6 DEAD AS SEVERE FLOODING HITS THABEIKKYIN TSP, MANDALAY REGION

Yangon, 25 July — Flash flood caused by torrential rains left six people dead and several homes destroyed Saturday in Mandalay Region, according to local authorities.

The dead were residents of Taungle village in Thabeikkyin Township where the flash flood occurred in the river and destroyed seven houses amid downpours that began Friday night. Another four houses in the township were destroyed by landslides.

Meanwhile, raging floodwaters destroyed a bridge spanning the Dohtawady River in Shan State’s Thibaw Township on Saturday, killing three people, witnesses reported.

A number of people were on the more than 100-year-old bridge watching the swollen river when the tragedy happened around 12.30 pm, according to a posting on the Ministry of Information website.

Gov’t, ethnic negotiators hopeful of breaking impasse in August talks

By Ye Myint

Yangon, 25 July — The government and ethnic armed groups expressed optimism Saturday about breaking an impasse on a draft national ceasefire deal at the next round of talks, despite holding different views on the number of signatories to the truce deal.

Government and ethnic negotiators the previous day decided to take a recess until the first week of August in order to seek approval from their respective leaderships about unresolved issues in the negotiations, including the number of ethnic armed group to sign the ceasefire.

P’doh Saw Kwe Htoo Win, a member of the senior delegation of ethnic armed organizations, said at a press conference on the final day of talks that negotiations were set to continue for seeking an acceptable and practicable way on a compromise to get out of the stalemate.

Farmers at work

Nay Pyi Taw, 25 July — Farmers in Nay Pyi Taw Council Area are currently preparing to cultivate monsoon paddy.

Hybrid strains provided by the agriculture department are among the crops they will plant. Although there are floods and inundation in some parts of Sagaing Region in upper Myanmar, paddy fields in Nay Pyi Taw Council Area are free from such natural disasters.

As the area is located in the centre of the country it gets enough rain water to grow crops.—Ko Pauk (Okkamyay)

Muse, 25 July — Emergency services are on standby in Muse, northern Shan State, amid flooding that has caused one death and endangered several households.

Flood waters have inundated corn and paddy fields, as well as the border gates between Myanmar and China, while damaging a bridge on Muse-Namkham Road.

The inundation caused a wall to collapse, killing Maung Kyaw Min Thant. The Muse-Namkham Union Road was closed temporarily and police, firefighters and Red Cross members are preparing to provide assistance.

President visits dam project in southern Shan state

Nay Pyi Taw, 25 July—President U Thein Sein on Saturday inspected the Myogyi dam project aimed at irrigating the Meikhtila plain and generating electricity for surrounding parts of southern Shan State. The dam in Ywangan Township has a water drainage area of 725 square miles and will deliver electricity produced by two 15 MW turbine power generators. The Irrigation Department aims to complete the project within the current fiscal year. Director General U Kyaw Myint Hlaing explained details of the construction project, including electricity generation and irrigation systems provided by Chinese experts from the Yunnan Machinery & Equipment Import & Export Co., Ltd. The department is also about to complete construction of the Yanggyo and Myithar dams in the area. The earthen Myogyi dam will collect water drained from Yanggyo and Kyinekhun dams to generate 30 MW hydropower, irrigating 82,000 acres of land under the Zawgyi irrigation and 33,000 acres of land on Meikhtila plain.—MNA

Amyotha Hluttaw speaker opens new school building in Yamethin

Nay Pyi Taw, 25 July—Amyotha Hluttaw Speaker U Khin Aung Myint on Saturday opened a new building at the school in Tugone village in Mandalay Region’s Yamethin Township. The primary school, opened in 1981, has been upgraded to the post-primary level as part of the government’s increasing support for the rural education sector. The speaker noted that the education sector needs more support, as only 10 percent of kindergarten children reach matriculation level, while the passing rate at this level is just 30 percent. The opening ceremony of new school facility was attended by U Kyaw Myint, Minister for Industry and Environment of Mandalay region, U Ko Ko Naing, Pyithu Hluttaw’s Legal Affairs and Special Cases Assessment Commission and U San Htay Aung, District Education Officer. Gov’t, ethnic negotiators...

(from page 1) Despite the ethnic side’s insistence that the signing of the truce deal must involve at least 16 members of the Nationwide Ceasefire Coordination Team plus the All Burma Students Democratic Front, the government side has sought to sign the NCA with the 15 groups with which it has already reached bilateral agreements. U Hla Maung Shwe, senior adviser at Myanmar Peace Centre, emphasized the importance of strict adherence to the deal, which has seen very lengthy negotiations, after its signing. The government keeps re-iterating its opinion that ways and means are to be sought for the inclusion of other groups in the peace process, he added.

The MPC senior adviser stressed the need to compromise on the issue. Pu Zing Cung, a deputy leader of the ethnic delegation, said the August talks are expected to smooth the path to the prospective treaty. But the divergent views between the two sides on how many groups should sign the ceasefire deal could be an obstacle to whether the NCA is signed before the 8 November election, he added.—GJLM land), 21 July — China’s top political advisor Yu Zhengsheng on Friday concluded his four-day visit to Thailand, during which the two countries pledged to enhance Sino-Thai cooperation in various areas including infrastructure, trade and law enforcement.

Yu, chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People’s Political Consultative Conference, met with Thai Princess Maha Chakri Sirindhorn, Prime Minister Prayut Chan-o-cha and President of the Privy Council Prem Tinsulanonda on separate occasions during his stay in Bangkok, and held talks with President of the National Legislative Assembly Pornpetch Wichitcholchai.

In his meeting with Princess Sirindhorn, Yu spoke highly of the significant contribution that the Thai royal family, including the princess, has made to the Sino-Thai friendship.

They both expressed willingness to increase mutual understanding, promote across-the-board cooperation and maintain close contacts between the two countries and peoples.

While meeting with the Thai premier, Yu said that China attaches great importance to Sino-Thai relations, and is ready to make joint effort with Thailand to implement various consensus-reached deals by leaders of the two countries.

China is willing to partner with Thailand to bring together the China-proposed Belt and Road Initiative and Thailand’s strategy to develop transportation infrastructures, Yu stressed.

The Belt and Road Initiative, proposed by China in 2013, is a trade and infrastructure project that includes the Silk Road Economic Belt and the 21st Century Maritime Silk Road to connect Asia, Europe and Africa.

China expects more fruitful cooperation with Thailand in railway development, trade of agricultural products, trade and finance, while promoting bilateral cooperation in law enforcement and security, deepening exchange in such areas as science and technology, education and tourism, Yu said.

Prayut said Thailand is willing to seek continuous and steady development of Thailand-China ties, and boost bilateral cooperation in economy and trade, infrastructure construction, agriculture, law enforcement, security and culture.

Both Yu and Prayut vowed to make joint efforts to further enhance the strategic partnership between China and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations.

Yu also paid a visit to a royally-launched project in northern Chiang Mai Province, in which China has also participated.

The project, initiated by Thai King Bhumibol Adulyadej and Queen Sirikit in 1969, aims to eradicate narcotics and improving the local people’s livelihood by cultivating cash crops like fruit and vegetables instead of poppy.

Yu said China will continue to participate in the project and bring benefit to the local people.

While visiting a bilingual school in Chiang Mai, where teaching is conducted in Thai and Chinese, Yu urged students to make their own contribution to China-Thailand friendship in the future.

Abe’s war statement should respect China’s feelings: Chinese diplomat

TOKYO, 25 July — China’s top diplomat, State Councilor Yang Jiechi, has urged Tokyo to respect the feelings of the Chinese people in the statement issued by Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe in August to commemorate the 70th anniversary of the end of World War II, a government source said on Friday.

“We want (Tokyo) to consider the feelings of (Chinese) citizens,” Yang said during a meeting with Shotoro Yachi, Abe’s close aide, last week in Beijing.

During over five hours of talks on 16 July 16, Yang did not specifically ask that certain words such as “aggression” and “apology” be used in Abe’s war anniversary statement.

The content of the statement is drawing close attention from China and South Korea, which suffered Japanese wartime aggression or colonization before and during World War II.

They are watching to see whether Abe’s words, downplayed apologies issued by previous Japanese governments, Abe will put the final touches to the statement ahead of 15 August, the day Japan surrendered to the Allied forces in 1945, based on input to be provided by a panel of experts.

During the meeting, Yachi, the first secretariat head of Japan’s National Security Council, requested Beijing resume negotiations toward signing a treaty on a joint gas development project in the East China Sea in line with a 2008 accord.

Japan has criticized China for unilaterally building new gas rig-like structures in the waters despite the 2008 agreement. Yang replied, “It is fine for us to resume (the talks), but time is not ripe yet,” according to the source.

On Wednesday, the Japanese government made public a map and aerial photos of 12 offshore structures as evidence of China’s unilateral gas field development near the median line in the East China Sea between the shorelines of China and Japan, prompting Beijing to protest.

During his three-day trip to the Chinese capital through 18 July, Yachi also held talks with Chinese Premier Li Keqiang.

Children miss school, fear abuse after Nepal quake — aid groups

LONDON, 25 July — Inadequate shelter, school closures and a lack of safe water and sanitation are the three biggest concerns of Nepali children affected by two huge earthquakes, said a major survey published on Saturday, the three-month anniversary of the first quake.

Children interviewed by aid agencies in the aftermath of the disaster also expressed worry about the lack of privacy and space, with younger children fearing attacks by wild animals, and girls feeling vulnerable to sexual harassment.

“Living under the sky increases our exposure to abuse,” an adolescent girl from Sindhupalchok, a district hit by the earthquakes, told an aid worker.

At least 2.8 million people, around 10 percent of Nepal’s population, need urgent help according to a UN report published earlier this month. Almost 9,000 people were killed by the quakes on 25 April and 12 May.

Nearly 2,000 children were interviewed by four charities, in what they described as one of the largest ever child consultations ever undertaken following a disaster.

“Tens of thousands of children are living in inadequate shelters, said Lucia Withers, author of the report. “It is still a race against time to provide basic needs of shelter, sanitation and protection.”

Withers is humanitairian adviser for Save the Children, which conducted the survey alongside Plan International, UNICEF and World Vision.

Separate research carried out by Oxfam in Dhading district to the west of capital Kathmandu found that women and adolescent girls feel at risk of physical and sexual abuse in temporary shelters which are often overcrowded.

The situation is particularly bad for single women, often widows and divorcées, who tend to be isolated and receive little in the way of community support, Oxfam said on Saturday.

“All living through two massive earthquakes, this situation is only compounding their trauma,” said Cecilia Keizer, country director for Oxfam in Nepal.

Strong typhoon approaches Japan’s southwestern islands

TOKYO, 25 July — A strong typhoon brought fierce winds, heavy rain and high waves to Okinawa and a nearby island chain in southwestern Japan on Saturday, causing dozens of flights to be cancelled.

Typhoon Halola is moving northward, and expected to pass to the west of Japan and lose strength on Sunday.

Winds up to 157 kilometers per hour were recorded on Minamidaito Island, a remote island in the east of Naha, on Saturday morning, and 68.5 millimeters of rain per hour deluged the village of Kunigami in Okinawa on Saturday afternoon, according to the Japan Meteorological Agency.

All Nippon Airways cancelled 56 flights mostly at Naha airport in Okinawa’s capital, and Japan Airlines 17 flights.

At 7 pm, the year’s 12th typhoon was about 60 kilometers southwest of Amami, Kagoshima Prefecture, and moving north-northwest at 20 kilometers per hour, packing winds of up to 162 kilometers per hour with a atmospheric pressure of 975 hectopascals near its centre.—Kyodo News

ATHENS, 25 July — Talks between Greece and its international creditors over a new bailout package should go ahead on Monday after logistical issues that delayed meetings this week are resolved, a Greek official said on Saturday.

The meetings with officials from the European Commission, European Central Bank and International Monetary Fund had been expected to start on Friday but were delayed by organisational issues including the location of talks and security.

The finance ministry official said talks were now expected to get underway formally on Monday after the logistical issues were resolved. The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, denied that the government was trying to keep the lenders’ team away from government departments.

“We don’t have any problem with them visiting the General Accounting Office,” the official said.

Greeks have viewed inspections visits by the lenders in Athens as a violation of the country’s sovereignty and six-months of astringuous negotiations with EU partners took place in Brussels at the government’s request.

Asked if the government would now allow EU, IMF and ECB mission chiefs to visit Athens for talks on a new loan, State Minister Alekos Flabouraris said: “If the agreement says that they should visit a ministry, we have to accept that.”

The confusion around the expected start to the talks on Friday underlined the challenges ahead if negotiations are to be wrapped up in time for a bailout worth up to 86 billion euros to be approved in parliament by 20 August, as Greece intends.

Already, Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras is struggling to contain a rebellion in his leftist Syriza party that made his government dependent on votes from pro-European opposition parties to get the tough bailout terms approved in parliament.

One of Tsipras’ closest aides warned that the understanding with the opposition parties could not last long and a “clear” solution was needed, underlining widespread expectations that new elections may come as soon as September or October.

“The country cannot go on with a minority government for long. We need clear, strong solutions,” State Minister Nikos Pappas told the weekly Ependysi in an interview published on Saturday.

Tsipras, who is by far the most popular politician in Greece according to opinion polls, has said his priority is to secure the bailout package before dealing with the political fallout from the Syriza party rebellion.

Responding to a poll by Metron Analysis for Parapolitika newspaper on Saturday, 61 percent of Greeks had a positive view of Tsipras against 36 percent who disapproved. An overwhelming majority - 78 percent - still wanted Greece to stay in the euro zone against 19 percent in favour of going back to the drachma.

Tsipras insists there is no viable alternative to the bailout but has been wary of striking out against his party opponents in a bid to keep it together, at least while talks proceed.

Flabouraris called on Syriza rebels to drop their opposition.

“They are still my comrades and I urge them to get back to their senses even at the last moment,” he told Skiaki television. “They should remember that the Left movement is now in power. It’s not an opposition party. Now we have to discuss the new landscape.”—Reuters

US’s Biden welcomes heavy weapons-free zone proposal for Ukraine – White House

WASHINGTON, 25 July — US Vice President Joe Biden on Friday welcomed Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko’s proposal to create a 30-km (17-mile) security zone free of tanks, artillery and mortar systems along the line of contact in eastern Ukraine, the White House said.

Biden and Poroshenko, who spoke by telephone, agreed that Russia and Russian-backed separatists had still failed to implement the Minsk agreement calling for a ceasefire and the removal of heavy weapons from the line of contact, the White House said in a statement.

“Joe’s message to the separatists was clear: We want a peaceful solution, and we want the Minsk process to work,” a senior US administration official told Reuters on Sunday.

“We want to engage in the Minsk process, not undermine it,” the official said.

Separately, President Barack Obama said on Saturday that the US would provide military equipment to Ukraine to help it fight separatists in eastern Ukraine.

Obama did not provide details of the assistance. The US has already provided $1 billion in non-lethal aid.

Belgium, Germany, France and Italy were also expected to “significantly increase” their military assistance to Ukraine at the US-Ukraine Business Forum in Washington on Friday, according to the Brussels-based Centre for European Policy Studies.

Biden said on Thursday that the US was ready to consider providing more military aid.

Obama was asked in an NBC “Today” show interview on Friday if the nuclear deal reached last week would make it more likely that Israel might attempt a military attack on Iran.

“If done in a unilateral manner, I think it’s going to lead to a result that will be satisfactory for the Security Council,” Obama said.

“If it’s being done in an inclusive, inclusive or consultative manner that allows us to put this programme to the test, that’s an alternative,” Obama said.

Obama has been under pressure from Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to approve a plan to flex US muscle in the Middle East in the face of Iranian threats.

Biden said on Thursday that a US decision to arm Ukraine with lethal aid would “require significant consultation.”

Biden said on Friday it was still not clear if the US would transfer lethal aid to Ukraine.

The US has long rejected supplying lethal weapons to Ukraine.

The treaty signed in 2015 prevents the US, NATO allies and others from transferring such weapons to Ukraine.

Separately, US diplomat Edward Price told CNN on Saturday that the US would continue to work to remove “obstacles” that have slowed the delivery of lethal aid.

“We have more to do,” Price said.

Biden also said on Friday that the US would continue to support Turkey, which has a “very important role” in the region, in its efforts to counter Islamic State (IS) extremism.

Biden said the US was “working very closely” with Turkey, which has been requesting US help to打击 IS.

Biden also discussed US efforts to step up supply of equipment to Ukraine.

UN to vote on MH17 tribunal; Russia says likely to block

UNITED NATIONS, 25 July — The United Nations Security Council is due to vote on Wednesday on a bid for an international tribunal to prosecute those suspected of downing a passenger airliner last year in Ukraine, but Russia said on Friday it was likely to block the move.

Russia last week proposed a rival text that demands justice for the victims of Malaysia Airlines flight MH17, but does not establish a tribunal.

Flight MH17 was shot down in July 2014 with 298 passengers on board, two-thirds of them Dutch. It crashed in Ukrainian territory held by Russian-backed separatists.

The vote on the proposal by Malaysia, Australia, the Netherlands and Ukraine to create an international tribunal is set for Wednesday afternoon, according to New Zealand, president of the UN Security Council for July.

“Malaysia did include some language from our draft in their draft text but it did not go to the core of our concern, they kept insisting on the need to establish right now an international criminal court,” Russian UN Ambassador Vitaly Churkin told Reuters on Friday.

“This is not a proper thing for the Security Council to do because it’s not a case of a threat to international peace and security,” Churkin said in a phone interview.

Ukraine and Western countries accuse the rebels in eastern Ukraine of shooting down the plane with a Russian-made missile. But Moscow has rejected accusations it supplied the rebels with surface-to-air missiles.

Churkin said that while he had not received definitive instructions from Moscow on how to vote on Wednesday, he said: “I have a very strong feeling that it’s not going to lead to a result that will be satisfactory for the Security Council.”

“We are against it,” Churkin said. Russia is a Security Council veto power, along with the United States, Britain, France and China.

Several council diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity, said they expected Russia to veto the resolution.

Foreign ministers for Malaysia, Australia, the Netherlands, Belgium and Ukraine are expected to attend the planned vote on Wednesday, diplomats said.

Led by the Dutch, those countries are conducting a criminal inquiry into the downing of MH17. Separately, a final report on the cause of the crash is due in October from the Dutch Safety Board. On 21 July, 2014, the Security Council unanimously adopted a resolution that demanded that those responsible “be held to account and that all states cooperate fully with efforts to establish accountability.”

WASHINGTON, 25 July — US Secretary of State John Kerry said on Friday it would be a huge mistake if Israel decided to take unilateral military action against Iran over its nuclear programme.

Kerry was asked in an NBC “Today” show interview on Friday if the nuclear deal reached last week would make it more likely that Israel might attempt a military or cyber attack on Iran.

“That’d be an enormous mistake, a huge mistake with grave consequences for Israel and for the region, and I don’t think it’s necessary,” Kerry said. He warned later on Friday that if Congress failed to approve the deal agreed last week between world powers and Iran to curb Iran’s nuclear programme then Israel could be worse off. Congress has until 17 September to approve or reject the agreement.

“I fear that what could happen is if Congress were to overturn it, our friends in Israel could actually wind up being more isolated and more blamed,” Kerry told the Council on Foreign Relations think tank in New York.

“We would lose Europe and China and Russia and our ability to go forward with our programme we might have to take because we will have turned our backs on a very legitimate program that allows us to put their programme to the test over these next years,” he said. Under the deal agreed in Vienna, US, EU and UN sanctions will be lifted in exchange for long-term curbs on Iran’s nuclear programme that the West suspected was aimed at creating an atomic bomb, but which Tehran says is peaceful.—Reuters

Obama says entrepreneurs in Africa can give hope, deliver growth

Obama says entrepreneurs in Africa can give hope, deliver growth

The talks at State House were attended by Deputy President William Ruto, who is facing charges at the International Criminal Court that he fomented ethnic killings after Kenya’s disputed 2007 election. He denies the charges.

Kenyatta had faced similar charges, but the charges have since been dropped. Obama is keen to boost business ties with Africa, where China overtook the United States as the continent’s biggest trade partner in 2009.

“Africa is on the move. Africa is one of the fastest growing regions in the world,” Obama told the conference, where he was greeted by applause when he began with the words “Jambo”, the Swahili for hello. “It is wonderful to be back in Kenya. “Entrepreneurship offers a positive alternative to the ideologies of violence and division that can all too often fill the void when young people don’t have a future for themselves.”

He said government had a vital role on issues such as establishing the rule of law and curbing corruption, citing two issues often cited by businesses as major obstacles. He said more had to be done to help new firms secure capital.

An array of technology and other companies have started up in recent years in Africa in a bid to shift the continent away from a traditional focus of commodity exports, but entrepreneurs often complain they cannot find affordable capital.

“Africa is open for business,” Kenyatta said in his speech to open the entrepreneurship conference. “It is the time for a new generation of Africans to promote inclusive prosperity.”

Kenya’s economy is expected to grow by about 6 percent this year. The economy of Ethiopia, Obama’s next stop, is forecast to expand by more than 10 percent, although right groups say Addis Ababa’s economic achievements are at the expense of free speech.

The annual US-sponsored conference was being held for the first time in sub-Saharan Africa at a UN compound in Nairobi.

After attending the conference, Obama lunched with relatives at the central Nairobi hotel where he is staying.

Some Africans complain that Obama, whose father was buried in western Kenya, has not paid enough attention to the continent in his presidency. Obama has sought to change that perception, in part by hosting African leaders in Washington this year.

One of Obama’s initiatives, launched in 2013, was to boost electricity supplies across a continent where many are not on the grid. The goal is to add 30,000 megawatts (MW) of capacity. Deals to add 4,100 MW have been agreed so far, the White House said.—Reuters

Clinton emails contained classified material — US inspector

NEW YORK, 25 July — At least four emails from the private email account that former US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton used while in office contained classified information, according to a government inspector’s letter that depicted the email controversy dogging Clinton’s 2016 presidential campaign.

The inspector general of the intelligence community wrote in a letter to members of Congress on Thursday that a sampling of 40 of 30,000 Clinton emails found at least four that should have been classified as secret. The information in the emails was derived from the US intelligence community “and should have been handled as classified, appropriate marked and transmitted via a secure network,” the inspector general, Charles McCullough, wrote. His letter was made available on Friday on a House of Representatives website.

Clinton’s use of her private email account for her work as America’s top diplomat came to light in March and drew fire from political opponents who accused her of sidestepping transparency and record-keeping laws.

The former first lady has said she sent no classified information on her private email account. The inspector general’s comments left open the possibility that Clinton sent or received emails with classified material that she was not aware of.

The front-runner to represent the Democratic Party in the November 2016 election, Clinton has repeatedly said she broke no laws or rules by eschewing a standard government email account. Clinton spokesman Nick Merrill said in a statement she “followed appropriate practices in dealing with classified materials.”

Clinton handed over some 30,000 emails from the private account to the State Department after she quit in 2013, but many thousands of others that she says are not related to her work were deleted.

“We are all accountable to the American people to get the facts right, and I will do my part,” Clinton said at a speech in New York, noting she had handed over tens of thousands of pages of emails.

McCullough said State Department officials had told his office “that there are potentially hundreds of classified emails within the approximately 30,000 provided by former Secretary Clinton.”

Republican Congress and on the presidential campaign trail have seized on the email scandal to portray Clinton as continuing secretive practices they say they also characterized President Bill Clinton’s eight years in office.

While Republicans face little competition for the Democratic Party’s nomination, several recent polls have found a majority of voters find her untrustworthy, a perception exacerbated by controversy over her emails. The US Justice Department said on Friday it is weighing a request by two government inspectors to look into the possible mishandling of classified information from Clinton’s private email account.

The department said earlier in the day it had been asked to treat the issue as a potential criminal matter, but later backtracked to drop a reference to any criminal investigation.

Belgium arrests two ex-Guantanamo inmates on terrorism charges

BRUSSELS, 25 July — Belgium has arrested two former detainees of Guantanamo prison on charges of terrorism, saying the men are suspected of seeking recruits to fight in Syria, the federal prosecutor’s office said on Friday.

The two men, who were held at the Guantana- mo Bay US Naval base in Cuba between 2001 and 2005, were under police surveillance and were arrested in the early hours of Thursday in the Belgian city of Antwerp along with three others.

“They were in a car, we believe waiting to commit a robbery,” said Jean-Pascal Thoreau, a spokesman for Belgium’s federal prosecutor.

Western fighters in Syria and Iraq have found some of their most willing recruits in Belgium, and per capita Belgium is the European country providing the highest number of citizens to fight with Syrian rebels in recent years, data shows.

Belgium is third only to France and Britain, with nearly 300 citizens traveling to fight between late 2011 and December 2013, according to the International Centre for the Study of Radicalization.

The two men accused are Moussa Zemmoura, a 37-year-old Belgian of Moroccan origin, and an Algerian whom the prosecutor’s office identified as South- ane A and who is suspected of spending time in Syria. Zemmoura was captured in the Kandahar region in southern Afghanistan following the 11 September, 2001 attacks. He was flown back to Bel- gium in April 2005 and lat- er released after spending time in a Belgian prison.

Guantanamo was set up after the 11 September attacks for al-Qaeda and Taleban detainees. Obama vowed to close it within a year when he came to of- fice in January 2009. Turkey stages first air strikes on Islamic State in Syria

Friday's operations followed a telephone conversation between Erdogan and US President Barack Obama on Wednesday, and were accompanied by police raids across Turkey to detain hundreds of suspected militants, including from Kurdish groups.

Ankara said it had improved the use of its air bases by US and coalition aircraft to mount strikes against Islamic State, marking a major change in policy that has long been a sore point for Washington.

Turkey has been a reluctant partner in the US-led coalition against Islamic State, emphasising instead the need to oust Syrian President Bashar al-Assad and said Syrian Kurdish forces also pose a grave security threat.

Erdogan said the crack down against Islamic State would be in tandem with an attack on the PKK, which Ankara describes as a separatist organization.

"In our phone call with Obama, we reiterated our determination in the struggle against the separatist organisation PKK," Erdogan told reporters. "We took the first step last night."

Turkey told the United Nations on Friday that it started conducting air strikes in Syria against Islamic State militants because the Syrian government was neither capable or willing to tackle the radical Islamist group.

Turkey has faced increasing insecurity along its 900-km (560-mile) frontier with Syria. A cross-border firefight on Thursday between the army and Islamic State, which has seized large areas of Syria and Iraq, left five militants and one soldier dead. Turkey has also suffered a wave of violence in its largely Kurdish south-east after a suspected Islamic State suicide bomber killed 32 people, many of them Kurds, in the town of Suruc on the Syrian border this week.

Erdogan's critics say he is more concerned with keeping Syrian Kurdish fighters in check, afraid that they have made against Democratic State in the Syrian civil war will embolden Turkey's own 14 million-strong Kurdish minority.

"Even though Erdogan has so far failed to achieve his goals in Syria — the overthrow of Assad — and Islamic State, he is becoming a problem, it is nevertheless a convenient instrument for him," said Halil Karaveli, managing editor of The Turkish Analyst, a policy journal.

"Now he has all the excuses he needs to go after the Kurds and also it makes him look very good in the eyes of the world, which will be happy that Turkey is on board in the coalition.

Opposition lawmakers from the pro-Kurdish Peoples' Democratic Party said Erdogan is intent on "obstructing" advances made by the Syrian Kurds against Islamic State.

"The real aim of today's operations is not the Islamic State, but the democratic opposition," they said in an e-mailed statement.

News of the military operations further unnerved jittery investors, helping send the lira TRY/TOM=D3 down nearly 4 percent on the week. — Reuters

Sorrow grips Egyptians over fatal shipwreck on Nile

CAIRO, 25 July — “Our family cemetery isn’t wide enough for burial of our victims in one time,” Mou斯塔fa Ali said when he stood outside the morgue room of Tahrir Hospital to receive corpses of his family members.

Ali has lost seven persons of his relatives including his wife and two children in two boat collisions last Sunday.

Ali told Xinhua that two of his family’s beloved are still missing. “I had to experience the grief of burial two times: we will hold a funeral and bury five bodies, then we will attend a second funeral and bury five bodies, and competitor."

Egypt’s health ministry said on Friday that the death toll from a collision of cargo ship and a boat on the Nile carrying people celebrating the holidays of post-Ramadan feast on Wednesday has risen to 29, after several more bodies were retrieved from the river.

The death toll is on the increase as the boat has carried nearly 50 passengers, according to eyewitnesses. Rescuers were still searching for more bodies, medical sources added.

State-run Ahram website quoted a security source on Friday saying Egypt Nile boat accident death toll rises to 37. Some 150m far from the coast, the front of the boat has appeared on the surface, with some of the remaining ornaments and broken coloured lamps, and silent music speakers that never stopped playing popular songs in very loud voice, while the backward of the boat was still sinking.

Awaiting people in lines near the coast were staring cautiously at the rescue team who appears from time to time around and near the boat sometimes with victims and many times with empty hands.

Families in queues were standing near the Nile river coast on Friday, while others are searching among the recovered bodies in hospitals for their missing relatives.

Expulsion from Derna bastion may show limits for Islamic State in Libya

CAIRO / BENGAZI, (Libya), 25 July — Islamic State jihadists have exploited widespread chaos to gain a foothold in Libya, but their ejection from an eastern city suggests they may not achieve a Iraq-style takeover due to strong local rivals and the absence of sectarian divisions.

Last month, local Islamist fighters reinforced by local civilians ousted Islamic State jihadists in a push to control much of the eastern Mediterranean coast, one of two bastions the jihadists had established in the North African oil-producing country.

It was the first setback in Libya for the ultra-violent jihadist movement that has sent in combatants and clerics from Tunisia, Yemen and other Arab states to try repeat its success in Iraq and Syria, where it has captured vast territories and proclaimed a "caliphate" based on medieval religious precepts.

Islamic State (IS) has benefited from Libya’s anarchy. Two rival governments are fighting each other and unable to gain the upper hand while former rebel groups that helped topple Muammar Gaddafi in 2011 compete for power, creating a security vacuum.

But IS was driven out of Derna after seven people were killed at a protest against the influx of foreign jihadists and the killing of commander of the local Abul Salam Martyrs Brigade, allied with a former anti-Gaddafi militia in the town.

A number of angry residents joined the Abul Salam Martyrs to help them expel IS from Derna, an Islamist hotpot even during Gaddafi’s 42-year rule in which he suppressed political Islam.

The Sunni Islamic State has drawn considerable groundswell support in Iraq and Syria by nulling long-standing Sunni-Shi’ite Muslim sectarian enmities. But this does not work in Libya, an exclusively Sunni country where local Sunni armed factions and tribes regard Islamic State as an infiltrator and competitor.

“People had enough of Daesh,” said a Derna resident, using a derogatory Arabic acronym for Islamic State, also known as ISIS and ISIL. “The Abu Salim Brigade has enjoyed some support going back to the (anti-Gaddafi) revolution.”

Matia Toudlo, political fellow at the European Council on Foreign Relations, said Islamic State would probably now focus on its other Libya power base — Sirte, Gaddafi’s hometown on the country’s central coast where IS has won unusual support from Gaddafi loyalists opposed to Libya’s jostling new rulers.

IS insurgents have attacked oil fields south of the central city and kidnapped some nine foreign workers.

Peace worth a fortune to Myanmar

By Aung Khin

Myanmar regained its independence from Britain 67 years ago. Since then, a number of ethnic minority groups have waged civil conflicts. The government has made shaky provisional ceasefires with some of them.

Fundamental questions at ceasefire talks included autonomy, federalism and self-determination. These concerns have not been solved, although the country now has preliminary ceasefire agreements with several ethnic armed groups. Internal conflict has been a constant backdrop to the development of Myanmar. Any country torn by civil war cannot properly develop. If all stakeholders fail to make agreements for internal peace, the country will lag behind neighbouring economies. They all need to demonstrate genuine will for national reconciliation.

Civil conflicts have been hampering many pivotal sectors of the country, including tourism, education, health and industry. Although Myanmar has abundant natural resources on land and at sea, development programmes have not been set up effectively due to civil conflicts. In turn, many ordinary people have to live under the poverty line.

After the three-day ceasefire talks between the government and the representatives of ethnic armed groups on 24 July, the stakeholders are hopeful that the final agreement can be made in near future. They held marathon talks of more than 18 months.

Military power cannot assure lasting peace although it can threaten others. Mutual trust and willingness to develop a peaceful environment can guarantee prosperity, as well as the fortune of the country.
Prevent hepatitis, act now

Dr Poonam Khetrapal Singh, Regional Director, WHO South-East Asia Region

Viral hepatitis kills nearly 4000 people every day and close to 1.5 million people every year worldwide. Globally, one in 12 people are infected with viral hepatitis. There could be millions more, with viral hepatitis as it can persist undetected for many years before giving rise to symptoms and can lead to chronic liver damage, cirrhosis, liver cancer and death.

In the WHO South-East Asia Region (SEAR) this life threatening disease claims around half a million lives each year that is more than malaria, dengue, and HIV/AIDS related deaths combined. There are 100 million people living with chronic hepatitis B and 30 million people living with chronic hepatitis C. Almost three-quarter of these are unaware of their infection status. Additionally, many children and adults suffer from hepatitis A. Pregnant women in the Region are vulnerable to hepatitis E infection that is life-threatening in pregnancy.

While hepatitis A and E are transmitted through the faeco-oral route i.e., consumption of contaminated food and water, hepatitis B and C are transmitted through contact with infected blood through unsafe injections, medical procedures, blood transfusion, shaving blades, tattooing and piercing instruments and vertically from an infected pregnant mother to her unborn child.

All forms of hepatitis can cause serious complications — some more than others, depending on the baseline health status of the individual. It is important to be aware and act early to prevent these infections, disability and deaths. It is important to ensure injection and blood safety, adequate hygiene and proper sanitation, vaccination for hepatitis A and B. Getting yourself tested for hepatitis B and C especially if you are vulnerable — e.g. in high risk professions, requiring frequent blood transfusions, unvaccinated for hepatitis B, receiving frequent injections, etc. While there is no vaccine for hepatitis C yet, early diagnosis and treatment can prevent chronic liver damage, cirrhosis, liver cancer and reduce the risk of death.

While this disease has been around for quite some time, the policy and programme response has been lukewarm at best. Lack of reliable information on extent of infection, disease, disability and death due to viral hepatitis could be responsible for the relative isolation of this disease. Also compounding the problem is the fact that it may take years before the signs and symptoms of the disease manifest especially for hepatitis B and C. Unlike HIV, hepatitis does not have vocal community voices demanding right to diagnosis and treatment. Treatment choices too have been limited. We have had treatment for chronic hepatitis B infection for some time and we now have a cure for hepatitis C. Towards the end of 2013, when the US FDA approved the directly acting anti-viral drugs that could cure hepatitis C, it was revolutionary. However, the astronomical price of drugs dampened the excitement. Relentless advocacy and concerted action especially on price negotiation have already resulted in reduction of prices by 90% for low and low-middle income countries. Further reductions with availability of generics will happen in the not so distant future. It will be a treatment revolution for hepatitis C and only then we can dream of eliminating this dreaded disease.

Vaccination is one of the best things to happen for public health. Hepatitis B vaccine is effective. It is part of the routine immunization schedule for children in all countries. Additionally WHO recommends giving hepatitis B vaccination to all newborns within first 24 hours of birth. This simple and cost effective strategy will give us a generation free of hepatitis B. Ideally, all children and adults who have not been vaccinated against hepatitis B should get tested and if not yet infected, should take the three doses of the vaccine. This is especially true for those at higher risk like health care workers, those needing frequent blood transfusions or dialysis. People who frequently inject and men who have sex with men are also at increased risk and should get tested and vaccinated.

The other pillar of prevention is avoiding risks — minimize use of injections, insist on safety of medical procedures, avoid tattoos, should you need, only use safe blood for transfusion. When in doubt, get tested. Be informed, be empowered.

This year’s theme for World Hepatitis Day on July 28 is “Prevent hepatitis, Act now.” This day was chosen to commemorate the birth-day of Nobel Laureate Professor Baruch Samuel Blumberg, who discovered the hepatitis B virus and developed the first hepatitis B vaccine (HBV). The global focus this year will be on prevention for hepatitis B and C; we have vaccine and treatment for hepatitis B and cure for hepatitis C. Combating hepatitis is one of the indicators for the post 2015 health and development agenda. We can be ambitious and aim to eliminate hepatitis B and C together, we can do it.

South Korea pledges help for Myanmar agricultural sector

Nay Pyi Taw, 25 July — Myanmar entered an agreement Saturday with the Korea Rural Community Corporation (KRC) as part of efforts to improve its agriculture and irrigation sector.

KRC will offer effective cooperation in rural development projects in 100 villages. Union Minister for Agriculture and Irrigation U Myint Hlaing said, citing the agreement. The minister stressed the need to implement the development projects phase by phase, with technical assistance and low-interest loans to be provided by KRC.

Speaking at the signing ceremony, the minister called for creating a new level of cooperation in agricultural development between Myanmar and South Korea.

Brazil offers free early treatment for people exposed to AIDS

BRASILIA, 25 July — The Brazilian government has launched a programme to offer free early preventive medical treatment for those who have exposed themselves to the AIDS virus, in efforts to strengthen the fight against the deadly disease of AIDS.

Known as Post-Exposure Prophylaxis (PEP), the treatment programme helps to avoid infection taken within 72 hours after exposure to the risk of AIDS virus, with higher assurance within two hours. Brazil’s official journal Diario Oficial reported, citing sources with Brazil’s Health Ministry.

During the treatment, a mixture of antiretroviral medicines consisting of zidovudine, lamivudine, atazanavir and ritonavir, has to be taken for 28 consecutive days.

The medicine has been offered to health professionals since 1990. But victims of sexual violence and suspected infected persons didn’t get access to the PEP until 1998 and 2011 respectively, while treatment regulations remained to be improved.

The government intends to provide extensive access to the PEP so that even in rural areas, patients can still be treated in clinics without medical specialists.

Apart from offering preventative treatment, Brazil has also provided a comprehensive health-care system offering AIDS-infected patients free treatment.

China progresses in hepatitis B vaccination, more treatment effort urged

BEIJING, 25 July — China has won plaudits from WHO after reaching its goal to control hepatitis B infection among children through immunization ahead of schedule, but more effort is urged for its adult patients.

The National Health and Family Planning Commission announced on Friday that the prevalence of hepatitis B surface antigen, a key index indicating hepatitis B virus (HBV) infection, for Chinese children in the 1-4 and 5-14 age groups both decreased by more than 60 percent from 2006 to 0.32 and 0.94 percent respectively.

This means the country has reached the goal set by the WHO to reduce HBV infection prevalence in children to less than one percent ahead of the deadline of 2017, making the current generation of children the first in the country’s history to almost hepatitis B-free.

Viral hepatitis is a severe health threat and the leading cause of cirrhosis of the liver and liver cancer. China has about 90 million people living with chronic hepatitis B, China started its hepatitis B vaccination programme in 1992, focusing on children under 15.

“Slashing the rate of hepatitis B infection in children means China has drastically reduced this generation’s chances of developing conditions like cirrhosis of the liver and liver cancer later in life. This is an extraordinary public health success story,” said WHO China Rep-resentative Bernhard Schwartlander on Friday.

Meanwhile, Jia Jidong, a hepatopath expert with the Beijing Friendship Hospital under the Capital Medical University, noted a large number of Chinese adults are infected by hepatitis B, citing problems including inconsistent treatments and high medicine cost.

“Many adult patients were not able to follow through long-term use of high-end drugs due to various reasons, which held back treatment,” Jia said, adding that the country’s hepatitis B prevention and control task is arduous.

Dr Schwartlander also called for “the same determined, evidence-based, public health approach which created China’s highly successful hepatitis B vaccination programme” to be adopted for the treatments of the country’s adult patients.”

“Pepper”-installed housing showroom gives feel of living with robot

OSAKA, 25 July — What will it be like living with a humanoid robot that can read human emotions and exchange conversations with humans?

Softbank Group Corp began displaying its popular “Pepper” robots at a housing showroom in Osaka on Friday to give visitors a feel of it, with the round-eyed robots letting out friendly greetings such as “Hello” and “Did you have breakfast?”

Under a capital and business tie-up formed in May with Yamada Denki Co, Softbank is showcasing the robots, which sold out instantly when 1,000 units went on sale in June, at a showroom of Yamada Wood House Co, a subsid- iary of the electrical appliance retailer.

The Nikkei’s FT buy follows years of attempting to break into English news

TOKYO, 25 July — Nikkei’s $1.3 billion (838 million pounds) purchase of the Financial Times from Britain’s Pearson PLC (PSO.N) marks the culmination of decades of attempts by the Japanese household name to break into mainstream English-language media.

The Japanese media group’s flagship newspaper enjoys a must-read reputation for financial news in Japan and, with a circulation of more than 3 million, bills itself as the world’s biggest selling business daily.

But it has remained unable to break out from its home shores since starting life in 1876 as a commodities pricing report published by a trading company.

The broadsheet rose to become Japan’s biggest economic daily, Springering English-speaking readers in the 1960s but a mainstay of the international market.

The Nikkei Weekly newspaper continued but was rebranded, along with the corresponding website, in 2013, adopting a magazine format that last year had a circulation of around 12,000 copies a week, with more than 90 percent sold in Asia.

The Nikkei Asian Review won three prizes at the Asia Society of Publishers in Europe awards, in appearance at the awards, in- cluding an award for report- ing on the environment. The Nikkei also had a years-long alliance with Wall Street Journal publisher Dow Jones, which came to an end in the last decade.

With deep ties to corporate Japan, the Nikkei is known among investors in market-moving previews of corporate earnings days in advance of compa- nies’ official announcements.

That pattern of widespread apparent leaks to the Nikkei attracted criticism at a time when Prime Minister Shinzo Abe’s government has been advocating greater corporate transparency to attract foreign investment.

The Nikkei’s attempt to break out of a stagnating do- mestic media market, in a country with an ageing and declining population, puts it among a group of Japanese companies, including insurers and financial institutions, seeing growth overseas.

Although the yen has fallen about 40 percent against sterling GBP/JPY=R over the past four years — increasing the cost of Brit- ish purchases — Abe’s pol- icies, including a programme of unprecedented monetary easing by the Bank of Japan, has made credit cheap and encour- aged companies to acquire abroad.

Pivotal trade deal reached by WTO members on over 200 IT products

Geneva, 25 July — WTO members came to a consensus on Friday regarding the inclusion of some 200 additional Information Technology (IT) products to the Information Technology Agreement (ITA), which hadn’t been updated since its inception in 1996.

“The list is closed and that is the major conclusion of today’s work,” WTO Director General Roberto Azevedo told the press, referring to the list of 201 new products on which tariff barriers will be eliminated. “Eliminating tariffs on trade of this magnitude will have a huge impact. It will support lower prices, including in many other sectors that use IT products as inputs, it will create jobs and it will help to boost GDP growth around the world,” said Azevedo.

This agreement builds on an initial accord reached by 54 WTO members on 18 July, which will be used as a basis for implementation work to begin, while participating ministers have until December to finalize technical work ahead of the Nairobi Ministerial Conference at the end of the year.

WTO indicated that under the terms of agreement, the majority of tariffs on the products will be lifted within three years, with reductions starting as soon as 2016.

Valued at over 1.3 trillion US dollars in annual trade, the electronics products covered by this expansion include new generation semi-conductors, GPS navigation and medical equipment, as well as machine tools for manufacturing printed circuits, telecommunications satellites and touch screens.

Though not all WTO members participated in negotiations, WTO indicated that major exporter states will benefit from duty-free market access to those state markets committed to eliminating tariffs on the products.

Today’s agreement is the fruit of negotiations which started in 2012 when countries realized that new categories of IT products were not covered by the existing agreement given the level of technical innovation which has taken place over the last 18 years.

WTO indicated that the terms of the agreement will be formally circulated to the full membership on 28 July.

Fiat Chrysler US to recall vehicles to prevent hacking

Detroit/San Francisco, 25 July — Fiat Chrysler will recall 1.4 million vehicles in the United States to install software to prevent hackers from gaining remote control of the engine, steering and other systems in what federal officials said was the first such action of its kind.

The announcement on Friday by FCA US LLC, formerly Chrysler Group LLC, was made days after reports that cybersecurity researchers used a wireless connection to turn on a Jeep Cherokee’s engine as it drove, increasing concerns about the safety of Internet-enabled vehicles.

The researchers used Fiat Chrysler’s (FCAU.N) telematics systems to break into a volunteer’s Cherokee being driven on the highway and issue commands to the engine, steering and brakes.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) said on Friday it would investigate whether FCA’s solution to upgrade software was enough to protect consumers from hackers, although FCA said in its recall announcement that it was unaware of any injuries.

A spokesman for NHTSA said it was the first recall of vehicles because of concerns about cybersecurity, and experts said they hoped it would send a shock through the auto industry and beyond it. The risks of increasing connectivity to physical devices extend far beyond cars and into hospitals and chemical plants and factories, they said.

“It’s a huge problem, and it’s an architectural problem with this Internet-of-Things concept,” said Nicholas Weaver, a security researcher at the nonprofit International Computer Science Institute in Berkeley, California.

He said that at present there is a divide in terms of design, in that cars and other products could be accessible from a variety of sources, such as smartphones, as with the Cherokee, or else be designed to communicate only with a single authenticated server.

Products designed to be accessible by a range of means including smartphones leave a large “attack surface” that is easier to penetrate. But products that communicate only with a single authenticated server allow the company that owns the server to compile a raft of information about the user, increasing privacy concerns, Weaver said.

Ed Skulls, an expert in securing connected devices, said the fact that the recall came so soon after publication of the FCA cybersecurity issue is “a shot across the bow of other IoT manufacturers that this could cost them a lot of money.”

Skulls said he hoped companies would reconsider what they spend on security earlier in the design process in order to avoid similar recalls, lawsuits and the threat of increased regulation.

Nasa spacecraft shows Pluto wrapped in haze, ice flows

Cape Canaveral, (Fla.), 25 July — A stunning silhouette of Pluto taken by NASA’s New Horizons spacecraft after it shot past the icy orb last week show an extensive layer of atmospheric haze, while close-up pictures of the ground reveal flows of nitrogen ice, scientists said on Friday.

New Horizons became the first spacecraft to visit Pluto and its entourage of moons and so far has returned about 5 percent of the pictures and science data collected in the days leading up to, during and immediately following the 14 July flyby.

The latest batch of images includes a backlit view of Pluto with sun, located more than 3 billion miles away, shining around and through the planet’s atmosphere. Analysis shows distinct layers of haze in Pluto’s nitrogen, carbon monoxide and methane atmosphere. The haze extends at least 100 miles (161 km) off the surface.

“This is our first peek at weather in Pluto’s atmosphere,” New Horizons scientist Michael Summers, with George Mason University in Fairfax, Virginia, told reporters during a teleconference press briefing.

As the tiny particles fall to the ground, they may trigger chemical reactions that give Pluto its reddish hue, he added.

The haze layer, which extends five times farther than predicted by computer models, was not the only surprise. Pressure measurements show the total mass of Pluto’s atmosphere has halved in two years.

“That’s pretty astonishing, at least to an atmospheric scientist. That tells you something is happening,” Summers said.

More details will come over the next year as New Horizons sends recorded data back to Earth.

NASA also released new images of Pluto’s surface, with telltale signs of a wide range of geologic activities including a Pluto-to-version of glacial ice flows. — Reuters

First four-legged snake fossil discovered

Beijing, 25 July — 113-million-year-old four-legged snake fossil found in Brazil lately was estimated to be an ancestor of modern snakes.

According to the scientists, those snakes’ had tiny arms and legs of 4mm and 7mm long respectively, but their fingers and toes were very long and skinny, showing that they were probably not used for walking but for grabbing its prey. The fossil coils and writhes on its slab, which the researchers considered as a sign that it was able to squeeze its meals into submission. It was thus called huggy snake by Dr Longrich, one of the study’s authors from the University of Bath.

“It would sort of embrace or hug its prey with its forelimbs and hindlimbs. So it’s the huggy snake,” he explained. “The idea that snakes developed from marine reptiles has been negated by researchers. Rather, it’s the most primitive fossil snake known, and Nick Longrich is quite sure that it’s not aquatic. He explained that the shape of the creature’s tail is not for swimming and no sign of fins has been found. At the same time, the long trunk and short snout were the typical signs of a burrower.” — Xinhua

Bush but no Trump expected at August three Republican forum

WASHINGTON, 25 July — A Republican forum on 3 August in New Hampshire is growing in significance as 14 candidates have now agreed to participate.

The Voters First Republican Presidential Forum was set up to accommodate candidates who were not ranked in the top 10 in national polling and who are to compete in the first official Republican debate, moderated by Fox News on 6 August in Cleveland.

But now many in the top 10 are planning to show up for the New Hampshire forum as well. New York real estate mogul Donald Trump is not attending, the Union Leader newspaper of Manchester, New Hampshire, reported.

The Voters First Republican Presidential Forum is to be held at St. Anselm College in Manchester.

Trump is not attending, the Union Leader newspaper of Manchester, New Hampshire, reported.

The two-hour forum is intended to highlight the importance of New Hampshire’s first-in-the-nation primary, along with the nominating contests in Iowa and South Carolina.

The Union Leader, one of the sponsors for the forum, said the candidates who have committed to attend include Jeb Bush, Scott Walker, Rand Paul, Marco Rubio, Carly Fiorina, Bobby Jindal, John Kasich and Chris Christie.

Also on the list are Rick Perry, George Pataki, Lindsey Graham, Ted Cruz, Rick Santorum and Ben Carson. — Reuters

Suspect in Louisiana theatre rampage had history of mental illness

LAFAYETTE, (La.), 25 July — A 59-year-old man who had been committed to a hospital for psychiatric care was identified by authorities as the gunman who fatally shot two people in a rampage at a movie theatre in central Louisiana before turning the gun on himself as police closed in.

The gunman, John R Houser, had a volatile relationship with his family and had history of mental illness, police said, despite a history of mental illness and having been denied a concealed-carry permit seven years before because of a domestic violence complaint against him and a prior arrest.

Police said Houser acted alone and appeared to have carefully planned his attack in advance with hopes of making a quick getaway. Before buying a ticket for the 7 pm show, Houser parked his blue Honda Civic in the parking lot near the Medallion Theatre. He also bought a .40 caliber handgun about 20 minutes into the comedy film “Trainwreck,” sending panicked theatregoers ducking behind seats ing panicked theatregoers ducking behind seats ing panicked theatregoers ducking behind seats.

Disguises including glasses and women’s wigs were later uncovered in a local motel room where he was staying.

“He is apparent that he was intent on shooting and escaping,” Lafayette Police Chief Jim Craft said, who described Houser as an unemployed “drifter” from Phenix City, Alabama.

Houser never made it back to his car. As police swarmed the Grand 16 Theatre, located along a main thoroughfare in Lafayette, he reloaded his pistol, re-entered the auditorium and fired several more rounds at the crowd before killing himself, Craft said. In addition to the gun, he was carrying two 10-round magazines of bullets.

Police said they did not know why the suspect launched the attack in Lafayette, roughly 55 miles (90 km) southwest of the state capital Baton Rouge. — Reuters

Deadly flash floods in Pakistan damage roads and crops

LONDON, 25 July — Flash flooding caused by torrential monsoon rains has killed at least 28 in Pakistan and affected hundreds of thousands of people, according to aid agencies, with further downpours expected in the coming days.

In Chitral in the north-west, roads, bridges and crops were badly damaged, with more than a quarter of a million affected, the EU’s humanitarian office said.

Pakistan’s poorest province, Baluchistan in the south-west, was also badly hit.

“Some villages have been cut off from the rest of the district,” said Shah Fahad Ali Khan, 27, a university student living in Zarangwala, a village in Chitral.

People in flood-prone areas have been shifted to safer ground, he said on Friday in an online message. Heavy rains are expected over the weekend, which may cause more flash flooding and could trigger landslides in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Province, which includes Chitral, Pakistan’s meteorological department said earlier this week.

The heavy rains started falling on 15 July, and continued over the next week throughout the country, causing some urban flooding in Lahore, Islamabad and Rawalpindi, the Pakistani Red Crescent said in a statement. Deadly flooding is common in Pakistan’s monsoon season, which runs from June to September. Last September dozens of people in Punjab and Kathunkhwa Province, which includes Chitral, Pakistan’s meteorological department said earlier this week. The heavy rains started falling on 15 July, and continued over the next week throughout the country, causing some urban flooding in Lahore, Islam.

China seizes 400 kg of milk formula made in Japan

BEIJING, 25 July — Chinese border quarantine officials have seized over 400 kilograms of milk formula produced in areas affected by Japan’s Fukushima nuclear disaster, local media reported on Friday.

The products arrived in parcels mailed to Hunan Province between 1 and 20 July, state-run Xinhua News reported, and constituted the province’s largest ever haul of banned Japanese food products. The infant formula, Xinhua reported, was not contaminated with radioactive material.

Following the 2011 Fukushima nuclear accident, China placed a blanket prohibition on importing food produced in 10 Japanese prefectures affected by the disaster. Last month, officials from Japan’s farm ministry met with a senior Chinese official in charge of food inspection to discuss easing the restrictions. Imported milk formula is a particularly popular product among Chinese consumers who were put off from domestic products after a 2008 food safety scandal where Chinese companies were found to have adulterated their products with the chemical melamine, leading to the deaths of six infants.

Canada’s Harper targets scandal-plagued Senate as election looms

REGINA, (Saskatchewan), 25 July — Canadian Prime Minister Stephen Harper took aim at the scandal-plagued upper Senate chamber on Friday, saying he would not name any more appointees to an institution that has caused him major trouble.

The Senate’s woes embroiled key Harper allies and could hurt the chances of the ruling Conservatives in an election set for October. Harper, in power since early 2006, is seeking a rare fourth consecutive term in office.

Harper has long said he wants to reform or abolish the 105-seat chamber on the grounds that it is outdated and ineffective. Eliminating the chamber would need the agreement of all Canada’s 10 provinces, who are split over what to do.

“We will have a moratorium on further Senate appointments,” said Harper, who has not named any senators for the last two years. There are currently 22 Senate vacancies.

The official opposition left-leaning New Democrats, who recently polls show have a chance of winning power in October, have long called for the Senate to be abolished.

“Harper had ten years to fix the Senate. He failed,” the party said in a statement. Last month, an official probe revealed that members of the Senate improperly spent almost $31 million ($770,000) in just two years.

Mike Duffy, a former television journalist who became a popular Conservative party fundraiser once in the Senate, is currently on trial for fraud and bribery.

Duffy was suspended along with two other Harper appointees after questions about their expenses came to light. — Reuters

Italy pilots’ strike grounds planes on busy holiday weekend

Rome; 25 July — Pilots and flight attendants at Italian airline Alitalia went on strike across the country on Friday, forcing the company to cancel flights at the start of one of the busiest holiday weekends of the year.

The Anpae union called the 24-hour stoppage to push management to give guarantees over staffing levels and harmonise pay levels following Gulf carrier Etihad Airways’ purchase of a 49 percent stake in loss-making Alitalia last year.

The airline cancelled 15 percent of Friday’s scheduled flights and accused unions of showing a “lack of respect” to passengers, with the strike coming just as Rome’s main Fiumicino airport struggles to return to full capacity after a fire in May. The strike has dealt a fresh blow to Italy’s troubled transport system and follows weeks of chaos on the Rome metro, where drivers are staging wildcat protests to seek new regulations that they claim are in and out of work.

Injured Japanese climber undergoes successful operation in Pakistan

ISLAMABAD, 25 July — A Japanese woman who was injured in an avalanche on Monday while climbing the world’s 12th highest peak in Pakistan’s Karakoram mountain range underwent a successful operation on Friday at a military hospital in Rawalpindi, her tour operator said.

Sumiyo Tsuzuki, who sustained a fracture in her left foot in the accident at Broad Peak and was airlifted to hospital in Skardu by the Pakistan Army two days later, is expected to remain hospitalized at least through the weekend, according to Sultan Ali of Nazir Sabir Expeditions.

“The operation was successful and hopefully she would be able to resume her normal life,” he said.

Chris Brown leaves Philippines after three days over payment dispute

MANILA, 25 July — Philippines authorities on Friday allowed award-winning American singer and hip-hop star Chris Brown to fly out of the country, three days after he was barred from leaving due to a dispute over fraud allegations.

A video showing Brown walking to his plane, saying goodbye to Manila and inviting people to party in Macau was posted on the website of TMZ entertainment news on Friday.

Immigration and airport authorities said Brown secretly obtained immigration clearance showing he had no legal liability in the country, allowing him to fly out on Friday night. On Thursday, Justice Secretary Leila de Lima said that a so-called lookout bulletin order that initially barred Brown from exiting the country was not enough to prevent him from leaving.

Brown and his promoter were accused of fraud by a company linked to a powerful local indigenous Christian organization, Iglesia ni Cristo (INC), after he canceled a New Year’s concert in Manila in December. The organization said Brown and his promoter did not return money paid to them for the canceled show.

Brown had posted several messages on Twitter earlier in the week, saying he was innocent of the allegation against him. He also uploaded videos on Instagram, pleading to be allowed to leave the country after his packed concert on Tuesday. The videos, including one where he appealed for help from US President Barack Obama and another showing him on his knees, have reportedly been taken down.—Reuters

Cruise back with more stunts in ‘Mission: Impossible — Rogue Nation’

VIENNA, 25 July — He’s swung around skyscrapers and leapt off buildings, and now Tom Cruise is back in the blockbusting action-movie franchise “Mission: Impossible”. And in the latest installment, he adds a new feat — clinging to the side of a plane as it takes off.

The 53-year-old Hollywood star returns as Ethan Hunt in “Mission: Impossible — Rogue Nation”, his fifth stint as the secret agent, serving up the usual action-packed and nail-biting scenes.

When he’s working on one of the films, “I think, what is going to entertain them, what is going to surprise them and what story are we going to come up with here and how to put these things in,” Cruise said at the film’s world premiere on Thursday night when asked about the stunts.

“As a filmaker, it is nice to sit back and dream of these things.”

It has been nearly 20 years since the first “Mission: Impossible” film came out, and Cruise said that while he now may be older, he keeps pushing himself.

“I just don’t sleep, I just keep going,” he said.

In the film, the Impossible Mission Force has been disbanded and Hunt and his team face off with the sinister Syndicate organization. The film is partly set in Vienna, where Thursday’s premiere was held.

“I think there are always big problems to solve and ways to figure it out and the sequences keep you on the edge of your seat … it’s funny and fun and it takes you to a different place,” Cruise said.

“We have such fun characters in the movie.” The film also stars Simon Pegg, Jeremy Renner and Rebecca Ferguson.

“Mission: Impossible — Rogue Nation” is scheduled for release in US cinemas on 31 July.

LOS ANGELES, 25 July — Jake Gyllenhaal has had a penchant for the dark side in recent years, playing tortured and sometimes sociopath characters on the fringe, but the actor found himself playing the ‘most adult and most evolved’ role to date as a professional boxer.

In “Southpaw”, out in US theaters on Friday, Gyllenhaal plays Billy Hope, a New York orphan who becomes a rang-to-fists boxing success, then spirals back into poverty and is unable to care for his young daughter after the sudden death of his wife Maureen (Rachel McAdams).

“I don’t know if he believes in himself as much as he pretends to believe in himself,” Gyllenhaal told Reuters, “Spending the money he’s been given and holding onto things and believing that he earns them and deserves them, all of those things are quick to go.” Directed by Antoine Fuqua, “Southpaw” follows Billy as he reluctantly falls apart and struggles to pull himself out of a severe slump, with his preteen daughter (played by Oona Laurence) disconnects with him.—Reuters

Kelly Rutherford loses custody battle in California

LOS ANGELES, 25 July — Actress Kelly Rutherford has been dealt a bitter legal blow in her custody battle with her ex-husband after a California judge ruled she has no right to argue the case in the state.

The 46-year-old former “Gossip Girl” star has been locked in a six-year court battle with her ex-husband Daniel Girsh, over the custody of Helena, six, and Hermes, eight, which began when their father’s US visa was revoked and he was allowed to take the children to France to live with him in 2012, reported People magazine.

Rutherford has been protesting the ruling ever since, insisting the case should never have been heard in California in the first place — as neither she nor Giersch lived there at the time of the decision, and she recently scored a small victory when a Monaco judge agreed the youngsters should spend the summer with their mother in the US.—PTI
Wildfire at Montana’s Glacier National Park rages for fourth day

Montana, 25 July — A wildfire in Montana’s Glacier National Park raged for a fourth day through heavy timber on Friday during peak visitor season, while another blaze in Northern California charred the mountains above Napa Valley wine country, officials said. The 4,000-acre (162-hectare) Reynolds Creek Fire in northern Montana broke out on Tuesday and forced the closure of the main road through the eastern half of the park, which receives more than 2 million visitors a year.

The fire has forced the closure of the Rising Sun and St Mary campgrounds, a nearby motor inn and several trails, as well as a 20-mile (32-km) stretch of the picturesque Going-to-the-Sun Road which bisects the park.

The rest of Glacier National Park, which covers over 1 million acres (400,000 hectares) in northwestern Montana and straddles the Canadian border, remained open to the public. The park receives more visitors during July than any other month.

Evacuations were ordered along the western shore of Lower St Mary Lake, Loring said. A dozen people left homes in the area, which is in the Blackfeet Nation’s reservation on the eastern edge of the park, said Robert DesRosier, the tribe’s homeland security director.

The number of personnel assigned to battle the blaze rose to 300 on Friday, from 200 the day before, according to fire-tracking website InciWeb, which gathers information from multiple agencies. The cause of the blaze remains unknown.

On Friday, firefighters at Glacier planned complete a fireline around the head of the blaze near a site where prairie ground meets a mountain range, officials said on InciWeb.

New Bayreuth Wagner museum confronts family Nazi ties head on Bayreuth, Germany, 25 July — A renovated Richard Wagner Museum opening in Bayreuth this weekend to coincide with the Bavarian city’s annual Wagner opera festival puts the composer’s anti-Semiticism and his family’s later ties to Adolf Hitler center stage for the first time.

It also depicts the close ties his widow Cosima, who died in 1930, and his descendants forged with Hitler, who loved Wagner’s music and regularly visited Bayreuth to hear operas in the “Festspielhaus” that Wagner designed and built in the 1870s.

“It should be not only about his music and his operas but also the reception of his work in later decades and the relations of his family with Hitler.”

The complex of three buildings, the main one brand new, contains an array of opera costumes, audio-visual displays, a cinema and a café, and will have changing exhibitions.

Most of this is contained in a new glass-and-concrete, largely subterranean main building built alongside Wagner’s Bayreuth home “Wahnfried”, which he built in the 1870s and which suffered major damage in an Allied bombing raid at the end of World War Two.

“Wahnfried” also has been restored with many original furnishings, but Friedrich said it was not a “composer Disneyland” and anything not original is draped in white cloth.

None of the famously quarrelsome Wagner descendants, including his great-granddaughter Katharina Wagner, director of the Bayreuth Festival, or her half-sister Eva Pasquier-Wagner, the outgoing co-director, had yet seen the new museum, but the family “have given permission for the renovation, Friedrich said.

Nike Wagner, another great-granddaughter, who in the 1930s lost out to Katharina in a bid to become the Bayreuth director, will give the dedication speech at the opening, officials said.

The museum compound also includes a house formerly occupied by Wagner’s son Siegfried, who died in 1930. The rooms of Siegfried’s Welsh-born widow Winifred, who became close to Hitler, will be open for the first time.

Also in the Siegfried house, the museum devotes significant space to Wagner’s anti-Semitic essays, the texts of which are displayed on oblong video monitors on the ground floor.

These texts, and some of the nationalist themes and racial undercurrents in his operas, made Wagner a Nazi favourite.

There also is a temporary exhibition in the main building showing the Wagner family’s close ties to the Nazis, including a photograph of two Wagner nieces standing arm-in-arm with Hitler during one of his visits in the mid-1930s.

Sharapova and Dimitrov reach break point

Sofia, 25 July — Russian five-times grand slam champion Maria Sharapova has split with Bulgarian boyfriend Grigor Dimitrov after a nearly three-year relationship.

“Our paths split,” 24-year-old Dimitrov, currently number 16 in the ATP rankings, told Bulgarian media on Friday. “We experienced wonderful moments together. I wish her much happiness and success in life and in tennis.”

“Now I’m concentrating entirely on the game and I’m sure the results will soon be seen... This is the summer of the new beginning for me.”

Dimitrov, who climbed to number eight in the world last year after reaching the Wimbledon semi-finals, has had a lean year and is still to reach a final.

Blatter is a victim and a brave person — Russian chief

ST PETERSBURG, 25 July — FIFA’s embattled president Sepp Blatter is “a victim” and “a very brave person”, the chief executive of the 2016 Russian World Cup organizing committee said on Friday.

Blatter is in St Petersburg for Saturday’s World Cup qualifying draw, his first foreign trip since football’s ruling body became the subject of criminal investigations into allegations of systemic corruption.

The 79-year-old Swiss is standing down in February as a result of the crisis.

“He has always been a friend of our country,” Alexei Sorokin told the BBC. “We are certain everything he’s doing is for the good of FIFA to which he has dedicated his life.

Unfortunately, he decided to take up responsibility himself for certain things which are not within his responsibility.”

The bidding processes for the 2018 and 2022 World Cups are being investigated in the US and Switzerland, leading to media speculation that Russia and Qatar could be stripped of hosting the finals and a new vote ordered. Sorokin said the controversy was “casting shade on the most cherished FIFA product, the World Cup, without any grounds. It’s a purely blown-up matter which hurts us,” he added. “It keeps lingering on in the media and in people’s minds and that is really disappointing.

“We need to focus. It’s time to go on and stop rubbing it in and discussing this.”

Sorokin also denied suggestions the Russian bid team destroyed computers when FIFA launched its own internal inquiry into the allegations of corruption.

“They (the computers) were not destroyed,” said Sorokin. “The truth is they became obsolete and they were naturally discarded.

“I understand there is regrettable competition that created a long time ago around Russia that creates suspicions that we don’t deserve.

“That is the biggest challenge that we live with, stereotypes, and part of our job is to overcome these stereotypes about Russia. We believe we are doing that,” said Sorokin.

Workmanlike Bolt answers doubts with season’s best

LONDON, 25 July — Usain Bolt answered questions over his fitness ahead of the world championships with a season’s best of 9.87 seconds in the 100 metres with a workmanlike performance at the London Anniversary Games on Friday.

Just under a month to go before he defends his world 100 and 200 titles in Beijing, the Jamaican showed he had recovered from a pelvic injury that has disrupted his season, although he was left with plenty to ponder in the rain-lashed capital.

The world’s fastest man shook off the rust from his layoff to set the world’s fastest time this year.

Bolt gave Mo Farah a hug as he left the track, leaving the Briton to take centre stage and conjure memories of his 2012 Olympic triumphs in the same stadium.

Farah has been dogged by the doping allegations surrounding his coach Alberto Salazar but received a huge ovation before and after winning the 3,000 metres in 7:34.66, the fastest time in the world this year.

Farah, who has not been accused of any wrongdoing, imitated the ‘Lightning Bolt’ pose of the Jamaican and told reporters: “You can only do what you do best and that, for me, is running.”

On a night when the soaking conditions made fast times difficult, American former world champion Jason Richardson took the 110 metres hurdles spoils in 13.19 seconds. Olympic champion and world record holder American Aries Merritt could only finish fourth, while Cuban Orlando Ortega, the fastest in the world this year, was fifth.

Jasmin Stowers, who will not compete in Beijing after missing selection, led home an American 1-2-3 in the women’s 100m hurdles, winning comfortably in 12.47 seconds ahead of Dawn Harper-Nelson (12.64) and world champion Brianna Rollins (12.65).

The grim conditions for competitors were underlined when the pole vault competition was postponed until Saturday.

Schedules for 2018 FIFA World Cup unveiled

SAINT PETERSBURG, 25 July — The match schedules for the 2018 World Cup in Russia was unveiled by FIFA here on Friday, one day ahead of the qualifications draw for the tournament.

The 2018 World Cup will be held at 12 stadiums across 11 host cities in Russia.

The 2018 FIFA World Cup will host the opening game, where hosts Russia will be one side, along with a semi-final and the final. Saint Petersburg will host the opening game.

Schedules for the 2017 Confederations Cup was also unveiled on Friday.

Hamburg sign Hoffenheim’s Sven Schipplock

BERLIN, 25 July — With the signing of Hoffenheim’s Sven Schipplock, Hamburg snapped up their second striker of the summer transfer window, both Bundesliga teams confirmed on Friday.

The 26-year-old striker has put pen to paper on a three-year deal that keeps him with the “Rebels” until June 2018.

Schipplock played from 2011 until 2015 for Hoffenheim where he provided 52 assists and 16 goals in 84 Bundesliga appearances.

“I think it is a dream for a lot of player to play for such a great club like Hamburg,” Schipplock said.

The same goes for me. It is an honour to get such an offer therefore I didn’t have to think twice,” Schipplock told the club’s official homepage.

Willett leads way as storms lash European Masters

BERNE, 25 July — Britain’s Danny Willett, who was tied sixth at last week’s British Open, produced another brilliant performance to lead the way in the European Masters before thunderstorms ended play early at Crans Montana on Friday.

He chalked up nine birdies in a second-round 62 to take the clubhouse lead on 13 under par.

Sharing second place on 12 under were South Korean pair Baek Seuk-Hyun (63) and Yang Yong-Eun (63), the 2009 US PGA Championship winner.

Swedish amateur Marcus Kinhlund was in fourth spot on nine under after posting a 66.

“I hit it well on the range this morning, got into a nice rhythm early on and carried it through the whole round,” Willett told reporters.

“Over these last two weeks I haven’t been getting too far ahead of myself and every time I’ve got in trouble I’ve just taken my medicine and moved on to the next hole.”

American Patrick Reed (69) was in a group on four under par, one better than Britain’s Lee Westwood (69).

Spaniard Sergio Garcia faces an anxious wait before he discovers on Saturday if his one-under-par aggregate will be good enough to make the cut.

Twelve groups were unable to complete their rounds before the storms engulfed the Swiss Alps.
