THREE groups comprising a committee of 16 representatives from political parties, the government and ethnic ceasefire signatories gathered at Myanmar Peace Centre yesterday for talks on future political dialogue, agreeing to place emphasis on national reconciliation.

The purpose of the Union Political Dialogue Joint Committee meeting was to facilitate upcoming political dialogue, in which Myanmar’s political problems are expected to be resolved through dialogue.

According to a press conference held afterwards, a political framework drafting committee was formed with eight representatives, each from the three sides at the tripartite talks, with those present agreeing to start drawing up the framework this Friday.

Agenda setting, representation and participation of stakeholders and setting a decision-making rule are included in the framework for political dialogue, said U Hla Maung Shwe, senior adviser at Myanmar Peace Centre.

The framework is expected to be set up by 14 December and the first round of political dialogue is slated to be held no later than 13 January, the senior adviser added.

According to the terms of truce pact signed by the government and eight ethnic armed groups on 15 October, both sides are required to draw up the framework within 60 days of the signing and to hold political dialogue within 90 days.

There will be a total of 24 representatives on the framework drafting committee, with 16 already named to represent the government and ethnic groups.

Despite having eight representatives from political parties tentatively named, this will be confirmed during the first round of framework drafting meetings, said Sai Kyaw Nyunt of the Shan Nationalities League for Democracy, who is also the secretary of the UPDJC representing political parties.

As it was the first meeting for political parties, some did not bring a mandate as to who will be named as representatives, added the secretary.

“But, we have no differences about the main purpose: focusing on national reconciliation is very important.”

According to spokespersons at the press conference, one representative from each ethnic armed group will represent the ethnic side, while the government’s side is also comprised of eight members and will be led by Union Minister U Aung Min.

Supplies arrive for relatives of Hpakant landslide victims

CASH and rice has reached relatives of the victims of the deadly landslide at a jade mining site in Hpakant, Kachin State, according to local authorities.

Nearly K54 million (US$41,600) was donated by local authorities, Myanmar Red Cross Society, Ministry of Social Welfare, Relief and Resettlement and Myanmar Gems Entrepreneurs Association.

One more body was recovered yesterday, bringing the death toll to 115. Of them, 30 bodies are unidentified, according to an official from Hpakant Township General Administration Department.

It is estimated that there are around 4 to 5 bodies that still remain under the soil, he added. Estimates the day before were of 30 bodies. Around 70 make-shift huts were buried by the landslide.

U La John Ngan Sai, the Chief Minister of Kachin State, arrived on the scene to assist with rescue efforts. He urged miners staying in make-shift huts in risky areas to relocate immediately.

Following Saturday’s deadly landslide at a jade mining site in Hpakant, local authorities have said they will relocate around 70 make-shift huts inhabited by miners, as they are near dangerous mountains of dump soil. The soil had been dumped in the area by a mining company last year. Its presence attracted a large number of migrant miners searching for lesser quality jade that had been discard by large mining companies.

Local authorities have designated several areas, including the one where the tragedy happened, as high risk spots for landslides and have issued notices to miners not to set up make-shift huts there.
Pyidaungsu Hluttaw Roundup

THE appreciation of the US dollar against the kyat has cost the union government over K635 billion in its additional budget, according to a report by the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw committee.

Public Account Joint Committee reported its findings on the Additional Budget Bill of the Union for 2015-16 fiscal year during yesterday’s session of the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw.

The union government has sought K2.535 billion in the additional budget, including K635.48 billion that resulted from the appreciation of the US dollar against the Myanmar kyat, according to the committee. Representatives were invited to discuss the budget bill during future sessions.

Union Minister U Win Shein reported tax collection for the first half of the 2015-16 fiscal year, which exceeds the target and amounts to K2,357,805 billion.

Representatives also discussed the report on the implementation of national planning in the second half of 2014-15 fiscal year.

Union Minister Dr Kan Zaw responded to questions raised by representatives about the implementation of national planning.

Pyithu Hluttaw Roundup

THE process for citizenship scrutiny of Bengalis in Myebon Township in Rakhine State was clarified by the Deputy Minister for Immigration and Population U Win Myint at the Pyithu Hluttaw session on Tuesday.

According to the deputy minister, citizenship scrutiny is conducted at the township level by a team comprising the township administrator, the township law officer, the township police officer, a representative of the Bengalis and a representative of the Rakhine before state level scrutiny is conducted by a committee comprising the state security and border affairs minister, the state commissioner, the state law officer, state police commissioner, a representative of the Bengali and a representative of the Rakhine.

Findings are then scrutinized by the head office of the Immigration and National Registration Department, which sends its findings to the central committee for citizenship scrutiny composed of union ministers for defence, home affairs, immigration and population and foreign affairs.

The deputy minister said that citizenship documents are issued to those who are approved by the central committee in accordance with the law of the Immigration and National Registration Department.

ABD approves $80m loan to upgrade Yangon’s transmission network

The Asian Development Bank announced yesterday that it has approved a US$80 million loan to upgrade Yangon’s electricity transmission ring line system to 230 kilovolts (KV). The upgrade is expected to benefit more than one million people.

“The ageing and overloaded transmission network requires urgent improvements to provide stable and ample supplies of power to support the country’s economic growth targets and poverty reduction objectives,” said Bui Duy Thanh, senior energy economist at ADB’s South-East Asia Department.

“Yangon plays a central role as an economic hub for the country and this assistance will help the government ensure reliable power supplies are provided to the city and surrounding areas.”

According to a press release issued yesterday by ADB Myanmar, the Power Transmission Improvement Project will upgrade the Thida-Thakayta-Kyaikkasan transmission ring lines to 230 KV from 66 KV and construct two new substations at South Okkalapa and West University.

This will complete the critical 230 KV ring for Yangon straddling the substations of Ahlon, Thida, Thakayta, South Okkalapa, Hlawga, Yangon West University, Hine-thaya and back to Ahlon. The work will complement associated upgrades being done by the Myanmar Electric Power Enterprise.

ADB said that Myanmar’s economy is expected to grow at around 7.8 percent per year over the next decade and to meet the rising demand for power, which is predicted to be around 9 percent annually through to 2030.

Myanmar therefore needs to develop new generation sources and to expand and strengthen transmission and distribution networks.

The government has drawn up a development master plan to meet its energy goals, and ADB has been supporting the government through infrastructure upgrades, regulatory development and institutional capacity building, the press release stated.

According to ADB, the government will provide counterpart support of $3.3 million, covering administration costs, environmental and social safeguard measures, and the construction of access roads and staff housing in substation areas to complement ADB’s concessional loan.

The project will run over 3 years, with an expected completion date of June 2019.

Soil preparations to provide jobs for Tatkon residents

Farmers in the villages of Tatkon Township, Nay Pyi Taw, are offering soil preparation jobs to rural locals in the potato fields along Sinthe Creek.

“There was not much rain this year, so we have to rely on underground water. We are preparing the soil and mixing it with cow dung to grow potatoes,” said farmer U Tun Oo of east Kinmoontan village.

He said ploughing the land with a pair of cows cost K4,000 for one morning. Renting a tractor would cost from K17,000-K20,000 per hour. A male field worker fetches K3,000 per day, and a female field worker earns K2,000 per day, according to the farmer.

Bangkok — A Thai military court has indicted two men accused of carrying out a Bangkok bomb attack that killed 20 people including 14 foreigners, making it the deadliest such incident in Thai history.

A lawyer for one of the men said a Bangkok military court had rejected requests to turn the pair over to the UN in 2016, and that the prosecution had violated international law.

“The court has accepted the ten charges that prosecutors formally brought against the two men,” said lawyer Schoochart Kampa.

“Among the charges are that they were members of the Uighur minority.”

The attack at the Erawan Shrine, a major landmark in the heart of Bangkok, injured more than 120 people.

Thai police have said that the blast was revenge for a crackdown on human trafficking. They also ruled out any link between the blast and the deportation of people at China’s Beihai province.

The Uighur are a Turkic-language speaking group that calls China’s western Xinjiang region home. Some Turks see themselves as sharing cultural and religious bond with their Uighur “brothers”. The Uighur issue is sensitive for the Thai government and any link between the bomb and the deportation of people at China’s Beihai could expose it to censure that its foreign policy led to the bomb attack.

Uighurs, who are mostly Muslim, say they flee China’s Xinjiang region due to persecution. Beijing rejects that.

Australia urges more intelligence sharing in Asia to stop Paris-style attack

SYDNEY — Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull yesterday called for greater intelligence sharing in Southeast Asia to stop a Paris-style attack and ordered local law enforcement officials to test their readiness to handle a mass casualty attack.

Citing “increased terrorist threats”, the United States issued a global alert on Monday for Americans planning to travel following deadly militant attacks in France and Mali.

In a national security address to parliament, Turnbull called for greater intelligence sharing with the leaders of Southeast Asian countries such as Indonesia, Malaysia and Singapore to which Australians are frequent visitors.

From an Australian perspective, we see a real risk that terrorist groups in the region might be inspired by attacks such as we have seen in Ankara, Beirut, Bamako and Paris and we are very mindful of the fact that hundreds of thousands of Australians visit South-East Asia every year,” he said.

Turnbull yesterday ordered Australian law enforcement officials to test their readiness for a mass casualty attack in the wake of the 13 November Paris attacks which killed 130 people.

Australia is conducting air strikes against Islamic State as part of a US-led coalition, which has led to threats of retaliatory attacks.

Turnbull reiterated there were no plans to change Australia’s military tactics against Islamic State, despite some politicians calling for troops to be sent to Syria.

He did, however, highlight the need for countering violent extremism online, citing Australian support for a new Malaysian program to counter extremist messaging. “Just as Australia cannot fight any military conflict against ISIL unilaterally, we cannot counter violent extremism alone, particularly online,” he said, using an acronym for Islamic State.

Turnbull also said Attorney General George Brandis would visit Indonesia next month to discuss furthering regional intelligence coordination.

Australia has been on heightened alert for attacks by homegrown radicals since last year.

In September, police shot dead a Melbourne teenager after he stabbed two counter-terrorism officers. Last December, two hostages were killed when police stormed a central Sydney cafe to end a 17-hour siege by a lone gunman, who was also killed.

Two Koreas exchange list of delegates for talks set for Thursday

SEOUL — North and South Korea yesterday exchanged a list of delegates for talks set for Thursday to lay the groundwork for high-level talks between the two sides, according to South Korea’s Unification Ministry.

At the talks set to take place at the truce village of Panmunjom, South Korea’s three-member team will be headed by Kim Ki Woong, director of Special Office for Inter-Korean Dialogue from the Unification Ministry.

The North’s team, also comprised of three members, will be headed by Hwang Chol, director at the secretariat of the North’s Committee for the Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland.

The high-level talks, aimed at improving bilateral relations after tensions rose in August, would be a follow-up to an agreement reached later that month between the two Koreas.

Tensions had escalated after South Korea accused the North of planting landmines in the Demilitarized Zone between the two Koreas that seriously injured two South Korean soldiers in early August. The two sides also fired artillery shells at each other later that month.

The two sides are still technically in a state of war as the 1950-1953 Korean War ended in an armistice and not a permanent peace treaty. —Kyodo News

China, Thailand joint air force exercise highlights warming ties

BANGKOK — Thailand’s military held an air show with China yesterday ahead of joint manoeuvres in a sign of warming ties, but Thailand said it was not distancing itself from the United States which downgraded their military relationship following a 2014 coup.

Five Thai and Chinese military planes performed aerobatic demonstrations for assembled media, flying some 3,000 feet (900 metres) above ground at the Korat Royal Thai Air Force Base, around 260 km (161 miles) northeast of Bangkok.

On Thursday and Friday, Chinese and Thai air forces will conduct their first joint exercises that China has said are aimed at increasing “mutual trust and friendship.”

Since a May 2014 coup, Thailand’s military generals have sought to counterbalance the country’s ties with Washington and launched a charm offensive toward their neighbour to the north.

“Thailand has been pushing for this for quite some time,” Air Marshal Bhupanpong Seyayongka, director of operations for the Royal Thai Air Force, told Reuters.

“We are not trying to use China to counter the US. Our foreign policy is to have no enemies and to be friends with everyone,” Wacharon told Reuters.

“We’ve been studying this plan for a long time.”

The US was critical of the coup and downgraded joint military exercises and training with Thailand saying they would be restored once a general election is held.

Recent deals between China and Thailand include a plan by Thailand’s navy to buy submarines worth $1 billion from China and an ambitious project to build rail links from southern China through Laos to Thailand.

Chinese tourism to Thailand is expected to be a record 7 million this year, up from 4.63 million last year, despite a deadly bomb attack at a major tourist spot in Bangkok in August.

But senior Thai government officials say Thailand has not turned 180 degrees toward China, despite a chill in ties between Bangkok and Washington following the 2014 coup.

Major-General Wacharon Sukhondhapatipak, deputy government spokesman, said Thailand’s foreign policy was to be friends with everyone, including the US.

“We are not trying to use China to counter the US. Our foreign policy is to have no enemies and to be friends with everyone,” Wacharon told Reuters.

Bhanupong said Thailand would continue military exercises with the US.

“We will definitely keep practicing with the US as well,” Bhanupong said.

Anti-graft investigators probe two brokerages in Shanghai

SHANGHAI — Anti-corruption investigators opened probes into two of China’s largest brokerages and censured four executives at a leading insurer yesterday, the latest moves in a campaign against graft in the financial sector following a market slump.

After a bloodbath in the share market in mid-June, Beijing began cracking down on alleged illegal activity, such as insider trading and ‘malicious’ short-selling, which were blamed partly for volatility.

Investigators in Shanghai have started probing Guotai Junan Securities and Haitong Securities, two of the largest state-owned brokerages, the official Xinhua news agency reported, citing a government paper.

Guotai Junan International, the Hong Kong subsidiary of Guotai Junan, said on Monday its chairman had been missing since Wednesday.

This is the third probe in Shanghai this year, Xinhua said, and will involve sweeping investigations that involve 12 other state-owned companies and six universities.

President Xi Jinping opened a campaign three years ago to root out corruption in all walks of life in China.

Executives at CITIC Securities have fallen foul of China’s corruption authorities and have allegedly admitted to insider trading and leaking information.

Meanwhile, four executives at state-owned People’s Insurance Company of China (PICC), one of the country’s largest insurers, were punished for a wide range of misdemeanours from hiding a spouse’s US green card status, to using trade union money to fund shopping sprees.

A statement posted on the country’s main anti-graft body’s official website.

The Central Commission for Discipline Inspection (CCDI) said some employees were fired, while others were demoted or given warnings.

Kerry says Palestinian attacks ‘acts of terrorism’ that must be condemned

“...And today I express my complete condemnation for any act of terror that takes innocent lives and disrupts the day-to-day life of a nation,” Kerry said.

JERUSALEM — US Secretary of State John Kerry began a one-day visit to Israel and the Palestinian territories yesterday by describing a wave of Palestinian knife and car ramming attacks as terrorism that must be condemned.

At the start of a meeting with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, Kerry said they would discuss ways to work together to restore calm. With US-backed Palestinian statehood negotiations frozen since 2014, Netanyahu said there could be no peace while an “onslaught of terror” continued.

“Shortly before Kerry and Netanyahu convened in Jerusalem, a Palestinian drove his car into three Israeli soldiers and a paramilitary border policeman along a road in the occupied West Bank, injuring all four, the army said. Israeli forces shot and wounded the driver.”

“...It is very clear to us that the terrorism, these acts of terrorism which have been taking place, deserve the condemnation that they are receiving,” Kerry told reporters, with Netanyahu at his side.

Majority of Britons want to leave the EU after Paris attacks: opinion poll

“...The ORB survey of 2,000 people showed 52 percent of British voters wanted to leave while 48 percent wanted to stay. In similar polls in June, July and September, a majority had wanted to stay in the EU.

Earlier this month, British Prime Minister David Cameron launched his attempt to reform the 28-member bloc ahead of a referendum on whether Britain should remain an EU member, a vote which he has promised will take place by the end of 2017.

A British divorce would shake the bloc to its core, ripping away its second largest economy and one of its top two military powers. Pro-Europeans warn an exit from the EU would hurt Britain’s economy and could trigger the break-up of the United Kingdom by prompting another Scottish independence vote.

Other polls have shown British support for staying in the European Union fell this year as an influx of migrants into Europe raised concerns about membership.”

Harnessing the Climate Change

Khin Maung Myint

The 2015 United Nations Climate Change Conference to be held in Paris, from 30 November to 11 December is drawing near. Every eco-conscious persons are anxious what would emerge from that conference; “Would they be able to pass a viable resolution that could harness the climate change?”, is the question most of them must be asking, in their minds.

Some are doubtful that any significant improvement would be achieved. However, I am optimistic there would be some encouraging results, though minor they may be. My assumption is based on the fact that the whole world is aware of the adverse effects of the global warming and the climate change. Thus if every country, especially the large emitters of the greenhouse gases cooperate, I believe that a sustainable solution to harness the climate change could be found.

Though I do not know what the actual agenda of the conference would be, I am sure the necessity to maintain the temperature rise at no more than 2°C above the average temperature of the pre-industrialization period, would be top priority. According to some experts, that could be achieved if the rain forests of the Amazon and the Indonesian Archipelago could be conserved properly. These are the two places where large scale deforestation is taking place due to extensive logging, mining, industrialisations and agricultural developments. However, that assumption would be just a theory, which would not be practical.

In opinion, we should be facing those two countries with the responsibility to fight the global warming wouldn’t be fair. No country would be spared from the consequences of the climate change although it don’t have a hand in causing it. Thus every country should be involved in the process of curbing the temperature rise. The countries that caused more damage to the environment should shoulder more responsibility. Meaning, the largest emitters of the greenhouse gases, or in other words, the countries with more industries should be held responsible and enforced to curb their Carbon Dioxide emissions drastically.

Concerning the CO₂ emissions, the present system of allowing the Carbon Emission quotas and trading them should be reassessed and revised. In my opinion the present practice of allowing the trading in excess Carbon Emission quota is ridiculous. If a country had used up its Carbon Emission quota, it should not be allowed to emit more. The effects of the extra CO₂ emitted by that country would not be isolated only to that place, it would affect the whole world. Instead of allowing the purchasing, that country should be enforced to increase its own Carbon Emission quota by growing more trees or reduce their emission by reducing their industries. It may sound unacceptable, but I believe it is the only logical approach.

For us, as we are located close to two or may be three industrially fast-growing countries, we would suffer more if they produce more greenhouse gases made possible by the purchased Carbon Emission quota from far away countries that have excess. If you would observe any statement with a rational mind, you would find it logical, if not scientific.

Thus the trading in the Carbon Emission quota should not be allowed.

There is a saying in Myanmar: “While the deer is breeding, the tiger is eating”, which I think has the same meaning as “back at square one”. There wouldn’t be any progress, not withstanding how many more trees are grown, if the trading goes on. It may deprive some countries the opportunities to contribute to the reduction of CO₂ emissions as a duty. It is learnt from the reports that China topped the list of most emitters of the greenhouse gases, followed by the US. Others are not as bad as those two. Those two countries should be grilled at the upcoming conference. If the UN is not prepared to apply pressure on them, the conference would not yield any significant results, which would be worse than a war. So the UN should consider taking the climate change issue to the Security Council and pass a binding resolution. If the Paris convention should fail to achieve the objectives.

I had been persistently writing about the catastrophic consequences of the climate change. I used to emphasize the importance of conservation of the forests and the ecosystem whenever I get the chance. I had been persistently writing about the catastrophic consequences of the climate change. My ideas may be far fetched, but if those two countries are left unchecked, it would be very devastating to all living things including the trees and plants, which would be worse than a war. So the UN should consider taking the climate change issue to the Security Council and pass a binding resolution. If the Paris convention should fail to achieve the objectives.

The rise in temperatures would not yield any significant results. Unlike wars, the climate change is everyone’s problem. The wars would be confined to a country and mostly affect the populace of the belligerent nations, whereas the climate change would doom the whole world.

Why not use the sanctioning as a tool, to forcefully harness the climate change? My ideas may be far fetched, but if those two countries are left unchecked, it would be very devastating to all living things including the trees and caused more evaporation to take place and led to more rainfall, triggering a chain action — flooding and landslides causing the loss of lives, properties, livestock, agricultural products, land and spread of epidemic diseases, etc. The worst are the El Nino and the La Nina phenomena that occurred alternately. If the temperatures should continue to rise, they could further cause more catastrophes. The most devastating would be the inundation of those places in the low lying areas, the whole year round. Even now, people living in low lying regions, such as Bangladesh are being forced to leave their homes and in most cases out of their country. A new breed of migrants had emerged due to the effects of the climate change. They are appropriately called “the Climate Change Refugees”.

If the Paris convention is unable to pass binding resolutions that could harness the climate change in time and reduce it, our country is headed for our doom. I am including a map showing the levels of risk each country would be facing, to make my point. It was based on a study by the University of Notre Dame in Indiana, USA. If the readers would study the map closely, they are bound to see that our country is in the “ma roof”, darker than “red”, meaning: we are among the most vulnerable group. However, those countries that are causing the most climate change are in the “green”. It’s quite clear that the culprits are getting away scot-free, while the innocents have to bear the brunt of the consequences of the climate change. The risk levels are said to be calculated based on the ability of a country to cope with the climate change: how well equipped and prepared to fend off in the event of the climate change reaching life-threatening levels.

I may sound naive or absurd, but I would like to make a request to those delegates, who will be attending that conference, to push through a resolution that would sanction heavy monetary fines on the large Carbon emitters. Money thus acquired should be dispersed from the effects of the climate change. In conclusion I would like to suggest again that they should seriously consider abolishing the Carbon Emission trading of the Paris conference.

That practice is not contributing much to the controlling, but instead, encouraging the Carbon emissions.

Bomb shatters windows outside business federation in Athens

ATHENS — A bomb exploded outside the offices of a Greek business federation in central Athens early on Tuesday, police officials said, smashing windows but causing no injuries.

The blast, which police believe was carried out by domestic guerrilla groups, is the first such incident since leftist Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras came to power in January.

Attacks against banks, politicians and business people are not uncommon in Greece, which has a long history of political violence and has been mired in its worst economic crisis in decades.

The device, triggered by a timer and placed in a backpack near the entrance of the Hellenic Business Federation offices, went off around 3:30 am (0130 GMT).

An anonymous caller warned a newspaper some 30 minutes earlier, a police official said on condition of anonymity.

Witnesses said glass from smashed windows was strewn across the streets in one of the busiest parts of central Athens, a stone’s throw from parliament in Syntagma Square that is lined with cafes, banks and shops.

“I heard it, it made me dizzy because it was so loud,” said Kostas Papagolopoulos, who was working the night shift at a kiosk across the street.

“We knew about it, police had warned us that there may be a bomb because they found a suspicious bag and told us to be careful because of the sonic boom, so I was standing outside the kiosk.”

Police cordoned off a two-block area surrounding the building and bomb disposal squads were examining the scene.

Video from a security camera at a nearby building recorded two people wearing dark clothes and helmets fleeing the scene on a motorcycle at high speed, a police official told Reuters.

“This confirms the account of what a security guard in the area saw. The building of the business federation is not regularly guarded,” the official said, declining to be named. Police were checking other cameras in the area.

The blast caused damage in five nearby buildings, mostly shattered glass. Makeshift bomb and arson attacks have escalated in Greece since 2010, when it first adopted unpopular austerity measures such as tax rises, wage and pension cuts in exchange for multi-billion euro bailouts by the European Union and the IMF.

In July, Athens agreed to further rounds of austerity under its third bailout.

US issues global travel alert as manhunt continues for Paris attackers

WASHINGTON — Citing “increased terrorist threats” from militant groups in various regions of the world, the US State Department issued a global alert on Monday for Americans planning to travel following deadly militant attacks in France and Mali.

As millions of Americans prepare to travel for the US Thanksgiving holiday on Thursday, the agency said potential attackers could target private or government interests.

The department did not advise people against travel but said US citizens should be vigilant, especially in crowded places.

The State Department has regularly issued such worldwide travel alerts since the 11 September, 2001, attacks on the United States. A State Department official said the latest alert, which expires 24 February, effectively updated past warnings.

In the statement on its website, the State Department said: “Current information suggests that (Islamic State), Al-Qaeda, Boko Haram, and other terrorist groups continue to plan terrorist attacks in multiple regions.”

Although it did not mention the 13 November Paris attacks claimed by the Islamic State group in which 130 died, the department noted that militants had carried out attacks in France, Nigeria, Denmark, Turkey, and Mali during the past year.

“Authorities believe the likelihood of terror attacks will continue as members of (Islamic State) return from Syria and Iraq,” it said.

“Additionally, there is a continuing threat from unaffiliated persons planning attacks inspired by major terrorist organisations but conducted on an individual basis.”

France and Belgium have launched a manhunt following the attacks in Paris, with a focus on Brussels barkeeper Salah Abdeslam, whose elder brother blew himself up during the gun and suicide bomb attacks. One theory was that Abdeslam had intended to blow himself up in the 18th district but had abandoned the plan, although it was not clear why.

“Maybe he had a technical problem with his explosive belt,” a police source said.

The source said it was too soon to say whether the helmet had been in contact with Abdeslam, whose elder brother blew himself up during the gun and suicide bomb attacks. One theory was that Abdeslam had intended to blow himself up in the 18th district but had abandoned the plan, although it was not clear why.

The bomber and three others who were killed had not been identified, authorities added. There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

Islamic State’s affiliate, Sinai Province, has carried out similar attacks in the region as part of its bid to topple the Cairo government.

State television and security sources said the first bomb exploded then a second blast hit the area about ten minutes later.

Ambulances rushed to the scene, which was sealed off by soldiers and police, said the security sources.— Reuters

Car bomb kills three at hotel housing election judges in Egypt’s Sinai

CAIRO — A car bomb exploded outside a hotel housing election judges in Egypt’s North Sinai yesterday, killing at least three people and injuring 14, security and medical sources said.

The blasts in the provincial capital of al-Arish came a day after the second round of a parliamentary election closed. Egyptian state television also reported the incident.

A suicide bomber tried to drive a car bomb into the hotel before security forces opened fire on him, causing the car to explode, security sources said.

Three others, two policemen and a judge, were killed, security sources said. Two judges, seven policemen and five hotel staff were injured, authorities added. There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

We are still confronted with the threat we were facing yesterday.”

Belgian Prime Minister Charles Michel

Fearing an imminent threat of a Paris-style attack, Belgium extended a maximum security alert in Brussels for a week but said the metro system and schools could reopen on Wednesday.

“We are still confronted with the threat we were facing yesterday,” Prime Minister Charles Michel said. Potential targets remained shopping areas and public transport.

Belgium has been at the heart of investigations into the Paris attacks since French law enforcement bodies said two of the suicide bombers had lived there.

Three people have been charged in Belgium with terrorist offences, including two who travelled back with Abdeslam from Brussels. As authorities tried to establish Abdeslam’s movements and whereabouts, a source said he travelled through Italy in August with a companion, but his presence caused no alarm because he was not a wanted man at the time.

His companion was Ahmet Dahmani, a Belgian man of Moroccan origin who was arrested in Turkey last week on suspicion of involvement in the Paris attacks, the investigative source said.

In Belgium, prosecutors said they had charged a fourth person with terrorist offences linked to the Paris attacks.

They released all 15 others detained in police raids on Sunday. Two of five people detained on Monday were also released while the other three had their custody prolonged. Soldiers patrolled the streets of Brussels, the bustling European capital which has been in lockdown since Saturday.

On the Grand Place, a historic central square that usually draws crowds of tourists, an armoured military vehicle was parked under an illuminated Christmas tree. NATO, which raised its alert level after the Paris attacks, said its headquarters in the city were open, but some staff had been asked to work from home. EU institutions were also open with soldiers patrolling outside.

Interior Minister Jan Jambon told RTL radio, however, that the capital was still operating. “Apart from the closed metro and schools, life goes on in Brussels,” he said.

Workers were also setting up stalls for the city centre Christmas market, which is due to open on Friday, and organisers of the Davis Cup tennis final between Belgium and Britain in the city of Ghent, 55 km (35 miles) from the capital, said it would go ahead this weekend.— Reuters
India oil imports from AsiaPac spike in October as refiners tap new routes

NEW DELHI — India’s crude oil imports from the Asia-Pacific region spikd last month as its refiners looked beyond their traditional suppliers for cheaper purchases amid a global supply glut.

Crude imports from points east of India, mainly Malaysia and Australia, surged to 187,000 barrels per day (bpd) in October, the highest since April 2014, according to ship tracking data obtained from sources and compiled by Thomson Reuters Oil Research & Forecasts.

That was more than double the volume imported from Asia-Pacific in September and up some 70 percent from a year ago, the data showed. The surge in shipments were a boost to Malaysia, South-east Asia’s second-biggest oil producer, and Australia, where some refineries have been shut.

Malaysia in particular has been looking for stable outlets to bolster oil revenues and cushion the impact of falling global crude prices, reducing spot prices to attract buyers and offering grades to refiners further away such as in India. “Malaysia has reduced the premium (to the Brent benchmark) it charges, so these grades have become attractive. Also, freight cost from Malaysia is less compared to Nigeria, that makes the Malaysian grade cheaper,” said a senior executive at Bharat Petroleum Corp.

Malaysian oil supplies to India last month were the highest in six months, the data showed.

Refiners in India normally buy Malaysian oil through term deals but BPCL recently procured barrels through spot tenders. Shell supplied Malaysian Kikeh and Miti grades to BPCL in October under a deal obtained through a spot tender.

Last month, the Indian refiner for the first time also imported the Russian Sokol grade from Far East Siberia, a crude grade that usually goes to refiners in nearby South Korea and Japan.

Asian shares slip, dollar close to eight-month peak

TOKYO — Asian shares struggled yesterday after a health-care mega-merger failed to impress Wall Street, while the dollar took a breather from its run to 8-month highs on rising conviction that the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates next month.

The mood was expected to carry over into European trading. Financial spreadsbetters predicted Britain’s FTSE 100 FTSE would open down by as much as 0.4 percent, Germany’s DAX .GDAXI would fall as much as 0.4 percent, and France’s CAC 40 .FCH was seen dropping 0.5 percent. MSCT’s broadest index of Asia-Pacific shares outside Japan wavered in and out of positive territory, and was last down 0.2 percent.

Japan’s Nikkei .N225 ended a choppy session with a 0.2 percent gain, after a long weekend. Markets were closed for a national holiday on Monday.

“We’re post Japan Inc earnings now and the focus is back on China where local brokers are talking about market reforms, many of which have direct market impacts, which is important because China is a policy-driven market,” said Gavin Parry, managing director of Parry International Trading.

“There’s also a continued focus on the US Federal Reserve, with a lot of sell-side banter about quantifying what level of rate increase brokers are expecting,” he said. Chinese shares wilted, with the blue chip CSI300 index .CSI300 of the largest listed companies in Shanghai and Shenzhen off session lows but still down 0.2 percent, while and the Shanghai Composite Index SSE. edged down 0.1 percent.

On Monday, Wall Street market losers were Pfizer’s (PFE.N) plan to buy Allergan Plc (AGN.N) in a $160 billion deal quickly drew criticism from politicians as a tax dodge.

“Investors may feel that even if this deal comes through, this will become the last of this sort,” said Yoshinori Shigemi, global market strategist at JPMorgan Asset.

Markets showed no immediate reaction to a worldwide travel alert issued by the US State Department, that warned US citizens of the risks of travelling because of what it described as “increased terrorist threats.”

The dollar index, which tracks the US currency against a basket of major peers, edged down about 0.1 percent to 99.741, after it rose to an 8-month high of 100.00 USD=DXY overnight, within sight of its 12-year peak of 100.39 touched on 13 March.— Reuters

Apple plans to launch Apple Pay in China by February

NEW YORK — Apple Inc plans to launch its mobile payment system Apple Pay in China by early February, the Wall Street Journal reported. The iPhone maker has struck deals recently with China’s big four state-run banks, the newspaper reported late Monday, citing people familiar with the discussions.

When launched, Apple Pay will mainly compete with Alipay, the online payment platform run by Alibaba Holding Group Ltd affiliate Ant Financial, and UnionPay Co, a state-controlled consortium that has a monopoly on all yuan payment cards issued and used in the country.

Apple’s plans could still face regulatory hurdles in China, where banking and e-commerce are overseen by a number of government agencies, WSJ said.

Launched in the United States in October last year, Apple Pay is bringing its payments service to China, the most important market for smartphones.

The company’s sales nearly doubled in Greater China in its fiscal fourth quarter from a year earlier.

The amount Apple could make off such transactions has been a sticking point in negotiations to bring Apple Pay to China, the Journal quoted the people as saying.

It is also not clear how much Apple would charge for transactions made through Apple Pay in China.

The company gets 0.15 percent of all credit card transactions and 0.5 cents per debit transaction in the United States, the paper said.

Apple could not be reached immediately for comment out side regular US business hours.

Dell admits security hole in new laptops

NEW YORK — Major US computer company Dell Inc [DELL.N] said Monday a security hole exists in some of its recently shipped laptops that could make it easy for hackers to access users’ private data.

A pre-installed programme on some newly purchased Dell laptops that can only be removed manually by consumers makes them vulnerable to cyber intrusions that may allow hackers to read encrypted messages and redirect browser traffic to spoof of real websites such as Google or those belonging to a bank, among other attacks.

“The recent situation raised is related to an on-the-fly support certificate intended to provide a faster, easier and more secure customer support experience,” Dell said in a statement to Reuters. “Unfortunately, the certificate introduced an unintended security vulnerability.”

Dell declined to say how many computers or which specific models were affected.

The software began getting installed on laptops in August, according to a spokeswoman.

The company also said future systems would not contain the bug.

Dell said it would provide customers with instructions to permanently remove the certificate by email and on its support website, a process will likely be highly technical.

Dell’s security flaw is similar to a so-called “Superfish” program detected on Lenovo computers earlier this year.— Reuters

Police continue probing possible explosion at Yasukuni Shrine

TOKYO — Japan’s top government spokesman said yesterday that police are continuing to investigate a possible explosion in a public restroom at the war-linked Yasukuni Shrine and the government will not comment on it for the time being.

“The Metropolitan Police Department is currently investigating whether it might have been an act of terrorism, some kind of guerrilla activity, or other kind of incident,” Chief Cabinet Secretary Yoshihide Suga told a press conference. “I would therefore like to refrain from making any further comments.”

According to the MPD, the sound of a blast was heard around 10am Monday in the men’s restroom near the South Gate of the shrine. No injuries were reported in the incident.

Traces of a burned battery case were found in one of the stalls in the restroom, but there were no burn marks on the floor or walls, hence no sign to prove a blast actually occurred, police investigators have said.

Suga said that as the incident occurred shortly after the deadly terrorist attacks in Paris the government is determined to “ensure the safety of the people by building a system of vigilance” so that there would “never be terrorism in our country.”

The shrine is a source of diplomatic friction between Japan and China and South Korea. The two countries see it as a symbol of Japan’s past militarism as it honors convicted war criminals along with millions of war dead.—Kyodo News

7 women killed every day in Mexico: official figures

MEXICO CITY — An average of seven women were killed every day in Mexico during 2013 and 2014, according to figures published Monday by the National Institute of Statistics and Geography (INEGI).

Between 2000 and 2014, 235,000 homicides were registered in the Latin American country, and 11.2 percent of the victims were women, according to INEGI.

The figures were released to coincide with the UN International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women, which falls on 25 November.

The trend for female homicides, especially murders, rose in recent years in Mexico, according to INEGI. In 2010, the number of females murdered in Mexico reached its highest level, with 126 murders per 100,000 inhabitants.

Firearms, sharp objects, hanging, suffocation and strangling were among the ways of killing women between 2000 and 2013, said INEGI.

In 2011, six out of every 10 women aged 15 and above in Mexico admitted having suffered from some sort of violence, while women aged between 30 and 39 are most exposed to violence, with 68 percent of that age group experiencing at least one episode of violence or abuse.

However, there was a gradual decrease in the number of men killed in Mexico, from 10,737 in 2000 to 9,329 in 2004. But the figures reached a peak of 27,213 in 2011 and 25,967 in 2012.—Xinhua

Canada to tell world it’s serious about climate change, says PM

OTTAWA — Canada will tell a green summit next week that it is finally ready to tackle climate change, Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said on Monday after a meeting with the country’s provinces to work out a national strategy.

Trudeau’s Liberals won an election last month promising radical change on the environment from the previous Conservative administration, which was widely criticized for not doing enough to combat global warming during its near decade in power.

Trudeau, who will attend a United Nations environmental summit in Paris next week, says Canada must curb its emissions of greenhouse gases.

“In Paris a united Canada will demonstrate that we are serious about climate change,” Trudeau told a late-night news conference after meeting with premiers of the 10 provinces and three territories.

Alberta, home to most of Canada’s oil sands, said on Sunday in a ground-breaking move that it would implement an economy-wide tax on carbon emissions in 2017.

Trudeau and the provinces hope their united approach and Alberta’s move will help dispel some of the international suspicion about Canada and climate change.

At previous UN summits the Conservative government sometimes found itself openly at odds with activist groups and even some provinces. Those days were over, said Trudeau.

“We need to show a renewed image of Canada to the world,” said Quebec premier Philippe Couillard.

Some premiers are nervous about the idea. Brad Wall of Saskatchewan says Canada must find a balance between the environment and protecting employment.

Low crude prices have triggered major job losses among energy industry workers.

“As we prepare for Paris and to present a constructive and national front to the world, we just need to be mindful of that fact,” he told a closing news conference.

Although the Conservatives had pledged to cut greenhouse gas emissions to 30 percent below 2005 levels by 2030, government figures show rising emissions mean the goal is out of reach.

Trudeau will not be going to Paris with a new target, but has committed to coming up with a goal with the provinces within 90 days of returning from the talks.

Two government scientists told the strategy meeting that Canada’s rate of warming was about twice the global rate.

This means hotter summers with more forest fires, melting permafrost and a smaller Arctic ice cover that will force polar bears onto land as they search for food, they said.—Reuters
US blames pilot error for fatal crash of MV-22 Osprey aircraft

WASHINGTON — The US Marine Corps said Monday that pilot error was the main cause of the fatal crash of an MV-22 tilt-rotor aircraft in Hawaii in May.

“The investigation found the main contributing factors to this mishap were pilot performance and an improper site survey” of the landing zone in Okinawa. The Japanese Self-Defense Forces plan to procure 17 units by the end of March 2019.

“The pilots did not violate any regulations or flight standards” but they should have taken into account factors such as low visibility in the landing zone and chosen a different route and place, the Marine Corps said.

It said that sand and dust kicked up as the aircraft was hovering near the ground caused a stall in the left engine and resulted in a hard landing, which killed two crew members.

Thai PM says two refugees sent back on request from China

BANGKOK — Thai Prime Minister Prayuth Chan-o-cha on Tuesday said two registered refugees were deported to China, at Beijing’s request, after they entered Thailand illegally.

The UN refugee agency said Thailand should not have sent the men back to a country where their lives could be put in danger, and Prayuth said Thailand should not violated mens’ rights were not violated.

“They violated immigration law and after checking we found that there was an arrest warrant from the source country,” Prayuth said, alluding to China.

“They asked us to send them back and we had to send according to procedure,” he added.

“What was said about protection from UNHCR — we did not know about that,” Prayuth said, referring to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

He said China had undertaken to ensure the deported mens’ rights were not violated.

“We told the source country that if they take them they have to look after them and not violate human rights and they gave their word,” Prayuth said.

The Canadian Embassy in Bangkok said it was not in a position to comment on the case.

Thailand deported about 100 Uighur Muslims to China in July, drawing condemnation from the United States and others.

The Uighurs are a Turkic-language speaking group from China’s western Xinjiang region.

Thai immigration officials said the two deported men were not Uighurs.

Thailand’s generals have sought warmer ties with Beijing since seizing power a coup in May, 2014, as the United States had criticised the coup.

On Thursday and Friday, the Chinese and Thai air forces will conduct their first joint exercises. China has said the exercises are aimed at increasing “mutual trust and friendship.”

SUZHOU — Serbian Prime Minister Aleksandar Vucic began a three-day visit to China yesterday by touring the industrial park in the city of Suzhou and bus maker Higer Bus. The Suzhou Industrial Park was founded on 26 February, 1994, when China and Singapore signed the agreement on the joint development of this administrative region. The entire region occupies 288 km2, out of which the area of the China-Singapore cooperation covers 80 km2 with the local population of 1.2 million, the government’s media office said in a release. In the afternoon hours, the Serbian prime minister will attend the Fourth Meeting of Heads of Government of Central and Eastern European Countries (CEECs) at the Taihu International Conference Center in the city of Suzhou.

Bieber tops One Direction on Billboard chart, but Adele on the horizon

LOS ANGELES — Canadian pop star Justin Bieber edged out British boy band One Direction in a battle to the top of the US Billboard 200 album chart on Monday, but his reign will be short-lived as British singer Adele looks to break records with her new release.

“Purpose,” the fourth studio album by Bieber, sold 520,000 albums, 602,000 songs and was streamed 100 million times in its first week, totaling 649,000 units, according to figures from Nielsen SoundScan.

It is Bieber’s best-selling debut in his career so far. One Direction’s “Made in the A.M.” sold 459,000 units in its first week, landing at No. 2.

Adele’s “25,” released on Friday, won’t officially enter the chart until next week, but Billboard said Saturday that the album sold more than 1 million copies in its first week.

Taylor Swift was the last artist to achieve the milestone, with her “1989” album opening with 1.29 million last year.

Both Bieber and One Direction set new streaming records on Spotify last week with their latest albums.

The boy band came away as the big winners at the American Music Awards on Sunday and was one of the night’s top performances, as well as Bieber.

Eight new albums debuted in the top ten of the Billboard 200 chart. Rapper Logic’s “Incredible True Story” debuted at No. 3, rapper Jeezy’s “Church In These Streets” at No. 4 and country artist Chris Young’s “I’m Comin’ Over” at No. 5.

Progressive rock group Trans-Siberian Orchestra’s “Letters from the Labyrinth” debuted at No. 7, Canadian R&B singer Alessia Cara’s “Know-It-All” came in at No. 9 and gospel musician Kirk Franklin’s “Losing My Religion” entered at No. 10.

Last week’s chart-topper, “Traveller” by country artist Chris Stapleton, dropped to No. 6 this week.

LOS ANGELES — HBO's medieval saga “Game of Thrones” is known for serving up graphic deaths of its lead characters, but when fan favourite Jon Snow was killed off, avid followers speculated every theory and sighting that would bring back their heroic soldier.

It looks like they prevailed.

“Game of Thrones” tweeted a teaser poster on Monday with a partial shot of Jon Snow’s rugged, bloodstained face and trademark hair, with the simple caption “APRIL. #GoTSeason6.” The sixth season will air on HBO in April 2016.

It is the first time the TV series has officially acknowledged the future of the character, played by British actor Kit Harington, and the poster sent fans on social media into overdrive. The “Game of Thrones” tweet was shared more than 35,000 times in three hours on Monday and “Jon Snow” became the top Twitter trend.

Emmy-winning “Game of Thrones,” based on George R. R. Martin’s “A Song of Ice and Fire” books, is a sweeping fantasy epic of the battle across seven kingdoms for the Iron Throne. It is HBO’s most-watched series, averaging 20 million viewers per episode this year.

Fan speculation on Jon Snow’s fate has ranged from sightings of Harington on set in Ireland to the actor’s decision not to cut his shoulder-length brown locks, which have become a trademark of his character. Little slips from fellow cast members in interviews have also fueled the fire, but HBO and the show’s creators have enjoyed toying with fans, always avoiding the question and keeping Harington out of fan-events.

Jon Snow, the illegitimate son of Ned Stark (who was beheaded in season one) and Commander of the Night’s Watch, made it through five seasons of “Game of Thrones” before being betrayed by his subjects and stabbed to a seeming death in the penultimate episode that aired in June. Whether Jon Snow is actually alive or dead is still not known in a series that is woven through with dark magic, sorcery and the mysterious “White Walkers,” an army of the undead.
In sign of the times, Arkansas phone booth makes Historic Places list

LITTLE ROCK — In the first such honour for an once ubiquitous, now fast-disappearing feature of the American landscape, a telephone booth has made it to the National Register of Historic Places.

Located across a rural Arkansas highway from the Prairie Grove Civil War Battlefield State Park, about 140 miles (225 km) northwest of Little Rock, the lonely phone booth is among a dwindling number in a country increasingly reliant on cellular communications.

“Surprise is an understatement,” said David Parks, president of the Prairie Grove Telephone Co, which owns the booth.

The aluminum and glass structure, now a relic of a bygone era, features a bifold door and overhead light. It was one of thousands manufactured for the Bell Telephone Co. Few are known to survive.

Installed in the late 1950s, the telephone produces “about $4 a year” for the company at 25 cents per call, Parks said. “It’s not profitable.”

When the booth was heavily damaged by an automobile in the summer of 2014, “My first thought was, ‘We can finally get rid of that thing,’” Parks said with a laugh.

On learning of a social media campaign to save the booth, Arkansas historic preservation officials nominated the structure for inclusion on the national index. It soon became a tourist destination.

After reviewing the state’s analysis of the booth’s construction and its social and cultural value, the National Register approved the nomination. State officials were notified last Friday of the decision.—Reuters

Kansai transport firms offer ‘omotenashi’ hospitality to foreigners

OSAKA — “Omotenashi” hospitality services introduced by transport companies in the Kansai region of western Japan for foreign visitors are increasingly expected to help Japan’s image in the world.

For example, the Tokyo Metropolitan government began an English training programme in April last year because “it is almost impossible for all drivers to learn foreign languages,” a Sakae official said.

But the system helps drivers smoothly take passengers to their destinations.

For example, the Tokyo Metropolitan government began an English training programme in July for volunteers who will give directions to foreign visitors and help them buy train tickets. Participants receive five two-hour lessons to learn practical English.

Some 35,000 Toyoites and other citizens are expected to take part in the programme by 2019, according to the metropolitan government.

Visitors feel good if they are spoken to by friendly local people,” an official in charge said. “Everyone can give good service to visitors anywhere on the street.”—Kyodo News

‘Wizard of Oz’ dress fetches over $1.5m at auction

NEW YORK — The blue gingham dress worn by Judy Garland in the 1939 movie “The Wizard of Oz” sold for $1.56 million at an auction in New York on Monday.

The pinafone, one of 10 thought to have been made for Garland in her role as Dorothy in the movie, had been estimated by Bonhams auction house to fetch between $800,000 and $1.2 million at its Hollywood memorabilia sale held in conjunction with Turner Classic Movies.

Described as bearing sweat stains around the neck but in good condition, the costume was believed to be one of only two such pinafones that Garland actually wore on-screen for the classic musical. It was sold to an unidentified buyer bidding by telephone.

The final price for the dress, made by MGM’s famous costume designer, Adrian, was $1,565,000 including commission. Officials said they were pleasantly surprised by the final price.

“That great piece should bring a lot of money,” Catherine Williamson, Bonhams’ director of entertainment memorabilia, said after the hammer fell.

Prices of famous memorabilia have soared in recent years. Just a year ago, the Cowardly Lion costume worn in the movie by actor Bert Lahr, including the sculpted likeness of Lahr’s face, sold for almost $3.1 million at Bonhams. The same “Oz” dress was last sold in 2012 at auction for $490,000, after first having been consigned and sold in 1981 by Kent Warner, an MGM costume designer who assisted with the landmark 1970 MGM studio auction.—Reuters

Srieth back in Sydney to defend title that sparked golden year

SYDNEY — World number one Jordan Srieth returns to the course where he rediscovered the art of winning last year to defend the Australian Open ti- tle he clinched with a quite bril- liant final round.

The American arrived in Sydney last November ranked 146th in the world with just one US PGA title to his name but shot a course record 63 to beat Rory McIlroy and Adam Scott, then the top two in the world, and secure the Stonehaven Cup.

It triggered a year in which everything the 22-year-old Texan touched seemed to turn gold as he captured his two majors at the US Masters and US Open and won the Tour Championship to sew up the Fedex Series. “I didn’t think it would launch that type of thing,” Srieth told reporters at The Australian Golf Club on Monday. “But in that Sunday round I really learned how to close in my head. I played one of the best rounds of my life when I really needed it.”

“I really had that mental edge over the weekend to re- ally close the deal. I had it for my whole life but I had lost it for a while. Winning here re- ally launched it.” Despite his remarkable year, Srieth still believes he can get better.

“If I could somehow duplic- ate that year for the rest of my career, I’d be pretty pleased,” he conceded. “But there’s a chance it could all come to- gether and we could improve on the last year. I have to be- lieve that, but I do believe it.”

The championship was or- ganised by the Myanmar Judo Federation with the assistance of the Japanese Embassy in Yan- gon.

LONDON — Chelsea’s acade- my players should fight to break into the first team, manager Jose Mourinho has said, while defend- ing the way in which he is using the youngsters.

The Blues, who currently have 33 players out on loan, have had many young players under contract in recent years, most of whom were out on loan and were eventually sold, and 34-year-old John Terry is the last academy graduate to win a regular place at Stamford Bridge.

Mourinho, who is expected to name an experienced team for Tuesday’s Champions League clash against Maccabi Tel-Aviv, said 19-year-old Ruben Lo- tur-Cheek has to do more to get regular game time. “Sometimes young players can argue that the chances were not too many for them. Ruben is the last one who can complain about that,” Mour- inho told a news conference on Monday.

“He is a player who we have lots of hope for but, sooner or lat- er, he — him, not me — has to give one step forward to be more stable in the first team. “It’s easi- er to get chances in smaller clubs. At big clubs, not many players his age have the opportunities he has had to start matches in the Premier League, Champions League and the cups, to be on the bench for lots of matches consecutively, liv- ing and learning with top players. “So he is having everything.”

Mourinho also dismissed suggestions he neglects his acade- my players in his starting line-ups and highlighted the emergence of 21-year-old Kurt Zouma as proof that the Blues do give a chance to their young players. “In the first- team squad we have seven under-21 players who have 26 starts and 12 substitute appearances this season, and 43 appearances on the bench (when they were) not used,” Mourinho said. “Zouma is in his second season at this level and is un- leaning himself as a top player. When he came here, he was not the player he is now.”

“I remember the first two matches he played for us in pre-season in 2014. He was very bad. But now he is a player, fight- ing with Terry and (Gary) Cahill hand to hand.”— Reuters
