ONE MORE DEBATE

Amyotha Hluttaw members give nod to State Counsellor Bill

THE proposed State Counsellor Bill that would create the post of the State Counsellor for Daw Aung San Suu Kyi in the new cabinet was passed by the Amyotha Hluttaw (Upper House) by 137 to 68 votes.

The bill, reviewed by The Global New Light of Myanmar, would guarantee Daw Aung San Suu Kyi’s right to contact government ministries, departments, organisations, association and individuals for counsel. She will be accountable in her duties to the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw.

During the debate yesterday military representatives of the upper house derided the bill as being possibly unconstitutional.

Brig-Gen Khin Maung Aye, Defense Service personnel Amyotha Hluttaw representative, debated that though the State Counsellor Bill under discussion is said to be aimed at contributing to and supporting the interests of the State and all Myanmar citizens the bill seems to be intended to vest both legislative and executive power in a sole individual belonging to one political party. The bill is found to adversely effect Article 11 (a) of the constitution, which is an important basic principle, he added.

He also suggested the bill be revised to bring it more in line with the constitution before it is enacted into law.

New govt should invest more in transportation sector: ADB

THE new Myanmar government should invest more in the transportation sector in order to develop the country’s economy, said a report released by the Asian Development Bank (ADB).

The report was officially released at the Asian Development Outlook 2016 ceremony, held at Yangon’s Park Royal Hotel. 31-3-2016

“The GDP of the country has only risen by just over one per cent in the last few years. Investment should be made within the transportation sector to augment the GDP by three or four per cent,” said Peter Brimble, the deputy country director of the ADB in Myanmar.

The report said Myanmar needs to invest US$60 million into its transportation sector.

Nawin Thinzaw Myo was appointed as the Kayin Ethnic Affairs Minister while U Zaw Aye Maung as Rakhine Ethnic Affairs Minister at the regional parliamentary session.

The seventh parliamentary committee is made up of nine members and led by U Myint Lwin of North Okkalapa Township Constituency 2.

I think it is needed to form parliamentary committees, said Col Tin Aung Tun, Yangon Region Minister for Security and Border Affairs, adding that the performance of the committees will decide their effectiveness.

Leaking natural landslide dam likely to collapse in Chin State

WATER in a natural landslide dam with a reported lack of durability in Tonzon Township, Chin State is likely to be released ahead of upcoming rainy season, said an official based on a field trip of GIS team recently.

The dam, at the top of Twi creek, is located 32 miles upstream from Yezyago Dam in the township of Chin State.

The natural landslide dam with a water storage capacity of 12,000 acre-feet is said to be likely to collapse in the rainy season as water has been seen seeping out from the bottom of the dam, said U Maung Maung Than, a retired director from the Forest Department.

“If the dam broke, water could reach Kalay plain where flooding is frequent over the course of the rainy season.”

We are waiting for an order to release water from the dam, he added.

According to the director, the GIS team is currently surveying the water storage capacity of the dam, its durability and the socio-economic status of a nearby Chin village.—Po Thant

Water levels alert along Ayeyawady River

THE water levels of the Ayeyawady River at Myitkyina have risen about 6 ½ feet within 18 hours on 30 March, 2016. According to the 12.30 hr observation on 1st April, it has fallen about 4 ½ feet, according to the announcement of the Meteorology and Hydrology Department yesterday.

According to the director, the formation of judicial affairs, the rule of law, public complaints and petition scrutinising committee that has become the seventh parliamentary committee of Yangon Region Hluttaw carried out its first meeting.

The natural landslide dam with a water storage capacity of 12,000 acre-feet is said to be likely to collapse in the rainy season as water has been seen seeping out from the bottom of the dam, said U Maung Maung Than, a retired director from the Forest Department.

Construction Ministry halts its toll fees collection

MINISTRY of Construction announced yesterday that it would not collect fees for using roads and bridges at its toll gates nationwide as from 1st April 2016.

There are 161 toll gates across the country, according to the statistics of the ministry. Myanmar’s toll fees are the cheapest, compared with other ASEAN countries.

Bridge crossing fees are collected based on the length of the bridges, not on withstand load and bridge types.—Po Thant

Amyotha Hluttaw members give nod to Counsellor of state Bill

Likewise, Col Myin Swe put forward his thoughts that provisions of the bill do not conform to the Constitution as the bill goes far beyond its provisions.

Meanwhile, some elected MPs suggested seeking a bipartisan resolution for the bill at the Constitutional Tribunal.

However, Dr Myat Nyana Soe, secretary of Amyotha Hluttaw Bill Committee, called for parliamentary approval of the bill as 13 members agreed that the bill was drafted and submitted to the Parliament for the sake of the people.

He also clarified his understanding of the bill, saying that the position of counsellor of state would grant duties and rights only in relation to giving advice and gave no provision for the making of serious decisions or giving direct instructions.

The bill allows the counsellor of state the right to give advice to governmental institutions, organisations and individuals as long as the advice is not contrary to the constitution and makes the position accountable to the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw, he added.

The bill includes five chapters and eight articles. The term of office for the Counsellor of state is the same as that of the president, who will be in office throughout the duration of the term of current second parliament, according to the bill.

The bill is aimed at helping create a multi-party democracy in Myanmar and to build a peaceful, modern and developed nation with a market-oriented economic system and to establish a democratic, free federal union.

“Daw Aung San Suu Kyi has already gained rights to advise the President, the two vice-presidents and other union ministers as she is also the Union minister at the President’s Office. So, contrary to the basic principle of power sharing described in the constitution, involvement in other legislative matters is contrary to the constitution,” said Brig-Gen Khin Maung Aye, Director-General of Amyotha Hluttaw representative, told reporters.

In his discussion, Col Hla Win Aung, another military representative of the upper house (Amyotha), said that a law, if it must be enacted, should be clearly aimed at upholding the public interest over personal interest, pointing out that the bill is likely to be drafted for an individual as its section 4 of Chapter Three mentions the name of the individual.

Amyotha Hluttaw representatives, and Pyithu Hluttaw representative Daw Khin San Hlaine were set to support our committee.

Q: How did coordination ensure a smooth transition?

A: Smooth transition was important for the whole process. It was OK to transfer power from Senior General Than Shwe to President U Thein Sein during the first transition as U Thein Sein used to be a general and most of his cabinet members were from Tatmadaw. The transition was not significant. But this transition from U Thein Sein administration to a civilian government resulting from the 2015 general elections made history.

I am very proud of being involved in the historic event and I felt I was rewarded to be tasked to lead this process.

We had five meetings at the President’s Office during the transition period, focusing on ensuring smooth transition. We have not made any special demands. We just made it known that some of 36 ministries would be merged. From the government’s committee side, they informed us of preparations they had done for matters including ministry buildings, budget and future projects.

We believed they have prepared for the handover. No specific demands were made at the meetings. Before 30 March, arrangements were made for a meeting between the incoming and outgoing ministers. We visited places designated for our ministers. I have nothing special to say about this.

Q: Please share information about the role of the former government in the transfer of state duties.

A: Successful transition was due to cooperation of the other side as Myanmar failed to see such kind of transition for about 50 years. I would like to acknowledge and value collaborative efforts of Union Ministers U Hla Tun and U Ye Htut. I laud them for their efforts. The main point is that U Thein Sein administration smoothly transferred duties to U Htin Kyaw administration. This was a great lesson we have learned.

Q: Do you have any predictions of your own to meet possible challenges that lie ahead for the NLD government?

A: Members appointed for the Cabinet, the Constitutional Tribunal and the Union Election Commission met qualifications needed for their posts. Some are not experienced but all have intentions to do good work and toward a developed country. Anti-corruption is a core principle prioritised by our leader Daw Aung San San Su Kyi.

While speaking to the chosen Union Ministers, she called for a strenuous effort to be made for the country during the first 100 days of the new government. Then a set of priority actions will be taken within the next six or 12 months. Plans have been made for every department.

The government is set to continue to work on administrative reform in which some success was achieved in the time of U Thein Sein’s administration and works for mitigating corruption to reach a stage of success.

On national reconciliation involving the Tatmadaw and ethnic groups as well, Daw Aung San San Su Kyi has a soft spot for Tatmadaw. She will have to work together with Tatmadaw. Leaders of Tatmadaw have vowed to cooperate with her.

Ensuring a better livelihood for all people is among the challenges that lie ahead for the NLD government.

Mandalay Mayor’s Water Pavilion renamed to be the Mandalay City Maha Thingyan Water Pavilion

THE Mandalay Mayor’s Thingyan Water Pavilion was renamed the Mandalay City Maha Thingyan Water Pavilion, according to sources in Mandalay. Myanmar’s Thingyan Festival starts on 12 April every year. The name of the water pavilion should be Mandalay City Maha Thingyan Water Pavilion as it is the central water pavilion of Mandalay City according to Mandalay Region Chief Minister Dr Zaw Myint Maung who spoke on the matter at a meeting on the holding of the water festival in the region.

The chief minister called for a review of the Mandalay City Development Committee’s proposed festival spending at the meeting.

He said that alms will be offered to members of Sangha on the morning of festive days across the city.

The meeting decided to rename the Mandalay Mayor’s Water Pavilion as the Mandalay City Maha Thingyan Water Pavilion and discussed matters related to construction of the pavilion and preparation for alms offering ceremony, said U Thet Naing Tun, joint secretary of the MCDC.

Malaysia’s Texchem to explore Myanmar market further through new JV

TEXCHEM Resources Bhd (TRB), which already has a seafood processing factory in Myanmar, plans to explore further the market through a joint venture (JV) with Yangon-based frozen and dried seafood Mascot Industries Co Ltd and Brunei-based investment firm E-Sprint Co Ltd, according to Malaysia’s Star Online.

The news reported that the JV company Texchem Marine Labutta Ltd (TMLL), which will be 65% owned by TRB’s unit Texchem Food Sdn Bhd, would carry out the business of processing and marketing of marine products such as soft shell crab, prawns and hamaguri (clams).

“The JV would enable the TRB group to tap into the technical know-how of E-Sprint and Mascot to further explore the natural resources in Myanmar for the business activities of TMLL,” it said.

TRB said upon signing up of the JV, the paid-up capital of TMLL would be increased to 2 billion kyats (RM6.44mil), of which E-Sprint would have 30% interest and Mascot 5%.

Incomplete EIA reports made public: MCRB

ENVIRONMENTAL Impact Assessment (EIA) reports have only been issued for some of the tender winning off-shore and inland oil and natural gas exploration plots, according to a statement released on 30 March by the Myanmar Centre for Responsible Business (MCRB).

A study conducted by the MCRB reveals that an incomplete number EIAs and Initial Environmental Examinations (IEEs) at the aforementioned oil and natural gas plots have been made public.

“We’ve conducted this study out of a desire for public awareness over EIA initiatives. I believe it’s ever so important for all stakeholders to be able to access these assessments via the internet,” said Vicky Bowman, director of MCRB.

The report was conducted primarily on those winners of oil and natural gas plot tenders after 2013.

The MCRB report states EIAs and IEEs from 11 of a total of 15 tender winning off-shore plots, together with 4 of 15 inland plots, have been publicly released online.

“If local government departments, parliaments, civil society organisations, citizens and stakeholders, together with the media, are left in the dark about the facts and agreements of EIAs and IEEs due to a shortfall in their release, it will be difficult to know whether or not companies are complicit in activities detrimental to the environment and society,” Bowman said.

“This report informs those EIAs that can be read online. Maybe stakeholders will fulfil their responsibilities by reading the reports. I hope it will encourage the reports to be read,” continued the MCRB director.

However, the report also reveals that more reports are made available in the oil and gas sector than in the mining and construction sectors in Myanmar.

The MCRB was established in Yangon in 2013 through a cooperation between the UK-based Institute for Human Rights and Business (IHRB) and the Danish Institute for Human Rights (DIHR). Its activities and initiatives are financially assisted by foreign donors.—Myitmakha News Agency

ARDC to repay Union government K844 million for misused funds

THE Ayeyawady Region Development Committee (ARDC) must repay the Union govt a total of K844.1 million (US$694,079) in cash advances handed out for paving of roads in the regional capital of Pathein, according to the Pathein Township Development Committee (PTDC).

The repayment was demanded after an inquiry committee, comprising regional department officials, carried out inspections of the director of the ARDC, U Aung Min Naing, and roughly 50 of his staff, as to whether the 2015-16 fiscal year budget allocated to the PTDC was used correctly or not.

“We have to pay back some of the state budget as we didn’t realise we had to act in accordance with financial regulations and make submissions to Htuttaw every time we wanted to use the budget. Of course our town is going to suffer as a result of having to pay back to the state for the things our town received,” said U Tin Othn, chair of the PTDC.

“The money that we will use for the coming budget has to be repaid into this budget,” explained U Aung Min Naing.

The PTDC was permitted to use the 2015-16 fiscal year budget of K1.2 billion ($986,842). Thirty per cent of this budget was allocated for staff salaries as well as pensions for retired staff, according to the PTDC.—Myitmakha News Agency

Thai group to construct five hospitals in Myanmar

A TOTAL of five international standard private hospitals will be built within Myanmar from this year of 2016 until 2023 in a mutually beneficial joint operation by the Nay Myanmar and Bangkok Chain hospital groups.

Of the hospitals to be constructed within the country, two will be built in Yangon, while the remaining three hospitals have been earmarked for Mandalay, Shan and Mon States.

“Our Nay Myanmar company also provides medical services in Bangkok. A total of five hospitals will be opened in Myanmar by working together with the Bangkok Chain hospital group. Four of the hospitals will be female healthcare and maternity related with the other to be a general hospital,” said U Nay Kyar Hlaing, chair of Nay Myanmar.

The Nay Myanmar company has opened a trading company and two construction companies within Myanmar, a car import and export company in the United States, together with trading and medical service companies in neighbouring Thailand.

“The hospitals will be staffed with Myanmar and Thai physicians. Services will only be offered in Myanmar currency. [Our hospitals] will provide female health and maternity care, together with international standard cosmetic surgery,” explained Dr Nilar Thein, director of the aforementioned hospital projects.

In a separate side-project, it is known the aforementioned groups of companies will also open a department for female examination and foreign patients within Myanmar’s commercial capital of Yangon at the end of April this year.

According to the schedule of hospital construction, the end of 2016 will see the opening of a maternity hospital in Yangon, with a Women’s Centre opening in Mandalay between 2017-19. A female healthcare hospital will be opened within Shan State during 2019-21 while a two hundred bed capacity general hospital is to be opened in Yangon between 2019-22. The last phase of the project is the opening of another maternity hospital, this time in Mon State, between 2021-23.—Myitmakha News Agency
Indian police file homicide case after flyover collapse kills 23

KOLKATA — Indian police on Friday ordered a case of culpable homicide against the company building a flyover that collapsed in the eastern city of Kolkata, killing at least 23 people and injuring dozens more.

Rescuers worked all night with cranes and jackhammers to clear concrete slabs and steel girders from the 110-metre length of the flyover that broke off suddenly and crashed down on pedestrians and vehicles on the road below.

Ninety were rescued, many with serious trauma injuries, but chances of finding survivors in the wreckage had dwindled nearly a full day after Thursday’s disaster in a teeming commercial district near the city’s Girish Park.

“It is being ensured that there are no more dead bodies under the debris,” S.S. Galeria, a deputy inspector general of the National Disaster Response Force, told Reuters Television.

Television channels broadcast images of a street scene with two autocrushers and a crowd of people suddenly obliterated by a mass of concrete that narrowly missed cars crawling in a traffic jam.

Chief Minister Mamata Banerjee, whose centre-left party is seeking re-election next month in the state of West Bengal, said those responsible would not be spared and blamed the previous state government that had awarded the flyover contract in 2007.

Yet she herself faces questions about a construction project that has been plagued by delays and safety fears under her rule.

A newspaper reported last November that Banerjee wanted the flyover, already five years overdue — to be completed by February. Project engineers expressed concerns over whether this would be possible, the Telegraph newspaper said at the time.

The disaster could play a role in the election in West Bengal, whose capital is Kolkata. The poll is one of five being held this month that will give an interim verdict on Prime Minister Narendra Modi’s nearly two years in power.

Indian company IVRCL was building the 2-km (1.2-mile) Vivekananda Road flyover, according to its web site. Its shares fell another 6 per cent on Friday as police announced they had opened a case of culpable homicide.

The local offices of IVRCL were sealed and all police teams were on its way to interview bosses at the company’s headquarters in the southern city of Hyderabad, according to reports.

A senior IVRCL manager had drawn national condemnation for calling the disaster an act of God.

“We did not use any inferior material and we will cooperate with the investigators,” the company’s director of operations, A.G.K. Murthy told reporters on Thursday. “We are in a state of shock.”

Years of delays may have caused corrosion to metal elements of the flyover, undermining its stability, according to rescuers who examined the wreckage.

Lochs said that concrete was poured on the stretch the night before its collapse.

Rescue operations were slow initially, with local residents forming crowds several deep as they tried to help trapped people.

But three cranes working overnight managed to clear some of the wreckage and free access to vehicles with people believed to be still trapped inside.

Harrowing news images showed the leg and arm of one dead man protruding from under a massive steel girder. The broken leg of a unconscious man flapped uselessly as rescuers gripped his other three limbs to carry him away.

Getting survivors to hospital was complicated by a lack of access for ambulances to the flyover, hemmed in by buildings on either side. Safety standards were lax, witnesses said — Reuters

US, Japan, South Korea warn North Korea over ‘provocations’

WASHINGTON — US President Barack Obama joined with South Korean President Park Geun-hye and Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe on Thursday, vowing to ramp up pressure on North Korea in response to its recent nuclear and missile tests.

Moments on the sidelines of a global nuclear security summit in Washington, the three leaders re-committed their countries to each other’s defence and warned they could take further steps to counter threats from Pyongyang.

Obama held separate talks with President Xi Jinping of China, the closest North Korea has to an ally, and said they both wanted to see “full implementation” of the latest United Nations sanctions against Pyongyang.

But Xi offered no sign that Beijing was ready to help, instead telling the West on how far it will go in tightening the screws on impoverished North Korea, given worries not only about its stability, according to the investigators, the previous state government that had awarded the flyover contract in 2007.

Yet she herself faces questions about a construction project that has been plagued by delays and safety fears under her rule.

Cow bells in the DMZ — Swiss, Swedish generals uphold Korean truce their way

PANMUNJOM (South Korea) — In a tiny mess hall set amid pine trees and rose bushes on the heavily fortified Korean border, a lunch of steak and asparagus is served. Outside, birdsong competes with the drone of North Korean loudspeakers blaring propaganda.

“This is the best restaurant in the DMZ,” says Major General Mats Engman, who heads the Swedish delegation to the Neutral Nations Supervisory Commission (NNSC), set up after the 1950-53 Korean War to uphold a fragile armistice in place of a peace treaty.

Originally a four-nation commission including representatives on the North Korean side from Poland and the former Czechoslovakia, only the Swedes and Swiss remain, based in 1950s-era huts just metres from North Korea.

The camp is staffed by five Swedish and five Swiss officers, a fraction of the 200 based there in the mid-1950s.

The NNSC holds weekly meetings in a light blue hut straddling the border inside the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ), the world’s most heavily defended frontier, sharing with the North Koreans the minutes of its proceedings in a wooden mail box.

“Since May 1995, they’ve never emptied that pigeon hole,” said Swiss Major General Urs Gerber.

“Their argument is they can’t take mail from an organisation which doesn’t exist,” said Gerber, who this week presided over the group’s 3,500th meeting.

The NNSC empties the mail box every few months to stop it overflowing, North Korea, which has long sought a peace treaty with the United States, has said the armistice is “long defunct” and, with it, the NNSC represents on the North Korean island, the NNSC has reinvented itself as a ghost organisation, not the Swedish, Swiss or US capitals, from which the NNSC takes its orders.

“Only a peace treaty or war would end our operation here,” said Gerber.

The only independent military body on the Korean peninsula, the NNSC has reinvented its post-Cold War self as an impartial observer to the annual US-South Korean military exercises that the North complains are preparation for attack and the South Korean side says are defensive.

Through regular inspections, Swiss and Swedish officers make sure those exercises don’t infringe the armistice. The NNSC also operates an education programme, travelling to South Korean frontline units to lecture on the armistice that ended hostilities in 1953. It is that document, not the Swedish, Swiss or US capitols, from which the NNSC takes its orders.

“Only a peace treaty or war would end our operation here,” said Gerber.

A bright red Swiss Club houses a pool table and is decorated with cow bells, while its Swedish counterpart has a fireplace and Viking helmet.

“Every year, before enemy soldiers were locked in a face-to-face stand-off at Panmunjom, North Korean generals had a face-to-face stand-off at Panmunjom, North Korean generals would occasionally visit for a quiet drink at the Swiss Club bar. “It’s like a resort here,” said Engman, a Swedish air force general. “It’s nice and quiet. The air is fresh.”

Wary of the complacency the holiday camp atmosphere can breed, NNSC staff remain on high alert to the dangers beyond the camp’s perimeter fence. No independent body exists to make sure Pyongyang upholds its side of the armistice.—Reuters

North Korea fires short-range missile into Sea of Japan

SEOUL North Korea on Friday fired a short-range surface-to-air missile into the Sea of Japan, the latest in a series of provocations, hours after the leaders of Japan, South Korea and the United States confirmed their united front against Pyongyang’s defiant pursuit of nuclear arms.

The missile was launched around 12:45pm from an area near the eastern city of Sondok, South Hamgyong Province, and was believed to have flown some 100 kilometres before hitting the sea, according to South Korea’s military.

It was initially thought that North Korea fired a ballistic missile, but the trajectory analysed by the military showed that it was an anti-aircraft missile.

Pyongyang has, in recent weeks, suggested it is right to build and use, should it feel the need, missiles and nuclear weapons, with regular threats of a “preemptive attack” against South Korea and the United States.

North Korea has ratcheted up its threats against the two countries, with the UN Security Council endorsed more severe sanctions last month in response to Pyongyang’s fourth nuclear test in January and launch of a satellite-carrying rocket, widely seen by the international community as a pretext for a banned test of ballistic missile technology, in February.

North Korea has also escalated its war rhetoric against South Korea and the United States over their ongoing largest-ever military exercises, seen by Pyongyang as a rehearsal for invasion.

At a time of high tensions involving North Korea, the tri-lateral summit of Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, South Korean President Park Geun-hye and US President Barack Obama took place in Washington just before the biennial Nuclear Security Summit started on Thursday.

“We are united in our efforts to deter and defend against North Korean provocations,” Obama told reporters after the three-way meeting.

For about a month, North Korea has fired a projectile or a ballistic missile every week.

A ballistic missile launched by North Korea, believed to be a medium-range Rodong model, on 18 March, flew some 800 km before landing in the Sea of Japan.

The latest launch of the short-range missile comes two days after a projectile was launched from North Korea’s east coast, with the Joint Chiefs of Staff saying they believed it was a test of a new multiple rocket launcher system.—Kyodo News

M6.1 quake hits western Japan, no tsunami warning issued

TOKYO — An earthquake with a preliminary magnitude of 6.1 jolted western Japan, late Friday morning, the weather agency said.

No tsunami warning was issued following the 11:39am quake, which originated at a depth of around 10 kilometres off the coast of neighboring Mie Prefecture, the Japan Meteorological Agency said.

As of noon Friday, there were no immediate reports of damage or injuries.

The quake, temporarily suspended bullet train services on the Tokaido Shinkansen Line between Shizuoka and Gifu-Hashima stations, affecting some 3,600 passengers, according to Central Japan Railway Co. Local trains in Wakayama, Mie and Aichi prefectures were also briefly halted, operators said.

The cry from the depths

Kyaw Thura

IT would be hard for the youth of today to believe that our country had had its glorious past in terms of education, economy and enabling rural communities to participate in expanding economic opportunities will be central to inclusive growth in Myanmar and the growth of a strong, diverse and united nation.

What then will it take to reduce rural poverty in Myanmar? First and foremost, it will take an increase in agricultural productivity to make farmers richer. Second, improved access to essential services to create opportunities in rural communities will be critical. Third, more focused and efficient public spending is important, so resources flow to people who need them and to programs that work. Amix of policies and investments, informed by listening to both people and evidence, can help achieve all three.

Increasing agricultural productivity. Farmer U Phyo from Zeegon Town owns nine acres of land where he grows rice, but can barely make ends meet with his income. “All farmers are struggling with the same challenges. We are faced with very low prices after harvesting, the rising cost of rice production, and hardly any access to bank loans that are suitable for farmers like us,” said U Phyo.

More than half of Myanmar’s labor force works in agriculture, but the average yield of the dominant crop, paddy rice, is amongst the lowest in Asia. Add in post-harvest losses and high transport costs, and profits from farming fall even further. Indeed, one hectare of monsoon season rice from the Delta region in Myanmar – the country’s rice bowl and one of the most fertile growing regions in the world – on average generates just $140 in profits, compared to $340 in Cambodia and $430 in Vietnam.

Boosting productivity – and thus profitability – will require reforms to increase the availability and adoption of modern farm technologies, as well as investments in seeds and extension services. For example, in 2013–2014, total spending by the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation on seed and extension programs was only 0.22 per cent of agricultural GDP (or 0.07 per cent of total GDP), well below the globally recommended benchmark of 1 per cent of agricultural GDP. Only one per cent of the demand for paddy seed is estimated to be met by supply in Myanmar, compared to nearly 100 per cent in Thailand and Vietnam. Private investment can play a critical role in addressing these constraints, private investment which regulatory reforms can help unleash. Similarly, reforms in the land sector to remove many of the barriers that are preventing farmers from holding secure ownership of their land and increasing their productivity and returns.
Survey team discovers new species in Putao

THE Ministry of Natural Resources and Environmental Conservation, teaming with a group of foreign specialists has conducted a survey in the Northern Mountain Forest Complex (NMFC) from 1 February to 23 March this year in an effort to study biodiversity of special significance in the Khakaborazi National Park and Hponkanrazi Wildlife Sanctuary.

The project was financed by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO), with the survey reporting the discovery of a bird species in Putao district of Kachin State. According to foreign expert Dr Sven C. Renner, its variety is yet to be identified and will require further zoological analysis. The team has collected 86 species of birds, 32 species of bats, 21 species of rodents and seven species of reptile amphibians, with plans to bring them to the UNESCO for assessment of their habits and genetic makeup.

Bullock cart races held at pagoda festival in Amarapura

THE Pahtodawgyi Pagoda in Amarapura township, Mandalay Region, will begin its festival from 1 to 7 April which includes traditional bullock cart racing, it has been learned.

The festival has so far attracted 100 participants from Mandalay, Sagaing and Magwe regions, with organisers saying that the winning bullock carts will receive handsome awards. Local residents said that some attendees offered high prices for last year’s winning bulls in the hope that they would turn out to be champions this year too.

The champion bull that was worth K1.4 million last year has now been sold for K2.5 million to a contestant from Pyay.

The awards are K300,000 for first prize, K200,000 for second prize and K100,000 for third prize.

Calls come for protection of ancient Dawei archaeology site

A SUBMISSION has been made to the Minister of Tanintharyi Region, with the same to be presented to Tanintharyi Hlutaw, for the designation of the historical Shin Motethi region, located within Dawei township, as a protected zone, according to the Department of Archaeology and Museum for Tanintharyi Region.

The submission was made to the Regional Minister on March 15 out of desire for the Shin Motethi pagoda, which lies among the historical Shin Ko Shin pagodas within the Shin Motethi region, along with other ancient buildings that still remain to this day, to be recognized as a being within the parameters of a conservation zone.

“The ancient city walls, together with wash stalls for elephants and horse, still remain to this day. Furthermore, preservation efforts are required in order to prevent the pathways leading up to the pagodas from disappearing. Calls for such efforts are also being made by local residents,” said U Tin Maung Hway, assistant director of the Department of Archaeology and Museum for Tanintharyi Region.

The department conducted a total of three field studies between 2015-16, signing agreements with the majority of the local populace to mitigate damage to the ancient sites within the region. It’s because of these factors that we’ve started to sign agreements with the majority of the local populace to mitigate damage to the ancient sites within the region.” said an individual from a local conservation group who wished to remain anonymous.

He continued by stating the urgent requirement for the region to be recognized as a zone of conservation in light some of the ancient city’s outer walls being destroyed through the current activities of some members of authority within the region which include the dividing up of land plots, construction of housing and turning areas of land into public parks.

It is known the villages of Shin Motethi, Sawhka and Kanaingda exist within the parameters of the ancient Shin Motethi region, while the ancient city walls of the four quarters of the erstwhile city still stand to this day.

Trump meets with Republican leadership; party unity discussed

WASHINGTON — Republican presidential front-runner Donald Trump made a surprise closed-door visit to the Republican National Committee on Thursday after a tumultuous two days on the campaign trail that included a reversal of his pledge to support the party’s nominee.

Trump, who is also struggling to contain the fallout from his Wednesday comment that women who have abortions should be punished if the procedure is outlawed, said afterward he had a “nice meeting” to talk about party unity with RNC Chairman Reince Priebus.

“Looking forward to bringing the party together,” Trump said on Twitter. “And it will happen!”

Priebus said the meeting was scheduled days ago and included a discussion about the process heading into the party’s July convention in Cleveland. Trump leads the Republican race, but is at risk of falling short of the 1,237 delegates needed to become the party’s nominee in the Nov. 8 election, raising the prospect of a contested convention.

“We did talk about unity and working together and making sure when we go to Cleveland, and come out of Cleveland, that we’re working in the same direction,” Priebus told the Fox News Channel. Trump’s relationship with the RNC has been contentious at times, and he recently complained the party was not treating him fairly as it prepared for a possible contested convention.

On Tuesday, Trump backed away from the loyalty pledge he signed in September promising to support the party’s eventual nominee and not to run an independent campaign for the White House. The RNC pledge has unraveled as Trump’s remaining rivals continue to campaign.

Priebus refused to say if the discarded loyalty pledge was discussed at the meeting with Trump, which lasted just under an hour. The billionaire businessman was in Washington for a morning gathering of his newly established foreign policy team. A source who attended said the group discussed threats from Islamic State militants, nuclear proliferation, homeland security assessments and European security levels.

Trump’s campaign also announced it was setting up a Washington office to run its convention and delegate operations and work with the RNC and Congress.

The campaign has been busy trying to dig out of an avalanche of criticism over Trump’s abortion comment, even though he quickly reversed his stance.

Trump pulled back from his initial comments within an hour, first in a statement saying that US states should handle abortion issues and later saying doctors who perform abortions are the ones who should be held responsible.

“You have a presidential candidate that clarified the record not once but twice,” Trump spokeswoman Katrina Pierson told CNN, calling the initial comments a “simple misspeak.” She said Trump was “pro-life with exceptions” and said his statements after the comments in an MSNBC interview were an accurate depiction of his views.

“We shouldn’t make this a 24-hour headline when we have things like terrorism going on in the world,” Trump said.

Trump’s latest controversy threatened to further erode his standing with women voters, many of whom have been offended by his use of vulgarities and insulting language to describe women during the campaign.

The abortion flap erupted as Trump campaigned in Wisconsin ahead of the state’s primary on Tuesday. The primary will be particularly important because all 32 delegates will be awarded to the winner of the popular vote, rather than distributed proportionate to the vote. Two opinion polls released in the last two days showed Cruz moving ahead of Trump by 10 percentage points in Wisconsin.—Reuters

Former Australian ambassador to US warns of Donald Trump presidency

SYDNEY — Australia’s former ambassador to the United States has said the nation’s recently released defence strategy paper would need to be re-written to reflect more on self-reliance should US Republican front-runner Donald Trump be elected the next US president.

Former ambassador to the US Kim Beazley who finished his post in Washington in December 2015, wrote in an opinion editorial that should Donald Trump win the US presidency, Australia could no longer rely on the US forward policy, local media reported early on Friday.

Donald Trump, though he hasn’t yet secured the US Republican nomination for president, is the likely candidate to contest the November US presidential election against Democratic front-runner Hillary Clinton. “If Trump happens, the (Defence White Paper) 2016 will need a rewrite early next year and the strategic sectors will look very different,” Beazley said. “We would still be deeply embedded in what might be seen as the American deep state — the intelligence community, the military and the arms industry.

“However, a lot more intellectual muscle would need to be put on the priority attached to defending our approaches.”

Biden tells Ukraine’s Poroshenko US to give $335 million in security aid

WASHINGTON — US Vice President Joe Biden told Ukrainian President Petro Poroshenko on Thursday that the United States was moving forward with an additional $335 million in security assistance, the White House said in a statement.

Tariff cuts allow 92% of Australian exports to Japan to be duty-free

SYDNEY — A third round of tariff cuts has been applied to 1,200 products covered by an Australia-Japan trade agreement, it was announced on Friday, meaning 92 per cent of Australian exports to Japan will now be duty-free.

The cuts, which cover a range of imports and exports between the two nations, were announced as part of the Japan-Australia Economic Partnership Agreement. The move was announced by the office of Australian Trade and Investment Minister Steve Ciobo, who said the latest cuts would see the scrapping of duty on items such as Australian tuna, beef, oranges and nickel.

Libyan unity government starts work from ‘secured’ Tripoli naval base

TRIPOLI — Libya’s UN-backed unity government held meetings at a heavily guarded naval base in Tripoli on Thursday and a senior military official said it was working to secure state institutions in the capital. The government’s leaders arrived at the base by ship from neighbouring Tunisia on Wednesday in a high-risk bid to take power, after opponents prevented them from flying in by closing down Tripoli’s airspace.

Western powers hope the new government will request and channel foreign support to confront the Islamic State militant group, deal with migrant flows from Libya towards Europe, and restore oil production to shore up its economy.

They have recognised it as Libya’s sole legitimate government and called for a rapid transfer of power, but both the self-declared National Salvation government in Tripoli and the rival administration in the east have rejected this.

Tripoli has been mostly calm since the new government’s arrival, though a television station that supports the National Salvation government went off the air late on Wednesday and there were brief clashes close to the city centre.

On Thursday, members of the unity government’s seven-member Presidential Council held meetings at the naval base with political supporters, local council leaders, businessmen and central bank governor Sadiq al-Kabir.

Abdulrahman Taweel, a brigadier general in charge of organising protection for the new government, described the base as “completely secured”.

“We are working to secure all other state institutions,” he told Reuters without elaborating. “The Council is here to stay and to continue their work here in Tripoli.

They will not leave except for international meetings and will return.”

The Presidential Council and the Government of National Accord (GNA) emerged from a deal mediated by the United Nations and signed in December to overcome an impasse that saw rival governments in Tripoli and Bayda competing for power.

The political confusion in Libya since the 2011 fall of Muammar Gaddafi has allowed Islamic State to take hold in and around Sirte, Gaddafi’s birthplace, and carry out attacks in several other towns and cities.

Abbas says curbing Palestinian attacks, offered to meet Netanyahu

JERUSALEM — Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas said on Thursday he was working to stop Palestinian knife attacks and other street violence against Israel and had offered to meet Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to rekindle peace efforts.

The remarks appeared to be an effort by the Western-backed Abbas to turn the tables on Israel, which has cast him as responsible for the diplomatic deadlock and the surge of bloodshed.

Speaking to Israel’s Channel 2 TV, Abbas gave rare details on the surge of bloodshed.

“It will meet with him, at any time. And 1 suggested, by the way, for him to meet,” the Palestinian leader said in English. Asked what became of that overture, Abbas said: “No, no - it’s a secret. He can tell you about it.”

Netanyahu’s office had no immediate response. Since

“‘We took the knives and spoke to them and said: ‘This is a mistake. We do not want you to kill and be killed. We want you to live, and for the other side to live as well.”

Ankara/Diyarbakir (Turkey) — A car bomb killed seven police officers and wounded around two dozen people in Turkey’s Diyarbakir on Thursday, security sources and officials said, a day before the prime minister is due to visit the biggest city in the largely Kurdish southeast.

A parked car laden with explosives was detonated by remote control as a minibus carrying the police officers turned a corner on a busy street, the sources said, adding that civilians were also among the wounded.

President Tayyip Erdogan, who is on a visit to Washington for a nuclear security summit, denounced the attack, saying it showed the “ugly face” of militants “as they are cornered”.

“This shows terrorism’s ugly face again. The determination of our security forces will, God willing, put an end to it,” Erdogan said in a speech to the Brookings Institute. He said 27 people had also been wounded in the attack.

The southeast has been scorched by violence since a ceasefire between the outlawed Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK) and the government collapsed last July. The government has said it has killed thousands of militants since then, while more than 350 members of the security forces have been killed in the fighting. Round-the-clock curfews have been instituted in parts of the southeast, where the economy also been devastated by the fighting. One of the hardest hit areas has been Diyarbakir’s historic Sur district, which is encircled by UNESCO-listed, Roman-era walls.

Development Minister Cevdet Yilmaz, in the area ahead of Prime Minister Ahmet Davutoglu’s visit, said the government wanted to rebuild the region.

“We are here to rebuild Diyarbakir and make it beautiful, and they want to destroy it,” he said in comments broadcast live. “We will not retreat in fear.”

El Salvador seeks to block prison cell phones to beat crime crisis

SAN SALVADOR — El Salvador is proposing to order telephone companies to block cell phone signals inside prisons where a state of emergency has been declared, in order to prevent gang leaders from ordering murders or extortions while incarcerated.

The move is among a raft of measures the government proposed to Congress on Thursday as the small Central American state struggles to combat record-high murder rates that have made it one of the world’s most violent countries. The government declared a state of emergency on Wednesday in the country’s seven most dangerous prisons, where the proposed measures would be introduced first if legislators give their assent in a vote likely to be held on Friday.

While cell phones and other electronic devices are currently illegal inside prisons, visitors, guards and others still manage to sneak them in for the use of inmates.

Under the state of emergency, prison authorities have been ordered to limit gang leaders’ movements inside jail, and prohibit visitors and outside communication for 15 days.

President Salvador Sanchez Ceren also announced plans to deploy more troops on the streets to battle a rising wave of gang violence. In prison inspections, authorities found cell phones with up to $20,000 in call credits, Rodil Hernandez, the director of prisons, told Reuters. He said phone operators had not helped with the problem so far. A telephone trade group told a news conference on Thursday, however, that phone companies were willing to collaborate with any measures.

Of the 33,000 or so prisoners in the country, some 13,000 are gang members, who often conduct their criminal business unabated from behind bars.

During the first two months of the year there were an average 23.3 murders a day. That was 120 per cent up on the same period last year.

Amnesty says Turkey illegally sending Syrians back to war zone

ANKARA — Turkey has illegally returned thousands of Syrians to their war-torn homeland in recent months, highlighting the dangers for migrants sent back from Europe under a deal due to come into effect next week, Amnesty International said on Friday.

Turkey agreed with the EU this month to take back all migrants and refugees who cross illegally to Greece in exchange for financial aid, faster visa-free travel for Turks and slightly accelerated EU membership talks.

But the legality of the deal hinges on Turkey being a safe country of asylum, which Amnesty said in its report was clearly not the case. It said it was likely that several thousand refugees had been sent back to Syria in mass returns in the past seven to nine weeks, floating Turkish, EU and international law.

“In their desperation to seal their borders, EU leaders have wilfully ignored the simplest of facts: Turkey is not a safe country for Syrian refugees and is getting less safe by the day,” said John Dalhuisen, Amnesty International’s Director for Europe and Central Asia.

Turkey’s foreign ministry denied Syrians were being sent back against their will. Turkey had maintained an “open door” policy for Syrian migrants for five years and strictly abided by the “non-refoulement” principle of not returning someone to a country where they are liable to face persecution, it said. “None of the Syrians that have demanded protection from our country are being sent back to their country by force, in line with international and national law,” a foreign ministry official told Reuters.

But Amnesty said testimonies it had gathered in Turkey’s southern border provinces suggested the authorities have been rounding up and expelling groups of around 100 Syrian men, women and children almost daily since the middle of January. Many of those returned to Syria appear to be unregistered refugees, though the rights group has said they are documented cases of registered Syrians being returned when apprehended while not carrying their papers.

Amnesty also said its research showed the authorities had scaled back the registration of Syrian refugees in the southern border provinces. Those with no registration have no access to basic services such as healthcare and education.

Under the deal with the EU, Turkey is supposed to be taking in migrants returned from Greece on 4 April, but uncertainty remains over how many will be sent back, how they will be processed, and where they will be housed.

The aim is to close the main route by which a million migrants and refugees poured across the Aegean Sea to Greece in the last year before heading north, mainly to Germany and Sweden. “The large-scale returns of Syrian refugees we have documented highlight the fatal flaws in the EU-Turkey deal. It is a deal that can only be implemented with the hardest of hearts and a blithe disregard for international law,” Amnesty’s Dalhuisen said.

Hundreds of thousands protest at French labour reforms

PARIS — Hundreds of thousands of workers and high-school students joined protest marches across France on Wednesday to challenge plans to loosen the country’s protective labour laws that unions say favour businesses.

The day of protest — which led to scores of arrests as youths and police clashed in Paris, Lyon and Nantes — marked the fourth such test of strength in a month for President Francois Hollande.

He has been plagued by low popularity and a jobless rate that is stuck stubbornly above 10 per cent little more than a year before a presidential election.

Organisers said more than 1.2 million people took part. The interior ministry put the number at just under 400,000, higher numbers — despite persistent rain — than in some other recent protests.

The three protests to date had been relatively low-key, but with rain, air traffic and utility staff among those to stop work, there was significant disruption across the country.

On Thursday, Reuters TV footage showed hooded youths in Paris jumping on cars, taunting police and throwing projectiles, prompting riot police to charge some groups. Reuters reporters also witnessed clashes in France’s second city Lyon and in Nantes.

Police arrested more than 100 people and at least 13 officers were injured, the interior ministry said.

Unions said they planned further rallies on 5 and 9 April with the hardline CGT union saying the protests would not end until the draft labour bill was withdrawn entirely.

“Small employees are treated like dirt, we’ve had enough, (and) it’s Hollande who pretends to represent the left,” said Jean-Luc Galtier, a CGT representative who works in the delivery service in Paris. “The youth are told to study for years, but what for?”

World Bank official says political crisis threatens Ukraine reform drive

KIEV — A political crisis in Ukraine threatens to derail a Western-backed reform drive and thwart attempts to pull its conflict-hit economy out of a two-year recession, the World Bank’s country director for Ukraine said on Friday.

Lawmakers are under pressure to form a new coalition to end a deadlock that threatens snap parliamentary elections and has delayed disbursement of $1.7 billion (£1.19 billion) from the International Monetary Fund and other foreign loans.

“The current political crisis poses a very serious threat to the still fragile recovery and exposes a serious enough threat to continued economic reforms,” the World Bank’s Qimiao Fan said at a briefing.

The World Bank kept its forecast for Ukraine’s 2016 economic growth unchanged at 1 per cent and said it saw inflation slowing to 15 per cent this year, compared with a previous forecast of 23.4 per cent.

On Thursday, the results of a Reuters poll of 16 Ukrainian banks and brokers forecast Ukraine’s economy would grow 1.4 per cent in 2016 after contracting 9.9 per cent in 2015 and 6.6 per cent in 2014.

Rescued sea turtle undergoes experimental treatment in Seattle

SEATTLE — Seattle veterinarians will test a rescued sea turtle on Friday to see whether treatment in a hyperbaric chamber, typically used for decompression sickness in human divers, has cured a buoyancy disorder preventing the marine reptile from being released back to the ocean.

Tucker, a 70-pound (32-kg), 20-year-old endangered olive ridley sea turtle, was found in December clinging to life along the Oregon Coast, far from his species’ usual warm-water habitat off Southern California and Mexico, Seattle Aquarium officials said. Tucker has recovered from pneumonia and other complications from hypothermia but still has a buoyancy issue caused by internal gas bubbles in his body that prevent the reptile from diving or remaining underwater.

“It’s almost like the turtle is wearing a life preserver,” Seattle Aquarium spokesman Tim Kuniholm said on Thursday.

Aquarium vets brought Tucker to Virginia Mason Hospital on Monday for a session in the hyperbaric oxygen chamber there, making him the first non-human patient to visit the pressurized facility and the first sea turtle in the United States to undergo such a treatment for buoyancy problems.

Tucker will undergo testing on Friday to determine if the treatment is working and whether further sessions in the chamber are needed, Kuniholm said.

Kuniholm said Tucker must be able to regulate his buoyancy in order to survive in the wild, where he needs to dive beneath the surface for food and avoid predators as well as hazards such as boats. “He could remain in human care, but that’s not our goal,” he added.

The hyperbaric treatment involves the turtle breathing 100 percent oxygen for more than two hours, hospital officials said. Tucker was sedated and observed closely while hooked up to a heart monitor and breathing tube.

“We have treated many scuba divers over the years for a gas bubble disease known as decompression sickness, which is also called ‘the bends.’ This is the first time we have been asked to assist in the care...

Beyoncé jumps into athleisure market with Ivy Park clothing line

NEW YORK — Recording star Beyoncé launched a women’s fitness clothing line on Thursday featuring bodysuits, leggings and headbands, named in part for her 4-year-old daughter, Blue Ivy.

Called Ivy Park, the 200-piece active wear collection is a joint venture with British businessman Sir Philip Green, who owns the Topshop fashion chain.

The collection will feature leggings, T-shirts, crop-tops and jackets all designed for fitness and leisure wear. It will go on sale at selected Topshop and high-end department stores around the world on 14 April.

Beyoncé, one of the most influential celebrities in the world, announced the line by posting photos on her Instagram account, which has more than 65 million followers.

She also released a video in which she dances, swims and works out in some of the clothes, and she is featured on the cover of the April issue of Elle magazine promoting the brand.

In the video which features images from the singer’s childhood and her daughter, Beyoncé said the brand’s name also pays homage to a park in Houston, where she grew up, that has inspired her.

“When I have to conquer those things, I still go back to that park. Before I hit the stage, I go back to that park. When it was time for me to give birth, I went back to that park. The park became a state of mind. The park became my strength,” she said.

Beyoncé’s clothing line taps into the current trend for “athleisure,” which fuses sportswear with streetwear, where clothes usually worn at the gym or on sports fields are also worn socially.

R&B singer Rihanna joined forces with sportswear brand Puma in 2013 to design sneakers that sold out and helped reconnect the brand to female consumers. Rihanna expanded the collection to include athleisure clothing this year.

Actress Kate Hudson co-founded her Fabletics collection of stylish workout clothes online in 2013 and expanded it into brick-and-mortar stores recently.

Country singer Carrie Underwood also launched a collection of athleisure wear last year, Calia by Carrie Underwood, in collaboration with Dick’s Sporting Goods retail stores.

Justin Timberlake sued by Cirque du Soleil over hit song

NEW YORK — Cirque du Soleil is not doing flips over Justin Timberlake’s hit song “Don’t Hold the Wall.”

The Canadian theatrical performance company on Thursday sued the superstar singer with allegations that the song copied part of one of Cirque du Soleil’s original compositions without permission.

Timberlake’s song appeared on his 2013 double album “20/20,” which has sold more than two million copies.

The lawsuit filed in federal court in New York claimed Timberlake borrowed from the song “Steel Dream,” which was originally on Cirque du Soleil’s 1997 album, “QUIDAM.”

The suit seeks a minimum of $800,000 in damages for copyright infringement.

In addition to Timberlake, the lawsuit also named among the defendants the producer Timbaland — real name Timothy Mosley — who helped write the song, and Sony Music Entertainment, which released the album.

Representatives for the defendants did not immediately respond to requests for comment on Thursday.

Copyright infringement lawsuits are relatively common in the music world. In one high-profile case last year, the estate of soul singer Marvin Gaye won a $7.4 million jury verdict against Robin Thicke and Pharrell Williams over their hit single “Blurred Lines.”—Reuters

Miley Cyrus is awesome: Nick Jonas

LOS ANGELES — Nick Jonas says his former girlfriend Miley Cyrus is “awesome” despite he is no more in talking terms with the pop star.

The “Jealous” singer was asked in an event about Cyrus and his opinion about her current image, which is probably much more controversial than when they dated in 2006.

“It’s been a while since I spoke to Miley, but I think that the persona is awesome and I think that she is living proof that you can continue to evolve as an artist and a creator,” he said.

He also said that he would definitely watch Woody Allen’s upcoming film in which Cyrus would appear.

“And I’m a huge Woody Allen fan, so I’m looking forward to seeing the show that she’s doing with him,” he added.—PTI
World’s largest floral chandelier held ahead of Singapore Garden Festival

SINGAPORE — A giant floral chandelier, which is believed to be the world’s largest of its kind, was put up ahead of the upcoming Singapore Garden Festival (SGF) on Friday. The floral chandelier, hanging from a height of 13 metres, measures about 17 meters by 10 meters. It is made from over 60,000 flowers, and will be displayed at Marina Square Atrium until 3 April 2016.

It was put together by Lawrence Wong, minister for National Development and 260-students, community gardeners, corporate volunteers and NParks staff over five days. This year’s Singapore Garden Festival, which is set to be the largest edition, will return for its sixth edition from 23 to 31 July, marking 10 years since it started in 2006. SGF on Friday also launched the “Adopt-A-Plant” initiative to encourage a love for gardening among Singaporeans, and inspire the community to create the city in a garden.

Between 1 April to 28 May, more than 8,000 plants will be put up for adoption at various spots including Marina Square, Raffles Place Park, Singapore Botanic Gardens. A variety of plant species will be distributed, including the peace lily, painted net-leaf and variegated peperomia. During the festival, visitors can look forward to taking in the best of tropical horticulture and floral artistry spread across 5.7 hectares at Gardens by the Bay — almost double the size of the 5-hectare showground in 2014.

Popular highlights such as the landscape and fantasy gardens, balcony gardens, floral windows to the world and gardeners’ cup will also return this year, according to the organiser.

“Hope that this year’s SGF will continue to inspire more people to develop a passion for gardening and all things green. Then we will not only flourish as a city in a garden, but also a city of gardeners and garden lovers,” said Wong. —Xinhua

Historic Texas Alamo to undergo first renovation in a century

SAN ANTONIO — The Alamo, the highly recognizable monument to Texas independence, will have its first major renovation in a century in a project overseen by a Philadelphia firm, officials said on Thursday. The San Antonio landmark, which began life as a Spanish colonial mission in the 1700s, was the site of the 1836 battle in which the Alamo’s vastly outnumbered defenders, including such notables as Davy Crockett and Jim Bowie, were routed by Mexican forces after a 13-day siege.

But the battle became a rallying point for the Texas forces, who inspired by the cry “Remember the Alamo!” defeated the Mexican army a few weeks later at the Battle of San Jacinto near modern-day Houston to secure Texas independence.

British TV comedian Ronnie Corbett dies at 85

LONDON — Ronnie Corbett, the bespectacled British comedian best known as the small half of the hit television double act “The Two Ronnies,” died on Thursday. He was 85.

As tributes flowed in from fellow entertainers, Prime Minister David Cameron said Corbett had the rare talent of making all generations laugh.

“He’ll be remembered as one of the all time great comedians,” he said on Twitter.

Born in Edinburgh in 1930, the baker’s son decided early on that he wanted to be an actor, and moved to London to begin a career on stage and small screen in the early 1950s.

At just over 5 feet 1 inch tall, Corbett initially played characters younger than his real age, and he joked about his size throughout his career with self-deprecating humor. During the 1960s he appeared in cabarets at Winston’s, Danny La Rue’s nightclub in the exclusive Mayfair district of London, and it was there that he was spotted by TV host David Frost who asked him to appear in The Frost Report.

The satirical show was Corbett’s big breakthrough, introducing him to Ronnie Barker, with whom he formed the legendary comedy double act The Two Ronnies which firmly established Corbett as a household name.

Broadcast on the BBC from 1971 to 1987, it drew audiences of up to 17 million viewers at its peak. The comedians performed sketches and musical numbers, and Corbett would present a lengthy monologue in the middle of each show in which he took several minutes to tell a simple joke.

After The Two Ronnies ended, Corbett returned to the TV screens in “Sorry!”, a sitcom in which he played a downtrodden librarian in his 40s who lived at home with a domineering mother.

In 2005 Corbett briefly reunited on screen with Barker for a series called The Two Ronnies Sketchbook, comprising comedy sketches from their old series with original linking material. Barker died later that year at the age of 76. Both Ronnies were awarded the OBE in 1978, and Corbett was awarded the CBE in the Queen’s New Year Honours List at the start of 2012 to reward his services to entertainment and charity. —Reuters

Ferguson calls on United fans to rally behind Van Gaal

LEX Ferguson has urged Manchester United supporters to get behind under-fire manager Louis van Gaal despite the side struggling to avoid a third hugely disappointing campaign since the all-conquering Scot retired.

United are sixth in the Premier League and face strong competition from West Ham United and bitter rivals Manchester City to clinch fourth place, the final Champions League spot, with eight games remaining.

The Red Devils are 16 points behind leaders Leicester City and the FA Cup appears to be their only hope of silverware this season despite heavy off-season investment, but they face a daunting quarter-final replay at West Ham on 13 April.

Ferguson pointed out the host of injuries Van Gaal has had to deal with throughout the season, while also trying to integrate their summer additions into the squad.

“It is dead easy to be critical. You have to be realistic about some things. The number of injuries he has had... if you have players missing of that calibre it has to have an impact on the team,” the club’s most successful manager told British media.

“The other aspect which is always easy to forget, there are five new players in their first season at United and two are young players in (Anthony) Martial and Memphis (Depay), and their promise is good.

“You have to have some patience being a Manchester United fan and they have shown that over the years; in Matt Busby’s time, in my time.”

Van Gaal has brought through a number of academy players this term, such as striker Marcus Rashford, who has netted five times in eight appearances, and Ferguson has tipped the 18-year-old for greater things.

“He’s given nine young players their debut -- I think the future is good. Rashford is an example of what I think is Manchester United... Rashford is a sensation and one of the best in years,” Ferguson said.

Van Gaal’s side host 12th-placed Everton at Old Trafford on 13 April.

MAMI — Kei Nishikori withstood a blistering early assault and saved five match points before battling past Frenchman Gilles Monfils and saving five match points before racing into a 6-3 lead in the tiebreak as Milos Raonic 6-3, 7-6(4).

Nishikori fended off Monfils, Kyrgios stuns Raonic

MIAMI — Kei Nishikori withstood a blistering early assault and saved five match points before battling past Frenchman Gael Monfils 4-6, 6-3, 7-6(3) in a bruising quarter-final at the Miami Open on Thursday. The Japanese number one will face 24th seed Nick Kyrgios in the semi-finals after the Australian upset 12th seeded Canadian Milos Raonic 6-4, 7-6(4).

Sixth seed Nishikori appeared to have his match in control when leading 4-2 in the final set but his usually reliable forehand repeatedly let him down as he fell behind 4-5 0-40 on serve before mounting a gutsy fightback.

When I was down 4-5 and 0-40, I thought I almost gave up the match,” Nishikori, 26, told ESPN in a courtside interview after an epic encounter between two of the most athletic players on the ATP World Tour that lasted two-and-a-half hours.

“But I tried to play one point at a time and tried to focus on what I had to do, especially my serve. In the tiebreak, I just tried to focus again and fight harder.”

Nishikori, who also reached the last four in Miami two years ago, was left reeling in the opening set as the 16th-seeded Monfils played high-risk, aggressive tennis right from the start, highlighted by an explosive service game.

“I was a little bit surprised how he played, especially the first couple of games,” said Nishikori.

“I was waiting for a little bit more long rallies and I wasn’t expecting to play that fast so I had to make some adjustment.”

Kyrgios took down his 25th seed Italian Matteo Berrettini 6-2, 6-0 to advance to the last four and book his place in the Miami Open quarter-finals.

He saved four match points in their 10th game, and a fifth in the 12th, before racing into a 6-3 lead in the tiebreak as Milos made a string of unforced errors, Nishikori finally sealing the win with a forehand crosscourt winner.

“Here, the crowd was a lot of fun, the atmosphere was really good and I thought the level of tennis was really good as well,” Kyrgios said.

“I played really well out here, the crowd was a lot of fun, the atmosphere was really good and I thought the level of tennis was really good as well. To be honest I didn’t think I was going to break during the match but I broke him in the first game. I came out really energetic and I got pretty lucky and that definitely made me more relaxed and made me play my game a little bit easier. — Reuters
