A MATTER OF PERSPECTIVE

Military History and National History inseparable: Senior General

THE history of the military and the history of the nation have been inseparable since the inception of the military; they have invariably co-existed, said Commander-in-Chief of Defence Services Senior General Min Aung Hlaing during his meeting with the officer cadets and other ranks at Ba Htoo Station Area yesterday.

The duty of the military is to defend the nation, to protect and safeguard Our Three Main National Causes and the lives and property of the people and to effectuate the national interest, he added.

The kings must have loyalty whereas the people must keep their promises, it is said.

If you cast a glance at the history, you will find that independence was lost because of disloyal acts with the result that we have fallen into servitude, reminded the Senior General.

If you look at the history of independence struggle, he claimed, our national leaders were assassinated by the disloyal traitors. And what is more, the nation has been faced with the threat of disintegration posed by the disloyal armed troops in the aftermath of independence, and the military has had to sacrifice a multitude of lives and limbs to prevent the nation from disintegration. As you know, we still have to be confronted by the armed conflicts caused by disloyalty.

The disloyalty to the military has complicated dramatically the affairs of the nation. This is the reason why certain conditions are enshrined in the constitution, said Senior General Min Aung Hlaing. Last but not the least, he claimed that if the military was not there to enforce the rule of law as well as peace and stability, the democratic system would not be strong.—Myawady

Except five pagodas, visitors banned from scaling monuments in Bagan

EXCEPT five designated pagodas in Bagan, all remaining pagodas are now subject to a new rule banning visitors from scaling or climbing on the structures, the Ministry of Culture announced yesterday. The ban comes into effect on 1 March.

Following the previous announcement that banned climbing on the pagodas in Bagan, the ministry released an amended announcement via its social media FB page, adding that the ban is aimed at conserving Myanmar’s cultural heritage and protecting the safety of visitors.

The new announcement explained that the ministry has allowed visitors to visit view points of the five pagodas to enjoy the sunset.

However, it was found that some visitors entered the restricted areas and acted inappropriately, causing damage to ancient artifacts.

An American tourist fell off of Shwesugyi Pagoda late at night on 21 February and was taken to hospital, the announcement said.

“While the architecture of ancient cultural heritage pagodas is sound, the weight of the increasing number of visitors are posing a threat to the pagodas and to visitor safety,” said the announcement.

There are more than 3,000 pagodas and religious edifices in Bagan.

Meanwhile, those involved in the tourism industry have criticised the Ministry of Culture's decision to ban the scaling of temples in Bagan, saying it could hurt the tourism industry.

Tourist operators to Bagan have said the climbing of delicate temples which feature a lot of artistic handiwork should be prohibited, but that those temples which are sturdy and feature little aesthetic beauty should be allowed to be climbed upon.

“They shouldn't close off [the temples]. If all the temples are closed off [from being able to be climbed] then it will have negative consequences for the international tourist industry. They should do it in such a way that only a few people are allowed on a temple at one time, say ten people, then charge people for the privilege of ascending the temple, $5 for foreigners and K500-K1,000 for locals. Money for [the restoration] fund can be made. I don't think it's possible to close off all the temples.” said the chairperson of Myanmar Guide Association for the Bagan-Nyaung Oo zone.

World travellers visit Bagan specifically to take in the region’s beautiful scenery. As such, the current prohibition could damage the reputation of Bagan, while those local residents who rely on the temples to make a living could encounter difficulties, tour operators have expressed. They have also stated they will also need a substitute program on the itinerary of tourists because of the ban.
Pyithu Hluttaw calls for preparedness, response plans for El Niño

THE second Pyithu Hluttaw’s first regular session entered its tenth day, with parliamentarians holding discussions on the El Niño urgent motion submitted by Dr Naung Than of Meiktila Constituency.

A total of 14 MPs discussed the urgent motion calling on the Union government to adopt risk mitigation measures against ill-effects of El Niño which is expected to hit Myanmar this year.

In his discussion, Dr Hla Moe of Aungmyay Thasau Constituency stressed the need of launching emergency response and preparedness drills in order to mitigate possible losses in the event of disasters. The MP pointed out that such drills are not conducted yet in the country despite plans had been drawn up by the ministries concerned. He also called for necessary policies to be formulated to purchase rice for State reserves.

U Naing Htoo Aung of Ngakhoogyi Constituency also called on officials concerned to gear up for coming El Niño’s impacts, warning that the situation is likely to get worse during this summer as some parts of the country have started suffering droughts and fire outbreaks are reported frequently.

In his discussion, Dr Sein Mya Aye of Dala Constituency emphasised the importance of taking necessary measures to guarantee the socioeconomic status of the people including farmers as agricultural outputs and fishery exports will likely be limited by consequences of El Niño.

Defense Services Personnel Pyithu Hluttaw representative Lt- Col Aung Kyaw Moe highlighted the leadership role of the Union government in the fight against El Niño effects in cooperation with regional governments, non-governmental organizations and the people. During the tenth day session, Pyithu Hluttaw Speaker U Win Myint read out messages sent by Mr. Sergejs E Nayshkin, Chairman of the State Duma of the Russian Federation, and Mr. Nguyen Sinh Hung, Chairman of the National Assembly of Viet Nam. Except five pagodas, visitors banned from scaling monuments in Bagan

Director of Ruby Land Travels, U Aye Kyaw, says that arrangements also need to be made, in the manner of administrative departments of ancient cultural sites found the world over, thinking of the needs of those pilgrims who come to Bagan for spiritual purposes.

“The [pagodas] are becoming weaker from the large numbers of tourists visiting the region, like those of ancients temples around the world, the great temple in Cambodia for example. Fearful that the temple wouldn’t be able to endure [the volume of tourist footfall], metal railings and stairs were attached to the temple for people to walk on. As a result, people aren’t walking directly on the temple anymore. Provisions have also been made to limit the number of people that can access certain areas of the temple at one given time.” explained U Aye Kyaw. — Aye Min Soe & Moe Myatkhaw News Agency

Yabba pills, marijuana seized in Nawngkhio

LOCAL Anti-Drug Squads could seize over 2,000 yabba pills and nearly one kilogram of marijuana within the two days in Shan State and Yangon Region.

On 18 February, police searched a Toyota car being driven by Sai Aik Paung near toll gate in Nawngkhio and found 1,900 stimulant tablets. Likewise, 380 yabba pills were discovered on a motorbike driven by Eik Thein with one passenger on board on 17 February.

Police also arrested Tun Win and Nay Zaw Aung in a possession of a cache of marijuana weighing 0.82 kilogram in Dawbon Township in Yangon.

All people involved in the cases were charged under the law.—Kyemon

Conductor stabbed in bus competition quarrel

A MAN was in serious condition after being stabbed by a young man during a quarrel on 19 February within the compound of the Dagon Ayeya Highway Terminal in Hlaingthaya Township, Yangon.

A Nge Lay (a) Aung Myo Htike sustained serious injuries and was rushed to the Hlaingthaya Township Hospital for emergency care. He is now being treated at the Insein General Hospital.

According to a police investigation, a quarrel occurred between the two men, who are currently employed by different private bus lines at the terminal, to solicit customers for their bus lines.

During the quarrel, 17-year-old San Win (a) Lin Htike stabbed the complainant’s body with knife and fled the scene.

Tatmadaw conducts combined operations in Shan State (North)

THE Ministry of Defense yesterday announced that the Tatmadaw is conducting combined operations in the areas in Namhsan and Kyaukme, towns of Shan State North, where fighting between SSA (Ywet Sit) group and TNLA rebel troops have occurred.

During the period from 25 September last year to 19 February this year, the SSA (Ywet Sit) group clashed with the TNLA rebel troops 20 times, forcing 3,657 people to flee within the period from 10 to 15 February.

Due to the clashes, villages were set on fire, monks were arrested and some villagers were killed.

As the suffering of people has escalated, the commander of North-East Command sent a letter of complaint denouncing the acts of SSA (Ywet Sit) group and asking the group to return to the territory designated for the group to U Sai Aung Mya, vice-chairman (1) of Joint Monitoring Committee-State level and Myanmar Peace Centre on 12 February.

The SSA (Ywet Sit) group replied that it would not return to its own territory and deploy more troops in the area.

The Tatmadaw has since begun conducting combined operations in the areas in accord with Article 20 (e) of Chapter 1 and Article 341 of Chapter 7 of the 2008 Constitution.

Taninthayi earns K1.8 billion from edible bird’s nest enterprise tender

THE regional fund of Taninthayi Region is K1.8 billion larger after it received funding from a edible bird’s nest enterprise tender process accord- ing to the Regional Minister of Forestry.

The Myanmar Economic Corporation (MEC) previously had a monopoly over the edible bird’s nest collection enterprises in the region in the years leading up to 2014, before tender of- fers began to be put out to other companies.

“There was only ever this one private company involved in this enterprise as they were the only company who would bid when tenders were first put out. The price of the tender this year, however, has tripled as other companies have entered the competition by placing bids,” said U Tin Thein, director of the Department of Forestry for Taninthayi Region.

The process of calling edible bird’s nest enterprise to tender began on 9 February, with the bidding companies announced on 15 February. Twenty-five per cent of the price of the tender bid first had to be paid up front to the Myanmar Economic Bank, while the remainder had to be settled by February 17.

“There are only four areas within the region in which birds’ nests can be collected. Four companies applied shortly after the tenders were called, but only three turned up on the day when successful bids were announced. Only two of the companies were successful, walking away with the rights to collect birds’ nests,” explained U Win Naing, assistant director of the forestry department.

Among the companies that bid—MEC, Ruby Light Rays and Grand Andaman Islands—MEC was awarded Plot 3, while Grand Andaman Islands swept up plots 1, 2 and 4.

Plot 1 is located within the townships of Laung Lone and Yay Pyu, covering an area of eight islands, won with a tender bid of over K1.2 million. Plot 2 comprises ten islands in the Ye Aye island cluster in the Myeik archipelago; it was secured with a successful bid of more than K1.8 million. Plot 3 is located in Kaw Thaw District, the southernmost part of the country, made up of a group of nine islands for which the winning bid surpassed K420 million. Plot 4 is located in an area covering the five islands of Pulaw Township, of which the tender was awarded to a bid of over K1.44 billion.

Successful tender bidders are permitted to exploit their winning plots only up until November of this year, while the period of time in which the actual collecting of edible bird’s nests can take place three months per year in order to mitigate the potential wiping out of bird species in these areas. Bird nest collectors are also prohibited from making artificial alterations to caves where edible bird’s nests are located.

Under a government initiative, some areas of Taninthayi Region have been designated wildlife zones in order to provide a safe haven for birds to nest and reproduce, according to the regional forestry depart- ment.

In the 2013-2014 fiscal year, when edible bird’s nest enterprise tenders were called, the regional fund banked over K900 million, while the following fiscal year saw a decline with K620 million secured.

The current regional price for one viss (1.54 kilos) of black edible bird’s nest fetches approximately K300,000, while white edible bird’s nests are significantly more valuable, with the same weight going for much as K6 million.—Myitma News Agency

Marrows see higher export

BROKERS are offering good prices for marrows grown by cultivators from Sagaing Region to export the marrows to China via Muse creating a wider demand and market recently. It has been learned from a merchant.

Marrow is the main crop of growers in Sagaing Region. If growers begin cultivating marrows when it is wet, the produce is generally more ripe, mature and larger, selling well on the Chinese market during the summer.

Brokers are able to pick and choose the best marrows for export. However, for produce that is flawed or undersized, growers usually send them to local food producers who make jam at an arranged price. “My plantation can produce two ten-ton trucks of marrow a year allowing me to gain over K10 million. After deducting the capital investment, I have K4 or 5 million left”, said a marrow cultivator.

A broker has to buy marrows down to Myinmu Township. Santinkin village cultivates marrows the most, said a marrow culvator.—007

Ginger market sees better prices

GINGER grown in Leikhto Township and its neighbouring villages, Hpa-an District, Kayin State has been gaining higher prices, it has been learned.

The growing of ginger on an industrial scale has now become a good business. Dried ginger sells for K3,000 per viss. Ginger powder sells for K6,000 per viss, according to locals.

The price of ginger has risen compared with last year. Ginger growers focus on extended cultivation to maximise their income.—Nwe (IPRD)

Chili farmers in Monywa expect high price

CHILI planters in Monywa, Sagaing Divisional Region, who have been experiencing losses in chili cultivation due to downward prices are now anticipating good prices for their crop this year.

“In fact, the harvest time is a time for saving the money but chili is now being sold for K350 to K450 per viss, which is much lower than previous years. We have no profit at all as we have to pay wages for workers”, said U Aye Chan, a local farmer.

“We use 5 bags of chili seed per acre. One bag of seeds produces around 1,200 chili sprouts, using up over 2 bags of chemical fertiliser in order to get high yield. The costs cannot cover even our investment because of high expenses including worker wages”, he added.

The low demand from the border areas and the existence of other chili species in the market are the two main reasons for the decreased price.—Min Min

Thilawa SEZ coordination meeting held for further stakeholder cooperation

THE ninth coordination meeting on the Thilawa Special Economic Zone being developed by Myanmar and Japan was held in Nay Pyi Taw to boost stakeholder co- operation in the project yesterday.

The coordination meeting focused on the exchange of views on further works following the signing of MoUs on developing Phase II of the SEZ.
Nepal ends fuel rationing after supply from India improves

Nepal adopted the charter in hope of bringing stability after years of civil war, but it upset the minority Madhesi community in the south who blocked key border crossings, causing severe shortage of oil and cooking gas.

Protesters called off the blockade this month and allowed supply trucks stranded for more than four months to roll into the landlocked country after the government changed the constitution to provide greater political voice to the Madhesi and vowed to resolve other grievances through talks.

“We are now getting 70 per cent of our normal fuel supply from India,” Nepal Oil Corporation official Dipak Baral told Reuters. “With this there is no need to restrict distribution of fuel to the public.”

India is Nepal’s sole supplier of fuel. Rationing had led to black marketeering and caused lines of motorists outside petrol stations to stretch for several kilometres.

Nepal blamed India for supporting the protesters who share close family and cultural ties with it and causing the shortage that strained ties between the South Asian neighbours.—Reuters

South Korea, US delay launch of talks on US antimissile system

SEOUL — South Korea and the United States yesterday postponed the launch of formal talks on the anticipated deployment of a US missile defence system in South Korea, according to the South Korean Foreign Ministry. “It’s in the final stage, but there are things that need to be coordinated” before the talks officially begin, ministry spokesman Moon Sang Geun said at a press briefing, referring to the signing of a “terms of reference.”

The signing was originally scheduled for Tuesday to mark the launch of formal bilateral talks on the deployment of the antimissile system, known as the Terminal High Altitude Area Defense, in South Korea.

“It is expected that the signing will be done in one or two days,” Moon said, declining to elaborate on what caused the postponement.

South Korean media speculated the postponement may be linked to Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi’s three-day visit to the United States from Tuesday for talks with US Secretary of State John Kerry.

Vang and Kerry are expected to discuss adopting a resolution at the UN Security Council, proposing tougher restrictions on North Korea following the country’s 6 July nuclear test and 7 February rocket launch in violation of existing sanctions.

Shortly after North Korea launched a long-range rocket carrying a satellite, the United States and South Korea jointly announced they will begin formal talks on the feasibility of THAAD deployment as part of efforts to cope with North Korea’s nuclear and missile threats.

THAAD is designed to intercept missiles flying at high altitudes inside and outside the atmosphere.

China and Russia oppose the deployment of THAAD in South Korea, saying the missile system could hamper their strategic interests.

The United States has dismissed their concerns, insisting the missile system will be focused solely on defence against North Korea.—Kyodo News

Former Thai PM Thaksin warns on economy, says no deal with military

SINGAPORE — Fugitive former Thai Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra warned Thailand’s ruling generals yesterday that a prolonged stay in power will only worsen economic hardship in Southeast Asia’s second-largest economy.

Thaksin yesterday denied long-standing reports he had struck a backroom deal with the military to leave personal and family interests untouched in exchange for a retreat from politics.

The junta, which took power following a May 2014 coup, has struggled to revive Southeast Asia’s second-largest economy amid falling exports and high household debt and critics say economic mismanagement is the biggest threat to its hold on power.

Speaking to reporters in Singapore, Thaksin, 66, said the junta lacked the vision and talent to fix an economy in disarray.

“It is a government with no freedom and no pool of talent to drive the economy,” Thaksin told Reuters. “The longer they stay, the longer economic hardship is going to be there.”

A decade of turbulent politics has pitted Thaksin and his sister, former Prime Minister Yingluck Shinawatra, whose government was ousted in the 2014 coup, against a royalist-military establishment that sees the Shinawatras as a threat.

Thaksin yesterday denounced long-standing reports he had struck a backroom deal with the military to leave personal and family interests untouched in exchange for a retreat from politics.

“We are not talking. I have never telephoned anyone. I don’t know why I would get in touch with them and I have no need to,” Thaksin said.

Thaksin has lived in self-imposed exile for nearly eight years, mainly in Dubai. In 2010, he urged his “red shirt” followers to mobilise protests calling for elections that ended in a bloody confrontation with the military in which more than 90 people died. His legacy of village welfare and cheap rural health care is broader than 90 people died. His legacy of village welfare and cheap rural health care is broader Critics, including the urban elite, accuse Thaksin, a former police colonel turned telecom tycoon, of widespread corruption. He was sentenced to two years in prison in 2008 for graft in a land purchase case, which he says was political-motivated.

The May 2014 coup was the latest insurrection in more than a decade of bitter power struggle that has weakened an economy that was once a shining beacon of progress in Southeast Asia.

Thailand has gone through six prime ministers since Thaksin was removed in a 2006 coup and finds itself once again at a crucial political juncture.

The junta has promised elections next year. But some critics are sceptical, saying the military’s objective is to block Thaksin’s allies from returning to power and to consolidate the military’s own powers by writing them into a new constitution.

Another undercurrent of the crisis is a deep anxiety over the issue of royal succession. Ailing King Bhumibol Adulyadej, 88, the world’s longest reigning monarch, has been in hospital since May and has been treated for various illnesses.

His heir, Crown Prince Vajiralongkorn, does not command the same respect as his father. Ensuring a smooth succession will be a daunting task for whoever is in power.

Thaksin was reputed to be close to the prince but said he has not seen him since 2007.

“Thaksin has no relationship with him, only that I respect him,” he said.

Thaksin’s decision to speak to media this week has riled the junta.

“Thaksin remains a person without credibility who thinks he is above the law,” government spokesman Major-General Sansern Kaewkamnerd told reporters.

The government has rejected Thaksin’s offer to hold formal talks on the country’s political future.

“They said they can’t talk to me because of the cases against me but a coup is a bigger crime,” Thaksin said.

Thaksin, who said he spends his time meeting up with old friends including former heads of state, said he has adjusted to his nomadic life and makes, on average, 120 landings a year in his private jet.

He believes he will return to Thailand one day but won’t go back to face charges or live under house arrest because of previous assassination attempts. “I am confident I can return,” he said.

“I am not the bad person I am accused of being.”—Reuters

KATHMANDU — Nepal ended months-long fuel rationing after supply from India improved, following the end of a border blockade by ethnic protesters against a new constitution, an official said yesterday.

Relief came as Prime Minister K.P. Oli visited India, where he met Indian counterpart Narendra Modi and cleared up differences over Nepal’s adoption of its first post-monarchy constitution last September.

Pacquiao election rival calls for Bradley fight to be halted

Manila — The Philippine election commission will decide on Tuesday whether a boxing match between Manny Pacquiao, who is standing in May’s vote, and American welterweight champion Timothy Bradley violates polling rules.

On 9 May, more than 34 million people in the Philippines will vote for a president, vice-president, 300 lawmakers and thousands of local government posts.

Pacquiao, who has courted controversy with comments promising that they would receive compensation.

There was no immediate comment from Pacquiao. Boxing experts said it will be difficult to postpone the match because the two sides had signed a contract.

Last week, the world’s largest sportswear-maker, Nike Inc, ended its sponsorship deal with Pacquiao after the Filipino boxer described gays as “worse than animals”. Pacquiao remains popular in the Philippines, where opinion polls rank him 8th among four dozen candidates running for Senate seats.—Reuters

Angry victims heckle Modi ally after Indian riots kill 19

ROHTAK — A political ally of Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi was shouted down yesterday by a crowd angered by rioting in a northern state that destroyed businesses, paralysed transport and cut water supplies to metropolitan Delhi.

The chief minister of Haryana, Manohar Lal Khattar was heckled by local people in the town of Rohtak, northwest of the capital, after they objected to his comments promising that they would receive compensation.

There was a trail of destruction and publicised complaints about the police in Haryana, a state of 25 million people, for the first time.

More than a week of unrest involving the Jat rural caste has challenged the authority of Modi, who was elected in 2014 with the largest majority in three decades but has publicly ignored the outburst of anger over a lack of jobs.

Although Jat leaders reached a deal late on Monday to end more than a week of protests that killed 19 people and injured 170, anger was still boiling among the victims whose livelihoods had been ruined.

Live TV pictures showed Khattar giving up his attempt to address angry people on the street. After retrieving indoors to give an impromptu news conference, he repeated his promise of compensation only to be shouted down again.

Soon after Modi won national power, Khattar led his nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party to power in Haryana, a state of 25 million people, for the first time.

There was a trail of destruction through the town, one of several to be hit by Jat agitation to demand more government jobs and college places, with one Hyundai dealership gutted. Traders who staged an earlier sit-down protest said they had lost everything.

“I had two showrooms on the road; both were first looted and then set on fire. I have nothing left now,” Anil Kumar told Reuters Television.

Kumar appealed to Modi and to chief minister Khattar for compensation: “Are we not humans? Don’t our votes count? Why did they not have any mercy on us? Don’t you pay our taxes?”

JAKARTA — The Indonesian police are investigating four men who were recently deported from Singapore over allegations of supporting the Islamic State group. Anton Bachrul Alam, a spokesman for the National Police, on Tuesday told reporters in Jakarta that the male quartet, who age between 15 to 49, were arrested in Singapore last week when they were allegedly en route to Syria where the IS is headquartered.

“We are now investigating them to find out more,” Anton said, noting that the group are currently in the custody of the police’s counterterrorism unit in Jakarta. Reports said that the quartet are members of Jamaah Anshorut Daulah, which is one of three Indonesian radical groups supporting the IS.

The four are believed to be followers of Amran Abdurrahman, one of the most influential hardline clerics in Indonesia who is currently in jail for terrorism.

Modi, who is believed to have recruited hundreds of Indonesians to be the militants for the IS, met the four suspects from his religious boarding school in West Java. The group had flown into Singapore from Soekarno-Hatta International Airport in Jakarta before traveling to Malaysia’s Johor and spent three days there and then returning to Singapore, according to Indonesian media.—Xinhua

There was no immediate comment from Pacquiao. Boxing experts said it will be difficult to postpone the match because the two sides had signed a contract.

Last week, the world’s largest sportswear-maker, Nike Inc, ended its sponsorship deal with Pacquiao after the Filipino boxer described gays as “worse than animals”. To achieve inclusive growth and shared prosperity

Khin Maung Aye

Myanmar’s economy has the potential to grow rapidly up to around eight per cent per annum in real terms over the next five years according to a World Bank’s news release issued on 23rd February. The news release suggested that eight policy be chosen in order to ensure economic growth. It is true that only when we can effectuate the growth in economy, will we be able to provide greater job opportunities and generate higher incomes for our people. It is worth mentioning here in this juncture that World Bank has explored development opportunities as well as restructuring choices for the policy makers to ponder over.

As known to all, the incumbent government has achieved a landmark in its political and economic reform process. The achievement in economic growth is to be continued to be effectuated by the next regime. As pointed out by Ulrich Zachau, World Bank Country Director for Southeast Asia, the great opportunities for Myanmar is to turn continued strong economic growth into better lives for all citizens. According to him, three policy directions will be key to help achieve such inclusive growth: the further opening and diversification of the economy with a level playing field for the private sector and structural shifts towards more productive and labour intensive activities; nation-wide programmes to achieve, over time, universal access to basic education, health, and energy services of reliable quality; and transparency and accountability in the public sector.

As we have a long way to go to overcome the challenges to narrow the disparities in many aspects, we expect both the incumbent and the next regime to adopt the aforesaid three policy directions to promote inclusive growth and shared prosperity.

A Visit to Zalun and Dhambyu

Dr. Saw Mra Aung

When our mini-bus left the toll-gate at the edge of the high-way, it was nearly 5:30 am. But everything around was still in obscurity of darkness except the faint light shown by the road-side lamp–posts lining the Yangon–Pathein high-way. After the bus had covered half a mile, all the lamp–posts on both road–sides were with no more light. With clouds of mist raised from the swampy lands in some places, it seemed to be even much darker. I looked right and left for some time but saw nothing apart from the vague silhouettes of tall trees. So, I, with my eyes closed, let my mind wander wherever it fancied me. The bus went on quickly in the dark. Sometimes, I fell into doze. Sometimes, I was awakened with a jerk when the driver applied the brake. When it neared the Nyaungdon Bridge at 7 pm, the sun, like an orange ball, started to peep out slowly from the eastern horizon, dispersing darkness from the world. All things were then visible to us. Just before the bridge, the high-way branched out into two the one leading to Pathein and the other to Hinthada. Our bus followed the latter.

We were now on the way to Zalun. Dhambyu is on the western banks of the Ayeyawady River. The Nyaungdon Bridge and the Yangon-Hinthada railway were found spanning the Ayeyawady River, being parallel to it each other. It was wonderful for us to see against the dawning sky the railway–elevated some height from the road and river–surface even higher than the bridge. We also espied the Bo Myat Tun Bridge, another Ayeyawady-crossing bridge, some distance on the left. A large sand-bank was formed in the river, making navigation difficult. At the sight of the Ayeyawady River, I remembered the claim of G.E. Harvey in his book titled “China, Historical Geography of” that “Ayeyawady” derived from the Sanskrit term “Irawati” meaning “River of Refreshment”, which was named after the “Ravi River” flowing in Panjab in India. Sometimes, I was awakend from my doze. The road was lined with such trees as Kukko (Albizzia lebbek), etc. The road was made vehicle called “Toke-toke”, motor-cycles and a sort of locally made vehicle called “Inthada”. The road was also quite crowded with heavy machines. I observed some heaps of granite, gneiss and some high–graded metamorphic rocks to be used in paving the road on the road–side. Some local people were constituting to and fro on motor-cycles and a sort of locally made vehicle called “Toke-toke”, etc. The road was lined with such trees as Kukko (Albizzia lebbek), Malayasia Padauk, teak, Mezali (Cassia siamea), mango, plum, etc. Except the road, all were low–lying. Some of them were inundated with water. I was aware that some of the inundated areas were turned into fish–breeding lakes bounded by embankments. On both sides of the road, we were stretchting many deep green fields of French bean, green pea, and ground–nut but a few fields turning yellow–green. Many farm–hands were pulling bean-plants in some fields while we were hearing the already–pulled ones by hand as well as by machine. On either side of the field, there were also a few betel and pepper plants in some fields while some were threshing the already–pulled plants in some fields. Some stone–inscriptions recording the history of this Buddha image were set up on the terrace. The stone–inscriptions read thus: “The Buddha Image, the Shwe Bon Muni Image, the Man Aung Myin Muni Image was taken to Zalun by King Bodaw the Conqueror in 1784, son of King Bodaw the Conqueror, the Maha Muni Buddha Image, the Shwe Bon Muni Image, the Man Aung Myin Muni Image was taken to Aung Myin Muni to Amarapura through the Tanuggup Pass. When they came to Padaung across the river, the crown–prince left the Shwe Bon The Shwe Bon Muni Image was brought back to the village near the river through the small volume near the village. When the Maha Muni Image and the Man Aung Myin Muni Image were carried on to Amarapura on their arrival at Amarapura, the Maha Muni Image was housed at a brick–pavilion in a locality today called Myauk Pyin Quarter in Mandalay and the Man Aung Myin Muni Image was kept at a golden pavilion in the palace. When the British occupied Mandalay, the Man Aung Myin Muni Image was taken to Zalun by Zalun Myint Myogyi U Shwe Pwint. But after the British had occupied the whole Myanmar, they forcibly brought the Man Aung Myin Muni Image, other bronze Buddha images and other copper and bronze utilities to Bombay in India. It was in keeping in a Godaung. When Queen Victoria came to Dehli on a visit, she suffered from a terrible headache. One night, she dreamt that she had to send back the Man Aung Myin Muni Image to Myanmar, otherwise, a great danger would befal her empire and her. So the queen, out of fear, asked her men to search for the image to find it and, after combing through many antiquities kept in the Godaung for hours, it was found among other Buddha images issuing rays of various colours. Due to this phenomenal occurrence, the image was immediately sent back to Hinthada and then to Zalun in Myanmar. So it was later known as the Pyi Daw Pyan Buddha Image meaning “The Buddha Image Which Returned to his Own Country”.

Then we proceeded to the U Thila Pagoda standing in Landaow (South) beside the high-way. We got there at 9:30 pm. When we got there, I saw a few pilgrims on the terrace paying homage to the pagoda and to the statue of U Thila kept in a pavilion from the side of the terrace. I worshipped the pagoda and encircled it clockwise. Meanwhile, I found two stone inscriptions erected in a shed, recording the life accounts of U Thila. These epigraphic records said thus: U Thila was an Arahat known to Myanmar, especially for his supernatural power during Colonial Period. He, as a forest–dwellling monk, submitted himself to Dungings (Austere Practices), was stung with Vinaya (Rules of the Holy Order), and the founder of the Kyakhetwaing Pariyatti Learning Center in Bago which was reputed for its meticulous observance of the Vinaya. One day, while he was crossing the railway–line near Khun–daing Village in Bago Township, the express train coming from Mandalay came to a halt by itself and could move on only after his crossing. The passengers on the train were tormented and could not help but bow to him in veneration from where they were seated. On another occasion, hunter U Kaw shot him meditating in a bush three times with his rifle, mistaking him for a deer but the rifle did not work. Only when he shot upwards to the sky, the rifle worked normally. When he often came across some wild elephants which ran amock in the forest, they did not harm him but were humbled due to the power of his Metta (Loving-kindness). On some nights also, tigers and boas came and stayed with him in the forests. While he was on a...
Water levels of Ayeyawady River to continue to rise over next five days

The water level of the Ayeyawady River in Myitkyina will continue to rise six feet (180 centimeters) over the next five days, said an official from the Department of Meteorology and Hydrology in Mandalay yesterday.

The river’s water level in Myitkyina rose 12 feet (360 centimeters) within 16 hours following the untimely rains in Kachin State.

It is the beginning of the El Nino event as the recent surge in water levels of Ayeyawady River in February is unusual, said U Than Zaw, assistant director of the department.

Water level of the river in Mandalay is also expected to rise 500 centimeters from the current level of 350 centimeters over the next five days, added the assistant director.

With water level rise, sandbanks of the Ayeyawady River will be covered with water and the waterway will be widened, said U Toe Aung Lin, deputy director of Water Resources Utilisation Department in Mandalay, calling on watercrafts to follow the previous waterway to avoid possible unwanted accidents.

Likewise, the Department of Meteorology and Hydrology announced necessary measures needed to be taken by watercrafts following the rise in water levels and called on famers dealing with cultivation on the sandbanks to be alert to the threat of water level rise.

International Furniture Fair Singapore (IFFS) to be held in Singapore

The International Furniture Fair Singapore (IFFS) will take place at the Singapore EXPO Convention and Exhibition Centre in Singapore from 10 to 13 March.

The Myanmar Rattan and Bamboo Entrepreneurs Association and the Wood Based Furniture Association will exhibit Myanmar furniture products at the event with the aim of having a chance to introduce the quality of the furniture products and their designs, how to display their products in the booths from various countries and achieving international recognition for Myanmar furniture products and handicrafts via the event, said U Nyan Win, the chairman of the Wood Based Furniture Association.

The Singapore Furniture Industry Council has provided 100 square metres for Myanmar exhibition stalls.

Six Myanmar Companies—two companies from the Wood Based Furniture Association and four from the Myanmar Rattan and Bamboo Entrepreneurs Association—will showcase their furniture products through 10 booths. —Soe Win (MLA)

A Visit to Zalun and Dhanubyu

visit to Zalun to demarcate the boundary of an ordination hall, he demised on the 3rd waning of Kaʻi year 1275 M.E. After his body had been cremated, numerous holly relics remained. All his relics including ashes issued brilliant rays. Even the dirts of the relics to the extent that it was reduced to be a hole. So a small pagoda was built over it and named the U Thila Pagoda for Dhanubyu. Then we drove to the Dhanubyu Township. It was a gilded pagoda raising to the height of 55 cubits and 2 maiks. It is said that the original pagoda was built by King Srinadhamsamaka and renovated under the auspices of Khin Ma Kkayaw and his lay disciples such as U Aung Zan, U Maung Gyi and U Bo Shein in the year 1275 M.E. To our amazement, it was surrounded by four pavilions housing 399 marble slabs on all sides of which were inscribed the Three Baskets of the Dhamma in Pali with Myanmar alphabets. At these marble slabs, I was reminded of 729 marble slabs recording the Tipitaka erected within the precincts of the Kathodaw Phayaygyi at the base of Mandalay Hill after the Fifth Buddhist Synod held in Mandalay in 1871. It is known that the donors of these marble slabs were U Zan and Daw Hnin Ei and that they contributed 130 kyats for each slab and the expenditure to be incurred for construction of the four pavilions to house the slabs. I looked at the statues of the two donors in awe of their undiminished ardour for the perpetuation of the Sasana. After studying these slabs, we had no place en route to drop in on. So we started our home-ward trip at 2:13 pm.

Our mini-bus was bound for home along Yangon-Hinthada high-way. Many villages such as Nandawgon, Haauksugon, Phayathonezun, Nyaungchaung, Yaeyle, Thabyu, Kawkale, etc situated on the road-side swirled behind quickly. Now and then, the parts of Yangon-Hinthada railway parallel to the car-road came into sight. At 2:40 pm, the bus arrived at the Nyaungdon Bridge. I looked down and saw a ship dredging sand along the fringe of the island formed in the mid of the river. We made a brief stop at a tea-shop on the other side of Nyaungdon, at the junction of Yangon-Pathein and Yangon-Hinthada high ways.

When we left the tea-shop, I had a chance to look at the scene veiled by darkness and mist in the morning. I noticed there were more gourd, betel, ridged gourd, papaya plantations and corn and paddy fields on the side of Nyaungdon. When our bus passed by Thazin Yekyaw Village, I saw many fish-breeding ponds and lakes with fowl-farms constructed either on their banks or on the water-surface. Some trees like areca-nut, banana, papaya and mangoes were growing on the banks of the ponds and lakes. Herons, individually or in group, were also found standing in the shallow areas of the lakes. Some villagers were going about in boats along the canals leading to the lakes and ponds. A large fish-feed factory, which produced the feeds required for all the fish-breeding lakes in the environs, was also found on the side of the road. There were also Thabyu (Eugenia) plantations. When it came 4pm, we reached Sarmalauk Junction. It assumed a new look with new and modern buildings with its economic boom, bolstered by its improved transport and rice fields, bean fields and fish-breeding lakes and ponds in its neighbourhood. At 4:30, we arrived back safe and sound at Hlaingthayar.

In brief, as we could feast our eyes on the beautiful scenery on the way, it was really rewarding and restful trip for us. It is noticed that since the Ayeyawady delta was formed of young sedimentary rocks aged 300,000 years, it had not yet undergone any geological activities. So much of the land remained flat as alluvial plains cros-crossed with rivers and creeks favouring agriculture and fishery industry. Today, on account of better transport and foreign direct investment, the socio-economic patterns of these regions have changed. The author thinks that if the agricultural produce and fishery products of these regions can be developed into value-added products with the use of modern technology, these deltaic regions will be more prosperous and developed in not so distant future.

Cargo ships are seen in the Ayeyawady River.

Rubio gets boost from Republican endorsements, Cruz missteps

WASHINGTON — Republican presidential candidate Marco Rubio received boosts Monday in his drive to become the mainstream Republican alternative to front-runner Donald Trump, with a string of high-profile endorsements and missteps by rival Ted Cruz’s campaign.

Rubio, who oked out a second-place finish in South Carolina’s primary by fewer than 1,000 votes over Cruz on Saturday, racked up endorsements from prominent Republicans including US Senator Orrin Hatch of Utah, Arkansas Governor Asa Hutchinson and former presidential candidate Bob Dole.

Rubio and Cruz came out of South Carolina with sharper criticism of Trump, who swept the Southern state with a comfortable margin of victory. At the same time, the two senators’ rivalry intensified - and soured.

Cruz fired his main spokesman, Rick Tyler, on Monday afternoon over a video that falsely showed Rubio dismissing the Bible.

Tyler had apologised late on Sunday for posting “an inaccurate story” involving a video purporting to show Rubio referring to the Bible and saying, “Not many answers in it.” Tyler had retweeted a link to the misleading video and posted it on Facebook.

Cruz fired Tyler the next day, saying his campaign did not question the faith of other candidates. “That’s why I’m asking for Rick Tyler’s resignation,” Cruz said.

The first-term senators from Texas and Florida are locked in a battle to become their party’s alternative to political outsider Trump in Nevada’s caucus on Tuesday, the last Republican presidential contest before the busy voting month of March. Tyler’s dismissal came amid intense criticism of the Cruz campaign as dishonest from both Rubio and Trump.

Greek police remove migrants from Macedonian border as more land in Piraeus

ATHENS — Greek police started removing migrants from the Greek-Macedonian border yesterday after additional passage restrictions imposed by Macedonian authorities left hundreds of them stranded near the village of Idomeni.

The migrants had squatted on rail lines in the Idomeni area on Monday after attempting to push through the border to Macedonia, angry at delays and additional restrictions in crossing. They were expected to be taken to relocation camps inside Greece.

Greek police and empty buses had entered the area before dawn, a Reuters witness said. In one area seen from the Macedonian side of the border, about 600 people had been surrounded by Greek police, the witness said.

There were an estimated 1,200 people at Idomeni, in their vast majority Afghans or individuals without proper travel documents. A crush developed there on Monday after Macedonian authorities demanded additional travel documentation, including passports, for people crossing into their territory.

Some countries used migrants as a corridor into wealthier northern Europe as imposing restrictions on passage, prompting those further down the chain to impose similar restrictions.

After the relocation camps opened, the Greek police removed migrants from the area.

Michigan Uber driver admits role in deadly shooting spree: police

KALAMAZOO, (Mich) — A man working as an Uber driver admitted to the fatal weekend shootings of six people in Kalamazoo, Michigan, a police detective testified on Monday in a case raising questions about how the car service vetts its drivers.

Jason Dalton, 45, was denied bail as he made his first court appearance on 16 charges including six of murder that can bring life in prison. Dalton told detectives “he took people’s lives”, Kalamazoo Public Safety Detective Cory Gharinger testified in a county district court ahead of the suspect’s arraignment.

Dalton appeared via a video link and was seen on a monitor at the Kalamazoo County court wearing glasses and dressed in an orange prison jumpsuit. When asked if he had anything to say, Dalton, who appeared emotionless through the proceedings, said he preferred to “remain silent”.

Smoke forces JAL aircraft passengers to evacuate in Hokkaido

SAPPORO — Smoke filled the cabin of a Japan Airlines Co. plane bound for Fukuoka yesterday afternoon before takeoff at Chitose airport in Hokkaido, forcing the evacuation of 159 passengers and six crew members.

At least four passengers were injured when evacuating the Boeing 737 aircraft via inflatable slides, according to rescue officials. The four passengers were taken to hospital.

Smoke was emitted from the aircraft’s right engine as the aircraft was awaiting to take off around 3pm, according to the airline and the transport ministry.

According to police investigating the accident, the engine stalled after sucking in snow and there was an explosive sound when a pilot restarted it.

Migrant, refugee flows to Europe top 100,000 in 2016 — IOM

GENEVA — More than 100,000 migrants and refugees have arrived in Greece and Italy already this year, the International Organisation for Migration (IOM) said yesterday.

They include at least 97,325 landing on Greek islands and 7,507 in Italy, the IOM said in a statement issued in Geneva. Over 410 migrants and refugees have also lost their lives during the same period, with the eastern Mediterranean route between Turkey and Greece continuing to be the deadliest, accounting for 321 deaths, the IOM said.

Indonesia sinks 30 boats to fight illegal fishing

JAKARTA — Indonesia has sunk 30 impounded foreign and local boats as the world’s largest archipelago nation continued its campaign against illegal fishing in its rich oceans.

Among the 30 scuttled empty vessels, 11 were identified from Viet Nam, eight from Malaysia, seven from the Philippines and the rest from Indonesia.

The action, which was witnessed by the Indonesian Anti-Illlegal Fishing Task Force, the Indonesian Navy, National Police, Indonesian Maritime Security Agency, and the Attorney General’s Office, took place separately Monday in five different locations across the country.

Cote d’Ivoire, Burkina Faso to cooperate in war against terrorism

ABIDJAN — Burkina Faso’s Foreign Minister Alpha Barry who was on a visit to Abidjan on Monday said his country will cooperate with Cote d’Ivoire in the fight against terrorism.

“Cote d’Ivoire and Burkina Faso authorities have agreed to unite their efforts in the fight against terrorism,” Barry said, adding that both countries will also reinforce their bilateral relations.

The foreign minister said he had discussed with Cote d’Ivoire’s President Alassane Ouattara about insecurity issues that both countries are exposed to. Barry thanked Cote d’Ivoire for last week’s extradition of a soldier who took part in last year’s failed coup attempt in Burkina Faso.
New round of Kabul meetings hope to set date for Afghan peace talks

KABUL — Officials from Afghanistan, Pakistan, the United States and China meeting in Kabul yesterday expect to set a date for the first direct talks with the Taliban since a previous round in the peace process broke down last year.

At a meeting in Islamabad last month, officials from the four countries said face-to-face talks between the Western-backed government in Kabul and the Taliban should begin by the end of February.

Afghan Foreign Minister Salahuddin Raashi repeated a call for the Taliban to join the talks and said Tuesday’s meeting would prepare the way for direct meetings to open soon.

“We want this group to design the details for talks between Afghanistan government and groups of Taliban by the end of February,” he said at the opening of the meeting.

On Monday, the powerful chief of the Pakistan army, Gen. Raheel Sharif, met officials from Qatar, where the Taliban maintains a political office, to prepare the way for Tuesday’s meeting, the fourth in a series of quadrilateral encounters aimed at laying the ground for full peace talks.

The Taliban, riven by factional infighting since last year’s announcement of the death of the movement’s founder Mullah Mohammad Omar some two years earlier, has not yet given a clear indication about whether it will take part in any talks.

New leader Mullah Akhtar Mansour has laid(501,409),(533,441) down preconditions for taking part in any talks, including the withdrawal of all foreign forces, while a breakdown faction that opposes him has rejected any negotiations.

But officials in Kabul have expressed hopes that at least some parts of the movement can be persuaded to join.

“I think there’s a lot of Taliban that want to come to the peace table,” the outgoing commander of NATO forces in Afghanistan Gen. John Campbell said earlier this month. “That’s what’s going to be hard, to get all the right people to the table.”

A Taliban spokesman said representatives would not be at the meeting on Tuesday.

Tuesday’s four-way talks in Kabul come against a backdrop of continuing violence and increasing military pressure from the Taliban, which has stepped up its insurgency since the withdrawal of most international troops from combat in 2014.

Over the weekend, Afghan officials confirmed that troops had pulled out of two key districts in Helmand, leaving the entire northern half of the volatile province in the hands of the insurgents.

At the same time, insurgents have kept up their suicide bombing campaign, with 14 people killed in an attack on a clinic in Parwan Province north of Kabul on Monday.—Reuters

Pentagon to submit plan to Congress for closing Guantanamo prison

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon is expected to submit to Congress yesterday President Barack Obama’s long-awaited plan for closing the US military prison at Guantanamo Bay, setting up a battle with lawmakers who oppose his efforts.

Obama, whose pledge to shut the facility at the US naval base in Cuba dates back to the start of his presidency in 2009, is seeking to make good on his promise before he leaves office next January.

Pentagon spokesman Captain Jeff Davis said the administration intended to meet Tuesday’s deadline to present its detailed proposal for closing the facility. There are still 91 prisoners detained there.

“We understand the deadline is tomorrow and it’s our intent to meet it,” Davis told reporters.

US officials have said the plan would call for sending to their homelands or third countries detainees who have been cleared for transfer, now numbering 35, and bringing remaining prisoners, possibly several dozen, to US soil to be held in maximum-security prisons. Congress has banned such transfers to the United States since 2011.

Another option that will be cited in the administration’s blueprint will be the possibility of sending some prisoners overseas for prosecution and trial, one US official said.

The closure plan could also serve as a template for how to deal with future terrorism suspects captured in the fight against the Islamic State militant group.

However, the document will not name the alternative US prisons under consideration for housing detainees, US officials said. The administration wants to avoid fuelling any political outcry over specific sites during a US presidential election year.

Still, Pentagon officials have already surveyed a federal prison in Florence, Colorado, a military jail at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and the Navy brig at Charleston, South Carolina.

An effort will also be made to speed up parole-style reviews to determine whether more prisoners can be added to the group cleared for release, officials said.

The plan will include costs for upgrading US facilities and housing the inmates there, according to a source familiar with the matter. The White House last year rejected one Pentagon proposal as too expensive, sending it back for revisions.

Spain arrests four with suspected links to Islamic militants

MADRID — Spanish and Moroccan police arrested four people accused of recruiting potential militants to fight in Syria and Iraq or to carry out attacks in Spain or Morocco, the Interior Ministry said yesterday.

Three Spaniards were detained in the Spanish enclave of Ceuta in northern Africa and one Moroccan in Nadir, Morocco, as part of a joint operation between the two countries, the ministry said.

Including the arrests yesterday, Spain has detained 12 people with suspected links to Islamic militants so far this year.

In 2015, Spain arrested 102 people accused of connections to the Islamic State, more than twice that in the previous year as police stepped up security measures after attacks in Paris.

Authorities also arrested nine people accused of belonging to and collaborating with a criminal and terrorist organisation due to connections with the Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK).

Ceuta is one of two Spanish territories on the Moroccan coast — the other is Melilla — and has been a focus of Spain’s anti-militant investigations. In March 2015 Spain said it had dismantled a militant Islamist cell in the enclave that it said was ready to attack either Spain or other targets in Europe.—Reuters

Air strikes target road out of rebel-held Aleppo: Observatory

BEIRUT — Air strikes targeted one of the last roads into opposition-held areas of Aleppo yesterday, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said, a day after the United States and Russia presented a ceasefire plan to begin Saturday.

Observatory Director Rami Abdulrahman described the air strikes as heavy and said they were believed to be carried out by Russian jets.

The targeted road links rebel-held parts of Aleppo with rural areas to the west of the city that provide access to other opposition-held areas including Idlib Province. A Syrian army offensive backed by Russian air strikes and fighters from Lebanon and Iran earlier this month cut the most direct rebel supply route from opposition-held parts of Aleppo to the northern border with Turkey.

Government offensives are also targeting areas held by insurgents to the south of the city, and areas held by Islamic State to the east of the city.—Reuters
UN agency bans lithium-ion batteries on passenger aircraft

Montreal — The UN aviation agency on Monday prohibited shipments of lithium-ion batteries as cargo on passenger aircraft, following concerns by pilots and plane makers that they are a fire risk.

Lithium metal batteries, which are used in watches, have already been banned on passenger planes globally. Lithium metal batteries, which are used in watches, are not rechargeable while lithium-ion batteries, used in cell phones and laptops, can be recharged.

The International Civil Aviation Organisation’s 36-state governing council said the prohibition would be in effect as of 1 April, and would be maintained until a new fire-resistant packaging standard is designed to transport the batteries. Lithium-ion batteries can still be transported on cargo planes.

The new packaging standard is expected by 2018, ICAO Council President Olumuyiwa Benard Aliu said in a statement.

The ban would be mandatory for ICAO member states.

Pilots and aircraft manufacturers are concerned that existing standards are not strong enough to contain lithium battery fires.

A 2015 working paper by an organization representing plane makers like Boeing Co found current firefighting systems on airliners could not “suppress or extinguish a fire involving significant quantities of lithium batteries.”

But one dangerous goods expert familiar with ICAO’s thinking questioned whether a ban on lithium-ion batteries would really make passenger planes safer. He said instances of such battery fires usually involved deliberate malicious actions by individuals.

“When the industry banned the shipment of lithium-metal batteries, we saw instances of them being passed off as lithium ion batteries,” said the expert, who was not authorized to speak publicly. “Those people who are not complying now won’t comply with a prohibition.” — Reuters

Sydney islands still cut-off after cyclone, fear of Zika and Dengue outbreaks

Sydney — Fiji sent boats yesterday carrying desperately needed aid to remote islands and coastal villages devastated by a powerful cyclone which killed at least 29 people, as aid workers warned of possible outbreaks of Zika and Dengue viruses.

There are fears the death toll could rise in the nation of 900,000 people when communication resumes with the smaller islands hit by Cyclone Winston on Saturday.

Aerial footage of outlying islands taken by the Royal New Zealand Air Force, and posted on the Fiji government’s official website, showed whole villages flattened and flooded after Winston’s destructive winds, up to 325 kph (200 mph), tore through the archipelago of 300 islands. Thousands of Fijians live in tin or wooden shacks in low-lying coastal areas.

Authorities have warned of “catastrophic” damage to Koro Island, Fiji’s seventh-largest island, and more than 8,000 people continue to shelter in evacuation centres across the country.

Prime Minister Frank Bainimarama reassured Fijians that the government was doing all it could amid growing criticism of the slow emergency response in some parts of the country.

“We realise the desperate position that you are in,” Bainimarama said as Winston was visiting an evacuation centre.

“We will not rest until we have reached you and given you the helping hand you so badly need and deserve.”

“Unfortunately the recovery process will take time, perhaps a long time,” he added. “Almost no part of our nation has been left unscarred.”

Aid workers warned of potential outbreaks of the Zika and Dengue viruses, both carried by mosquitoes which will breed in the stagnant water left by the storm.

Peru pipeline leaks in Amazon; two rivers polluted

Lima — Ruptures in Peru’s main oil pipeline have spilled 3,000 barrels of crude in an Amazonian region, operator Petroperu said on Monday, and the oil has polluted two rivers native villages rely on for water, according to government officials.

Two breaks in the pipeline have halted transportation of 5,000 to 6,000 barrels of oil per day, state-owned Petroperu said.

The oil has poured into the Chiracoto and Morona rivers in northwestern Peru, said national environmental regulator OEFA.

At least eight native Achuar communities rely on the rivers for water, said Edwin Montenegro, a local indigenous leader.

Peru’s health ministry declared a water quality emergency in five districts near the spill.

State-owned Petroperu faces some 60 million soles ($17 million) in fines if tests confirm that it has not complying now won’t comply with a prohibition. — Reuters

One dead, several injured after Dutch passenger train derails

Amsterdam — A Dutch passenger train derailed yesterday after hitting a maintenance crane during rush hour, killing one person and injuring several others, local media reported.

Photos of the crash in Dalfsen, 120 km (75 miles) east of Amsterdam, showed four passenger cars on their side after colliding with the crane. Mayor Han Noten told Dutch radio broadcaster NOS that one person had died in the crash. The train was operated by Arriva, a subsidiary of Germany’s Deutsche Bahn. A spokesman for Arriva could not immediately be reached for comment. — Reuters

Chile’s small-scale miners battling to stay afloat amid copper rout

INCA DE ORO, (Chile) — Like his father before him, Alberto Carrizo has worked in Chile’s copper mines and is a miner himself. Carrizo has since he was a teenager, supporting his family as copper prices have slumped. But as copper prices slumped, Carrizo and his colleagues laboring away at the countless smaller mines that dot the Atacama desert are finding the buckets of ore they spent all day digging from the ground are fetching less and less money.

Some are responding by turning to gold mining, others are finding work in growing industries like renewable energy, while a dwindling few are hanging on, hoping prices will yet recover. They are at the sharp end of a commodities downturn that was triggered by slowing growth in China and which has led half of all the small mining operations in top copper exporter Chile to shut in the last eight years.

Although 93 per cent of the country’s output comes from larger mines, a sharper drop in copper prices could send more small and medium-sized mines over the edge. Small mines generally employ up to 80 workers but are often much smaller, while medium-sized ones have a maximum of 400.

The mass closing of mines represents a potential social and political disaster for Michelle Bachelet, who has staked her centre-left presidency on improving social equality while keeping the country’s famously successful economy tucking along. Copper makes up half of all of Chile’s exports.

Mines of all sizes shed some 23,000 jobs last year alone, around 10 per cent of positions in the sector, making it by far the biggest loser in Chile’s economy, according to data from the government’s INE statistics agency. Carrizo, 59, was one of 100 workers laid off from a medium-sized operation last year.

Like many other miners who were let go by larger operations, Carrizo has since turned to small-scale mining and now spends his days 1,000 feet (305 m) underground, chipping away at the copper-rich bowels of a mountain he first visited while his father worked there in 1969.

But his stint at the Rodesia mine, which overlooks the dusty streets of the tiny mining outpost of Inca de Oro, may be short-lived.

“I’ve still got the strength to keep working another 10 or 15 years (but) things are complicated ... I’m going to look for a gold mine because prices are better,” said Carrizo.

Like their larger peers, small- and medium-sized mining companies are coping with the copper price drop by cutting jobs, reducing salaries and heaping more work onto fewer labourers. With leathery hands, miners at small-scale operations across the Atacama are painstakingly picking out rocks that contain higher-grade ore. When China’s economy was still growing in double digits, or near there, it could hardly buy copper fast enough to manufacture wiring, cables and plumbing materials for its construction boom. The metal sold for a giddy $4.00 per pound or more - around double today’s price - and miners would load trucks with as much material as possible.

But now some are turning to gold, whose safe-haven status has driven up prices for the precious metal nearly 15 per cent so far in 2016. “A lot of miners are moving to gold from copper because with the current level of the dollar it’s very profitable,” said Reinaldo Leiva, the top government mining authority in the Atacama region.

“For the miner who has been working in mining for generations, it’s very difficult to switch to another activity because it’s all he knows how to do,” said Leiva.

Despite Grammy performance snafu, Adele regains Billboard top spot

LOS ANGELES — Adele may have cried all day after her shaky Grammy performance last week, but the British songstress reclaimed the top spot on the weekly Billboard 200 album chart on Monday as demand for her hit album “25” remained strong three months after its release.

Adele’s “25” climbed from No 2 after clocking a further 151,000 units across album and song sales and streaming activity, according to figures from Nielsen SoundScan. The album has sold a total of 8.3 million copies in the United States.

It features the song “All I Ask,” which Adele sang last week at the televised Grammy Awards. But her performance was marred by technical issues when a microphone fell on the piano’s strings and the singer uncharacteristically hit sharp and flat notes.

Later in the week, Adele appeared on Ellen DeGeneres’ talk show and performed a flawless rendition of the song, accompanied by a candid interview in which she said she was “so embarrassed” and “cried pretty much all day” after the Grammys.

Other Grammy performers that saw a boost in the top 10 of the Billboard 200 album charts included Canadian pop star Justin Bieber, who won his first Grammy award and climbed three spots to No 2 with his album “Purpose.”

Country musician Chris Stapleton, who picked up four Grammy awards, saw his “Traveller” album climb to No 5 from No 11; R&B star The Weeknd, who won two Grammys, had his “Beauty Behind the Madness” climb six spots to No 6; while Taylor Swift, who won the coveted album of the year Grammy Award, saw her 1989” record climb 12 spots to No 8.

The only new entry to crack into the top 10 this week was “Hymns” at No 4 by husband-and-wife country music duo Joey + Rory.

On the Digital Songs chart, which measures online song sales, Flo Rida’s “My House” held the top spot for a second week with 135,000 copies sold.—Reuters

From heartthrob to Hollywood heavyweight, Leo DiCaprio is Oscar-bound

LOS ANGELES — In a roller-coaster movie awards season with no clear favorite in the Oscars best picture race, there is one sure bet - Leonardo DiCaprio, one of the world’s biggest celebrities, will finally take home the best actor statue on Sunday.

DiCaprio’s fifth acting Oscar nomination, for his role as a fur trapper bent on revenge in “The Revenant,” will prove the charm, awards pundits say, and crown the actor’s transformation from teen heartthrob to Hollywood heavyweight.

“There are cases when a particular actor is seen as overdue, and this year it’s definitely Leonardo DiCaprio,” said Dave Karger, chief correspondent of movie website Fandango. “What’s great is that he is going to win for the right performance,” Karger said.

Twenty years after his first Oscar nomination as a blue-eyed teen in “What’s Eating Gilbert Grape,” DiCaprio, 41, has swept every major prize in the long Hollywood awards calendar for his role as taciturn Hugh Glass, who is left for dead in the wilderness after being mauled by a bear.

The actor carries the two-and-a-half-hour film, which was shot in sub-zero temperatures over seven months, despite barely speaking after the bear rips out his character’s throat.

“He’s really good in the film. It’s not like a throwaway award because of his career. I would be really stunned if he doesn’t win,” said Variety reporter Tim Gray.

DiCaprio has tried for years to shake off his image as the young man who sent women swooning in the 1990s with “Titanic” and “RomEO + Juliet,” even as he partied on yachts with a string of supermodel Girlfriends.

In “The Revenant,” the swaggering star of “The Wolf of Wall Street” and the smooth charmer of “The Great Gatsby” are barely recognizable under a greasy mane, straggly beard and frostedbitten face.

Ironically, his very appearance may have boosted his Oscar prospects.

“WHAT’S in Leo’s favor this year is that he agitates himself on screen. He grows a scruffy beard, he rolls in the mud, he desperately needs a bath,” said Tom O’Neil, founder of awards tracker Gold derby.com. Despite the widespread critical acclaim, DiCaprio has taken no chances, playing an unusually active part in the hand-shaking, smiling marathon that plays out in restaurants, TV studios and on red carpets during awards season.

Once more, Vienna ranked world’s nicest city and Baghdad worst

VIENNA — Vienna, Austria’s grand capital on the Danube river, offers the highest quality of life of all cities in the world, while the Iraqi capital Baghdad, once more, took its place at the bottom of the list compiled by consulting firm Mercer.

The survey of 230 cities helps companies and organisations determine compensation and hardship allowances for international staff.

It uses dozens of criteria such as political stability, health care, education, crime, recreation and transport.

Vienna’s 1.7 million inhabitants benefit from the city’s cafe culture and museums, theatres and operas. Rents and public transport costs in the city whose architecture is marked by its past as the centre of the Habsburg empire are cheap compared with other western capitals.

Switzerland’s Zurich, New Zealand’s Auckland, Germany’s Munich and Canada’s Vancouver followed Vienna — which reached the best position for the seventh time in a row — in the top five of most pleasant cities to live in. Baghdad was again ranked lowest in the world. Waves of sectarian violence have swept through the city since the American-led invasion in 2003.—Reuters

Family-friendly Labrador retriever still America’s top dog

NEW YORK — The Labrador retriever retained the title of America’s most popular dog breed for the 25th consecutive year, even as the upstart French bulldog stole the limelight in New York and other big U.S. cities, the American Kennel Club said on Monday.

The chunky Lab, known for its loping gait and easy-going nature, owes its enduring popularity to its well-deserved reputation as a family pet, said AKC Vice President Gina DiNardo. “The Lab checks all the boxes,” DiNardo said.

“It comes in three different colors. Athletic people can play with it, run with it and swim with it. They are family-friendly and get along with others.”

But being beloved is not necessarily a springboard to elite honors. A Labrador has never won best in show at the Westminster Kennel Club’s annual dog show since the prestigious event began in 1877.

By the same token, being an international superstar — like the German short-haired pointer who won Westminster last week — does not automatically translate into being America’s dream dog.

The German short-haired pointer did not make the top 10 most popular breeds in U.S. homes in 2015, trailing the pack at number 11, DiNardo said.

In addition to the Labrador retriever, the top 10 list includes the German shepherd, golden retriever, bulldog, beagle, French bulldog, Yorkshire terrier, poodle, Rottweiler and boxer.

Several of those most popular breeds have won Westminster’s top honor, awarded four times each to the poodle and the boxer, two times each to the bulldog and the beagle and once each to the German shepherd and the Yorkshire Terrier.

But the Labrador retriever, the golden retriever, the French bulldog and the Rottweiler have never won Westminster’s top honor, according to Westminster spokeswoman Lisa Peterson. In the century that AKC has been tallying the most popular dogs, only four breeds have held that spot: the Labrador, poodle, beagle and cocker spaniel, DiNardo said. The Labrador boasts the longest reign on top, holding on for 25 consecutive years.

“The French bulldog, with its cute mug and bat-shaped ears, is gaining traction, especially among urbanites in New York, Miami, San Francisco and Honolulu, where the breed ranked higher than the Labrador last year.”

“French bulldogs are smaller in size so very portable and good for apartment living, and they don’t require lots of exercise so they fit into a more relaxed lifestyle,” DiNardo said.—Reuters
Hamilton enjoys best ever start to testing

BARCELONA — Triple Formula One world champion Lewis Hamilton completed the equivalent of nearly 2-1/2 race distances on what he said ranked as his best ever start to pre-season testing on Monday.

The Mercedes driver completed a whopping 156 laps at the Circuit de Catalunya — where the Spanish Grand Prix lasts for 66 — to eclipse the mileage of all his rivals as the new cars hit the track for the first time.

Ferrari’s Sebastian Vettel, who was fastest overall and 0.470 of a second quicker than the 31-year-old Briton, did 69 laps in total.

“Today is just a real show of just how amazing this team is,” said Hamilton. “From as far as I can remember, and I’ve been driving a long time, I’m certain this is the most impressive first day I’ve had,” he added.

“If you look back at the first days I’ve had in 2013 and maybe 2014, I had those glitches with the brakes so it’s nice to have a clean day without any issues with the car. Really just go above and beyond.”

Hamilton, champion in 2014 and 2015 with Mercedes, had completed a race distance by lunchtime and told reporters anxious for first impressions that the car felt just like last year’s dominant one.

Mercedes won 16 of 19 races last year, taking both the driver and constructor titles, and have triumphed in 32 of the last 38 grands prix.

Valterri Bottas was third quickest in a Mercedes-powered Williams in the morning but Red Bull’s Daniel Ricciardo ended the day in that position with the Finn fourth.

McLaren’s Jenson Button revived optimism at his Honda-powered team with 84 largely trouble-free laps in a refreshing change from a dismal 2015 when the former champions finished ninth out of 10.

There was also a hint of trouble-free laps in a change at the slower end with markers Manor, now using Mercedes engines, quicker than Renault and newcomers Haas and German rookie Pascal Wehrlein also doing more laps.

Renault’s British rookie Jolyon Palmer, whose former Lotus team were taken over by the carmaker in December, was last on the timesheets.

Despite the strong showing, Hamilton - who has won the past two championships and is aiming to become the first Briton to win four world titles - said the season starting on March 20 would be tough.

On the women’s side, 18-year-old Naomi Osaka, ranked No 114 in the world, advanced with a 6-4, 6-2 victory over Kiki Bertens of the Netherlands.

Sarri sent off as Napoli held at home by Milan

NAPLES, (Italy) — Coach Maurizio Sarri was sent off as Napoli wasted a chance to return to the top of Serie A when they were held 1-1 at home by AC Milan in a tense encounter on Monday.

The hosts, 4-0 winners in a tense encounter on Monday. The hosts, 4-0 winners

Milan levelled five minutes later with their first shot on target, the unmarked Giacomo Bonaventura turning the ball in at the far post after it was unwittingly headed into his path by home defender Kalidou Koulibaly.

The home side dominated the second half but became edgy as they struggled to score a second goal, with Sarri being dismissed for persistent dissent.

Napoli, chasing their first league title since 1990, have 57 points from 26 games, one behind Juventus who drew 0-0 at Bologna on Friday. Dries Mertens went closest for Napoli in the second half when he turned the ball against the foot of the post while team mate Omar El Kaddouri forced a point-blank save from Donnarumma with a snap-shot.

Milan almost ended Napoli’s unbeaten home league record late on when Keisuke Honda’s powerful low drive was turned around the post by goalkeeper Pepe Reina.

Nishikori, Osaka advance in Acapulco

ACAPULCO — Second seed Kei Nishikori defeated Thiemo de Bakker 6-0, 6-3 in the opening round of the Abierto Mexicano Telcel on Monday.

World No 6 Nishikori needed all of 59 minutes to breeze past the 105th-ranked de Bakker, who lost serve six times in the match and could never break his Japanese opponent.

Nishikori, seeded behind David Ferrer at the tournament, was down 3-2 in the second set but took the final four games to secure his path to the next round, where he will face either Dudi Sela or Sam Querrey, who he beat last week at the Memphis Open.

Sexwale ‘open to negotiations and alliances’ in FIFA presidential vote

CAPE TOWN — South African FIFA presidential candidate Tokyo Sexwale said on Monday he is a realist who is “open to negotiations and alliances” ahead of Friday’s vote in Zurich.

Sexwale, whose campaign has failed to gain traction, is the first candidate in the process to suggest he could be interested in striking a deal.

The millionaire businessman is up against Asian Football Confederation president Sheikh Salman Bin Ebrahim Al Khalifa, former FIFA deputy general secretary Jerome Champagne, Jordanian Prince Ali Bin Al Hussein and UEFA general secretary Gianni Infantino in the race to become head of world football’s governing body.

Sexwale ‘open to negotiations and alliances’ in FIFA presidential vote

CAPE TOWN — South African FIFA presidential candidate Tokyo Sexwale said on Monday he is a realist who is “open to negotiations and alliances” ahead of Friday’s vote in Zurich.

Sexwale, whose campaign has failed to gain traction, is the first candidate in the process to suggest he could be interested in striking a deal.

The millionaire businessman is up against Asian Football Confederation president Sheikh Salman Bin Ebrahim Al Khalifa, former FIFA deputy general secretary Jerome Champagne, Jordanian Prince Ali Bin Al Hussein and UEFA general secretary Gianni Infantino in the race to become head of world football’s governing body.
