TORRENTIAL rains over Chin State have caused some damages to a dam preventing the silt above the Yazagyo dam located in Kalay, Sagaing Region, according to the Irrigation Department.

Rains caused the upper dam to overflow into the lower dam with waters reaching 651 ft by morning, with water levels dropping to 645 ft by the evening time, the Irrigation Department said in a report.

“The impact on the dam was not serious enough for residents to worry,” said U Maw Maw Naing, assistant director of the Irrigation Department.

U Maw Maw Naing refuted rumors about ten workers being trapped in the Silt-preventing dam during the disaster. The triple-purpose Yazagyo Dam along with a hydro-electric power plant in Kalay Township, Sagaing Region, was inaugurated in February, 2016.

The dam was built to mitigate the flooding of Kalay area, supply irrigated water to the farmlands and generate electricity to supply the local populace. Sagaing Region, which was by floods last year, was provided with a K100 million fund by a philanthropic foundation for a disaster preparedness and response recently.—Myanmar News Agency

Second parliamentary sessions to reconvene on 25 July

THE PYIDAUNGSU, Pyithu and Amyotha Hluttaws will reconvene on 25 July for their second session under the newly elected government, it was announced yesterday.

All representatives of parliaments have been notified to contact their respective offices in person not earlier than 23 July and not later than 24 July.

The first session of parliament under the majority lead National League for Democracy Party government focused on its ‘100-day plan’ to initiate development in the country.

Some of the bills focused on were the amendments to the Ward and Village-Track Administration Law, the Peaceful Assembly Law and also the revocation of the Law to Safeguard the State against the Dangers of Those Desiring to Cause Subversive Acts — these being the more high profile laws up for discussion. International rights groups have spoken in favor of the changes but have called on for more to be amended in the Peaceful Assembly Law. —Myanmar News Agency, GNLM

Centres aims to help develop ambulance system for emergency care on expressway

THE MINISTRY of Health and Sports is working to establish an ambulance system along the Mandalay-Yangon Highway. The program would see two emergency departments in Meiktila Township.

Currently, there are only three emergency wards in Yangon, Naypyitaw and Mandalay, according to the report.

The 200-bed general hospital in Meiktila will assist in establishing the two centres in Meiktila Town and Aleywa Station as a part of the ‘100-day plan’ that is drawing to a close. The MoHS will be proving the facilities with the doctors and trained nurses. A total of 24 staffers including six doctors, six ambulance drivers, 12 conductors have joined the ministry’s special training programme to learn how to assist in emergency cases. This will be the on call team stationed at the new centres.

The emergency ward in the Naypyitaw General Hospital can receive 20 to 26 patients simultaneously, where over 10 specialists and around 30 trained nurses are on call at the emergency department.

Golfing Ideology for Peace Process

Khun Hte Min

Golf is also known as “The Gentleman’s Game” but in this case I would like to define it as “The Game of well-mannered People” to avoid skepticism and to create a greater sense of inclusiveness.

Before playing Golf, one has to know golfing ideology, basic rules and etiquette. It begins with staying quiet while other players are walking a shot and not staying within the sight of fellow golfers while they are setting their sight to their objective. In addition, the usage of foul language and losing patience on slower golfers is not acceptable behaviors. Furthermore, if a group think there is even a slight chance of hitting a group ahead, they should wait until it is clear to proceed.

Besides, it is also part of the game that the group ahead must preserve a fairway to leave the best condition possible for other groups following.

Though I am writing about golf and its ideology, I must admit that I am not a golfer myself. I find the ideology of the game so fascinating because it represents respect, humility, rule of law, inclusiveness and sustainability. I strongly believe that its rules and ideologies are very relevant to the present context of Myanmar especially, for our ongoing efforts to attain a long lasting peace of a nation vastly diverse.

Golfing remains a competitive sports but the nature of competition is different compared to other competitive sports. In golfing, a certain par is already set for different holes depending on the distance and the difficulties contenders have to overcome. The objectives are set and how well players perform is up to their individual performance throughout different holes. All contenders have to overcome the same obstacles and perform their best.

Victory at the cost of others is not part of the game. In short, it is a healthy and peaceful competition that insists on bringing the best out of each player.

To argue for the relevance of golfing ideology to the peace process, I believe the following points need mentioning:
1. Golfing is an outdoor game and it is not pleasant or playable in bad weather conditions. Similarly, when there is ongoing fighting and different waves of conflicts, it is almost impossible to go forward with the peace process.
2. Before playing golf, one must be aware of and respect golfing etiquette and the rules of the game. In the peace process, all involved parties must abide by the set rules and political framework and most importantly constructive mutual respects.
3. In golfing, apart from elite competitions, all players are not equal and to promote inclusiveness and equality, different handicap points are offered to less experienced players. The same ideology could be applied during the negotiation of the peace process.

Of course, this is always easier said than done. In reality, the tasks our leaders have are more sophisticated and sensitive. Nevertheless, when a country has the right leadership and time to fulfill hope, contributing for a constructive cause is what a good citizen must do.

Over 100 of U Bein Bridge’s teak pillars replaced

The Department of Archaeology has announced repairs have been made to 120 teak pillars of Myanmar’s famous U Bein Bridge as part of the department’s large-scale preservation initiative.

The department reportedly carries out annual small-scale maintenance work to the bridge, but this has been required to be scaled-up to a large-scale preservation project which began on 23 March this year.

“We’ve made repairs to teak slabs, which make up the bridge’s walkway, as well as to 120 of the bridge’s pillars. Those [pillars] beyond repair have been replaced with completely brand new ones, while others, which can still be used, have been left so as to preserve the antiquity of the bridge.

The status of the pillars is determined by digging at the base of the pillars,” said U Aye Lwin from the Department of Archaeology.

It is reportedly not yet possible to gauge a project completion date, but it could cease delays as work can allegedly only be conducted on dry days, which are few-and-far-between during the rainy season.

Preservation of the U Bein Bridge, meanwhile, has been financially supported with donations from the Myanmar Teakwood Company Ltd. “Cement was used to replace a middle section of the bridge which broke during Thingyan. We don’t have a shortage of wood here in Myanmar, so I wish [the concrete] would be replaced with wood.

If not, the bridge won’t be able to live up to its international acclaim, as the world’s longest teak bridge, anymore,” exclaimed a local tour guide.

The U Bein Bridge was originally constructed using teak back in 1851. It measures 1.2 kilometres in length and comprises 1086 pillars. —Myitmakha News Agency

Inadequate wages fuel corruption, say lawyers

HIGHER salaries, and fulfilment of the basic requirements of legal staff need to be met in order to eradicate corrupt practices within the judicial system, say lawyers and democracy activists.

Lawyer Robert Hsan Aung, says that although there have been some changes within the judicial system in the three months wake of the new government coming to power, it is not a replete change, with corrupt practices still permeating the sector.

In a bid to completely rid the system of these practices, he says, the government needs to increase the wages of staff within the sector to an appropriate level that meets their expenditure.

“The police fall within the framework of legal sector staff. Increasing the capacity of these individuals, and providing them with a sufficient salary that meets their expenditure, could see an end to what we like to blame as the partiality towards justice.” said Robert San Aung.

He added, the increasing of wages is not just about directly issuing cash; corrupt practices such as bribery can be controlled only if currency inflations is also tackled.

Further still, members of anti-corruption monitoring organizations assigned to court rooms need to be experts of courts of law practices, and effective legal action must be taken towards complaints.

U Than Swe, member of the democracy force organisation, states that corruption is still being practiced within the different levels of the judicial system in the lead up to the announced crackdown by the new government during its term in office, but that these immoral practices are only prevalent because of inadequate salaries.

“The primary factor behind bribery among legal staff is insufficient wages,” he said. “If one wants to enter the police force for example, they have to purchase their entire uniform, and all its trappings, out of their own pocket.

Further to that, fuel for their police cars is not subsidised by the department— police officers must finance it themselves.

That’s why police officers are complicit in corrupt practices such as bribery. It’s exactly the same for judges and other legal staff. Salaries need to be increased.”

If the new government is to really carry out the eradication of corruption within the legal sector, in lieu of a five-year plan to tackle the issue, it could be more productive in a much shorter space of time were it to cooperate with NGOs, democracy activities and other politicians.

The five-year tenure of the erstwhile U Thein Sein administration saw promulgation of a law for which legal action would be taken on any presents received by government staff worth more than K300,000 in value, while the incumbent U Htin Kyaw government is reportedly working to firmly stamp out corrupt practices. —Myitmakha News Agency

Myanmar, Thailand discuss cooperation in anti-human trafficking

The Myanmar Association in Thailand (MAT) said yesterday that it had a coordination meeting with Thailand’s Department of Special Investigation to cooperate in tackling human trafficking.

Their discussions included a compensation plan for three Myanmar migrant fishery workers who were tortured at work.

According to the MAT, the creation of job opportunities in the country would be the only option to save the people from being exploited in the neighbouring country.

China is a country where a majority of Myanmar people were trafficked in person, followed by Thailand.

Unemployment and job scarcity has forced people to leave the country in search of better jobs abroad, especially in neighbouring countries, activists said. —Soe Win SP

Repairs to Mandalay’s Shwe-Nandaw Monastery still on-going

MANDALAY’S Shwe-Nandaw Monastery is having a dilapidated brick staircase repaired at the ancient site in order to preserve the sight. Experts from World Monuments Fund (WMF) have been working with local experts since August 2015 on repairing plaster and wooden sections.

The international team comprises Egyptian, Italian, Moroccan, Syrian and Malian experts who have worked on previous projects in Thailand.

“If one is about to repair an ancient building, one must first study in detail, the background history of the structure, the era in which it was erected, together with the materials and expertise employed in its construction,” said Josephine Dilarayaro, a consultant to the WMF.

Compiling the information of the monastery started in 2014 with repairs beginning the following year.

“The experts are still continuing their preservation efforts, which were only carried out after working together to compile information on the monastery for about a year. I can’t give an indication as to when repairs will be completed,” said U Ye Myint, member of a local ancient building preservation group.

Maintenance efforts to the timber of the monastery has allegedly seen some of the timber pillars be replaced, while a total of half a million US dollars has been funded for the project.

Some of the timber pillars have had to be replaced. The repair budget is Ks591m (US$500,000). —Myitmakha News Agency

BORDER Affairs Union Minister Lt-Gen Ye Aung said on Thursday during his inspection tour of the housing projects in Mon State and Kayin State that the construction of affordable houses played an important part in regional development.

The Ministry of Border Affairs is constructing 50 low-cost houses in Thaton township.

The union minister also went on an inspection tour of a satellite town planning in Myawady township, Kayin State, where officials briefed him on the undertakings in progress.

The Lay Kit Kaw satellite town is under development for local residents who were displaced by previous armed clashes in a village two miles away from Myawady township.

The ministry has built 213 low-cost houses in the new town in partnership with the Kayin State government and the Nippon Foundation, with plans under way to construct 100 more houses.

The town has now a population of 1,700 from 462 households.

KATHA residents in Sagaing Region have increased their maize crops, instead of other popular crops for the region, as the plants are able to withstand the extreme weather. This has been seen in the expansion of maize crops from previously two acres per farmer to roughly five acres, according to reports. The CP, 888, 621 and 619 varieties of maize are those mainly cultivated in the region, with an average of 6-7 kg of maize seeds used per acre for plantation.

"Among seasonal crops, maize is easy to grow. It can withstand weather damage and it doesn’t require being fed with fertilizers either. Moreover, expenses incurred for planting maize are minimal as it’s not a labour intensive crop. Those are the main reasons behind why farmers are favouring the growing of maize," said U Than Khine Oo, a maize farmer from Katha Township.

The price of a bushel of dried threshed maize fetches between K8,000-10,000 which are reportedly exported to China through Bamo and Mandalay wholesalers. "Maize is sold within the Katha markets for both local consumption and transportation to market further afield. About 10 to 15 boats full of maize from eastern Katha are sold within Katha with locals purchasing the crop seasonally," said Ma Thuzar Win, a corn agent from Katha Township’s Thiri Kayma.—Myitmakha News Agency

Workers caught in the middle of industrial zone privatisation

WORKERS from Myanmar’s industrial zones are reportedly experiencing difficulties with the privatisation of state-owned industrial zones.

"Workers are experiencing a hard time during the transfer of government factories into the hands of private owners as issues relating to housing and salaries are not being taken care of." said U Ye Naing Win, representative of the Workers Dispute Settlement Arbitration Council.

It is reported that 104 state-owned factories — producing the likes of cotton, textiles, porcelain, candy and biscuits — began to be privatised back in 2009.

"Factory workers entitled to a government pension have already been issued with compensation at the time of privatisation. They were privatised with the promise of workers continuing to receive the same salary. The factory owners have then conducted their business in accordance with the Myanmar Labour Law," said U Myo Zarni Win, assistant secretary of the Ministry of Industry. Workers from a cotton factory in Paleik, Mandalay Region, have reportedly staged protests after the private owner, who rented the factory from the government, broke the rules of the worker-employer contract.

"The workers are protesting over a breach of contract [by the factory owner] in relation to Saturday and Sunday rest days from work. The factory operates on three shift rotations. But, if the next day for a night shift worker is Saturday, they can’t return home [as they shift isn’t over]. Vietnamese homemade mini-submarine on first sea trial on Sunday

HANOI — A private mini-submarine made by a Vietnamese mechanic went on its first sea trial on Sunday, local media reported.

At around 8:00 am local time on Sunday (01:00 GMT), the mini-submarine started undergoing its first sea trial in Viet Nam’s northeastern waters. The submarine was escorted by Vietnamese naval ships, reported local Tien Phong (Pioneer) online newspaper.

An evaluation council of Viet Nam’s Ministry of Defense (MoD) will carry out quality evaluation while the submarine is undergoing diving and floating for hours.

Nguyen Quoc Hoa, the one who designed the mini-submarine, said on Tien Phong that prior to the sea trial, his product must pass around ten times of trial in pools and then in lakes. It also passed two-day exams of floating, diving, changing in circles, moving backwards and handling collisions while diving hosted by the MoD.

Hoa, a director of an engineering company in Viet Nam’s northern Thai Binh province, some 110 km southeast from capital Hanoi, started to produce a mini-submarine in 2014.

One year later, Hoa and his engineers studied to produce a second mini submarine, which is supposed to be in smaller size and have more functions than the first one.

According to Hoa’s design, the submarine is made of steel and weights about nine tons. It is able to operate at a maximum depth of 50 metres at a maximum speed of 15 nautical miles per hour. It can dive for three days and three nights with two people on board.

Malaysia’s minister hails win-win relations with China under Belt and Road Initiative

KUALA LUMPUR — The Belt and Road Initiative would be an impetus for world development and benefit Malaysia in a win-win relations with China, said a senior Malaysian official on Sunday.

The initiative had already fostered a series of cooperation between Malaysia and China, including the sister industrial parks in Quzhou, China and Kuantan, Malaysia respectively, said Transport Minister Liow Tiong Lai in an interview with the Star, a local newspaper, which was published on Sunday.

Currently, Malaysia is China’s third largest trading partner in Asia, after Japan and South Korea, and China is Malaysia’s largest trading partner, accounting for some 20 per cent of Malaysia’s total exports.

In 2014, bilateral trade exceeded 100 billion US dollars. The trade growth has moderated in the past two years, but Malaysia has seen increasing investment from China.

“All these can happen because of the Belt and Road Initiative,” said Liow. China’s investments are both timely and crucial for Malaysia amid the global economic slowdown and dwindling foreign investments, the Star reported.

Malaysia’s exports fell 17.2 per cent year on year in the first quarter of 2016, due partly to the sluggish demand for commodities.

Among major investments from China announced recently, China General Nuclear Power Corporation has acquired the underlying assets of Edra, a Malaysian company, including 13 clean energy projects scattered in Malaysia, Egypt, Pakistan, United Arab Emirates (UAE) and Bangladesh.

China Railway Group Limited (CRIC), one of China’s largest state-owned companies, announced a 2 billion-US dollar investment in a future transportation hub of Malaysia’s capital city Kuala Lumpur.

Liow said his country was keen on fostering another economic partnership with China, and had proposed more projects for China to consider. China has expressed its interest in the high speed rail linking Kuala Lumpur and Singapore, which is expected to cost more than 10 billion US dollars.

Liow, who is also the president of the Malaysian Chinese Association, a leading ethnic Chinese political party, has been making frequent trips to Beijing to entice more direct investments into the country. “We want China to not only take our projects, but also bring in soft loans and technology transfer. That is why we work with them,” he said. As transport minister, he expects the Belt and Road Initiative and investment to benefit Malaysia’s ports and airports.

It would benefit Malaysia and the ten-member Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN) as a whole by boosting connectivity through infra-structure development, he said. “It brings Malaysia and ASEAN closer to China. When people from both sides are closer, there will be more economic opportunities.”—Xinhua

Mayoral election in southwestern Japan opens voting to teenagers

FUKUOKA — Teenage voters cast ballots on Sunday in a mayoral election in a city in southwestern Japan, the first local poll ahead of Japan’s upper house election next week in which 18-year-olds and 19-year-olds will vote for the first time since the minimum voting age in Japan was lowered to 18 from 20.

In the poll to pick the new mayor for Ukiha in Fukuoka Prefecture, voters including graduating senior high school students will choose between incumbent Mayor Norio Takadaki, 64, and Shigemichi Nakahara, also 64 and a former elementary school teacher. Both candidates are running as independents. The number of eligible voters is 25,626, of which the newly eligible teenagers account for about 600, according to the city election board.

SYDNEY — Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull said Sunday the result of Saturday’s too-close-to-call general election will take until the end of the week to determine, but he is confident his Liberal-National coalition will secure a majority in parliament, if only by a thin margin.

“ Australians would have no doubt preferred a clearer outcome last night,” Turnbull told reporters after vote counting was suspended at 2am.

“I remain quietly confident that a majority coalition government will be returned at this election when the counting is completed,” he said.

With the counting of ballot papers set to resume Tuesday, opposition Labour party leader Bill Shorten urged Australians to patiently await the result.

“We may not know (the outcome) for some days to come, but there is one thing for sure: the Labour party is here to stay,” Shorten said. “Three years after the Liberals came to power in a landslide, they have lost their mandate.”

The prospect of a hung parliament, where neither party has an absolute majority, is seen as a real possibility.

Turnbull attributed the delay to the fact that another 8% of voters either pre-poll or voted by post, and those votes, along with absentee votes, have yet to be fully counted.

Those votes will determine the result in as many as 12 seats in the 150-seat House of Representatives where Turnbull needs to get 76 seats to form a new administration.

So far, the vote count shows the Liberal-National coalition with 71 seats, up from 55 in the 2013 election, and the ruling Liberal-National coalition with 67, down from 90 in the previous election.

“Our experience is that these postal votes and pre-poll votes... traditionally favour Liberal and National Party candidates, especially when they are incumbents, so if that trend were to be manifest again here, that is likely to deliver majority government to the coalition,” Turnbull said.

Throughout the campaign, opinion polls predicted that ruling coalition would return to power, but with a significant loss of the seats it took in the landslide 2013 election in which it garnered 53.5% per cent of the two-party preferred vote.

If a hung parliament is declared, both parties will be required to negotiate with minor parties and independent parliamentarians to form government.

The last time that happened, in 2010, it took 17 days until a result was known.

If neither party can form a majority in coalition with the minor parties and independents then Australia could face another election.

This election was the third consecutive federal election called by a prime minister who came to power via a mid-term party-room coup.

The most recent leadership change came in September 2015 when Turnbull splatted the party leadership and ousted the deeply unpopular Tony Abbott, who had been in the top job for less than two years.

Just six months later, Turnbull called a double-dissolution poll, Australia’s seventh, using a piece of rejected legislation aimed at instituting a construction industry watchdog as an election trigger.

The eight-week election campaign, the longest voters have had to endure since the 1960s, saw the nation’s economic future, debt and job creation as the hot-button campaign topics. But with little to separate the parties, rhetoric was ultimately the campaign.

Both major parties launched full-fledged scare campaigns as polling showed the likelihood of a close-run result, the government appealing to its conservative base using the perceived threat of so-called refugee “boat people”, while the opposition warned of a right-wing attack on Medicare, Australia’s universal health care system.

One tangible policy difference between the parties that grew in importance late in the campaign was on the issue of same-sex marriage.

Turnbull, who is seen to represent the more socially-conservative side of the Liberals, promised to put the issue of gay marriage to a national plebiscite at the behest of the right wing of his party — a faction that supports Abbott and remains deeply suspicious of Turnbull.

Bulgarians behind restaurant killings, international link probed

DHAKA — Seven militants who killed 20 people at a restaurant in Dhaka were Bangladeshi and authorities had tried before to arrest nine of them, the police said, as investigators probed for possible links with international Islamist extremist groups.

The gunmen stormed the upmarket restaurant in the diplomatic zone late on Friday, before killing non-Muslim hostages, in an attack which the Islamic State militant group said in a statement. It also said the attackers had al Qaeda links.

Bangladesh’s capital that resulted in the nation’s first major terror attack, which the Islamic State militant group said in a statement. It also said the attackers had al Qaeda links.

The Bangladeshis were later told to close their eyes and recite verses from the Koran and one militant cursed at Bangladeshis for eating with non-Muslims during the Muslim fasting month of Ramadan, which is more coordinated than the previous assaults.

Gummen singled out foreigners as soon as they stormed through the doors of the restaurant popular with expatriates. They ordered all Bangladeshis to stand up before the killing began, a source briefed on the investigation said.

UN Security Council, UN chief condemn terror attack in Bangladesh

NEW YORK — The UN Security Council on Saturday condemned a terrorist attack in Bangladesh’s capital that resulted in the deaths of at least 20 people taken hostage, with the UN chief giving assurance that the United Nations is prepared to assist the South Asian country in efforts to prevent all forms of violent extremism.

Calling the incident, for which the Islamic State militant group has claimed responsibility, a “heinous and cowardly terrorist attack,” the Security Council said that “terrorism in all its forms and manifestations constitutes one of the most serious threats to international peace and security.”

The 15-member body also called for identifying those behind the crime and bringing them to justice, and urged all states to cooperate actively with relevant authorities for such end. — Kyodo News
Disputes in South China Sea might jeopardize peace and stability of our globe

Bahauddin Foizee

The human race has experienced two devastating world wars and the race is not ready to experience one more. Although another war is neither hoped nor acceptable by the general human race, the developing incidents in South China Sea indicate that the military superpowers may impose on human race another of such devastating wars.

China has long claimed a large swath of South China Sea as its own territory and has been constructing an artificial island in the region. On the other side, with the backup from the U.S., some of China’s ASEAN neighbours (especially Philippines and Viet Nam) started to move towards claiming territories in South China Sea that are also claimed by China. China has stated its claim in three official documents: (i) the 1947 Location Map of the South China Sea Islands released by the Kuomintang government in Nanjing, (ii) the 1958 Declaration of the Government of New China on the Territorial Sea and (iii) the 1992 Law on Territorial Sea and Contiguous Zone. These documents state that the disputed islands are part of the sovereign territory of China. Despite such evidences in China’s favour, the relevant ASEAN neighbours are broadly encouraged by the joint military drills with the U.S. and the U.S.’s military presence in the region.

South China Sea is a major maritime trade route, with trillions of dollars in global trade passing through the disputed area each year, including over a trillion dollars from the U.S. alone. That is why, the region is of utmost importance to the U.S. Throughout 2015, the U.S. had involved in highly provocative and inflammatory conducts against China in South China Sea. In an instance, the U.S. sent its naval ships within the 12 miles of a Chinese-controlled island, while in another instance it sent military aircraft over the disputed territories. China initially reacted to such provocations only by condemning and protesting the incidents in press-conferences. However, China saw the U.S. actions as intrusions into its own territory and deliberate provocations. Chinese Naval Chief Wu Shengli warned, “If the U.S. continues with these kinds of dangerous & provocative acts, there could well be a seriously pressing situation between frontline forces from both sides on the sea and in the air, or even a minor incident that sparks war.” Such a warning is the reflection and outburst of increasing tensions that might take the shape of military conflict in no time if such sensitive incidents are not handled properly.

Do you live to teach or teach to live?

Kyaw Thura

The word ‘private tuition’ has become a fashionable profession not because more and more government teachers have to give private tuition to earn extra income and satisfy their daily basic needs, but because they feel it is no longer possible to bring up a family on a low income.

Although a loud rant about private tuition, rumour has it that teachers found guilty of engaging in the job are liable to three years imprisonment.

This hearsay is not unfounded because the 1974 tuition law prescribed a three year imprisonment and a fine of Ks 30,000. All over the world, teaching is recognised as a noble profession while teachers enjoy the high public esteem in society. The idea of threatening teachers with imprisonment for private-classes, will amount to thinking that additional teaching as a crime. Such an attempt will make the problem regarding Myanmar’s education sector worse far from solving it.

Since the world itself is a mixture of good and evil, the world of education is no exception. There do are heroes and villains in this noble profession.

There are a number of corrupt teachers who push their students to receive tuition from them and sometimes threaten to fail them if they don’t. On the other hand, there are teachers who just live to teach.

It is understandable that many schools in rural areas are still struggling with outdated teaching/learning aids, materials and facilities. Being outdated does not necessarily mean being insufficient. It is time for something to be done on a national level. The best we can hope from the government in the fight against private tuition is a decent remuneration package for teachers and a promise of more spending on education. Then, punishment to corrupt teachers will justify itself.

Mandalay moat, Boatalote lake and Myine Hey Wun beautified

TATMADAWMEN are at it again with their amazing beautifying skills. This time they were spotted at the southern wall of the Mandalay Palace City wall making the place look beautiful.

Myine Hey Wun garden was also cleansed at the Ancient Cultural Area around the Mya Nan San Kyaw Golden Palace and in the Myine Hey Wun Garden, again by the Tatmadawmen. Rubbish areas were removed from site in Mandalay. All acts were performed on 2 July.

Similarly, family members joined soldiers of the Southern Command Tatmadaw to clean the grounds of the Shwesandaw Pagoda in the Taungoo, Bago Region on 2 June.

They cleaned the Pagoda ground and unblocked the drain for current monsoon season.

Thousands march through London to protest against Brexit vote

LONDON — Thousands of demonstrators marched through central London on Saturday in a raucous and colourful protest against last week’s referendum vote to leave the European Union. The marchers were nearly all young adults, and many were draped in EU flags while others waved banners bearing slogans such as “I’m with EU” or simply “Wrex’d.”

They chanted “what do we want? to stay in the EU,” as they headed towards the Westminster political district to a soundtrack of songs including Rick Astley’s “Never Gonna Give You Up” and Whitney Houston’s “I Will Always Love You.”

The march ended peacefully with a rally outside parliament. No police estimates of the turnout were being hampered by heavy landslides in the remote area.

Around 20 Islamic State members in custody over Istanbul airport attack — Erdogan

ISTANBUL — Around 20 Islamic State militants, mainly foreigners, are in custody in connection with an attack last week on Istanbul airport that killed 45 people, Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan said on Saturday. Two Russian nationals have been identified as suspected Islamic State suicide bombers in the attack that is thought to have been masterminded by a Chechen, Turkish media said on Friday.

The latest findings point to the Daesh (Islamic State) terrorist organisation,” Erdogan told reporters at the Istanbul Ataturk airport, where he visited the attack site. — Reuters

Elie Wiesel, Holocaust survivor and Nobel laureate, has died — museum

JERUSALEM — Elie Wiesel, who survived the Holocaust and went on to become an influential author and Nobel Peace Prize winner, has died, Israel’s Holocaust memorial Yad Vashem said on Saturday.

Born in 1928, Wiesel wrote extensively of his imprisonment in Nazi camps and in 1986 won the Nobel Prize for peace.

“Yad Vashem mourns the passing of Elie Wiesel-Holocaust survivor, Nobel laureate, renowned author,” the museum said on Twitter. — Reuters

Vucic: Serbia committed to progress, reforms and EU path

BELGRADE — Serbian Prime Minister Aleksandar Vucic announced Friday that he would tell European officials at an upcoming Paris summit that Serbia remained committed to progress, reforms and the path towards the EU, but that no one should think that it would “have its ears twisted” for no reason.

Serbia has met all the requirements for the opening of chapters 23 and 24 in the EU accession talks, Vucic said, adding that, in conversations with many EU officials, he had been unable to hide his disappointment over the fact that the chapters remained unopened.

“We have done our job and no one from the EU can say that Serbia is to blame,” Vucic told a press conference.

Vucic said that he would on Sunday travel to Paris for a summit of Western Balkan and EU leaders and that he expected to be told what Serbia had done wrong, but also to say what it thought about the situation.

“Serbia intends to continue on its European path, but also wants and seeks respect for its people and its government. If there is something we have not done properly, tell us what that is, but do not assume that anyone has the right to twist our ears for no reason,” Vucic noted.

Serbia wants the best possible conditions in the UK and will continue to develop them, although it is not clear to us what “technical obstacles” have kept the country from consenting to the opening of negotiations chapters with Serbia, as opposed to those with Monte negro and Turkey, Vucic also said. — Tanjug

Flash floods sweep away 31 in northwestern Pakistan

ISLAMABAD — At least 31 people were swept away by flash floods in the mountainous Chitral region of northwestern Pakistan on Saturday night, local officials said Sunday.

As of Sunday noon, 10 bodies had been recovered, they said, adding that the search will continue.

Those swept away in Arsoon village include eight army soldiers from a check post and eight people who were worshipping at a mosque.

The flooding caused by torrential monsoon rains caused “extreme destruction” in the village, with at least 50 houses damaged and some completely washed away.

Officials said rescue and relief operations were under way, but were being hampered by heavy landslides in the remote area.

There were also reports of flash floods and landslides in other parts in Chitral, near the border with Afghanistan. — Kyodo News
At least 82 killed in overnight Baghdad bombings, police and medics say

BXGHAD — At least 82 people were killed and 200 injured in two bombings that hit Baghdad around midnight Saturday, nearly all of them in a blast targeting a busy shopping area as they celebrated Ramadan, police and medical sources said Sunday.

A refrigerator truck packed with explosives blew up in Karrada in central Baghdad, killing 80 people and injuring at least 200. Islamic State claimed responsibility for the attack, in a statement circulated online by supporters of the ultra-hard line Sunni group. It said the blast was a suicide bombing.

Karrada was busy at the time as Iraqis eat out late during the Muslim fasting month of Ramadan, which ends next week. Police said the toll could rise as more bodies could be lying under the rubble of devastated buildings.

The bombing is the deadliest in the country since Iraqi forces last month dislodged Islamic State militants from Falluja, their stronghold just west of the capital that had served as a launch pad for such attacks.

A video posted on social media showed people throwing pavement stones at the SUV convoy of Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi in Karrada, a largely Shi’ite district in the north of the capital, leaving at least two killed, police and medical sources said.

Iraqi forces on 26 June declared the defeat of IS militants in Falluja, a historic bastion of Sunni insurgency, following a month-long offensive after Islamic State and US-led forces drove them out of the city and sealed off their last stretch of Syrian-Turkish frontier. The British-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights confirmed the militants had recaptured a main district south of the city which has been the scene of heavy fighting after suicide bombers blew up an explosive laden car.

The militants also recaptured a village northwest of the city.

Iraqi forces pushed back US-backed forces trying to advance into Islamic State stronghold of Manbij for the first time since a major offensive to capture the city and cut off the militant’s main strategic access route to Turkey, a monitoring group and Kurdish sources said. AMMAN — Islamic State militants on Saturday pushed back US-backed forces trying to advance into their stronghold of Manbij for the first time since a major offensive to capture the city and cut off the militant’s main strategic access route to Turkey, a monitoring group and Kurdish sources said. The US-backed forces have been bogged down in fighting in the northern and southern outskirts of the city after rapid advances that began with the capture of dozens of villages around the city until they surrounded it from all sides.

The process in storming the city has since been slow with the militants using snipers, planting mines and preventing civilians from leaving so hampering US airpower’s ability to bomb the city without causing large casualties, Kurdish sources said.

Fighting was mainly focused near a major grain silos complex south of the city that had been hit by US-led coalition jets.

Manbij’s loss to the militants would be a big blow as it is of strategic importance to them serving as a transit for of foreign jihadists and provisions coming from the Turkish border.—Reuters

E.T. phone home: China eyes hunt for alien life with giant telescope

BEIJING — China on Sunday hoisted the final piece into position on what will be the world’s largest radio telescope, which it will use to explore space and help in the hunt for extraterrestrial life, state media said.

The Five-hundred-meter Aperture Spherical Telescope, or FAST, is the size of 30 football fields and has been hewed out of a mountain in the poor south-western province of Guizhou.

Scientists will now start debugging and trials of the telescope, Zheng Xiaonian, deputy head of the National Astronomical Observation under the Chinese Academy of Sciences, which built the telescope, told the official Xinhua news agency.

“The project has the potential to search for more strange objects to better understand the origin of the universe and boost the global hunt for extraterrestrial life,” the report paraphrased Zheng as saying.

The 1.2-billion yuan ($180 million) radio telescope would be a global leader for the next one to two decades, Zheng added.

The telescope, which has taken about five years to build, is expected to begin operations in September.

Advancing China’s space programme is a priority for Beijing, with President Xi Jinping calling for the country to establish itself as a space power.

China’s ambitions include sightings of alien life, millennia before telescopes were invented, scientists say.

Astronomers are exploring what they believe to be the first astronomical observing tool, potentially used by prehistoric humans 6,000 years ago.

They suggest that the long, narrow entrance passages to ancient stone, or ‘megalithic’, tombs may have enhanced what early human cultures could see in the night sky, an effect that could have been interpreted as the ancestors granting special power to the initiate.

The team’s idea is to investigate how a simple aperture, for example an opening or doorway, affects the observation of slightly fainter stars.

They focus this study on passage graves, which are a type of megalithic tomb composed of a chamber of large interlocking stones and a long narrow entrance.

These spaces are thought to have been sacred, and the sites may have been used for rites of passage, where the initiate would spend the night inside the tomb, with no natural light apart from that shining down the narrow entrance lined with the remains of the tribe’s ancestors.

These structures could therefore have been the first astronomical tools to support the watching of the skies.

“It is quite a surprise that no one has thoroughly investigated how for example the colour of the night sky impacts on what can be seen with the naked eye,” said Kieran Simcox, a student at Nottingham Trent University in the UK.

The project targets how the human eye, without the aid of any telescopic device, can see stars given sky brightness and colour.

The team intend to apply these ideas to the case of passage graves, such as the 6,000 year old Seven-Stone Antas in central Portugal.

“The orientations of the tombs may be in alignment with Aldebaran, the brightest star in the constellation of Taurus. To accurately time the first appearance of this star in the season, it is vital to be able to detect stars during twilight,” said Fabio Silva, of the University of Wales Trinity Saint David in the UK.

The first sighting in the year of a star after its long absence from the night sky might have been used as a seasonal marker, and could indicate for example the start of a migration to summer grazing grounds.

The timing of this could have been seen as secret knowledge, or foresight, only obtained after a night spent in contact with the ancestors in the depths of a passage grave, since the star may not have been observable from outside. However, the team suggest it could actually have been the result of the ability of the human eye to spot stars in such twilight conditions, given the small entrance passages of the tombs.—PTI

Artificial pancreas may be available by 2018: scientists

LONDON — Artificial pancreas — a device which monitors blood glucose in patients with diabetes and automatically adjusts levels of insulin entering the body — is likely to be available by 2018, scientists say.

Currently available technologies allow insulin pumps to deliver insulin to people with diabetes after taking readings from glucose meters, but these two components are separate.

It is the joining together of both parts into a ‘closed loop’ that makes an artificial pancreas, researchers said.

The actual timeline to availability of the artificial pancreas, as with other medical devices, encompasses regulatory approvals of regulatory agencies such as the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA), which is currently reviewing one proposed artificial pancreas with approval possibly as soon as 2017.

A recent review by the UK National Institute of Health Research reported that automated closed-loop systems may be expected to appear in the European market by the end of 2018. “In trials to date, users have been positive about how use of an artificial pancreas gives them ‘time off’ or a ‘holiday’ from their diabetes management, since the system is managing their blood sugar effectively without the need for constant monitoring by the user,” said Roman Hovorka and Houd Habi from the University of Cambridge in the UK.

One part of the clinical need for the artificial pancreas is the variability of insulin requirements between and within individuals — on one day a person could use one third of their normal requirements, and on another three times what they normally would.

This is dependent on the individual, their diet, their physical activity and other factors, researchers said. The combination of all these factors together places a burden on people with type 1 diabetes to constantly monitor their glucose levels, to ensure they do not end up with too much blood sugar or more commonly, too little.

Both of these complications can cause significant damage to blood vessels and nerve endings, making complications such as cardiovascular problems more likely.

There are alternatives to the artificial pancreas, with improvements in technology in whole pancreas transplantation and also of just the insulin-producing beta cells.

However, recipients of these transplants require drugs to suppress their immune systems. The artificial pancreas avoids the need for major surgery and drugs.

A number of clinical studies have been completed using the artificial pancreas in its various forms, in various settings such as diabetes camps for children and home testing.

“Prolonged 6- to 24-month multinational closed-loop clinical trials and pivotal studies are under way or in preparation including adults and children,” researchers said. The study was published in the journal Diabetesologia.—PTI

6,000-year-old stone tombs may have been first ‘telescopes’

Lavrov, Kerry have fresh exchange on ways of ending Syrian conflict

AMMAN/MOSCOW — Russia and the United States held fresh talks on Saturday on ways of cooperating to end the five-year conflict in Syria as intensive Syrian government air strikes killed at least 40 civilians in a town northeast of Damascus.

Moscow and Washington are seeking ways of brokering an end to a conflict that has killed more than 400,000 people, according to the United Nations, and has sent a wave of refugees streaming towards Europe.

In the latest diplomatic contact between the two powers, Russian Foreign Minister Sergey Lavrov and US Secretary of State John Kerry spoke by phone on Saturday, Russia’s foreign ministry said.

“They discussed the possibility of Russian-American cooperation in the fight against terrorist groups in Syria,” the statement said.

The statement did not identify the groups more clearly. Russia, which supports President Bashar al-Assad, is conducting airstrikes against various armed groups that are opposed to his rule including Nusra Front — an offshoot of al Qaeda — and Islamic State which the Americans also oppose.

But Washington says Moscow is also targeting moderate rebel groups which are ideologically opposed to al Qaeda and which are supported by the United States.

Fighting continued unabated in Syria with intensive strikes by the Syrian air force on Jayrud, northeast of Damascus, which killed 43 civilians a day after the reported execution of a Syrian air force pilot, a monitor and rebels said.

They said the raids targeted a medical centre, a school and a residential area in Jayrud, a heavily populated town that had been earlier spared heavy bombing after striking a local truce with the army. It had become in that time a sanctuary for thousands of civilians fleeing heavy battles nearby.

The US-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said scores were also injured in the aerial strikes as well as by shelling from army posts in the area.

A rebel spokesman said the strikes seemed to be in revenge for the killing of the air force pilot who parachuted near the town after his plane crashed on Friday.

“The strikes against civilians are in retaliation against the execution of the pilot by Nusra Front,” said Said Seif al Qalmoni from the Free Syrian Army’s (FSA) Shahid Ahmad Abdo brigade that operates in Jayrud alongside the al Qaeda’s Nusra Front and other groups — Reuters.

FBI interviews Hillary Clinton in private server probe

NEW YORK — The Federal Bureau of Investigation interviewed Democratic US presidential candidate Hillary Clinton for three and a half hours on Saturday as part of the probe into her use of a private email server while serving as secretary of state, her campaign said.

The interview at FBI headquarters in Washington followed a week of intense public focus on the investigation and on Clinton’s viability as a presidential candidate, with four months to go to the election. Her campaign has tried for months to downplay the controversy as a distraction.

In an interview broadcast on MSNBC, Clinton said she was happy to do the FBI interview, which her spokesman earlier described as “voluntary.”

“I’ve been answering questions for over a year” regarding the private email server, Clinton said.

It was not clear if the questioning of Clinton signaled an imminent conclusion to the investigation in a pivotal time for the presidential race. It does follow FBI interviews of several of Clinton’s former staff members, as well as her top aide Huma Abedin.

Clinton is expected to be formally notified as the Democratic candidate for the 8 November presidential election at the party’s convention in less than four weeks.

“Timing of FBI interview, view, between primaries and convention, probably good timing for @HillaryClinton,” tweeted David Axelrod, a former senior adviser to President Barack Obama who served as the chief strategist for her two presidential campaigns.

“Best to get it behind her.”

Clinton is currently the front-runner for the White House with polls showing her leading presumptive Republican nominee Donald Trump. In a tweet on Saturday, Trump said it was “impossible for the FBI not to recommend criminal charges against Hillary Clinton. What she did was wrong!”

He also criticised Clinton’s husband, former President Bill Clinton, for meeting privately with Attorney General Loretta Lynch earlier this week, which Lynch later said she regretted, though she said they did not discuss the investigation.

“What Bill did was stupid!” Trump tweeted.

The FBI is investigating whether anyone in Clinton’s operation broke the law as result of a personal email server kept in her Chappaqua, New York, home while she was secretary of state from 2009 to 2013. One of the questions is whether they mishandled classified information on the server.

Clinton and her staff have struggled to respond to accusations that her use of the server in violation of State Department protocol means she is untrustworthy. Trump has said the investigation should disqualify her from being president.

@HillaryClinton campaign statement says She “voluntarily” met w @FBI for 3.5 hours this morning — yeah, lots of people volunteer 2 do that,” tweeted the Republican National Committee’s communications director, Sean Spicer. — Reuters.

10 killed as jeep rolls into gorge in northern India

NEW DELHI — At least 10 people were killed and four others injured after a jeep in which they were travelling plunged into a gorge in the northern Indian state of Uttarakhand late on Saturday night, a senior police official said Sunday.

The hilly state has been hit by cloudburst that triggered heavy rains, flash floods and landslides, with swelling rivers sweeping away villages and killing over 30 people, bringing normal life to a standstill in the past 72 hours.

The incident took place at around 11.30 pm local time Saturday on a state highway when the driver of the vehicle tried to negotiate a road damaged by rains and flash floods. Most of the occupants of the jeep had been killed, the official said, on condition of anonymity.

Those injured have been admitted to a local hospital, where the condition of some of them are said to be serious, he added. Local TV channels reported that the bodies were retrieved only after 5 am local time Sunday after the local administration got to know about the accident from residents of the area, who were the first to initiate rescue work.

A probe has been ordered into the incident, the official said, adding that motorists have been urged to avoid driving during heavy rains in the state. — Xinhua

Twelve trapped in Shanxi mine flood

BEIJING — Twelve miners remain trapped in a flooded coal mine in the city of Jincheng in north China’s Shanxi Province, the country’s top safety watchdog said on Sunday.

Ninety-four miners were working underground when the accident occurred around 11 pm on Saturday. Some 82 miners have been rescued, while 12 others remain trapped, the State Administration of Work Safety said in a statement on its website.

The mine is operated by a local state-owned coal company with an annual production capacity of 900,000 tonnes.

Local authorities were asked to do everything possible to rescue trapped miners and pinpoint the cause of the accident. Anyone responsible for the accident must be held accountable. —Xinhua

Over 35,000 Americans killed as traffic deaths on rise in 2015

WASHINGTON — An estimated 35,200 Americans died in traffic accidents in 2015, an increase of 7.7 per cent from a year before, according to newly-released government data.

Nine out of 10 regions within the United States had increased traffic fatalities in 2015, shows the preliminary data released Friday by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) under the US Department of Transportation (DOT).

The NHTSA is analyzing the data to determine what factors contributed to the increase in traffic fatalities while aggressive testing new safety technologies and new ways to improve driver behaviour, said US Transportation Secretary Anthony Foxx.

Improved economy and falling gas prices were believed to be among major reasons for the increased traffic deaths in the United States last year.

However, NHTSA head Mark Rosekind said that improved economy only explains part of the increase as 94 per cent of car crashes are caused by human behaviour or error.

So the government needs to focus its efforts on improving human behaviour while promoting vehicle technology that not only protects people in crashes, but helps prevent crashes in the first place, Rosekind said.

In response, the NHTSA has convened a series of six regional safety summits with key stakeholders throughout February and March. —Xinhua

North Korea rejects US charges, calls flesh traffic ‘nonexistent’

BEIJING — North Korea on Saturday denounced the United States for criticizing its record on human trafficking, including that of women and girls, saying “flesh traffic” in the country is “nonexistent.”

The US State Department, in its latest Trafficking in Persons Report issued earlier this week, hurt North Korea’s dignity with “all sorts of fabrications,” a Foreign Ministry spokesman said in a statement carried by the official Korean Central News Agency.

“It is a great irony that the US talks about someone’s nonexistent ‘flesh traffic,’ ” he said, while calling the United States a “veritable tundra of human rights plagued by extreme human rights abuses that stun the world people.”

The unidentified spokesman said the US accusations charges are partly aimed at bringing down North Korea’s social system by way of “defaming” its image. “The more openly the US lays bare its intention to do harm to (North Korea’s) social system, the more strongly the latter will maintain its line of simultaneously pushing forward economic construction and the building of nuclear force to steadily bolster up its nuclear deterrent for self-defence both in quality and quantity,” he said.

The State Department, which consistently ranks North Korea among the world’s worst countries for human trafficking, called it “a source country for men, women, and children who are subjected to forced labour and sex trafficking” in its latest annual report.

The report says government oppression “prompts many North Koreans to flee the country in ways that make them vulnerable to human trafficking abroad, while within the country itself, ‘forced labour is part of an established system of political repression.’”

Regarding the flesh trade in particular, it says some of the estimated 10,000 North Korean women and girls who have migrated illegally to China are subjected to sexual slavery by Chinese or Korean-Chinese men, forced prostitution in brothels or through Internet sex sites, or compelled service as hostesses in nightclubs or karaoke bars. If found by Chinese authorities, victims are often forcibly repatriated to North Korea where they are subjected to harsh punishment, including forced labour in labour camps or death.”—Kyodo News

236 suspects busted in football gambling cases

BEIJING — A total of 236 suspects in China were caught for illegal football gambling during the ongoing UEFA Euro 2016, the Ministry of Public Security (MPS) said Sunday.

More than 28 million yuan (2.4 million US dollars) was confiscated or frozen in cases involving overseas gambling websites, according to the MPS.

Police authorities have intensified investigations into suspected web gambling since April.

Since 14 June, police have busted several rings that organised gambling activities in cities including Shenyang in Liaoning Province and Shenzhen in Guangdong Province.

According to the MPS, cracking down on cross-border web gambling has become a regular task for the police as international gambling companies have used overseas gambling websites to develop Chinese agents and attract gamblers in recent years. —Xinhua

DiCaprio almost starred on ‘Baywatch’

LOS ANGELES — “Baywatch” producers Michael Berk and Douglas Schwartz have revealed that Leonardo DiCaprio almost played David Hasselhoff’s son on the hit ‘90s show.

The Oscar-winning actor was only 15 years old when he auditioned for the part of Mitch Buchannon’s son Hobie.

“We actually had DiCaprio ready to be cast. But David thought he was too old to play his son,” Berk told the Hollywood Reporter.

Hasselhoff, who was in his late thirties when filming began, wanted a younger actor for the role.

“He had a lot of concerns of that type.”

The part eventually went to Brandon Call in season 1, and then he was replaced by Jeremy Jackson for eight seasons.

Hasselhoff was also against Pamela Anderson’s casting when she joined the show in the second season.

“David said, ‘I don’t want a girl that’s been in Playboy. He said, ‘Children watch this show.’”

The show is getting a big-screen reboot starring Dwayne ‘The Rock’ Johnson, Zac Efron, Alexandra Daddario and Bollywood star Priyanka Chopra.

Anderson and Hasselhoff will also make cameos in the film, which is set to be released in 2017.—PTI

Leslie Jones wants more diversity in fashion

LOS ANGELES — “Ghost-busters” actress Leslie Jones has claimed there was no designer to dress her for a red carpet appearance, sparking a debate on the need of diversity in fashion world.

Jones riled up the fashion industry and social-justice warriors with a tweet that expressed frustration over finding something to wear for the film’s red carpet premiere, reported Variety.

The 48-year-old “Saturday Night Live” cast member’s tweet read, “It’s so funny how there are no designers wanting to help me with a premiere dress for the movie. Hmmm that will change and I remember everything.”

When fans and media outlets began picking up the tweet, and interpreting it as a slight against the fashion industry for not catering to women of her height, race, age or some combination of the three, some came to Jones’ defense, while others took offense.

A blogger and social media influence tweeted, “What an entitled actress! She got paid money for her work, please use that money like the rest of us — go shopping!”

Popular designer and “Project Runway” alum Christian Siriano, meanwhile, responded by offering to make Jones a dress.

Jones accepted and the designer and comedian took turns posting pictures on social media of their fashion collaboration.

In response to the conversation spurred by Jones’ initial tweet and his decision to make her a dress, Siriano tweeted, “It shouldn’t be exceptional to work with brilliant people just because they’re not sample size. Congrats aren’t in order, a change is.”—PTI

Hilary Duff loves to throw house parties

LONDON — Actress Hilary Duff says she “loves” to throw house parties, and enjoys them even more when a casual get together turns into a random dance party.

The “Younger” actress has admitted she enjoys entertaining people at her home and will often throw open her doors to guests and host a casual gathering, reported Female First.

Speaking about her night life preferences, the blonde beauty said, “I do love to entertain at my house and I like it when it’s a little casual. I live in LA so I like to throw all my doors open and do indoor/outdoor.”

“I like something casual, where it could turn into a random dance party or everyone can end up in the pool. I do appreciate getting dressed and people making an effort, but I like feeling comfortable enough to kick your shoes off. Like organised chaos,” she said.—PTI

Game of Thrones’ to get gallery exhibition

LONDON — HBO has launched the “Game of Thrones” fan art competition, giving fans the chance to have their art displayed in a special GOT exhibition in London.

Drawings, paintings, graphic designs, sculptures and embroidery are all eligible for submission, with entrants above 18 years are invited to upload an image of their fan art to the HBO website, reported Digital Spy.

A short list of 20 entries will be voted before winners will have their entries displayed in a special “GOT” exhibition in a London Art Gallery in November, alongside professional graffiti and street art team “The Graffiti Kings”.—PTI
Czech Republic says you can call us Czechia

PRAGUE — Czechia has become the official English alternative name for the Czech Republic, the Foreign Ministry said Friday, allowing users to save space on name tags and product labels.

This marks an end to more than two decades of hesitation on finding a single word name for the western part of the former Czechoslovakia, a federation of Czechia and Slovakia that broke up peacefully in 1993.

But not all Czechs are happy.

“When the cabinet announced a decision to go ahead with the title earlier this year, an informal survey by news website idnes.cz found more than 22,000 people said they did not like it against 7,000 who did,” spokeswoman Michaela Lagronova said.

The ministry said it would not push the new name but would let it take root naturally over time through voluntary use.

“This does not mean it will be used at all international gatherings from now on,”

The country of 10.6 million people consists of the historical lands of Bohemia (Czechy in Czech), Moravia and part of Silesia.

While some experts argue Bohemia was, in medieval times, used as a name for the entire country, people from those regions have protested against using it. Czechia is based on a Latin name for the country used in 17th and 18th century texts. — Reuters

Pulses imports may rise to 5 mn tonnes in Apr-Dec: Industry

NEW DELHI — India is likely to import about 5 million tonnes of pulses during April-December period of this fiscal, largely by private traders, to boost domestic supply and cool retail prices that have reached up to Rs 200 per kg.

India, the world’s largest producer, had imported about 4.5 million tonnes of pulses during the corresponding period of the previous year. The country had imported 5.78 million tonnes in the entire 2015-16 fiscal to meet domestic demand.

“Imports are happening. About 1.2-1.3 million tonnes of pulses have already been imported. Moreover, private traders have contracted for 3 million tonnes of pulses to be shipped between September and December,” India Pulses and Grains Association (IPGA) Chairman Pravin Dongre said.

 Asked about the landed cost of imported pulses, he said it is Rs 32-33 per kg for yellow peas, Rs 92-93 for tur dal, Rs 105-106 for urad, Rs 65 for moong and Rs 58-60 for moong.

Importers are selling it to millers and wholesalers at a very less margins, he said.

On overall imports for this fiscal, Dongre said it would depend on monsoon.

“If monsoon is good as projected, domestic production will increase. Then imports will be less in the last quarter of this fiscal,” IPGA Vice Chairman Bimal Kothari said.

IPGA said the pulses prices have gone up in domestic market due to fall in production on account of poor and unseasonal rains in two consecutive crop years.

Pulses production fell to 17.06 million tonnes in the 2015-16 crop year (July-June) from 17.15 million tonnes in the previous year. In 2013-14, output was over 19 million tonnes.

As a result, retail prices of pulses have shot up with Tur and urad dals selling at as high as Rs 180 per kg and Rs 198 per kg respectively, in the retail markets.

Chana dal is being sold at Rs 105 per kg, while moong and massor at Rs 130 and Rs 110 per kg respectively.

The government recently decided to enhance the buffer stock limit of pulses to 8 lakh tonnes as an emergency measure to ensure food security in times of crisis.

51st Karlovy Vary International Film festival opens

KARLOVY VARY — The 51st international Film Festival opened in Czech Republic’s Karlovy Vary on Friday (1 July).

American film and theater actor Willem Dafoe, a two-time Oscar nominee, was awarded the Crystal Globe for Outstanding Contribution to World Cinema during the opening ceremony at Thermal hotel cinema.

The festival shows more than 180 films; 12 of them are included in the main competition. The star-studded delegation of war drama Anthropoid, consisting of director Sean Ellis and actors Jamie Dornan, Toby Jones, Aïta Geisslerová, Alena Mihulová and Václav Nezulí, introduced the eagerly awaited film, which opened the festival.

The film follows the story of Reinhard Heydrich, a powerful Nazi and a principal architect of the Holocaust. Heydrich was assassinated by Czech and Slovak soldiers in 1942 in Operation Anthropoid.

The idea for the film, thought of by director, screenwriter and cameraman Sean Ellis, was in the making for 15 years. Actor Jamie Dornan, who stars in the film, said he hoped the film will make the Czech Republic proud. “Anthropoid” is set to be released in the US on 16 August.

Querrey survives scary moments to down Djokovic

LONDON — American Sam Querrey survived two scares to complete the biggest shock at this year’s Wimbledon by toppling Grand Slam-chasing Novak Djokovic in the third round on Saturday.

Resuming two sets to the good after rain halted his unlikely victory charge on Friday, Querrey lost the opening five games on Court One as Djokovic came out firing.

That was the first scary moment.

Then, amidst incredible tension when serving for the match at 6-5 in the fourth-set tiebreak, he gave world number one Djokovic a look at a second serve. That was the other one.

It all worked out well in the end, though, as 28th seed Querrey won 7-6(6), 6-1, 3-6, 7-6(5) to become the first player to beat Djokovic in grand slam play since Swiss Stanislas Wawrinka in the 2015 French Open final.

In doing so he destroyed Djokovic’s dream of emulating Rod Laver’s 1969 feat of winning all four slams in the same year.

“I lost the first four games and kind of went, ‘Oh no, this is going the wrong way quickly,’” the laid-back 28-year-old Californian Querrey told reporters after losing a doubles with compatriot Steve Johnson, who also reached the singles last 16.

“But, I actually felt pretty level-headed and steady the whole time. In the fourth set tiebreaker when I missed my serve at 6-5, I kind of went like, ‘Oh, crap.’ Fortunately I played a good second serve and he missed the forehand wide. That was it.”

Querrey was still second favourite when play began on Saturday, despite a commanding lead.

After all, Djokovic had never lost to an American at Wimbledon and had not bowed out of a grand slam before the quarter-finals since losing in straight sets to Philipp Kohlschreiber in the third round of the 2009 French Open. When Querrey went 4-0 down it looked ominous.—Reuters

Road to Rio a bumpy one for Franklin

OMAHA (Nebraska) — Missy Franklin was the 17-year-old darling of American swimming in 2012, returning home from the London Olympics with four gold medals and being hailed as the sport’s brightest young star.

Four years on, Franklin is headed back to the Olympics having qualified in two individual events, the 200 metres freestyle and 200 backstroke, at the US trials and is assured of another spot on the 4x200 relay team.

But the trials, which end on Sunday, have not gone completely according to plan for Franklin, who has struggled to find the form that made her one of the sport’s biggest names.

She failed to top the podium in any individual event in Omaha, qualifying for the 200 freestyle as runner-up behind the new queen of women’s swimming, Katie Ledecky, and the 200 backstroke behind first-time Olympian Maya DiRado.

Franklin will have a shot at defending her 200 backstroke title in Rio but her signature event, the 100, after labouring to a seventh place finish in the final.

With her trials over, even the usually optimistic Franklin said things could have gone better.

“I’ve been saying I don’t think I swam it as well as I could have,” said Franklin.

“But you know what? I got a spot, and that’s all I needed to do.”

She will have to do much more in Rio if she hopes to come close to clearing the bar she set for herself in London, where she also won a bronze in the 4x100 freestyle relay.—Reuters

Germany hail penalty victory against bogie team Italy

BORDEAUX, (France) — Germany’s players hailed their first victory against Italy in a major tournament as an exceptional moment in their history as they reached the Euro 2016 semi-finals by beating their old rivals 6-5 on penalties.

But the eventful shootout, with seven players failing to convert their kicks, left pundits dismayed with some saying it was the worst set of penalties ever seen, others the poorest spot kicks ever taken in a penalty shootout.

That was the case as Jerome Boateng handled and Italy’s Leonardo Bonucci scored from the spot to level in the 78th.

Italy coach Antonio Conte said he was disappointed to go out despite his defensive-minded team showing little adventure in the final third of the pitch during the match.

“The lads gave everything. We had a very strong team. I can’t find the words. We were beaten by Germany on penalties and that hurts,” he said.

“I regret that we didn’t make the penalties. Everyone fought hard, everyone. I don’t think we could have done any more. We gave everything we had.”

However, the game will probably be remembered for some of the poorest spot kicks ever taken in a shootout.

Some of those penalties were the worst I’ve ever seen and the run-ups, what they about?” said former England striker Alan Shearer. Former France captain Thierry Henry was particularly scathing about Italy’s Graziano Pelle, who told the keeper he was going to dint the ball and missed the target altogether.—Reuters
