Gov’t, ethnic armed groups open latest ceasefire talks, agree on 4 amendments

By Ye Myint

YANGON, 22 July — The government’s Union Peace-Making Work Committee,opened negotiations on ethnic armed organizations Wednesday in Yangon to finalize a draft national ceasefire accord, reaching agreement on four proposed amendments to the pending process.

The meeting follows three rounds of informal talks in Chiang Mai, Thailand, during which the two sides managed to clear roadblocks to the resumption of truce negotiations.

In a press conference at the Myanmar Peace Center, spokespersons of both sides said four of 13 amendments to the draft NCA proposed by the ethnic side were finalized on the first day of talks, leaving two points pending for discussion on Thursday.

Pu Zing Cung, a deputy leader of the ethnic delegation, said it was “early to say” whether the NCA signing would take place before the 8 November general election.

“But we are hopeful of a final deal, and so we are here to see how far we can go,” he said.

A draft nationwide ceasefire accord between the two sides has remained unsigned since the ethnic side’s unexpected rejection of the draft deal in June at the Law Khee Lar summit involving all of Myanmar’s ethnic armed groups.

U Hla Maung Shwe, senior adviser at Myanmar Peace Center, said the government side aimed to finalize the draft deal during the current talks “to ensure the signing of the official NCA” as soon as possible.

According to the meeting’s agenda, both sides agreed to negotiate the amendments proposed by the ethnic side and discuss who the NCA signatories and international witnesses should be, as well as the number of ethnic armed groups to ink the ceasefire deal, the senior adviser added.

The inclusion of all ethnic armed groups in the signing process, a major point of contention between the two sides, will be discussed on the second day of the meeting.

At the press conference, the government side reiterated its willingness to sign the draft NCA with the 15 ethnic armed groups which it has already reached bilateral agreements.

The ethnic side, however, insisted that the ceasefire must be signed by all ethnic armed groups, including the 16 members of the Nationwide Ceasefire Coordination Team.

Pyidaungsu Hluttaw votes to postpone constitutional referendum

NAY PYI TAW, 22 July — The Pyidaungsu Hluttaw on Wednesday voted in favour of postponing a constitutional referendum until after the 8 November general election.

The referendum on Section 59 (d) of the Constitution had been scheduled to be held in conjunction with the election, but the Union Election Commission proposed holding it separately at a later date. The referendum will ask voters whether the term “military” in the section — which states the president of the union “shall be well acquainted with the affairs of the Union such as political, administrative, economic and military” — should be changed to “defence.”

A majority of MPs backed the UEC proposal, saying the concurrent staging of the referendum with the election would pose several difficulties but would not reduce costs significantly.

The Speaker of the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw earlier this month said he would send a proposal to the Union Election Commission to hold a referendum on amendment of Section 59 (D) alongside the parliamentary elections on 8 November.

YANGON, 22 July — Eligible voters must ensure they are listed on the electoral roll before the 8 November election, as complaints about omissions will not be accepted on polling day, Union Election Commission Chairman U Tin Aye said Wednesday.

Enrolled voters will not be prevented from casting their ballots, however, even in cases of incorrect voter data, the chairman said at a press conference at the UEC Information Centre in Yangon. Another two-week review period is tentatively set to begin in the last week of August, and will be the final one before the election, the chairman said.

“Check the voter lists, submit corrections and inform authorities of exclusion from the lists during the period in which it is allowed,” he said.

Amid mounting complaints about numerous errors in voter lists across the country, the commission extended the initial review period, originally scheduled to run two weeks until the end of this month.

Only 10 percent of eligible voters have so far come to check the lists, leaving uncertainty over the accuracy of much of the voter data, the chairman said. The press conference followed meetings between the UEC and 51 Civil Service Organizations on Monday and between the UEC and 82 political parties on Tuesday in Yangon.

The first business matching fair in Yangon followed a Myanmar investment seminar which attracted about 1,000 businesses last month in Japan.

Singapore police freeze two bank accounts linked to 1MDB probe

SINGAPORE/ KUALA LUMPUR, 22 July — Police in Singapore said on Wednesday that they have frozen two bank accounts in connection with a probe into alleged financial mismanagement and graft at Malaysia’s troubled state fund 1MDB.

The move is the first time accounts outside of Malaysia have been frozen in connection with the investigation, which has left Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak facing his biggest crisis since he took office in 2009.

“On 15 July 2015, we issued an order under the Criminal Procedure Code to prohibit any dealings or transfers of funds and on reporting suspicious transactions,” said Singapore’s central bank.

The freezing of the Singapore bank accounts follows a similar move in Malaysia where a task force investigating 1MDB earlier this month had frozen half a dozen bank accounts following a media report that millions of dollars had been transferred to accounts belonging to Najib.

The Wall Street Journal reported on 3 July that investigators looking into 1MDB had traced close to $700 million (450 million pounds) of deposits moving through Falcon Bank in Singapore into the personal account of Najib in Malaysia.

Reuters has not verified the WSJ report.

Najib has denied taking any money for personal gain and said the corruption allegations are part of a malicious campaign to force him out of office.

A 14-day notice period given to Dow Jones & Co, which publishes the Journal, to respond to a letter from Najib’s lawyers seeking clarification, ended on Tuesday.

Singapore’s central bank has also said it is in contact with financial institutions in relation to the 1MDB probe and Falcon Bank has said it is co-operating with them on their enquiries.

On Tuesday, the Monetary Authority of Singapore said it is looking into whether banks followed rules on properly identifying customers and their sources of funds and on reporting suspicious transactions.

“Were actually looking back to see if they have done all these things,” MAS managing director Ravi Menon told a news conference following the release of the bank’s annual report.

In Malaysia, two people have been arrested this week as part of the 1MDB investigation.

The managing director of a company was arrested on Tuesday and Remadmill in custody, the state news agency Bernama said on Wednesday. This follows the arrest of the director of a construction company at Kuala Lumpur’s international airport on Monday. The authorities did not reveal the identities of those arrested.

The task force looking into 1MDB comprises the police, the Attorney-General, the central bank and the Malaysian Anti-Corruption Commission.

China says Japan defence review misleading, damages relations

BEIJING, 22 July — China reserves the right to a “necessary reaction” after Japan issued a defence review that called on Beijing to stop building oil and gas exploration platforms close to disputed waters in the East China Sea, the Defence Ministry has said.

In the paper issued on Tuesday, Tokyo expressed concern that Chinese drills could tap reserves that extend into Japan’s territorial waters.

“This kind of action completely lays bare the two-faced nature of Japan’s foreign policy and has a detrimental impact on peace and stability in the Asia Pacific region,” China’s Defence Ministry said in a statement issued late on Tuesday.

China would further evaluate Japan’s defence review, or white paper, when the full text is issued and then make a “necessary reaction depending on the situation”, it said.

Beijing described Japan’s annual defence review as misleading and malicious, saying it overplayed the “China military threat” and stoked tensions between the two East Asian powers. It stuck by its claims over the disputed island chain.

The white paper “maliciously hyped up the issues of East China Sea, South China Sea, internet security and military transparency”, the ministry said. It also exaggerated the threat of the Chinese military, “blackening” its image, it said.

Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesman Lu Kang said the review ignored that China’s maritime activities were carried out in line with international law, according to another statement issued late on Tuesday. “The Diaoyu islands have belonged to China since ancient times,” he said.

Lu said China will continue to take necessary measures to safeguard its territorial sovereignty and Japan should not hold any unrealistic illusions.”

The Japanese defence review had expressed concern that the platforms being built by China could also be used as monitoring stations near the islets.

The report also commented on the disputed South China Sea, where Japan and other countries have criticized Chinese land reclamation projects as a threat to regional security.

“Japan is not a stakeholder country in the South China Sea issue, so it should not tell tales and sow discord,” the Defence Ministry’s statement said.

The Foreign Ministry said China’s construction activities were completely within the scope of its sovereignty, and were not directed at any one country.

“We solemnly urge Japan to stop stoking tensions, provoking contradictions, and instead undertake more activities that are conducive to regional peace and stability,” Lu said.

Over 6,000 people rushed to hospitals amid summer heat last week

Tokyo, 22 July — A total of 6,165 people were taken to hospitals across Japan with symptoms of heatstroke or heat exhaustion in the week through Sunday, almost double the figure a week earlier, government data showed on Wednesday. Of the total, about half were aged 65 or older, 14 died on the way to the hospital, 178 required hospitalization for more than three weeks and 2,200 were hospitalized briefly, the Fire and Disaster Management Agency said in a preliminary report.

The agency warns that the hot weather is likely to continue as the rainy season has just ended in most areas of the Japanese archipelago. It also revised the tally for the week to 12 June to 3,190 from the initially reported 3,058.—Kyodo News

China says navy starts drills in S China Sea

Beijing, 22 July — China said on Wednesday its navy has begun 10 days of military exercises in the South China Sea, a move that comes amid concerns over Beijing’s large-scale land reclamation projects in the region and its heavy-handed approach to territorial disputes.

Ships are “prohibited from entering” the “designated maritime areas where the military drills are being held,” the country’s Maritime Safety Administration said in a statement published on its website.

China claims most of the South China Sea, believed to be rich in oil and natural gas deposits, despite overlapping claims with Vietnam, the Philippines, Brunei, Malaysia and Taiwan.

In stating its claims, it has engaged in the construction of artificial islands, combined with aggressive maritime patrols intended to keep other claimants out.

The exclusion zone is off the southeastern coast of China’s island-province of Hainan, and includes some of the Paracel Islands, which are claimed by China and Vietnam.

The exercises are meant to “test the navy’s tactics and weapons,” state-run Xinhua News Agency said in an article quoting Chinese Maj Gen Zhu Chenghu, a professor at the National Defence University of the People’s Liberation Army. The drills come as the international community has stepped up its criticism of China’s activities in the South China Sea.

Iran won’t accept curbs beyond 10 years, negotiator says

Dubai, 22 July — Iran’s nuclear program’s implementation is limited to 10 years, and any attempt to re-impose sanctions after they expire in 10 years will be “impossible,” Abbas Araghchi told a news conference on Monday, emphasizing the deal reached with six world powers one week ago.

Araghchi was referring to a resolution the United Nations Security Council passed on Monday, endorsing the deal to curb Iran’s nuclear programme in return for relief from sanctions. The world powers suspected Iran was trying to create a nuclear bomb; Teheran said the programme was peaceful.

The resolution allows all UN sanctions to be reimposed if Iran violates the agreement in the next 10 years. If Iran adheres to the terms of the agreement, all the provisions and measures of the UN resolution would end in 10 years.

However, the six world powers, known as the P5+1, and the European Union told UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon earlier this month that after 10 years they planned to seek a five-year extension of the mechanism allowing sanctions to be reimposed.

“The UN Security Council’s resolution says clearly that the timeframe of agreement is 10 years, and Iran’s case will be closed in the Security Council after that,” Araghchi said.

“If the US and any other member of P5+1 say they want to adopt a new resolution after 10 years allowing sanctions to be reimposed, it is the breach of Vienna agreement and has no credibility.” — Reuters

Kerry to visit Gulf Arab states, vows to “push back” against Iran

Dubai, 22 July — US Secretary of State John Kerry will seek to reassure Gulf Arab officials at a meeting in Qatar soon that Washington will work with them to “push back” against Iranian influence in the region, he told the pan-Arab newspaper al-Sharq al-Awsat.

Most US allies in the energy-rich Gulf publicly welcomed a deal between world powers and Teheran over its disputed nuclear programme, but they accuse Teheran of interfering in Arab conflicts and pushing hard for heightened regional influence. “I will be traveling to Doha in the next couple of weeks to meet with the whole (Gulf Cooperation Council),” Kerry told the paper in an interview published on Wednesday. He was referring to a group of countries comprising Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman and Qatar.

“I think we can persuade them both that by being more effective in our counter-push as well as through the re-imposition of the mechanism we have, they will be more effective,” Kerry said at his office at the State Department in Washington after a meeting with Saudi Foreign Minister Adel al-Jubeir on 16 July, 2015. (“The whole reason for Camp David was to bring people together around an organizational effort to push back against Iran,” Kerry said. “We have negotiated a nuclear deal for the simple reason that we believe if you are going to push back against Iran, it’s better to push back against an Iran without a nuclear weapon than with one,” he said.) — Reuters

Obama pitches Iran deal to vets, Daily Show’s Stewart

NEW YORK, 22 July — President Barack Obama’s campaign to convince Congress to support the Iran nuclear deal led him on Tuesday to a veterans’ convention and The Daily Show, where he took jabs at those opposing the agreement.

In a back and forth on Comedy Central’s nightly political satire show, Obama pushed back against hard questions from host Jon Stewart.

“This is an adversary. They are anti-American, anti-Semitic, they sponsor terrorist organizations like Hezbollah,” Obama said of Iran.

“Sounds like a good partner for peace,” Stewart responded sarcastically.

“Well, as has been said frequently, you don’t make peace with your friends,” Obama said. “The issue here is, do we want them having a nuclear weapon? The answer is no.”

Obama urged Americans to write their representatives in Congress to express their opinion of the deal. Tuesday’s efforts widened the administration’s efforts to gain support for the deal, from Capitol Hill to the general public.

“Congress is reviewing the agreement, reached last week, and could vote to reject it. The process has prompted a lobbying effort on Capitol Hill from both the Obama administration and opponents of the accord.

The White House start ed the Twitter handle @ their deal on Tuesday to inform Americans about the contents of the agreement.

Speaking to thousands of veterans at the 116th annual Veterans of Foreign Wars conference in Pittsburgh, Obama pushed back against Republicans who oppose him on the issue.

“Some of the same politicians and pundits that are so quick to reject the possibility of a diplomatic solution to Iran’s nuclear programme are the same folks who were so quick to go to war in Iraq and said it would take a few months,” Obama said.

“We know the consequences of that choice, and what it cost us in blood and treasure.” The Daily Show interview was Obama’s seventh and last appearance before Stewart leaves the show next month.

Stewart asked Obama for his take on Republican presidential contender Donald Trump, who has made a series of comments, ranging from criticism of Mexican immigrants to insults flung at Republican senators John McCain and Lindsey Graham.

Obama joked, “I’m sure the Republicans are enjoying Mr Trump’s dominance of their primary.”

No reforms, no money, senior German lawmaker warns Athens

BERLIN, 22 July — A senior German lawmaker in Chancellor Angela Merkel’s conservative party on Wednesday warned the Greek government not to back-track on its reform commitments.

Greek Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras has tried to rally his Syriza party before parliament votes on Wednesday on the second package of reforms demanded by Greece’s international creditors to open talks on a new bailout deal.

The bill will adopt into Greek law new European Union rules on propping up failed banks, but it does not include pension reforms curbing early retirement or raising taxes paid by farmers. Those will be dealt with in coming weeks under a full bailout deal with European partners.

“We are keeping a close eye on whether Athens not only adopts the reforms, but also implements them,” Gunther Krichbaum, chairman of the German parliament’s Europe committee, told the newspaper Bild. “Greece must fulfill the conditions, otherwise the money cannot flow.”

Alexandra Lambsdorff, a German liberal in the European Parliament, told the paper: “There can’t be an aid programme if the Greek government moves away from its commitments. Then the EU would have to cancel the talks immediately.”

Officials from the creditor institutions — the European Commission, European Central Bank and International Monetary Fund — are due in Athens on Friday for meetings with the government, Deputy Finance Minister Dimitris Mardas said.

Trump’s surge seen as summer squall, but will he rain on the Republican Party?

WASHINGTON, DC — For most of his Republican rivals, Donald Trump’s surge in the polls is like a summer squall that will eventually blow itself out.

There was no general sense of panic among the candidates over opinion polls that showed support growing for the real estate mogul, whose candidacy thus far has been nothing but instead offering a series of overheated statements and brashness, we’ll never win.”

On Tuesday, Trump held a rally in South Carolina, home state of Lindsey Graham, a Republican senator who is a presidential candidate, and used it to rail against Graham.

Graham had called Trump a “jackass” for criticizing McCain, the 2008 Republican presidential nominee. Trump read out Graham’s cell phone number during the rally.

“Donald Trump continues to show hourly that he is ill-prepared to be commander in chief,” said Graham campaign manager Christian Ferry.

Despite Trump’s his torics, Republican professionals believe his support will not fall off enough to deny him a spot at the party’s first presidential debate, on 6 August in Cleveland.

The 10 candidates who register the most support among an average of national polls will get to compete in the event.

The Republican contest has so far been a civil affair with candidates generally declining to attack each other and instead focusing on what they would do for the country.

Having Trump on the debate stage introduces an air of unpredictability to the event.

Republican strategist Scott Reed said candidates will need to come up with a way to handle Trump at the debate.

“He’s going to be on the stage and the other candidates are going to have to have a Trump strategy,” he said. “The strategy needs to be push back on the bully.”

Manchin, (NH), 22 July — For most of his Republican rivals, Donald Trump’s surge in the polls in the 2016 US presidential nomination fight is like a summer squall that will eventually blow itself out.

There was no general sense of panic among the candidates over opinion polls that showed support growing for the real estate mogul, whose candidacy thus far has been notable for his anti-immigrant stance and bare-knuckled tactics.

Candidates in general are practicing a strategy to condemn him when necessary, criticizing him for example for belying the military service of Senator John McCain, a former Vietnam prisoner of war, but otherwise sticking with their own game plans for attracting support from Republican voters.

“These things ebb and flow, and it’s July,” said an adviser to Republican Scott Walker. “National polls don’t matter unless you’re trying to get into a debate.”

A Reuters/Ipsos tracking poll on Tuesday found Trump winning the support of 17 percent of Republicans, effectively tied for the lead with his nearest rival, former Florida Governor Jeb Bush at 18 percent. Trump led Bush by eight percentage points a week ago.

With Trump having offered no detailed vision for a Trump presidency, but instead offering a series of overheated statements and bragging about his wealth, there is an expectation among Republican leaders that Trump will tumble in much the same way a variety of Republican candidates fell in 2012, from Michele Bachmann to Herman Cain.

“I don’t think it’s anything that has the ability to be sustained,” said a Republican strategist who has advised Jeb Bush in the past when asked about Trump’s showing.

But there are also concerns at how much damage Trump could do to efforts to appeal to minority voters and win the White House in 2016 after losses in 2008 and 2012.

Speaking about Trump at a campaign event on Tuesday in Spartanburg, South Carolina, Bush said that people are right to be frustrated with government but that “if we embrace this language of divisiveness and ugliness, we’ll never win.”

On Tuesday, Trump held a rally in South Carolina, home state of Lindsey Graham, a Republican senator who is a presidential candidate, and used it to rail against Graham.

Graham had called Trump a “jackass” for criticizing McCain, the 2008 Republican presidential nominee. Trump read out Graham’s cell phone number during the rally.

Inequality limits country’s prosperity, stability

By Kyaw Thura

Thursday, 23 July, 2015

The desire to raise a healthy family, get ahead in one’s profession and retire in comfort is almost universal. For many, however, life is not as easy as hoped or expected. Inequality continues to severely limit the prospects of many for whom life is a struggle.

Answering the question of where inequality comes from has been a headache for governments around the world. It is safe to assume that inequality is in fact a chronic issue affecting the prosperity and stability of a nation.

Researchers frequently describe the income gap as a factor that cripples growth mechanisms. Economists have concluded that wide inequality weakens economies and creates instability in the long run.

It would be ridiculous to blame fate or luck for the widening gap between the rich and the poor, the employed and the unemployed, and the educated and the uneducated.

In addition, the education achievement gap between the children of the wealthy and those of the less-privileged has become increasingly noticeable. A handful of moneyed elite with close connections to influential figures have channelled a great deal of the country’s wealth into their pockets. Corruption and bribery are the vehicles for such malefactions.

All things considered, inequality, either wide or narrow, will continue to threaten employment, productivity and stability. If inequality is ever to be beaten, it will take a long, hard fight.

Make Election Free and Fair

Integral part of the democratization process is holding successful elections. Elections are a defining characteristic of democracy, and thus form an integral part of the democratization process. Elections represent an important dimension in the efforts towards democratic consolidation in any country. Statistically, elections are not synonymous with democracy, but are a central component of a functioning democratic system. In discussions of election security and violence, it is relevant to consider the nature and underlying purpose of election violence. Elections are a contest for power, and are therefore inherently contentious; unless conducted fairly, they can (and often do) lead to violence. Political parties participating in an election use violence, intimidation and conflict to influence the results of an election.

This is particularly true of those elections in post-conflict countries that are near-disasters in this regard. Successful however the process, elections must be considered a “one-off” initiative or an end in themselves. Sustained attention is needed to advance not only the establishment of democratic institutions and processes to ensure good governance, but also the economic development of the emerging democratic country. Thus, while elections undoubtedly require advance planning and considerable investment of time and money, the achievement of even peaceful elections will be undermined if the citizens do not experience an improvement in the economic conditions that they have not, helped spur the conflict in the first place.

Not for power but for good governance and welfare towards Peace, Progress and Prosperity for all citizens, it is aimed at. The international community and in particular the Western countries – more often than not have failed to insist on the implementation of these elements, despite their repeating rhetoric on the need for democracy and free and fair elections. They should do better and take more seriously the notion that, for the local populace, these elements, in particular the existence of an effective and independent Election Commission, and an Election Complaints System, are unmistakable indicators of the credibility of the electoral undertaking of the candidates and diplomats should not forget the lessons of the presidential elections in Afghanistan in autumn 2009, which were a near-disaster in this regard.

Free but not fair. Fair but not free. Neither free nor fair. Free and Fair election is what we all want. Elections in emerging democracies and post-conflict societies have a great potential to plunge a country back into violent conflict, to undermine processes of stabilisation and to discredit democratisation. The presidential elections in Afghanistan in autumn 2009 are one of the recent examples for this risk. Elections are not only a tool of democratic participation but also a fierce contest for positions of leadership, power and access to resources. There have been difficult elections in conflict-ridden countries in late 2009 and early 2010, like those in Afghanistan, Sudan, Burundi, Guinea-Bissau and Guinea.

Through “Learning by doing” and “Learning by watching”, lifelong learning needs to be nurtured not only about democracy but also about human rights, peace, development and prosperity. For democracy to survive, most individuals in a society must agree to abide by the rules of the game and accept that their policy or leadership preferences will not always prevail. Proper institutions are also critical for the success of democracy. As expected, empirical research reports a strong positive correlation between the development of the appropriate institutions and arrangements, on the one hand, and, on the other, the success or failure of democratic transitions around the globe. (Stepan & Skach, 1993).

As we all know, proper institutions, while necessary, are not sufficient for successful democratization.

Rose, Mishler, and Haerpfer (1999) suggest in this connection that the relationship between institutional arrangements and citizen attitudes is comparable to the relationship between hardware and software in the working of a computer, democratic institutions being the hardware and public support for democracy being the software. Thus, again, though not sufficient, public support for democratic governance is essential for the functioning and long-term survival of a democratic political system.

Noteworthy of the fact that while public support for democracy tends to be reasonably stable in consolidated democracies, the stability of attitudes toward democracy in non-democratic or transitioning societies is less well understood. In cases where citizens are experiencing elements of the democratic process for the first time, attitudes toward democracy are likely to vary as a function of the perception of these experiences; and this is particularly important since building or maintaining support for democratic governance is necessary if democratic transitions are ultimately to succeed and be consolidated.

Japan grants US$92,035 for BEMS in Kyauk Kyi Township

Yangon, 22 July—The Japanese Government, under its Grant Assistance for Grassroots Human Security Projects (GGP) Scheme, has granted US$92,035 for a humanitarian assistance programme project for Construction of Lay Paw Mu Basic Education Branch Middle School in Kyauk Kyi Township, Bago Region. The handing over and opening ceremony of the project took place in Kyauk Kyi Township, Bago Region on 20 July 2015. Mr. Kazuyoshi SUZUKI, Second Secretary of the Embassy of Japan, Bago Region ministers, committee chairman and members of the construction projects, and local residents attended the ceremony. Lay Paw Mu School in Kyauk Kyi Township did not have enough class-rooms for the increasing number of students although it had been upgraded to a branch middle school in 2013. The students of Grades 1, 2, 3 and 9 had to study in two temporary buildings which were very noisy. Under such circumstances, the Japanese Government, under its GGP scheme, provided funding for construction of a one-storey R.C.C building with 5 classrooms and full furniture. The project will benefit 448 ethnic Kayin students of the school.——GNLM

Myanmar to launch UN-backed forestry emissions roadmap

Nay Pyi Taw, 22 July — Myanmar is preparing to implement a United Nations-backed roadmap to combat climate change by reducing emissions from deforestation, Union Minister for Environmental Conservation and Forestry U Win Tun said Tuesday at a workshop in the capital.

The REDD+Roadmap Process focuses on six sectors under the UN-REDD Programme and involves multiple partner organizations, the minister said. The two-day workshop at Hotel Max aimed to ensure accurate forestry statistics, the establishment of a national forest resource management system and calculation of an annual forest reference emission level.

Since this January, the ministry’s Forest Department has carried out works to calculate the reference level of the country’s forest carbon emissions and formulate a forest resource monitoring action plan and human resources development program, the minister said.

Myanmar started implementing UN-REDD initiatives in December 2011, and concluded the formulation of its REDD+Roadmap Process in June last year. According to a survey conducted by the UN’s Food and Agriculture Organization every five years, the total forest area in Myanmar decreased from 51.54 percent in 2000 to 46.96 percent in 2015. Loss of forest globally stood at 13 million hectares between 2000 to 2010.

Make Election Free... (from page 8)

Do (cultivate) what is good. To avoid all evil. To purify one’s mind - This is the teaching of Buddha. Be good to others. Keep our mind pure. Keep our election clean. Make election clean, free and fair. The new constitution of the country must have been “free and fair elections” is broader and more comprehensive in nature, aiming to ensure that the elections are conducted in a free environment with administratively fair rules. The most important criteria for a free and fair election include the following: (1) the right of all voters to participate in the electoral process without hindrance; (2) freedom to campaign for all political parties; (3) secrecy of the ballot; (4) reasonable speed in the counting of ballots; (5) accountability and openness of the electoral process to the competing parties and (6) an acceptable electoral law. Freedom from fear in autonomous and independent voting is a requisite for free and fair election. There are, in particular, three basic conditions which need to be met before elections may be risked in emerging democracies: A sufficient-ly secure environment is the sine qua non for organizing and carrying out elections successfully. The majority of combatants and militias should therefore have disarmed (or at least reliably pacified) and sufficient progress made in the building of army and police forces. The administrative and communication infrastructures of the respective country must have been re-established to a degree that they allow for a sufficiently smooth conduct not only of the elections themselves but also related activities, like voter registration, civic education, etc. Finally, the justice system and police must have reached a degree of functioning that enables them to deal with cases of fraud, abuse and other legal issues related to the proper conduct of elections; otherwise the opposition parties and the population at large will have no confidence in the fairness of the elections. It takes time to build the respective institutions and capabilities. Therefore, a third and widely debated question is: What is the right timing and sequencing of elections?

Autonomy and independence is one of the important principles for democratic election. Party finance has become a central concern for representative democracy. The core question relates to the autonomy of the representative process itself. Are public representation bodies sufficiently independent of private forms of power not to be able to regulate the latter if that is what democratical-ly elected representatives want to do? One obvious difficulty is that the representative process can simply be ’bought’. All representatives do not just depend on citizens for votes. They also depend on donors to give them money to fight their election campaigns. Broadly there are three problems in defining arrangements for party fi-nance: (a) Should there be limits on how much any one party or candidate can spend? (b) Should there be limits on how much any one donor can contribute? And (c) should public bod-ies themselves contribute to the financing of parties and candidates?

In this modern age, the media is one of the most powerful influences on how an election runs inside the country, and how it is perceived from outside. For many people, an election is a crucial decision about the future. If the election goes well, the country can continue towards democracy and peace. But if the election goes badly, it can undermine democracy and turn the country back to-wards conflict. For an election to go well, it must be free and fair. There must be free speech so all citizens can speak without fear. The media must be free to tell everyone what is said without pressure to twist the truth. That is the job of professional journalists to fully inform citizens of the issues and their choices so they can decide for themselves for whom to vote.

Rule of Law must be strictly abided by all cit-izens, all stakeholders and media persons. Discipline is the symbol of democrac-ty. The election must be fair. There must be rules to ensure every citizen has a secret vote. All candidates must have equal rights and opportunities to campaign without interference. The rules must be enforced fairly and everyone must respect the results of the vote.

Elections are a great challenge for the media. Journalists need to know the election rules. They must report fairly on all candi-dates, parties and issues. The media should be the voice of the voters. Journal-ists must adhere to professional standards of accuracy, impartiality and responsibility. And they have to work amidst great excitement, under pressure from powerful interests, and with very little time. A further determinant of whether there is a level playing field in elections is access to the media. There is variation across the na-tion both (a) in how far the media are obliged to allocate time to candidates and parties in national election and (b) in provisions that are made for equality of acces-s.

May the election be clean, free and fair.

UN ship brings food aid to Yemen’s Aden as fighting rages

A UN ship brings food aid to Yemen’s Aden as fighting rages

A ship carrying food aid for Aden’s beleaguered population docked in the southern Yemeni port on Tuesday, the first in months of warfare that have devastated the city, as rival factions fought in the northern suburbs.

The ship carried enough UN food aid to feed 180,000 people for a month, a small measure of relief for a city that has been severely damaged by the conflict between Houthi militiamen and forces loyal to deposed President Abd-Rabbu Mansour Hadi.

It had been anchored off Aden since 26 June but had to wait for a safe opportunity to berth, the World Food Programme said.

“WFP made repeated attempts to send ships to Aden, all of which until today were blocked due to severe fighting in the port area,” a statement said.

The delivery was the largest in months. Two UN ships had made it through by land last week but the port, the scene of heavy combat, has been closed.

Residents said loyalist fighters backed by Saudi-led air strikes battled to take back Aden’s northern suburbs from the Iranian-allied Houthis on Tuesday after completing their capture of the city.

The Houthi militia and its army allies traded artillery fire with the Saudi-backed forces in the Dar Saad and al Alam areas.

Residents and local fighters said Houthi shelling killed a family of eight in Dar Saad area.

Assisted by the air strikes, local anti-Houthi forces broke months of stalemate in Aden last week by seizing the airport and then driving the Houthis out of their last redoubt in the west of the city.

Saudi Arabia intervened in Yemen’s war on 26 March in an effort to stop Houthi forces taking Aden, the last city nominally controlled by Hadi. Riyadh says it wants to restore Hadi to power in the capital Sanaa, which the Houthis seized in September.

Almost four months of air raids and civil war have killed more than 3,500 people in Yemen, Aden has suffered especially, with acute shortages of food, medicine and fuel.

Aden and the other southern provinces of Yemen have been largely inaccessible to UN food aid, and about 13 million people — more than half the population — are thought to be in dire need of food.

“More WFP-chartered ships are on stand-by near Aden carrying fuel and more food. WFP is working to channel food through Hadi’s administration and the Arab military alliance are seeking to secure the city and make it a base from which to challenge Houthi control over most of the rest of Yemen. "We’re in an operation to complete the extension of our control over the city of Aden and to confront the Houthi presence at its entrances," a leader in a local militia told Reuters by phone.

Local fighters said they advanced to the area of Aqqan in Lahj Province directly north of Aden, and that Arab air strikes killed around 8 Houthis fighters there and pounded the militia’s positions in the nearby southern province of Baha.

A technical team from the United Arab Emirates had arrived to repair the battle-damaged international airport, fighters said.

Officials in the anti-Houthi forces say their offensive had been planned for weeks and benefited from training and arms deliveries from Saudi Arabia and the UAE.

The Emirates’ official news agency WAM said on Tuesday that an officer from the country had been killed in the service of the Arab campaign, but did not specify where.

UN envoy says deeply concerned by battle at Syria border

UN envoy says deeply concerned by battle at Syria border

BERLIN, 22 July — The United Nations envoy for Syria has voiced deep concern about civilians in the city of Zahabad, the focus of an offensive by the Syrian militia and Lebanon’s Hezbollah aimed at wresting control of the area from insurgents.

Citing local sources in a statement late on Tuesday, Staffan de Mistura said the military had dropped a large number of barrel bombs on Zahabad “causing unprecedented levels of destruction and many deaths among the civilian population.”

Control of the city, about 45 km (30 miles) northwest of the capital Damascus, is seen as crucial to consolidating President Bashar al-Assad’s control over the border zone between Lebanon and Syria.

The Syrian air force has bombarded areas in and around the city and Sunni insurgents have retaliated by firing rockets and heavy mortar shells on two villages near Idlib city in the north, de Mistura said.

An alliance of insurgents known as the “Army of Fatah” (Islamic Conquest) had targeted Al Foua and Kefraya, northern villages where a large number of civilians are trapped, he said.

“In both cases, civilians are tragically caught in the middle of the fighting,” he added. Al Foua and Kefraya are home to Shi’ite populations.

Earlier this week the Syrian army backed by Hezbollah advanced deeper into Zahabad, two weeks into a campaign to capture it from insurgents, rebels and the army said.

Takind Zahabad from the insurgents would be a strategic gain for the Syrian army which is battling on several other fronts with a range of different insurgent groups.

Hezbollah’s military role inside Syria has been growing steadily since the start of the conflict in 2011. The Syrian government has described the group as its main ally in the fight against the insurgents battling to topple Assad.

BENGHAZI, Libya, 22 July — Dozens have been killed in clashes between two tribes in the biggest city in southern Libya, officials said on Tuesday, as a security vacuum grew in a remote corner of the oil producer.

A power struggle between two governments fighting for control in the north of the desert nation has hit the poor south hard, hampering supplies of anything from fuel and food to central bank money as flights to Tripoli are halted.

Fighters from two tribes, the Tuarag and Tebu, have exploited a security vacuum to vie for control in a vast area that has been long neglected. Clashes broke out four days ago in a suburb of Sabha, the city’s mayor, Hamed Rafa al-Khayali, said.

A Tebu official said the clashes had started after a Tebu was killed at a checkpoint.

“Around 29 people of the Tuarag tribe were killed and four were wounded in clashes,” said Khayali by phone from Sabha, some 700km to the south of the Libyan capital Tripoli.

Eight people of the Tebu were killed and 18 wounded, said Zahra Adam, a local official in the neighbouring al-Tayori town dominated by Tebu.

Khayali said tribal elders had tried to negotiate a truce but talks failed. The city asked military officials in Tripoli for help to restore order but received no response.

Libya is in chaos with two governments fighting for control while Islamic State militants exploit a security gap. Tripoli is controlled by a government not recognized by world powers, which took office a year ago after an armed faction expelled the official premier to the east.

Rivalry between the Tebu and Tuarag goes back before Muammar Gaddafi was toppled in 2011, though in the past his police state had succeeded in keeping some order.

Clashes erupted also near Derna, an Islamist hotspot in the east, between fighters of Islamic State and forces loyal to the east ern government. Three Islamic State fighters were killed, said a military spokesman.

Huawei Technologies’ first-half smartphone revenue more than doubles in China

HONG KONG/BEIJING, 22 July — Huawei Technologies Co Ltd [HWT.UL] more than doubled its China smartphone revenue in the first half of 2015, defying a slowdown in the world’s biggest handset market by unleashing new premium models that are challenging rivals Xiaomi Inc [XTC.U] and Samsung Electronics Co Ltd (005930.KS).

The fourth-largest smartphone maker globally missed shipment targets for two years, but a focus shift to high-margin premium models pushed January-June worldwide shipments to 48.2 million units, up 69 percent from the year-earlier quarter, when demand for the first quarter, and one-month lead time earlier, Xiaomi booked its first fall in sequential semi-annual sales, saying the domestic market is nearing saturation.

“[That] buzz going around Huawei in China right now and it’s being increasingly associated with better product quality,” said Bryan Ma, researcher IDC’s Asia-Pacific vice president. “It’s quite dramatic how successful they’ve been.”

Behind that success is convincing Chinese consumers that it is worth paying more for its feature-packed, yet moderately priced devices, Ma said. Its first-quarter average selling price jumped to $222 from $128 a year earlier, he said. Huawei booked global handset revenue of $9.09 billion for the first six months, up 69 percent on year, and raised its year-end goal to $20 billion from $16 billion. In China, where it sells most of its mobiles, phone revenue rose 124 percent.

On Monday, head of consumer business Richard Yu in a memo touted the success of Huawei’s high-end P8. The handset is priced in China well below premium models from rivals such as Samsung, which fell out of China’s top three in the first quarter for the first time since 2011.

“The consumer business group recorded an unexpectedly high rate of growth,” Yu wrote without elaborating. Huawei’s consumer business division makes electronic goods such as smartphones, smartwatches, tablet computers and modems.

Analysts said Huawei’s sales growth may not be down to company strategy alone, and that it may have benefited from pricing or distribution misssteps at competitors. But now Huawei’s fast-growing Honor sub-brand has copied Xiaomi’s online distribution model, the triple-digit growth rates Xiaomi has enjoyed in China in recent years may be under threat, said Strategy Analytics executive director Neil Mawston.

“They’re cutting into Xiaomi’s competitive edge,” he said.—Reuters

Microsoft posts record loss as it writes down Nokia

NEW YORK, 22 July — Microsoft Corp (MSFT.O) reported a $3.2 billion quarterly net loss on Wednesday, its biggest ever, as the company wrote down its Nokia phone business and laid off 7,800 jobs, or nearly 7 percent of its workforce.

The company took a charge of $7.5 billion in the fourth quarter related to the restructuring of its Nokia handset business, which it bought last year.

Microsoft’s shares fell 4 percent to $45.35 in extended trading on Tuesday.

Under Chief Executive Satya Nadella, the company has been shifting its focus to software and cloud services as demand for its once-popular Windows operating system slows.

Sales of Windows to computer manufacturers to install on new PCs fell 22 percent in the quarter. The company is scheduled to roll out Windows 10 on 29 July, a much-awaited launch after a lackluster response to Windows 8.

Microsoft wants to generate revenue by building search and gaming into the Windows 10 interface, Chief Financial Officer Amy Hood said in April. Bing, the company’s online search engine, will be profitable in the year ending June 2016, Hood said on Tuesday.

Sales of Windows to businesses fell 21 percent from the year-earlier quarter, when demand for the operating system had surged after Microsoft discontinued support for Windows XP.

Revenue from Microsoft’s commercial cloud business, which includes offerings such as Office 365 and Azure, rose 96 percent, excluding the impact of a strong dollar.

Microsoft said it added 3 million subscribers for Office 365 in the quarter, taking the total number of subscribers for the product to 15.2 million at the end of June.

The company said this month that it would cut 7,800 jobs, or nearly 7 percent of its workforce, mainly in the phone hardware business.

Revenue fell 5 percent to $22.18 billion.—Reuters

Chinese scientists isolate Weyl fermions theorized 86 years ago

BEIJING, 22 July — Scientists have isolated a massless particle called the Weyl fermion, which might lead to faster and more efficient electronics, said the head of the Institute of Physics, Chinese Academy of Sciences (CAS) on Tuesday.

First proposed by physicist Hermann Weyl in 1929, Weyl fermions are more basic particles than electrons and, because of being massless, can facilitate a more free and efficient flow of electricity.

However, scientists had not observed them in experiments before.

Scientists, with the CAS Institute of Physics discovered a way to reproduce the particle by shooting synchrotron radiation behind a synthetic metallic crystal called tantalum arsenide (TaAs).

The scientists’ discovery of Weyl fermions may lead to progress in reducing the energy consumption of smaller electronic devices. The breakthrough is also expected to achieve high fault tolerance in topological quantum computing.—Xinhua

Australian researchers take sweet revenge on superbugs

SYDNEY, 22 July — Australian researchers have found a way to fight superbugs using the bacteria’s own sugar, making a promising step in combating the rise of anti-biotic resistant superbugs.

Published in the scientific journal Nature Communications, researchers from the University of Queensland created a compound that acts as a ‘Trojan Horse’, stopping bacteria from inside the cell.

University of Queensland Professor of Chemistry Matt Cooper told Australian national broadcaster on Wednesday the new compound is very promising in combating the rise of anti-biotic superbugs.

“They’ll be extremely valuable to society and to human health because we know that when we use most antibiotics, resistance arises soon thereafter,” Cooper said.

“The cell wall has been a target for antibiotics such as penicillin and vancomycin before, but the difference here is that we are stopping a centrally important part of the cell wall linking process.”

Cooper said the compound made is not sucrose, and could potentially be made through the bacterium.

“Even if you like, it’s the mortar that the bacteria uses to make a wall around itself,” Cooper said.

“Bacteria have cell walls similar to the walls of a brick house, except instead of mortar the walls are held together by sugar polymers.”

The researchers isolated this sugar, changing it chemically so it actually “turned into a weapon against the bacteria in the cells.” “We then fed it back to the bacteria itself and the bacteria has these enzymes that if you like, is the bricks’ labourer putting the brick together using this sugar mortar,” Cooper said.

“But what happened is our particular molecule went into the enzyme and was destroying the cell wall and killing the bacteria.”

“It was just like a Trojan horse — the bacterium was expecting to find its own sugar... which it could use to build its wall, but when it finds our compound, may also destroy the cell wall and killing the bacteria.”

“Several years ago — the bacterium was expecting to find its own sugar... which it could use to build its wall, but when it finds our compound, may also destroy the cell wall and killing the bacteria.”

Feature: Chinese opera at home in Italy

By Marzia De Gialli, Song Jian

MILAN, (Italy), 22 July — An ancient Chinese story performed by Chinese artists influenced by the Italian opera style at an historic theater here was a fruitful endeavor, judging from the warm applause and enthusiastic audience feedback.

“I truly liked it,” Italian opera buff Antonella Palumbo told Xinhua on Wednesday. “I often go to the opera, and I had already watched Chinese operas before, but all of them were classical ones. This one is a modern Chinese opera, thus it is certainly closer to our taste,” she noted.

Palumbo said she particularly appreciated the beautiful vocals and exciting choreography.

Her husband Sergio Brusa- din agreed. “I was struck by the modernity of this opera and by the fact that it contains Western elements. In fact, I have found that a lot of Eastern people love Italian opera, different from many Italians who are not interested in opera anymore, unfortunately,” he highlighted.

The Grand Canal opera is about the monumental works and deep struggle that were behind the conception and construction of the Grand Canal created under the Sui and Tang dynasties in China.

“We did not know how Western opera enthusiasts would react, especially in a country with as strong an opera tradition as Italy,” he said.

Indeed, the positive reaction of the Italian audience, which not only appreciated the opera, but also the narration of a period of Chinese history filled with struggles and feelings common to all, was a great feedback, Ke pointed out.

Franca Nava teaches scenography at the Academy of Fine Arts of Brera in Milan. “I found it a very complex choreography which makes use of lights and scenes very different from each other in the correct way,” she said after watching The Grand Canal opera with her young daughter.

“I found it a mix between the Asian taste and the Italian opera,” she told Xinhua.

“There are differences with respect to the Italian opera. Overall, I would say that the Grand Canal opera is a lighter show compared to the Western tradition. I am sure it can be very much appreciated in China and also in the Western world where it can be seen like a musical, in a sense,” she underlined.

Borzì Veliz and Gianluca Agazzi are two of Nava’s students.

“arly knew the Peking Opera before, but I found something completely different here, and very interesting indeed,” Veliz said. The pair said they were full of questions about this modern Chinese opera and its future development.

“Definitely want to read more about it when I go home,” Agazzi told Xinhua.

The Grand Canal opera was sponsored by the Mission of China to the European Union (EU) along with the Chinese embassies in Belgium and in Italy, and the provincial government of Jiangsu. Before coming to Milan, the show performed in Brussels and other EU cities, including Italy’s capital Rome.—Xinhua

Peru to make contact with isolated tribe for first time

LIMA, 22 July — Peru will try to make contact for the first time with an Amazonian tribe that largely lives isolated in the jungle, part of a bid to ease tensions with nearby villages after a bow-and-arrow attack in May, authorities said on Tuesday.

Government anthropologists will try to talk with a clan of Mashco Piro Indians to understand why they have been emerging from the forest, said deputy culture minister Patricia Balbuena.

In recent years the Mashco Piro have increasingly been spotted seeking machetes and food outside their jungle enclaves in the Manu National Park in southeastern Peru.

Villagers, Christian proselytizers and tourists have all interacted with the tribe, often giving them clothes and food. “The only ones who haven’t been in contact with them are representatives of the state!” said Balbuena.

Peru prohibits contact with the Mashco Piro and another dozen “uncontacted” tribes, mainly because their immune systems carry little resistance to common illnesses.

Authorities have said they cannot keep people from defying the contact ban because no penalty is attached.

Indigenous group FENAMAD warned that the decision to contact the Mashco Piro could legitimize the kind of unwanted interactions that have decimated isolated tribes in the past.

“Authorities should restrict boat transit and keep people from approaching,” said FENAMAD president Klaus Quicque.

Luis Felipe Torres, the head of the state isolated tribes team, said the government will not forcibly contact the Mashco Piro or try to change their nomadic lifestyle.

“But we can no longer pretend they aren’t trying to make some sort of contact,” Torres said. “They have a right to that, too.”

The Mashco Piro have historically rejected outsiders, surviving enslavement during Peru’s bloody rubber boom in the late 1800s and later rebuffing missionaries. But in the past year, the Mashco Piro have appeared in populated areas more than 100 times, especially along the banks of a river where they gesture to passersby, said Balbuena.

Not all interactions with outsiders have been peaceful. In May, a group of Mashco Piro attacked the native Machiguenga community of Shipetari, killing a young man with an arrow.

In 2011 the Mashco Piro killed another local man and wounded a park ranger with arrows. Using interpreters of Yine, a native language similar to the Mashco Piro tongue, the government hopes to prevent future clashes, Balbuena said.

A team of doctors six hours upriver would treat the tribe if disease breaks out, Balbuena said.—Reuters

China probes senior Xinjiang security official for graft

BEIJING, 22 July — A deputy regional security chief and former head of the prison system in China’s violence-prone far western region of Xinjiang has been put under investigation for suspected corruption, the government said on Wednesday.
Xie Hui is being investigated for “suspected serious breaches in discipline”, the ruling Communist Party’s anti-graft watchdog the Central Commission for Discipline Inspection said in a brief statement, using the usual euphemism for corruption.
It provided no other details, and it was not possible to reach Xie for comment.
Xie’s official resume, included in the watchdog’s statement, shows he spent his entire career working in Xinjiang, including in the old labour camp system, which used penal labour as punishment.
He ran the Xinjiang prison system from 2010 until his promotion in 2013 to be a vice head of the Xinjiang public security bureau.
President Xi Jinping has pushed a sweeping crackdown on corruption since taking power two years ago. Xi, like others before him, warned that the problem was so severe it could affect the party’s ability to maintain power.
For years Xinjiang, home to the Muslim Uighur people, has been beleaguered by violence, blamed by the government on Islamist extremists who want an independent state called East Turkestan.
Rights groups and exiles say the violence is more a reaction to Uighur frustration at government controls on their religion and culture. Beijing denies any repression in Xinjiang.
The energy-rich region, which sits strategically on the borders of Pakistan, India, Afghanishistan and Central Asia, has not been as much a focus of the government’s graft crackdown as other parts of China.
Last year, however, prosecutors began an investigation into the former Communist Party chief of the Xinjiang Police College, which trains public security officials, for sus-spected abuse of power and corruption.
Also last year, the ethnic Uighur mayor of Hotan, a major city in the heavily Uighur southern Xinjiang, was put under investigation for corruption, one of the few ethnic minorities caught up in Xi’s camppaign.

Chinese fishing boat crew gets suspended sentence for poaching coral

YOKOHAMA, 22 July — A district court on Wednesday gave a Chinese fishing boat crew member a one-year prison term, suspended for five years, over coral poaching in Japanese territorial waters.
Zhang Youyin, 45, was fined 2 million yen ($16,183) for illegally col-collecting precious red coral last 21 December with the boat captain Pang Dongbing, 46, in the sea about 6 kilometres off Tokyo, an uninhabited island about 580 km south of Tokyo.
Japan toughened a law on illegal fishing for foreign-ners in its territorial waters last year after Chinese vessels had been spotted near the Ogasawara and Izu islands off Tokyo. The Japan Coast Guard believes they were engaged in coral poaching. The number of such vessels totalled over 200 at its peak last year. The maximum fine was raised more than seven times to 30 million yen from 4 million yen in December.
President Judge Ben Adachi at the Yokohama District Court said it was a heavy sentence against the defendant “completely ignored fishery regulations” and “disrupted the order significantly.”
Zhang had denied the allegation that he conspired with the captain, who has been sentenced to one year in prison and fined 10 million yen.
But the judge dismissed his claim, saying he gave money to buy the boat in exchange for sharing profits from the coral poaching.
But Adachi said Zhang was less responsible as he acted with instructions from the captain.—Kyodo News
Swiss Paleo Festival pays tribute to folk roots at 40th edition

Bild von der Paléo-Festival in Nyon, Schweiz.

The Paleo Festival celebrates its 40th edition this week, drawing big names such as Sting and Robbie Williams but also paying tribute to its folk-music roots.

The week-long event, held in Nyon, began as a folk festival in 1976 with an audience of 1,800 spectators. It has since grown into a major open-air festival, last year drawing 230,000 people to its seven stages.

Pop singer Robbie Williams headlined the festival’s open on Monday, which was followed by acts and artists such as rock group Kings of Leon, experimental band Faithless, Sting and DJ David Guetta.

The festival will also look back at its roots with shows from folk singers such as 1976 founders Malcorne and Joan Baez, who took to the festival stage in 1982.

“We decided to keep a little piece of nostalgia and invite some legendary artists who have marked the last 40 years,” festival founder and director Daniel Malicorne said.

Scala to supervise integrity checks on FIFA candidates

ZURICH, 22 July — A FIFA committee headed by Domenico Scala will supervise integrity checks on candidates hoping to stand in February’s election to replace Sepp Blatter as president of world football’s governing body.

FIFA said on Tuesday that Scala, chair of their Independent Audit and Compliance Committee, would be the Ad-hoc Electoral Committee chairman.

Claudio Sulser, chairman of the FIFA Disciplinary Committee, and Larry Musumened, chairman of the FIFA Appeal Committee are also members of the committee. The committee is responsible for supervising the integrity checks and admitting and announcing candidates. Potential candidates have until 26 October to present their intentions in writing to FIFA’s general secretariat with support from at least five football federations.

FIFA said the Ad-hoc Electoral Committee will then carry out an “examination and a decision on the admission of the candidates to the FIFA presidential elections”. The vote will take place on 26 February at a special ‘elective congress’ in Zurich.—Reuters

Jake Gyllenhaal plays boxer seeking redemption in ‘Southpaw’

NEW YORK, 22 July — Jake Gyllenhaal takes on the role of a champion boxer who tries to turn his life around after tragedy strikes in “Southpaw”, a drama the Hollywood actor says is essentially about family. The “Brokeback Mountain” star plays boxer Billy Hope who loses his family, his house and his manager and soon hits rock bottom.

“The story is about a guy who uses his rage to get great success,” Gyllenhaal said at the film’s premiere in New York on Monday night.

“That same rage destroys his whole life. Throughout the film and his journey, he has to learn how to fight — not only in the ring but in life without rage.”

Gyllenhaal has said he watched fights and trained intensively for the part. Canadian actress Rachel McAdams, known for her roles in “The Notebook” and “Sherlock Holmes” portrays Hope’s wife Maureen.

“The movie is very moving. It’s got a lot of heart, a lot of grit, it’s got a lot of soul in it,” she said.—Reuters

Rooney targets Bobby Charlton’s scoring record

LONDON, 22 July — Wayne Rooney has set himself a target of 20 goals this season, which would break Bobby Charlton’s long-standing record as Manchester United’s highest scorer of all time.

Rooney is already within one goal of United legend Charlton’s England scoring record of 49.

Now, having been told by United manager Louis van Gaal that he will be used in his favourite position as an out-and-out attacker, he is hoping to score 20 in all competitions to reach 250, overhauling Charlton’s tally of 249 for the club from 1956 to 1973.

“My best position — and I’ve always said it is — is as a striker, getting into the box,” Rooney told reporters from British media on United’s tour of the United States. “The two seasons I’ve really done that as a lone striker are my two best goal scoring seasons,” he added.

“I hope to score 20 or more goals again. If I’m playing as a striker, then I will be disappointed if I can’t do that again. I’ve played different roles over the years for United but you only have to look when I play for England as a striker, I score goals.

“Rooney’s 230 goals have come in 473 games, as opposed to Charlton’s 748 matches. Denis Law, who scored 237 times in only 404 games, is currently second on United’s all-time list.—Reuters

Okazaki makes 1st appearance for Leicester

LINCOLN, (England), 22 July — Japan striker Shinji Okazaki made his first appearance for Leicester City in a preseason friendly against Lincoln City on Tuesday, playing the first 45 minutes and a part in his side’s first goal in a 3-1 win.

Okazaki, who joined the Foxes from German side Mainz last month, started the game up front alongside Leonardo Ulloa and chased down a flick from the Argentine before the ball fell to Riyad Mahrez to slot in the equalizer. “They were much stronger than I was expecting,” Okazaki said of Lincoln, who play in the fifth-tier National League and gave the 29-year-old a tough introduction to the English football with their physical approach.

Led by newly appointed manager Claudio Ranieri, Leicester play more pre-season games before kicking off their Premier League campaign against Sunderland at home on 8 August.

At US Capitol, Arizona Apaches protest planned copper mine

WASHINGTON, 22 July — Scores of Native American demonstrators protested outside the US Capitol on Tuesday against a proposed $6 billion copper mine in Arizona at a site that members of the Apache tribe say is sacred.

Members of the San Carlos Apache tribe began a cross-country caravan to Washington this month to persuade Congress to save the area known as the Oak Flat campground near Superior, Arizona.

The group of Native Americans, called Apache Stronghold, hopes to get lawmakers to repeal a land exchange that paves the way for the project by Resolution Copper Mining. The company is owned by Australian miners Rio Tinto Plc and BHP Billiton Ltd.

More than 100 Native Americans and supporters marched from the White House to the Capitol, where they drummed, sang and performed prayer ceremonies for nearly three hours.

“Today is our day. Today is our ceremony. We’re not here looking at this Capitol like it’s in charge of us,” said tribe councilman Wendy Nosie.

The caravan has been gathering support at Native American reservations and held a protest in New York on Friday.

Mine supporters tout its expected benefits, including about 3,700 jobs and $60 billion in economic impacts. Noise called the job estimates inflated.—Reuters

Van Gaal hints United may be interested in Real’s Ramos

Mandary, 22 July — Manchester United manager Louis van Gaal has hinted the club may be pursuing Real Madrid’s Spain defender Sergio Ramos and could also sign a “surprise” striker.

There has been media speculation in recent weeks that the 29-year-old Ramos, who has two years left on his Spanish contract, could join United as part of a swap deal, with his Spanish team mate and goalkeeper David De Gea, 24, going the other way.

United have also been linked with a bid for Barcelona’s Spain forward Pedro and Bayern Munich’s Germany forward Thomas Mueller as Van Gaal looks to revitalise the squad after a disappointing 2014-15 campaign.

Pedro, 27, no longer commands a regular spot in Barca’s starting lineup following the arrival of Uruguay striker Luis Suarez, while the 25-year-old Muller is said to be unhappy with Bayern coach Pep Guardiola’s working methods. “I cannot talk about those rumours,” Van Gaal said when asked about Ramos at a news conference on the club’s North American tour.

“I have said in a lot of Press conferences that it’s a process,” added the Dutchman. “Maybe Mr Ramos is in the process... you never know.”

Van Gaal said the club could buy a striker but cautioned that it was not a player that had been written about in the media.

“You have to wait and see,” he told reporters. “The transfer period is open until 1 September so we have to wait.” —Reuters

Suarez determined to make flying start to new season

Madrid, 22 July — Luis Suarez struggled to get into his stride with new club Barcelona after his ban for biting an opponent expired in October and the Uruguay striker is determined to avoid the same fate when the new season starts next month.

Suarez joined the Catalans from Liverpool last July but was unable to play the first three months of the campaign after he was sanctioned for sinking his teeth into Italy defender Giorgio Chiellini’s shoulder at the World Cup.

After a slow start following his Barca debut in the La Liga ‘Clasico’ against Real Madrid, he started to come into top form around the turn of the year and was a key performer alongside strike partners Lionel Messi and Neymar as Barca romped to a treble of Champions League and Spanish league and Cup titles.

“For the first few matches I was lacking rhythm,” Suarez told reporters after a training session on Barca’s pre-season tour of the United States.

“That’s what pre-seasons are for, to work and try to contribute from the start,” added the 28-year-old. “This year, starting at the same pace as my team mates, it will be different.”

Barca play their first match in the International Champions Cup friendly competition later on Tuesday against MLS side Los Angeles Galaxy.

The match in Pasadena will be a chance for Suarez to catch up with former Liverpool team mate and close friend Steven Gerrard, who left the English club after 17 years at the end of last term to join LA Galaxy.

Gerrard praised Suarez in an interview published on Barca’s website (www.fcbarcelona.es) on Tuesday. “I don’t think any one ever looks forward to playing against Luis Suarez, he is a fantastic talent and a very dangerous player,” Gerrard said.

“He is a fantastic team mate, probably the best player I have played with,” he added.

“We are a family and a community that everybody is together, that everybody is in this for the long run,” he also said.
