrated the 65th anniversary of diplomatic relations, and the return of the artifacts would help to strengthen the relationship between the two neighbours, Tanasak said.

Cambodian Foreign Minister Hor Namhong, currently on a three-day official visit to Thailand, witnessed the ceremony at the Thai Foreign Ministry.

“The relationship between Thailand and Cambodia is at its best now,” Tanasak stated.

France says “decision time” has come in Iran nuclear talks

VIENNA, 12 July — France’s foreign minister appeared to put pressure on the United States and Iran on Saturday to speed up nuclear talks, saying all issues were now on the table and that the time had come to make a decision.

Western and Iranian diplomats close to the talks said they expected to work well into the night in hopes of a breakthrough, perhaps as early as on Sunday, on a deal to bring sanctions relief for Tehran in exchange for curbs on its atomic programme.

Iran and the six powers involved in the talks — Britain, China, France, Germany, Russia and the United States — have given themselves until Monday to reach a deal, their third extended deadline in two weeks, as the Iranian delegation accused the West of throwing up new stumbling blocks to an accord.

“Now that everything is on the table, the moment has come to decide,” French Foreign Minister Laurent Fabius told a meeting with Iranian art officials speaking on condition of anonymity.

However, a senior Western diplomat said earlier in the week the six powers remained united, despite Moscow’s and Beijing’s well-known dislike of the embargos.

Western powers have long suspected Iran of aiming to build nuclear bombs and using its civilian atomic energy programme to cloak its intentions — an accusation Iran strongly denies.

Other problematic issues in the talks are access for inspectors to military sites in Iran, answers from Tehran over past activity and the overall speed of sanctions relief.

“Still have difficult issues to resolve,” Kerry tweeted on Saturday after meeting Zarif.

The two men have met nearly every day since Kerry arrived in Vienna on Friday that the United States and its partners "have never been closer" on a platform of improving Iran’s relations with the world as well as its sickly oil-based economy, was quoted by Iran’s Nasim news agency as saying talks could succeed or fail.

"Even if the nuclear talks fail, our diplomacy has showed the world that we are logical. We never left the negotiation table and always provided the best answer," Nasim quoted Rouhani as saying during a meeting with Iranian artists.

“Twenty-two months of negotiation means we have managed to charm the world, and it’s an art,” he was quoted as saying.

Kerry told reporters late on Friday that the atmosphere in the talks was constructive.

“A couple of differences have been decided ... It’s safe to say we have made progress,” he said, without giving any details.

Fabius and Hammond returned to Vienna on Saturday and a US official said that Kerry had spoken by telephone with Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov, who was not in Vienna.

In the last few days the talks have become bogged down, with diplomats speaking of a shouting match between Kerry and Zarif.

The White House said on Friday that the United States and its partners "have never been closer" to a deal than with Iran but that the US delegation would not wait indefinitely.

A senior Iranian official speaking on condition of anonymity said on Thursday the United States and other Western powers were shifting their positions and backtracking on 2 April interim accord made progress," he said, without giving any details.

TOKYO, 12 July — Chief Cabinet Secretary Yoshihide Suga on Sunday defended the approval given by former Okinawa Gov. Takeshi Onaga for land reclamation to build a US military base, saying the procedures for giving the green light was “flawless.”

The central government “obtained the approval after applying for it based on legitimate procedures and Mr. Nakamura thoroughly examined” the application, the top government spokesman said during a recording of a television programme.

Nakamura’s successor Toshiko Oshita, who took office last December, is expected to cancel the land reclamation approval granted in December 2013 after his advisory panel releases a report later this month, concluding the procedure for giving approval was flawed, according to sources close to the matter.

Onaga has vowed to take every possible measure to block the central government’s plan to build a replacement facility on reclaimed land in Nago’s Henoko area to transfer functions of the US Marine Corps Futenma Air Station, which is located in a crowded residential area in Ginowan in the prefecture.

Suga declined to comment on how the central government would respond if Onaga cancels the approval, saying he “cannot answer a hypothetical question.”

Euro zone demands more from Greece, delays decision on aid

BRUSSELS, 12 July — Sceptical euro zone finance ministers demanded on Saturday that Greece go beyond painful austerity measures accepted by Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras if he wants them to open negotiations on a third bailout for its bankrupt country to keep it in the euro.

The ministers postponed until Sunday a decision on whether to recommend starting talks on a new loan for Athens and sought further commitments first on product market liberalization, labour laws, privatization, state reform and more defence cuts, plus a promise to pass key laws next week, officials said.

The Eurogroup session will resume on Sunday, five hours before heads of state and government of the 19-nation currency area are to meet to decide on Greece’s fate in the euro zone.

After the nine-hour session adjourned at midnight, Eurogroup chairman Jeroen Dijsselbloem told reporters the talks were very difficult and would resume at 11 am (1000 BST).

“Ideally we also can get more commitment on the other 18 ministers that the leftist government in Athens must take further steps to convince them it would honour any new promises and repay its debts. Tsipras won parliamentary backing early on Saturday for a tough reform package that largely mirrored measures previously demanded by international creditors but rejected by Greek voters at his behest in a referendum last Sunday.”

Wolfgang Schaeuble, finance minister of top creditor Germany and stickler for the EU’s fiscal rules, said negotiations would be “exceptionally difficult”. Emerging optimism about Greece had been “destroyed in an incredible way in the last few months” since Tsipras won power, he said.

Some ministers were pressing Athens to legislate as early as Monday, notably to raise the value-added tax.

A German paper, which Schaeuble presented in the meeting, demanded that Athens transfer state assets worth 50 billion euros into a trust fund to pay down debt, or take a five-year “time-out” from the euro zone during which some of its debt would be written off.

The document, seen by Reuters and first reported by Wetter Allgemeine Sonntagszeitung, said the Greek proposals still lacked “paramount important reform areas” and wrote: “We need a better sustainable solution.”

Several officials said no one explicitly raised the possibility of a Greek euro exit in the meeting.

Other ministers spoke of a fundamental lack of trust after years of broken promises and six months of erratic and provocative behaviour by the radical leftfist Tsipras government.

Finland’s state broadcaster YLE reported that the Finnish government had told parliament’s influential Grand Committee on Saturday it did not consider the Greek proposal sufficient to start negotiations on a new loan.

The government declined to comment. Helsinki’s stance has hardened since the populist Finns Party joined a right-wing coalition that took office in May. —Reuters

Cuba’s economic potential attracts entrepreneurs from Europe, China

HAVANA, 12 July — The market-oriented reforms in Cuba and its improved ties with the United States have made the Caribbean country an attractive destination for business delegations from Europe and China in the past few weeks.

Spain’s Minister for Industry, Energy and Tourism Jose Manuel Soria, and Italian Vice Minister for Economic Development Carlo Calenda visited Cuba this week with business groups, following delegations from France, Britain and the Netherlands. A delegation from China’s first and most successful special economic zone Shenzhen City visited the island from 30 June to 1 July.

Soria, who was here to boost his country’s trade and investment in Cuba in various sectors, said that the economic reforms launched by Cuban President Raul Castro is “marking the correct path.”

Raul Castro introduced measures to reform the national economy soon after taking office in 2008, in a bid to build Cuba into a “Prosperous and Sustainable Socialist Nation.”

Cuba’s Council of Ministers agreed to extend the experiment to private sectors at a meeting in June.

The aim of the Spanish minister’s visit, together with 75 business representatives, was to support Spanish companies interested in establishing themselves in Cuba.

“A new era full of opportunities is beginning in Cuba and Spanish companies can contribute their accumulated experiences in various fields such as industry, tourism, energy, telecommunications and infrastructure,” said Soria.

In June, the Spanish Company of Financing and Development (COFIDES) decided to provide Spanish companies with 40 million euros (around 44 million US dollars) before 2017 for them to invest in Cuba and more fund will be available in the future, said Jaime Garcia Legaz, Spain’s Secretary of State for Trade, who came together with Soria.

Spain is Cuba’s third largest trading partner after Venezuela and China and has around 200 enterprises mainly in the island’s tourism sector.

Italy, also aspiring to explore business potential in Cuba, sent a delegation of 150 businessmen to Cuba earlier this week, led by the country’s Vice Economic Minister Carlo Calenda.

It is the largest group of Italian entrepreneurs to have ever visited Cuba, Cuban news agency Prensa Latina (PL) cited Calenda as saying.

Like Europe, China also holds an optimistic view as to the potential of the Cuban economy.

For China, Cuba is not only a market full of opportunities, but also essential to a greater Latin American market given its geographical location, said Chinese Ambassador to Cuba Zhang Tao. "A Shenzhen delegation led by Mayor Xu Qin visited Havana earlier this month to further strengthen cooperation in several areas, including investment, biotechnology, public transportation and infrastructure.

During the visit, Shenzhen-based battery maker and electric vehicle producer BYD won its biggest order since it entered the Cuban market last year: 719 gasoline-powered cars. The delegation also met with Carlos Manuel Gutierrez Calzado, president of BiotCubaFarma, the biggest biotechnology and pharmaceutical group in Cuba, to discuss the details of further cooperation.

Preceding the Shenzhen delegation, Chinese Vice Premier Wang Yang visited the island in late May, when he called for strengthened planning in cooperation between the two countries on infrastructure, bio-tech, agriculture and renewable energy, as well as efforts to explore industrial and investment cooperation potentials. —Xinhua
Islamist rebel handed over to Uganda from Tanzania: army spokesman

KAMPALA, 12 July — A Ugandan Islamist rebel leader accused of heading a group that has killed hundreds of people was handed over to Uganda after being extradited from Tanzania, an army spokesman said.

Jamil Mukulu has been described as head of the Allied Democratic Forces (ADF), an organization accused of a string of attacks in western Uganda and the Ugandan capital Kampala that killed 1,000 people between 1998 and 2000.

“He’s waiting to face justice for his crimes,” Ugandan army military spokesman Paddy Ankunda told Reuters, adding that Mukulu had arrived in Uganda on Friday.

Mukulu, a Ugandan national, was arrested in Tanzania in late April and had previously said he would challenge extradition.

He is also wanted in connection with fighting in neighbouring Democratic Republic of Congo and Uganda’s government has said his organization is linked to Somalia’s al-Shabaab militants.

Mukulu has been under UN sanction since 2011, and rights groups say the ADF is responsible for executions, kidnapings, torture and rape and has profited from lucrative cross-border trade in timber and minerals in eastern Congo.

The Congolese army launched a major operation against the ADF last year, saying they had significantly weakened the group, leaving it with as few as 50 fighters.

Bombing and heavy fighting break Yemen truce — residents

SANAA / ADEN, 12 July — Saudi-led air strikes and heavy shelling between warring factions shook several cities in Yemen on Saturday, residents said, violating a United Nations humanitarian truce which took effect just before midnight.

The UN-brokered pause in the fighting was meant to last a week to allow aid deliveries to the country’s 21 million people who have endured more than three months of bombing and civil war.

A coalition of Arab states has been bombing the Iranian-allied Houthi rebel movement — Yemen’s dominant force — since late March in a bid to restore to power President Abd-Rabbu Mansour Hadi, who has fled to Riyadh.

That coalition said on Saturday that the Yemeni government in exile had not asked it to pause, according to a news flash on Sanaa-owned Arabiya TV.

Yemeni government officials were not immediately available to comment, but the UN Secretary General’s office said before the truce that President Hadi had “communicated his acceptance of the pause to the coalition to ensure their support.”

Air raids pounded Houthi and Yemeni army units in the capital Sanaa and in the group’s stronghold province of Saada along the border with Saudi Arabia.

Fighting raged in the embattled southern city of Taiz and the eastern prov-ince of Mareb amid intensive artillery exchanges between Houthi fighters and local militiamen backed up by Arab air strikes.

In Aden, one of the country’s most deprived and war-torn areas, witnesses said Houthi forces fired mortars and Katyusha rockets towards opposition fighters based in northern areas and around the city’s international airport.

Bombing by the Arab alliance and fighting have killed more than 3,000 people since 26 March.

The Houthis, who hail from the Shi’ite Muslim sect, and their army allies say their spread throughout the country is part of a revo-lution against a corrupt govern-ment and hardline Sunni Muslim militants which they say are allied to the opposition forces, and they vowed to keep up the fight despite the truce.

“The security and armed forces maintain their right to fight and hunt down al-Qaeda and Islamic State elements as part of our just defence of our country,” Colonel Shugabu Laugnam, spokesperson for the Houthi-allied army, said in a statement on Saturday.

Supplies of food, fuel and medicine have dwindled dangerously because of the fighting and a near-blockade by the coalition, spreading disease and hunger.

“There have been very heavy air strikes and fighting across the coun-try, seemingly unabated.” UNICEF’s Yemen representative Julienne Harnes said.

But while the fighting mostly doesn’t stop humani-tarian aid being delivered to affected areas, the tragic thing is that it does impede the civilian population from going the last mile and be-ing able to reach that assis-tance,” he added.

Local officials in Aden said that Houthi fighters had allowed 25 trucks of med-ical aid into the besieged city on Saturday, but were holding up 40 other trucks full of food. All parties in Yemen’s conflict had wel-comed the announcement of the truce and called for it to be extended.

The Western-backed government wants the Houthis to release prisoners and give up land they have seized in battle, while the Houthis say they doubt any calm will last.

Residents in the eastern city of Mukalla said a suspected US drone fired two missiles at cars carry-ing al-Qaeda militants on Friday night, killing three including a senior leader in the group, Abu Hajjar al-Hadrami.

Washington fears turmoil in Yemen will strengthen al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP), the deadliest branch of the global militant group.

Tripoli parliament stays away from signing of Libya peace agreement

SKHIRAT, 12 July — Some Libyan warring factions signed an initial United Nations-sponsored agreement on Sunday to form a unity government and end fighting, but a key player from a parliament controlling the capital Tripoli stayed away.

Western officials say the UN-brokered deal was an opportunity to stop fighting among factions allied to the oil producer’s two governments and parliaments vying for power four years after the ousting of Muammar Gaddafi.

An armed alliance known as Libya Dawn took over Tripoli and declared its own govern-ment and parliament a year ago, driving out the country is part of a revo-lution against a corrupt govern-ment and hardline Sunni Muslim militants which they say are allied to the opposition forces, and they vowed to keep up the fight despite the truce.

“This agreement will bring a step, an important step in the road of peace in Libya,” UN Special Envoy Bernardino Leon told the ceremony attended by Arab and Western diplomats.

“Let me enhance one message: The doors will remain open for those who have chosen not to be here,” he added. But while delegates from the elected parliament, the House of Representatives based in the east, signed the deal, the Tripoli-based parlia-ment, the General National Congress (GNC), refused to attend.

“We are still in the di-a-logue, but we don’t real-ly understand why they are rushing to sign before all the parties agree,” Mowafaq Hawas, a GNC representative in Morocco, told Reuters. Some representa-tives from municipalities in Tripoli and in the western city of Misrata allied to Libya Dawn signed the deal. Un-der the plan, Libya will get a one-year government of national accord. A coun-cil of ministers headed by a prime minister and two deputies would have exec-utive authority. The House of Representatives would be the legislative body, a decision against the GNC. The fac-tions have yet to agree on details.

Diplomats say both governments face pressure from hardliners who favour a military solution.

Islamic State militants have exploited the pow-er struggle by increasing their presence in Libya as they did in Syria, Iraq and Egypt. The group has exe-cuted dozens of Christians and attacked embassies.

US Special Envoy for Libya, Jonathan Winer, played down the absence of the GNC. “There are only four of the delegates who did not sign,” he told Reu ters. “There is an opportu-nity for those who have not yet initialed this agreement to come aboard.” — Reuters

TRANSITION PERIOD

Let us explore the ways how we can best transform Myanmar:

• They conquer by strategy.

The future depends on what we do in the present.

• They conquer by strategy.

A lack of transformation in the private sector.

As many Myanmar generations passed through authoritarism, criticism is responded with aggressive and belligerent manners, with intrinsic nature and belief and without reviewing themselves. No one can see their images with their bare eyes. Any reflecting objects will be needed to see their images which may be real or virtual. But we should not blame on the reflecting objects around us as they are revealing what we are happening.

Heineken’s return to Myanmar marked with opening of $60 million brewery in Hmawby

By Ye Myint

YANGON, 12 July — Dutch brewing giant Heineken marked its return to Myanmar after an absence of 20 years with the opening of a new $60 million brewery in Hmawby near the country’s commercial capital Yangon on Sunday.

Heineken, one of the world largest beer companies, will be brewing and selling one brand for the local market as well as Heineken through a joint venture between its subsidiary Asia Pacific Breweries Limited and local partner Alliance Brewery Company Limited.

The brewery has a production capacity of 330,000 hectolitres a year and employs more than 200 local people, said Heineken, which has a controlling 57 stake in the venture.

When asked about its sales target and prices, Mr. Jean-Francois van Boxmeier, chairman of the executive board and CEO of Heineken, replied “as much as we can”.

The new plant will brew a new local brand, Regal Seven, priced very close to existing local beers, and also Heineken for the premium market and priced accordingly, said Mr. Lester Tan, managing director of their joint venture, APB Alliance Brewery Company Limited.

Myanmar’s beer consumption per capita is low at 3 litres per head on average, compared to the 70 litres of some European countries and 20 litres of some neighbouring countries, so there is a big opportunity for the company to win market share, van Boxmeier said.

Northern command court sentences soldier to 7-year imprisonment for misconduct

NAI PYI TAW, 12 July — Military court of northern command of Kachin state last month sentenced its soldier to a seven-year imprisonment on three charges of misconduct which could lead to suspicion and mistrust between Tatmataw and people, according to the report of Myawady media on Sunday.

The military-run media said locals accused the soldier from a command in Bhamo township, Kachin state, of trespassing, rape and murder attempt on a 73-year-old woman.

While the military officials are making investigation into the accusation, the Kachin Baptist Convention (KBC), a local religious humanitarian aid group, took to street against the case.

The investigation panel found that the soldier just visited the woman who has been familiar with him, and no rape case happened in the forensic test.

However, the military court sentenced the soldiers to seven years to be served at civil prison for his misconduct after court hearings attended by local people, his relatives and members of KBC.

The Defence Services has warned it will take legal actions against the offenders who undermine trust between the military and the public. —Myawady

  Total Democracy Practices mean:
  - Personal democratic practices
  - Interpersonal democratic practices
  - Managerial democratic practices
  - Organizational democratic practices
  - National democratic practices

In Total Democracy PRACTICES, Win-Win or Mutual Benefits principle should be practiced.

China on track to eradicate malaria by 2020

GENEVA, 12 July — The Roll Back Malaria (RBM) Partnership recently released its new strategies to guide global efforts toward malaria elimination targets, an ambition aligned with the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) which are set to be implemented at the end of this year, saying China is on track to eradicate malaria by 2020.

This comes amid promising public health statistics which indicate that there has been a 58 percent reduction of malaria mortality and over 6.2 million deaths averted since 2000. Complementing the World Health Organization’s (WHO) Global Technical Strategy for Malaria 2016-2030, RBM’s Action and Investment to Defeat Malaria 2016-2030 comes at a critical juncture for the global fight against the potentially fatal disease.

“When we established RBM 20 years ago, the world was facing the challenge of HIV and AIDs, and it was a very different context,” said WHO Global Malaria Programme Director Pedro Alonso.

China, whose target is to eliminate malaria by 2020, has not only reported a dramatic decline in malaria cases over the last decades, but also played a pivotal role in global disease-control efforts.

“China has made a wonderful contribution to malaria-control by making Artemisinin amna, through which Artemisinin combination therapy has been developed, available to the world,” RBM Executive Director Fouatunata Nafo-Traore told Xinhua. Artemisinin, also known as Qingshao, was first isolated from the Chinese traditional plant Artemisia annua, and the drug is currently the most effective at combating malaria, a life-threatening disease caused by parasites that are transmitted to people through the bites of infected mosquitoes.

According to experts, China, along with Cambodia and Vietnam, is set to eliminate malaria by 2020, while other countries of the Great Mekong region are expected to eradicate the disease by 2025.

China’s recent efforts together with unprecedented global achievements are a good starting point for WHO’s ambition to reduce malaria case incidence and deaths by 90 percent where the population lives in eliminating the disease in at least an additional 35 countries by 2030.

“Unfortunately, therefore, not even in the first eradication campaign of the late 1950s, have we seen such breadth and depth in the disease reduction, with a fall of disease incidence of 37 percent, and a reduction of 69 percent of under-five mortality in African children,” Alonso highlighted.

Despite these trends, WHO estimates that there have been over 100,000 malaria infections in 2015, resulting in 472,000 deaths from a disease which is both preventable and treatable.

“60 million malaria cases still go undiagnosed and untreated, and 50 percent of populations at risk in Africa do not have access to life-saving bed-nets,” added Alonso.

According to estimates, more than 100 billion US dollars is needed over the next 15 years to achieve 2030 targets, while an additional 10 billion dollars is required to fund the research and development of new tools such as drugs and insecticides.

Nafo-Traore emphasized the importance of prevention through bed-nets, indoor spraying, and integrated vector management as well as rapid diagnostic tests for all patients with suspected malaria.

“Malaria is not only a health issue, it is an issue for development,” she said, adding that for every dollar invested in the fight against malaria, a $3 dollar return is to be expected.

“Investing to achieve the new 2030 malaria goals will mean an additional 3 billion US dollars and case over 10 million lives,” said Nafo-Traore, while highlighting the economic incentives as the world is expected to generate an additional 4 trillion dollars over the 15 year timeframe.

World leaders are to discuss both WHO’s and RBM’s strategies during the Third International Conference on Financing for Development in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, starting on 13 July—Xinhua

Gold pares gains as Yellen signals a 2015 rate hike

NEW YORK / LONDON, 12 July — Gold gave up earlier gains on Tuesday after US Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen said she expected the central bank to raise interest rates sometime this year but pointed to concerns that US labour markets remain weak.

In a speech that cautioned about the status of workers as well as some international risks, Yellen gave no direct hint about whether she anticipated more than one rate hike over the Fed’s four remaining meetings in 2015.

“(It) looks like a proba- ble interest rate hike sched- uled for this year, with or without Greece,” said George Gero, precious met- als strategist for RBC Cap-

SUVs built from March 2012 have struts placed differently and are less susceptible to dust particles, GM said.

The company has 56 reports of injuries, GM said in an emailed statement on Friday.

Outlook from 2007-2010, GM said in documents filed with US safety regulators.

SUVs can hit gas struts that hold up the gate, causing them to wear and fail, the company said.

But actual price cus-tomers pay when buying cars have fallen steadily from 2012 to slightly less than 170,000 yuan, chiefly because of heavy discounting by dealers, according to JATO Dynamics.

At Mercedes-Benz stores operated by a dealer group with nearly 200 multiple brand outlets, customer traffic in auto showrooms has dwindled markedly since mid-June, when the stock market slide that saw indexes plunge by as much as a third began.

A senior manager at that dealer chain said customers were interested in some of its Mercedes-Benz stores was “down 20 percent to 30 per cent” compared with last year’s levels over the past month.

Sales were still increasing at some stores, but it was taking a lot more effort and often heavy discounting to move them off the lot, he said.

A Beijing-based spokesman for Mercedes-Benz owner Daimler AG referred to its relatively strong sales growth rates for China for the first six months of 2015, during which he said sales grew 4.1 percent. The spokesman did not elaborate.

Taiwan courts tech start-ups to drive economic growth

Taipei, 12 July — Companies such as electric motor scooter firm Gogoro could hold the key to Tai- wan’s economic growth.

In just three years, the start-up, which counts Ja- pan’s Panasonic Corp as a strategic partner and Cher Wang, the founder of local smartphone maker HTC Corp as a key investor, raised $150 million to de- velop a phone-synched bike, and a charging network for it. The Smartscooters went on sale last month, starting at around $4,100.

Gogoro’s success in creating a home-grown, in- novative product is precisely what Taiwan govern- ment wants to foster as it seeks to reduce the ex- port-driven economy’s re- liance on the island’s world-class tech manufac- turing sector.

These tech firms, which include HTC, the world’s biggest contract chip maker Taiwan Semi- conductor Manufacturing Co Ltd and iphone maker Hon Hai Precision Industry Co Ltd, also give Taiwan an advantage over the many other regions vying to nurture tech start- ups. “We hope our policies can help a start-up at its most difficult stage of all — the beginning — so it can go the way of Gogoro,” said Jan Fang-guan, an of- ficial with the government National Development Coun- cil (NDC). Tech manufac- turing accounts for a third of all Taiwan’s industrial output, but two years ago, the NDC recognized growth in this sector was plateauing as firms lose out to cheaper, Chinese rivals.

In June, exports shrink by the most in more than two years — and for the fifth consecutive month — as shipments of tech goods and demand from major trading partner China fell sharply.

In a bid to stabilize trade and make the econo- my more “creativity-intensive”, the NDC a year ago set up HeadStart, a project dedicated to creating a lo- cal Silicon Valley-style en- vironments for registering start-ups, matching funds invested into projects and creating tech hubs.

HeadStart has attract- ed some $13.6 billion ($438 million) in funds so far this year, Jan said.

Cjin Cheng, who man- ages Taiwan for US-based start-up fund 500 Startups, said the island’s estab- lished tech scene and glob- al connections would help entrepreneurs from overseas to find champions in China, where Internet access is largely restricted.

“If you can build out easily if you want to,” she said. An educated and young population also work in Taiwan’s favour: during a visit in March, Jack Ma, the founder of Chinese e-commerce giant Alibaba Group Holding, said he wanted to set up a $1.5 billion fund to sup- port tech startups, matching the authori- ties as political ties with China remain uneasy.

Taiwan’s big tech firms mobilize tech talent from overseas as a way to cut off from the Internet. “They are always thinking about the next thing. That’s the default lunchtime conversation,” said Fan, who previously worked at Qualcomm.

HTC, once one of the world’s biggest smart- phone makers, also inad- vertently launched the local start-up scene a boost: it hired several entrepreneurs during its heyday, but many have since left to set up on their own as HTC lost its competitive edge.

Gogoro’s co-founders Horace Luke and Matt Taylor through providing as- sistance to foreigners during disasters, we hope to build cooperative relationships with foreign firms, universities,” a spokesper- son at Mitsui Sumitomo In- surance said.

Through an agreement with the operator of Narita airport near Tokyo, the company plans to deliver guidance functions through the airport’s informational app for foreign visitors, called “Tabimori.”

Taiwan’s Smartscooter is aimed at tourists and ex- pats, and aims to be used by authorities and universities on board to encourage use of the multilingual version.

New smartphone app aims to keep foreign visitors safe in disasters

A smartphone shows a new application produced by Mitsu Sumitomo Insurance Co to help guide people during natural disasters in Japan to safety in English, Chinese and Korean.

The app will be available for free download in late July 2015, aimed at tourists and exchange students from over- seas.

The Japanese version of the app has amassed more than 500,000 down- loads since its launch in 2012.

The multilingual ver- sion will have the same functions as the original, which provides maps mark- ing nearby evacuation cen- ters that can be accessed even when smartphones are cut off from the Internet.

Mitsui Sumitomo In- surance has reached agree- ments with seven local au- thorities across Japan to publicize centers’ locations through the Japanese version of the app. The company now plans to get more regional authorities and universities on board to encourage use of the multilingual version.

Pluto shows first sign of geology to approaching New Horizons

Los Angeles, 12 July — As the latest image from the New Horizons spacecraft appeared on Fri- day, scientists are just start- ing to see Pluto’s geology. Mission scientists now agree the the newest black and white image in the morning on Friday from Long Range Reconnaissance Imager (LORRI) aboard New Ho- rizons.

At this range, Pluto is beginning to reveal signs of signs of distant geologic features, NASA said in a statement.

The latest port- trait, which was taken on Thursday from 5.4 million kilometers away, with a resolution of 27 kilometres per pixel, scientists are able to identify distant surface formations, including a polygonal complex band of terrain stretching east-north across the planet. The band is about 4,000 miles long, and an immense dark band near the south pole that’s now being called the “whale”.

“We’re close enough now that we’re just starting to see Pluto’s geology,” said New Horizons pro- gram scientist Curt Niebur. “It’s a unique transition region with a lot of dynam- ic processes interacting, which makes it of partic- ular scientific interest.”

There will no doubt be many similar moments to come.

New images and data are being gathered each day as New Horizons speeds closer to a flyby of Pluto next week, following a journey of 3 billion miles.

Pluto’s closest ap- proach is scheduled for next Tuesday, when New Horizons will pass within 10,000 km of the dwarf planet’s surface, travelling at a speed of 43,000 km per hour.

After a voyage of nine years, New Horizons is al- most 4.8 billion km away, where radio signals, even traveling at light speed, need 4.5 hours to reach Earth. Round trip commu- nication between the space- craft and its operators re- quires about nine hours. —Kyodo News

Graphene-based microphone mimics bat’s ultrasound

San Francisco, 12 July — A group of researchers with University of California at Berkeley have de- veloped a microphone and a speaker that can pick up and emit ultrasound like bats and dolphins do with their unique communication sys- tem.

In achieving the goal, enabling humans to hear and talk through thick ob- jects and underwater, the US team used a material known as graphene, instead of the more traditional ones like paper and plastic.

Bats and dolphins emit sounds at very high fre- quency and at much longer range than the human ear can detect and can locate objects and communicate using these pulsating sounds. Dr Qin Zhou, a postdoctoral student at UC Berkeley’s physics department, told Xinhua that the idea had been studied for a long time, but the technolo- gy was not available until graphene use was set.

Zhou was part of the re- search team led by the study’s senior author Alex Zettl to work on the device.

Zhou explained that “speakers and phones use diaphragms, that vibrate and create or detect sounds when we speak or hear sound.”

Two years ago, he built loudspeakers using a sheet of graphene for the dia- phragm, and since has been developing the electronic circuitry to build a micro- phone with a similar graphene diaphragm. Typi- cally, diaphragms are made of paper or plastic, like those in our phone’s speak- ers, but the team used graphene instead of the tra- ditional materials.

Thanks to graphene’s composition, he said, the team was able to make the diaphragm “extremely light and thin,” enabling it to vibrate more intensively to receive and detect at much higher fidelity.

The graphene-based membrane picks up the sound by using 99 percent of the device’s energy, whereas regular speakers use eight percent. When used for communications, the possibilities are believed to be endless. —Xinhua
Mexican kingpin ‘Chapo’ Guzman escapes prison for second time

MEXICO CITY, 12 July — Mexico’s most notorious drug lord Joaquin “El Chapo” Guzman has escaped from a high security prison in central Mexico, officials said on Sunday, the second time he has given his captors the slip in 15 years.

Guzman, who headed Mexico’s notorious Sinaloa Cartel and once made it on to Forbes’ list of billionaires, was arrested last year. He last escaped from prison in 2001 after a prior capture in 1993.

Guzman was seen on video entering a shower area at 8.52 pm local time on Saturday, Mexico’s national security commission (CNS) said in a statement. After he went out of view for a while, guards entered his cell to find it empty.

The CNS statement gave no details on how Guzman had managed to escape, and a government spokesman could not immediately provide further clarity on the matter.

National Security Commissioner Monte Alejandro Rubido is due to give a statement at 7 am, the interior ministry said. Flights have been suspended from the city of Toluca’s airport, near the Altiplano prison, and security officers have started searching roads near the site in the State of Mexico, about 90 km (60 miles) west of the capital, the CNS said.

Guzman became one of the world’s most powerful organized crime bosses, running a cartel that smuggled billions of dollars worth of cocaine, marijuana and methamphetamine into the United States and fought vicious turf wars with other Mexican gangs.

In 2001, the drug lord escaped the Puente Grande prison, near the city of Guadalajara. According to reports at the time, he left hiding in a laundry cart.

More than 150 Poles hospitalized after taking drug: police

WARSAW, 12 July — More than 150 people have been hospitalized after taking a drug called “strongman” in southern Poland, police said on Sunday.

Patients, many of them from the town of Katowice in the industrial Silesia region, started coming in on Thursday, the force added.

Strongman, once considered a legal “designer drug”, was added to the country’s list of banned narcotics at the beginning of July.

Three people have been detained on suspicion of dealing and could each face up to 10 years in prison, police officer Adam Pazmnik told Reuters.

The swift relocation of the main function of the US Marine Corps’ Futenma Air Station located in a crowded residential area in Ginowan to a less densely populated seaside zone in Henoko district in Nago is a long-standing security issue between Tokyo and Washington.

Okinawa Gov Takeshi Onaga and many others in the southern island prefecture have been calling for moving the base outside Okinawa to reduce its heavy base-hosting burden.

In an interview with Kyodo News and other news outlets in May, Onaga, who took office last December, said he could cancel the approval for land reclamation, which was granted by his predecessor Hirokazu Nakaima to build a relocation facility.

Onaga’s remarks prompted the United States to ask Japan in June whether it would review the approval of the government indicated by the board of directors.

In response, Tokyo assured Washington that it will go ahead with land reclamation even if Onaga revokes the approval. If the matter is brought to court, the Japanese government will win as a court is not expected to hand down a ruling that would be disadvantageous to it, the sources said.

A panel of experts set up by Onaga in January has been examining whether the procedure for Nakaima to give land reclamation approval was flawed. It is expected to finalize a report on the matter possibly later this month.

The Japanese and US governments agreed in 1996 to close down the Futenma base and return land occupied by the facility to Okinawa. The planned transfer of base function is aimed at maintaining US deterrence in the western Pacific area while reducing the burden on Okinawa, which already hosts the bulk of US military facilities in Japan.

The opposition declared its boycott of the parliament on Friday that it would hold a plenary session on 13 July, 2015 to debate and pass the draft bill.

Currently, there are about 5,000 associations and NGOs operating in Cambodia, according to the government’s figures. Under the proposed law, associations and NGOs will be required to register their nationalities with the government in order to have legal standing and must file reports on their activities and finances each year to the government.

It also allows the government to delete the name of any association or NGO, which has conducted any action that jeopardizes peace, stability and public order, or harms national security, unification, culture, traditions and custom. Prime Minister Hun Sen said last month that the law would target to fight against terrorism, money laundering and creation of illegal armed forces.

“Associations and NGOs should not worry about this law. It will protect you, support you, and open up to your activities,” he said. The parliament comprises 123 lawmakers, including 68 from the Prime Minister Hun Sen’s ruling Cambodian People’s Party and 55 from the opposition CNRP.

To pass a law, this legislative body needs a 50 percent plus one majority vote, or 63 votes only.

CAIRO, 12 July — Islamic State claimed responsibility for a car bomb attack at the Italian consulate in central Cairo on Saturday, in an escalation of violence that suggests militants are opening a new front against foreigners in Egypt.

“Through God’s blessing, Islamic State soldiers were able to detonate a parked car bomb carrying 450 kg of explosive material on the headquarters of the Italian consulate in central Cairo,” the group said on a website that carries its statements.

“We recommend that Muslims stay clear of these security dens because they are legitimate targets for the mujahideen’s strikes.”

Until now, Islamic State supporters in Egypt had not set their sights on Western targets, focusing instead on security forces. A health ministry spokesman said one Egyptian civilian was killed and 10 wounded. State news agency MENA separately said two policemen were among the wounded.

The blast heavily damaged the consulate, shook other buildings downtown and could be heard in several surrounding neighborhoods.

Italy’s Foreign Minister Paolo Gentiloni said there were no Italian victims in the blast. “Italy will not be intimidated,” he added on Twitter.

Egyptian Prime Minister Ibrahim Mehleb said the country was at war and urged the world to unite against terrorism after the attack, a state-run newspaper reported.

President Abdel Fattah al-Sisi, the former army chief elected mostly on promises he would deliver stability, has said militancy poses an existential threat to Egypt, other Arab states and the West.

One of the toughest security crackdowns in Egypt’s history has weakened the mainstream Muslim Brotherhood group, blamed by security officials for small-scale bombings. The Brotherhood, removed from power by the army in 2013, says it is a peaceful movement.

Meanwhile Islamic State’s Egyptian affiliate, based in the Sinai, remains resilient despite steady pressure from military fighter planes, Apache helicopters and ground troops.

Recently renamed Sinai Province, it has been escalating bombing and shooting attacks on soldiers and police since the military deposed President Mohamed Mursi of the Brotherhood in 2013 after mass protests against his rule. Hundreds have died.

The attack at the Italian consulate raises the stakes in the struggle between militants and the government, which has just started rebuilding an economy battered by four years of turmoil since an upris ing toppled autocrat Hosni Mubarak in 2011.

It also highlighted Islamic State’s reach after it seized large swathes of Iraq and Syria, expanded into Egypt’s neighbour Libya and more recently claimed responsibility for high-profile attacks in France, Kuwait and Tunisia.

Egypt has witnessed an increase in attacks against tourism targets recently, including a suicide bombing near the ancient Karnak temple in Luxor last month.

Egypt has been relatively stable in a region engulfed by militancy and sectarian conflict since the Arab Spring uprisings toppled dictators who had largely kept militants under check through widespread repression.

Militant violence and political turmoil triggered by the 2011 revolt that ousted Mubarak have hurt Egypt’s tourism industry, a traditional pillar of the economy.

Two weeks ago, a car bomb killed the country’s top public prosecutor and militants affiliated to Islamic State attacked several military checkpoints in North Sinai, in what was the fiercest fighting in the region in years.

The army said 17 soldiers and more than 100 militants were killed in those clashes.

Western countries are hoping ally Sisi can maintain relative stability in the Arab world’s most populous country.

Egypt is also worried about spillover from militants who have been thriving in the chaos of neighbouring Libya, where Sisi has already ordered air strikes on Islamic State targets. — Reuters

Canada gets Pan Am Games off to golden start

TOFFO, 13 July — Canada got the Pan American Games off to a golden start toppling the medal table after claiming four gold on Saturday and Toronto plenty of reason to come out and join the Pan Am party.

Talk of sluggish ticket sales disappeared under a brilliant Canadian summer sun as large enthusiastic crowds turned out at many venues to cheer on their home team.

But attendance problems appear far from over as large swathes of empty seats could still be seen at some events particularly at football and rugby.

Canadian synchronized swimmers Jacqueline Simo and Karine Thomas, Chilean triathlete Barbara Riveros and Mexican divers Rommel Pacheco and Paola Espinosa earned direct qualifying spots into next year's Rio Olympics as a bonus for winning gold in their events.

Riding a wave of hometown support, Canada's women kayakers won the first gold of the Games as Michelle Russell, Emily Fournel, KC Fraser and Hannah Vaughan paddled home ahead of Cuba in the K-4 500 metres.

“Troy Nyhaug then won the men’s BMX while the hosts also picked up silver in judo and another silver and two bronze from the diving pool to bring their medal total to eight, one ahead of the United States, Mexico and Colombia, who all finished the day on seven medals.

Americans Felicia Stancil took top spot in the women’s BMX, Eva Fiam in the women’s open water swim while the men won the artistic gymnastics team event.

Mexico continued its domination of the Pan Am diving competition with Pacheco, who competed at the 2004 and 2008 Olympics, taking gold in the men’s three-meter springboard and Espinosa, a two-times Olympic medallist, winning the women’s 10 metre platform.

Colombia took two gold medals from the weightlifting while Brazil, Ecuador, Cuba, Dominican Republic and Chile also won golds on the first day.

Medals in 12 events will be decided while automatic qualifying spots for the Rio Olympics on offer in triathlon, shooting and equestrian.—Reuters

MILAN, 12 July — Food-loving visitors from around the world soaked up the atmosphere of traditional festivities from Japan’s northeastern Tohoku region Saturday at the Expo Milano, a food-themed international fair.

The main attraction of the Japan Day event was a festive parade incorporating traditions from Tohoku and the region’s gratitude for the international support provided for its recovery from the March 2011 earthquake and tsunami disaster.

Calls of “bravo” could be heard from fairgoers as the parade of several hundred wended its way through the expo site, displaying elegant dancing punctuated by hearty cheers.

The festivities drew on six traditional festivals from across the Tohoku region, including the Tanabata Festival in Sendai, Miyagi Prefecture commemorating star-crossed lovers, and the Waraji (straw sandal) Festival in Fukushima Prefecture, that have come to symbolize hopes for recovery in the years since the disaster.

There was an extra focus on Fukushima with the inclusion of elements from four festivals celebrated in the prefecture.

The official ceremony opening the event drew more than 300 attenders from Japan and Italy, including Akiie Abe, the wife of Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe. Agriculture minister Yoshimasa Hayashi, part of the Japanese government contingent, greeted the crowd.

“The word about the wisdom of Japan’s agriculture and culinary culture that are in harmony with nature,” Hayashi said.

Dozens of “Japan Pavilion Supporters” were appointed by Japan’s agriculture and trade ministries for the expo, including pop singer and fashion model Kyary Pamyu Pamyu.

Police say man dies after pepper sprayed during arrest in Alabama

ALABAMA, 12 July — A man in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, died after officers used pepper spray to subdue him when he resisted arrest, police said on Saturday.

Police received a call on Friday night that a man armed with a gun was sitting on a porch at an apartment complex in the city, Tuscaloosa police said in a statement on their Facebook page.

Police later identified the man as Anthony Ware, a 35-year-old African-American, the Tuscaloosa News reported on its website.

When officers arrived, the man ran into nearby woods and was chased by officers who used the pepper spray before placing him in handcuffs as he resisted arrest, police said.

He later collapsed as he was walking out of the woods, police said.

Police conduct in the United States has been under scrutiny over the past year after a series of deaths of black men in confrontation with police that have provoked protests over the treatment of minorities by law enforcement.

The Tuscaloosa News reported Ware was pursued by six police officers, including at least three white officers as well as a black officer and an Asian-American officer.

Police plan to release video of the arrest from a vehicle dash cam and body camera, Tuscaloosa’s assistant police chief, Ronnie Dunn, told a news conference on Saturday, according to the Tuscaloosa News.

Casillas leaves Real for new challenge at Porto

MADRID, 12 July — Spain goalkeeper Iker Casillas left Real Madrid on Saturday, after 16 seasons as an iconic figure at the Bernabeu to take on a new challenge at former European champions Porto.

Casillas, 34, became a hero for both Real and Spain during a glittering career, where he has won three Champions Leagues with Real and the World Cup and two European Championships with La Roja.

But in recent years he lost some of the sheen that earned him the nickname “Saint Iker” and last term was regularly whistled by disgruntled fans at the Bernabeu as the world’s richest club ended the campaign without major silverware.

Real’s announcement of their captain’s departure, which ended days of frenzied speculation in the Spanish media, came exactly five years since the Spain captain triumphantly hoisted aloft the nation’s first World Cup in South Africa after a 1-0 victory over the Netherlands.

The expected arrival at Real of Manchester United’s David De Gea, the 24-year-old former Atletico Madrid man who is being groomed to take over as Spain keeper, will also have contributed to Casillas’s decision to move on.

Regular playing time in Portugal for Porto, coached by Spanish ex-keeper Julen Lopetegui, should allow him to extend his international career at least until next year’s European Championships in France.

“You have to ask him, for everything,” Real said on their website (www.real-madrid.com). “Thank you for being a symbol of the best in our history. You are leaving but we will not forget that you belong in Real Madrid’s heart forever.”

Casillas made his debut for Real in September 1999, aged 18, and as well as three European crowns he has also won five La Liga titles, two King’s Cups and one Club World Cup.

He made 725 appearances for Real, second only to former striker Raul, and was named the world’s best keeper five times by the International Federation of Football History and Statistics (IFFHS).

Late glitch fails to slam brakes on Serena charge

LONDON, 12 July — Standing a set and 5-1 up in the Wembley final against an experienced grand slam singles title made her heart pound just as fast as when she made her first breakthrough at the 1999 US Open.

But an angst-ridden finale in which Muguruza tenaciously fought back showed that, despite Williams’s vast experience and vice-like grip on women’s tennis, crossing the finishing line for a 21st grand slam title made her just as anxious as when she made her first breakthrough at the 1999 US Open.

“Guess, for her rivals hoping that nearly 34 the American will become blaze about collecting trophies, is bad news.

“I just learned that all the people are nervous, even Serena, in a final, because I saw it,” Muguruza, the first Spaniard to contest a Wimbledon women’s singles showdown since Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario in 1996, told reporters.

In securing her sixth Wimble don title and first since 2012, Williams became the oldest woman to win a grand slam in the modern era, 16 years after winning her first.

It seems unlikely anyone can stop her march into the history books at Flushing Meadows where she is unbeaten since 2011.

On Saturday, however, it was the feat of holding all four majors concurrently, something she also achieved at the 2003 Australian Open, that was foremost in her thoughts.

“I honestly wouldn’t have thought last year after winning the US Open I would win the Serena Slam at all,” said the world number one. “It’s super exciting.”

“I just knew I wanted to win Wimbledon this year. Of all the grand slams, it was the one I hadn’t won in a while.”

Muguruza, the clean-hitting 21-year-old born in the Venezue lan capital Caracas, played magnificently in the first set, leading 3-1 and 4-2 before Williams raised her game after a sluggish start to take the opener.

The enormity of the occasion and the sheer presence of Williams then seemed to hit home and the Spaniard crumbled, losing 14 out of 15 points to trail 5-1 as her vastly-experienced American opponent closed in for the kill.

Then, Williams got a bad attack of the jitters before regaining her poise in the nick of time. “You’d be surprised, I feel vulnerable every time I step out there,” she said. “It’s just overcoming those feelings.”

She was totally dominant until, serving at 5-1, she was broken to love. Muguruza then started swinging as she had in the early stages of the match when she had broken serve in the opening game and led 3-1.

Williams began to miss and the 20th seeded Muguruza, cheered by the Centre Court crowd, held for 3-5. It still seemed only a hiccup for Williams as she stepped up to serve for the match a second time.

But her anxiety was apparent when she began the game with an eighth double-fault, gesticulating to her players’ box where her family and friends, including rapper Drake, watched.

Muguruza won the next two points with backhand winners, the second one almost leaving Williams in a heap on the baseline.

Williams replied with an angry ace and screamed, “Where have you been?” to her trusty weapon. Two more booming aces earned her a match point but a tense rally ended with Muguruza punishing a mid-court ball.

At deuce Williams on-slaught was repelled and she snatched a break back into the net and a point later the set was back on serve when the Spaniard wrong footed the top seed.

Muguruza could not sustain the recovery though and a double-fault and a net-cord calmed Williams’s nerves and she converted her second match point when Muguruza hit wide, although silence briefly reigned as both players seemed unsure whether the ball had clipped a line.

“There was definitely pressure towards the end, Garbine really stepped up to the plate today,” Williams added of her young opponent who shed tears when receiving a long ovation as she collected her runners-up trophy.

Swiss veteran Martina Hingis, 18 years after winning the singles, provided a fitting finale to the day when the 34-year-old partnered India’s Sania Mirza to win their doubles title.

The top seeds beat Russia’s number two-seeded Ekaterina Makarova and Elena Vesnina 6-7 (5-7), 7-6(4), 7-5, having won the final two games under the Centre Court roof before a noisy crowd.

Earlier, Dutch/Romanian duo Jean-Julien Rojer and Horia Tecau later won the men’s doubles beating Andy Murray’s brother Jamie and his Australian partner John Peers 7-6(5), 6-4, 6-4.—Reuters
