YANGON — Two people die every day in road accidents in Yangon, with the vast majority of fatalities caused by negligence and recklessness, according to an official from the Traffic Rule Enforcement Supervisory Committee.

Last year, 4,163 people were killed in road accidents in Myanmar, said committee member Dr Thit Lwin. This accounts to 11 people per day.

U Win Myint, a taxi driver with more than 10 years’ service in Yangon, blamed speeding, drink-driving, motorcycle helmets and seatbelts for high numbers of road-related deaths and injuries across the country.

Although the Automobile Law came into effect on 7 September making seat belts compulsory, enforcement will be challenging as the use of seatbelts in Myanmar is extremely low.

“It is impossible to ensure road safety by law enforcement officials alone,” Dr Thit Lwin told The Global New Light of Myanmar.

According to the preliminary findings of the World Health Organization’s report on road safety in Southeast Asia last week, it said Myanmar looks set to be ranked second behind Thailand in road death per 100,000 people.

Dr Thit Lwin stressed the need of public participation in efforts to ensure more effective enforcement of traffic rules across the country.

With an influx of imported cars following the government’s relaxation of rules and regulations on vehicle imports, roads, especially in Yangon, are becoming congested, resulting in a greater number of crashes. Outside of Yangon, accidents involving motorcyclists make up the greatest number of road crashes.—GNLM
Italy offers US$22.5m loan for development projects

NAY PYI TAW—Italy has pledged a US$22.5 million loan for development projects in Myanmar, with an agreement between both governments in Nay Pyi Taw on Friday.

The loan will be spent on infrastructure projects in 215 village tracts in Kayin, Kayah and Shan states and Bago Region to expand access to electricity, water, sanitation services and healthcare.

KBZ partners with Microsoft to upgrade banking services

YANGON—Kanbawza Bank signed an agreement with Microsoft Corporation in Yangon on Friday with the aim of helping the bank to meet international banking standards.

US Ambassador to Myanmar Mr Derek Mitchell, Chairman of KBZ Bank Ltd U Aung Ko Win and Microsoft’s Asia Pacific Vice President Mr Bertrand Launay attended the signing ceremony.

“The banking sector plays an important role in the country’s development. Microsoft has joined with KBZ for our first partnership in the country. We can help KBZ upgrade its banking standards and banking security,” said Mr Launay.

“As KBZ Bank handles a large portion of Myanmar’s banking sector, we chose to partner with Microsoft because of its strong technology and global leadership to upgrade our banking services,” said Senior Managing Director of KBZ Group U Nyo Myint.

Microsoft’s Asia Pacific General Manager Ms. Michelle Simmons explained the companies’ plans to fulfil their corporate social responsibilities.

Ambassador Mitchell said the partnership would benefit not only KBZ Group, but also Myanmar’s entire banking sector. He also pledged to urge international banks to invest in Myanmar. As part of the agreement, KBZ will use Windows 10 devices, Skype for Business and SharePoint for the development of its IT infrastructure.—GNLM

Myanmar shipping company eyes services to EU

YANGON—Myanmar Five Star Shipping Line has acquired the U Thar bulk carrier vessel, with which it plans to expand its services to Europe, according to a statement issued by the shipping company.

“MFSL is planning to expand its services to European countries so that Myanmar will be totally freed from the economic sanctions imposed by the EU,” said the statement.

Five Star will also use U Thar for its ongoing shipping services around Asia.

After taking over the over shipping line from the Ministry of Transport on 1 April, 2010, Myanmar Economic Holdings Ltd sold its seven vessels in order to reduce its expenses and bought three new vessels.

U Thar was built at Shikoku Dockyard in Takamatsu, Japan, and can carry more than 18,000 tonnes of cargo.

The shipping line expects two more vessels from Japan, but the statement did not mention when they would arrive in Myanmar.

36 buildings for government housing under construction

NAY PYI TAW—Union Minister and Chairman of the Nay Pyi Taw Council U Thein Nyunt inspected the construction of dormitories and apartments for civil servants in Nay Pyi Taw on Friday.

Under the supervision of the Department of Buildings under the Ministry of Construction, private companies are building 15 two-storey male and female dormitories and 21 four-storey buildings for families of civil servants in Zabuthiri Township.

The construction companies plan to complete 720 dormitory units in October and 504 family apartment units in November.—MNA

Financial sector roadmap discussed

NAY PYI TAW—The Steering Committee of the Ministry of Finance held its second meeting to discuss the implementation of the all-inclusive Financial Sector Roadmap on Thursday.

Deputy Union Minister Dr Maung Maung Thein presented plans for some the roadmap’s short-term projects, which include financial literacy, mobile banking, increased banking access, financial services for low-income families and financial services for SMEs. He also explained how the roadmap will be implemented and called on the media to get involved in raising public awareness about financial services. Representatives from the UN Development Programme (UNDP), the UN Capital Development Fund (UNCDF), the Asian Development Bank (ADB), the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) and the Livelihoods and Food Security Trust Fund (LIFT) attended the meeting.—MNA

Gang in Mon arrested

NAY PYI TAW—Nine gang members were arrested by government troops during a series of security checks spanning several days in Ye town of Mon State.

Two surrendered to law enforcement officials, officials said.

A military security force stopped a suspect on a motorbike in Yay on 3 September, who was later found out to be a member of the gang known to be led by Nai Mon Cham.

Further investigations led to eight arrests with arms and ammunitions alongside gold and precious gems worth some K12.4 million (US$9,538).—Myawady

Rebels demand voter lists be removed in Kutkai

NAY PYI TAW—Administrators from two village-tracts in Kutkai Township of Shan State were threatened into removing voters’ lists at their offices by the presence of rebels, the Union Election Commission said Thursday. According to the commission, an unknown rebel group arrived in Ho-at village-tract at around 6pm and warned the village-tract administrator not to post the list.

Likewise, a KIA armed group halted posting voters’ lists at Mone Paw village-tract at 10pm on the same day.

Administrators in the two village-tracts therefore decided to take down the voter lists displayed at their offices, said the commission. The electoral rolls had been put up around villages on Monday.—MNA

NANNING, CHINA — The 12th China-ASEAN Expo in conjunction with the China-ASEAN Business and Investment Summit on Friday kicked off at the Nanning International Convention and Exhibition Centre in Nanning, China.

Speaking at the opening ceremony, Vice President Dr Sai Mauk Kham described China and ASEAN as strategic partners of economic cooperation.

China ranks as ASEAN’s biggest trade partner, and ASEAN as China’s third-biggest trade partner. The bilateral trade value between them stood at US$126 billion in 2014, up from 14 billion in 2013.

Among regional partners, China was the first country for ASEAN to sign a free trade agreement called the ASEAN-China Free Trade Agreement.

The vice president said that his country recognised China’s important role to play in the Master Plan on ASEAN Connectivity (MPAC), which he said would facilitate closer economic cooperation between the two sides. The China-proposed project called the 21st Century Maritime Silk Road would ensure much-needed infrastructural development in the establishment of the ASEAN Community as part of the master plan. Known as the “One Belt, One Road”, the Silk Road has now attracted 57 countries, most of which are along its route. The Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank is expected to be of great assistance to the implementation of the master plan.

China will contribute $40 billion for countries along the Silk Road to undertake projects in areas including infrastructure, resources and industrial and financial cooperation.

Vice President Dr Sai Mauk Kham also witnessed the opening of Myanmar Commodity Hall at the same venue.

Myanmar has more than 80 booths at the trade fair displaying a variety of local products.

The vice president also visited a Chinese Buddhist monastery, the cultural museum and the Myanmar consulate in Nanning. — MNA

What they stand for: campaigns aired

Campaign speeches were broadcast by the Kaman National Progressive Party, Khamene Nation Development Party and National Democratic Force on Friday.

Kaman National Progressive Party

Chairman U Zaw Win said that his party strives to create a modern and democratic nation by joining hands with national brethren and political parties, to oppose terrorism and extremism, to strengthen friendly relations with the global community through a non-aligned policy, to carry out sector wide development programmes and to educate people against doctrines that do not benefit Myanmar society.

Central Executive Committee member U Than Htay said that the party has laid down policies to cooperate with national brethren to enable Myanmar to stand tall among the nations of the world and to join hands with ethnic people in realising a multi-party democracy and federalist union system. He said the party also encourages all-round development of the Khamene people and other ethnic groups and that it would work to preserve the cultural heritage of ethnic groups.

National Democratic Force

Chairman U Khin Maung Swe pledged to narrow the gap between the rich and the poor, to resolve land disputes, to provide assistance for families to get bank loans, to focus on the electrification of all villages by 2020. The party also stands for ensuring the stability of commodity prices and lowered taxes, the privatisation of rail and water transport and to join hands with the people in the internal peace-making process. — MNA

Malaysian company among those investigated over haze

JAKARTA — A Malaysian company is among more than 20 firms under investigation by Indonesian authorities in connection with forest fires that have caused a haze to engulf large parts of Southeast Asia, an Indonesian minister said on Wednesday.

The worsening smog across northern Indonesia, neighbouring Singapore and parts of Malaysia forced some schools to close and airlines to delay flights this week, while Indonesia ordered a crackdown on lighting fires to clear forested land.

“区内 (one company) from Malaysia that is among those under investigation.” Environment and Forestry Minister Siti Nurbaya told reporters, without elaborating. “We are still checking if there are any from Singapore."

Police in Riau, at the heart of the haze, said an official overseeing operations at an Indonesian palm oil company, Langgam Inti Hidro, had been named a suspect for starting fires on the company’s land. It was not possible to reach the company outside of business hours.

Southeast Asia has suffered for years from annual bouts of slash-and-burn practices in Indonesia’s Sumatra and Kalimantan islands, but governments in the region have failed to address the problem.

The fires have been exacerbated this year by the effects of the El Nino weather phenomenon, as a prolonged dry season in Indonesia has parched the top soil, fuelling the flames.

This year’s haze had already caused trillions of rupiah in losses to the Indonesian economy, with further losses now expected, added Nurbaya.

Authorities have so far declined to name any other suspect companies but are set to announce this week the names of three or four companies that are due to face sanctions including possibly having their land permits revoked.

President Joko Widodo instructed security forces late on Monday to accelerate efforts to extinguish fires and restrict land permits from companies found responsible.

Nearly 3,000 military and police personnel, 17 helicopters and four cloud-seeding aircraft have been deployed to fight the fires, according to the country’s disaster management agency. — Reuters

Ruling, opposition parties face off as Japan set to pass bills

TOKYO — Japan’s ruling and opposition parties continued to battle it out on Friday as controversial bills that would mark a major shift in the country’s postwar security policy are set to be enacted despite strong protests from opposition lawmakers and voters.

Making last-ditch efforts to block the bills’ passage, opposition lawmakers filed a series of censure motions in the upper house from Thursday, all of which have so far been rejected given the majority held by the ruling Liberal Democratic Party and its coalition partner, the Komeito party.

Political wrangling remained fierce on Friday, as the ruling camp rejected a censure motion, filed by the main opposition Democratic Party of Japan, against Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, who heads the LDP. A no-confidence motion against House of Councillors President Masaki Yamazaki was also dismissed.

Following a vote on the censure motion against Abe, the bills are expected to be put to a vote at the upper house plenary session, coalition lawmakers said.

But the process is likely to be further delayed as the DPJ and four other opposition parties filed a no-confidence motion in the House of Representatives against Abe’s Cabinet.

In another delaying tactic, the DPJ filed a censure motion against Yoshitada Konoike, the LDP member who chairs a special upper house committee, where the bills were passed on Thursday during a meeting that was marred by jostling among lawmakers.

“The situation is now at a critical phase. We will take every possible means to block the passage of the bills,” DPJ leader Katuya Okada said at a press conference after meeting with his counterparts in other opposition parties.

The ruling coalition, which holds a majority in both chambers of parliament, wants to pass the security bills at the plenary session by around Friday mid-night partly to avert street protests from swelling during a five-day holiday period starting Saturday.

On Thursday, the ruling camp took a step closer to enactment after the bills — which could for the first time since World War II enable Japanese troops to fight overseas — cleared the upper house panel amid a swift vote which caught the opposition members off guard.

The bills were rammed through the lower house in July amid an opposition walkout.

Designed to expand the scope of Self-Defense Forces operations overseas for a more robust alliance with the United States, the legislation would enable Japan to exercise the right to collective self-defense, or coming to the aid of the United States and other friendly nations under armed attack, even if Japan itself is not attacked.

If enacted, the new legislation will put into effect a landmark Cabinet decision in July last year that reinterpretated the war-renouncing Constitution to allow Japan to exercise the right to collective self-defense.

Previously, successive governments had interpreted the war-renouncing article 9 of the constitution to mean that Japan has the right to collective self-defense but cannot exercise it.

Critics argue that the major security policy shift from the country’s postwar exclusively defense-oriented posture would violate Japan’s pacific Constitu- tion and possibly drag Japan into US-led wars around the world.

In the days leading up to the parliament vote, tens of thousands of voters including students continued their protests, saying they want the bills scrapped and calling for more debate on the security legislation, which remains a sensitive and divisive issue.

Proponents say that even if the legislation is enacted, the exercise of collective self-defense will be limited and there will still be constraints on SDF operations.

With the passage of the legislation, 10 existing security-related laws will be revised, while a permanent law will be created to allow Japan to respond to the international military threat in an effective manner.

If the bills were passed in the near future, it would show the Abe administration’s determination to push the security legislation through the Diet, said political analyst Koichi Nakamura.

Nine missing in boat collision off Taiwan

TAIPEI — A Taiwanese fishing boat capsized off the island’s north coast on Friday morning after colliding with a gravel ship, leaving all nine fishermen on board missing, officials said.

Six coastguard vessels and a team of rescue divers have been dispatched to the scene of the crash to search for the missing, along with all of the fishing boats, including a Taiwanese skipper, four Chinese ships and four boats from Indonesia.

“The water around the venue was full of fishing nets, making the search work by divers very difficult,” Tseng Shu-feng, a coastguard official, told reporters.

According to the authorities, the accident happened when the fishing vessel Shih Hui 31 was sailing off Chiaou, a fishing port near Taoyuan city, in the early hours of Friday and collided with the 8,000-tonne gravel ship.

However, officials have yet to provide details about what instigated the crash. — AFP
Experts urge release of details of IAEA inspection at Iran site

UNITED NATIONS/PARIS

Several nuclear security experts are urging the United Nations nuclear watchdog and world powers to release details of how a sensitive Iranian military site will be inspected as part of a landmark nuclear deal reached in July.

The experts, with long experience in international weapons inspections, said the failure to disclose the details was damaging the credibility of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA), a view that is rejected by the agency, which is of United States government and another prominent non-proliferation expert.

The confidential plan for the Parchin site has led to differing reports on how it will be carried out, with some critics of the US administration saying Iran had been given too much leeway to conduct its own inspections, including taking samples.

The inspections are needed to resolve questions about whether North Korea conducted what many countries suspect to be a ballistic missile test launch, a Defense Department official said Thursday.

"We put a great many sanctions on North Korea and further sanctions would be one possibility," David Shear, assistant secretary of defense for Asian and Pacific security affairs, told a congressional session when discussing a possible launch of what North Korea claims to be a satellite.

North Korea issued a statement on Monday saying it plans to launch "a series of satellites into space," with preparations in their final stage. The statement fueled widespread speculation that it may be planning a long-range rocket launch to mark the 70th anniversary this October of the establishment of the country's ruling party. Shear told the Senate's Armed Services Committee that the United States will discuss the issue with its partners in six-nation talks on North Korea's demobilisation.

The China-hosted talks, also involving Japan, South Korea, Russia as well as North Korea itself, have been stalled since 2008.

"We're going to be considering what extra pressure we might put on North Korea should they decide to conduct that missile launch," he said. — Kyodo News

US eyes more sanctions if N Korea test-launches another missile

WASHINGTON — The United States could impose additional sanctions on North Korea if it conducts what many countries suspect to be a ballistic missile test launch, a Defense Department official said Thursday.

"If routes become blocked in one place you will unquestionably see people moving to routes elsewhere. We have already seen instances of people arriving in Brindisi in Italy from Turkey. You may see more people coming across on the Libya-Italy route. Closing borders really doesn’t resolve anything at all, it simply pushes it elsewhere."

Edward said UNHCR was closely watching the situation in Slovenia, Austria and Croatia, but the pressure could also return to Serbia if migrant numbers back up over there.

"As you push people in different directions it becomes much harder to manage because it’s going in multiple different routes."

Asked if UNHCR could help to arrange trains to take refugees straight through Hungary and Austria to Germany, he said UNHCR wanted a collective European response rather than a "gravitation towards one country or two countries where the situation might ultimately become unmanagable."

Joel McMillan, a spokesman for the International Organisation for Migration, warned that Europe’s failure to resolve the situation risked returning the continent to the rivalry that led to World War Two.

"It’s very similar to what happened in the 1920s in Europe when the beggar-thy-neighbour policy on trade pitted countries against each other and led to the war... something similar is happening now with the kind of hardening of borders and as a response to Germany’s decisions."

 Experts urge release of details of IAEA inspection at Iran site

GENEVA — Migrant numbers in Europe will build up in coming days and their flows may fragment further into mini-crises, the UN refugee agency said on Friday, urging the European Union to grasp a last chance to resolve the refugee crisis next week.

UNHCR spokesman Adrian Edwards said a meeting of justice and home affairs ministers on Tuesday and a European Council meeting on Wednesday would be "crucially important."

"These occasions may be the last opportunity for a positive, united and coherent European response to this crisis. Time is running out," he told a news briefing.

The UNHCR has been criticised, including by former staffers and humanitarian policy experts, for not being assertive enough in opening doors in Europe, as it has done in past crises, including the exodus from Hungary in 1956.

"The conditions right now in southeast Croatia are seriously worrying. We’ve had 13,000 people at least at one point in the past couple of days as of about 8 or 9 o’clock this morning. There was very little help on hand," Edwards told Reuters. He said the European Union had failed to get a grip on a manageable problem. Closing borders had diverted flows of refugees from Hungary, where authorities used tactics that the United Nations has called “callous and xenophobic”, to Croatia.

Greece election campaign ends as polls show no clear winner

ATHENS — An election campaign in Greece ends on Friday with opinion polls giving no clear winner, setting the stage for a cliffhanger vote on Sunday between the political left and right, and the near-certainty the next government will be a coalition.

Five opinion polls on Thursday and Friday underlined the tightness of Greece’s election campaign, offering different outcomes but all pointing to no outright winner when ballots are cast.

The winner of Sunday’s vote will need to oversee deep economic reforms required for an 86-billion-euro bailout brokered in August, a recapitalisation of the country’s banks, and the unwinding of capital controls imposed this year to prevent an implosion of the financial system.

All the polls showed the left-wing Syriza party of former prime minister Alexis Tsipras and the conservative New Democracy of Evangelis Meimarakis within splitting distance of each other.

In each poll, however, neither party came close to the 38 percent threshold widely believed to be needed to establish a majority in the 300-seat parliament.

Of the five polls published on Thursday and Friday, two put Syriza ahead, two had New Democracy ahead, and one was a tie.

Given that Greece’s compliance with the 86 billion euro bailout programme is at issue, many at EU headquarters in Brussels and in other European capitals would like to see a broad coalition emerging from the election.

But Syriza and New Democracy, while both pledging to uphold the bailout terms, disagree on pivotal matters such as freezing up the labour market, collective bargaining and immigration.

Syriza, forced to concede the bailout in August with the threat of a disorderly exit from the euro zone looming over the country, has ruled out any pact with New Democracy. It regards that party as part of an old guard partly responsible for Greece’s economic woes. “I didn’t give up the struggle. I took the stance of responsibility after a great deal of effort for this country to remain standing,” Tsipras said in a televised interview on Thursday night, referring to bailout talks.

“The crucial (question) at the ballot box is whether there will be a progressive force with Syriza, or a conservative one with New Democracy.”

New Democracy has been keen to highlight perceived credibility issues under Syriza, which swept to power in January on the promise of ridding the country of bailouts, only to agree to new stringent austerity terms six months later.

“The question is clear. Should we listen to false promises and wishful thinking, or move forward responsibly and with a national plan?” New Democracy leader Vangelis Meimarakis told cheering supporters in a central Athens square. “It’s high time we did away with incompetence. The Syriza experiment ends on Sunday.”

One analyst said the biggest question mark surrounded undecided voters, many of whom backed Syriza and Tsipras in January but have been turned off by his failure to rid Greece of stringent EU austerity conditions in the bailout accord.

“These are questions that are not easy to answer and it seems that we won’t have a clear image until the last minute,” political analyst John Loulis said.—Reuters

Croatia closes border crossings, but migrants keep coming

SIDZAGREB — Migrants continued to stream through fields from Serbia into the European Union on Friday, undeterred by Croatia’s closure of almost all road crossings after an influx of more than 11,000.

Helpless to stem the flow, Croatian police rounded them up at the Tovarnik railway station on the Croatian side of the border, where several thousand had spent the night under open skies. Some kept travelling, and reached Slovenia overnight.

Migrants have been streaming into Croatia for two days, their path to western Europe via Hungary blocked by a metal fence, the threat of imprisonment and riot police who fired teargas and water cannon on Wednesday to drive back stone-throwing men.

In Croatia, a member of Europe’s Schengen zone of border-free travel, said it had turned back roughly another 100 who tried to cross from Croatia under cover of night.

The two former Yugoslav republics suddenly find themselves on the path of a huge migration of people westwards from war and poverty in the Middle East, Africa and Asia, the scale of which has sowed discord and recrimination in the European Union.

On Wednesday, the EU called an emergency summit for next week in a fresh bid to overcome disarray in the 28-nation bloc.

The Croatian Interior Minister Ranko Ostojic warned on Thursday that Croatia would close its border with Serbia if the flow of migrants continued at the same rate, saying his country was full to capacity.

The president of Croatia told the military to be ready to join the effort to stop thousands of people crossing the Western Balkans in their quest for sanctuary in the wealthy bloc.

Hungary’s right-wing prime minister, Viktor Orban, said on Friday Hungary had begun work overnight to extend a fence along its southern border with Serbia to the Croatian section, after police said hundreds of migrants had entered from Croatia.

Orban said 600 soldiers were working on a 41-km stretch and a further 500 would be deployed on Friday and 700 more over the weekend.

Late on Thursday, Croatian police announced they had banned all traffic at seven border crossings.

“The measure is valid until further notice,” police said in a statement.

Serbia’s main highway north into Hungary is already closed by Hungarian riot police on the border.

Much of the Croatian-Serbian border follows the Danube river, making it difficult to cross outside the official border crossings. But at Tovarnik, migrants simply walked through fields.

“We are so exhausted,” said Hikmat, a bare-footed 32-year-old Syrian woman from Damascus, who said she had been travelling for two months with her son.

“Look at me. I just want to get anywhere where we will be safe,” she said.

“We see them, but we pretend not to see,” said a Serbian police officer.

UK PM Cameron rules out second Scottish independence vote

LONDON — Scotland must move on from its failed bid for independence, Prime Minister David Cameron said on Friday, using the first anniversary of an historic referendum to rule out holding another vote on the issue.

The Scottish National Party (SNP) has seen a surge in support since Scots voted 55-45 percent to reject independence in September last year, winning 56 of Scotland’s 59 seats in the Westminster parliament at May’s election. Last week SNP leader Nicola Sturgeon said the party would include triggers for a second referendum in its manifesto for Scottish elections in May 2016.

“We all agreed, as do the Scottish public, that the independence referendum should be a ‘once in a generation’ or a ‘once in a lifetime’ event,” Cameron said in remarks released by his office.

“So now it is time to move on. We are all focused on separation, but I am focused on delivering devolution.”

Sturgeon has previously warned that if Scotland were taken out of the European Union against its will in a referendum on British membership due by the end of 2017, then it could seek a second independence referendum.

The SNP has said the government has failed to deliver on a promise of more powers for Scotland, made in the final days of campaigning ahead of the Sept. 18 2014 vote after opinion polls showed a surge in Scottish separatist support.—Reuters
500,000 more children uprooted by Boko Haram

LAGOS — Some 500,000 children have been forced to flee Boko Haram militants in the last five months after an upsurge in attacks in Nigeria, Cameroon, Chad and Niger, the UN children’s agency said on Friday.

The additional numbers of children made homeless has taken the total number of youngsters in the Lake Chad region who have been forced to flee to 1.4 million, Unicef said in a statement.

Nigeria was worst affected, with nearly 1.2 million children — more than half of them under five — uprooted by the Islamist insurgency, which is concentrated in the country’s remote northeast.

Some 265,000 other children have been affected in neighbouring Cameroon, Chad and Niger, which Boko Haram has increasingly targeted after they joined Nigeria’s military in a regional counter-offensive.

“Each of these children running for their lives is a childhood cut short,” said Unicef’s regional director for West and Central Africa, Manuel Fontaine.

“It’s truly alarming to see that children and women continue to be killed, abducted and used to carry bombs.”

Boko Haram has been fighting to establish a hardline Islamic state in northeast Nigeria since 2009.

At least 15,000 people have been killed since then, some 1,100 of them in a wave of suicide bombings, deadly raids and bomb attacks since Muhammadu Buhari became Nigerian president on May 29.

Buhari has said he is confident “conventional” attacks will be stopped by November, although suicide and homemade bomb attacks could continue.

Earlier this month, the International Organisation for Migration revised upwards its estimate of those internally displaced by the conflict from 1.5 million to more than 2.1 million because of the recent surge in attacks.

The IOM’s head of mission in Nigeria, Emira Kordzadic, said many IDPs living in host communities had yet to receive basic food and shelter, calling for more to be done.

On Wednesday, the charity Medecins Sans Frontieres also appealed for international help after 16 people died and 172 fell ill in a cholera outbreak at three IDP camps in Maiduguri, northeast Nigeria.

The UN regional humanitarian coordinator for the Sahel region Toby Lanzer, told AFP thousands of Nigerians who fled to a refugee camp in southeast Niger were in an “atrocityous” situation.

Unicef said it had increased its operations in the Lake Chad region, including child vaccination programmes, education and psychological counselling.

Nearly 65,000 children under five had received treatment for severe acute malnutrition, it added.

But Fontaine said more funding was needed because the agency had only received a third of the $50.3 million required to finance its operations in the Lake Chad region this year.

That has left more than 124,000 children hit by the violence unvaccinated against measles. Some 208,000 are out of school and more than 83,000 lack access to safe drinking water.

“With more refugees and not enough resources, our ability to deliver lifesaving assistance on the ground is now seriously compromised,” said Fontaine.

“Without additional support, hundreds of thousands of children in need will lack access to basic health care, safe drinking water and education.” —AFP

Mexican survivor recounts three-hour aerial bombing ordeal in Egypt

MEXICO CITY — Egyptian warplanes mistakenly bombed a convoy of Mexican tourists five times over three hours, even though security forces on the ground had cleared their passage, one of six survivors of Sunday’s deadly attack said.

Susana Calderon’s husband Luis was among eight Mexicans killed in what has been described as an accident that claimed 12 lives.

“We were bombed some five times from the air,” she told Mexican newspaper El Universal from her hospital bed in Cairo.

Calderon was wounded in the arm and her right leg is paralysed, though doctors believe she will regain movement. President Enrique Pena Nieto has demanded Egypt investigate the attack and assign blame. The Egyptian prosecutor general’s office has announced a gag order on all news related to the investigation until its conclusion.

Mexican also has demanded that Egypt compensate the victims.

Pena Nieto later said the six Mexicans who were wounded would be flown home on Thursday aboard his presidential plane.

The group of 22 people had parked on Sunday for a barbecue near the Bahariya oasis, a tourist site in the western desert, when army aircraft began attacking them believing they were militants, security sources and survivors have said.

“I saw my husband when they put me on a stretcher to take me to hospital,” Calderon said. “He was very badly wounded. He had a broken arm, like me. He had many wounds on his back, his waist, his whole spine, his legs.”

“I heard him tell me he loved me. I told him I loved him, too. And then I heard nothing more of him,” she said, adding that she was told days later that he had died.

Calderon said an Egyptian policeman was accompanying the group when they were attacked. It was supposed to be the start of a trip of a lifetime; she and her husband had planned to continue on to France, Belgium, Germany and Italy.

“The landscapes are beautiful, but there is nothing else. Nowhere to take shelter, nowhere to run,” she said of the desert. “God wanted me to know what real fear feels like.”

Islamist rebels attack Somali army bases, retake town

MOGADISHU — The Islamist militant group al Shabaab overran two Somali army bases on Friday and killed at least seven soldiers, both the group and the military said, a day after the group retook a southern town.

The raids on the bases in the town of Yaqbuurweyne in the Lower Shabelle region and the retaking of Janale town after African forces quit are the latest gains in an offensive by the group that has helped them seize several towns this month.

The government has dismissed al Shabaab’s gains, saying the areas retaken have no strategic value. But the offensive has shown the group can keep up pressure on the Western-backed government.

“We took the two Yaqbuurweyne military bases in a fierce fighting this morning,” Al Shabaab’s military spokesman, Sheikh Abdiasis Abu Musab, told Reuters. “Thirteen soldiers were killed, he said.”

Osman Abduleh, a military officer, told Reuters seven soldiers were killed and five others wounded.

“The soldiers defended themselves and now they are fighting al Shabaab in the outskirts of the town,” he said.

Rebels and officials often cite different casualty figures.

Farah Ali, a resident of Yaqbuurweyne, which lies northwest of the capital, Mogadishu, said he had counted six dead soldiers and said the town was now calm. On Thursday, al Shabaab said it had retaken Janale, about 90 km (55 miles) south of Mogadishu. Ali Nur, the acting governor of Lower Shabelle, confirmed the town’s capture.

“This is a great shame and it will be difficult for the residents to trust the Somali government and the AU troops,” Nur told Reuters. He said the group now controlled much of Lower Shabelle, a region that extends to the south of Mogadishu.

A military offensive last year by the African AMISOM force and the Somali army pushed al Shabaab out of major strategic centres and into smaller pockets of territory.

But the group, which once ruled much of Somalia, still holds some settlements and rural areas, which can often be used to isolate towns by cutting off supply routes.—Reuters
The country with a long boat tradition Part I

Maha Saddhama Jotika dhaja
Sithu Dr. Khin Maung Nyunt

A GEOGRAPHICAL entity of a medium size, Myanmar is the second largest piece of land among the ASEAN, ten of the region, next to Indonesia, but the largest among five peninsula member states of the ASEAN. Its territorial area equals to those of the United Kingdom, France, and Belgium combined, but its population up-to-date is barely 50 million plus. Being Nature’s choicest gift the country is open on both land and water fronts. Though high mountains, sometimes which snow capped the year round, and forested hill ranges seem to hedge it in, mountain passes and river valleys provide in and out accesses making man’s migration possible since time immemorial. In addition to the constant supply of the elixir of life, fresh water and communiquing the complex network of rivers and streams, aquatic bodies of different sizes within and without the country, have given Myanmar people the long tradition of boat and all water-related cultures.

Across the country are well-known, less-known or unknown water bodies, both nature and human creations. To mention but a few are (1) Inwa Gyi Lake in Kachin State (2) In Lay Lake in the southern Shan State(3) Inwa Lake in Sagaing Region (4) Yey Myat Kyi In (5) Twin Taung In (6) Kaung Hmaw Taw In (7) Mingtong Lake at Keng Tong (8) Zaung Kalaw, Tey Thay In, Nanda, Aung Pin, Sama Bay and TaungThauMunat Amarapura (10) Mon Shi Shar, Meikhtila reservoirs, InMa natural lake in The-gone town, (11) Ngwe Win the spring, Lokama fall, Gyon Gyon Kyu fall at Mawlamyaing (12) heart-shaped natural lake re In Chate State (13) Kandaw Gyi, Ijaya, Hpy Gyi, Thu du kin, Gyo Hpyin, Nga Mo Yeik reservoirs and recently discovered a heart-shaped lake on Cock Comb island in Kawthoung District in Andaman Sea. Besides, as Myanmar civilization is hydric, as approved by the locations of its old capital cities on, or near rivers and seas coast, Myanmar people are water borne and "boat", the oldest and simplest skill craft Myanmar growth up from with the womb to tomb.

Religion and history are two other contributory factors of Myanmar’s boat tradition. Theravada Buddhism gave Myanmar kings the concept of their descent from the Sakya race of land Gotama Buddha “Adisa Vamsa” race of the solar [sun] dynasty. The legend of Saka Deva [Thande god] whose Kingdom “Tavatimsa” has the divinely River “Mandakin” in which Saka deva holds the yearly festival of Regatta and boat races. While Yin Ma [Chakreasa Tabulari] trees are in full bloom giving out their fragrance, royal orders were issued for the celebration of Royal Regatta Festival, followed by boat races in nearby aquatic bodies, rivers, lakes, reservoirs, shallow sea ports. This festival is called “Yey Khin Taw” [Royal Display of Regatta]. There are some conventions regarding Myanmar word “Khin” and “Khin (a) means to display “Kin” (go) means to patrol. There is Myanmar water patrol in the meat surrounded by the royal capital city to guard day and night. A musical troupe on the patrol boat plays water patrol music and songs to signal and alert its duty rounds. In Myanmar its “se o se kaw” [Royal Water Patrol] which is entirely different from “se kaw” [Royal Regatta of Tawhlin].

King AungSan Suh [reign 1112-1167 A.D.] of Bagan dynasty of Myanmar history set the legend of Regatta Festival. He was a traveler king who visited all water bodies within and without the country with his magic and sacred large. Wherever his barge stopped and station he built pagodas to commemorate the event. Till today, these pagoda’s display festivals with boat races. The In Lay Phang Daw U Pagoda Festival yearly held in October was his origin. Myanmar chronicles, history and literature have records and references to the Regatta festival and boat races. One particular literary work which graphically described Regatta was Tayoke Than Yaw Mow-gon [a long poem recording the arrival of Chinese Embassy]. Mow-gon is a kind of poetic composition that records an event or events of historic importance. The said Mow-gon was composed by one Poet Laureate “Nawade the second”, whose literary works included 14 Mow-gons and 6 Rates. Among them Myanmar and China had exchanged diplomatic missions with complimentary gifts and religious relics since the time of Prakyaung. Successive kings in both countries kept this customary practice as their time honoured tradition. During the reign of King Bagyidaw [1819-1857 A.D.] one Chinese embassy arrived, bringing credentials and royal gifts to be presented to Myanmar king. King Bagyidaw accorded a grand welcome and red-carpet reception to the Chinese state guests. A magnificent Regatta was held in their honour. Grand titles were conferred upon them, in addition to the costly presents they received. When they returned home, a Myanmar embassy was sent to the Court of Beijing with royal letters and gifts. Myanmar embassy was accorded equal treatment. They saw the Great Gala of Fireworks held for five successive nights. After fulfilling their assignment Myanmar envoy returned to Inwa King Bagyidaw awarded them with promotion, title and gifts. All these events were recorded in the 62 stanzas of the said Mow-gon which was completed and submitted to the king in February 1823 A.D. The holding of the Royal Regatta was described in poetic language in the stanzas 16 to 28. From them we glean and learn that the following barges are boats participated in the Regatta and rowing:

Voter education campaign for women in Meiktila

MEIKTILA — Staff of Myanmar Education and Observation New Age (MEON) are carrying out voter education programmes in Meiktila, Wundwin and Thazi townships ahead of the general elections on 8 November.

Project Manager Daw Su Nanda Hlaing of MEON said that the project is focusing on female voters and that it will launch an official campaign on 19 September.

MEON will host a four-day voter education programme in Meiktila and two others lasting three days each in Thazi and Wundwin townships.

Pamphlets on issues relating to voting and the election will be distributed as part of the programme.—Chan Thar (Meiktila)

Volunteers clear debris on road after landslide

PALAW—Heavy rains caused landslides in Minhtein and Magyigon villages in Palaw Township and blocked a road on 16 September.

Rubber trees fell from a hill onto the Myeik-Dawei Road in Khamaungdaw village, Palaw Township.

Township administrator U Thura Tun Lin and volunteers cleared the debris from the road, allowing traffic to pass through by the morning of 17 September.

Later that day, a vehicle travelling from Kye village to Palaw fell into a mudslide near Kade Bridge due to heavy rains. Volunteers removed the vehicle and rescued the driver.—Palaw IPRD

Ozone layer awareness programme for students in Taunggyi

TAUNGGYI — Shan State Forest Department marked the International Day for the Preservation of the Ozone Layer 2015 on 16 September. Ozone layer depletion may cause global warming and climate change, severely deteriorating bio-diversity and environment, Shan State Minister for Finance U Khun Thein Maung said in his address.

The ceremony was also attended by the Shan State level authorities, departmental officials, teachers and students and an exhibition about conserving the environment was displayed.—Maung Maung Than (Taunggyi)

Apple to launch online payment in China

SHANGHAI — Apple will launch an online payment service in China, media said, as the tech giant seeks to expand in its largest market outside of the US despite fierce competition from local rivals.

An Apple Company offering online payment has launched in the Shanghai Free Trade Zone (FTZ), an area set up as a testbed for financial reforms, China News Service reported late Thursday. Apple didn’t give a date for the launch, but the company told AFP that CEO Tim Cook hopes to set-up Apple Pay in China “as quickly as possible”.

Cook previously said that he expects China one day to surpass the United States to become Apple’s largest market.

But China’s e-commerce giant Alibaba dominates the country’s online payment sector, with the PayPal-like Alipay taking around 80 percent of the market.

Internet firm Tencent is also catching up with a similar service via its popular messaging application WeChat. — Reuters

Fed rate decision lifts Asia markets, emerging currencies

HONG KONG — The US central bank’s decision to hold off hiking interest rates sent emerging market currencies and most Asian markets advancing Friday, as concerns eased over an outflow of cash as the global economy suffers a painful slowdown.

After one of the most eagerly awaited meetings in years, the US central bank’s head Janet Yellen said the ongoing crisis in China and recent turmoil on world markets had played a role in keeping borrowing costs at zero.

The Fed’s decision followed widespread warnings about the dire impact a rate increase could have, with the World Bank predicting this week it would cause a “perfect storm” in financial markets.

It also came despite a string of data in recent months showing the US economy, the world’s biggest, is on track to recovery.

Yellen told a news conference: “A lot of our focus has been on risks around China, but not just China, emerging markets more generally and how they may spill over to the United States.”

“We’ve seen significant outflows of capital from those countries, pressures on their exchange rates and concerns about their performance going forward,” Yellen said of the emerging market economies.

“The question is whether or not there might be a risk of a more abrupt slowdown than most analysts expect.”

The news pushed the dollar lower. It was buying 119.40 yen in Tokyo trade, compared with 120.90 yen in Asia Thursday. The euro was at $1.1433 against $1.1302 a day earlier.

Struggling emerging market currencies, which have been rising this week on hopes the bank would hold fire, were also higher.

The South Korea won added 0.27 percent, the Malaysian ringgit gained 0.64 percent, India’s rupee was one percent higher and the Singapore dollar was up 0.06 percent. The Thai baht and Taiwan dollar also laid on further gains.

For emerging-market central bankers, the Fed has given them some much-needed breathing room,” said Jonathan Lewis, a principal at New York-based Samson Capital Advisors LLC.

“Postponing a Fed tightening gives these central banks room to be more accommodative, with their actions being offset by a tighter Fed,” he added, according to Bloomberg News.

Economists had warned a rate rise could severely hurt emerging economies as investors would likely withdraw more cash to the United States for better and safer returns. This, in turn, would have forced other central banks to hike rates — at the same time as trying to foster growth — in a bid to support their currencies and prevent flight of capital.

However, analysts pointed out that the uncertainty of when rates will rise could be as damaging to central banks as an actual lift off. There is now increasing talk the Fed could wait until 2016 before moving.

Most Asian stock markets advanced with Shanghai ending 0.38 percent higher at the end of another roller-coaster week, while Seoul put on almost one percent and Sydney ticked up 0.46 percent. Hong Kong ended 0.30 percent higher.

However, Tokyo finished almost two percent lower with investors spooked by Yellen’s downbeat assessment of the global outlook while exporters were also hurt by the stronger yen.

The comments also weighed on US stocks, with the Dow, S&P 500 and Nasdaq all ending in negative territory.

Matt Maley, an equity strategist at Miller Tabak & Co LLC in New York, said that with the decision out of the way, traders “are going to start focusing more on the problems that caused the correction in August, which is weakness in China and other emerging markets and a rough time on the earnings front.”

World markets have witnessed more than a month of wild volatility after China devalued its yuan currency, fuelling worries about the state of the world’s number-two economy and main driver of global growth as well as its leaders’ crisis control.

The concerns have been exacerbated by a series of weak indicators suggesting growth will come in this year lower than 2014, which was the worst performance in a quarter of a century.

Shanghai reflected the uncertainty surrounding the Chinese economy, with shares seeing wild swings over the week — it fell around six percent over Monday and Tuesday before rising almost five percent Wednesday and slipped heavily again Thursday.

The index surged more than 15 percent in early trade before hitting a June 12 high, since when it has plunged about 40 percent on fears about high prices and the state of the Chinese economy. — Reuters

Worldpay looks to raise 1.4 bn in London listing

LONDON — British payments processing firm Worldpay Group Ltd plans to raise about 800 mil- lion pounds ($1.4 billion) after deciding to list its shares rather than being taken over by French rival Ingenico.

The company, owned by investment groups Advent Interna- tional and Bain Capital, said it expected a free float of at least 25 percent when it joins the London Stock Exchange next month.

A question mark had been hanging over the listing after the company attracted interest from a number of potential buyers in re- cent weeks.

These including French pay- ments company Ingenico, which offered as much as 6.6 billion pounds including debt, a person familiar with the matter previously said.

Worldpay’s private equity backers could have opted for a sale had the US Federal Reserve decided to significantly increase interest rates on Thursday, sources said.

Shares in Ingenico jumped eight percent after it emerged that it would not be buying Worldpay.

Worldpay, which provides platforms that allow merchants to accept payments by cards and other methods, said the IPO would give it access to more capital rais- ing options and help it reduce debt.

As well as Ingenico, rivals offering similar services include First Data, owned by private equi- ty firm KKR.

The listing also paves the way for Worldpay’s existing shareholders, senior management and employees to cut their investment in the firm.

Ingenico’s private equity owners bought it from Royal Bank of Scotland in 2010 for about 2 billion pounds.

It plans to pay 20 percent of its profits after tax in dividends to shareholders, starting with an interim dividend for 2016. Bank of America Merrill Lynch, Gold- man Sachs and Morgan Stanley are leading the offer, with Bar- clays, Credit Suisse and UBS act- ing as joint bookrunners, the firm said. — Reuters

Volvo plans to build garbage-collecting robot

STOCKHOLM — Global manufacturer Volvo Group on Wednesday said it is looking into developing a robot that would collect refuse and spare truck drivers heavy lifting.

The truck’s operating sys- tem would instruct a robot devel- oped by Volvo together with Swedish and American research- ers to pick up bins and empty them into the garage truck, the company said in a press release.

“Within Volvo Group we foresee a future with more auto- mation,” said Per-Lage Gotvall, project leader for the Volvo Group. “This project provides a way to stretch the imagination and test new concepts to shape transport solutions for tomor- row.”

Three universities - Chalm- ers University of Technology and Malardalen University in Sweden, as well as Penn State University in the United States - have joined the company to design the robot, as well as the waste-recycling company Reno- va. Students at Chalmers will de- velop the operating system that will control the robot, while the research team in the United States will develop the graphics, communication system and the driv- er’s control panel, the company said. The robot is set to be tested in June 2016. — Xinhua

Dying Dutchman’s last wish: to build brain cancer app

AMSTERDAM — Dying of a brain tumour, Frederik van den Broek had one last wish on his “bucket list”: serving as his own guinea pig to build a smartphone app for fellow cancer patients.

Now Dutch neurologists say the input from Van den Broek, who died last late month aged 41, has been invaluable in creating what is believed will be the world’s most advanced mobile-based app for cancer patients.

MindApp for Android and iPhone mobiles will allow users with a few simple clicks to track and update appointments such as for radio and chemo therapy, to help remember who their doctors are and even to manage the myriad pills they must take.

It will also allow patients to input data — such as when they have had an epileptic seizure — and “talk” to doctors about their condition without having to come into hospital.

Van den Broek told AFP a few days before his death that his idea for a specialised “brain cancer app” was “born out of pure frustration”.

“The hospital gave me a print-out of appointments, which medi- cines to take, and when, as well as a diagnosis of how long I had to live,” Van den Broek said in an emailed interview, his last.

“I lost the printout within an hour. These things happen when you’ve lost a large part of your brain and your short-term memory has gone to pieces,” he said.

Van den Broek was extensively involved in the app’s develop- ment, with himself as the guinea pig: deciding the features it should have and even the colours to be used to give patients maximum ease of use.

“Brain tumour patients often suffer from loss of cognitive abili- ties, for instance memory loss and changes in behaviour,” said Jaap Reijneveld, a neurologist at Amsterdam’s Free University Medical Centre (VUMC), who is helping with the app’s development.

“This app will be of huge sup- port to patients, particularly those suffering from glioblastoma, a type of brain cancer that’s often highly malignant,” Reijneveld of the VUMC’s Brain Tumour Cen- tre told AFP.

“Patients have a massively complicated treatment schedule, and the app, the most advanced to date, will help them remember things, but more importantly give constant feedback to us as doctors on the patient’s condition,” he said.

MindApp has four sections that can be accessed by a simple touch on a smartphone screen.

An appointment calendar is updated automatically once con- firmed with the hospital; secondly, an alarm reminds the patient to take his or her medicines and is turned off once a pill has been taken.

Thirdly, the app features a daily logbook in which patients can make notes of their condition and record episodes such as epi- leptic seizures. The information is updated in the patient’s files when doctors are able to access.

The fourth section provides feedback from doctors based on logbook input, for instance in- structions to increase or lower the dosage of medications.

Vincent van Dijk, who collab- orated with the terminally ill Van den Broek on MindApp’s design until the day he died, said he hoped the first version would be available from so-called “app stores” within the first three months.

Van Dijk told AFP the project is financed through crowd funding and that some 70,000 euros ($80,000) was needed to finalise MindApp’s development.

Donations so far have talled some 60,000 euros, and IT giant Microsoft has also offered to help with development, Van Dijk said.

Sadly for Van den Broek, it is too late to benefit from the fruit of his labours. “It’s a pity I won’t be able to use the app. But it gives me the feeling that at least my illness wasn’t for noth- ing,” he told AFP.

“Some people go on a world cruise or make a “bucket list” when they hear they’re going to die,” he said. “The MindApp is my bucket list.”—AFP

US scientists make tiny invisibility cloak

MIAMI — A tiny invisibility cloak has been invented by US scientists who are edging ever-closer to a real version of what has until now been a staple of science fiction, researchers said Thursday.

The cloak, described in the journal Science, is microscopic in size but could conceivably be scaled up in the future, according to physicists at the US Depart- ment of Energy’s Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory and the University of California, Berkeley.

It works by manipulating light, changing how light waves bounce off an object so that it cannot be detected by the eye.

“This is the first time a 3D object of arbitrary shape has been cloaked from visible light,” said lead author Xiao Zhang, direc- tor of Berkeley Lab’s Materials Sciences Division.

“Our ultra-thin cloak now looks like a coat. It is easy to de- sign and implement, and it is poten- tially scalable for hiding macro- scopic objects.”

Using tiny gold fibers known as nanoantennas, researchers made a cloak that is 80 nanome- ters in thickness and can wrap around a three-dimensional object as low as the size of a few bio- logical cells.

“The surface of the skin cloak was meta-engineered to re- flect the light, so that the object was rendered invisible to optical detection when the cloak is activated,” said the study.

However, this little cloak still has a few flaws.

For instance, the patterns of the nanoantennas must be pre- cisely engineered to match the surface humps of the object be- neath, meaning the object cannot move or it would lose its invisible cover.

Nor can the features to be hidden be too large or sharp com- pared to the wavelength of light, because any shadows cast cannot be erased, Zeno Gaburro, a phys- ician at the University of Trento in Italy, was quoted as saying in an accompanying article about the technology in the journal Sci- ence.

“The face that is dark does not see the light, so there’s no way you can correct for (the shadow) with this technique,” Gaburro said.

But Zhang is confident the technology can eventually be scaled up. “I don’t see any road- blocks,” he said.—AFP

Experimental Ebola drug takes step closer to market

MIAMI — The experimental Ebola drug ZMapp has been grant- ed fast-track status by the US Food and Drug Administration, which could speed its arrival on the mar- ket, the drug’s maker said Thursday.

Larry Zeitlin, president of LeafBio and Mapp Biopharmaceuti- cal, described the decision by the FDA as an “important milestone.”

ZMapp is one of some of the healthcare workers infected with Ebola during the recent out- break in West Africa, even though the drug had never undergone a full-scale clinical trial.

Not all those who were given the drug survived, but some who were cured of Ebola believe it worked for them. A clinical trial of ZMapp is taking place in West Afri- ca. The drug has been in development for more than a decade, but it is difficult to find the experimental animals that can be used to test the drug and the company has said “very little” of the drug is available.

Prior to getting fast-track status, ZMapp had been granted “or- phan drug” designation, which pro- vides financial and other regulatory incentives meant to encourage de- velopment. “We are hopeful that this step will accelerate access to ZMapp once safety and efficacy are demonstrated to FDA’s satis- faction in ongoing clinical trials,” said Kevin Whaley, chief execu- tive officer of LeafBio and Mapp Biopharmaceutical, based in San Diego, California.—AFP

McDonald’s investor wants it to cut antibiotics in all meats

LOS ANGELES — A McDonald’s Corp sharehold- er group is renewing its call for the fast-food chain to stop buy- ing any meat from animals raised with antibiotics vital to fighting human infections.

The move from the Congreg- ation of Benedictine Sisters of Boerne, Texas, comes amid growing concern from public health experts that the overuse of such drugs is contributing to rising numbers of life-threaten- ing human infections from anti- biotic-resistant bacteria dubbed “superbugs.”

The sisters withdrew a similar shareholder resolution shortly after McDonald’s USA announced in March that with- in two years it would phase out chicken produced with antibi- otics important to human health.

“While McDonald’s is tak- ing a step forward, it is still far from the congregation’s goal,” Sister Susan Mika said. She rep- resented the nuns at the McDon- ald’s annual meeting on May 21, where she announced that the resolution had been dropped, although it still cited concern over McDonald’s pork and beef supplies.

“This double standard makes no sense to us; what’s good for the goose, ought to be good for the gander, or in this case, the pig,” Mika said on Thursday.

So, the sisters are back and pressing the world’s biggest restaurant chain to expand its animal contracting policies to include beef and pork, and to take it global.

McDonald’s did not imme- diately respond to requests for comment.

An estimated 70 percent of antibiotics important to human health are sold for use in meat and dairy production.

Veterinary use of antibiot- ics is legal. However, as the number of human infections from antibiotic-resistant bacte- ria increases, consumer advoca- cates and public health experts have become more critical of the practice of routinely feeding antibiotics to chickens, cattle and pigs.

“We can reach a lot of peo- ple’s lives every day if changes are made” at McDonald’s and other fast-food chains, said Mika, who added that other shareholder groups of nuns and priests have vowed to back the new resolution.—Reuters

The method of payment will be cash. The document will be delivered directly to Bidder who purchased bidding documents with the purchase receipt at the below address. No bidding documents will be delivered by post, e-mail, and internet.

8. Bids must be delivered to the address below at 09:30 AM ~ 10:30 AM on 2nd of November, 2015 MMT (Myanmar Time). All bids must be accompanied by a bid security (Bond) of One (1) million USD Dollars. Late bids shall be rejected. Bids will be opened in the presence of Bidders’ representatives who choose to attend at the address below at 11:30 AM on 2nd of November, 2015 MMT (Myanmar Time).

9. The attention of prospective Bidders is drawn to (i) the fact that they will be required to certify in their bids that all software is either covered by a valid license or was produced by the Bidder and (ii) that violations are considered as fraud, which is, among other remedies, punishable by potential blacklisting from participation in future EDCF-financed procurements.

10. The Purchaser will not be responsible for any costs or expenses incurred by the Bidders in connection with the preparation or delivery of Bids.

SACRAMENTO — Two more bodies were found in areas scorched by one of the two devastating wildfires raging in Northern Californi a for the past week, raising the death toll five from both blazes, even as fire of ficials on Thursday reported further progress in subduing the flames.

The remains, though not yet positively identified, were believed to be of two men who had been reported missing in separate communities ravaged by the so-called Valley Fire just north of Napa County’s wine-producing region, the Lake County Sheriff’s Office said.

Earlier in the week, authorities reported discovering the remains of an elderly, disabled woman who was unable to flee her house in the early frantic hours of the Valley Fire on Saturday and perished as flames consumed her home.

Two more people who authorities said died evacuation orders, lost their lives in the Butte Fire, still burning more than a week after it erupted more than 100 miles (160 km) to the east in California Gold Rush country of the Sierra Nevada foothills.

Ranking as the most destructive wildfires in California this year, the two conflagrations together have blackened more than 145,000 acres (58,000 hectares) while laying waste to more than 800 homes and forcing the evacuation of some 20,000 people.

Fire officials said the two blazes are emblematic of an intense wildfire season in California that is already shaping up as one of the fiercest on record, with much of September and all of October, historically the worst two months of the year, still ahead.

Property losses from the Valley Fire — 585 homes and hundreds more buildings destroyed — stand as the highest among the thousand of wildfires that have raged across the entire drought-stricken western United States this summer.

But a cooling trend, rain and diminished winds have helped firefighters gain additional ground in recent days against the fires in Northern California.

Containment of the Valley Fire, a measure of how much of its perimeter has been enclosed within buffer lines carved through vegetation by ground crews, stood at 35 percent, more than triple Monday’s figure.

In the Sierra foothills to the east, the Butte Fire was 55 percent by Thursday evening, the California Department of Forestry and Fire Prevention (Cal Fire) reported.

That blaze may have been sparked when a power line belonging to the Pacifi c Gas & Electric (PG&E) company hit a tree, the company said.—Reuters

NEW YORK — A federal appeals court has given the developer Larry Silverstein a new chance to recoup money for rebuilding the World Trade Centre site in New York, on top of the $4.1 billion of insurance proceeds he has received.

The 2nd US Circuit Court of Appeals said a lower court judge incorrectly calculated that Silverstein lost just $2.805 billion on his 99-year lease for the site, signed six weeks before the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks, and deserved no additional damages because insurance more than offset it.

Thursday’s decision by a three-judge panel clears the way for Silverstein and his World Trade Centre Properties LLC to seek more damages from United Continental Holdings Inc (UAL.N), American Airlines Group Inc (AAL.O), and dozens of financial, real estate and security companies.

Silverstein wants those defendants held responsible for their alleged negligence in failing to prevent the destruction of the ‘Twin Tower’ ers by hijacked United and American planes.

In a 77-page decision for the appeals court, Circuit Judge Debra Ann Livingston said the loss on Silverstein’s lease should reflect “pre- and post-attack market values, with the post-attack values measured as if the leased buildings were not reconstructed.” She also directed US District Judge Alvin Hellerstein, who oversees much of the Sept. 11 litigation and determined the $2.805 billion loss, to award Silverstein a higher rate of interest.—Reuters
Osaka gov, convenience stores to help find missing dementia patients

OSAKA — The Osaka prefectural government and four major operators of convenience stores on Friday signed an agreement to cooperate in helping to locate missing elderly people suffering from dementia.

Under the accord, the prefectural government will send information about missing elderly dementia sufferers to staff at stores operated by the four firms — Seven-Eleven Japan Co, Lawson Inc., FamilyMart Co and Circle K Sunkus Co. The operators have some 3,500 outlets in the western Japan prefecture.

Store employees will pay special attention to elderly customers and will alert local authorities if they believe a missing elderly person with dementia has visited the store.

The agreement also calls for the operators to urge store employees to receive training on how to support senior citizens under a program offered by the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare.

"I expect family members to tell the elderly to enter a convenience store if they get lost," he said. —Kyodo News

Motorcycle blast kills two in southern Thailand bomb attacks

BANGKOK — A bomb concealed in a motorcycle parked outside a temple in Thailand’s southernmost province killed two people and wounded 14 on Thursday in attacks by suspected ethnic Malay separatists, police said.

The bomb was one of five that went off in the late evening in a district of Narathiwat, one of three Muslim-dominated provinces where shadowy insurgents are waging a low-level rebellion against the Thai state.

Soldiers were among the dead and injured in the attack, Rangae district police chief Pakdee Preecha-chon said by phone. Three unexploded devices were later discovered in the same area, he added.

As with most attacks in Thailand’s deep south, there was no claim of responsibility.

Rock in Rio festival returns to roots on 30th anniversary

RIO DE JANEIRO — Thirty years after their late lead singer Freddie Mercury led an adoring Rio crowd in a legendary rendition of “Love of My Life,” Queen returns to the Rock in Rio festival this weekend.

That performance, with 250,000 people singing along in the rain, was the highlight of the inaugural festival, and this year’s gathering, starting Friday, hopes to recapture the magic.

Queen will take back the stage, with guest frontman Adam Lambert, on Friday.

Some 85,000 people are expected for each day of the concerts, running through Sunday at Athletes’ Park, close to where much of the Olympics will be held next year.

A second festival session will be held next week, from September 25 to 27.

In 1985, Brazil was just coming out of a long military dictatorship when 1.3 million people attended what was then a 10-day rock festival.

In addition to Queen, this year’s version will feature some of the artists from that original event, including Rod Stewart.

Brazilian golden oldies Paralamas do Sucesso, Lulu Santos and Eramo Carlos will be there, as will Metallica, System of a Down, Slipknot, Rihanna, Katy Perry, Elton John and A-ha.

But Queen will be the main draw for many.

At the original concert, guitarist Brian May invited the whole crowd to sing along and got a spine-tingling response.

“You want to sing with us? This is especially for you,” he said.

“This song is very special for people of South America.”

This time, Freddie Mercury, who died of AIDS in 1991, won’t be there to conduct the crowd or take over with his famously pure voice.—AFP

All guest artists perform at my 1989 tour for free: Taylor Swift

LOS ANGELES — Pop star Taylor Swift brought in “The Band Perry” to play at her 1989 tour and said all of her surprise guests come to perform for free.

“The Band Perry” played “If I Die Young,” the 2010 smash single from the band’s self-titled album, at Swift’s concert in Indianapolis, reported Entertainment Weekly.

Before introducing the family band, the 25-year-old “Blank Space” hitmaker addressed fans’ questions about how she chooses special guests to join her on tour.

“I want to remind you that anyone you see on the 1989 world tour coming out to surprise an audience... They’re doing it for free out of the goodness of their heart because they wanted to come and play for you and surprise you.”

“Any guest artist that you see on the 1989 tour stage had the opportunity to surprise any crowd at any show and they chose you, Indy,” she said.

Other guests on her 1989 tour have included actress Julia Roberts, who said she hopped on stage after meeting Swift at the meet-and-greet before the show, Wiz Khalifa, Rachel Platten, Avril Lavigne, Lisa Kudrow, Selena Gomez and Justin Timberlake.—PTI

Gerard Butler’s ‘London Has Fallen’ to release in March, 2016

LOS ANGELES — Hollywood star Gerard Butler’s upcoming action film “London Has Fallen” has been pushed from its original release date January 22 to March 4 next year.

The movie, a sequel to 2013’s “Olympus Has Fallen”, centres on an attack on London during the funeral of the British prime minister, who has died under mysterious circumstances, reported Variety.

Butler, 45, will reprise his role as an ultra-resourceful US Secret Service agent. It is direct- ed by Babak Najafi from a script by Creighton Rothenberger, Katrin Benedikt and Chad St John. Aaron Eckhart and Morgan Freeman also star in the movie.

“Olympus Has Fallen” was released by FilmDistrict, the US distributor led by Peter Schlessel prior to him being named CEO of Focus Features.

The film apparently grossed a solid USD 98.9 million at the domestic box office.

The March 4 date already has four other titles slated for release that day— Sony’s “Grimms’ by,” Fox’s “Miss Peregrine’s Home for Peculiar Children”, Disney’s “Zootopia” and Open Road’s “Triple Nine.”—PTI

Toronto film fest pulls ‘London Fields’ amid ownership spat

TORONTO — The Toronto International Film Festival (TIFF) has pulled the Friday night premiere of “London Fields” after director Matthew Cullen filed a lawsuit claiming the noir film’s producers had added “incendiary imagery” without his approval.

The film, based on a Martin Amis novel of same name, stars Billy Bob Thornton and was due to be screened on September 18th, we feel it is only appropriate that we remove this film from the festival’s lineup, TIFF said in a statement.

Cullen filed the lawsuit late last week, after producer Chris Hanley and associates had “secretly prepared their own version of the film” to face it with violent imagery, according to the New York Times.

The lawsuit said the added material included “incendiary imagery evoking 9/11 jumpers edited against pornography,” the Times said. “In its present form, the narrative is inter- cut with images of a predatory drone, nuclear blasts, a person tumbling from a World Trade Center tower, and what appears to be a gathering in Mecca,” the Times said.

The producers of the film said in a statement they were greatly disappointed that the festival decided to pull the film.

“We have always loved launching our films here, but feel that in this particular case there has been an ill-consid- ered decision made against our rights,” the statement said.

The statement said Cullen did not control the final cut of the movie and that the produc- ing company would vigorously oppose the lawsuit.

Taiwan’s National Palace Museum to open southern branch at year end

CHIAYI — Taiwan’s world renowned National Palace Museum, situated in Taipei, is scheduled to open a branch in the southwestern city Chiayi on a tri-annual basis in December, according to its director Fung Ming-chau.

Fung told reporters traveling with her to the site on Thursday that trial operation of the museum’s southern branch, the Asian Art and Culture Museum, will begin on Dec 28.

To attract domestic and international visitors to the remote area, which is a 90-minute journey by high-speed train or three hours by car from the capital, the museum will exhibit two of its most popular items there when it opens to the public.

They are a century-old jadeite cabbage and a layered stone carved in the shape of a piece of stewed pork, which together with a bronze cauldron of the Duke Mao comprise the museum’s “Three Treasures.”

The museum will also hold 10 other exhibitions to celebrate the special occasion, including two loan exhibitions from Japan that will run from December through the end of 2017 and 2018, respectively.

For that purpose, the Museum of Oriental Ceramics, Osaka will lend more than 300 ceramic objects — 175 Korean celadon objects and 161 Imari-style porcelain wares from Arita, the cradle of porcelain manufacturing in Japan.

The National Palace Museum will also exhibit its own Imari porcelain and Ju ware collections.

Surviving pieces of Ju ware are exceptionally rare, with fewer than 70 remaining in the world today. The Palace Museum in Taipei has 21, the most of any collection, while the Palace Museum in Beijing has 20 and the Osaka museum has two of its own.

Following the 10 exhibitions, the Tokyo National Museum and Kyushu National Museum will lend 150 of their most prized artifacts, including 68 national treasures and important cultural properties, for an exhibition at the southern branch from October 2016 to January 2017.

The loan exhibitions from the two Japanese museums were made possible after the National Palace Museum lent more than 200 of its finest artifacts to them last year.

The exhibitions were the first in Japan since the museum settled in suburban Taipei 50 years ago.

The idea for a southern branch of the National Palace Museum arose during the presidency of Chen Shui-bian, of the now-opposition Democratic Progressive Party, who hoped to “balance the cultural, social and economic development” between the north and south.

The project was supposed to be completed before Chen’s second four-year term ended in 2008, but it was delayed by contract disputes and project revisions.

Construction of the NT$7.9 billion (US$242 million) revised project did not begin until February 2013. Despite the exposed reinforcing steel bars, scaffolding and heavy machinery, Fung stated confidently that the museum, part of a 70-hectare complex that also includes a park with an artificial lake, will be open to public as scheduled.

While the National Palace Museum in Taipei features a large collection of the finest Chinese antiquities collected by various Chinese emperors over a millennium, its southern branch will focus on Asian arts and culture including those of Taiwan and China.

Taiwan and China have been governed separately since Nationalist forces led by Chiang Kai-shek were defeated by the Communists under Mao Zedong and fled to Taiwan in 1949, taking with them more than 650,000 art objects.

Low-budget theater caught in drama on changes to London skyline

LONDON — London’s tallest building, a 95-storey gleaming glass tower named the Shard, has changed more than the skyline.

Completed in 2012, it spurred redevelopment at the ground level that ripped at south-east London’s cultural fabric by forcing the eviction of Southwark Playhouse, one of the capital’s most successful low-budget theaters.

These fringe alternatives to the mainstream West End typically lead hand-to-mouth existences characterized by battles to hold on to makeshift premises. But the drama at the foot of the Shard has a happy ending that could become a trend as London’s city planners acknowledge cultural activities do more than coffee chains to build communities.

Following an outcry from audiences and a campaign led by writer-actor Stephen Fry and actor Andy Serkis, Southwark Playhouse has been promised a new home in the revamped London Bridge quarter when that is completed around 2018.

“Investors and incoming businesses are now realising that mixed use, liveable commercial areas are more successful and desirable than the bland 20th-century versions that employed confident at night-time and weekends,” Team London Bridge, set up to develop business in the area, said in an email.

Pending the reprieve, Southwark Playhouse also found itself a venue at a foot of a skyscraper under construction, this time 44 stories high, in a redevelopment to the south at Elephant and Castle. With two secure homes, Southwark Playhouse will be rare among London’s off-West End theaters.

Between now and 2018, it is continuing its more than 20-year-old tradition in a warehouse between its two future venues.

“We learn something from every home,” said Artistic Director Chris Smyrnios.

More than that, the company has won glowing reviews in running two shows simultaneously in separate performance spaces.

Its defining characteristics include an educational vocation dating back to its founding in 1993 in its first Southwark home: a former chapel in what was then a neglected area of the city.

Partly thanks to the theater, the neighborhood became gentrified, the rent soared and the theatre moved to the London Bridge railway arch that it had to leave six years later.—Reuters

Myanmar Chess Federation to hold qualifying tournament

Ko Moe

YANGON — Qualifying matches for the Myanmar International Open Chess Championship will take place at Aung San Gyi Gym from 15 to 23 October, according to the Myanmar Chess Federation.

Chess players can register at the federation by 13 October for a fee of K2,000.

The federation will award a cash prize of K150,000 to the top qualifier of this competition.

Myanmar to compete in Asian Table Tennis Championships

Ko Moe

YANGON — The Myanmar Table Tennis Federation has selected four players to compete in the 22nd Asian Table Tennis Championships in Thailand from 26 October to 3 November.

Nineteen-year-old players Soe Min Oo, Swan Pyae Tun, Kyaw Hsan and Zin Min Hein will participate in the men’s singles and doubles events.

Myanmar’s table tennis team will leave Yangon on 24 October for Pattaya, Thailand.

More than 30 players from 37 countries will compete in the championships, which include men’s singles, women’s singles, men’s doubles and women’s doubles events.

Chinlone academy to be built in Mandalay

Myanmar’s first traditional chinlone and sepak takraw academy will be built in Mandalay with the aim of developing the sport and nurturing a new generation of players.

The Myanmar Traditional Chinlone Federation will build the academy near Mandalay International Airport.

U Soe Naing, the chairman of the federation, said Myanmar does not succeed in sports because it fails to nurture new generations of athletes.

The academy, which will admit 50 trainees at a time, aims to train players each year.

Local instructors will train players in chinlone, while Thai instructors will be hired to teach sepak takraw at the academy.

A hotel and a restaurant will be attached to the academy to fund it, the chairman said.

“Chinlone will become the chinlone and sepak takraw champion within a short period, thanks to the planned academy, but players still need sporting grounds to practice. As of now, they still have to play in streets,” said Maung Kaung Pyae Sone, a chinlone player from Tawmyaw Township, Yangon.

Chinlone is a traditional Myanmar sport that is said to have originated over 1,500 years ago, when it was performed for Myanmar royalty.

The sport was introduced by Myanmar to the SEA Games in 2013. There are no teams as such — the sport is judged on the athleticism and skills of individual players. National and regional chinlone competitions will be held in Nay Pyi Taw in December.

Frailties abound as Chelsea, Arsenal converge

The old maxim that a week is a long time in football rings true for both teams ahead of Arsenal’s trip to Chelsea in the Premier League on Saturday.

Arsenal won 2-0 against Stoke City last weekend to move into the top four for the first time this season, while Chelsea’s 3-1 loss at Everton — their third defeat in four games — left the defending champions a huge 11 points below leaders Manchester City in 17th place.

But while Chelsea were beating Maccabi Tel Aviv 4-0 in the Champions League on Wednesday, Arsenal were crashing to an embarrassing 2-1 defeat at Dinamo Zagreb, reassuringly — albeit slightly — their respective trajectories.

“We come with a different feeling. We can wake up with a different state of mind,” Jose Mourinho told Chelsea TV after his side’s midweek win at Stamford Bridge.

“Saturday is a big match; it’s a great rival. This result can put us in a better situation.”

While the significance of Chelsea’s victory must be weighed against the relative weakness of their opponents, there were encouraging signs to be drawn from their performance.

Diego Costa scored, Cesc Fabregas rediscovered his powers of influence and the rejigged defence kept a first clean sheet since the 1-0 win over Crystal Palace on May 3 that clinched last season’s title.

Short of a woeful early penalty from Eden Hazard, who was still to recapture the heights of last season’s opening weekend.

As for Arsenal, who had appeared to be finding their feet following their shock 2-0 loss at home to West Ham United on the season’s opening weekend.

“We need to move on now,” said Theo Walcott, who rose from the bench to score Arsenal’s goal at the Maksimir Stadium. “We have got a big, important game at the weekend. Everyone will be very disappointed, but the manager will make sure that it’s put to bed in the changing room and that it will stay there.”

Players’ union to file complaint over transfer system

PARIS — The world football players’ union FIFPro plans on Friday to file a complaint with the European Commission over football’s transfer system, the head of the union said.

FIFPro President Philippe Piat, who is also the head of the French football players’ union UNFP, called it an “overhaul of the transfer system, and plans in particular to highlight the differing powers of clubs and players to unequitably terminate contracts. According to FIFPro, footballers do not enjoy the same rights as clubs to unilaterally end contracts, meaning the professional athletes do not have similar freedoms to other kinds of employees in relation to their employers.

The union said on its website that it would hold a news conference in Brussels at 10:30 am (0830 GMT) to make “a major announcement set to impact the professional football industry worldwide”, but did not give further details.

Ronaldo bears down on Raul as Madrid’s all-time best

MADRID — Another piece of Real Madrid history awaits Cristiano Ronaldo as he can become the club’s all-time leading scorer when they host Granada at the Santiago Bernabeu on Saturday.

Ronaldo is officially just two goals shy of Raul Gonzalez Blanco’s 320 as he has played over 400 games fewer than the Spanish legend.

However, the club claim he is just one goal behind the forward while having played over 400 games fewer than the Spanish legend.

The club claim he is just one goal behind Raul as they credited Ronaldo with a goal back in 2010 that was awarded to Pepe in the referee’s report.

The World Player of the Year has struck eight times in his last two games to categorically silence the critics for his slow start to the campaign as he failed to score in either of Madrid’s opening two La Liga fixtures or in two games for Portugal.

Ronaldo hit five goals in the same game for the second time in five months in a 6-0 rout at Espanyol last weekend and Granada will be fearing the worst as they were the previous recipients of a five-goal haul in a 9-1 humiliation at the Bernabeu back in April.

“I am happy, it is a proud moment for me to be in this position,” Ronaldo said after netting his 33rd hat-trick for the club against Shakhtar Donetsk in midweek.

“I have to thank the team, they helped me a huge amount.”

“Before I was bad and now I am good because I have scored eight goals,” he added in a thinly veiled dig at his critics.

“ar colleagues believe in me, they give me the service with which I scored goals.”

Ronaldo will, though, be devoid of some of Madrid’s key creators with Gareth Bale having joined James Rodriguez on the sidelines due to injury.
