KEY STORY: SECURITY AND HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION IN BURMA “WORSENING”

On 21 July, at the conclusion of her 6th visit to Burma/Myanmar,1 UN Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar Yanghee Lee said national authorities were “presiding over a worsening security and human rights situation” in the country.2

The UN independent expert expressed disappointment at the Burmese government’s restrictions placed on her visit, raised serious concerns about the increased human rights and humanitarian crisis affecting the country, and called for concrete actions to be taken, including a thorough investigation of all alleged human rights violations.3 Burmese authorities responded that a UN fact-finding mission would only aggravate tensions.4

Yanghee Lee reported increasing cases of alleged human rights violations, deteriorating security situation, and inadequate assistance to civilians in Shan and Arakan/Rakhine states, as well as denial of UN access to non-government controlled areas of Kachin State amid escalating fighting. Serious concerns in regard to land confiscation, humanitarian aid, and unfair civil documentation process were also described in Karen/Kayin State.5 Moreover, Burmese authorities prevented her from visiting Hsipaw prison and meeting the 3 journalists arrested on 26 June in northern Shan State [see June Bulletin], despite Hsipaw being a tourist destination.6

Yanghee Lee expressed astonishment at the government’s decision to block the delegates of the UN fact-finding mission established by the UN Human Rights Council to investigate the allegation of human rights abuses in the country, as well as the government’s demand to not undertake any activities related to the UN fact-finding mission, which offended the independence of the Special Rapporteur’s mandate.7

MAIN CONCERNS EXPRESSED BY THE UNSR:1

Intimidation against persons who speak out.

Deteriorating situation in northern Shan State:
- Denial of visit to 3 journalists detained at Hsipaw prison.
- Reported increase of forced recruitment and abductions, abuses against civilians.

Denial of access to Kachin State:
- Lack of access to non-government controlled areas.
- Increased insecurity in Tanai area.

Problematic issues in Arakan/Rakhine State:
- Land confiscation without due consultation and compensation, particularly in the 3 Special Economic Zones (SEZs).
- Non-uniform, discriminating and segregating resettlement practices for internally displaced persons (IDPs).
- Incidents of Rohingya being targeted for applying to be verified as a citizen, and Muslims being targeted for working with authorities. Absence of protection.
- Denial of legal representation and fair trial for persons arrested in relation to the 9 October attacks [see October Bulletin], detention of underage individuals, and deaths in custody.
- Conditional humanitarian access.

Concerns related to Karen/Kayin State:
- Land confiscation without due consultation and compensation, forced eviction.
- Increased domestic violence and violence against children.
- Reduction of assistance for IDPs and refugees displaced along the Thai-Burmese border.
- Denial of access to the Myaing Ka Lay cement factory.
- Time-consuming and expensive civil documentation process.

Increased prosecutions under Section 66(d) of the Telecommunications Law.

“We are told not to expect Myanmar to transition into a democracy overnight - that it needs time and space,” Yanghee Lee noted. “But in the same way, Myanmar should not expect to have its close scrutiny removed or its special monitoring mechanisms dismantled overnight. This cannot happen until there is real and discernible progress on human rights.”

In response, Burmese authorities denounced Yanghee Lee’s latest end of mission statement. On 21 July, the Office of the State Counsellor said that it “had hoped that the Special Rapporteur’s statement would reflect the difficulties of resolving the problems that are a legacy of decades of internal conflict, isolation and underdevelopment. The Special Rapporteur’s statement instead contains many sweeping allegations and a number of factual errors.” On 25 July, lawmakers from the Lower House of the Parliament unanimously approved a proposal condemning the international expert's remarks.

New accounts of abuse surface in Arakan State, witnesses jailed

On 14-15 July, victims and witnesses spoke out on abuses to a group of 18 national and international reporters escorted by Burmese security forces to villages in Maungdaw and Buthidaung townships.

Villagers feared reprisals, but new accounts of abuse immediately surfaced when some journalists insisted on speaking to them away from security forces. Several women reported of under-age detention and arrests on false grounds. A schoolteacher said that at least 32 people from Kyar Gaung Taung village were arrested and 10 killed. A woman was arrested merely for filing a complaint about the killing of her husband. Other persons talked about torched houses with residents kept burning inside, rape cases, and reprisals for speaking out committed by security forces.

Commander of Border Guard Police Brig Gen Thura San Lwin said that some villagers gave wrong information and were subsequently charged and jailed for lying. Burmese officials continued claiming that domestic investigations were the appropriate solution.

Earlier in July, High Commissioner for Refugees Filippo Grandi urged the Burmese government to allow grant citizenship to the Rohingya. US Ambassador to the UN Nikki Haley called on the Burmese government to allow the UN fact-finding mission to do its job.

Sectarian violence and insecurity further triggered

In July, incidents of sectarian violence were registered throughout the country, spreading increased fears of insecurity.

4 Jul: A mob of Rakhine Buddhists killed a Rohingya man and injured 6 others in Sittwe, Arakan State. The 7 men were allowed to leave the Dapaing IDP camp to serve as witnesses in a trial at Sittwe Township court. Sittwe district police chief Lt Col Win Naung said that the group went to Ywar Gyi Maung quarter in downtown Sittwe – a restricted area for Rohingya Muslims – where the aggression happened. One policeman escorted the group but fled the scene because he was unarmed and unable to stop the mob. Authorities later tightened security in Sittwe.

10 Jul: Buddhist nationalists attacked a Muslim man at his house in Meikhtila Township, Mandalay Region, after a neighbor reported him to the Association for the Protection of Race and Religion – Ma Ba Tha – for discussing “religious issues”. Security forces were put on high alert but NLD chairperson for Meikhtila Township said the incident occurred near the police station but officers did not respond in a timely manner. Police later denied that members of the Ma Ba Tha were involved in the assault.

15 Jul: The dead body of a man was found in Maung Hna Ma, Buthidaung Township. Masked men previously kidnapped him from his house.

22 Jul: Another man disappeared and was later found murdered in Buthidaung Township. Burmese officials said that Rohingya insurgents were behind the recent slew of killings registered in the area.

Meanwhile, skirmishes between Burmese security forces and alleged members of an obscure group of Rohingya militants triggered further tensions in Arakan State [see June Bulletin].

9 Jul: Security forces killed 2 people during an attack by “armed terrorists” in Buthidaung Township. The Office of State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi said that attackers opened fire from a house near Timmay village, Buthidaung Township, and security forces returned the fire. The statement also said that a homemade gun, a remote control mine, 2 car pistons and 8 detonators, as well as Bangladeshi money, 2 walkie-talkies, 6 swords, 4 daggers and a machete were found inside the house.

22 Jul: Police arrested 31 alleged militants in Maungdaw Township, Arakan State, after they failed to produce family registration documents.

Earlier in the month, on July 6, 14 political parties called on the government to impose martial law in the most unstable areas of Arakan State, believing that civilian agencies are unable to maintain public order and safety. They also urged the government not to accept the UN international fact-finding mission.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Freedom of expression still threatened

Following national and international pressure [see June Bulletin], State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi declared that her administration was considering amendments to the notorious Telecommunications Law. On 25 July, 13 lawmakers in the Upper House of Parliament debated amendments to the law proposed by the Upper House Bill Committee. Seven lawmakers proposed scrapping the law while National League for Democracy (NLD) lawmakers called for granting bail to the defendants and only allowing the aggrieved party to file a case. Tatmadaw representatives rejected both proposals. Maj Thet Min argued against the amendments because granting bail would amount to the legislative branch intervening in the judicial sector. He added that “it is not appropriate to grant bail to individuals and organizations that disrupt the communications network”.

Meanwhile, Burmese journalists continued to be targeted, detained and charged for expressing their opinion and doing their job.

6 Jul: State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi said that the arrests of 3 journalists in northern Shan State on 26 June should not be seen as a problem between the media and the Tatmadaw, but rather as a question of whether existing laws are just. Therefore, the government, considering the case a matter for the judiciary, could not interfere in it. The 3 journalists were charged under the colonial-era Unlawful Associations Act for allegedly having connections with the Ta’ang National Liberation Army (TNLA). They were covering a drug-burning event organized by the TNLA in northern Shan State [see June Bulletin]. On 7 July, Hsipaw Township court remanded the 3 journalists in custody until the beginning of their trial, set for 21 Jul. On 21 Jul, the 3 defendants requested to be freed on bail, which the judge would decide during their next hearing on Aug 4. International Commission of Jurists Legal Consultant Sean Bain warned that “[t]he prospect of facing criminal charges for lawfully reporting on issues without malice and in the public interest will have a chilling effect on the media’s exercise of free expression in Myanmar”. UN Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar Yanghee Lee was prevented from visiting the 3 journalists in jail [see Key Story].

7 Jul: Bahan township court rejected the sixth bail request of Kyaw Min Swe, editor-in-chief of The Voice Daily, citing a lack of sufficient facts. Kyaw Min Swe was arrested with columnist Kyaw Zwa Naing, also known as British Ko Ko Maung, on 2 June for allegedly defaming the Tatmadaw by sharing on social media a satirical article on Burma/Myanmar’s armed conflict and peace process. The columnist was later acquitted of violating Section 66(d) of the Telecommunications Law and released [see May and June Bulletin].

20-21 Jul: NLD executives Kyaw Myo Lwin and Thet The Maw also appeared before Lewe court for their first hearing under defamation charges. They were arrested by police after being sued under Section 66(d) of the Telecommunications Act for sharing a Facebook post showing a photograph of local administrator Tin Htay during his recent trial for misappropriation of public funds.

21 Jul: Bahan Township court accepted another case filed against Kyaw Min Swe and Kyaw Zwa Naing by the same plaintiff for the same article but under Section 9(g) the News Media Law. The News Media Law prescribes fines between K300,000 to 1 million (US$ 220 to US$ 730), which can be applied if a journalist’s writing style deliberately affected the reputation of a specific person or an organization, if a news outlet published others’ intellectual property without permission, or if photos or voices were modified in “improper” ways.

30 Jul: Police arrested Myanmar Now editor Swe Win at the Rangoon/Yangon International Airport. Airporr police said Swe Win was arrested because he tried to leave the country despite the defamation charges he was facing for criticizing ultra nationalist monk Wirathu over his publicly expressed thanks to the assassins of Muslim constitutional lawyer Ko Ni [see March and April Bulletin]. On 31 July, the court released Swe Win on bail.
Other developments:

7 Jul: Chin youth sent a letter to Chin State Chief Minister Salai Lian Luai accusing the Tatmadaw and Arakan Army (AA) of committing human rights violations. The allegations were collected during a tour of villages in Paletwa Township, Chin State, and included use of civilians as human shields, physical assault, forceful recruitment, and robberies as regular abuses committed by the soldiers in the area.48

8 Jul: Religious Affairs Minister Thura Aung Ko said that authorities will take action against the ultranationalist Ma Ba Tha group if it proceeds with the plan to rebrand itself as the Buddha Dhamma Charity Foundation to circumvent the government’s ban on it. The governmental decision to order the Ma Ba Tha to end all its activities came as part of a renovated effort to halt the increased religious hate speech and violence affecting the country [see May Bulletin].49

MILITARY

Tatmadaw plane crashed due to bad weather, say investigators

On 19 July, investigators said that irregular weather conditions caused the crash of a Y-8F 200 Tatmadaw aircraft, which led to the death of 122 people on board [see June Bulletin].50 Investigators clarified that the aircraft did not crash from any act of sabotage, explosion or engine failure.51 The accident happened when the plane went into a nose dive after ice built up on the wings and a sudden increase in cross wind caused the plane to stall or lose the ability to attain lift.52

ETHNIC AFFAIRS AND CONFLICT

Ethnic groups’ confidence in the peace process undermined

In July, ethnic groups engaged in the peace process strongly questioned it, especially after the Tatmadaw called off a meeting of the Committee for Shan State Unity (CSSU) – a coalition of Shan political parties, civil society organizations and 2 ethnic armed groups (EAGs) – scheduled for 20-21 July in Chiang Mai, Thailand.53 The Tatmadaw alleged that the CSSU discussions were not in line with the official peace process because it included the Shan State Progress Party/Shan State Army-North (SSPP/SSA-N), a non-signatory to the ‘Nationwide’ Ceasefire Agreement (NCA).54

On 20 July, CSSU explained that the purpose of the meeting was “to gather common perspectives” on the 5 key themes discussed at the 21st Century Panglong Peace Conference [see May Bulletin].55 Shan Nationalities League for Democracy secretary Sai Nyunt Lwin said that the Tatmadaw overstepped the role of the government’s peace commission.56 Restoration Council of Shan State (RCSS) chairman Shan Gen Yawd Serk said that the peace process was in limbo and faced deadlocks especially due to the Tatmadaw not following the NCA path.57 He concluded that, if the situation continues as it is, 2017 cannot be the year of peace envisioned by State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi.58

Earlier in July, on 2 Jul, leaders of the Peace Process Steering Team (PPST) – negotiating body of the NCA-signatory EAGs – said that the current peace process was deviating from the NCA path and that keeping it on track was “the biggest challenge” they were facing.59 Thus, the PPST formed an NCA

Fighting between the Tatmadaw and ethnic groups continues

In July, more clashes were reported in Burma/Myanmar, killing a 2-year-old child, injuring the parents,62 and forcing hundreds of people to flee their houses.63 The majority of the clashes and tensions were registered between the Tatmadaw and members of the Northern Alliance – an ethnic coalition composed of Ta’ang National Liberation Army (TNLA), Kachin Independence Army (KIA), Arakan Army (AA) and Myanmar National Democratic Alliance Army (MNDAA) – in Shan and Kachin states.

4-5 Jul: The Tatmadaw and TNLA clashed in Namtu, Kyaukme District, northern Shan State, after the Tatmadaw entered the TNLA area.64

5 Jul: Tatmadaw IB 251 and KIA troops from Brigade 2, Regiment 6, clashed near Aing-lay-tu village, Mohnyin Township, Kachin State.65 KIA leaders said that fighting broke out because the Tatmadaw conducted clearance operations in the area where the KIA troops were stationed.66 Shan families living in the area reported of shells from the battle fell near their farm huts and forced them to flee.67

8 Jul: The Tatmadaw distributed pamphlets in Lashio, northern Shan State, warning residents of an imminent attack by KIA and TNLA.68 KIA and TNLA officials denied the allegations and accused the Tatmadaw of “spreading lies” with the intention of “damaging the dignity” of the KIA and TNLA among the public.69

10 Jul: The Tatmadaw arrested and shot 2 TNLA members in Namkhàm, northern Shan State, for allegedly extorting money from local business. One of them later died of gun wounds. TNLA Brig Gen Tar Bone Kyaw denied the criminal allegation, saying that the TNLA only collected appropriate taxes in areas under its control.70

13 Jul: The Tatmadaw reported that artillery fire hit a farm in Tein Kauk village, Tanai Township, Kachin State, killing a 2-year old child and injuring the parents. The Tatmadaw was fighting against KIA troops. Both sides blamed the other for the death and injuries.71

20 Jul: The Tatmadaw and TNLA troops moved into Hsenwi Township, Lashio District, northern Shan State.72 The growing military tension forced hundreds of villagers to preemptively flee their homes. Villagers accused TNLA soldiers of extorting money and abducting people who were not able to pay. Hundreds of civilians found shelter in a Buddhist monastery of Hsenwi.73

Other developments:

7 Jul: Amid the fighting, Chin youth accused the Tatmadaw and Arakan Army (AA) of committing human rights violations – including the use of civilians as human shields, physical assault, and forceful recruitment – in Chin State [see Human Rights].

17 Jul: Momauk Township court, Kachin State, accepted a case against Min Htay – central committee member of the NCA-signatory All Burma Students’ Democratic Front (ABSDF) – under Article 17 of the Unlawful Associations Act for allegedly helping the KIA. Min Htay declared his innocence, and pointed out that despite ABSDF being an NCA-signatory, he was still being charged. He thus called on his colleagues to reconsider the NCA.75 Min Htay was arrested on 28 December 2016. In March, Tatmadaw officials also testified that Min Htay’s acting in the 2008 action movie “Rambo IV” defamed the Burmese military – an allegation that could result in additional criminal charges.76

DISPLACEMENT

Crackdown on Burmese migrant workers in Thailand

On 23 June, the Thai government started implementing a new law containing stronger punishments, with fines of up to B800,000 (US$ 24,000), for employers hiring an undocumented foreign worker.77 More than 34,000 migrant workers returned to Burma/Myanmar after about 500 Burmese migrant workers were arrested during a crackdown on illegal immigrants.78 On 4 July, the Thai government suspended the implementation of the new labor law at the request of the Myanmar Labour Ministry to its Thai counterpart.79

Other developments:

3 Jun: Church leaders said that about 1,000 evacuees from Tanai’s mining areas, Kachin State [see June Bulletin], were sheltering in churches of Tanai Town, but needed long-term solutions.80

5 Jul: Over 150 Karenni people lost their houses due to a fire which broke out at a refugee camp in northern Thailand.81

20 Jul: Hundreds of villagers were forced to preemptively flee their homes as Tatmadaw and TNLA troops moved into Hsenwi Township, Shan State [see Ethnic Affairs and Conflict].82

On 4 July, 5 rights organizations – the Association of Elected Lawmakers from the 1990 General Elections, United National Democratic Organization, Farmer’s Union, Human Rights Violations Investigation Committee and the Karen Women’s Organization – started an initiative to rewrite the 2008 Constitution and filed a lawsuit with the Dekkhinathiri District Court, Naypyidaw.\textsuperscript{99} On 18 July, the court rejected the lawsuit because the case did not fall within its jurisdiction.\textsuperscript{100} On 25 July, the groups filed a lawsuit with the Mandalay Region High Court. The court also refused to accept the case because the case was beyond its mandate.\textsuperscript{101}

The groups argued that the 2008 Constitution was based on the wrong numbers, contrary to the Contract Act.\textsuperscript{102} Their main argument was that when the 2008 Constitution was approved, the population was said to be 57 million, but the 2014 national census indicated that that the population was only 51 million.\textsuperscript{103} The groups said that they would continue to push the case forward by submitting it to the Union High Court in Naypyidaw.\textsuperscript{104}

PARLIAMENT WATCH

Upper House approves Myanmar Companies Law

On 27 July, the Upper House of Parliament approved the new Myanmar Companies Law.\textsuperscript{105} Upper House Bill Committee Secretary Dr. Myat Nyana Soe said that the draft law would make it easier to set up companies and it would be possible to register them electronically.\textsuperscript{106}

INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS

US to Burma: Cut military ties with North Korea

On 17 July, US special envoy for North Korea Ambassador Joseph Yun met with State Counsellor Aung San Suu Kyi and Tatmadaw Chief Snr-Gen Min Aung Hlaing in Naypyidaw.\textsuperscript{107} Ambassador Yun’s trip came after North Korea’s test of an intercontinental ballistic missile on 4 July, highlighting US’ worries over the links between Burma/Myanmar and North Korea.\textsuperscript{108}

Current and former US officials pressed Burma to completely break off any remaining links with North Korea, even after the National League for Democracy (NLD)-led government said that “there’s no such relations between military to military”.\textsuperscript{109} A State Department official said, however, that Burmese authorities did not explicitly deny that some ties remained but said that “those ties are not what they were in the past”.\textsuperscript{110}
