THE Ministry of Natural Resources and Environmental Conservation is planning to step up efforts to fight illegal wildlife trading in the country, following President U Htin Kyaw’s commitment to the protection of the country’s resources and ecosystems in his speech yesterday at the commemoration of World Environment Day in Nay Pyi Taw.

“We have not been fighting the wildlife trade to the fullest extent due to a lack of staff. However, we will step up our efforts to combat the wildlife trade later,” said U Kyaw San Naing, director of the Ministry of Natural Resources and Environmental Conservation to The Global New Light of Myanmar.

Myanmar has seen more cases involving the trade of elephant parts than other wildlife, he said, referring to more than 30 cases of wildlife trading involving elephants this year.

The cases of elephant-related trading were around 13 on average in previous years, according to the ministry.

“The fight against wildlife trading should be effective. Otherwise, it would just cause an increase in prices of animal parts in the illegal markets,” he added.

Meanwhile, tigers are on the brink of extinction in the wild, and the forests of southern Taninthayi are one of the last refuges for this species in Myanmar, according to Fauna & Flora International and the Myanmar Forestry Department, which launched a new initiative to protect this iconic species from extinction in the country’s south.

Myanmar tigers are now at a critical crossroads, facing numerous threats to their survival. The chief threats are conversion of forests into plantations, the wildlife trade and hunting.

A workshop in Myeik Township on 26 May brought together government and non-government groups, local communities and businesspeople to identify priorities for the conservation of tigers in the far south of the country.

Tigers were once widespread in Myanmar, to the point that they were considered a serious risk to rural travellers in the 1800s, even close to what was then Rangoon.

Current estimates for the number of the animals are plagued with a lack of systematic data, but recent official estimates put it at no more than 3,200 left in the wild across 14 ‘range states’.

While at one time tigers may have been at risk from reprisal killings from villagers defending their livestock or families, today the hunting is mostly driven by the illegal wildlife trade—a multi-million dollar industry fuelled by demand for meat, medicines, skins and other tiger products.

“There are strong links globally between wildlife crime and other organised criminal activities, and the theft of Myanmar’s natural and cultural heritage by organised gangs should clearly be a national security concern as well as a global conservation one,” said Mark Grindley, the Taninthayi Programme Manager from FFI.

Mr Grindley also said that over the past two years, FFI has had multiple encounters with Thai off-road groups making illegal incursions into the forests of southern Taninthayi for hunting.

The workshop, which was jointly hosted by Fauna & Flora International (FFI) and the Myanmar Forestry Department, was also attended by an informal delegation from Thailand. Wildlife conservation experts shared some of their own experiences in combatting the illegal wildlife trade and took the opportunity to promote a model of public-private partnership from just over the border in Thailand’s Prachuap Khiri Khan Province.

Pyidaungsu Hluttaw ratifies Agreement on Privileges and Immunities of ASEAN

THE Pyidaungsu Hluttaw approved Myanmar’s ratification of the Agreement on the Privileges and Immunities of the Association of Southeast Asia Nations (ASEAN) yesterday.

Following the proposal by President U Htin Kyaw to ratify the agreement, three parliamentarians expressed their support for ratification.

In the 26th day session of the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw, bills to amend the Pyithu Hluttaw, Amyotha Hluttaw and Region/State Hluttaw election laws, which are deemed to have been passed by the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw, were documented.—Myanmar News Agency

Second Parliamentary Induction Programme begins

The second Leadership and Capacity Building Programme for hltutaw committee chairspersons, secretaries and members was launched with an opening ceremony at the Hluttaw Building in Nay Pyi Taw yesterday.

In his address, Pyidaungsu Hluttaw Speaker Mahn Win Khang said the programme will help improve the capacity of various hluttaw committees and working groups.

The speaker stressed the need to boost the capacity of parliamentary committees, saying they serve as public for a representing different views of individual citizens and civil society organisations.

Likewise, Pyithu Hluttaw Speaker U Win Myint said the induction programme is aimed at enabling the sharing of experiences and knowledge of international parliaments, developing the capacity of committees and helping parliamentarians understand the challenges and opportunities of their respective committees.

The Lower House speaker highlighted the importance of the role of the committees in building support for strong hluttaws, pointing out that building a better parliament is essential for maintaining a strong democracy.

During the second induction programme, which will last for five days up to 10 June, parliamentarians and experts on parliamentary committees from 12 countries are set to provide insight, experience and guidance into how MPs can effectively undertake their duties. The first induction programme for the Myanmar parliament was held from 15 to 19 February this year.—Myanmar News Agency

BBC reporter sentenced to three months in prison for injuring policeman

Ko Nay Myo Lin, a Myanmar reporter for the BBC, was sentenced to three months in prison with hard labour at a court in Chanmyathasi Township, Mandalay, yesterday after he was found guilty of injuring a policeman while covering a student protest last year.

The reporter was charged under Section 322 for harming Police Lance Corporal Ba Maw during the student protest against the National Education Law on 27 March last year.

The reporter contends he has been convicted unfairly.

“The sentence is unfair. It was an accident. Medical documents said it was a minor injury,” said the reporter, adding that there is no organisation to stand up for journalists in trouble.

According to the judge on the case, violations of Section 322 can carry a maximum three-year prison sentence.

U Thein Than Oo, the defendant’s lawyer, said the sentence should not be handed down as the reporter did not intentionally harm that policeman.—Aung Thant Khung

Govt to receive report on rights of Myanmar migrant workers

A REPORT that supports the rights of Myanmar migrant workers will be sent to concerned government departments, according to the Thailand-based Education and Development Foundation.

“Our primary aim is to give the government a report that will allow the government to assist and support migrant workers. Information on incidents in Thailand will be included, as will scenarios on the difficulties faced by migrant workers with access to education, healthcare and equal rights,” said U Htoo Chit, executive director of the foundation.

The drafting of the report began in the last week of May and will be sent to government departments upon completion, while talks relating to migrant worker affairs have been scheduled with the Ministry of Labour, Immigration and Population for 15 June, U Htoo Chit added.

Many instances of Myanmar migrant workers being murdered in Thailand have yet to come to light, according to the Education and Development Foundation. Myanmar migrant workers have also been accused of committing the highly publicised Koh Tao and Ranong murders and are subject to unfair wages.

“I support the drawing up of this report, though I’m not sure how things will transpire during the tenure of the new government. Frankly speaking, support from the previous government for [migrant workers in] Thailand was meagre at the best and completely absent during periods of conflict in border regions,” said Daw Moe Gyi, a former migrant worker in Thailand.

The Education and Development Foundation also issued a report specifically concerning the Ranong murder case on 1 May, which was forwarded to the Ministry of Labour and Immigration and civil society organisations.—Myitmakha News Agency

Delay in reorganising MIC precludes FDI in April, May

NO foreign direct investment (FDI) was made in April or May as a result of the delay in reforming the Myanmar Investment Commission (MIC), according to Nikkei Asia Review.

The MIC was composed of 13 Union ministers and other high-ranking officials under the previous government. The reorganisation of the body has been delayed under the incumbent government, precluding any FDI into Myanmar over the last two months.

Over 100 foreign countries have proposed investments in Myanmar, but these proposals could not be evaluated due to the delay, said an official from the Ministry of Finance.

The Asian Development Bank has projected Myanmar’s economic growth to rise by 8.4 per cent this year, which is believed to be the highest growth rate in Asia. FDI is a crucial factor in calculating national growth rates. Experts have urged the MIC to complete its reformation as soon as possible.

Myanmar earned US$9.5 billion from FDI in 2015, which was the second largest investment volume for the country over the last five years. The World Bank also expects Myanmar’s economic development rate and FDI to rise. The delay in forming the new MIC might pose an obstacle to meeting these targets, said experts.—PPN/Union Daily

National export strategy to be continued up to 2020

THE national export strategy, which includes seven priorities, will be continued up to 2020 to boost Myanmar’s export volume and facilitate the country’s economic development.

The production of rice; pulses and crops that produce oil; fishery products; garments; timber and forestry products; rubber and tourism is being conducted with government subsidies and foreign assistance in cooperation with private businessmen.

“For the development of the rice and paddy industry, pedigree seeds will be supplied for 2 million acres of land for five consecutive years under the national strategy using a fund of Ks 25 million. Rice and paddy research groups and paddy seeds manufacturers will provide [these seeds],” said U Aung Soe, deputy director general of the Ministry of Commerce.

Myanmar has regained its generalized system of preferences (GSP) status from the US and European Union (EU), which impose economic sanctions on Myanmar. Through the lifting of some economic sanctions, Myanmar can develop more opportunities to connect with the world market.

“Myanmar is expected to sign an agreement with an international organization for various peas and crops that can be used to produce oil. About 60 per cent of Myanmar’s export volume comes from natural gas, timber and various peas,” he added.

Government ministries and private entrepreneurs must cooperate on commodity transportation, quality control, monetary services and trade information. The National Export Strategy was initially drawn up in May 2013 with the assistance of German Development Assistance (GIZ) and with the technical assistance of the International Trade Centre.—Union Daily

Direct flights to Bhutan on the way

DAILY newspapers in Bhutan reported that the country has gained approval to fly to Myanmar. Officials from the two countries negotiated and signed an agreement for Myanmar-Bhutan flights at Thimphu, the capital of Bhutan, over the last few weeks.

Bhutanese airlines plan to open direct routes from Thimphu to Yangon and Mandalay, where passengers can take connecting flights to Thailand and Singapore.

With the upgraded air service agreement between the two countries, the travel and tourism sector between Myanmar and Bhutan is also expected to grow, said a representative from Bhutan Airlines.

Bhutan is a landlocked country located at the eastern end of the Himalayas. Flights play a vital role in transport in Bhutan. The revenue of the country is mainly earned from tourists who come to observe the Himalayan mountain range.—200

Hong Kong suspends live poultry trade on bird flu concerns

HONG KONG — Hong Kong decided on Sunday to suspend trade in live poultry after a spot check at a local street market revealed the presence of H7N9 bird flu virus, China’s official Xinhua News Service reported on Monday.

The report, citing a statement from Hong Kong’s food and environmental hygiene department, said that so far the source of the virus, found in a faecal sample, has not been identified. The report said that the Hong Kong health department had contacted three of the four people working at the market and none had bird flu symptoms.

US Navy in Japan applies total alcohol ban after drunk-driving case

TOKYO — The US Navy banned indefinitely Monday the consumption of alcohol by all Navy personnel in Japan following the arrest of a sailor stationed at the US Air Force’s Kadena base in Okinawa on suspicion of drunk driving.

Sailors’ consumption of alcohol on and off base will be forbidden until US naval forces in Japan “are comfortable that all personnel understand the impact of responsible behavior on the Japan-US Alliance and the United States’ ability to provide security and stability in the Indo-Asia-Pacific,” according to a statement released on Monday.

Navy sailors living outside of military bases will also be prohibited from travel except to and from work and for “essential activities” including trips to childcare centres, supermarkets, gas stations or gyms. The travel restriction will stand until all personnel have received certain “face-to-face training” from superiors, the statement said.

Asme Mejia, a 21-year-old petty officer 2nd class, was arrested on suspicion of driving under the influence of alcohol in the town of Kadena in the southern island prefecture late Saturday after crossing into the opposite lane and colliding with two vehicles, according to local police.

As two people in the other cars were hurt in the accident, she could also be charged with dangerous driving resulting in bodily injuries. Mejia herself was unhurt. “For decades, we have enjoyed a strong relationship with the people of Japan. It is imperative that each Sailor understand how our actions affect that relationship, and the US-Japan Alliance as a whole,” Rear Adm. Matthew Carter, commander of US Naval Forces Japan, said in the statement on Monday.

According to a statement from the US military Sunday, Mejia has been taken into custody by Japanese police and US forces are cooperating fully with the investigation.

The drunk-driving arrest came amid already heightened tensions over the US military presence in Okinawa following the arrest last month of a civilian worker at the Kadena base in connection with the death of a 20-year-old local woman.—Kyodo News

Australia storm sweeps three to their death as waves east coast

SYDNEY — Giant waves, cyclone-strength winds and torrential rain swept three people to their deaths on Australia’s east coast on Monday after the storm forced hundreds to flee their homes.

Waves up to five metres (17 feet) were pounding much of the east coast, including Sydney, with the Bureau of Meteorology warning of further danger as the storm moves south.

Two bodies were found in cars washed away in flood waters while a man was swept off the rocks south of Sydney’s surfing beach of Bondi, police said.

The New South Wales state emergency services said they had received more than 9,250 calls and had conducted 280 flood rescues.

Insurers received more than 11,150 claims with estimated insured losses of A$38 million, the Insurance Council of Australia said. It expects the number of claims to rise further over the coming days.

Stocks in Australia’s biggest insurers, including QBE Insurance, Insurance Australia Group and SunCorp, skidded in a stronger wider market.

But CLSA analyst Jan Van Der Schalk did not see a major earnings impact on insurers who said they were still assessing the impact of the catastrophe.

Australian websites including Channel Nine, FoxTel Play and Domino’s Pizza went down on Sunday when Amazon Web Service’s Sydney server experienced a two-hour power outage, IT-news website said.

An Amazon spokesman declined to comment but Amazon Web Services’ status page on Monday showed several connectivity issues in Sydney had been resolved.

Automated teller machines and point-of-sale banking services were also hit. A spokeswoman for the Port Authority of New South Wales state said Newcastle, the world’s largest exit point for sea-borne thermal coal and used by global miners Glencore, Rio Tinto and Anglo American, was placed on restricted ship movements over the weekend but did not sustain any damage.

While some sites had minor production interruptions, none of these has impacted our contractual obligations or production forecasts,” Glencore said.

Spooked by Bangladesh heist, Asian security summit works on cybersecurity

SINGAPORE — The South China Sea dispute and worries about North Korea dominated an Asian security summit at the weekend, but cybersecurity was also in focus as regional officials sought to improve cooperation amid a rise in high-profile hacks.

Alarmed by the heist of $81 million from Bangladesh’s central bank in February, one of the world’s biggest ever cyber heists, cybersecurity was among the top concerns discussed at Singapore’s annual Shangri-La Dialogue.

For the first time, the conference allotted one of its six special sessions to cybersecurity.

“It was indicative that cyber has converted from being a logical threat to a physical threat,” said William Saito, special adviser to the Japanese cabinet on IT strategy. For Japan, safeguarding critical infrastructure was imperative, especially since it is the host for the 2020 Olympics, and cybersecurity was a large part of that effort, he said.

“Cyber, because it is so cross-cutting, will just make existing threats worse,” Saito said.

Cybercriminals, whether from criminal gangs or rogue nations, usually operated beyond borders, the meeting was told.

“Where restrictions differ, they exploit these differences in order to take advantage of our national systems,” said David Koh, chief executive of the Cyber Security Agency of Singapore.

China’s government cannot defend or even say threats or issues within any national borders or within a regional border,” he said.

In the February heist, hackers stole money from Bangladesh Bank’s account at the New York Federal Reserve. One transfer to a Sri Lankan entity was reversed, but four transfers for $81 million went to the Philippines and wound up with casinos and casino agents there.

Most of the money remains missing and the identity of the hackers is unknown.

India, with nearly 500 million Internet users, is preparing to set up an army of 500,000 cybersecurity sleuths within five years, a delegate from New Delhi said at the conference.

“That can provide a bulwark for global cybersecurity efforts,” said Santosh Jha, joint secretary for cyber issues at the Indian external affairs ministry.

Building a transnational cybersecurity defence system is hampered by differences between countries and a lack of trust, delegates said. For instance, Western nations were focused on safeguarding the infrastructure of cyberspace while China and Russia were concerned about content. Also, rival nations use cyber techniques for espionage and potentially for sabotage.

After years of acrimony and allegations of cyber-spying, senior US and China cyber officials held their first meeting last month since the two countries struck an anti-hacking agreement in September.

“You have permanent members of the UN Security Council coming to the table with fundamentally different objectives, it probably isn’t a surprise that the accomplishments to date have been modest,” said Sean Kamuck, a former US National Intelligence Director for Cyber Issues.

What was needed, he said, was to “find low hanging fruit, common interests that we all absolutely share, and build on those premises.”

No country can achieve cybersecurity on its own, Singapore’s Koh said.

“We need to recognise the urgency of the issue and start working together to take action, based on our common security interests.” — Reuters

Viet Nam, South Korea may buy Lockheed planes amid Chinese buildup

BERLIN — Viet Nam and South Korea are looking seriously at buying refurbished Lockheed Martin Corp P-3 and S-3 maritime surveillance planes to counter China’s military buildup and repeated North Korean missile launches, the company said.

Viet Nam is expected to request formal pricing and availability data on four to six older US Navy P-3 Orion aircraft in the next few months, Clay Fearnow, a senior executive with Lockheed’s aeronautics division, told Reuters at the Berlin air show last week.

The Obama administration’s move to completely lift its arms embargo on Viet Nam last month paved the way for such a sale, but any deal would still have to be carefully reviewed by the US government, according to US and Lockheed officials.

A senior Vietnamese military official told Reuters over the weekend that significant weapons purchases are some way off.

“We are not sure what we can buy from the US or what we want to buy,” Deputy Defence Minister Nguyen Chi Vinh said in some of the first public comments from a Vietnamese defence official since the embargo was lifted.

Washington’s decision to permit lethal arms sales to Viet Nam, its former enemy, underscored both countries’ shared concerns about China’s growing military clout. Viet Nam, which borders China, is also a key part of President Barack Obama’s efforts to rebalance US strategy toward Asia amid worries about Beijing’s assertiveness and sovereignty claims to 80 per cent of the South China Sea.

If the sale goes through, retired US Navy P-3 turboprop planes now parked in a desert would be rebuilt with new wings, a new mission system and anti-submarine warfare equipment for Viet Nam, Fearnow said.

The cost could exceed the $80 million to $90 million price tag for each of the 12 P-3s rebuilt for Taiwan several years ago, given the added equipment, Fearnow said.

Lockheed has built new wings or rebuilt aircraft for over 90 P-3 aircraft around the world, including the United States, Norway, Taiwan, Chile and Germany, since 2008, with some orders still in the works, Fearnow said.

The company is scrambling to drum up more orders and extend its wing production line in Marietta, Georgia.

Brazil and South Korea are each looking at ordering new wings for existing aircraft, but must decide by 1 September to avoid a potentially costly gap in the supply chain for the wings, he said.

Boeing Co is also marketing its P-8 Poseidon maritime surveillance plane, but it is significantly newer and more expensive than the P-3. Another possible competitor is Airbus Group SE’s C295 plane, which is built in Spain. The US State Department said it could not comment on potential P-3 or S-3 sales until it formally notifies the US Congress.

In addition to South Korea’s interest in new wings for eight of its P-3s, Seoul is also looking at acquiring 12 of the US Navy’s S-3 aircraft, which were retired in 2009 and are now parked in a desert, Fearnow said.— Reuters

Earthquake measuring 6.0 magnitude strikes off New Zealand’s Kermadec Islands

WELLINGTON — A powerful earthquake measuring 6.0 magnitude struck on Monday morning about 128 kms (79.54 miles) southeast of New Zealand’s remote Kermadec Islands in the South Pacific, the United States Geological survey said.

The shallow temblor, which occurred at a depth of 5 kms (six miles), did not trigger a tsunami warning, the Pacific Tsunami Warning Centre said. The USGS revised the quake’s magnitude down to 6.0 after initially saying it was 6.4.— Reuters

Five hurt in shooting attack in South Thailand

BANGKOK — Five people, including a police officer, were wounded in a shooting which took place outside a grocery in Pattani Province of Thailand on Sunday.

The officer was shot in the abdomen while the others, all civilians, were shot in the leg. Bangkok Post reported. Local police were informed of the attack at about 2 pm local time. They found a lot of blood at the scene and 10 used AK-47 cartridges on the road near the grocery.

According to the police, four men riding two motorcycles arrived at the grocery and sprayed 10 people watching TV there with bullets, wounding five of them.

The assailants fled the scene and attacked a group of teenagers sitting at a roadside pavement about 1 km away from the grocery, but no one got hurt.

The police are searching for the assailants and have tightened security measures.

The police believed the attacks were in retaliation for a government force raid on a temporary camp of an insurgent group on Wednesday, during which four insurgents and a police officer were killed.— Xinhua
Beware of intergenerational injustice

Khin Maung Aye

It is always wise of a government to carry out national and regional development projects. Nevertheless, it is of utmost importance to strike a proper balance between economic growth or development and environmental conservation because natural resources are not infinite and because development poses a great risk of environmental degradation, which is a major cause of natural disasters such as floods, storms and droughts.

In this regard, it is worth recalling what the phrase ‘sustainable development’ means. If this phrase is divided into two words, the latter part suggests economic development or growth despite the existence of a difference between growth and development, whereas the former means environmental sustainability. This being so, the phrase ‘sustainable development’ means the effectuation of the economic development of a country or community in a manner that does not adversely affect the natural environment by using up all the natural resources.

It would be appropriate here to mention the concept of intergenerational justice. As natural resources are not inexhaustible, current generations in their quest for economic growth and development run the risk of harming generations to come, who will be left with few or no resources to exploit for national or regional development.

There is a very common saying that Myanmar is endowed with natural resources. This notion has led many to believe that Myanmar can waste its natural resources according to the whims and fancies of the people. The Global New Light of Myanmar would, therefore, like to make an earnest request to both the central and regional/state governments to effectuate sustainable development in a way that is fair to future generations.

Monitor Lizard and Cobra

Aung Myint Oo

Animal instincts would be less of thinking and more of reactions which make them different from human beings. However, sometimes one may come across some situations which will make them wonder as to whether the above statement is always true. Yes, that happened to me when I had come across an unexpected encounter during one of my usual Sunday morning jogs from which I learnt some invaluable lessons.

Like any other Sundays, after my usual run and cool-down stretches, I was strolling along the track while enjoying morning sun and scenic views of green trees and the creek running parallel to the track. Then, suddenly I was stunned and stopped by an unexpected but spectacular scene which was about 50 meters away from me. Guess what! There was a monitor lizard of fairly large size and a black spitting cobra confronting each other on the road.

While cobra with hood-up was in a defensive posture, monitor lizard raised its head in a combat-ready position. Cobra with shiny black colour scales glistens on the dark-grey asphalt road under the bright sunlight. The view was rather astonishing especially when swaying its hood.

When I remembered to capture a photo of such an unusual but spectacular scene, I whipped out my hand phone and ran up to get closer. I was a bit late. They both must have realised that none had an intention to harm the other. Cobra cooled down and slithered into the bushes at the other side of the road while monitor lizard proceeded to the opposite direction.

What I gathered from that event beside excitements and spectacular views was that although they are short-tempered animals and equipped with lethal weapons, they don’t harm each other naturally. In that particular encounter, they both must have thought first before they decide to take further steps to attack when they bumped into each other while human beings have been killing one another sometimes apparently due to no obvious or some petty issues. These monitor lizard and cobra know how to live together in the same habitat and contribute to keep the ecosystem alive. As much more intelligent human being, why can’t we?

The whole strings of thoughts preceded by that episode brought my attention to the on-going peace process in Myanmar attempting to keep the whole nation out of gun fires as first step and eventually to lay down building blocks for a harmonious nation where different tribes and ethnics can peacefully live together. The recent initiatives towards the “21st Century Panlong Conference” under the stewardship of the State Counselor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi have given a clear signal that the new government take the issue of peace very seriously and put it as a paramount priority ahead of several other burning issues. Since the other important sectors such as economy will not move forward without peace and political stability, there is a strong calling for everyone regardless of what flag you fly and by what name you call god, to put aside differences and to join hands and hearts in an effort to build a unified nation.

The Brilliant Person

Shin Ku Ku

It is very important to have brilliant persons in a society. A brilliant person is not only a talented person but also a decent person. In Myanmar meaning, a talented person is a person who has an aptitude to do something well and a decent person is a person who has a good character. Nowadays, decent persons are scarce and hard to find.

Our Buddha said that a person who brings benefit to the other people can be said a brilliant person. If that person was born in a country, that country will improve certainly. Although many people thought that a brilliant person is not good for all people, it is related to the responsible for a deed. For example, all of the rivers in the world contribute to the good of most people but some people were drowned in the river. It is not the fault of the river; it is the fault of the people. Our Buddha said that there are eight requirements for a man to be a brilliant person. Nevertheless, it is put into practice by us. They are:

• bringing good benefit to the parents who are the most important in a family.
• performing for the sake of the housewife and the family.
• doing good to his subordinates.
• making the merits for his relatives who have passed away.
• showing good behaviour to the government.
• being a fine person for the society.
• showing respect to the Buddhist monks who meditate.

Hence, we must try to become a brilliant person not only for ourselves but also for our mankind while we live in this world.

C-in-C receives Japanese Defence Minister, EU Military Committee chairman

ALTHOUGH the main duty of the military is to defend the state, it is also responsible for ensuring stability, peace and unity in light of the history of our country, said Senior General Min Aung Hlaing, the Commander-in-Chief of Defence Services, during his meeting with Japanese Defence Minister Gen Nakatani at Zayyathiri Beikman in Nay Pyi Taw yesterday.

The senior general added that the military is also obliged to contribute its physical and mental ability toward national development and that the Myanmar military will continue to exert efforts to guarantee stability and peace.

During the meeting, both sides discussed relations and current cooperation between the two armies, technical and monetary assistance provided by Japan and friendship and study tours.

Concerning political reform, Senior General Min Aung Hlaing said the success of a democratic government depends upon its policies and its ability to implement those policies, as well as upon the decisions made by the people.

“Since 2010, Myanmar has treaded on a multiparty democratic path with a civilian government. Although Myanmar democracy is not up to the mark of international democratic norms, Myanmar is firmly walking on the democratic path in its own context,” he said.

In the afternoon, Senior General Min Aung Hlaing received General Mikhail Kostarakos, chairman of the European Union Military Committee.

During the meeting, the two sought ways to establish military relations between the armed forces of Myanmar and the EU for cooperation. They also discussed plans to provide the Tatmadaw with training, including UN peacekeeping training, as well as exchanges of visits and promoting military cooperation between the two sides.—GNLM/Myanmar News Agency

Buddha images found in Sagaing

ANCIENT Buddha statues have been found in Hlawga Village in Pale Township of Sagaing Region at the beginning of the month, locals say.

The ten small seated Buddha images and related objects were discovered outside a house owned by U Aung Kyaw Min and his wife Daw Win Than while the house owner dug in the earth located western part of his house.

The couple immediately transferred those ancient items to the village administration office. Village administrator U Maung Soe said those statues and ancient objects have been placed at the village Pagoda named Ya-danamino, inviting people to visit the place and observe them.— Min Khant Soe (Zeyamye)

Landslides victims in Mawchi get new village

A NEW village for people displaced by landslides in Mawchi, Kayah State, in 2015, was opened yesterday to house more than 360 people.

The village, which was named “Brighter Future Myanmar” by the local people after the KBZ Brighter Future Myanmar Foundation, which funded the construction of the village, includes 60 houses, one school and one library.

The village is also equipped with two water tanks with a total storage capacity of 4,000 gallons and a pipe system to supply water to each home and one 100 KVA transformer for electrification.

The village was opened by Daw Nang Kham Naung and Daw Nang Mo Hom, the two vice chairpersons of BFM.

Around 60 houses were destroyed and more than 360 people were displaced by the landslide, which occurred in a mountainous area between Mawchi Taung Paw Village and Lokharlo Village on 10 and 11 October last year.

The official death toll following the landslide was 17.

The foundation, since its establishment in 2007, provides relief aids to victims of disasters and has been carrying out a nationwide water supply project, spending more than K100 billion so far.

As part of its water supply project, BFM has successfully drilled 76 tube wells, dug and maintained 98 lakes and established 262 water distribution taps in water-scarce areas in southern and eastern Shan State, Kayah State, Mandalay Region and Nay Pyi Taw, while supplying water with 43 tankers to more than 60 monasteries, 49 schools, 11 hospitals and 12 fire services centres.—GNLM
Hillary Clinton picks up win in Puerto Rico’s Democratic primary: NBC News

WASHINGTON — Hillary Clinton won the Puerto Rico Democratic primary on Sunday, moving her a step closer to prevailing over her rival, Bernie Sanders, in the fight for her party’s presidential nomination.

Clinton was the projected winner over Sanders in the US island territory, according to NBC News. The win gives the former secretary of state a boost ahead of a big night on Tuesday, when six states, including New Jersey and California, will hold nominating contests.

Clinton is hoping to cross the threshold of 2,382 delegates needed to secure the nomination for the 8 November presidential election as early as 8 pm EDT on Tuesday, when polls close in New Jersey. She and Sanders, the US senator from Vermont, are in a dead heat in California. But delegates in the state are awarded on a proportional basis, so even a loss there for Clinton would not be likely to stop her from securing her party’s nomination and a likely general election contest with presumptive Republican nominee Donald Trump.

Ahead of Puerto Rico’s nominating contest, Clinton had been just 60 delegates shy of clinching the nomination, when including superdelegates, who consist of party leaders and elected senators, members of Congress and governors.

Sanders is bracing for a prolonged fight that will run into the Democratic convention at the end of July. Networks reported huge voter turnout and long lines in Puerto Rico, with just over 430 polling stations open compared with over 2,000 in 2008.

Hollande says strikes must not disrupt Euro 2016

PARIS — President Francois Hollande said on Sunday it would be incomprehensible if transport strikes were to disrupt the Euro 2016 football tournament that opens in France on Friday, raising pressure on the militant CGT union to call off the action.

Hollande spoke in a radio interview as an opinion poll showed a majority of French people now opposed the wave of nationwide protests against planned labour law reforms that has disrupted fuel supplies and transport services in recent weeks.

Finance Minister Michel Sapin said the stoppages and demonstrations, which have hit rail services, power stations, oil refineries, ports and waste treatment plants, were having no significant impact on the economy.

But they have tarnished France’s image with scenes of barricades and picket-line violence just as the eyes of Europe are on the host country of the Euro 2016.

“No one would understand it if trains and planes — I’m thinking of the Air France pilots’ dispute — were to prevent fans travelling around easily, even if the competition itself has nothing to fear,” Hollande said on France Inter radio.

Rail services have been roughly halved since the CGT and its allies began an open-ended strike last Wednesday. Damaged cargo will be surveyed daily from 8 am to 11:20 am and 12 noon to 4 pm to Claim’s Day now declared as the third day after final discharge of cargo from the vessel.

No claims against this vessel will be admitted after the Claims Day.

The biggest planned zone, which the CGT and its allies began an open-ended strike last Wednesday. A new round of talks on a reorganisation on working time are due to be held at the SNCF state railway on Monday.

Air France pilots have announced plans to strike from Saturday, the second day of the Euros, in a separate dispute over pay cuts.

The Socialist president acknowledged a heightened threat of terrorism during the football tournament but said France was taking all possible measures to keep fans safe. Some 130 people were killed in gun and bomb attacks by Islamic State militants on Paris last November.

Hollande said he had decided to maintain the planned fan zones where tens of thousands of spectators without match tickets can gather to watch games on giant screens. The biggest planned zone is next to the Eiffel Tower in Paris.

Some security officials and commentators have warned the enclosures and queues of fans waiting to enter them could be targets for potential attackers, stretching the resources of police and security firms in charge of protection.

But Hollande said: “I decided not only that the competition must go ahead, (but also) to keep the fan zones and make this into a European festivity for the people, a sporting festival. We have done everything to make it a success.”

A BVA poll showed that many voters were still against the reforms that unions say will strip workers of their rights. A similar poll a month ago showed that a slim majority backed the protests.

“Days before the start of the Euro football tournament, while no solution to the social crisis is in sight, support for the protest movement against the labour reform is dwindling,” Agnes Balle of BVA Opinion said.

The survey carried out on Thursday and Friday showed that 54 per cent of French people interviewed were against the protests. The same number backed the protests in May. Only 45 per cent currently support the protest movement, BVA said.

The poll showed 29 per cent wanted the government to maintain the bill, which aims to make hiring and firing easier, in an attempt to get stubbornly high unemployment falling, with presidential elections a year away.

The same percentage want the bill withdrawn, while 41 per cent want a negotiated solution.— Reuters

Money from Afghanistan’s ‘conflict jewels’ fuels war

KABUL — The illegal mining of some of Afghanistan’s most important minerals is fuelling millions of dollars into the hands of insurgents and corrupt warlords, according to activists and officials who say the money is fuelling the conflict.

The mountains of Afghanistan hold as much as $1 trillion (€693.58 billion) to $3 trillion in mineral resources, according to estimates by the US and Afghan governments, including world-famous lapis lazuli, a deep blue, semi-precious stone that has been mined in northern Afghanistan’s Badakhshan Province for thousands of years.

“In the current circumstances, where 50 per cent of the mining revenue is going to the Taliban, and before that it was going to armed groups, by any reasonable definition lapis is a conflict mineral,” said Stephen Carter, a researcher for Global Witness, a non-profit watchdog that investigates the links between natural resources, corruption and conflict.

“And that means people should think very hard about buying it,” he said.

Since 2014, at least 12,500 tonnes of lapis worth about $200 million have been extracted, much of it illegally or in a way that avoided nearly $30 million in government taxes, according to a report released on Monday by Global Witness.

Global Witness says not only are the Talibans continuing to profit from the illegal mining of lapis and other jewels in Badakhshan, but that senior players in the Afghan government may have direct involvement.

Among the officials Global Witness accuses of profiting from the illegal trade is former defense minister Bismillah Mohammadi, as well as several members of parliament with ties to northern Afghanistan.

A close aide to Mohammadi rejected the claims as “baseless” and an effort to defame the former minister.

Gul Mohammed Beddar, a deputy governor of Badakhshan, also denied allegations that government officials had their fingers in the illicit trade, but confirmed that the lapis mine was run by “illegal armed groups” as well as the Taliban, making it difficult for the government to manage.

Lapis mining was outlawed last year, but the mines now lie in a lawless region controlled by the Taliban and warlords of varying allegiances.

Much of the illegal lapis is being smuggled out through neighbouring Panshir Province, according to officials, home to some of Afghanistan’s most powerful players.— Reuters

Syrian and Russian aircraft step up bombing of Aleppo city

AMMAN — Nearly 30 air strikes hit rebel-held areas around the Syrian port city of Aleppo on Sunday in some of the heaviest recent raids by Russian and Syrian government aircraft, residents and a monitor said.

The group, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, also said an unidentified war plane had crashed in countryside south of Aleppo, in an area where Islamist rebel fighters are battling the Syrian army and Iran-backed forces.

It had no information on what caused the crash.

A civil defence worker said at least 32 people were killed in the rebel-held parts of the city during the air strikes, with 18 bodies pulled from a flattened building in the Qatari neighbourhood, the worst hit.

The monitor said dozens of barrel bombs — oil drums or cylinders packed with explosives and shrapnel — were dropped by helicopter on densely populated districts.

“This week-long campaign of bombing is very intense and day by day it’s getting worse... it is the worst we have seen in a while,” said Bebars Mishal, a civil defence official in rebel-held Aleppo.

For their part, rebels hit government-held areas around the Syrian port city of Aleppo on Sunday in some of the heaviest recent raids by Russian and Syrian government aircraft, residents and a monitor said.

The toll over the whole weekend was at least 44. Aleppo, the country’s largest city before the war, has been divided for years between rebel and government-held zones.

A capture of Aleppo would be a huge prize for President Bashar al-Assad. Russia’s military intervention since September has helped the regime’s forces.

Syria issued a toughly worded statement denouncing Turkey, Saudi Arabia and the US among other countries that were holding them responsible for the latest surge in rebel attacks and accusing them of waging any effort to reach a UN-brokered political settlement.

Damascus says that along with several major Western countries, those that are regional countries finance and train Islamist rebels seeking to topple Assad’s government.— Reuters

Los Angeles — Firefighters managed to tame a fast-moving brush fire in the hills outside Los Angeles on Sunday. The fire burned more than 500 acres and threatened homes in the affluent city of Calabasas, a small city of rugged hills 25 miles (40 km) northwest of Los Angeles that several celebrities call home.

The fire burned 516 acres and was 80 per cent contained by Sunday afternoon, said John Tripp, deputy chief of the Los Angeles County Fire Department.

A commercial building was destroyed in the fire, which started when a vehicle hit a utility pole and brought down a power line, but no homes were damaged. Aerial TV images showed the burned area abutting backyards.

Evacuation orders were set to be lifted Sunday evening in the hills in Topanga Canyon, a rustic stretch famous for its residential and musical landmarks that roll down to the Pacific Ocean.

Tripp said air crews dropped fire retardant “so the fire did not escape and got down into Topanga Canyon.”

The fire was one of several burning in Southern California last week where days of high temperatures dried out brush and produced what Tripp called “extremely dry vegetation.”

Australian authorities send strong message regarding underpaying interns

SYDNEY — Australian authorities have sent a strong message to companies for underpaying interns.

The Fair Work Ombudsman issued a $281,010 Australian dollar fine to a Chinese media company for underpaying interns.

Maurice Blackburn Lawyers Employment Principal Giri Sivaraman told Xinhua on Monday businesses needed to be told Xinhua on Monday businesses needed to be aware that using “internships” to circumvent worker protections under the Fair Work Act 2009 (Cth) could possibly expose them to liability.

“Businesses are officially on notice that exploiting the labor of vulnerable workers will simply not be tolerated,” Sivaraman said.

“Interns are susceptible to exploitation for a number of legal and social reasons.”

He noted the legal meaning of “internship” was unclear. “Businesses target migrant workers with no knowledge of Australia’s industrial law framework, making them unlikely to question their poor employment conditions.” — Xinhua

Swiss reject free income plan after worker versus robot debate

ZURICH/BERN — Swiss voters rejected by a wide margin on Sunday a proposal to introduce a guaranteed basic income for everyone living in the wealthy country after an uneasy debate about the future of work at a time of increasing automation.

Supporters had said introducing a monthly income of 2,500 Swiss francs ($2,560) per adult and 625 francs per child under 18 would cost too much and weaken the economy. Provisional final results showed 76.9 per cent of voters opposed the bold social experiment launched by Basel cafe owner Daniel Haeni and allies in a vote under the Swiss system of direct democracy.

Haeni acknowledged defeat but claimed a moral victory. “As a businessman I am a realist and had reckoned with 15 per cent support now it looks like more than 20 per cent or maybe even 25 per cent. I find that fabulous and sensational,” he told SRF. “When I see the media interest, from abroad as well, then I say we are setting a trend.”

Conservative Switzerland is the first country to hold a national referendum on an unconditional basic income, but others including Finland are examining similar plans as societies ponder a world where robots replace humans in the workforce.

Olivier, a 26-year-old carpenter who works on construction sites and runs a small business designing and building furniture, said he voted “yes”.

“For me it would be a great opportunity to put my focus on my passion and not to go to work just for a living,” he said.—Reuters

Las Vegas — A 26-year-old Army officer from the District of Columbia was crowned winner of the Miss USA pageant on Sunday.

Deshauna Barber, an IT analyst for the Department of Commerce, triumphed over 51 other contestants, including first runner-up Chelsea Hardin, representing Hawaii, to claim victory in the annual contest which was held at the T-Mobile Arena in Las Vegas.

As one of the contestants, Barber was asked a question about women soldiers and replied, "We are just as tough as men."

For her question as one of five finalists, Hardin was asked whether she would support Hillary Clinton or Donald Trump, former owner of the pageant, if the US election were held tomorrow.

The question brought jeers from the audience and criticism on social media. In her reply, Hardin declined to name either candidate, instead addressing qualities a president should possess.

’Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles 2’ tops with $35.3 million, ‘Popstar’ flops

LOS ANGELES — “Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles: Out of the Shadows” debuted to a disappointing $35.3 million over the weekend, becoming the latest sequel this year to fall short of expectations.

The pizza-munching reptiles’ opening weekend was roughly half of the $65.6 million that its predecessor, “Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles,” debuted to in 2014, illustrating that not all franchises are created equal.

Several film series have struggled at the box office in recent months, with “Alice Through the Looking Glass” and “The Huntsman: Winter’s War” losing millions, and other sequels and spin-offs, such as “Kung Fu Panda 3” and “X-Men: Apocalypse,” failing to match the grosses of previous installments.

“Captain America: Civil War,” which plays more like an “Avengers” chapter given the presence of Robert Downey Jr.’s Iron Man than a star-spangled follow-up, did beat the slump, going on to earn over $1.1 billion globally. Paramount spent $135 million on the latest “Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles,” and released the picture across 4,071 locations. It will look to foreign audiences to try to bolster the underwhelming domestic returns.

So far, the situation overseas is more promising. The film opened in 40 international markets, including Russia, Mexico, and the United Kingdom, earning $34 million. There are still several major territories left to open, the biggest being China on 2 July.

The return of the turtles was enough to knock “X-Men: Apocalypse” from the top spot on the stateside charts. The superhero sequel slid more than 65% to earn $22.3 for a second place finish. The latest “X-Men” has earned $116.5 million since debuting over Memorial Day.

In third place, New Line and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer scored with the modestly budgeted “Me Before You.”

The story of a caregiver (Emilia Clarke from “Game of Thrones”) who falls in love with a paralyzed millionaire (Sam Clafin) opened to a solid $18.3 million. Shot for just over $20 million, “Me Before You” appealed heavily to women, with females making up more than 80% of the opening weekend audience.

The weekend’s other new release, the music parody “Popstar: Never Stop Never Stopping,” collapsed at the box office, scraping together a disastrous $4.6 million from 2,311 locations. Universal spent $20 million on the mockumentary, that stars Andy Samberg as a Justin Bieber-like music prodigy and reunites the comedian with his Lonely Island band.—Reuters

Surprise Kanye West concert canceled, fans jam Manhattan street

NEW YORK — A concert by rapper Kanye West was called off early on Monday, leaving thousands of fans massed outside the Manhattan venue where the surprise gig was meant to have taken place.

West had dropped hints about the gig when he made an unannounced appearance at another concert sponsored by a radio station on Sunday, Billboard magazine reported.

Fans turned up by the thousands, with some saying on social media that the show pushed them to buy tickets for the concert, according to reports.

West himself posted “Show at 2 a.m. SOLD OUT!” about an hour beforehand, however the venue announced on its Twitter page “There is no late show”, adding “Please get home safely.”

Pictures and video posted online showed thousands of fans jamming the streets and sidewalks and sitting on top of vehicles. West made a brief appearance outside before departing, his vehicle chased by dozens of fans as it made its way out of the neighborhood.

Muhammad Ali, ‘the greatest’, remembered as boxer who transcended sports

SCOTTSDALE, (Ariz.) — The death of Muhammad Ali, the former heavyweight champion known as much for his political activism as his boxing brilliance, triggered a worldwide outpouring of affection and admiration for one of the best-known figures of the 20th century.

Ali, who had long suffered from Parkinson’s syndrome which impaired his speech and made the once-graceful athlete almost a prisoner in his own body, died on Friday at age 74.

The cause of death was septic shock due to unspecified natural causes, a family spokesman said on Saturday. Ali was admitted to a Phoenix-area hospital, HonorHealth, with a respiratory ailment on Monday.

“He’ll be remembered as a man of the world who spoke his mind and wasn’t afraid to take a chance and went out of his way to be a kind, benevolent individual that really changed the world,” the family spokesman, Bob Gunnell, said at a news conference in Scottsdale, Arizona.

Despite Ali’s failing health, his youthful proclamation that he was “the greatest” rang true until the end for millions of people worldwide. “The greatest” rang true untested until the end for millions of people. His youthful proclamation that he was “the greatest” rang true untested until the end for millions of people.

“Stripped of his world boxing crown for refusing to join the US Army and fight in Viet Nam, Ali returned in triumph by recapturing the title and starring in some of the sport’s most unforgettable bouts.”

“Telling when you talk about Muhammad Ali, as great an athlete as he was, he was the greatest boxer of all time, he means so much more to the United States and the world,” said Ali’s long-time friend, boxing promoter Bob Arum.

He was a transformative figure in our society.” Bursting onto the boxing scene in the 1960s with a brashness that threatened many whites, Ali would come to be embraced by Americans of all races for his grace, integrity and disarming sense of humor.

“In the end, he went from being reviled to being revered,” civil rights leader the Rev. Jesse Jackson said on Saturday. “I am happy my father no longer struggles. He is in a better place. God is the greatest.”

In New York’s Harlem district, fans gathered outside the famous Apollo Theater, where a marquee paying tribute to Ali read: “The greatest of all time. 1942-2016.”

Nearly, hundreds more gazed at projections of phrases and images most associated with Ali, such as “float like a butterfly and sting like a bee.” Few could argue with his athletic prowess at his peak in the 1960s, with his dancing feet and quick fists. But Ali became much more than a sportsman. He spoke boldy against racism in the ’60s as well as against the Viet Nam War.

Ali met scores of world leaders, during and after his championship reign, and for a time he was considered the most recognizable person on earth, known even in remote villages in countries far from the United States.—Reuters

Save the last dance for me: Being cute not enough for this spider when choosing a mate

SYDNEY — A Sydney scientist has discovered seven new species of the tiny Australian peacock spider — a spectacularly colorful, three-millimetre arachnids that dances to attract a female mate.

Jurgen Otto, with the help of colleague David Knowles, made the two latest discoveries of the miniature creatures while looking for other spiders in Western Australia in November and had all seven named in the scientific journal Pechamaria last month.

“They are very, very colourful, they often have iridescent scales and they do something quite remarkable. They perform a courtship dance for females, to impress them,” Otto told Reuters TV on Monday.

While footage of the dances is proving popular online, some female peacock spiders end up eating the colorful males if they are not impressed by the courtship.

The discovery of the new spiders means there are now 48 known species, found mostly in southern Australia and which range in size from three to five millimeters. Juveniles measure just half-a-millimeter.

The Sydney scientist, who studies mites during the day, developed a passion for the tiny spiders in 2005 after discovering an arachnid on a photograph he took folowing a bushwalk in Ku-ring-gai Chase National Park, New South Wales.

Otto said the dancing spiders, who offer no threat to humans, were even proving popular with arachnophobes.

“They are harmless, they are cute, they are colorful, they remind people of their own cat. I often compare them with kittens with too many legs, so really people get excited when they see them,” he said.

People who hate spiders confess that they actually don’t help loving these ones and in time this will just change the opinions people have of spiders, I hope.—Reuters

Djokovic eyes Golden Slam, turns rivals green with envy

PARIS — He is the tennis version of the Incredible Hulk and on Sunday Novak Djokovic made his closest rivals turn green with envy as he finally achieved something no man had accomplished for nearly half a century.

Playing what he described as “flawless tennis” over the last three sets of his 6-1, 6-2, 6-4 win over Andy Murray, Djokovic cracked his Roland Garros jinx at the 12th attempt — and fourth final there — to win the French Open.

It allowed the Serbian world number one to hold all four grand slam titles at the same time — a milestone that is so difficult to reach that it had not been done by a man since Australian Rod Laver won the second of his calendar Grand Slams in 1969.

In an era when it is tough to keep track of the countless records achieved by Roger Federer and Rafael Nadal — who own 31 majors between them — Djokovic managed to complete a feat that was tantalisingly just out of reach for his rivals-in-chief. “It’s one of the ultimate challenges that you have as a tennis player. I’m very proud, very thrilled,” he said on becoming the third man after Don Budge and Laver to hold the Wimbledon, US, Australian and French Open titles simultaneously.

Federer had two attempts at completing four in a row in 2006 and 2007 — but each time he was thwarted in the French Open final by Nadal. The Spaniard similarly arrived at the 2011 Australian Open as the holder of three grand slam titles but fell in the quarter-finals.

Despite all their success, Federer and Nadal — who are among eight men to have completed a career grand slam, never managed to win the Australian-French Opens back-to-back. “With Djokovic having achieved that benchmark, he is well placed to complete something no man has ever achieved — the Golden Slam of four majors and Olympic gold in the same year.” — Reuters

Two late goals give Mexico 3-1 win over Uruguay

GLENDALE, (Arizona) — Mexico scored twice in the final five minutes to beat Uruguay 3-1 in a pulsating Copa America Group C match in which each side had a man sent off on Sunday.

The early omens were not good for Uruguay who stood stunned before kickoff when the Chilean national anthem was played instead of their own.

Mexico then made a light- ning start with the fastest goal of the tournament so far in their first incursion into the Uruguay penalty area in the fourth minute.

Hector Herrera and Uruguay’s Alvaro Pereira both leapt to meet Andres Guardado’s curling cross from the left with the defender heading into his own net. Uruguay, who had Matias Vecino dismissed on the stroke of halftime after a second booking for a foul on Jesus Corona, equalised in the 74th minute from the free kick awarded when Guardado was also shown a second yellow card.

Carlos Sanchez, the man Guardado brought down, hit the free kick into the box where captain Diego Godin, headed past Alfredo Talavera to put the record 15-times champions back on level terms. Mexico, however, had the last word when their captain Rafael Marquez scored a fine goal from a corner, finding the top corner of Fernando Muslera’s net with an angled shot from the right.

With the Uruguayans pushing forward in numbers in search of another equaliser, Herrera made the result safe in the second minute of added time with a header from Diego Perez’s neat flick across the face of goal. Uruguay, without injured striker Luis Suarez and on the back foot for most of the first half, missed two good chances either side of halftime.

Edinson Cavani, put through by Nicolas Lodeiro, was one-on-one with Talavera but the left-winger curled his shot over as he followed through after winning the ball in the tackle. Jamaica’s coach Winifred Schaefer was sent to the stands for the second half after a heated discussion with referee Victor Carrillo at the break.

The Caribbean islanders fought hard in the second half but Michael Hector hit the post with a shot and, at the other end, Blake needed to make a superb save from Wilker Angel’s diving header.

Messi more determined than ever to win with Argentina

SANTA CLARA, (CA) — Argentina’s Lionel Messi has unfinished business going into the Centenary Copa America that is being staged in the United States with the Barcelona star keen to help his nation capture a first major title in 23 years.

After finishing runners-up at the 2014 World Cup in Brazil and at last year’s Copa America in Chile, Argentina are favorites to lift the Copa America for the second time in their history and first since 1991.

“This Copa America is a very special tournament for me and more so after losing last year’s final. That is why I want to win it for Argentina,” Messi, whose 37 goals in 45 appearances were key to Barca’s La Liga and King’s Cup double winning campaign in 2015-16, said to El Mundo Deportivo.

The Argentina captain hurt his back in an international friendly against Honduras on May 27 and is unlikely to start on Monday in his country’s opener against Chile at the Levi’s Stadium in Santa Clara, California.

He has reassured his fans, however, that the injury is not serious. “I feel better,” he said.

Coach Gerardo Martino was not at the helm of Argentina at the World Cup but did hold the reins last year when they lost 4-1 on penalties to Chile.

That result led La Nacion newspaper to write at the time: “It seems a nightmare without end, a curse that never ends. The national team continues without winning a title and it’s already 22 years.” — Reuters
