Mandalay artists show their works to Yangon audience

A watercolour show is being held at Gallery 65, with plans to help fine arts students improve their studies

Watercolour paintings by Kyaw Thu Win.

ONLY watercolour paintings by three young artists from Mandalay are being displayed at Gallery 65 in downtown Yangon, focusing on lifestyles of Yangon residents and culture heritage in Mandalay.

The three-day event entitled “Classmate” will run until 3 January, featuring 46 artworks. Among them, six paintings were sold on the opening day of the event.

This is the first group show of those watercolourists—Kyaw Thu Win, Aung and Zarni—who pursued their professional careers at the State School of Fine Arts in Mandalay.

All works are available for sale with price ranging from US$150 to $300.

“The sales of works from the exhibition will go towards helping their junior students of fine arts at the school where roughly 20 students are pursuing traditional painting techniques,” said Artist U Kyaw Thu Win.

“We plan to support watercolour-related supplies for them.”

A 27-year-old painter who created 16 paintings for the event said, “Half of my creations highlight the lost of the city’s culture by replacing the new modern buildings in Mandalay, one of culturally rich cities in the country.”

Artist Kyaw Thu Win plans to hold his second solo show and a group show with his friend Zarni by 2017 in Yangon next year. His first solo event was held in Mandalay in 2013.

The Gallery 65 is located at No. 65 on Yawminyi Street in Dagon Township in Yangon.

VP Dr Sai Mauk Kham stresses coordinated efforts for planned union peace conference

THE Central Committee for Union Peace Conference yesterday held its first meeting in Nay Pyi Taw to coordinate the preparations for the successful launch of the Union Peace Conference, according to its Chairman Vice President Dr Sai Mauk Kham.

The peace conference has been announced to start on 12 January, the vice president quoted President U Thein Sein as saying in a recent meeting. The five-day conference is reported to draw some 1,100 people, including 870 representatives and observers from the government, the parliament, the ethnic armed groups, political parties and interest groups.

Together with 266 special guests, the president will make his appearance at the event, according to the vice president.

The government signed the Nationwide Ceasefire Agreement with eight ethnic armed organisations on 15 October last year. Under the terms of the agreement, the framework for political dialogue was established by the government, the parliament, the defence forces, political parties, the ethnic signatories and ethnic non-signatories.

The ceasefire agreement requires that the Union Peace Conference be called to start political dialogue in 90 days after the finalisation of the framework. The agreement also required the stakeholders to draw a framework for political dialogue in 60 days.

Ethnic parties await dialogue with NLD

Ethnic political parties that won national and regional parliamentary seats in the 2015 elections have voiced their will for further cooperation with the National League for Democracy, awaiting the latter’s offer of dialogue on a range of issues including ethnic affairs and internal peace expected closer to the time of the handover.

“There might be differences on some issues but we are working towards the same goal as both the UNA and NLD are democratic parties,” said Sai Kyaw Nyunt from the SNLD, which won 40 seats in the regional and national parliaments in the 8 November elections, expressing his view on what will happen to the NLD and the UNA in politics.

Rare diseases covered by medical insurance scheme

HANGZHOU — Zhejiang has become the first province in China to cover rare diseases, including amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS), in its medical insurance scheme.

The move brings hope for patients with rare diseases struggling with high medical fees and a lack of treatment.

Starting Friday, the eastern province will allow local patients with ALS, Gaucher’s disease and phenylketonuria (PKU) to have their medical fees partially reimbursed, the human resources and social security department of Zhejiang said.

An official with the department said that more than 80 per cent of medical fees can be reimbursed for a patient whose condition is listed under the state-led medical insurance scheme.

ALS strikes between one and three out of every 100,000 people.

Patients progressively lose muscle strength, eventually becoming paralyzed and unable to speak, move, swallow or breathe, British scientist Stephen Hawking is one of the best-known people with the disease.

Gaucher’s disease would cause swelling of liver and spleen, anemia, pain, among other symptoms. PKU is a metabolic genetic disorder that can lead to learning disabilities, seizures and other medical problems.

The ice bucket challenge, which swept many places of the world in 2014, helped draw public attention to rare diseases.

Advocates of their inclusion in the medical insurance scheme say that due to the small number of patients, the drugs are often priced far beyond the financial reach of ordinary families as drug companies try to recover the cost.

BEIJING — Chinese authorities have formally arrested 11 people for their role in a deadly landslide last month in the southern boom-town of Shenzhen and charged them with negligently causing a serious accident, state news agency Xinhua said.

The government has blamed breaches of construction safety rules for the disaster on 20 December, when a dump overflowed and engulfed 33 buildings. It has started an investigation.

At least 12 people have been confirmed dead while 62 are missing, Xinhua said late on Thursday.

The 11 people arrested include the general manager of Shenzhen Yixianglong Investment Development, which ran the dump, and officials who were supposed to be supervising it, the report added, citing the Shenzhen prosecutor.

They have been charged with the crime of causing a serious accident, and the prosecutor has urged the police to track down other suspects as soon as possible, Xinhua said. It did not elaborate.

Calls to Shenzhen Yixianglong seeking comment went unanswered. The disaster is the latest deadly accident to raise questions about China’s industrial safety standards and lack of oversight over years of rapid economic growth.

North Korea’s Kim blames South for mistrust in New Year speech

SEOUL — North Korean leader Kim Jong Un blamed South Korea yesterday for increased mistrust in a New Year speech after a year of heightened tension between the rival countries.

The speech was Kim’s fourth since becoming leader in 2011 when his father, Kim Jong Il, died, sparking a long and turbulent succession process marked by several bloody purges in the isolated country.

“South Korea has made a unilateral case for unification and increased mistrust and conflict between us,” Kim said during a 30-minute long address, broadcast on North Korean television, highlighting its suspicion of the South’s unification policies.

Kim said in last year’s speech he would be open to a summit with Seoul but tension surged in August after a landmine blast on their border wounded two South Korean soldiers. The South blamed the North which denied responsibility.

The two sides met for talks in August after a sustained military stand-off and agreed to reduce tension and hold further talks at vice-ministerial level, although subsequent negotiations have been fruitless. On Wednesday, North Korean state media said its top negotiator with the South, Kim Yang Gon, had been killed in a traffic accident.

“We should cherish last year’s high-level talks and make continued efforts to seek dialogue and not take any further steps backwards,” Kim Jong Un said of the August negotiations, adding that he would be open to talks with anyone to discuss “peaceful unification.”

Applause was played at various points throughout what appeared to be a pre-recorded message. Photographs of factories and farms were interspersed with video of Kim standing in a wood-panelled room in front of a red flag bearing the crest of the ruling Workers’ Party.

In a response to Kim’s speech, South Korea’s foreign ministry reiterated its position that it was open to talks with the North, the Yonhap News Agency reported. “North Korea should take note that we are seeking to develop inter-Korean relations and lay the groundwork for peaceful unification,” an unidentified government official said.

Speeches by a North Korean leader used to be rare. The voice of Kim’s father, Kim Jong Il, was only broadcast on state television once, and he made no known public speeches during his 17-year rule.

For years, leaders’ speeches were only presented as editorials in state newspapers.

Kim Jong Un, however, has turned to broadcasting his speeches and using them to deliver his message, which is closely watched for clues to any policy change.

Kim pledged to develop North Korea’s moribund economy and raise living standards, although North Korean leaders have been saying that for decades. Improverished North Korea is under heavy UN sanctions related to its nuclear and missile programmes. Kim did not mention the nuclear programme in his speech.

China arrests 11 for deadly landslide, death toll now 12

The arrests came as the US Army officer had been killed in the hunt is on for their ringleaders.

He gave no details of the arrests made by authorities on Wednesday noted arrests made by authorities in Turkey, Belgium and Indonesia in connection with suspected plots by Islamic State operatives or sympathizers to launch attacks over the holiday, and said they were monitoring investigations.

Analysts say that Santoso, the first Indonesian to publicly pledge loyalty to Islamic State, may be an inspiration for would-be jihadis and militants returning from fighting with the group in Syria.

However, some believe there is a bigger threat closer to the capital, Jakarta, on the populous island of Java, where most of the recent arrests were made, and say militants are increasingly targeting Westerners.

The US embassy message did not spell out the security threat on Lombok, whose beaches are popular with Western holidaymakers, but it did mention specifically Senggigi Beach, the main tourist strip on the west of the island.
Afghan leader says end to terrorism a condition for peace talks

KABUL — Afghan President Ashraf Ghani said international meetings next month to lay the groundwork for a possible resumption of peace talks with the Taliban had to seek an approach to the fractured insurgent movement that ensured a rejection of terrorism.

Officials from Afghanistan, Pakistan, China and the United States are due to meet in Islamabad on 11 January to try to revive a peace process that stalled in July when the news came out that Taliban leader Mullah Mohammad Omar had died two years earlier.

Prospects of success have been clouded by bloody infighting in the Taliban over the leadership succession which has made it difficult to identify which part of the movement may be open to talks and which remain committed to the insurgency.

The legitimacy of Omar’s former deputy Mullah Akhtar Mansour, who assumed the leadership in July, is rejected by some militants. Rivals who accuse him of being beholden to Pakistan are suspicious that he hid Omar’s death for so long.

“It is obvious that there are groups of Taliban, not a unified movement,” Ghani told a news conference on Thursday. “The fundamental issue here is the choice: choose peace or terrorism,” he said. “There will be no tolerance for terrorism.”

Next month’s meeting will be followed by another encounter in Kabul, with Afghanistan initially represented by Deputy Foreign Minister Hekmat Khalil Karzai.

The United States and China have both been pressing hard for a resumption of talks with the Taliban but mutual suspicions between Kabul and Islamabad, as well as the factional fighting within the Taliban, have held up the process. Afghanistan has long said Pakistan is harboring Taliban leaders and sponsoring the insurgency as a means of exerting control over Kabul, a charge that Pakistan rejects, saying it too is a victim of terrorism.

For its part, the main faction of the Taliban has rejected peace talks as long as foreign troops in NATO’s training and assistance mission remain in Afghanistan.

Despite its leadership disputes, the movement has made big advances this year, inflicting heavy casualties on Afghan forces fighting largely on their own since the withdrawal of most foreign combat troops last year.

As well as the brief capture of the northern city of Kunduz in September, the insurgent movement has also threatened to take the volatile southern province of Helmand after overrunning several district centres.—Reuters

Rescue plan rescheduled to save 8 miners trapped in collapsed mine

JINAN — Rescuers on Thursday stopped tunneling through a collapsed mine shaft in east China’s Shandong Province to reach eight survivors, over concerns of secondary cave-ins.

Rescuers found signs of life on Wednesday morning, and made contact with the eight miners five days after the gypsum mine collapsed.

“The miners are generally in stable condition. Only one has suffered diarrhea,” said Li Zhongjun, a provincial health official with the rescue team.

He said that they have sent provisions including a nutrient solution, clothes and lamps.

The accident happened at 8pm Friday in Pingyi County. At the time, 29 people were working underground. One is confirmed dead, four escaped, and seven have been rescued, so far. Gao Guangwei, deputy head of the Emergency Command Centre of the State Administration of Work Safety, who is overseeing the rescue operation, said the rescue had been held back due to the structural instability of the tunnel and falling debris, and underground water has been gushing into the mine.

The team on Thursday agreed to review the rescue plan as the mechanical tunneling had increased the risk of new cave-ins.

Gao said rescuers were trying to open a new underground rescue tunnel to reach the trapped miners, while drilling more holes toward their location.

Previously, holes were drilled into the ground so that life detectors can be lowered into the pit. This had helped the team locate the miners. Currently, it is the only way the team can stay in contact and send provisions to the miners.

The owner of the mine drowned himself when working with the rescue team early Sunday morning.

The cause of the accident is still to be confirmed.—Xinhua

Indian capital adopts ‘odd-even’ scheme to check pollution

NEW DELHI — The government of India’s capital New Delhi yesterday rolled out its much ambitious “odd-even” plan of private cars in the Indian capital to curb alarming levels of pollution.

The formula came into effect this morning and would run for two weeks on experimental basis, following which final call on its continuation will be taken.

“The scheme will be in operation from 8:00am (local time) to 8:00pm during this period. However, the scheme will not be applicable on Sundays,” a government official said.

According to the formula, violators of the policy would be penalized with a fine of 30 US dollars.

Reports said at several places volunteers were seen displaying placards in support of the policy and assisting traffic police to enforce the formula.

According to the scheme, cars bearing odd-numbered registration plates shall ply on roads on odd days, while those with even number plates will be ply on even days.

VIPs, women drivers, compressed Natural Gas-certified vehicles, two-wheelers and those carrying the differently-abled are among the 25 categories which are exempted from the formula.

However, New Delhi Chief Minister Arvind Kejriwal and his cabinet colleagues have decided to abide by the rule.

TOKYO — Police arrested five men who gathered in Tokyo’s Shibuya district Thursday night to ring in the New Year on suspicion of assaulting riot police and mounting the roof of a police vehicle.

The two teens and three in their 20s allegedly obstructed police officers from performing their duty around midnight Thursday.

Crowds of young people gathered at the Shibuya Crossing from late Thursday night to early Friday morning to celebrate the New Year. About 1,000 police officers were mobilized in the area.

In Nagasaki, southwestern Japan, a 20-year-old man was found drowned early Friday after jumping into a river, police said.

Germany shuts train stations amid global New Year security scares

BERLIN/BRUSSELS — Europe ushered in the New Year with heightened security fears on Friday as German police evacuated two train stations in Munich, citing a tip about a planned suicide bomb attack, and Belgium held three people over an alleged plot.

Security forces in many capitals were on raised alert after a year of militant attacks, including an attack on Paris in November that killed 130 and was claimed by Islamic State (IS).

Soldiers were on the streets of the French capital, and police forces in London, Madrid, Berlin and Istanbul increased their presence as Europeans turned out to celebrate the arrival of 2016.

In New York, police tightened security for the traditional New Year’s Eve dropping of the crystal ball in Times Square, where more than a million people hailed the arrival of 2016.

Celebrations in Germany took on a somber note when police warned of a possible terror attack and evacuated two train stations in Munich an hour before midnight on Thursday.

Germany had received a tip from another country’s intelligence service that IS planned to attack Munich with up to seven suicide bombers. German officials said at a news conference yesterday.

They didn’t identify the country that provided the tip-off, but German television said in an unsourced report that it came from France. “I believe this decision was right because I think we cannot take unnecessary risks when we are dealing with such concrete threats, concrete locations, and a concrete time,” Bavarian Interior Minister Joachim Herrmann told a news conference yesterday.

The stations — Munich’s central station and Pasing station some 8 km (5 miles) away — reopened several hours later after the threat could not be substantiated.

In Belgium, police were holding three people for questions on Thursday as part of an investigation into an alleged plot to carry out an attack in Brussels on New Year’s Eve.

Authorities on Wednesday called off the usual New Year’s Eve fireworks display in the capital, citing fears of a possible militant attack.

Police had initially detained six people after searches at six locations in the Belgian capital and one just outside the city. They also seized computers, mobile phones and equipment for airsoft, a sport using guns that shoot non-lethal plastic pellets.

Three of the six were released late on Thursday. Prosecutors said they were holding the other three for a further 24 hours.— Reuters

Palestinian shot dead after ramming car into Israeli troops

JEJUSALEM — Israeli troops shot and killed a Palestinian who rammed them with his car in the occupied West Bank on Thursday, the Israeli military said, as a wave of violence approached its fourth month.

Almost daily Palestinian stabbings, car-rammings and shooting attacks have killed 21 Israelis and a US citizen, raising fears of a wider escalation a decade after the last Palestinian uprising subsided.

Since the start of October, Israeli forces or armed civilians have killed at least 132 Palestinians, 82 of whom authorities described as assailants. Most of the others have been killed in clashes with security forces.

The Israeli military said a Palestinian drove his vehicle into a group of soldiers, injuring one of them, on a road by the village of Hawara, near the West Bank city of Nablus. “The assailant was shot by forces on the site, resulting in his death,” the military said in a statement.

An Israeli civilian stabbed by a Palestinian in an attack earlier this month and a Palestinian in Gaza wounded in a stone-throwing clash with Israeli soldiers, also died of their wounds in hospital this week. The surge in violence has been fueled by Palestinians’ frustration over Israel’s 48-year occupation of land they seek for an independent state, and the expansion of settlements in those territories which were captured by Israel in the 1967 Middle East war.

Palestinian leaders say a younger generation sees no hope for the future living under Israeli security restrictions and with a stifled economy. The latest round of US-brokered peace talks collapsed in April 2014.

Violence has also been triggered by Muslim anger over stepped-up Israeli visits to Jerusalem’s al-Aqsa mosque complex. The site, Islam’s holiest outside Mecca, is also revered by Jews as a vestige of their biblical temples. Israeli leaders say Islamist groups who call for the destruction of Israel have played a major role in inciting the recent violence.— Reuters

Higher excise duties on fuel, alcoholic drinks as of 1 January

BELGRADE — The first day of the New Year will see a rise in excise duties on fuel and alcoholic drinks, but for now there is no fear the price of fuel would go up at the very start of the year.

The price of fuel should not increase immediately, given that oil companies have announced they will not automatically raise prices due to the global collapse of oil prices, which hit a ten-year low.

The excise duty on lead-free petrol will be increased from RSD 50 to RSD 52.5 per liter, and on gas oil from RSD 50 to RSD 54, while the excise duties on non-alcoholic drinks will go up by two percent.

The excise duty will be charged not only on alcoholic drinks, but also low-alcoholic drinks containing over 1.2 per cent of alcohol.— Tanjug

At least 18 people killed in Egypt ferry boat sinking

CAIRO — At least 18 people were killed late Thursday when a ferry boat sank in the river Nile, Egyptian state television reported yesterday.

The accident happened in the Kafir el-Sheikh Province, about 140 kilometres north of Cairo. Kafir el-Sheikh Governor el-Sayed Nasr said the ferry was transferring people between two towns in Kafir el-Sheikh and Beheira governorates when the accident occurred.

The boat was carrying 22 people, official news agency MENA reported. Rescue teams are still searching for more possible victims, the report added. The cause of the accident was not immediately clear.

However, Nasr said investigations would reveal whether the boat sank because of excessive weight on board or because of bad weather conditions.— Xinhua

Hundreds of flights canceled as Istanbul hit by heavy snow

ISTANBUL — Hundreds of flights in and out of Turkey were cancelled for Thursday and Friday at Istanbul’s two airports after the city was blanketed by heavy snow, which also forced the closure of schools and brought chaos to the roads.

Turkish Airlines cancelled 265 flights in and out of the main Ataturk airport and 37 at Sabiha Gokcen, Istanbul’s second airport. Budget airline Pegasus said it had canceled 34 flights arriving or departing from Sabiha Gokcen.

On Wednesday, city authorities said they had more than 1,000 vehicles and heavy machinery ready to keep roads open, but warned residents against all but essential travel.

US, allies conduct 24 strikes against Islamic State: US military

WASHINGTON — The White House has delayed imposing new financial sanctions on Iran over its ballistic-missile programme, The Wall Street Journal reported on Thursday.

On Wednesday, the Journal, citing US officials, said the Obama administration was preparing to sanction nearly a dozen companies and individuals in Iran, Hong Kong and the United Arab Emirates for their role in developing Iran’s ballistic-missile programme.

The US sanctions were expected to be formally announced this week, the newspaper said.

Sources familiar with the situation confirmed to Reuters that the United States was preparing sanctions.

The Obama administration is committed to combating Iran’s missile programme and the sanctions being developed by the US Treasury Department remain on the table, the Journal reported on Thursday, citing US officials.

But US officials offered no definitive timeline for when the sanctions would be imposed, the newspaper said. At one point, they were scheduled to be announced on Wednesday morning in Washington, according to a notification the White House sent to Congress, the Journal reported.

Imposing such penalties would be legal under the landmark nuclear agreement forged between global powers and Iran in July, the officials said, according to the Journal. Iranian officials have said the country’s supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, would view such penalties as violating the nuclear accord.

US officials have said the Treasury Department retains a right under the nuclear deal to blacklist Iranian entities suspected of involvement in missile development.

White House delays imposing new sanctions on Iran: WSJ

WASHINGTON — The White House has delayed imposing new financial sanctions on Iran over its ballistic-missile programme, The Wall Street Journal reported on Thursday.

On Wednesday, the Journal, citing US officials, said the Obama administration was preparing to sanction nearly a dozen companies and individuals in Iran, Hong Kong and the United Arab Emirates for their role in developing Iran’s ballistic-missile programme.

The US sanctions were expected to be formally announced this week, the newspaper said.

Sources familiar with the situation confirmed to Reuters that the United States was preparing sanctions.

The Obama administration is committed to combating Iran’s missile programme and the sanctions being developed by the US Treasury Department remain on the table, the Journal reported on Thursday, citing US officials.

But US officials offered no definitive timeline for when the sanctions would be imposed, the newspaper said. At one point, they were scheduled to be announced on Wednesday morning in Washington, according to a notification the White House sent to Congress, the Journal reported.

Imposing such penalties would be legal under the landmark nuclear agreement forged between global powers and Iran in July, the officials said, according to the Journal. Iranian officials have said the country’s supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, would view such penalties as violating the nuclear accord.

US officials have said the Treasury Department retains a right under the nuclear deal to blacklist Iranian entities suspected of involvement in missile development.

Iranian President Hassan Rouhani ordered his defense minister on Thursday to expand Iran’s missile programme, in defiance of the US threat to impose sanctions over a missile test Iran carried out in October.—Reuters

Blaze hits Dubai skyscraper, New Year’s fireworks proceed nearby

WASHINGTON — A UN plan to suspend Syria’s nearly five-year-old civil war calls for listing which militant groups may be fought under a ceasefire, diplomats and analysts said.

Separate talks are under way about the shape of a ceasefire and the draft document obtained by Reuters addresses those talks will focus on issues of a ceasefire, diplomats said.

Staffan de Mistura, the third UN envoy tasked with ending a civil war that has killed at least 250,000 people and driven millions from their homes, has taken the lead in laying out the possible dimensions of a ceasefire, diplomats said.

De Mistura has said he hopes to open talks between the Syrian President Bashar al-Assad’s government and opposition groups in Geneva on 25 January.

Those talks will focus on trying to get the two sides to agree on a political transition for Syria.

ANALYSIS
2 January 2016

This challenges the incoming government to make a difference in setting an aspirational and realistic vision for the future of the country by defining a new development agenda to follow. At the same time, this will place a considerable burden on the chairperson of the National League for Democracy, the opposition party which won in the 8 November Election by securing an 80% of parliamentary seats.

In retrospect, the government emphasised the need to fight poverty and advance rural development under a number of green projects. However, its top-down management style failed to live up to their expectations. In reality, the decentralisation of power for the exploitation and protection of natural resources is inextricably linked with the development of all regions and states in the country.

It requires commitment and courage to translate this vision into action and overcome the challenges of alleviating poverty and enhancing rural development in order to enable the people to grasp opportunities for their own empowerment and fulfillment of a better future.

N 2016, a year of high expectations?

Kyaw Thura

A new year, a new government and a new parliament will all no doubt make 2016 a year of high expectations and hopes amid rising pressures for overdue political, economic, social and educational reforms. At this critical moment, the calibre of the new government is the subject of much speculations among interest groups.

Well, although we have the honour of the United Nations Organization already set up to accomplish its noble purposes and having resolved to combine its members states’ efforts and has always done its utmost to have its noble mission accomplished, some states are still involved in internal conflict or in civil war and some, in inter-state conflicts, if not clashes or war. Under this situation, may I present to you news analysis, under the title of “balance of power”. Balance of power means a situation in which politico-military or strategic strength is divided between two countries or group of countries. From my own point of view, I would like to say that balance of power means something like power struggle, power contest between two countries or a group of countries, protecting against and preventing one single country or group of countries from getting too much the upper hand upon others, and not to become too much powerful or influential so that there will be a balance between states. Such a power struggle can be seen doing through diplomacy or through threat or use of force.

During the “Cold-War” period, there was intense power struggle with checks and balances to control each other, the capitalist bloc led by the United States of America, and the communist bloc led by the Soviet Union. And thus, there was and there is still NATO, North Atlantic Treaty Organization comprising USA, Canada and Western capitalist countries, and on the other side, there was once rival pact made between the communist or the social-acist States.

In those days, our native land, Myanmar, was a neutral state or non-aligned state, and also a member-state of the non-aligned movement, with no alignment, nor owing allegiance to either bloc. So, thanks to the country’s international image, U Thant, the then Permanent Representative to the United Nations, was deservedly appointed by the United Nations General Assembly, upon the recommendation of the United Nations Security Council as the UN Secretary-General, with no objections by both blocs.

Now, please allow me to present to you “news analysis” based on a top news item of the recent days and it is still developing. This news item, in my opinion, highlights the instances of the balance of power. It is about the South China Sea dispute and about the tensions arising between China and the United States. As we all know, China is now the fastest growing economy and the world’s second biggest economy, overtaking Japan. And China claims almost the entire energy-rich South China Sea waters. Through the South China sea, more than US dollars 5 trillion of marine trade passes each year. The 4 ASEA nations—Brunei, Malaysia, the Philippines, and Viet Nam and the world’s second biggest economy, overtaking Japan. And China claims almost the entire energy-rich South China Sea waters. Through the South China Sea, more than US dollars 5 trillion of marine trade passes each year. The 4 ASEA nations—Brunei, Malaysia, the Philippines, and Viet Nam and the world’s second biggest economy, overtaking Japan.

However, its top-down management style failed to live up to their expectations. In reality, the decentralisation of power for the exploitation and protection of natural resources is inextricably linked with the development of all regions and states in the country.

But, we have been told about the process of law for its claims over the South China Sea, the United States has come into this dispute to balance the rising power of China, I think.

Asserting that China should abide by the international law in general, and the United Nations convention on the law of the sea in particular, in this dispute, the United States challenges China’s claims over the South Sea, where China builds artificial islands and light-houses. As a way of challenging China’s claim, the United States has sent a warship near the South China Sea area, which this United States calls international waters, where is freedom of navigation. And the US warship sailed through the disputed waters near the artificial island China has built.

Moreover, I have also observed from the international media that the United States’ B2 bomber plane recently flew past near the Chinese artificial island in the South China Sea. In this case, the United States claims freedom of international air space, but China claims it is violation of its air-space sovereignty. In passing, I would like to state a well-known provision of the international law on the three knids of territorial sovereignty of a state LE sovereignty over the land territory, sea territory and air territory.

As a piece of news analysis, may I mention as follows: China is too strong for the 4 ASEA nations—Brunei, Malaysia, the Philippines, and Viet Nam and self-ruled territory Taiwan to challenge China’s assertive claims through head on collision or one-on-one clash over the South China sea. Thus, this crisis has brought the United States into play, for the purpose of balance of power.

Well, the other instance of balance of power, in my view, is the arms sales deal reached between the United States and Taiwan. Taiwan is a self-ruled territory, where the defeated national forces have fled at the end of the civil war with China’s communists in 1949. And China has declared that it has never renounced the use of force to bring Taiwan under its control. Under this situation, Taiwan has sought the strategic alliance of the United States so that the United States may come to its defense in case of necessity. On the other side, China has strongly called on the United States to respect China’s core interests.

Well, on our part, we earnestly hope and expect that all states involved, 4 ASEA nations and Taiwan and China, Asia’s super economic power will seek peaceful solution, diplomatic solution, legal solution and reach peaceful settlements. We also wish the balance of power-play ended peacefully without resorting to the use of force. And in this balance of power play, may diplomacy win, we pray. Why? Simply because diplomacy is the first and foremost line of defence and, diplomacy achieves a win-win result. In any dispute, diplomatic solution, or diplomacy is better than using weapons. The reality is persuasion and persuasion and compromise that have full play. There is no good war and bad peace.

Reduced tomato market hits farmers at Inlay Lake

TOMATO farmers around Inlay Lake are experiencing losses this year because of a downward price surge for their crops and have reportedly begun selling off their produce for cattle feed.

This year’s winter harvest at the famous lake coincides with the “kitchen crop” harvest that occurs across Myanmar.

“We face this kind of downturn every three years or so,” said a local resident from Nyaung Shwe.

Tomato growers have seen close to no profit this year because of the depressed market. This year, 40,000 visses of tomatoes were disposed of by farmers. Farmers were able to sell 30 visses of tomatoes for K5000.

In the Inlay region, local farmers grew 600 to 900 tomatoes on a 40 foot plot.

Inlay lake is about 14 miles long and 7 miles wide at its most expansive. Roughly 25% of the surface is covered by carefully tended floating gardens. The sight of the long rafts of vegetation bobbing up and down in the wake of the locals’ motorised narrowboats is quite disconcerting at first. —Tin Hlaing (Meiktila)

BBC reports own websites hit by cyber attack

LONDON — The BBC’s online services, including its news website and iPlayer catch-up TV platform, were taken down on Thursday by a large web attack, the British broadcaster reported.

The BBC’s sites, which rank only behind Google and Facebook in visitor numbers in Britain, according to Internet analytics firm comScore, were hit from 0700 GMT, with many users receiving an error message rather than content. The broadcaster itself reported it had been hit by a “distributed denial of service (DDoS)” attack, citing sources within the organisation.

DDoS attackers typically target sites by flooding servers with messages from multiple systems so they are unable to respond to legitimate traffic.

The BBC press office said it would not confirm or deny it had been hit by an attack.

“We’re aware of a technical issue affecting the BBC website and we are working to fix this now,” the BBC press office said.

It said at 1145 GMT its sites were back up and operating normally.—Reuters

Britain to review airport shop sales as retailers pocket tax savings

LONDON — Britain is to review airport retail sales after some businesses were found to be pocketing about half of tax savings meant for passengers rather than passing on the discount, the government said on Thursday.

Most retailers at British airports, who include WH Smith (SMWH.L) and Dixons Carphone (DC.L), ask passengers to show boarding cards when paying for goods, typically citing security as the reason.

A newspaper reported in August, however, that some use the information to avoid paying 20 per cent value-added tax (VAT) on goods headed outside the European Union.

The report prompted a backlash from consumers, with many refusing to show their boarding cards to retailers.

Announcing the review on Thursday, the government said in a statement that some airport retailers were keeping up to an estimated 50 pence of every pound of potential sales tax savings, instead of passing them on to consumers.

“VAT relief at airports is intended to cut prices for those travellers — not be a windfall gain for shops,” British finance minister George Osborne said in the statement. Many people could be paying over the odds for their purchases because the tax concession was not passed on, he said.

“This is simply unacceptable.” A spokesman for WH Smith said it would cooperate fully with the review. The company also said over half of its airport sales comprising items like newspapers, books and sandwiches, did not attract VAT.

“The limited benefit that we obtain in our other product categories, where customers travel outside of the EU only, is reflected in our single pricing policy for all customers, which overall provides better value,” a spokesman said.

Dixons Carphone said it had no further comment to add.

The review, which will be conducted by Britain’s tax agency and will report in early 2016, will consider ways to ensure prices reflect VAT savings, as well as savings on duty, the government said.—Reuters

Japan business leaders vow to encourage investment, wage hikes in 2016

TOKYO — Japanese business leaders yesterday pledged to encourage investment and wage hikes by domestic companies to ensure the economy steers clear of deflation and achieves sustainable growth.

In his New Year message, Sadayuki Sakakibara, chairman of the Japan Business Federation, also known as Keidanren, expressed hope that the year 2016 will see a “solid path” set toward bolstering the country’s gross domestic product to 600 trillion yen ($5.5 trillion), a goal set by Prime Minister Shinzo Abe.

Abe has been calling on companies to go ahead with wage hikes and bolster capital investment, as economic growth remains shaky. The Bank of Japan is also throwing its own support behind companies proactively spending on wages.

Sakakibara said he will ask companies to consider pay hikes for annual income growth, while urging the government to proceed with “broad regulatory reforms” to revitalize the corporate sector.

Some WhatsApp users still facing service disruption

SAN FRANCISCO: WhatsApp, a messaging service owned by Facebook Inc, said some users were still facing issues while accessing its messaging service.

The problems were primarily centred in the UK and Western Europe, according to DownDetector, a website that provides real-time overview of Internet and mobile services.

“We appear to be having issues again,” a WhatsApp spokesman told Reuters.

The company had earlier said it had completely restored the service. WhatsApp, however, did not provide any details on what led to the outage, which began shortly after 4.30pm UK time on New Year’s eve.—Reuters
Number of newborn babies rises in 2015 for 1st time since 2010

TOKYO — The estimated number of newborn babies in Japan in 2015 rose by around 4,000 from the previous year to 1,008,000, marking the first increase since 2010, the health ministry said Thursday.

The ministry’s estimates also showed the number of people who died in 2015 totaled 1,302,000, up 29,000 from a year earlier. As a result, the natural population decline, calculated by deducting the number of deaths from that of births, stood at a record 294,000.

The Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare attributed the rise to an improvement in employment conditions and government efforts to boost day care services as well as an increase in the number of births among women in their early 30s in the first half of 2015.

But the overall trend of a decline in the number of children is expected to continue with a fall in the population of women of reproductive age.

The number of newborn babies, which hit more than 2 million annually in the 1970s, dropped below 1.5 million in 1984 and below 1.1 million in 2005, the health ministry data showed.

On the other hand, the number of deaths topped 1.3 million for the first time in 2015, resulting in a natural population decline for the ninth consecutive year. The top four leading causes of death in the country were cancer, heart disease, pneumonia and cerebrovascular disease.

The number of couples that got married in 2015 stood at 635,000, down about 9,000 from 2014 and marking a record low for postwar Japan. Divorced couples numbered 225,000, up around 3,000.

On average, a person was born every 31 seconds and a person died every 24 seconds.

WellCare makes CVS Health its pharmacy benefit manager

WASHINGTON — Health insurer WellCare Health Plans said it would change its pharmacy benefit manager to CVS Health Corp from United Health Corp’s Optum Rx, effective 1 January.

About 3.8 million WellCare members enrolled under its Medicaid, Medicare and prescription drug plans will be able to access CVS’ pharmacy network, WellCare said on Thursday.

Pharmacy benefit managers administer health plans and run large mail order pharmacies, helping insurers get better prices from drugmakers. CVS is the second-largest US pharmacy benefit manager and drugstore.

WellCare, which focuses on government-sponsored insurance plans, recorded $3.7 million in PBM transitional costs in the quarter ended 30 September.

Shares of WellCare were down about 2 per cent while those of United Health and CVS Health were down about 1 per cent in early trading on the New York Stock Exchange on Thursday.—Reuters

Men with heart disease don’t know risks for erectile dysfunction

NEW YORK — Few men with heart disease know the condition is a leading cause of erectile dysfunction or understand all of the things they can do to make sexual difficulties less likely, a Polish study suggests.

Researchers focused on men with ischemic heart disease, or hardening of the arteries, which restricts blood flow to the heart and — in cases of erectile dysfunction — also reduces circulation in the penis.

This type of heart disease is linked to most cases of erectile dysfunction (ED) in men over 60.

Out of 500 men in the study, about 190 of them, or 38 per cent, couldn’t name any of the six things they could do to minimize their risk of ED — quit smoking, shed excess pounds, control diabetes, lower cholesterol, reduce blood pressure and get more exercise.

Just 51 of them, or about 6 per cent, could name all six of these modifiable risk factors for ED, the researchers report in the International Journal of Impotence Research.

Instead of focusing on these risks, many men think that ED is primarily caused by low testosterone, cycling or benign prostate tumours, study co-author Zygmunt Domagala of Wroclaw Medical University in Poland said by email.

“Patients simply don’t understand that a healthy lifestyle with leisure time physical activity and some diet modifications such as eating fish can influence penile function,” Domagala said.

The men in the study were 62 years old on average and all of them had experienced at least one previous heart attack.

Most of them were overweight, smoked and had high blood pressure, high cholesterol and diabetes. Nearly all of them failed to get sufficient exercise, and 15 per cent were obese.

Almost 80 per cent of the men experienced ED, with about 23 per cent describing the condition as severe or moderate to severe.

Even though sedentary lifestyle was the most common modifiable risk factor for ED among men in the survey, patients were even less aware of this than the other contributors.

The most frequently cited risk factor was smoking, correctly identified by 179 of the participants. Excess weight was noted by 166 of the men.

Among the patients who could name at least one risk factor, 106 of them could name only one, while 64 cited two and 48 were able to list three.

Having ED didn’t make the men any more likely to identify modifiable risk factors, which may be due to a lack of effective sex education, the authors concluded.

One limitation of the study is that only a limited number of patients responded to all the questions, leaving limited data in particular for the severity of erectile dysfunction and the intensity of physical activity, the researchers acknowledge.

Even so, the results aren’t surprising, especially given how often patients and physicians alike are uncomfortable having frank discussions about sexual health, said Dr Vito Angelo Giagulli, a researcher in endocrinology and metabolic diseases at the University of Bari in Italy who wasn’t involved in the study.

“In order to overcome this negative attitude I would suggest that these subjects suffering from ED should dare ask their doctors about this problem, given that it is a reliable barometer of good health and expectation of life,” Giagulli said by email.—Reuters

Guinea president urges reintegration of people cured from Ebola

CONAKRY — Guinea President Alpha Conde has appealed for socio-professional reintegration of people cured from Ebola, after Tuesday’s declaration by the World Health Organisation (WHO) that the country was Ebola-free.

An official ceremony to mark the end of the end of Ebola in Guinea was held in Conakry in the presence of the president, members of government, ambassadors and Guinea’s bilateral as well as multilateral partners.

During the ceremony, Conde urged the population and actors at all levels to end stigmatization and rejection of people cured from the disease in families, places of work and the society in general.

“We must protect our brothers and sisters who were affected by the Ebola epidemic,” the president said.

He recalled that over 2,000 Guineans died from the Ebola virus that has been spreading in the country for the last two years.

Conde used the opportunity to thank the international community, all friendly countries and partners who helped his country fight against Ebola, by providing funds as well as technical and logistical support.

Ibrahim Savane, the representative of people cured from Ebola, expressed the anxiety and fear Ebola patients and victims suffered during their hospitalisation.

He said the end of Ebola should not be a time “to drop our guard,” but rather it should be a moment to “reinforce vigilance and maintain preventive measures to avert a recurrence of the disease.”

“We have won the battle, but the war is not yet over,” the Guinean Ebola survivor said.

Erdogan vows no respite in Turkey’s war on Kurdish militants

ISTANBUL — Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan on Thursday vowed no let-up in a military campaign which he said had killed more than 3,000 mostly Kurdish militants this year in some of the heaviest fighting since their insurgency began three decades ago.

In a New Year statement, Erdogan said Turkey had “the resources and determination” to deal with the Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK), which first took up arms in 1984 to push for greater autonomy in the largely Kurdish southeast.

The violence has pre-occupied the NATO member’s armed forces and complicated international efforts to fight Islamic State in neighbouring Syria, where a Kurdish group linked to the PKK is fighting the jihadists.

Western allies want Turkey to focus more squarely on the threat from Islamic State.

“Our security forces are continuing to cleanse every place of terrorists, in the mountains and in the cities, and will continue to do so,” Erdogan said, referring to the PKK.

Turkey launched what it dubbed a “synchronized war on terror” in July, meant to include a campaign against Islamic State in Syria as well as Kurdish militants at home.

But it has overwhelmingly concentrated its efforts on the PKK.

Southeastern Turkey has plunged back into some of its worst violence since the 1990s after a two-year ceasefire between the PKK — designated a terrorist group by Turkey, the United States and European Union — and the state collapsed in July.

Warplanes have bombed PKK camps in southeastern Turkey and across the mountains of northern Iraq, while thousands of troops backed by tanks have in recent weeks pressed a campaign within Turkey to flush out militants on the ground.

Erdogan said 3,100 militants had been killed by the Turkish military in and outside the country since the start of 2015, which would be one of the highest rates of attrition for years.

Since the PKK launched its insurgency, fighting has been largely in the countryside, but the latest violence has focused on urban areas, where the PKK youth wing has set up barricades and dug trenches to keep security forces out.

Residents in towns such as Cizre and Silopi, which have been rocked by explosions and gunfire in recent weeks, have complained that the military operations are indiscriminate and that round-the-clock curfews have left even the sick unable to get to hospitals.

The violence has also hit once-thriving cross-border trade.

The UN transporters’ association said on Thursday around 10,000 truck drivers were stuck on the Iraqi side of the border because of the security concerns in Silopi and Cizre.

In apparent reference to a row with Baghdad over the deployment of Turkish troops to northern Iraq, Erdogan said Turkey had no territorial ambitions in any other country and did not question the sovereignty of its neighbours.

Iraq’s prime minister accused Turkey on Wednesday of failing to respect an agreement to withdraw its troops from the north and its foreign minister said if forced, Iraq could resort to military action to defend its sovereignty.

The diplomatic dispute flared after Turkey deployed a force protection unit of around 150 troops earlier this month, citing heightened security risks near a military base where its troops were training an Iraqi militia to fight Islamic State.

“Just want people who are historically and culturally our brothers to live in peace and security,” Erdogan said. — Reuters

Nigerian president vows to make things better in 2016

LAGOS — Nigerian President Muhammadu Buhari yesterday reassured citizens of the country that his administration was determined to make things better in the shortest possible time.

The President, who gave the reassurance in his new year message, said he was aware that Nigerians had experienced a number of significant hardships over the past months.

Buhari said these challenges were temporary as his administration was working hard to make things better for all Nigerians, irrespective of their socio-political backgrounds.

The Nigerian leader pledged to continue to do his utmost best to keep to every promise he made to Nigerians during the election campaign.

The former military ruler said he would be totally committed to being that kind of leader.

He promised to continue to initiate positive and enduring change for the betterment of the nation in spite of distractions in some quarters.

Buhari added that Nigerians would in due course begin to enjoy the fruits of his administration’s ongoing work.

According to him, the effective and efficient implementation of the 2016 budget proposals will address many of the socio-economic issues that are of current concern to Nigerians.

The president commended the Armed Forces for significantly curtailing the insurgency which had ravaged the northeast of Nigeria over the past few years. According to him, there was still a lot of work to be done in the area of security.

On corruption, the president said his administration’s ongoing crackdown on corruption would continue to be vigorously undertaken.

He urged the courts to support these efforts and help in the recovery of stolen funds by speedily concluding trials and showing that impunity no longer had a place in the country. — Xinhua

Tabakovic: We are doing everything to ensure cheaper loans

BELGRADE — Strengthening the role of the dinar in the national economy is a strategic goal for the National Bank of Serbia (NBS) and the Serbian government, while the objective of the current measures is to make dinar-denominated retail and business loans as cheap as possible, says NBS governor Jorgovanka Tabakovic.

The measures have already proved effective as average interest rates on dinar-denominated retail loans fell from 21.9 per cent since January 2013 to 13.2 per cent last October, she said in an interview to Politika.

“Citizens are taking more and more dinar-denominated loans and about two thirds of newly-approved loans in the first nine months of this year were denominated in dinars,” the NBS governor said. She also said that the NBS is sending signals of predictability for business by targeting inflation, adding that the target of four plus-minus one and a half percent will remain unchanged in 2016. — Tanjug

Floods swamp Missouri, Illinois; 9m people in risk areas

ST LOUIS (MISSOURI) — Towns in Tennessee and southern Illinois prepared on Thursday to cope with potential flooding after rain-swollen rivers washed out hundreds of structures in Missouri, Arkansas and eastern Oklahoma and forced thousands to flee their homes.

As of Thursday morning, some 9.3 million people nationwide were in areas with flood warnings. That was down from 12.1 million on Wednesday and 17.7 million on Tuesday.

At least 28 people have died in the US Midwest since the weekend in the rare winter floods, mostly from driving into flooded areas after storms dropped up to 12 inches (30 cm) of rain, officials said. Flooding in the Midwest usually comes in the spring as snowmelt from the Midwest usually comes in the spring as snowmelt swells rivers.

While floodwaters from a number of rivers began to recede on Thursday around St. Louis, towns farther down the Mississippi hoped their levees would resist rising river levels. Southern states like Louisiana will be bracing for high river levels. Southern states like Louisiana will be bracing for high river levels.

Workers in Tennessee were preparing on Thursday for the Mississippi River in Memphis to reach flood stage over the weekend.

“We’re moving things up high and we’ve got our generators out and got some extra water,” said Dotty Kirkendoll, a clerk at Riverside Park Marina on McKellar Lake, which feeds off the Mississippi River.

The Mississippi, the second-longest river in the United States, is expected to crest in the small town of Thebes, in southern Illinois, at 47.5 feet (14 metres) on Sunday, more than 1-1/2 feet above the 1995 record, the NWS said.

Thebes Village worker Bobby White said some sewage pumps were shut down to avoid overloading and that portable toilets had been supplied to affected areas. Most homes in the town, including his own, are on a hill and should be fine, he said.

“Most of the people at the bottom of the hill moved out years ago,” White said.

The floodwaters have closed sections of major trucking routes Interstate 44 and Interstate 55, with the latter expected to partially reopen on Thursday evening, the Missouri Department of Transportation said.

The US Coast Guard issued a high water safety advisory on Thursday for more than 560 miles (900 km) of the Lower Mississippi River from Caruthersville, Missouri, to near Natchez, Mississippi.

Louisiana Governor Bobby Jindal declared a state of emergency to prepare for flooding.

“All that water’s coming south and we have to be ready for it,” Lieutenant Governor-Elect Billy Nungesser told CNN. “It’s a serious concern. It’s early in the season. We usually don’t see this until much later.” — Reuters

Israel to spend $3bn more to improve living standards of Arab minority

JERUSALEM — Israel will spend around 13 billion shekels ($3.3 billion) over the next five years to improve the standard of living of its Arab minority and narrow gaps with its Jewish citizens.

Arabs comprise nearly 21 per cent of Israel’s 8.46 million population. The Arab Joint list — which combined four smaller political parties — is the third largest in Israel’s 120-seat parliament with 13 seats.

In a plan approved by the cabinet, investment will be boosted in education, infrastructure, culture, sports and transportation in Arab areas that have long been neglected or are not up to the same standards of Jewish citizens.

“This is an attempt to correct a historical wrong,” Eli Groner, director general of the Prime Minister’s Office (PMO), told Reuters on Thursday.

Groner said that in education, there is a gap between Jewish and Arab achievements in school, while Arab men often do not work in the professions they studied, he noted.

According to Tel Aviv University, Arabs comprise just 13 per cent of Israel’s civilian labour force, while figures show 75 per cent of Arab men work and just 33 per cent of Arab women.

“We’re trying to address these issues while encouraging them to better integrate into Israeli society,” Groner said.

As part of the plan, there will be new industrial zones and sports stadiums, and more spending on transportation, roads and water supply.

“It’s a shift in allocating spending toward these priorities,” Groner said.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu in a statement said the plan will strengthen law enforcement in the minority sector with emphasis on illegal construction.

“For the first time the Israeli government is changing the allocation mechanisms in government ministries so that Israel’s Arab citizens will receive their relative share in the state budget,” said Social Equality Minister Gila Gamliel. — Reuters
People accept me in different roles: Sunil Grover

PANAJI — Actor Sunil Grover, known for his popular female comic character “Gutthi” on a television show, says people also accept him in various roles as a man, which shows his versatility.

“I am happy being a woman (on screen). That is not a problem for me. But I am happy that people also accept me as a man (on screen) which means I am an actor who is accepted in various kind of roles despite my funny character on screen,” Grover told PTI.

He said after doing funny character and a funny role (in “Comedy Nights with Kapil”), people are accepting me in serious roles, that is making me happy.

Sunil is portraying the character of “Gutthi” in “Comedy Nights with Kapil”, hosted by comedian Kapil Sharma, which airs on Colours channel.

“It is a challenge for audience than for me (to accept me in a serious role),” the 38-year-old actor said.

The stand-up comedian was in Goa to perform for the New Year bash on Casino Pride, an off shore vessel.

Sunil also said that he is comfortable in being anyone else other than himself.

“I am more comfortable in being someone else. Whether it is (wearing) salwar kamiz or policeman suit, a bikini or a shorts, anything would do,” he said.

Sunil said his new year resolution was to work harder and to make people laugh.

“I want to keep trying and keep people entertained,” he added.—PTI

‘Batman v Superman’ and ‘Zoolander 2’ among expected big 2016 hits

LOS ANGELES — Moviegoers can expect a wide range of films in the coming year, from comedies to superheroes, and spinoffs from two of the most popular film franchises of all time.

“Zoolander 2” will open on 12 February in the United States.

Variety Senior Writer James Rainey explains why he thinks this movie will be a big attraction for some film fans.

“Penelope Cruz, Olivia Munn and, of course, Owen Wilson, and Ben Stiller in the title role. It’s totally silly. But I think it’s going to be fun and good.”

Other big pictures worth looking at include ‘Batman v Superman’ and something new from the world of ‘Harry Potter’.

“And I think, for mainstream audiences, you’ve got the spinoff of the ‘Harry Potter’ franchise coming at the end of the year, which is ‘Fantastic Beasts and Where to Find Them’ from J.K. Rowling — from her pen to Warner Bros. screen. That’s a big one at the end of the year, around Thanksgiving 2016.”

Rainey admits that “Star Wars: The Force Awakens’ will be a tough act to follow.

Cosby faces big financial threat from civil lawsuits: legal experts

NEW YORK — Civil lawsuits accusing Bill Cosby of sex abuse and defamation could do major damage to the entertainer’s wealth, regardless of how a criminal prosecution plays out, lawyers who have handled similar cases said on Thursday.

Cosby, who has been accused by more than 50 women of sexually assaulting them in incidents dating back decades, was charged in suburban Philadelphia on Wednesday in the only criminal case he has faced. The actor and comedian is charged with aggravated indecent assault against one of the women, a second-degree felony carrying a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $25,000 fine.

The financial assets of the entertainer, who personified the model American family man in a long-running hit television show, are more at risk from at least seven ongoing civil suits that have been filed or joined by 13 women.

Cosby, 78, has denied the criminal and civil allegations. He has said some of his accusers for defamation, and his lawyers have questioned their motives, suggesting they are after money.

A loss in the civil litigation could be very costly for Cosby, whose career made him one of the wealthiest people in the US entertainment industry, several plaintiffs lawyers not involved in the suits said. Jury awards in cases where a person has claimed sex abuse or defamation can run into the tens of millions of dollars, not including his legal fees. "This is going to be enormously expensive for Cosby," said Paul Calian, a New York lawyer who successfully represented the estate of retired American football player O.J. Simpson’s ex-wife in a civil case after Simpson was acquitted in her killing.

The allegations against Cosby - with so many accusers claiming they were drugged before he allegedly sexually assaulted them — mean he is particularly vulnerable to civil punitive damages, the lawyers said. Punitive awards are meant to punish and deter a defendant, while compensatory awards cover actual costs of plaintiffs.

Various media estimates have put Cosby’s net worth at between $380 million and $450 million in recent years. His ability to pay is likely to be a factor in a civil award or settlement, lawyers said.

“Any jury assessing this starts with, what amount of money enyone pays him given his net worth?” said Brad Edwards, a Florida lawyer who represents sex abuse plaintiffs. “Even if you said $20 million, you’re talking about a fraction of his net worth,” he added, so a jury could go even higher in determining a punitive award.

Big US jury awards have to survive review by judges. Some states cap awards, and a punitive award generally must be less than 10 times the compensatory award.

In court papers filed on Dec. 14 in one suit, Cosby’s lawyers said women suing Cosby in Massachusetts are “engaged in a campaign to assassinate Mr. Cosby’s reputation and character” in order to “extract financial gain.” —Reuters
VATICAN CITY — The media should give more space to positive, inspirational stories to counterbalance the preponderance of evil, violence and hate in the world, Pope Francis said on Thursday in his year-end message.

Francis led about 10,000 worshippers in a traditional year-end solemn Vespers and the first Vespers of St Francis, which marks the opening of the annual Christmas and New Year’s season in the Catholic Church’s World Day of Prayer for Peace in Saint Peter’s Basilica.

In his brief homily, Francis said the outgoing year had been marked by many tragedies.

“There has been (violence), death, unspeakable suffering by so many innocent people, refugees forced to leave their countries, men, women and children without homes, food or means of support,” he said.

But he said there had also been “so many great gestures of goodness” to help those in need, “even if they are not on television news programs (because) good things don’t make news”.

He said the media should not allow such gestures of solidarity to be “obscured by the arrogance of evil”.

The Argentine pope, marking the third New Year’s season since his election in 2013, condemned the “insatiable thirst for power and gratuitous violence” the world had seen in 2015.

“I do not wish to set out at this moment what is normal today, electric, cell phones, devolution, rural electrification and increased use of mobile phones, with subscribers standing at 30 million.

“What is normal today, electricity, cell phones, devolution, security system improvement, digital broadcasting, internet, were figments and desires only a few years ago. This is how society evolves and transforms,” he said.

MOMBASA — Kenya will launch various development projects this year as the country seeks to develop and become a middle-income nation.

In his New Year address to the nation, President Uhuru Kenyatta said the government will build 8,000 km of new tarmacked roads in 2016.

The country will also review its education system to make it more modern and relevant to the changing development needs of the 21st century.

“We will deliver digital learning devises to our schools this year. We will do a lot more that I do not wish to set out at this moment. Most importantly, we will work together as one people to build a great nation that each one of us will be proud to call home,” he said, adding that his government will remain open, democratic, transparent, united and peaceful.

The Kenyan government will also seek to better the lives of citizens and unite the nation.

“We will achieve our dream of happy individuals, strong families, united communities and a successful nation. The transformation will continue with greater momentum. We will keep on delivering on our promise,” he said.

Among the country’s achievements in 2015, according to the president, is the construction of the standard gauge railway, devolution, rural electrification and increased use of mobile phones, with subscribers standing at 30 million.

Pellegrini says Manchester City have ‘complete’ squad

LONDON — Manchester City’s Manuel Pellegrini could be one of the least active Premier League managers in the January transfer window after declaring his title-chasing squad “complete” on Thursday.

The Abu Dhabi-owned club were English football’s biggest spenders in the summer, splashing out heavily on the likes of forwards Raheem Sterling and Kevin De Bruyne and defender Nicolas Otamendi.

“Really I think this squad is complete,” Pellegrini told reporters ahead of City’s trip to high-flying Watford on Saturday.

“As always I said that we are not going to close the window but we are not really thinking of any special players to bring in,” added the Chilean.

City, three points behind leaders Arsenal and Leicester City at the halfway stage of the season, will be without injured captain Vincent Kompany for at least a month while Samir Nasri is also on the absentee list.

Kompany missed more than half of the league games this season, playing in nine out of the 19, and hobbled off within 10 minutes of appearing as a second-half substitute against Sunderland last Saturday.

Pellegrini said promoted Watford, ninth in the league and seven points behind City, were doing a great job but his side were in a good position.

“Always the best position is to be top of the table but I think that this is a special season in the Premier League,” he said. “We are three points behind the leaders and I hope we are going to compete strongly with a very good second half of the season.” — Reuters

Virus costs Schwartzel South African Open title tilt

CAPE TOWN — A wretched Christmas for South African golfer Charl Schwartzel has been compounded by having to withdraw from next week’s South African Open when the European PGA Tour resumes after the holiday break.

The former US Masters winner has been in and out of hospital in recent days for rehydration treatment after being afflicted by a stomach virus, as were many family members gathered for the festive season.

While Schwartzel is on the mend, he has been forced to pull out of one of the few domestic events he has yet to win, South Africa’s Sunshine Tour said on Thursday.

“I am hugely disappointed to be missing out on the SA Open,” he said in a statement.

“Everybody knows how keen I am to win our national Open and, having come so close the last couple of years and following my good form at Leopard Creek, I was really looking forward to contending at Glendower. I look forward to being strong and healthy in time for the Joburg Open the following week, however,” Schwartzel added.—Reuters

Top four place will now be tough for Valencia: Neville

BARCELONA — Valencia will find it tough to qualify for next season’s Champions League following their 1-0 reverse at Villarreal on Thursday, said new coach Gary Neville.

The former England and Manchester United defender was brought in to put the club back on track after a slow start to the season.

“Valencia began very defensively against Villarreal with a five-man rearguard and, although we knew how to play in the second half and we played the best football since I arrived,” added Neville.

Valencia began very defensively against Villarreal with a five-man rearguard and, although they came out of their shells after the break, conceded from a Bruno Soriano free kick in the 64th minute. “We needed to pass the ball better. We were bunched together too much and we should have looked to attack more,” said Neville.

“When you have five at the back you can be too defensive and we were conscious of that but we didn’t do it well.” — Reuters
