Blue Plaque unveiled at Maha Bandoola Park

MAHA Bandoola Park, which is located in Kyauktada Township between the Maha Bandoola Road and Merchant Road, received a Blue Plaque from the Yangon Heritage Trust yesterday in recognition of its importance as one of the city’s architectural landmarks.

The Blue Plaque is the tenth that the Trust has granted in the city, following the Government Technical Institute (GTI) and the Lawkanat Building.

The park has played a critical role in the history of the city and is also important to residents. It is adjacent to the famous Sule Pagoda and faces Yangon City Hall.

The park has long been a venue for cultural performances and public gatherings. It has also been associated with political movements since colonial times.

National leaders, including Bogyoke Aung San, campaigned in the park for independence from the British Empire.

After Myanmar’s independence, the site and the surrounding area were the epicentre of democratic movements such as the 8888 Uprising and Saffron Revolution in 2007.

When the British planned the city in 1852, the site was left vacant and known as Tank Square. In 1867-68, the swampy square was levelled and laid out as a public recreation ground.

It was named after Fytche Square, the Chief Commissioner of the British Crown Colony of Burma at the time. The park was redesigned in 2012 by the Yangon City Development Council. The Royal Philips Corporation installed modern lighting fixtures in the park.

The entrance fee has dropped, and a much-needed children’s playground has also been added. The park has become a popular destination for international visitors and city residents alike.

Other sites that have received Blue Plaques include the Government Central Press, the Myanma Agricultural Development Bank, the General Post Office, the Central Fire Station, the Armenian Church, the headquarters of AYA Bank and Yangon City Hall.—GNLM

Tamoatshinpin Shwegugyi Pagoda complex designated Ancient Monument Zone

THE Tamoatshinpin Shwegugyi Pagoda complex in Kyaukse Township, Mandalay Region, was designated an Ancient Monument Zone on 11 December by the Ministry of Culture. The zone is located in the township’s Kyaungpankone Village Tract.

The designation was made according to Section 4(A) of the 1998 Cultural Sites Protection and Preservation Act, said an official from the Department of Archaeology and the National Museum’s Mandalay office.

“We have sought the approval from the pagoda’s Board of Trustees. The designation will accelerate the preservation and development of the religious area,” he added.

The pagoda is one of the nine cave pagodas built by King Anawratha along the Panlong River in the early 11th century, during the early Bagan Period. In late 12th century, King Narapatisithu encased the original cave pagoda in a larger pagoda.

In 1322 AD, during the Pinya Period, King Usan that re-encased and enlarged the pagoda. But since then, the ancient cave pagoda has not been preserved for centuries. Severe weather deteriorated the pagoda, and the neglected 13.62-acre complex housing the pagoda has overgrown with bushes.

The pagoda was re-discovered in 1990 by Venerable Abbot Sandawbatha, while he was clearing the bushes. Under his supervision, the local community began preservation work of the pagoda.—Min Htet Aung

SC says no power to extend sentence of Delhi gang rape convict

NEW DELHI — The Supreme Court said yesterday it had no power to detain the youngest of the men convicted of the 2012 gang rape of a woman on a bus in New Delhi in a case that shocked the nation, a day after he was released after three years in custody.

The attack turned a global spotlight on the treatment of women in India, where police say a rape is reported every 20 minutes, and the sentence for the young man sparked debate over whether the country is too soft on young offenders.

India’s top court was hearing a petition from the Delhi Commission For Women demanding a longer sentence for the man, who was 17 at the time of the crime. He had received the maximum punishment of three years from the Juvenile Justice Board.

“Everything had happened in accordance with the law,” the two judges said in their ruling. “We need legislative sanctions” to take any action, they said.

In 2012, the man and five adult companions lured the 23-year-old trainee physiotherapist and her male friend onto a bus in Delhi, where they repeatedly raped the woman and beat her with a metal bar before dumping them on a road.

The woman died two weeks later of her injuries. Four of the adults were sentenced to death while the fifth hanged himself in prison. The death sentences have not been carried out. Police accused the teenager of being violent, and said he pulled out part of the woman’s intestines with his hands.

Ashok Verma, one of her lawyers, declined to comment.

Philippines vows stronger military to back South China Sea claim

CLARK FIELD — Philippine President Benigno Aquino vowed yesterday to leave behind a stronger and a more capable armed forces to face maritime challenges in the South China Sea when he leaves office next year.

Aquino, ineligible to run for re-election under the constitution, promised to spend about $83.90 billion pesos (P1.77 billion) in a five-year period until 2017 to strengthen the military as China asserts its claims to most of the waters.

The spending plan was only approved this year, meaning the bulk of that money will be spent in coming months.

“We’re planning to acquire new frigates, strategic sealift vessels, long-range patrol and close air support aircraft and other equipment,” Aquino said at the 80th anniversary of the armed forces.

He did not mention the South China Sea dispute specifically, but the equipment has been earmarked by the military to defend Philippine territorial rights.

“I have personally witnessed how the military grew stronger and more effective in preserving peace and stability, the key in building confidence in the Philippines.”

The strategic sealift vessel, being built in an Indonesian shipyard, will be delivered early next year and the Israeli-made radar will be completed by 2017, the same time all the fighters from South Korea are delivered.

He said the United States and Japan were helping develop capacity and capability as “some countries” in Asia have been increasing defence spending amid rising tension in the South China Sea.

China has overlapping claims with Vietnam, the Philippinies, Malaysia, Taiwan and Brunei in the South China Sea, through which $5 trillion in shipborne trade passes every year.

China’s Shenzhen warned of waste problem a year before disaster

BEIJING — Over a year ago, a government-run newspaper warned that a booming town in southern China would run out of space to dump the waste left behind from a building frenzy.

On Sunday, a mountain of mud and construction waste collapsed at an industrial park in Shenzhen, the rapidly growing town next to the border with Hong Kong, burying 33 buildings and leaving nearly 100 people missing.

Besides new buildings, a network of subway lines is being built in Shenzhen, and mounds of earth are being excavated and dumped at waste sites.

The official Shenzhen Evening Post, published by the city government, quoted an unnamed official as saying in October last year that choosing somewhere to locate these dumps was becoming “exceedingly difficult” and that it was “the only thing” on his mind.

“Shenzhen has 12 waste sites and they can only hold out until next year (2015),” the newspaper said.

The frequency of industrial accidents in China has raised questions about safety standards following three decades of breakneck growth in the world’s second-largest economy.

Provincial authorities sent a team to investigate the Shenzhen mudslide, the Ministry of Land Resources said.

The amount of mud and waste at the site was immense and was stacked too steeply, “causing instability and collapse, resulting in the collapse of buildings”, the ministry said in a statement.

Fan Xiao, a senior engineer at the government-linked Sichuan Geology and Mineral Bureau, said such risks from man-made mountains were prevalent nationwide, especially as China also has many slag heaps from the mining industry.

“Shenzhen is a modern city after all; ultimately its management standards are pretty high. It is possible something went wrong,” he said.

But workers said it continued to take waste mud, the report added.

Shenzhen media has reported several times in the past few years that companies were illegally dumping construction waste as the legal dumps were all full.

The Shenzhen government did not respond to requests for comment.

Another local newspaper, the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone Daily, said companies were becoming so desperate that building goods once used to farm fish were being filled by building waste, though low-lying land and mountain hollows were preferred. Such dump sites were of ten forced through despite opposition by residents, media reports said.

China warns countries to stay out of Papua issue

SYDNEY — Indonesia has given other countries a stern warning to respect its sovereignty and stay away from controversial issues surrounding its Papua territory.

It is alleged the Indonesian authorities have committed numerous counts against the separatist movement since the country took independence from the Dutch in 1963. Meanwhile the local population continually complain the wealth generated from the resources region flows to the wealthy elite in Jakarta while Papuans remain poor.

West Papua hosts the world’s largest gold and the third largest copper deposits, one of the joint ventures between mining giants Rio Tinto (40 percent) and US based Freeport-McMoRan Inc. The Grasberg mine is seeking to transition from open pit to underground mining in late 2017, ramping up production to process approximately 240,000 tonnes of ore daily if its contract extension with the Indonesian government is granted.

Indonesia’s defence minister Ryamizard Ryacudu told reporters in Sydney yesterday that the island nation had never disputed claims made by other countries on their territorial sovereignty and expected the same regarding Papua.

“There are countries that are getting involved in the issue of Papua. For us, Papua is (part) of the united Republic of Indonesia. The united Republic of Indonesia extends from Sabang (in Sumatra) to Papua. There is no other solution, that’s it, that’s the way it is,” Ryacudu said in Sydney.

Ryacudu was in Sydney on Monday with Indonesian foreign minister Retno Marsudji for a 2+2 bilateral meeting on defence, national security including counter terrorism and economic issues with Australian foreign minister Julie Bishop and defence minister Marise Payne.

Bishop confirmed the Papua issue was raised in the meeting, along with a host of other regional issues, restating “as we have done on many occasions, publicly and privately, our unconditional support and respect for Indonesia’s sovereignty in this regards.”

Bishop also insisted relations between Australia and Indonesia are in good shape following a diplomatic dispute between the two countries on the execution of convicted drug smugglers Andrew Chan and Myuran Sukumaran and the controversial boat turn back policy.

“We have shared common interests across a broad and diverse range of areas,” Bishop told reporters at the end of the dialogue.

Second man involved in Shangri-La shooting incident gets 7 year’s jail, caning

SINGAPORE — One of the three men involved in Shangri-La shooting incident in May this year was given seven years’ jail and three strokes of the cane for drug offences, local media reported yesterday.

Muhammad Syahid Mohamad Yasin admitted to abetting the rash act, and pleaded guilty to three drug-related charges.

Sitting at the rear left passenger seat, the man instigated the driver, Mohammad Rafiul Zahir, to do a rash act to endanger the personal safety of two police officers by shouting “Jalan! Jalan!” (Go! Go!) in Malay on the early morning of 31 May.

The car crashed into the concrete barrier beside the police car, pushed the barrier aside and drove through. Police opened fire on the vehicle, and the car later came to a stop. Taufik died on the spot.

Syahid and the other passenger, Mohamed Ismail, were arrested at the scene on that day. The urine test results of both men later revealed they had also consumed drugs.

Ismail was sentenced to eight years’ jail and three strokes of the cane for drug trafficking in June this year.

Syahid committed the present offences about a year after his previous conviction for drug-related offences, said the Straits Times.

Brother of returnee criticizes Abe’s policy on abduction issue

TOKYO — Prime Minister Shinzo Abe’s current policy on the issue of North Korea’s abductions of Japanese citizens is ineffective in resolving the decades-old problem, Toru Hasuike, brother of abduction victim Kaoru Hasuike, said yesterday.

“Prime Minister Abe has risen to his post by depicting himself as a hard-liner toward North Korea but no progress has been made recently,” he said.

Hasuike, who recently published a book titled “Shinzo Abe and the Cold-Blooded People Who Abandoned the North Korea Abduction Victims to Die,” said that although Abe repeatedly says Japan wishes to explore “every possible way” to solve the issue, “the Japanese government has no concrete strategy.”

Abe, who has been serving as prime minister for the second time since December 2012, has said that he would resolve the abduction issue while in office, and set up a special ministerial task force.

Japan officially lists 17 nations as having been abducted by North Korean agents in the 1970s and 1980s, but suspects North Korea’s involvement in many more disappearances. Five of the 17, including Kaoru, were repatriated in 2002, while Pyongyang claims eight have died and four others never entered the country.

Japan has been urging North Korea to report the outcome of its fresh probe into the whereabouts of all Japanese residing in the country, as stipulated under a bilateral agreement. But no tangible progress has been reported so far.

The abduction issue has prevented the two countries from normalizing diplomatic relations.

Hasuike added that to move the issue forward, Abe must define exactly what is meant by a true “resolution” — whether all 12 officially recognized abductees must be brought back to Japan or have their whereabouts confirmed, or whether the abduction issue should be expanded to include nearly 900 non-Japanese people suspected of having been abducted by North Korea.

“Once the definition of the resolution is clarified, Japan can negotiate toward a true agreement with North Korea,” said Hasuike, who is also the former vice representative of the Association of the Families of Victims Kidnapped by North Korea.

“With no progress made, I am worried that the issue will be forgotten in Japan. The abduction victims and their families are getting older and there is simply no more time left,” said Hasuike.—Kyodo News

China calls on John Kerry to respect China’s core interests

BEIJING — The United States needs to respect China’s core interests, including stopping selling weapons to Taiwan and ending military patrols close to islands controlled by China in the South China Sea, the country’s foreign minister told his US counterpart in a telephone call with US Secretary of State John Kerry.

Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi said the world is becoming a more challenging place, according to a Chinese Foreign Ministry statement released yesterday.

“As the US seeks cooperation with China, it ought to respect China’s core interests and important matters of concern,” the statement paraphrased Wang as saying.

Wang explained to Kerry China’s position on Taiwan and the South China Sea, asking the United States to end arms sales to Taiwan.

The US angered China last week by approving a new round of weapons sales to Taiwan.

EU border agency warns of risks from fake passports

BERLIN — The head of the European Union’s border agency has said the large number of refugees entering Europe poses a security risk, with civil war making it harder to check the authenticity of Syrian passports.

Hundreds of thousands of people fleeing war and poverty in countries such as Syria and Iraq have arrived in Europe this year. Since last month’s attacks in Paris, concern has grown that Islamist militants could enter undetected among the influx.

“The big inflows of people who are currently entering Europe unchecked are of course a security risk,” Frontex head Fabrice Leggeri told German newspaper Welt am Sonntag, though he also said it would be wrong to regard all refugees as “potential terrorists.”

In Paris, a Syrian passport was found near the dead body of one of the attackers and his fingerprints matched those of a person registered as arriving in October in Greece, the main entry point for refugees and migrants.

Leggeri said that in a country going through civil war like Syria no one could guarantee that “the documents that look real are really issued by an official authority or are really being carried by their rightful owner.”

Diplomats said earlier this month European countries have circulated a watch list of missing Syrian and Iraqi passports they fear could be filled with false data and used by people to travel to Europe and beyond. Such documents are harder to identify than outright fakes.

One diplomat said the list contained serial numbers of thousands of genuine blank passports that were held in government offices in parts of Syria and Iraq that have since been captured by armed groups including Islamic State.

Welt am Sonntag said that according to Western intelligence services, Islamic State militants had probably procured tens of thousands of real passports after taking control of local authorities in parts of Syria, Iraq and Libya.

They may also have seized machines used to produce identity documents.

The newspaper said, without specifying its sources, that Islamic State was doing a brisk trade in the passports, which they sell for between 1,000 and 1,500 dollars on the black market.—Reuters

German legal experts say refugee cap would be ‘problematic’

BERLIN — Legal experts at Germany’s lower house of parliament have serious doubts about the legality of introducing a cap on refugee numbers, according to a document obtained by German broadcaster ARD.

German Chancellor Angela Merkel’s Christian Democratic Union (CDU) and their Bavarian allies, the Christian Social Union (CSU), have been embroiled in a dispute over the idea for weeks.

Merkel has resisted calls by many refugees heading to Germany, and has said that the right to asylum for people suffering from political persecution cannot be limited.

But Horst Seehofer, leader of the CSU which governs the federal state of Bavaria where many refugees head, has called for limits to be placed on migrant inflows.

Legal experts at Germany’s Bundestag lower house, who provide independent views, found that EU asylum and refugee laws did not provide for any numerical limit being placed on people seeking protection, the report said.

They said that on this issue EU legal guidelines generally override national laws.

A European-wide cap on the number of refugees would be “problematic” and would only be imaginable if the people granted refugee status under the Geneva convention were sent to safe third countries upon being rejected, ARD said, citing the report.

But the legal experts said it was “extremely doubtful” whether deporting and rejecting refugees could be justified by saying a cap would otherwise be exceeded, ARD said.—Reuters

Suicide bomber kills five in attack on US-Afghan patrol

KABUL — A suicide bomber on a motorcycle attacked a joint US-Afghan patrol near Bagram air base in Afghanistan yesterday, killing five soldiers and wounding six, Bagram District Governor Abdul Shukur Qudusi said.

In a tweet, Taliban spokesman Zabihullah Mujahid claimed responsibility and said 19 US soldiers had been killed and a number wounded.

NATO headquarters in Kabul confirmed there had been a vehicle-borne improvised explosive device attack near Bagram Air Base and said it was under investigation.

The police chief of Parwan province said three Afghan police had been wounded in the attack. He said he was not authorized to give details on foreign troop casualties. Chile’s airports to resume normal operations as strike ends

SANTIAGO — Chile’s Defence Minister said the government and workers tied to the civil aviation authority reached an agreement Sunday ending a four-day strike that forced airlines to cancel hundreds of flights and left thousands of passengers stranded.

“We want say to all the Chileans who were affected (by the strike) that we deeply regret this situation, that we will go the extra mile together with the airlines, with all of our staff and also with workers from the civil aviation authority to reverse this situation,” said Defence Minister Jose Antonio Gomez.

LAN, Chile’s flagship airline and part of LATAM Airlines, had said earlier on Sunday that domestically, it was only flying from Chile’s capital Santiago to Punta Arenas, Temuco and Calama, affecting 80 percent of its flights. “Due to the end of the strike, LAN will resume operation of all its flights within Chile in the coming hours,” the carrier said.—Reuters

News in Brief

Suicide bomber kills five in attack on US-Afghan patrol
As a result, people try to drive out animosity from their hearts and minds and learn to befriend their enemies. However, the root cause of animosity lies outside of individual people. In any community, what pits people against each other is conflicting class interests. In turning enemies into friends, it is often necessary to make a bargain on class interests. Unfortunately, some interests of certain social classes are non-negotiable, and no one has the means to bargain on them. Therefore, people try to bargain with the interests of different social classes are often accused of being traitors to their communities, with detractors claiming they betray the interests of their own social class and ally social classes.

Therefore, turning enemies into friends may also lead to turning some friends into enemies. The most important point of all is not to turn the majority of people into one’s foes and not to turn oneself into the enemy of one’s friends.

Vitamin C. Raw honey is rich in vitamin C. Medicinal experts believe Vitamin C to be one of the most effective vitamin available today to boost up the immune system, helping to protect the body from infection and disease. Vitamin C is also good for skin and can be topically absorbed. It means that raw honey can be smoothened onto the skin as a face cleaner and can also ease topical system such as burns, rashes and dry skin.

Vitamin B6. Raw honey also has a high Vitamin B6 content. This vitamin is important to human body and it is involved in chemical reaction that takes place each minute. Vitamin B6 is actually of three different vitamins. Pyridoxine, Pyridoxal and Pydioxide. This combination works in tandem with enzymes within the body to ensure that your body’s metabolism is functioning properly.

Vitamin B1. Vitamin B 3 or Niacin is also found in raw honey. Niacin can help reduce levels of bad cholesterol or LDL (low density of lipoprotein), and also increase levels of beneficial cholesterol or HDL (high density of lipoprotein).

Vitamin B2. Raw honey contains Vitamin B 2, also known as riboflavin. Riboflavin is a water soluble vitamin that helps to fuel the body’s energy by converting carbohydrates into sugar, it also helps with the breakdown of fats and amino-acids.

Vitamin B1. Vitamin B 1 or thiamin is also present in raw honey. Thiamin helps breakdown carbohydrate to fuel the body. It also neutralizes free radical which can be compromise the immune system and speed up the aging process.

Vitamin B5. Raw honey contains Vitamin B 5 or pantothenic acid. Vitamin B 5 is present in your blood plasma where it maintains the balance of hormones and keeps nervous system in top condition. As vitamins are essential to the health of the human body taking raw honey regularly is like injecting a full vitamins dose to the human body in order to supplement the imbalances of vitamin deficiency.

Suspected Russian warplanes kill scores in Syrian city

BEIRUT — Air strikes believed to have been carried out by Russian warplanes killed scores of people in the centre of the rebel-held city of Idlib in northwest Syria on Sunday, rescue workers and residents said.

They said at least six strikes had hit a busy market place in the heart of the city, several government buildings and residential areas. Rescue workers said they had confirmed 43 dead but that at least 30 more bodies had been retrieved that had still to be identified. Over 150 people were wounded with some of the serious cases sent to hospitals in Turkey.

"There are a lot of corpses under the rubble," Yasser Hammo, a civil defence worker, said via an Internet messaging system, adding that volunteers and civil defence workers were still pulling bodies out.

Footage on social media and the pro-opposition Orient TV station showed makeshift ambulances rushing with injured civilians through an area where people were searching for survivors among the debris of collapsed buildings.

One local resident, Sameh al-Muazin, said he had seen mangled bodies in the main Jalaas street of the city, adding that people feared a further round of intensive bombing.

"Everyone is afraid that this is just the beginning," he said.

Idlib, the capital of a northwestern province of the same name, became an important centre for rebel-controlled northwest Syria after it was captured earlier this year by a coalition of Islamist insurgent groups known as Jaish al-Fateh which includes al Qaeda’s Syrian wing Nuair Front.

Russia began a major aerial campaign on Sept. 30 in support of Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, its ally, who earlier in the year suffered a series of setbacks including the loss of Idlib province and other areas of crucial strategic importance.

Moscow says its air strikes target Islamic State militants but rebels and residents say they are causing hundreds of civilian casualties through indiscriminate bombing well away from the frontlines.

Residents say they distinguish Russian planes that fly at high altitudes in sorties from Syrian helicopters that mainly drop indiscriminate barrel bombs at much lower heights.

Idlib city has been largely spared the intensified aerial bombing campaign witnessed in rural areas after a United Nations-brokered ceasefire deal was reached in September.

The deal allowed for the withdrawal of rebel fighters holed up in a border village near Lebanon in return for the evacuation of civilians from two Shi’ite towns of Kefraya and al-Foua under rebel siege in Idlib Province.— Reuters

Clinton backs Obama’s Islamic State strategy in Democratic debate

MANCHESTER — US Democratic presidential front-runner Hillary Clinton backed elements of President Barack Obama’s strategy to fight Islamic State militants in a debate on Saturday, drawing criticism from all sides for saying "we now finally are where we need to be" in Syria.

Top rival Bernie Sanders accused Clinton of being too quick to push for regime change, while Republican candidate Carly Fiorina, said the former secretary of state was too willing to cede US policy to other countries.

The debate was the Democrats’ first since the deadly 2 December attack by a pair of radicalised Muslims in San Bernardino, California, which along with the November attacks in Paris elevated national security to the top of the campaign agenda.

Obama has relied heavily on US air strikes against Islamic State targets in Syria and Iraq, and has deployed dozens of special operations troops to northern Syria to advise opposition forces. In Iraq, about 3,500 US troops are assisting Iraqi forces.

Like Obama, Clinton backs the use of special forces but says a large deployment of US ground forces in the Middle East would be counterproductive.

“We now finally are where we need to be. We have a strategy and a commitment to go after ISIS,” she said, noting a UN Security Council resolution had brought “the world together to go after a political transition in Syria.”

That drew a quick response from Republican candidates, who seized the opportunity to tie Clinton to a Syria strategy that has yielded few tangible gains to date.

Fiorina, a former technology executive, said Clinton, a former state secretary, and other Democrats “benefit ISIS,” the Vermont senator said.

“We could get rid of Assad tomorrow, but that would create another political vacuum that would benefit ISIS,” the Vermont senator said.

Since the start of the conflict in 2011, the Obama administration has applied diplomatic pressure to push Assad out of office but has stopped short of military attacks against his regime. Clinton backs that approach, but has struck a more hawkish tone in other areas. She has called for more airstrikes in a greater use of special-operations ground forces and supports setting up a no-fly zone.

Obama says enforcing a no-fly zone would require aircraft and other assets that could be better deployed directly against Islamic State.— Reuters
Asia stocks rise on China surge, oil plumes to 11-year low

SINGAPORE — Chinese shares led Asian markets higher yesterday, defying a dive on Wall Street, while the price of Brent crude plunged 11-year lows on renewed worries over a global oil glut.

European shares are unlikely to follow Asia’s example, with spreads betters expecting Britain’s FTSE 100 and France’s CAC40 to open down about 0.6 percent, and Germany’s DAX to start the day 0.5 percent lower.

Brent crude futures slumped as low as $36.17 a barrel, the lowest since 2004 as production around the world remained at or near record highs, and a strong dollar following last week’s US rate increases weighed on demand.

They were 1.3 percent lower at $36.41 as of 0620 GMT while US crude slid 24 cents to $34.49 a barrel, close to Friday’s 2015 lows.

Amid thin trading in a holiday-heavy week, MSCI’s broadest index of Asia-Pacific shares outside Japan extended gains to 0.3 percent, as investors bid up modestly priced Chinese blue-chips.

China’s CSI300 index surged 2.9 percent and the Shanghai Composite jumped 2 percent. Hong Kong’s Hang Seng rode the Chinese market’s coattails to climb 0.4 percent.

“As we head into the final two weeks of the year, the limited year-end liquidity will be something to keep a watch on,” Bernard Aw, market strategist at IG in Singapore, wrote in a note.

“The market took a hit late Friday after the Bank of Japan announced some changes to its massive stimulus programme but stopped short of expanding the net amount of assets it buys, disappointing some who had hoped for a more aggressive move.

That in turn sent the yen broadly higher and caused some wild swings against the dollar. The dollar was down at 121.32 yen after touching 123.58 on Friday.

The dollar slipped 0.1 percent to 98.619 against a basket of currencies amid very light trade, and the euro rose 0.1 percent to $1.0877.

Wall Street also had a volatile end to the week with the expiration of stock and index options contracts generating heavy trading volume.

The Dow ended Friday down 2.1 percent, while the S&P 500 lost 1.78 percent and the Nasdaq 1.59 percent. For the week, the Dow fell 0.8 percent, the S&P 500 0.3 percent and the Nasdaq 0.2 percent.

The flight from stocks was a boon for safe-haven bonds. Longer-dated Treasuries have been particularly popular as investors wager the Federal Reserve is well ahead of the curve on inflation after last week’s rate hike.

Gold also benefited from the weakness in equity markets. The metal retained sharp gains from the previous trading session, recouping some losses from last week’s US interest rate hike.

Spot gold climbed to $1,069.26, building on the 1.4 percent gain seen in the previous session.

Other commodities however didn’t fare as well. London copper edged back as weak demand outweighed news that China’s smelters are considering deeper production cuts.

Three-month copper was steady at $6,682.50 a tonne, hovering near the 6 3/2 year lows seen in November.

The global background is one of disinflation given the weakness in oil and other commodity prices and the mounting spare capacity in major exporters such as China.

Inflation expectations for five years ahead have taken a marked turn lower this month, dropping to 2.11 percent from a high of 2.24 percent.

The resulting rally in longer-dated Treasuries has flattened the yield curve with the gap between two-year and 10-year paper shrinking to 123 basis points, the smallest since early February.

A flatter curve is bad news for bank profits since they essentially make money from borrowing short and lending long, and could be one reason US bank stocks fell hard late last week. Financial stocks were the worst-performing S&P sector on Friday.—Reuters

Toshiba to cut 7,000 jobs in PC and TV units, sees full-year loss

TOKYO — Japan’s Toshiba Corp yesterday said it will cut nearly 7,000 consumer electronics jobs after a $1.3 billion accounting scandal, in an overhaul that will streamline the sprawling conglomerate into a company focused on chips and nuclear energy.

Toshiba also said it would sell its television manufacturing plant in Indonesia, and that eventual job cuts spanning the entire PC-to-nuclear company could be over 10,000 including previously announced cuts and those seeking voluntary early retirement.

Due to restructuring costs, which include the sale of its Indonesian TV plant, Toshiba said it expected a net loss of around 550 billion yen ($4.53 billion) in this fiscal year ending in March.

“By implementing this plan, we would like to regain the trust of all stakeholders including shareholders and transform ourselves into a robust business,” it said in a statement.

Toshiba confirmed in August that it overstated profits going back to fiscal 2008/09 by 155 billion yen. It also reported a 37.8 billion yen net loss for the last financial year to reflect more conservative estimates on operations, including the South Texas Project, a US power plant project.

An independent accounting probe said in July that the company suffered from dysfunction in governance and a culture of discouraging employees from questioning their superiors.

Toshiba’s stock has fallen about 40 percent since news of its accounting problems began to emerge in March, dropping 15 percent in the previous trading session, recouping some losses from last week’s US interest rate hike.

The Dow ended Friday down 2.1 percent, while the S&P 500 lost 1.78 percent and the Nasdaq 1.59 percent. For the week, the Dow fell 0.8 percent, the S&P 500 0.3 percent and the Nasdaq 0.2 percent.

Ericsson and Apple sign patent license agreement, settle litigation

STOCKHOLM — Swedish telecom equipment maker Ericsson (ERIC.ST) on Monday said it has signed a patent license agreement with Apple Inc (AAPL.O) but did not specify how much it would earn from the deal.

Ericsson estimated however that its overall revenues from intellectual property rights in 2015 would hit 13-14 billion Swedish crowns ($1.52-$1.64 billion), including positive effects from the settlement with Apple, up from 9.9 billion in 2014.

Last January, Ericsson filed a complaint against Apple over mobile technology license payments, responding to a lawsuit from the iPhone maker earlier that month. Analysts had earlier estimated that if the dispute with Apple went Ericsson’s way, the US firm would have to pay it between 2-6 billion Swedish crowns annually, based on estimates of levels of handset sales and royalty payments per phone.—Reuters

Flipkart denies media report of Accel selling $100 million stake

MUMBAI — Flipkart yesterday denied a newspaper report that said venture capital firm Accel Partners had sold a small stake in India’s biggest online marketplace to sovereign wealth fund Qatar Investment Authority (QIA) for $100 million.

“This information is incorrect. There has been no such transaction,” a Flipkart spokesman told Reuters in an emailed statement.

The Economic Times newspaper earlier on Monday reported the deal, citing two people aware of the transaction, and said the deal valued the Indian online retailer at $15 billion.

Accel, the first venture investor in Flipkart, remains the second-largest shareholder after New York-based hedge fund Tiger Global Management following the deal, the Economic Times reported.

Miss Universe host announces wrong winner before Miss Philippines crowned

LAS VEGAS — The host of the Miss Universe pageant mistakenly announced the wrong winner on Sunday, who then had to give up the crown and hand it over to a 26-year-old actress and model from the Philippines.

It was the first edition of the annual beauty show since it was thrust into controversy when then co-owner and US presidential candidate, Donald Trump, made disparaging remarks about immigrants.

Host Steve Harvey incorrectly announced that Miss Colombia had won the 64th edition of the contest, broadcast live on the Fox television network.

The eventual winner, Pia Alonzo Wurtzbach, a Filipino-German actress and model born in Stuttgart and raised in Cagayan de Oro, was initially runner-up.

But then Harvey announced to the audience that he had made a gaffe.

Ariadna Gutierrez Arévalo, 21, of Sincelejo, Colombia, had already been crowned by Miss Universe of 2014, Paulina Vega of Barranquilla, Colombia, who was forced to remove the crown and give it to Miss Philippines. Olivia Jordan, 27, of Tulsa, Oklahoma, finished third.

“I’d like to apologize wholeheartedly to Miss Colombia and Miss Philippines for my huge mistake,” Harvey said on Twitter. “I feel terrible.”

Wurtzbach appeared to take the blunder in her stride.

“It’s a very non-traditional crowning moment,” she said backstage afterward in a video clip of a conversation with Miss USA posted by the Miss Universe pageant on its Twitter feed.

“It is very 2015.”

Earlier, when asked why she wanted to be Miss Universe, Wurtzbach said: “I will use my voice to influence the youth and I would raise awareness to certain causes like HIV awareness, that is timely and relevant to my country.”

It was the first Miss Universe title for a contestant from the Philippines in more than 40 years.

Minutes before the pageant ended, a vehicle drove up onto a sidewalk near the Planet Hollywood Resort & Casino in Las Vegas, Nevada, where it was held and plowed into pedestrians, killing one person and injuring at least 36, officials said.

Las Vegas authorities said they were trying to determine whether the driver, a woman who was detained, drove onto the sidewalk intentionally or due to impairment.

Among the notable moments of the pageant, Flora Coquerel of France, who was at the Paris stadium the night of the November attacks by militants, reached the final five and Ariana Miyamoto of Japan, whose father is Afro-Can-American, reached the last 10.

Miyamoto’s height of 1.73 m (5.7 ft) and bronze skin are unusual in Japan and her selection to represent Japan created an online firestorm in her native country.

For the first time, viewers had a chance to vote on the winner, rating contestants in the swimsuit, evening gown and interview competitions.

Until recently, the pageant was co-owned by Comcast Corp’s NBCUniversal and Trump, who is leading national polls in the 2016 Republican presidential nomination race.

Earlier, Trump’s remarks about Mexicans in announcing his presidential candidacy in June drew sharp criticism, and the Spanish-language network Univision pulled out of a deal to televise the pageant.

Trump, who has sued Univision for $500 million, bought out NBC’s stake in the Miss Universe Organisation, which produces both Sunday’s pageant and the Miss USA contest. He sold the company in September.

The panel of judges included former National Football League great Emmitt Smith, celebrity blogger Perez Hilton and 2012 Miss Universe winner Olivia Culpo. Hilton said the two most important things about the pageant were the vastly larger audience and Trump was no longer owner.—Reuters

‘Concussion’ film stirs NFL brain injury debate

WASHINGTON — The film “Concussion,” tracing a forensic pathologist’s quest to expose the truth about brain injuries in the NFL, casts a spotlight on an issue that has roiled America’s most popular sports league.

The movie also may give parents pause, according to the filmmakers and some former players, about allowing their sons to play the violent sport of football.

“I love football. It’s graceful. We have a lot of beautiful football in this film, purposefully,” said Peter Landesman, the director and writer of the movie, due in US theaters on 25 December.

“We’re not trying to wag our finger and say, ‘Don’t do it.’”

Landesman added, “Sometimes the things that we love in life are the things that kill us.

We just have to make difficult decisions about what we do with that.”

Rick Walker, who played nine seasons in the National Football League including on the Washington Redskins team that won Super Bowl XVII in January 1983, said he hopes women, particularly mothers, see “Concussion” because they have the ability at the grassroots level to make the sport safer.

“Dads have already been aware of the situation, and most men will play no matter what,” said Walker, now a sports commentator in Washington. “When you’re young, moms are taking you to Pee Wee and Pop Warner (youth leagues).”

“Mothers can be such a big influence. If they combine their forces, they have the power to bring about change. They will protect their babies. But with dads, it’s always a macho issue.”

Walker added.

The movie tells the story of Dr. Bennet Omalu, played by Will Smith, who fought the NFL’s campaign to conceal his research on the brain damage suffered by football players who sustain blows to the head during games and practice.

Several dozen of the game’s top players, including Hall of Famers Mike Webster and Junior Seau, have been diagnosed after they died with chronic traumatic encephalopathy (CTE), a progressive degenerative brain disease associated with repetitive blows to the head.

CTE is currently diagnosed only through brain examinations after death.

Jeff Miller, the NFL’s senior vice president of health and safety policy, said he would be happy if the film spurred conversation on how to prevent brain injuries.

Miller said recent rules changes, such as penalizing helmet-to-helmet hits, have helped reduce the number of concussions in recent years by 34 percent over the past three years.

“While that number does not represent success in our minds, it certainly is a trend in the right direction,” Miller said.—Reuters

Jessica Simpson wants to star in sitcom

LONDON — Singer-actress Jessica Simpson reportedly wants to star in sitcom loosely based on her own life.

Simpson, who has daughters Maxwell, three, and two-year-old Ace with husband Eric Johnson, is keen to appear in a comedy about a “harried marriageroots who runs a successful business”, loosely based on her life, reported Female First.

“Jess really wants to get back into acting. She’s been taking lessons for more than a year, and though she’s been meeting with producers, no offers have come in. So she’s taking matters into her own hands,” an insider said.

The 35-year-old star, who played Daisy Duke in the 2005 film remake of US TV series “The Dukes of Hazzard”, is said to be planning to bankroll the sitcom herself and could even get her former NFL husband on board as a producer.—PTI

Japan’s oldest water tunnel reborn as concert hall

KOBE — Minatogawa Zuido in Kobe, Hyogo Prefecture, Japan’s oldest water tunnel, has been turned into a concert hall 15 years after being closed.

The tunnel was built in 1901 to change the course of the Minatogawa River in the wake of a flood in 1896. With a height of 7.7 metres and width of 7.3, it was one of the largest river tunnels in the world at that time.

The inside of the tunnel consists of some 4.5 million bricks laid in different ways for the side-wall and arch sections to enhance the durability of the structure, testifying to the advanced architectural skills already available then.

Minatogawa Zuido is unique as a water tunnel after suffering damage in the 1995 Great Hanshin Earthquake, and it was replaced by a new tunnel in 2000. But it has been preserved as a highly valuable heritage of modern civil engineering technology.

“We hope visitors recognize the enthusiasm of builders more than 100 years ago from the large scale of the tunnel and from its inside wall adopting the most advanced construction methods of that time,” said Junichi Ichinari, 67, secretary general of a civil group formed to preserve the structure.

A fantastical music concert is held with crystal singing bowls on 17 October, 2015, in Minatogawa Zuido, Japan’s first full-fledged tunnel built under a river in Kobe, western Japan, during the Meiji period (1868-1912). [Photo: KYODO NEWS]

The tunnel was opened to the public on a regular basis in 2006 and music concerts were held from time to time. With concerts winning popularity, they began to be held regularly in 2009. At present, the tunnel is opened to the public on the third Saturday of every month and a one-hour concert starts at 1:30pm. Concerts have been held by various musicians including the brass band of a local middle school.

Recently, a pair of players of crystal singing bowls took advantage of the acoustics of the space, performing under orange lights set up some 100 meters of the crystal singing bowls in the tunnel has a more “relaxing effect” than in other places.

“Regular visitors are increasing thanks to concerts,” Ichinari said. “We expect them to find new aspects of the tunnel through repeated visits.” [KYODO NEWS]

Entrepreneur aims for ‘cacao revolution’ on Indonesian island

TOKYO — Keichi Yoshino, a financial analyst-turned-entrepreneur, never dreamed of becoming a chocolatier when he first became interested in Indonesian cacao at a coffeehouse while travelling in South Korea.

Looking at a map of cacao production areas in the world at the cafe in 2010, he wondered why Japan does not import cacao beans from Indonesia and largely depends on Ghana for making chocolate even though the Southeast Asian country is closer to Japan.

He later found out from Japanese government data that Indonesia accounted for only 0.3 percent of Japan’s cacao bean imports in 2013, while 80.6 percent was shipped from Ghana.

The 34-year-old now operating chocolate shops in Kyoto, who was “a complete amateur” in farming back then, immediately flew to Sulawesi Island, where Indonesia accounted for only 0.3 percent of Japan’s cacao bean imports in 2013, while 80.6 percent was shipped from Ghana.

The answer — cacao beans in Indonesia, one of the world’s top three producers along with the Ivory Coast and Ghana, were not fit for high-quality chocolate production as they were shipped before being fermented.

“Fermentation would add value to cacao beans, but Sulawesi farmers did not bother to carry out the process as they thought to earn cash soon,” said Yoshino, who stayed with some farmers on the island and experimented in fermenting beans by covering them with banana leaves.

“As they said they won’t ferment cacao beans because no buyers would pay higher price for them, I decided to become a buyer myself,” he said.

In fact, many Indonesian cacao farmers have never tasted chocolate because their products were mainly shipped to extract butter and oil for industrial use such as cosmetics production, according to Yoshino.

Also, they did not benefit from sharp rises in cacao prices in international commodity markets over the last decade, as the price trend was set by speculative investors such as hedge funds and producers did not have any pricing power.

Determined to pitch Indonesian cacao in Japan, Yoshino personally imported about 600 kilograms of fermented cacao, which occupied most of his room space. But to his dismay, no major chocolate makers showed interest in the product.

“I knew the Indonesian cacao was of good quality, so I decided to become a chocolate maker myself. I gradually became enthusiastic as things got started,” he recalled.

The alumnus of Kyoto University graduate school then managed to procure equipment for chocolate production such as a roaster and a mill, set up his own company, and opened a shop in the ancient Japanese capital in April 2011.

His company and shops are named “Dari K,” with “dari” in Indonesian meaning “from” and K representing the shape of Sulawesi Island and also the initial of Kyoto.

As one chocolate piece at his shop costs 400 yen (about $3.3), Yoshino targeted high-end consumers willing to pay for quality items. He convinced a Takashimaya department store official to accept a plan for Dari K to run a booth in November 2011, saying the store can “diversify” its lineup with chocolates made from Indonesian cacao.

“Business slowly got on track as the fact that our items are sold at a department store enhanced the Dari K brand,” Yoshino said.

Transactions with the Kyoto company also helped raise productivity and profits for Sulawesi cacao farmers, as it bought fermented cacao at higher prices than conventional buyers and Yoshino suggested they conduct “grafting” — a technique used to insert branches with a lot of fruit into the stock of a tree.

“As a result, cacao farmers’ earnings increased up to 1.6-fold,” the entrepreneur said. With his efforts recognized by locals, the number of Sulawesi farmers supplying cacao to Dari K jumped from 40 to 6,000 by October 2015. The company will sell the amount unused by itself to other chocolate makers.

From late October to early November this year, Dari K ran a booth at the Salon du Chocolat in Paris, a major trade fair for the international chocolate industry, and its products were well received there, Yoshino said.

“We thought only shops with star patissiers would be invited to the fair, but our chocolates featuring the quality of Indonesian cacao were accepted,” he said, adding “artisan” shops selecting specific cacao beans for chocolate production have been recently gaining attention in the industry.

Dari K also conducts annual study tours to Sulawesi Island to connect cacao producers with consumers in Japan. What surprised Yoshino was that the farmers became much more motivated after directly meeting with customers.

“They treated chocolate consumers as family members and asked whether they can produce cacao without chemical fertilizers” out of consideration for the health of eaters, he said.—KYODO News
European roundup: Festive joy for Leicester, Real on fire

LONDON — Shock leaders Leicester City are certain to go into Christmas at the top of the table in England while champions Chelsea began the post-Jose Mourinho era with a 3-1 home win over Sunderland.

Bayern Munich, who announced Carlo Ancelotti would be replacing Pep Guardiola as coach in the summer, enter the Bundesliga’s winter break with an eight-point lead. Real Madrid crushed nine-man Rayo Vallecano 10-2 to close the gap on joint leaders Barcelona and Atletico Madrid in Spain.

ENGLAND
Claudio Ranieri’s Leicester City, bottom of the Premier League a year ago, will go into Christmas as leaders whatever happens in Monday’s meeting of the two teams just below them, Arsenal and Manchester City.

A 3-2 win at Everton was Leicester’s seventh victory in eight games on Saturday, the same day as champions Chelsea began the post-Jose Mourinho era with a 3-1 triumph over Sunderland at Stamford Bridge.

Louis van Gaal’s Manchester United suffered a shock 2-1 home defeat by struggling Norwich City, losing their place in the top four to Tottenham Hotspur who won 2-0 at Southampton. On Sunday, Liverpool slumped to a 3-0 defeat by Watford who stayed above them in seventh place following a fourth successive win.

GERMANY
Champions Bayern Munich go into the winter break with an eight-point lead at the top of the Bundesliga after seeing off Hannover 96 but they will spend the second half of the season knowing that coach Pep Guardiola has decided to hand over the reins to Carlo Ancelotti in the summer.

Bayern, on track for a record fourth consecutive title, have 46 points with second-placed Borussia Dortmund stuck on 38 after conceding two late goals to slump to a 2-1 defeat at Cologne.

Surprise packages Hertha Berlin tightened their hold on third place with a 2-0 victory over Mainz 05, their fifth win in six matches.

SPAIN
Atletico Madrid missed a chance to seize top spot outright from Barcelona when they were beaten 1-0 at Malaga while chasing Real Madrid closed to within two points of the leaders thanks to a 10-2 demolition of nine-man Rayo Vallecano.

Captain Gabi was sent off for Atletico 11 minutes into the second half and Malaga made the breakthrough three minutes from time. Real put hapless Rayo to the sword at the Bernabeu as Wales forward Gareth Bale helped himself to the first four-goal haul of his career, Karim Benzema netted a hat-trick and Cristiano Ronaldo scored twice.

Barca and Atletico have 35 points, with the Spanish and European champions having played one game fewer. Real are third on 33 while Celtic Vigo and Villarreal are still on their heels when they each won 2-0, at Granada and Real Sociedad respectively.

ITALY
Inter Milan’s lead was cut to one point as they lost 2-1 at home to Lazio, the home team’s Felipe Melo giving away a penalty and being sent off.

Napoli and Fiorentina, in joint second position, both won to close the gap on Inter.

FRANCE
Paris St Germain sunk Caen 3-0 to head into the winter break with 51 points, breaking the record for the most amassed during the first half of the season set by Olympique Lyonnais in 2006. Lyon lost 2-1 at Ajaccio thanks to a Mohamed Waed Larbi double while Angers’ good run came to an end with a 1-0 defeat at St Etienne.

PSG are 19 points clear of second-placed Monaco who have 32 after drawing 0-0 at 10-man Troyes. Angers, in third, have 31 and Caen are on 30. Tenth-placed Olympique Marseille drew 1-1 at Girondins Bordeaux. — Reuters

Blatter, Platini banned for 8 years

ZURICH — FIFA President Sepp Blatter and his lieutenant, Michel Platini have been banned for eight years by the governing body of world soccer yesterday.

FIFA’s ethics committee ruled the two should be banned over a February 2011 payment of 2 million Swiss francs (roughly $240 million yen) from Platini to Blatter, who has announced his resignation. Platini had been a candidate to replace Blatter at the top of world soccer until Swiss authorities began their investigation into the payment in September.

Both Blatter and Platini had temporarily been suspended in October for 90 days and participated in hearings in the case last Thursday and Friday, when they denied any wrong doing had taken place.—Kyodo News

Fury makes apology as Murray lifts BBC award

LONDON — Tyson Fury, the boxer at the centre of controversy over comments about women and homosexuals, made an apology at the BBC Sports Personality of the Year awards in Belfast on Sunday.

Before tennis champion Andy Murray collected the prestigious award, an audience of 7,500 at the SSE arena applauded after world heavyweight champion Fury, 27, one of the 10 short-listed contenders, told them his remarks had been tongue-in-cheek.

Fury, whose homophobic and sexist comments had led to more than 130,000 people signing a petition calling for the BBC to remove him from its shortlist, told the crowd, featuring many of Britain’s greatest sportsmen and women: “I’ve said a lot of stuff in the past, none of it with intentions to hurt anybody. It’s all a bit tongue in cheek, it’s all fun and games for me. I’m not really a serious type of person. Everything’s happy go lucky with Tyson Fury.

“If I’ve said anything in the past that’s hurt anybody, I apologise to anybody’s who’s been hurt out there. It’s not my intention to do that.”

Up to 30 gay and equal-rights campaigners held banners and chanted ‘anti-woman, anti-gay, Tyson Fury go away’ outside the arena before the Belfast ceremony.

Murray won the award for the second time in three years after his inspirational performances guided Britain to their first Davis Cup triumph in 79 years.

The 28-year-old, who joins boxer Henry Cooper and racing drivers Damon Hill and Nigel Mansell as the only double winners of the event, held up his “Personality” award and joked: “I didn’t expect this.

“A friend sent me a message the other day with an article saying “Andy Murray is duller than a weekend in Worthing” which I thought was a bit harsh -- on Worthing,” the Scot said of the southern England seaside resort.

Runner-up was rugby league player Kevin Sinfield and in third place was world heptathlon champion Jessica Ennis-Hill.— Reuters
