President tours India
President goes on observation tour of India’s Taj Mahal

The president was led to the Oberoi Amarvilas hotel, where he observed paintings on marble plaques and utensils of personal use.

The president also visited the Taj Mahal, an ivory-white marble mausoleum constructed on 42 acres of land on the southern bank of the Yamuna river in the city of Agra. The structure was built by order of Mughal Emperor Shah Jahan in memory of his queen Mumtaz Mahal, between 1628 and 1658. Architect Ustad Ahmad Lahauri supervised the construction with the help of nearly 20,000 handicraft artists.

Declared a World Heritage Site by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) in 1983, the Taj Mahal is one of the Seven Wonders of the World and attracts about 8 million tourists every year.

President U Htin Kyaw then proceeded to the Palam Air Base in New Delhi in the afternoon. Upon arrival, the president was welcomed by the Minister of State in the Prime Minister’s Office of India Mr Shri Jitendra Singh.

In the evening, the president and his wife met the staff of the Myanmar Embassy and military attaché, Myanmar doctors working at the World Health Organisation’s office, scholars and their families at the residence of Ambassador to India U Aung Khin Soe, who later hosted a dinner.

Myanmar’s unique co-operation between fish and man

Aung Thant Khaing

FISHING with the help of Ayeyawady dolphins, the endangered species in the Ayeyawady River near Mandalay, is expected to be set up as an eco-tourism site.

The Directorate of the Hotels and Tourism and Wildlife Conservation Society-WCS (Myanmar) held a meeting on 22 August to cooperate on the issue. In Myanmar, Ayeyawady dolphins have been known to drive fish toward fishermen’s nets. In return, the fishermen share some of their catch with the dolphins, organisers said. “The unique cooperation between fish and man can be found only in Myanmar, and the number of visitors reached more than one thousand in the watching season,” said U Han Win, who is in charge of the Ayeyawady Dolphins Conservation team of WCS (Myanmar). A survey is currently being conducted in cooperation with foreign experts to help turn the conservation area for the dolphins into an eco-tourism site.

During the meeting, the authorities and the conservationists discussed the unique cooperation between man and dolphins and raising awareness on the preservation of Ayeyawady dolphins.

The plan includes establishment of community houses at suitable places along the 74-km distance of the river between Mandalay and Kyaukmyaung.

Myanmar’s unique cooperation between fish and man

The move is aimed at educating local residents, some of whom participate in the electrocution of fish, which poses a serious threat to the survival of the dolphins.

The conservationists found a dead dolphin in the area on 15 August, 2016, the first recorded death of an Ayeyawady dolphin this year. The death brought the number of known Ayeyawady dolphins in the area down to only 24.

Local people put blame the dolphin’s death on those who electrocute fish.

However, some conservationists say the delphon could have died accidently due to becoming entangled in a net used for the prevention of erosion.

A survey in February found 55 dolphins between Mandalay and Bhamo, which is a drop from 72 in 2004.

The Ayeyawady dolphins are found near sea coasts and in estuaries and rivers around Southeast Asia, especially in Myanmar, Cambodia and Viet Nam.

WCS annual surveys have shown that the number of the dolphins has increased from 17 or 18 in 2005 to 24 in February 2014, 2 along a 72 kilometre stretch of the Ayeyawady River between Mandalay and Kyaukmyaung.

Most of the dead dolphins were found near Bhamo and Katha and were caused by illegal fishing, according to the fisheries department. Illegal battery-shock fishing is the greatest challenge for conservationists and local authorities are trying to save the endangered species, according to Myanmar’s fisheries department.

Unscrupulous tax evading actors are hurting the film industry

FAMOUS Myanmar motion picture director ‘Wine’ has stated that government financially support for the country’s film industry is lacking as previous erstwhile administrations failed to tax those in the industry.

“In order to entreat the government to financial support the film industry, how much should we pay them? Only after making our own contributions will the government be able to assist us in return. This could all be solved in a week if pre-cash computer systems where installed in every cinema around the country, but they don’t. Those in the film industry want to avoid paying tax,” he said.

The utilisation of pre-cash computer systems in cinemas allow one to know the figures of movie-going audiences and how many tickets have been purchased, in order to calculate the income received, but only very few cinemas have reportedly installed such technology.

However, one of Myanmar’s most prominent actors, Nay Toe, disagrees. “I’ve been paying my taxes ever since I started acting [in movies],” he claims. “I pay a percentage of my annual income. Our taxes records are kept in the office of the Myanmar Motion Picture Organisation. We always pay our taxes. We use a third of our income to purchase needed props and clothing with which to shoot our motion pictures. The remaining two-thirds is paid in tax.”

But failings appear to come from both sides. U Min Lwin Soe, director of the Internal Revenue Department, reportedly told the Myitmakha News Agency that just as those involved in the Myanmar motion picture industry fail to pay their taxes, the department itself fails to take any legal action against tax evaders.

“I’ll give you an example of how our department fails to press hard in procuring taxes from actors from my own experience,” he began to explain. “The actor in question was required to pay K800,000 in tax. He implores me not to be so hasty with them, asking for a night’s extension on his tax deadline. So, I wait. The next day I get a phone call from the regional office telling me to revise the tax levy and by how much.”

Ma Sabei, a resident from Yangon’s Dagon Myothit (South) Township, told Myitmakha News Agency that she believes the correct and honest paying of taxes by actors will have benefits not just for the film industry, but also audiences as well.

The tax evasion of actors during previous government administrations and the need to develop the motion picture industry through the payment of taxes during the current government was reportedly discussed during a Myanmar Motion Picture Development Forum held between August 19-20.—Myitmakha News Agency

Sagaing residents call for reinstating of direct Hkamti - Monywa rapid ferry services

OVER 800 garnered signatures of residents in Sagaing Region, calling for a direct rapid passenger ferry service between Hkamti and Monywa, was reportedly forwarded to regional government on August 24.

The signatures were garnered from residents in wards and villages in Hkamti between August 19-22 through the concerted efforts of Hluttaw MPs and local residents.

“We collected signatures at the request of local residents. The absence of a direct Hkamti — Monywa ferry services have caused difficulties for the general public. Things were convenient in the past when the services used to run. Now, be they school children, teachers or doctors, citizens are faced with difficulty. We’ve got the support of Hluttaw MPs, and civil servants have also signed their name to the campaign,” said Aung San Myint, an individual garnering signatures.

In the absence of a direct rapid ferry service from Hkamti to Monywa, passengers are forced to change in the town of Homalin, taking two nights to arrive Monywa and costing more than K30,000. The rapid ferry services reportedly took one only night to arrive in Monywa and cost just K15,000.

“It’s difficult for us to travel around. The direct rapid ferry service makes life a great deal more convenient,” said Ko Zaw, a resident of Hkamti Township.

Direct rapid ferry services ran between Hkamti and Monywa until the end of this July, when they were reportedly suspended for an assortment of reasons.—Myitmakha News Agency

Yangon peace activists stage mass rally in support of 21st Century Panglong

PEACE activists staged a mass rally in Yangon yesterday in support of the Union Peace Conference—21st Century Panglong.

The rally took place at Mahabandoola Park in front of City Hall in the commercial centre, with musicians and artists entertaining the peace activists.

The demonstrators stood in silence for eight seconds in memory of the activists who were killed in the struggle for democracy.

The event witnessed active participation of the Yangon Region Hluttaw speaker, the Yangon mayor, artists and people from different social strata, including monks. U Ko Ko Gyi of the 88’s Generation Peace and Open Society welcomed the peace conference and called for a continued effort to ensure that the outcomes of the conference won parliamentary approval.

Daw Phyu Phyu Thin, a Pyithu Hluttaw representative of Mingala Taung Nyunt township, described the peace rally as a clear manifestation of how much the people have longed for peace. Plans to import frozen chicken cancelled

A PLAN to import frozen chicken has been canceled due to the objections of the breeders, it is learnt.

In an effort to reduce the price of chicken, the Yangon regional chief minister U Phyo Min Thein came up with an idea to import frozen chicken. But the plan drew criticism from local breeders, who said the low price would result in heavy financial losses. The plan was canceled after two months of objections by the local breeders.

“We are satisfied that the government listens to the voice of the public,” said U Khin Maung Win, a breeder from Myaungmya.

Currently, the rise in the price of chicken is being attributed to a big discrepancy between the price of chicken raised in chicken farms and the retail price of chicken. The price of chicken might decrease when the chickens are directly sold to the consumers.— Min Thit

Victims of forced labour in Thailand saved by police

MORE THAN 260 Myanmar migrants, including 104 undocumented labourers who were forced to work in Thailand, have been rescued by responsible organizations of Thailand and Myanmar.

In cooperation with Myanmar Association in Thailand (MAT), Aid Alliance Committee for Myanmar Workers (AAC), officials from the Myanmar Embassy, Thailand’s Department of Special Investigation (DSI) and Thailand Ministry of Labour, a combined team raided the Thai Better Food Factory to save those migrants, including over 160 Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) workers on 25 August.

According to investigators, the migrants have worked at the factory for over six months. They have faced difficulties in obtaining legal protection because they were not provided with an ID card that was supposed to be given by the employer, who also failed to provide a monthly salary to workers or without a MoU—Kyaw Soe (Kawthaung)

Ten arrested for drug trafficking

TEN PEOPLE including one woman were arrested by police over a two-day period for alleged involvement in the trafficking of prohibited drugs.

Acting on a tip-off, an anti-drug squad searched a car suspected of containing drugs being driven by Kyaw Oo, with another person on board en route from Kalaw to Aungban. The car was stopped near a toll gate in Kalaw. Nearly 100,000 yaba pills worth about 2 billion kyats were found. Two other men were arrested by police after they were found to be connected with drug dealings in Heho Township, according to police.

A similar case occurred on 26 August in the Taungoo District in Bago Region and Tachileik, a town in Shan State. A total of 7,710 yaba pills, an air gun, a sword, four motorcycles, K88,450 and three mobile devices were found in the house of Naing Lin Htet with four other people in Taungoo.

One missing after wave strike in Dawei

ONE VISITOR is missing after a large wave hit Maungmaung Beach last Thursday in Dawei Township in Tanintharyi Region, police reported yesterday.

A family from Thabyaychaung Village in Dawei was visiting the popular Shinnawtaung Pagoda on the Dawei promontory on the morning of 25 August when the wave struck, authorities said. A father and son fell into the water when the wave hit them while they were taking photographs.

Plantations in Naga Self-Administrative Zone suffered from pest problems

The plantations in Nanyun and Pansaung in the Naga Self-Administrative Zone have been plagued with an unexpected and serious pest outbreak, prompting emergency preventive measures, said U Sein Maung, a regional Hluttaw representative for Nanyun Township.

The damage caused by the pest outbreak was reported to the regional government through regional administrators, who provided pesticides to be used on the crops. The locals also provided insecticides.

“However, we cannot tell yet we have completely overpowered the pests,” U Sein Maung said. “Although the big insects are killed, the small creatures are still found in the plantations.”

The authorities from the self-administrative zone purchased the insecticide from Taungoo Township. The department of agriculture in Pansaung Township contributed 10-kilogram bottles of pesticide, buckets used for spraying the pesticide and a device to measure the pesticide toxicity, U Sein Maung said.

The pest outbreak is rare but devastating, farmers said.

“It is the very first time that I have suffered from such an outbreak,” one farmer from the Pansaung area said. “The pests swallowed the whole plantation during one night and only the straws of the paddy were left.”

Hista and Army worms destroyed plantations in 15 villages in the self-administrative zone. They are reported to be fairly large insects, officials said.

Army worms are worse than Hista because they can be eliminated only with the use of highly toxic pesticides, which are potentially harmful to farmers and consumers. Thus most farmers end up writing off the failed crop as a loss, said Daw Thida Aung, the officer from the township agriculture department.

While the extent of damage caused by pest outbreak in the Naga self-administrative region is still being compiled, so far only 155.25 acres out of 1,092 acres of plantations are found to have been badly damaged by pests, it is learnt.—Aung Thant Khing
New method of commercial paddy straw mushroom cultivation implemented

INDOOR cultivation of paddy straw mushrooms are being made on a commercial scale with the use of stackable plastic bags and baskets, officials said.

Paddy straw mushrooms have been cultivated in Amarapura Township since 1993. A new technique using organic fertilizer such as cow dung, hyacinth and cardboard are used in cultivation instead of a straw substrate.

Over 10 visses of paddy straw mushrooms are yielded per room. A viss of paddy-straw mushrooms is worth between Ks2,500 to Ks4,000.

Because paddy straw mushrooms are cultivated indoors, they can be grown in all types of weather, officials said. In indoor cultivation, about 96 baskets of paddy-straw mushrooms can be accommodated in a room by stacking the baskets vertically. The cultivation of the paddy straw mushrooms allows the growers to make profit within days. The paddy straw mushrooms are harvested after 10 or 11 days of cultivation. The paddy-straw mushrooms have to be plucked before they blossom.

Suspected ‘terror’ attack at Indonesian church; no serious casualties

MEDAN, Indonesia — Indonesian police were investigating a suspected terror attack by a knife-wielding assailant on a priest during the Sunday service in a church, and a bomb squad had been deployed to determine whether the attacker’s backpack contained explosives.

There were no serious casualties, though the priest and his attacker suffered minor injuries, according to police in Medan city, northern Sumatra.

“A terrorism act was carried out on Sunday morning at the Saint Joseph catholic church,” said Rina Sari Ginting, spokeswoman for Medan police in a statement. “Police are interrogating the perpetrator... and will search his house for any bomb-making materials.”

A witness present in the church told Reuters the attacker had sat with other worshippers before running towards the priest.

“There was a small explosion like firearms and he also took out a knife as he ran towards the priest,” said Timbas Ginting.

A bomb squad was sent to the site to check whether the assailant was carrying explosives, in case the attack was a failed suicide bomb attempt.

“What’s clear is that the pastor was threatened, and (there was) an attempt to hurt the pastor,” Fahrial, the head of criminal investigations for police in Medan, said. Indonesia has the world’s largest Muslim population and the vast majority practise a moderate form of Islam. But there has been a resurgence in fundamentalism during recent years, inspired in part by Islamist militant groups like al Qaeda and Islamic State.

No one injured in passenger train derailment in southern India

NEW DELHI — A passenger train derailed in the southern Indian state of Kerala early on Sunday, but no casualties have been reported, a senior railway official said.

The mishap took place between Aluva and Karukutty stations in the state’s Ernakulam district at around 3 am local time (2130 GMT Saturday), he said.

The Thiruvanthapuram-Mangalore Express was on its way to the neighbouring state of Karnataka from Kerala’s capital when 12 of its coaches went off the tracks, the official said.

Local TV channels showed footage of the train coaches and reported that stranded passengers were ferried by buses to nearby places.

“Train services in the region were disrupted for over six hours, following the incident,” Normaely, the official said, adding a probe was being ordered into the mishap. Indian Railways, which carry millions of passengers, is one of the largest train networks in the world, crossing the country from north to south.

But the state-run railways has a patchy safety record — there has been little investment in upgrading decaying tracks and signals. It also lags behind on anti-collision technologies.

Moreover, decades of neglect, low investment and subsidised fares have also left the network in a parlous state, though the government is trying to revive the ailing railway sector.

Manila — A leftist rebel group announced on Saturday that it is declaring an indefinite unilateral cease-fire with the government effective from midnight Sunday, extending a week-long truce that resumed in Oslo, Norway last week.

The declaration of an indefinite cease-fire was also to reciprocate the indefinite cease-fire issued by Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte on 21 August, the rebels said.

They added the CPP and its armed wing, the New People’s Army, “are encouraged by the positive outcome of formal talks” held in Oslo from 22 August to 26 August.

“Although talks in the course of the next few months to discuss social and economic reforms, political and constitutional reforms, and end of hostilities and dispossession of forces,” they said. “The Duterte administration is trying to forge peace with the communist rebels in an attempt to end Asia’s longest-running insurrection.”

As Obama heads to Laos, signs of a tilt away from China

MANILA — The secretive communist government of Laos, a country with a population of less than 7 million, rarely causes a ripple on the diplomatic circuit. And yet its sleepy capital will spring to life next week when global leaders arrive for an Asian summit.

Barack Obama will be among them, making the last push of his presidency to “rebalance” Washington’s foreign policy towards Asia, a strategy widely seen as a response to China’s economic and military muscle-flexing across the region.

The might of Laos’ giant neighbour to the north is hard to miss in Vientiane: wealthy Chinese driving SUVs overtake tuk-tuks scuttling along the roads and Chinese-backed hotels sprout from noisy construction sites in one of Asia’s most low-rise cities.

But diplomats say Obama could be pushing on an open door in Laos, thanks to a change in government there in April. They say the country’s new leaders appear ready to tilt away from Beijing and lean more closely towards another neighbour, Vietnam, whose dispute with China over the South China Sea has pushed it into a deepening alliance with the United States.

“The new government is more influenced by the Vietnamese than the Chinese,” said a Western diplomat in Southeast Asia. “It’s not too late for a US president to visit.” Obama will become the first sitting US president to visit landlocked Laos, where the United States waged a “secret war” while fighting in Viet Nam, dropping an estimated two million tonnes of bombs on the country. About 30 per cent of the country failed to explode, leaving a dangerous and costly legacy.

Laos has strategic importance to both Viet Nam and China. Viet Nam has a long land border with Laos that gives it access to markets in Thailand and beyond. For China, Laos is a key gateway to Southeast Asia in its “new Silk Road” trade strategy.

Laos, which is developing a series of hydropower plants along one of the world’s longest rivers, the Mekong, aims to become “the battery of Asia” by selling power to its neighbours.

It is difficult to read policy in Laos because its leaders are so uncommunicative, but Western diplomats have detected some shifts.

First, deputy Prime Minister Somsavat Lengsavad — who ran the steering panel for a $7 billion dam project is now believed to be on hold because Laos is unhappy with the terms of the deal.

Officials of Prime Minister Thongloun Sisoulith’s new government, many of them educated in Viet Nam, have visited Hanoi en masse in recent weeks, their first foreign trip.

At two of the past meetings of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN), which is currently chaired by Laos, Vientiane has taken a more nuanced stance on Beijing than neighbouring Cambodia, which is increasingly seen as a Chinese satellite.

“The US strategic interest in Laos is to see the country be able to exert a certain degree of strategic autonomy because you don’t want (to have something akin to the relationship between China and Cambodia),” said Phuong Nguyen of the Washington-based Centre for Strategic and International Studies think-tank.

A defence official in Washington did not comment on wider strategic issues but described Laos as “an important partner.”

A China foreign ministry spokesman said “we welcome any country, including those inside and outside this region, developing constructive relations, as long as these ties are really beneficial to regional peace, stability and prosperity.”

Beijing has invested around $1 billion annually in Laos in 2014 and 2015, a step up from the US$4.5 billion invested historically before 2014, according to figures from China’s Ministry of Commerce and state-run media.

For the United States, impoverished Laos is not a strong investment draw.

“In Laos, we bring 7-8 companies to the table compared with 30-40 companies that Viet Nam brings. But China—that’s a totally different ball game,” said Anthony Nelson, director of the US-ASEAN business council.

“So there’s no coincidence that the countries with the lowest levels of development, Laos and Cambodia, are the most willing to advocate for China’s position in international discussions.”

But the Lao are closer culturally to Viet Nam than they are to China. Their businesses use Lao language signs and mixed Lao-Viet names.

“We are a bit frustrated with (China). They create their own eco-system,” a Lao businessman said.—Reuters

Armed men storm jail in southern Philippines, free 28 prisoners

MANILA — Armed men believed to have pledged allegiance to the Islamic State group have stormed a jail in the southern Philippine city of Marawi, freeing at least 28 prisoners.

According to figures from police, said the jailbreak took place around 5:40 p.m. on Saturday in Mapandi Village in Marawi City.

He said the attackers, numbering about 50, were heavily-armed and easily took control of the local jail.

Among the escapees were eight members of the so-called rag-tag Maute group who were arrested last Monday for possessing improvised explosive materials and guns. Twenty other prisoners escaped during the attack, he said.

Tello also said the attackers disarmed the jail guards and carted away one M16 rifle, on M14 and a vehicle as they escaped.

“We have heightened the alert level in the region,” he said, adding that pictures of the escapees have been disseminated.

Bangladesh PM defends construction of India-funded power plant near Sundarbans

DHAKA — Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina on Saturday defended her government’s decision to construct a controversial India-funded power plant near Sundarbans, the world’s largest mangrove forests which straddle both Bangladesh and India.

Despite warnings from activists of environmental costs, at a press briefing on the coal-fired plant’s environmental impacts on the forest, the Bangladeshi premier Saturday justified her government’s decision to go ahead with nearly 1.50 billion US dollars power project at any cost.

About the environmental risks cited by environmental groups and ex-Prime Minister Khaleda Zia at the latest, Hasina said that the 1,320-megawatt “Ultra Super-critical Power Plant,” the construction site of which is about 14 kilometres away from the Sundarbans, will be developed with cutting-edge eco-friendly technologies.

“It won’t hamper the world’s largest mangrove forest,” she claimed and added “the plant would rather come as a bless for Sundarbans as people’s dependancy on the forests for their livelihoods would reduce because it will create employment opportunities for them.”

In the press conference, Hasina showed photographs of many major coal-powered plants established in forests and cities in different countries to assert the anti-power plant campaign was a mere propaganda of vested interest groups.

Some 70 per cent of the project cost would reportedly be covered by the Indian Exim Bank as a loan, and the rest by the governments of Bangladesh and India.—Xinhua

Is equitable development a reality?

Kyaw Thura

There is a natural propensity for people to lead an easy life with the vague idea that the government is solely responsible for the equitable development of individual citizens. The reality, however, is that no political system is capable of providing a magic formula for higher socioeconomic status. We ourselves, the creators of our own fate. Since nobody is destined to fail, we ourselves are responsible for our own failures.

It takes only a cursory glance at the notion that all men are created equal to convince us that these people should have been raised differently. Creation ends at birth. We are left with the innate obligation to cultivate the virtues of love, understanding, respect, trust and industry, which are the essential prerequisites for prosperity. It goes without saying that hard work is of the essence in creating prosperity.

However, the government is required to take the utmost caution to ensure that no community bears the burden of social deprivation and discrimination likely to stem from its industrial and commercial operations and its development policies as well. The government should exert its efforts on social integration to pave the way for social mobility. In addition, local governments should provide the residents with opportunities to participate in the decision-making processes that can affect their communities. All things considered, equitable development requires equitable efforts among individuals at all levels of society.

Britain’s Exit from the EU: Why Marketers Should Care

Prof. Michael R. Czinkota
McDonough School of Business
Georgetown University’s

These are tough times for international marketers. The current conditions are characterized by a ubiquitous lack of trust and growing occurrence of terrorism, bringing fear to airplanes and airports, trains, entertain- ment venues, and many unex- pected places. There is strong political volatility where the bat- tle is not only about political sal- vation but also about the way communities are managed.

There is growing wealth concentration for a few, and low in- come for many others. We have witnessed the breakdown of long-term coalitions thought to be unbreakable, such as in Libya, Iraq, Indonesia and South Sudan. In Europe alone we have witnessed massive migra- tion flows from the Middle East, which has led to global disar- mament. We have seen the referendum in Scotland to secede the United Kingdom. And now there is British exit (BREXIT) from the European Union due to a plebi- scite.

Much of this occurs at a distance, so should marketers really be concerned? Yes, they need to analyze the precursors, effects, and consequences. There will be major changes in the business relations within the EU, and also important effects on marketing on both sides of the Atlantic. Understanding and preparation will not remove the thorn of separation, but may help with a less painful adjustment. Large global conflict seemed unlikely between the three rela- tives who ruled England, Russia and Germany, and referred to each other as Georgie, Nicky, and Wil- ly. Yet, within only a few years, World War I had led to millions of casualties and major devastation. Today, some say that rather than walking the walk of diversity, we are ominously close to a similar path of divisiveness. What are we to do now to order to avoid a dra- matic deterioration of global civili- ty, security, and economy?

Tinderboxes can cause hot flames. For example, to guarantee their spheres of influence, Britain and France signed the Sykes-Picot treaty on May 16, 1916, which drew hasty and culturally poorly conceived borders for the Middle East. The accord achieved its planned outcome, namely the expi- ry of the Ottoman Empire, but has caused a century of painful conflict in the Middle East. Even today, the conflicts in Syria or Turkey reflect the inherent disharmony of the old agreement.

BREXIT reflects an unwilling- ness to accept large migration flows and a reluctance to cope with diversity. A British start may en- courage other nations to also de- mand special consideration. But who will be the beast of burden and at what price? Forward-looking countries which adapt their own solutions often surpass the slower and larger powers. Hungary’s poli- cy of “we can’t do it” led to early control of immigration flows. But the nation found itself dined and scored even though many others followed suit. Being the first with good ideas and their im- plementation does not always pay off.

It is ironic to see a self-inflict- ed British exit from the EU, which does not better the world, but car- ries the spark for further conflict. The economic relationship be- tween the U.S. and Britain will weaken. The European Single Market in Business Services (ESSM) is a strategy to be safe and gain more access to the 27 other member states of the European Union. Under Brexit such rationale might not be valid. Stability is a key concern for investors. While the UK is an attractive market with its strong rule of law, highly educated workforce, and language, there may be concern about the U.S., the EU partnership may be more attractive due to its size and the overall streamlining of trade and investment rules. American marketers in the UK will face rising cost and decreasing earnings. A survey of Ernst & Young found 72% of U.S. investors citing the ac- cess to the ESM as an important element of the UK’s investment attractiveness. Marketers will need to find ways which improve the fu- ture appeal of U.K.

BREXIT will not make trade negotiations any easier. Trouble may often be unforeseen and de- layed. For example, the Washing- ton Post reports that the EU has agreed to a ban of certain pesticides in order to protect bees and their hives which are in decline. Will a London withdrawal from such re- strictions endanger British bees, or will British bees endanger their EU relations? What can marketers of- fer to bridge this gap?

This is a not a time for global conflict. Marketers must contribute to tranquility and cohesion, in or- der to demonstrate that trade and investments are preferable ways to obtain goods and services rather than obtain them by engaging in battle. As part of this process, mar- keters may need to invest in relationships which are less traditionally organ- ized but more individualistic and spontaneous. Also, highly empha- sized marketing fundamentals such as competition, risk, profit, and ownership may have to be modi- fied.

Confrontations between friends and adversaries do not re- quire winners and losers. All should be willing to learn from each other. Patience and strength.” These words of George W. Bush still ring. With all the resources now available, we need to start a search for the soul of marketing. Determining past wrongs and the inflicted cost on individuals and so- ciety may enable curative market- ers to play a new role in the devel- opment of relationships. We all must contribute conscientiously to finding ways which help others by sharing their burden. Yet, they must become more willing to share ours as well. Leadership is expensive. Those who now sit at the table must let others approach and take a seat. Dropping crumbs is an insuf- ficient path to a better world.

It used to be said that the United States and England are only separated by a common language. The near term future will see a separa- tion of the two by treaty considera- tions, which had been thought of as concluded, but due to Brexit, will emerge anew. There may well be the opportunity to arrive at new conclusions during new negotia- tions. However, the revision of past agreements will be quite onerous. In many instances, negotiators will tend to be more risk averse, leading to more restrictive negotiation out- comes. Bilateral discussions be- tween the U.S. and the UK will fo- cus on controversial fields such as norms, use of chemicals or addi- tives.

Marketers can contribute to such future negotiations by provid- ing real data which help negotiators understand the realities of market exchange. It will be up to market- ers to emphasize global openness, transparency, and consumption as desirable objectives for progress towards a better human condition.
Conference aims to promote role of Myanmar literature

LOCAL writers have been urged to put more effort into creating non-fiction books as well as aesthetics books to promote the role of literature, said Sithu U Tin Hlaing, whose pen name is Lae Dwin Thar Saw Chit, at the Myanmar Writers Association’s (MWA) conference in Yangon. Chairman of the MWA Sithu U Tin Hlaing also advised local writers to observe the writing style in books created by international writers to help promote their writing skills.

Warm clothes donation helps IDPs to brace La Nina-induced cold weather

INTERNALLY displaced peoples at camps in Mandalay Region have been provided with 36,500 sets of warm clothes as the upcoming winter, expected to be extremely cold due to the La Nina weather system, approaches.

Following weather experts’ warnings that Myanmar would be impacted with extremely cold weather this winter, KBZ’s Brighter Future Myanmar Foundation imported 160,000 jerseys worth US$2 million for the ethnic people’s shelter at IDP camps at border areas. About 36,500 sets of warm clothing were donated to the people at IDPs in Mandalay Region through the Mandalay Region Government.

Mandalay Region Chief Minister Dr Zaw Myint Maung and his wife presented the donations presented by U Moe San Aung of the KBZ Group of Companies. The philanthropic foundation also donated 3,500 warm clothes to the people in Lahe in the Naga Administrative Zone on 18 August.

Such donation will go to IDP camps in Shan State, Kachin State and Chin State, which are likely to be hit by the unusually cold weather. The foundation has also established a K100-million fund in 14 regions and states in order to quickly respond to disasters.— Thura Lwin (Eco)

Letter to the Editor

Dear Editor,

HERE again, as a Consultant Advisor, I will like to stress youth and alcohol. Alcohol is the number one drug problem among youth. The easy availability, widespread acceptability and extensive promotion of alcoholic beverage within our society make alcohol the most widely used and drug abused.

Alcohol used is widespread. I think by their senior year of high school almost all students will have tried alcoholic beverages: 2 out of 3 will be current users, 1 in 20 will be daily and almost 4 out of 10 will consume 5 or more drinks in a row at least once year every 2 weeks.

Drinking has acute effects on the body. The heavy, fast-paced drinking that young people commonly engage in quickly alters judgment, vision, coordination and speech and often leads to dangerous risk-taking behavior. Because they have lower body weight than adults, youth absorb alcohol into their blood system faster than adults and exhibit greater impairment for longer periods of time. Alcohol use not only increase the likelihood of being involved in an accident, it increases the risk of serious injury in an accident because of its harmful on numerous parts of the body.

Alcohol-related highway accidents are principal cause of death among young people; furthermore about half of all youthful deaths in drowning, fires, suicide and homicide are alcoholic related.

Any alcoholic beverage can be misused. Contrary to popular belief, drinking beer or wine can have effects similar to drinking ‘hard’ liquor. A bottle of beer, a glass of wine or a bottle of wine have about the same amount of ethyl alcohol as a drink made of liquor.

Early alcoholic use is associated with subsequent alcoholic dependence and related health problems. School performance of youth who use alcohol is likely to be affected and they are more likely to be truant and to abuse other drugs and to get into trouble.

Alcohol consumption causes a number of marked changes in behavior. Even low doses significantly impair the judgement and coordination. Low to moderate dose of alcohol also causes the indence of variety of aggressive acts, including spouse and child abuse. Moderate to high doses of alcohol causes impairments in higher mental functions, severely altering a person’s ability to learn and remember information. Very high doses cause respiratory depression and death.

Repeated use of alcohol can lead to dependence. Sudden cessation of alcohol intake is likely to produce withdrawal symptoms including severe anxiety, tremors, hallucination, convulsions. Alcohol withdrawal can be life-threatening. Long term consumption of large quantities of alcohol particularly when combined with poor nutrition can also lead to permanent damage to vital organs such as brain, liver.

Mothers who drink alcohol during pregnancy may give birth to infants with foetal alcoholic syndrome. These infants have irreversible physical abnormalities and mental retardation. In addition, research indicates that children of alcoholic parents are of greater risk than other youngsters of becoming alcoholic.

Thai Philharmonic Orchestra (TPO) performs concert in Mandalay

THE Thai Philharmonic Orchestra (TPO) gave its performance at the Mandalay National Theatre in Mandalay on 27 August with the attendance of Mandalay Region Chief Minister Dr. Zaw Myint Maung and members of Mandalay Region Government.

At the concert, the Thai Ambassador to Myanmar delivered formal words of greeting before the TPO played the Myanmar National Anthem, Myanmar oldies, Beethoven symphonies popular in the Western countries and works by the Russian composer Tchaikovsky. Female dancers from the Fine Arts Department performed Myanmar traditional dances. The Mandalay Region Chief Minister Dr Zaw Myint Maung and his wife presented a bouquet of flowers to Thai orchestra.

The TPO is considered one of the best ensembles in South East Asia.

Over the past 10 years, TPO, which was founded by Director Dr. Sugree Charoentra of Mahidol University Musical College in Salaya near Bangkok, is under the patronage of the Royal Thai Government.

The TPO had its first international appearance at the Asian Orchestras Festival in the Tokyo Opera City Concert Hall in 2009. Its second appearance was at the gala concert for the 15th ASEAN Summit in Thailand. It has since performed in New Zealand in 2012, and Vientiane, Laos in 2013.— Thiha Ko Ko (Mandalay)
New tans, same old ‘polycrisis’ as Europe’s summer ends

BRUSSELS — The European Union grinds back into action this week after its August break, still dazed by Britain’s midsummer vote to quit the EU and facing much the same “polycrisis” as a year ago: a mass of refugees, a fragile economy, hostile Russians among those Euros, now more awkward than ever.

When President Jean-Claude Juncker makes his annual State of the Union address to Parliament in Strasbourg on 14 September, he might easily repeat last year’s warning: the EU had a last chance to save itself from a tide of centrifugal nationalisms.

Last week, the EU’s remaining Big Three — German Chancellor Angela Merkel, French President Francois Hollande and their host, Italian Prime Minister Matteo Renzi — felt they needed to renew their vows at the wellspring of the union, the island of Ventotene, where in 1941 prisoners of Mussolini wrote a manifesto to unite Europe.

That they met on the deck of the aircraft carrier Garibaldi reinforced the sense of beleaguered leaders rallying to the EU’s defence as they contemplated an obstacle-strewn political calendar for the year ahead.

The EU leaders are first preparing for a summit on 16 September in Bratislava — without Britain — that aims to sketch out a post-Brexit future for the Union.

On 2 October, Hungary’s right-wing prime minister, Viktor Orban, is set to deliver another slap to Brussels: a largely symbolic referendum to reject an EU quota system for relocating refugees among member states — a scheme Juncker invested much capital in a year ago, but which has barely got off the ground.

On 8 November, Orban is hoping for victory for a man he calls the “valiant” Donald Trump in the US presidential election. Few of Orbán’s EU peers are so enthusiastic. They see Trump as a disruptive maverick whose endorsement of and by Brexiteers-in-chief Nigel Farage marks him as a trueINOSS. A Trump win could snap a transatlantic coalition on Russia that is already fraying in Europe, where governments from Paris to Bratislava are seeking a review of Ukrainian-related sanctions as measures expire at year’s end. Trump might also inject a new dose of post-Brexit uncertainty for world trade.

At home, all the Big Three leaders face their own electoral challenges from eurosceptics.

It starts with Renzi, ready trying to persuade Italians he has the youthful energy for rebuilding after the latest earthquake in the Apennines, unlike the scandal-tainted Silvio Berlusconi at L’Aquila in 2009, when more than 300 people died.

Probably in November, Renzi will put to a referendum the constitutional reforms he says are needed to break a political deadlock that is choking the Italian economy. Polls are tight and the euro sceptic upstarts 5-Star are gaining for the socialist premier, who is expected to resign if he loses.

Holandia is threatened with a drubbing on 23 April at the hands of far-right National Front leader Marine Le Pen in the first round of France’s presidential election.

Her appeal has been enhanced by Islamic State carnage in Paris and Nice and the summer row about burkinis on the beaches, although pollsters doubt she can win a 7 May runoff vote against Hollande or any other survivor from a mainstream party.

As for Merkel, she has yet to confirm she wants a fourth term at parliamentary elections due in just over a year. The biggest threat to her re-election remains her decision last year to welcome a million migrants to Germany, as EU borders buckled. That has already weakened support for her conservative party.

Such threats to domestic survival have often spurred leaders to take potshots at Brussels — even if only the British have taken it to the length of turning most voters against the EU entirely.

But even if little has changed in Brussels since last summer, optimists might see reason to hope for more unity now.

While rows go on about how, indeed whether, EU states should share out the burden of asylum-seekers stranded in Greece and Italy, what is new is how few are arriving, at least in Greece.

Rights groups were outraged this year by hard-nosed deals with non-EU Balkan states to bar the routes north from Greece and with Turkey to stop Syrian refugees reaching Greece in the first place. But those deals did slash the numbers arriving.

It’s something EU officials find hard to boast of. Many admit privately to unease at policies that, along with efforts to pay African governments to stop people setting off for Italy, sit uncomfortably with the Union’s lofty humanitarian ideals.

But look again at Merkel, Hollande and Renzi on the Garibaldi, flagship of an EU mission off Libya that is part rescue operation and military deterrent against people smugglers, and a slightly different image of today’s EU emerges.—Reuters

Half of Germans against Merkel serving fourth term — poll

BERLIN — German Chancellor Angela Merkel’s domestic popularity has declined, a poll showed on Sunday, with 50 per cent of Germans against her serving a fourth term in office after a federal election next year.

A series of violent attacks on civilians in July, two of which were claimed by Islamic State, have focussed attention on Merkel’s open-door migrant policy, which allowed hundreds of thousands of migrants from the Middle East, Africa and elsewhere into Germany last year.

Half of the 501 people questioned in the Emnid poll for the Bild am Sonntag newspaper were against Merkel staying in office beyond after the 2017 election, with 42 per cent wanting her to remain. —Reuters

India tests new space rocket engine

NEW DELHI — India on Sunday successfully tested a new rocket engine of the Super Sonic Combustion Ram Jet (SCRAMJET) from the southern spacecraft of Sriharikota.

With the launch of the new engine, which could bring down space launch costs substantially, India joined the league of only two nations — the United States and Australia that have the technology.

The test was conducted by the state-run Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO), using a sounding rocket. “The test was a grand success,” ISRO chief Kiran Kumar told the media. Weighing 3 tons, SCRAMJET, also called Advanced Technology Vehicle, is an engine that takes atmospheric oxygen to burn fuel instead of using fuel and oxidizer for the combustion to happen.—Xinhua

Relative of Charlie Hebdo attacker investigated for Islamist ties

PARIS — A relative of one of the militants who attacked French satirical magazine Charlie Hebdo in Paris in January 2015 has been put under formal investigation for Islamist ties and remanded in custody, a judicial source said on Saturday.

The source said Mourad Hamyd was suspected of trying to travel to Syria to join Islamic State.

Hamyd, who is French and a brother-in-law of assailant Cherif Kouachi, was detained in Bulgaria last month after a Paris court issued a European arrest warrant against him.

Hamyd was questioned by French police following the Charlie Hebdo attacks in which Cherif Kouachi and his brother Said shot dead 12 people before being killed by police, but was cleared of any involvement.—Reuters

Southwest flight forced to make emergency landing after engine failure

WASHINGTON — A Southwest Airlines flight from New Orleans to Orlando, Florida, made an emergency landing Saturday morning after an engine failure. The Captain of SW Flight 3472 from New Orleans made the decision to divert the airplane to Pensacola, Florida due to a mechanical issue with the number one engine, a Southwest statement said.

“The flight landed safely without incident at Pensacola International Airport at 9:40 am central time. Initial reports indicate there are no injuries among the 99 passengers and five crew members onboard”, said the statement.—Xinhua

May urged to give green light to Hinkley nuclear project

LONDON — The chief executive of the French power giant EDF has called on British Prime Minister Theresa May to give a go-ahead to the proposed nuclear power plant at Hinkley Point.

In a signed article on the Sunday Telegraph which was published Saturday night on the newspaper’s website, Vincent de Ribatz pointed to the risks caused by severe critics, saying “losing sight of the bigger picture by overlooking the positive impact and importance of this investment for Britain.”

One month ago, the new British prime minister ordered a review of the 18-billion-British-pound (23.6-billion-US-dollar) Hinkley Point C project, which will be built and mainly funded by the EDF. China also agreed to take a third of the investment.

De Ribatz said that the Hinkley project brings the benefits of a 30-year partnership between the EDF and its nuclear construction partner in China, a country with the largest civil nuclear programme in the world.—Xinhua
Turkey ratchets up Syria offensive, says warplanes hit Kurdish militia

KARKAMIS, (Turkey) — Rebels supported by Turkey fought Kurdish-backed forces in northern Syria on Saturday, as Ankara ratcheted up its cross-border offensive by saying it had launched air strikes against both Kurdish forces and Islamic State.

Turkey’s government, which is fighting a Kurdish insurgency at home, has said the Syrian campaign it opened this week is as much about preventing Kurdish militia fighters from gaining territory in Syria as about pushing back Islamic State.

Turkey wants to stop Kurdish forces gaining control of a continuous stretch of Syrian territory on its frontier, which it fears could embolden the Kurdish militant group PKK, which has waged a three-decade insurgency on Turkish soil.

Turkish security sources said two F-16 jets bombed a site controlled by the Kurdish YPG militia, which is part of the broader US-backed Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) coalition. The sources also said the jets hit six Islamic State targets.

Turkish military said one of its soldiers was killed and three others wounded when a tank was hit by a rocket that they said was fired from territory held by the Kurdish YPG. The sources said the army shelled the area in response.

Syrian rebels opposed to Ankara’s incursion said Turkish forces had targeted forces allied to the YPG and no Kurdish forces were in the area.

On the ground, Turkish-backed Syrian rebels fought forces aligned with the SDF near the frontier town of Jarablus. Forces opposed to Ankara said Turkish tanks were deployed, a charge denied by Turkey’s rebel allies.

In Turkey, suspected Kurdish militants fired rockets at the airport in the main southeastern city of Diyarbakir, sending passengers and staff scrambling for shelter. Dogan news agency said. There were no reports of casualties.

Turkey’s offensive into Syria began on Wednesday, supporting its rebel allies with Turkish special forces, tanks and warplanes. It seized control of Jarablus from Islamic State seeking to stop any Kurdish forces moving in first.

Saturday’s use of warplanes against what Turkey said was a Kurdish YPG militia target highlights its determination to prevent any Kurdish territorial expansion in north Syria.

Any action against Kurdish forces in Syria puts Turkey at odds with its NATO ally the United States, which backs the SDF and YPG, seeing them as the most reliable and effective ally in the fight against Islamic State in Syria.

It adds complexity to the Syrian conflict that erupted five years ago with an uprising against Syrian President Bashar al-Assad and has since drawn in regional states and world powers.— Reuters

Second boycotter says will rejoin Libya’s UN-backed government

TRIPOLI — A member of the leadership of Libya’s UN-backed government who is close to powerful rival factions in the east of the country has said he will end his boycott of the Tripoli-based body.

The decision by Ali Gatrani could strengthen the Government’s nine-member leadership, which the parliament in the east left Tripoli in 2014 after some lawmakers there voted to the parliament in the east, which is extend its authority across the country.

The parliament now in the east called the venue of Presidential Council’s move from Tunis to Tripoli in March, even though the UN backed deal “states that the venue of Presidential Council meetings would be in the capital, Tripoli, only after the militias have left”.

Staffan de Mistura said in a statement on Saturday that for logistical and operational reasons convoys must go via the Castel road but said the “shortest and clearest route” is through the Castello road. The United States and other states are working to get UN agencies to resupply Aleppo.

The main alliance of rebel groups in Aleppo, in a statement, has already accepted the UN plan saying it is ready to ensure compliance, while the United States and other states are working to get other parties to commit, de Mistura said. UN agencies have said that supplies including surgical material for treating war wounds and even baby milk have been removed from UN convoys at government checkpoints throughout the five-year conflict.

The UN Syria envoy presses for speedy Aleppo aid delivery

GENEVA — The United Nations Special Envoy for Syria called for an end to the siege on Saturday to allow the first safe delivery of relief supplies to the divided city of Aleppo.

He said his top concern was the “rights of the Barqa region and its people … whom we repre sent, along with with their sons’ sacrifices in the police and the army”. Barqa is the name for Libya’s eastern region.

In a statement, de Mistura said in a statement on Saturday that for logistical and operational reasons convoys must go via the Castello road but said the “shortest and fastest” Ramoush road south of Aleppo should be used in parallel to deliver supplies to eastern Aleppo. The United States and Russia failed on Friday to reach a breakthrough deal on military co-operation and a worldwide cessation of hostilities in Syria, saying they still have issues to resolve before an agreement could be announced.— Reuters
Trump vows crackdown on immigrants who overstay visas if elected

DES MOINES, (Iowa) — US Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump offered fresh details of how he would tackle illegal immigration on Saturday, saying he would crack down on those who overstay their visas as he sought to quiet criticism from conservatives.

In a campaign speech in Des Moines, Iowa, Trump also cited the shooting death of a cousin of NBA star Dwyane Wade to urge African-American voters to rally behind him, calling it an example of violence that has to be addressed.

Trump, speaking on the Iowa State Fairgrounds with hay bales stacked behind him, sought to clarify his views on how to overhaul the US immigration system after saying earlier in the week that he was softening on his plan to deport all 11 million illegal immigrants.

That stance drew fire from conservatives who wanted him to stand fast after he won the Republican presidential nomination in large part by a hardline stance that would include building a wall along the US border with Mexico.

In his speech, Trump said he would seek to institute a tracking system to ensure illegal immigrants who overstay their visas are quickly removed, and would propose an e-verify system to prevent the illegal community from gaining access to welfare and other benefits.

“If we don’t enforce visa expiration dates, then we have an open border — it’s as simple as that,” he said.

In outlining his views, Trump said addressing illegal immigration is important to helping Americans find jobs.

“Every time an African-American citizen, or any citizen, loses their job to an illegal immigrant, the rights of that American citizen have been violated,” he said. “Equal protection of the law must include the consistent application of our immigration laws.”

Trump said his first priority upon taking office next January would be the immediate deportation of thousands of illegal immigrants who remain in the United States despite having committed crimes. — Reuters

Spain starts countdown to possible third national election in year

MADRID — The clock starts ticking on Wednesday towards what could be Spain’s third national election in a year when acting Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy faces a confidence vote in parliament for a second term in office.

Spain has been without a functioning government since inconclusive elections in December and June failed to hand a convincing mandate to any political party. So far, party leaders have been unable to agree on forming a coalition.

The right-month political deadlock has delayed investments in infrastructure such as roads and rail and put high-ranking government appointments on hold, leaving some Spanish embassies without an ambassador.

Rajoy’s centre-right People’s Party (PP) won the most votes in June’s election but lacks the majority it needs to win the vote even with support from centrist Ciudadanos (Citizens), the fourth-biggest party.

The opposition Socialists have refused to back Rajoy or smooth the way to a PP-led minority government by abstaining in a second confidence vote, which will be held on Friday.

If Wednesday’s ballot fails, the second vote a simple majority will suffice to put Rajoy back in power.

The Socialists are unlikely to back down from that position given local elections in September in the northern regions of Galicia and the Basque Country where support for Rajoy’s PP could cost votes for the left-wing party. — Reuters

Colombia’s FARC rebels to hold final conference, peace vote 13-19 September

BOGOTA — Colombia’s main rebel group, the Revolutionary Armed Forces, said in a statement on Saturday they will hold their final conference on 13-19 September to ratify a peace accord with the government.

The deal between the leaders of the leftist guerrilla group, referred to as FARC, and the government was announced Wednesday in Havana, after almost two years of talks. The rebels have agreed to lay down arms after half a century of war.

Colombia’s President Juan Manuel Santos has sent the text of the accord to Congress, where legislators have 30 days to go over it before a national referendum on 2 October. — Reuters

Scandal-hit Gupta family says plans to sell South African holdings

JOHANNESBURG South Africa’s wealthy Gupta family, which has been accused of holding undue political sway over President Jacob Zuma, said on Saturday it planned to dispose of all stakes it holds in South African businesses before the end of the year.

The Guptas have denied accusations that they have used their friendship with Zuma to influence his decisions or advance their business interests. But South Africa’s anti-corruption watchdog said in July it would get more funds to investigate whether Zuma allowed the family to make government appointments.

In a statement, the Gupta family said “we now believe the time is right for us to exit our shareholding of the South African businesses” and it believed the move would benefit current employees.

“As such, we announce today our intention to sell all of our shareholding in South Africa by the end of the year. We are already in discussions with several international prospective buyers,” the statement said.

The prominent business family is accused of being behind Zuma’s abrupt sacking of former finance minister Nhlanhla Nene in December, a move that rattled investor confidence and triggered calls for the president’s resignation.

The scandal surrounding the Guptas took a dramatic turn earlier this year after deputy finance minister Mcebisi Jonas said the family had offered him his boss’s job. Zuma has said that the Guptas are his friends but denied doing anything improper. The Guptas have also denied making job offers to anyone in government.

The three Gupta brothers moved to South Africa from India at the end of apartheid rule in the mid-1990s and went on to build a business empire that stretches from technology to the media to mining. — Reuters
Another powerful typhoon may hit Japan early next week

TOKYO — Powerful Typhoon Lionrock is forecast to hit eastern to northern Japan on Tuesday, bringing heavy rains and strong winds to a wide area of the country, the Japan Meteorological Agency said Saturday.

The typhoon, strengthening its force while hovering in the Pacific Ocean for several days, was moving east-northeast at 15 kilometres per hour about 370 km southeast of Minami Daito Island in Okinawa Prefecture as of 9 pm Saturday, packing winds of up to 216 kph with an atmospheric pressure of 945 hectopascals near its centre.

The season’s 10th typhoon is expected to move out around Sunday, it may approach or make landfall on eastern to northern Japan with greater strength than three typhoons that caused damage across the country in August, the agency added.

Although the typhoon’s strength is expected to peak out around Sunday, it may approach or make landfall on eastern to northern Japan and likely approach Japan’s largest main island of Honshu on Tuesday, the weather agency said.

Due to the approaching storm, Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, who is now in Nairobi to attend a Japan-led African development conference, decided to return to Tokyo late Monday night, ahead of the initial schedule of Tuesday morning.

SANT’ANGELO (Italy) — Tiny villages that dot the valley around the town of Amatrice, which was levelled by Wednesday’s earthquake, were home to generations of families who once farmed the land, but later moved to cities for work and now return for the holidays.

They are hamlets where children are free to play and roam day and night, without fear of traffic or strangers, because everyone knows everyone and keeps an eye out.

“The fear is that they will now be abandoned,” said Giancarla Celli, 50, standing outside the 300-year-old family villa that withstood the quake, but which has been badly damaged and is now unsafe, cracks zigzagging up its walls. Most of the other homes in the hamlet of Sant’Angelo, where more than 100 people pass the hot summer months but which is sparsely populated in winter, have been reduced to rubble.

“I spent every summer here when I was a little girl,” she said, tearing up. “I have so many memories.”

Sant’Angelo, San Lorenzo e Flaviano, Salaparuta and Montevago were emptied after a 1968 quake, and deadly tremors have left a string of abandoned communities along Italy’s rocky, 1,200 km-long (750 mile) Apennine backbone. Prime Minister Matteo Renzi’s government has promised to rebuild the devastated area, where at least 290 people died following Wednesday’s disaster.

However, red tape, corruption and organised crime have given Italy a terrible track record for post-quake reconstruction. Complicating the matter is the fact that only an estimated one percent of Italian households buy earthquake insurance, the other 99 percent seeing it as an expensive luxury.

That means the cost on any rebuilding — probably running into the billions of euros — will have to be shouldered by a state that already has one of the highest debt mountains in the world, which is a perennially struggling to keep under control.

“Sant’Angelo will end up a cemetery of rubble,” said Pasquale Belli, one of Giancarla’s neighbours, who drives about 150 km (95 miles) from Rome every weekend to get away from the chaos of the capital.

A little further down the leafy valley is the town of San Lorenzo e Flaviano, also badly damaged. Firemen used a metal basket on the end of a crane to lower themselves into the church, whose roof has collapsed, to rescue relics such as an antique icon and a broken crucifix.

While in the United States kids go to summer camp, during Italy’s long summer break, children often go to stay with grandparents in small towns like San Lorenzo where they forge a lifelong tie to both the place and the people.

“All of my most cherished childhood memories are from here,” said Barbara Bonifazi, 32, who lives and works in Rome but returns often to San Lorenzo.

“At night, you can see every star in the sky.”

Roberto Nibi, 67, is an architect who lives in Rome but was born in San Lorenzo. He was sleeping in the same room where he was born when the quake hit. “Imagine how ironic it would have been to have been killed in the same room I was born,” he said shaking his head. Luckily for him, his house withstood the jolt.

Miley Cyrus secretly married to Liam Hemsworth?

Los Angeles — Pop star Miley Cyrus has sparked wedding rumours after she was pictured wearing a diamond encrusted gold band on her left hand ring finger during an outing with Liam Hemsworth. The Australian actor, however, didn’t sport a similar ring, reported Ace Showbiz.

The pair kept it casual during the outing. The “Wrecking Ball” songstress donned a cropped turquoise cotton tank top and a pair of colorful leggings, while “The Hunger Games” actor rocked a grey T-shirt and black shorts.

Earlier, it was reported that the pair had cancelled their plans to get married this summer and go for their honeymoon in Bora Bora because Miley “is still very erratic with her decision-making.” — PTI

Iranian refugee detained in Papua New Guinea wins cartooning award

Sydney — An Iranian refugee held at an Australian-funded detention centre in Papua New Guinea has won a political cartooning award for his work depicting life inside the camp.

Ali, a 25-year-old whose pen name is Eaten Fish, has chronicled his three-year detention on Manus Island as he struggles with obsessive compulsive disorder, post-traumatic stress disorder and debilitating panic attacks. Under Australia’s hardline immigration policy, anyone intercepted trying to reach the country by boat is sent for processing to camps on Manus or Nauru in the South Pacific. They are not eligible to be resettled in Australia.

Cartoonists Rights Network International (CRNI) said Ali was recognised for his courage in documenting life under Australia’s offshore detention programme — which drew thousands of protesters onto streets across the country on Saturday calling for its closure.

“Eaten Fish has been able to keep up a stream of cartoons documenting the unspeakable abuses and excesses of the guards and administrators of the camp,” Joel Pett, president of CRNI’s board of directors, said in a statement on Friday.

“For this he has been the subject of beatings, deprivation of food, and even worse degrading treatment by the guards.”

The multi-award-winning advocacy, Janet Galbraith, said the award meant a lot to the young cartoonist — whose work has been published in The Guardian newspaper — but it was also an indictement of Australia’s detention programme. Previous winners have included cartoonists jailed or disappeared for their work.

Galbraith said Ali, who fled Iran due to fears of government persecution, was sick and needed specialist medical assistance.

Australia’s Department of Immigration and Border Protection denied the claims made by CRNI and defended the care provided at the facility.

“The department currently has no evidence that any of these allegations are true,” a spokesman said in an email to Reuters. Australia and Papua New Guinea said earlier this month the Manus center would be shut but they gave no date for the closure, leaving the fate of about 800 refugees unclear. — Reuters

South Australia eyes 10% rise in Indian tourists' arrival

MUMBAI — South Australia, recently named the global wine capital and producer of 60% of all Australian wines, is eyeing a 10 per cent increase in arrival by Indian tourists in 2016-17, boosted by its marketing and communication initiatives.

“We received 10,000 Indian tourists, as per our target, in March 2016. With the on-going and proposed marketing, communication activities, we aim to increase the visitation by 10 per cent in the coming year. We have witnessed significant growth in the India market in the last three years and look forward to a positive progression,” South Australia Tourism Commission (SATC) Regional Director, South East Asia and India, Dana Urmonas told PTI here.

She said, at present, India was among the top 15 source markets for South Australia.

“The way Indians are now travelling is changing significantly. With the increase in disposable income of the average Indian consumer we expect the number of international trips to rise. We recognise India as a key growth market and are looking to capitalise on growing outbound tourist numbers,” Urmonas said.

“We are positive about having more Indian visitors and hope that India will be among top 10 countries in the coming years,” she said.

South Australia’s top five source markets include — United Kingdom, North America (USA and Canada), New Zealand, Germany and China, she said.

China has grown significantly over the past five years, while the established western markets of United Kingdom, New Zealand and North America continue to perform well for South Australia, Urmonas said.

In India, SATC targets people mainly in the age group of 25-55, who are global travellers.

“Our core target segments include leisure travellers, honeymooners and families and our primary markets are Mumbai, Delhi, Bangalore and Chennai,” Urmonas said, adding family travellers also form an important part of the customer segment—PTI

Eating while petting a bunny in Hong Kong

HONG KONG — Hong Kong’s first rabbit cafe opened in a small upstairs space over the busy commercial district of Causeway Bay.

Serving different combos, the cafe also comes with a rabbit snack.

Inspired by a similar cafe on Japan’s famous “rabbit island”, Ricky Lam and his friends decided to bring a rabbit cafe to Hong Kong.

“We went to Okunoshima in Japan last year, and we were inspired by the atmosphere when having meal with rabbits which could be a pretty relaxing. Also we all know abandoning rabbits is common so over half of rabbits in our cafe were adopted,” he said.

Lam also said they have a list of rules customers have to follow before playing with the rabbits, including not pulling their ears or picking them up by the ears.

Providing the experience to play with bunnies is attracting animal lovers and people considering whether to keep rabbit as their pet.

Liu Lui brought her two daughters to the cafe.

“It is the first rabbit restaurant in Hong Kong and here we come. Because my girls they want (to) have rabbits as their pets, so just take them here and to have a look of rabbits,” she said.

Liu’s younger daughter Tiana Yung had a great time with rabbits.

“Think the rabbits are cute and I like them and I like the drinks and I like the food.’ Tiana’s sister Charlotte also like rabbits, admitted, “I like rabbits because they are very cute. I like feeding them, and they are very soft and fluffy,” she said.

However, rabbits are very fragile animals, and they can suffer severe physiological reactions to fear or stress according to founder of Dr. Hugh’s Veterinary Hospital Dr. Hugh Samanta.

“The rabbits in the cafe, the rabbits are prey species and they get very easily stressed. The diet is very important because they get sick very easily. I don’t know what the set up in the cafe is. It may be wonderful: the rabbits might be kept separate from people.

It may work but it has to be managed extremely well to avoid stress and disease in the individual rabbits in the cafe,” he said.

Lam said that the cafe, which opened in June, is so popular people need to make reservations.

Nadal aims to carry Olympic boost into US Open

NEW YORK — Rafael Nadal was exhausted yet exhilarated following his emotional return to action at this month’s Rio Olympics after an injury-aborted season and looking forward to gearing back up for the US Open starting on Monday.

“If you’re not excited about the US Open, you’re not a tennis player,” Nadal told reporters. Nadal is also dealing with a wrist injury and women’s number one Serena Williams is coping with a sore right shoulder.

New manager Antonio Conte has promised to restore Chelsea’s belief in the work we are doing. “We frustrated them at times and we contributed to the game by going forward,” said Hull boss Mike Phelan as his side saw their 100 per cent record ended by his former club United.

“Today I can start the forehead, I think my normal forehead, but still needs time to feel that I am more confident on my wrist. But I am practicing well and I am competing well.”

Nadal hopes his Rio election carries over to the Open, which he won in 2010 and 2013. “I have been playing at a very high level. So that helped me to play well in the Olympics, and I hope it’s going to help me to play well here,” the 14-times grand slam winner said.

“Today we did everything to win,” said Mourinho. “When you score the 18-year-old Rashford struck off a sweeping late Chelsea move.

The team played very well, created a lot of chances,” Conte said. “To keep a clean sheet is very important to increase our confidence in the work we are doing.”

United were frustrated in wet conditions by Hull’s dogged defending before substitute Moses rounded off a sweeping late Chelsea move.

Late show helps Mourinho’s United join Chelsea on top

LONDON — After Chelsea continued their 100 per cent start with a 3-0 win over Burnley on Saturday, a last-gasp goal by Marcus Rashford helped Jose Mourinho keep pace with his old club as Manchester United beat Hull City 1-0.

Elsewhere, Arsenal and champions Leicester City picked up their first Premier League wins of the season by beating Watford and Swansea City respectively while Tottenham Hotspur came from behind to draw 1-1 at home to Liverpool.

New manager Antonio Conte has promised to restore Chelsea’s belief in the work we are doing. “We frustrated them at times and we contributed to the game by going forward,” said Hull boss Mike Phelan as his side saw their 100 per cent record ended by his former club United.

First-half goals by Santii Cazorla (penalty), Alexis Sanchez and Mesut Ozil gave Arsenal a 3-1 win at Watford to ease the pressure on manager Arsene Wenger. “We had a good cushion at halftime,” Wenger said. “At the moment we’re not completely there physically and you could see that in the second half.” Debutant Roberto Pereyra pulled one back for Watford with an unstoppable drive.—Reuters
