The 37th ASEAN Inter-Parliamentary Assembly concluded yesterday in Nay Pyi Taw with the ceremonial handing over of the gavel, the symbol of the Assembly chairman and AIPA banner by Mahn Win Khaing Than, Speaker of Pyidaungsu Hluttaw, to the 38th host country’s deputy speaker of the Philippines Lower House Mr Eric Singson.

In his closing address at the ceremony, Mahn Win Khaing Than, Speaker of Pyidaungsu Hluttaw and chairman of the 37th AIPA, expressed his hope for peace and stability in the region and sustainable progress under the leadership of the Philippines.

“It is an honourable deed to hand over the duties of the chairman to the Philippine Parliament, the oldest democracy in the region,” said the Speaker.

The assembly made decisions, numbering 30 or so, and many matters were discussed, including cyber-security in the region, prevention against the Zika virus, creation of job opportunities, better working environments, fortification of small and medium enterprises (SMEs) and implementation of projects in the socio-security declaration of ASEAN for the development of business and enterprises in the region.

Amendments over rules and regulations of the Women Parliamentarians Organization (draft) were discussed and decided unanimously, said Mahn Win Khaing Than.

“The old one was enacted 18 years ago, hence it needs to be amended. And the Assembly did record marvelous performances of respective chairpersons of joint-communique committee, the Committee of Women Parliamentarians and the committee for political, economic and social affairs, he added.

Speaker Mahn Win Khaing Than also urged AIPA to closely cooperate with international parliaments and other aligned organisations to overcome challenges to be encountered on the way to 2025. “In order to be a developed ASEAN community, implementation of decisions made by the ASEAN Inter-Parliamentary Assembly should be emphasised,” said the Speaker.

It was learnt that 38th General Assembly of AIPA would be held in September, 2017, in Manila, the Philippines, to be attended by Georgia and Ukraine as observers.

Retaining walls to prevent erosion to be built in Lat Pan Kyun village, Taungup

ACCORDING to U Thant Sin Maung, the Union Minister of the Ministry of Transport and Communication, retaining walls to prevent erosion will be built quickly, if funds are available, within the 2017-18 budget year in Lat Pan Kyun village, Taunggup township, Rakhine State.

It is really essential to construct retaining walls or retaining walls for erosion within Ywar Oo Monastery, Lat Pan Kyun village.” U Thant Sin Maung said. “The retaining walls should be built strongly so as not to cause erosion ever again”, he added.

The department of water resources and river development, Rakhine State office, is trying to begin construction of a 600-feet stone dyke to prevent erosion. The budget for this process, Ks525.42 billion, is being helped by adding spare funds to local government’s 2015-2016 budget year and 2016-2017 budget year. But the budget fund is not allowed for this process as there are many projects as the priority levels depend on allowance funds’ limitation.

“The erosions are happening continuously within the monastery,” said Daw Ni Ni Myint, the representative of Pyithu Hluttaw, Taunggup Township. “Almost all villagers may have to move to safer places within the coming years”. There are about 300 houses in Lat Pan village, Taunggup township.—Wai Phyo (MMK)

Myanmar garment manufacturers request tax exemption in FOB system

MYANMAR garment entrepreneurs have requested the Ministry of Commerce and the Ministry of Planning and Finance to grant a tax exemption in the Free-on-Board (FOB) system to maintain Myanmar’s garment industry for the long term, it is learnt from the Myanmar Garment Entrepreneurs Association.

Myanmar garment factories are currently operating under Cut, Make and Pack (CMP) system. Six to 15 per cent of taxes are levied on the export of garments processed under FOB system if the clothing is exported under its own brand.

To enhance the garment sector, manufacturers are being asked to switch from the CMP system to FOB.

The garment enterprises have not improved because of the requirements in procedures. Additionally, the citizen-owned garment factories are dealing with the problem that their factories could be shut down over the next five years.

Myanmar’s garment market is strongly influenced by Japan, Europe, South Korea, America and China under the CMP system.

The garment industry earned US$1.65billion in 2015 and the income from garment factories are expected to reach US$2.1billion by the end of 2016.

There are a total of 900 locally operated garment factories with a labour force of about 350,000.—

Demand for sesame seeds could rise with lower incidences of pesticide residue

Southern Philippines rebels free three Indonesian hostages

MANILA — Abu Sayyaf rebels linked to Islamic State freed three more Indonesian captives on Sunday after a three-month ordeal, the Philippine government said, taking the number of hostages released to nine in the past two weeks.

They were handed over in Sulu to Nur Misuari, founder of the Moro National Liberation Front (MNLF), a Muslim rebel group that has signed a peace deal with the government.

President Rodrigo Duterte, founder of the Abu Sayyaf Group, has said the group has little chance of becoming a pillar of stability in a southern Philippine region.

The group, which has been involved in a nationwide peace process between the government and the MNLF, has signed a peace deal with the government.

Philippine president rejects Hitler label, says it didn’t originate from him — spokesman

MANILA — Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte should not be compared to Adolf Hitler, and his reference to the Holocaust was an “oblique deflection” of claims he is a mass murderer, his spokesman said on Saturday, as anger smouldered over his incendiary remarks.

Duterte’s comments on Friday that he wished to kill millions of drug dealers as part of his anti-narcotics war, and those he made about the deaths of millions of Jews, were “two entirely different things”, Ernesto Abella said in one of two statements, which stopped short of an apology.

“The president’s reference to the slaughter was an oblique deflection of the way he has been pictured as a mass murderer, a Hitler, a label he rejects,” Abella said.

“He likewise draws an oblique conclusion, that while the Holocaust was an attempt to exterminate the future generations of Jews, the so-called ‘extra-judicial killings’, wrongly attributed to him, will nevertheless result in the salvation of the next generation of Filipinos.”

The maverick 71-year-old president appeared to liken himself on Friday to the Nazi leader, and said he would “be happy to slaughter” three million Filipino drug users and peddlers, adding that he had been portrayed by critics as “a cousin of Hitler”.

“If Germany had Hitler, the Filipinos would have ...” he said, passing and pointing to himself.

More than 3,100 people have been killed since “Duterte Harry”, as he has been dubbed, took office on 30 June and kicked off a drugs war that was the bedrock of his election campaign.

Most of those killed were drug users and dealers, with some deaths during shootouts in police operations and others the work of vigilantes, police say.

Indians disclose $10 billion in hidden wealth in tax evasion amnesty

NEW DELHI — A government amnesty targeting tax evasion in India has prompted tens of thousands of suspected tax dodgers to disclose nearly $10 billion in undeclared income, the finance minister said on Saturday.

The government of Prime Minister Narendra Modi sent out about 700,000 notices earlier this year to suspected evaders to coax them to declare hidden income and assets, known as “black money” in India, promising they would not be pursued by authorities if they came clean and paid a penalty.

Finance Minister Arun Jaitley told reporters the four-month scheme that closed on Friday had led to 64,275 declarations, resulting in a provisional 652.5 billion rupees ($9.8 billion) in undisclosed wealth.

Jaitley added the final figure would likely be higher.

Factoring in taxes owed and penalties of 45 per cent, the government could raise more than 293.6 billion rupees ($4.41 billion) from the declared income, according to Reuters calculations.

There was no public target for the initiative, but government officials had an internal goal to raise about $7.5 billion in back taxes.

During the 2014 elections, Modi pledged to bring back billions of dollars in “black money” if elected. Modi, in a tweet, called the outcome of the scheme “successful” and said it was “a great contribution towards transparency and growth of the economy.”

In a country of 1.3 billion, fewer than 18,000 people declared annual income of 10 million rupees or more in 2012/13, the latest figures show.

Australia says MH17 missile suspects might be confirmed by year-end

SYDNEY — Australian Foreign Minister Julie Bishop said on Sunday the names of those responsible for shooting down Malaysia Airlines flight MH17 over Ukraine in 2014 might be confirmed by the end of the year.

By the end of the year, may be early next year, the list of those that we believe should be held accountable will be confirmed and then there must be a prosecution,” Bishop said in an interview with Australian state broadcaster ABC.

International investigators said on Wednesday the passenger plane was downed by a Russian-made missile fired from a pro-Russian rebel village in eastern Ukraine.

The findings counter Moscow’s suggestion that the flight, en route from Amsterdam to Kuala Lumpur in July 2014, was brought down by Ukraine’s military rather than the separatists. All 298 people on board, including 28 Australians, were killed.

Bishop said the culprits could face an international tribunal, similar to the one used to prosecute those responsible for the 1988 bombing of a PanAm flight over Lockerbie, Scotland.

Rules-based vs principles-based accounting

Khin Maung Aye

Firms and companies are almost always required to prepare financial statements in compliance with the standards set by the Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB), the standards of which are generally principles-based. These days are witnessing a lot of debates over whether principles-based accounting is more efficient than the popular rules-based accounting, particularly in responding to accounting scandals like Enron and WorldCom. In fact, rules-based accounting is fundamentally a list of detailed regulations, which accountants have to follow in preparation of financial statements.

Many accountants are in favour of the prospect of employing the rules-based standards because they can be, in the absence of rules, brought to the court of law should their judgment of the financial statements be incorrect. When there are strict rules to abide by, the possibility of being sued is reduced. Establishment of a set of rules can promote accuracy, thereby reducing ambiguity and/or equivocality, which can cause aggressive reporting decisions by management. On the other hand, the complexity of rules can create undesirable confusion under the preparation of financial statements. As for principles-based accounting, generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP), a simple set of key objectives are established to ensure good reporting upon the part of the accountants. GAAP is employed by the accountants on a conceptual basis. Common examples are provided as guidance and the objectives are explained. Despite certain rules being unavoidable, the guidelines or rules are not meant to be applied to all situations. The basic advantage of principles-based accounting is that its broad guidelines can be practically for a variety of circumstances. Precise requirements and sometimes force managers to manipulate the statements to fit what is compulsory. The problem with principles-based guidelines is that lack of guidelines can yield unreliable and inconsistent information, which makes it difficult to compare one organization to another.

This being so, when contemplating which accounting method is better, it must be made sure that the information provided in the financial statements is relevant, reliable and comparable across reporting periods and entities. Increased discussion has pushed accountants towards principles-based accounting, but it is recognized that the guidelines are sometimes modified to make it more effective and efficient.

CEO, MICPA

The new Myanmar Accountancy Council (MAC) Law was enacted by Pyithu Hluttaw on 5 June, 2015. It empowers the MAC, which was formed under that law, to regulate the accounting profession in the Republic of the Union of Myanmar, and also recognizes the Myanmar Institute of Certified Public Accountants (MICPA) as the National Accountancy Body that has the right to develop close relationships with the professional accounting bodies in the ASEAN countries and other international accounting bodies, such as ACCA, ICAEW, CIMA, etc. Thus MICPA has been enabled to exchange with them knowledge of the latest developments in the field of financial and cost accounting, financial management, auditing and related subjects.

Though the new MAC Law has long been passed by Pyithu Hluttaw and published in the newspapers, it does not seem that management personnel and chief financial officers (CFOs) of the majority of the business enterprises, both local and foreign, have studied its provisions that have direct bearing on them, in so far as the maintenance of proper financial officers (CFOs) of the companies are concerned.

So the aim of this article is to bring to their notice the pertinent Sections of the new MAC Law they have the obligation to comply with without fail. The objectives of the MAC Law are as follows:

(a) to increase qualified professional accountants and skilled accountants to contribute to the development of national economy;
(b) to work for the development of modern accounting;
(c) to raise the ethical integrity of Practicing Accountants and to maintain the quality of accounting;
(d) to enable both the Government sector and private sector reporting to be done in accordance with the International Accounting Standards and Standards on Auditing;
(e) to open up more job opportunities by developing the professional accounting firms.

As the regulatory body, MAC has prescribed the Myanmar Accounting Standards (MAS), Myanmar Financial Reporting Standards that all corporate bodies (business enterprises/companies) have to follow in preparing their respective financial statements. Of course MAS and IFRS are the same as the International Accounting Standards (IAS) and the International Financial Reporting Standards (IFRS), the only exception being that certain IAS and IFRS that are not currently relevant to our present situation have been carved out and that the word “international” is changed to “Myanmar”. However, it may be mentioned that steps are now being taken to adopt full IFRS by conducting negotiations with the International Federation of Accountants (IFAC), which may give the way for MICPA to join IFAC as a full member. Membership in IFAC will bestow upon our professional accountants (CPAs) the status of fully qualified accountants that will be recognized by other foreign professional accounting bodies as well as the World Bank, International Monetary Fund (IMF), Asian Development Bank (ADB) and other UN agencies.

The requirements of the MAC Law to be fulfilled by all business enterprises/companies, public and private, are given below:

Section 1 (t): The manager of an organization means the person who has to practically manage and undertake accountancy services for shareholders or on their behalf or for the owner or on his behalf, or the organization that has so to manage. That expression includes any member of the management committee, board of directors, working committee, trustee, administrative committee, etc. that are known under different names as per their organizational set-ups.

Section 64: A manager of a business organization has the responsibility of presenting the financial statements of his organization in order to present the true and fair presentation of the financial statements in accordance with the accounting standards and reporting standards prescribed by the Council.

Section 65: The Council shall inform the respective organizations, which has the administrative authority, of the manager of a business organization who breaches the provisions of Sections 62 to 64 for taking necessary action.

Section 80: A manager of a business organization shall not incorrectly present and issue its financial results, financial position and cash-flow.

Section 81: A manager of a business organization shall not undertake accountancy services and preparation of accounts or interact with those who take responsibility for carrying out such tasks by exercising undue influence on them so as to affect the true and fair presentation of the accounts.

Section 84: A manager of a business organization shall arrange to fulfill the following requirements as belted the nature, method, condition of the business organization in order to present the financial statements of the organization in accordance with the financial reporting standards prescribed by the Council.

(a) to organize and assign a sufficient strength of accounting technicians and professional accountants to the task of undertaking accountancy work and preparing the accounts;
(b) to arrange to put internal auditing in place that is completely independent of the said duties of undertaking accountancy work and preparing the accounts.

Section 65: The Council shall inform the respective organization, which has the administrative authority, of the manager of a business organization who breaches the provisions of Sections 62 to 64 for taking necessary action.

US adds first bees to endangered species list

HAWAII — Seven types of bees once found in abundance in Hawaii but now facing extinction are on Friday became the first bees to be added to the federal list of endangered and threatened species, according to US wildlife managers.

The listing decision, published on Friday in the Federal Register, classifies seven varieties of yellow-faced or masked bees as endangered, due to such factors as habitat loss, wildfires and the invasion of non-native plants and insects.

The bees, so named for yellow-to-white facial markings, once crowded Hawaii and Maui but recent surveys found their populations have plunged in the same fashion as other types of wild bees — and some commercial ones — elsewhere in the United States, federal wildlife managers said.

Pollinators like bees are crucial for the production of fruits, nuts and vegetables and they represent billions of dollars in value each year to the nation’s agricultural economy, US officials said.

Placing yellow-faced bees under federal safeguards comes just over a week since the US Fish and Wildlife Service proposed adding the imperiled rusty patched bumble bee, a prized but vanishing pollinator once found in the upper Midwest and Northeastern United States, to the endangered and threatened species list.

One of several wild bee species seen declining over the past two decades, the rusty patched bumble bee is the first in the continental United States formally proposed for protection. —Reuters

Morphosys moves closer to getting first antibody drug on market

FRANKFURT — German biotech Morphosys moved a step closer to getting its first antibody drug onto the market as its licensee, Johnson & Johnson unit Janssen, reported positive results from a phase 3 study of psoriasis drug guselkumab.

Johnson & Johnson said earlier the experimental biotech drug proved more effective at clearing moderate to severe cases of the skin condition than a placebo or AbbVie’s Humira, the world’s top-selling prescription medicine.

Morphosys spokesman said on Monday that guselkumab could now become its first drug to market, depending on whether and when Johnson & Johnson makes an application.

Morphosys gets milestone payments during the development phase and would receive royalties from Johnson & Johnson once it goes on sale. —Reuters

Conflicts pitting big drugmakers against each other may have been inevitable after Europe in 2010 created separate biosimilar approval rules.

After all, Big Pharma’s financial clout and expertise made it difficult for drugmakers to manufacture complex biosimilar cop- ies that cost hundreds of millions to bring to market, far more than for generic off-patent copies of smaller, simple molecule drug.

Some smaller companies and generics makers have jumped into biosimilar programmes after originally underestimating hurdles to entry, Richard Francis, head of Novartis’s Sandoz division, which makes biosimilars, said earlier this year.

Just this week, Shire abandoned two biosimilar candidate drugs that accompanied its Baxalta takeover, copies of Amgen’s Enbrel and AbbVie’s Humira, to focus on rare diseases.

“The realisation of what it’s going to take to stay in this market and be successful has led to a change in the landscape and the players in it,” Francis said. —Reuters

Big Pharma vs Big Pharma in court battles over biosimilar drugs

ZURICH — The line dividing makers of brand-name drugs and copycat medicines is blurring as companies known for innovative treatments queue up to peddle copies of rivals’ complex biological medicines.

These drugmakers are now increasingly straddling both sides of the courtroom, too, protecting their high-price products from biosimilars — biopharmaceutical drugs with the treatment properties of medicines they seek to mimic — while simultaneously challenging rivals’ patent claims.

Biologics, manufactured in living cells, then extracted and purified, are more complex than traditional medicines and cannot be copied with precision, and so their knock-off versions are called biosimilars instead of generics.

The allure of biosimilars is clear, with insurers and other payers counting on the steep discounts. US pharmacy benefit managers are already trimming brand-name drugs from their rosters.

With Novartis Chief Executive Joe Jimenez predicting biosimilar discounts of up to 75 percent, in part based on developments in Europe, makers of innovative drugs are fighting tooth and nail to protect their high-priced products for as long as possible.

For instance, AbbVie has sued in Delaware claiming patent protection for its arthritis drug Humira, the world’s best-selling prescription medicine, until at least 2022 as it seeks to delay an Amgen replica that won US approval last week.

Meanwhile, Amgen has gone to another US federal court seeking to protect its own arthritis medicine, Enbrel, from a Novartis biosimilar until 2029.

With lawsuits pitting Big Pharma against Big Pharma piling up, lawyers said the legal landscape has gotten a lot more complex.

“One of the biggest surprises has been the number of innovator biopharma companies, like Amgen, now developing biosimilars to compete with the products of other innovator companies,” said Don Ware, an expert on biosimilars at US law firm Foley Hoag in Boston.

“This creates conflicts for law firms like ours, because suddenly the clients we advise are adverse to each other,” Ware said. “And it makes it hard for the companies to retain top outside counsel without having to give them conflict waivers.”

Sanofi, Merck, Eli Lilly, Pfizer, Johnson & Johnson and Biogen are also embroiled in lawsuits over biosimilars.

Even so, some analysts say the lawsuits are business as usual and are unlikely to spill over into other areas, including research partnerships.

Novartis and Amgen may be at each other’s throats in court over the Swiss drugmaker’s Enbrel copy, but the two are still cooperating on a drug for migraines.

“It’s not like these companies are bitter enemies,” Ziercher Kantonalbank analyst Michael Nawrath said. “These court cases are simply the last resort of original drug makers to wring a few more months or a year of exclusivity from their blockbusters.”

‘Long way to go’ before mass space travel travel a reality, say astronauts

GUADALAJARA, (Mexico) — Though often talked about, mass space travel remains a distant possibility, US and Russian astronauts said here on Friday.

Addressing the 67th International Astronautical Congress, held in Mexico’s western city of Guadalajara from 26 to 30 September, Russian cosmonauts Sergei Krikalev and Oleg Kotov, and their US counterpart Sandra Magnus, said there are unlikely to be space shuttles for average citizens anytime soon.

“There’s still a long way to go,” said Krikalev, a seasoned cosmonaut who has flown 11 missions and spent more than 800 days in space.

Accessible space travel has been in the headlines as recently as Tuesday, when Elon Musk, CEO of SpaceX and car company Tesla, unveiled an ambitious plan to colonize Mars.

The fact that entrepreneurs such as Musk are getting involved in space travel, one of the exclusive realms of governments, does mean the industry is evolving, said Krikalev.

However, for space travel to become available on a large scale, scientists need to develop rockets that are more user-friendly than those we have now, he said.

“Not everyone can fly a plane, much less a spacecraft, so it will be able to send thousands of people into space we need to continue to develop the technology,” said Krikalev.

Extended stays in space present another challenge, said Kotov, because “our bodies are not designed to live in space.”

Those planning to stay up there any length of time would have to undergo physical training, said Kotov, who has made three trips, in 2007, 2010 and 2013, and spent 526 days in total in space. —Xinhua
British PM May to trigger EU divorce process by end of March

LONDON — British Prime Minister Theresa May will trigger the divorce process from the European Union by the end of March, firing the starting gun on the country’s biggest shift in policy since World War II.

May, appointed prime minister shortly after Britain voted in June to leave the bloc, has been under pressure from EU officials, investors and members of her Conservative Party to offer more on her plan for Britain’s exit, beyond her catch phrase “Brexit means Brexit”.

In an interview with the BBC, May for the first time confirmed what many expected — that she will trigger Article 50 of the EU’s Lisbon Treaty before the end of March next year.

“We will trigger before the end of March next year,” May told the BBC’s Andrew Marr show, referring to the formal divorce process which gives Britain up to two years to negotiate its exit from the bloc.

Asked whether her government would prioritise immigration over access to tariff-free trade with EU countries in divorce talks, the bloc — something that has muddied investment, May said only that she wanted to get the “right deal”.

“I want the right deal for trade in goods and services and what we are doing at the moment ..., is listening to businesses here in the UK, listening to different sectors, finding out what it is that is most important to them,” she said.

To get the right deal, May was clear that she must keep her cards close to her chest, saying she would not give a “running commentary” on her negotiations or give her position away.

Hungarians set to reject migrant quotas in boon for PM Orban

BUDAPEST — An overwhelming majority of Hungarians are expected to reject the European Union’s migrant quotas in a referendum on Sunday, which should boost Prime Minister Viktor Orban’s standing at home and embolden him in his battles with Brussels.

Orban, who has been in power since 2010, is among the toughest opponents of immigration in the EU, and over the past year he has sealed Hungary’s southern borders with a razor-wire fence and thousands of army and police border patrols.

After casting his vote in a wealthy Budapest district on Sunday, Orban told reporters that he would go to Brussels next week to start talks, empowered by the outcome of the referendum.

“And I shall try, with the help of the outcome, if this is an appropriate outcome, to achieve that we should not be obliged to accept people in Hungary whom we don’t want to live with.”

He also said his government might modify the Hungarian constitution after the vote.

In a letter published in a daily newspaper on Saturday, Orban again urged Hungarians to send a message to the EU that its migration policies were flawed and posed a threat to Europe’s security.

“We can send the message that it is only up to us, European citizens, whether we can jointly force the Union to come to its senses or let it destroy itself,” he wrote in the Magyar Idok.

While Budapest says immigration policy should be a matter of national sovereignty, human rights groups have criticized the government for stoking fears and xenophobia, and for mistreating refugees on the border.

Last year, hundreds of thousands of migrants fleeing war and poverty in the Middle East crossed Hungary on their way to richer countries in Western Europe, this year Hungary recorded around 18,000 illegal border crossings.

Around 1,500 people demonstrated in Budapest on Friday against the referendum.

Orban’s hardline approach on migration has won allies in Central Europe. Eastern Europe’s ex-communist states, now in the EU, are opposing a policy that would require all EU countries to take in some of the hundreds of thousands of people seeking asylum in Europe.

Opinion polls show support for a rejection of EU migrant quotas of more than 80 per cent among those who say they will vote. But they also indicate turnout might not necessarily top the 50 per cent required for the poll to be valid.

Erzsébet Virág, voting near Budapest’s eastern railway station where a year ago thousands of migrants camped outside waiting to get on trains toward Vienna, said: “I voted (No) because there are a lot of poor people in our country too and if more poor people come in we will be even poorer and have to work even more.”

Voting will close at 1700 GMT. Preliminary results are expected after 1800 GMT.

Iran showcases new combat drone, copied from US unmanned aircraft

DUBAI — Iran’s Revolutionary Guards unveiled a home-built drone that they said was capable of carrying bombs, state media reported on Saturday, in what appeared to be another copy of a reconnaissance US drone that Iran captured five years ago.

The drone, called Saheeh, or lightning, was unveiled at an expo showcasing the latest achievements by the Revolutionary Guards’ aerospace arm.

“This long-range drone is capable of hitting four targets with smart precision-guided bombs with high accuracy,” the head of the Revolutionary Guards’ aerospace arm, Amir Ali Hajizadeh, was quoted as saying by state news agency IRNA.—Reuters

Japan to develop secure passport to prevent terrorism

TOKYO — Japan’s Foreign Ministry will follow European countries in introducing a passport with a hard plastic page containing identity information, making it harder to forge as part of measures to prevent crime and terrorism, an official of the ministry said on Saturday.

The ministry aims to add the new security feature in the fiscal year starting April 2023, the official said.

Experts have been reviewing ways to improve passport security for the ministry since 2014.

The ministry has decided to centralize passport issuance which is currently conducted by each prefecture and requested around 300 million yen ($3 million) from the fiscal 2017 budget to develop a new issuance system for the National Printing Bureau.—Kyodo News

Russia says US ‘aggression’ in Syria would mean ‘tectonic shifts’

MOSCOW — “Direct aggression” by the United States towards the Syrian government and armed forces would lead to “frightening, tectonic shifts” in the Middle East,RIA news agency cited Russian Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Maria Zakharova as saying on Saturday.

Russia and the United States back opposing sides in the Syrian conflict. A US-Russian brokered ceasefire in Syria recently fell apart, and Russian warplanes on Saturday struck rebel-held areas north of the Syrian city of Aleppo.—Reuters

Police firing in India’s Jharkhand kills four villagers

NEW DELHI — At least four people were killed and over a dozen, including policemen were injured when police fired on a group of villagers in eastern India state of Jharkhand, officials said on Sunday.

The villagers were protesting against state-run National Thermal Power Corporation (NTPC) project being set up in the area, alleging they were denied adequate compensation for their acquired land.

Killings took place at Barkagaon on Saturday in Hazaribagh district, about 80 km north of Ranchi city, the capital of Jharkhand.

“Four villagers were killed and over a dozen including policemen were injured in clashes between agitating villagers and police,” an official posted at Hazaribagh district said. “The locals were on protest for a fortnight demanding adequate compensation for their land acquired by NTPC.”

Official said protesters were led by a Congress party legislator and clashes broke out after police detained the legislator.

Locals alleged the NTPC of violating forest rights and denying them compensation while acquiring land for a coal mining site.

Palestinian hands still extended for peace with Israel: Abbas

RAMALLAH — Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas said late on Saturday night that the Palestinian hands are still extended for peace with Israel after Israel closed the doors for dialogue.

“Neither they (Israelis) eliminate us nor we eliminate them ... they have their state and we do have ours,” Abbas told a conference held on Saturday in the West Bank city of Bethlehem. “Doors for dialogue with the Israelis were closed, but we didn’t close it and our hands are still extended for peace,” he said. Abbas added that the resumption of dialogue with Israel “must be based on stopping settlement, implementing and respecting the former peace accords and agreements.”

“If Israel doesn’t respect and implement the simple agreements, how could it respect a permanent peace agreement,” said Abbas.

He noted that the Palestinians are honest by calling for dialogues and meetings based on halting settlement and implementing the former peace agreements and respecting it.—Xinhua
Syria presses Aleppo advance, tells rebels to leave

BEIRUT — Syrian government and allied forces advanced north of Aleppo, pressing their week-old offensive to take the insurgent-held, eastern part of the city after dozens of overnight air strikes.

The Syrian army told rebels to leave the area, offering safe passage and aid.

An air campaign by the Syrian government and its allies was reinforced by a ground offensive targeting the besieged eastern half of the city where insurgents have been holding out.

The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights and the Syrian military said the army and its allies had advanced south from the Handarat refugee camp north of Aleppo city, which they took earlier this week, taking the Kindi hospital and parts of the Shuqair industrial area.

Air strikes and shelling continued on Sunday, the Observatory said. Zakaria Malahifji, of the Aleppo-based rebel group Fastaqim, told Reuters there were clashes in this area on Sunday.

The Observatory added that there was fierce fighting between rebels and government forces all along the front line which cuts the city in two.

The Syrian army said on Sunday that rebel fighters should vacate east Aleppo and it would guarantee them safe passage and necessary aid.

“The army high command calls all armed fighters in the eastern neighbourhood of Aleppo to leave these neighbourhoods and let civilian residents live their normal lives,” the statement carried by state news agency SANA said.

The relentless Russian and Syrian air campaign in east Aleppo has damaged hospitals and water supplies.

East Aleppo came under siege in early July after its main supply route, the Castello Road, fell under government control.

Internationally brokered attempts to establish ceasefires to allow in United Nations humanitarian aid have failed, although other international and local aid groups have brought in limited supplies.

The UN’s Under-Secretary-General for Humanitarian Affairs, Stephen O’Brien, said he was “deeply alarmed by the ferocious pummelling of eastern Aleppo” and reiterated UN calls for a pause in fighting, medical evacuations and access for aid.

“The health system is on the verge of total collapse with patients being turned away and no medicines available to treat even the most common ailments.”

“With clean water and food in very short supply, the number of people requiring urgent medical evacuations is likely to rise dramatically in the coming days,” he said.

On Saturday, the largest trauma and intensive care centre in eastern Aleppo was badly damaged by air strikes and had to close. Two patients were killed.

The Syrian American Medical Society (SAMS), which partly supported the hospital, said the hospital had been hit seven times since July, with three attacks this week alone.

“The situation in Aleppo is beyond dire... People are stuck under the rubble and we can’t get to them because of the intensity of the shelling. We are pleading for help to stop the bombing,” said Mohamed Abu Rajab, a SAMS nurse at the hospital.

SAMS said only five hospitals remained operational in east Aleppo.

The Syrian Foreign Ministry said in a statement carried by state media that the participation of Russia’s air force in the conflict in its sixth year had “tightened the noose on terrorist groups and reduced their ability to spread terror to other countries.”

Afghan Taliban fighters press advance on Helmand capital

LASHKAR GAH (Afghanistan) — Taliban fighters have advanced closer to Lashkar Gah, capital of the strategic southern province of Helmand, pushing into a farming district on the other side of the river from the town, officials said on Saturday.

Though the Western-backed government in Kabul pushed the insurgents back with the aid of US airstrikes in August, it is struggling to reverse the tide of the fighting.

Capturing the city would give the Taliban their first provincial capital since the northern city of Kunduz fell briefly a year ago and would reinforce the impression that government forces are losing momentum in the war.

The insurgents, who control large sections of the opium-growing province, are now in Bolan, an agricultural zone that links Lashkar Gah with Gereshk, a town that straddles the main Highway One, as well as Marjah district centre to the west.

“The Taliban came to our villages, blocked the main road and are attacking security forces,” said local resident Rozi Mohammad. Local officials said security forces were engaging the insurgents and were expected to begin offensive operations soon though they faced strong opposition.

“We are about 300 meters away from the Taliban positions. They are firing at us from residents’ homes and we are waiting for fresh forces to repel them,” said Hesmatullah, a policeman whose unit was involved in the fighting.—Reuters
Colombians vote in referendum on peace deal, ‘yes’ win likely

BOGOTA — Colombians look set to back a peace accord with Marxist rebels in a referendum on Sunday, the final hurdle to a deal ending 52 years of war that calls for FARC fighters to re-enter society and form a political party.

The plebiscite asks for a simple “yes” or “no” on whether Colombians support the accord signed last week by President Juan Manuel Santos, who has staked his legacy on peace, and the rebel commander known as Timochenko.

The Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC), whose numbers dwindled to about 7,000 in recent years due to a US-backed military offensive, have agreed to turn in weapons and fight for power at the ballot box instead of raising arms and fighting for power at the ballot box.

Recent polls show about two-thirds of voters are likely to vote yes because I’m betting on hope, to guarantee my son can see a better country,” said 66-year-old Bogota housewife Fanny Castro, whose son-in-law is in the army. “We have to vote no or we’ll have the guerrillas on top of us.”

For decades, the FARC bankrolled the longest-running conflict in the Americas through kidnapping and extortion, spreading a sense of terror that left few Colombians unaffected. The conflict claimed more than 220,000 lives and displaced millions of people. If the peace accord is approved on Sunday, Santos will likely turn his focus toward a much-needed tax reform and other measures to compensate for a drop in oil income, as well as possible talks with the smaller ELN rebel group.

Voting closes at 4 p.m. local time (2100 GMT) and results are expected by early evening. —Reuters

Ethiopians killed in stampede after police fire warning shots during protest

ADDIS ABABA — Police in Ethiopia’s Oromiya region fired tear gas and warning shots on Sunday to disperse anti-government protesters at a religious festival, triggering a stampede that the opposition party said killed at least 50 people.

The government did not give a precise death toll resulting from chaotic scenes during the annual festival where some people chanted slogans against the government and waved a rebel group’s flag. But it said “lives were lost” and that several were injured.

Sporadic protests have erupted in Oromiya in the last two years, initially sparked by a land row but increasingly turning more violently against the government. Since late 2015, scores of protesters have been killed in clashes with police.

These developments highlight tensions in the country where the government has delivered stellar economic growth rates but faced criticism from opponents and rights group that it has trampled on political freedoms.

Thousands of people had gathered for the annual Irreecha festival of thanksgiving in the town of Bishoftu, about 40 km (25 miles) south of the capital Addis Ababa.

Crowds chanted “we need freedom” and “we need justice”, preventing community elders, deemed close to the government, from delivering their speeches at the festival. Some protesters waved the red, green and yellow flag of the Oromo Liberation Front, a rebel group branded a “terrorist” organisation by the government, witnesses said. When police fired tear gas and guns into the air, crowds fled and created a stampede, some of them plunging into a deep ditch, witnesses said.

The witnesses said they saw people dragging out a dozen or more victims, showing no obvious sign of life. Half a dozen people, also faceless, were also seen being taken by pick-up truck to a hospital, one witness said.

“As a result of the chaos, lives were lost and several of the injured were taken to hospital,” the government communications office said in a statement, without giving figures. “Those responsible will face justice.”

Mariam Magdina, chairman of the opposition Oromo Federalist Congress, told Reuters at least 50 people were killed, saying his group had been talking to families of the victims.

He said the government tried to use the event to downplay Oromo was calm. “But residents still protest,” he said. The government blames rebel groups and dissidents abroad for stirring up the protests and provoking violence.

It dismisses charges that it clamps down on free speech or its opponents. —Reuters
In search of rebound, Trump ramps up attacks on Clinton

MANHEIM (Pa.) — Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump closed out a rough week for his campaign on Saturday by escalating personal attacks on Democrat Hillary Clinton, questioning her stamina and saying she should be in prison for her handling of classified emails.

After a week in which he drew widespread criticism for a public feud with a former beauty queen, Trump sought to rebound with a highly negative attack on his opponent in the 8 November election, with a second presidential debate against her.

He employed against former Republican rival Jeb Bush, he drew wide criticism for the task of being president.

Trump is under a federal audit.

Trump has refused to release his tax records, saying he is under a federal audit.

At a rally in Manheim, Pennsylvania, Trump said he did not believe Clinton, who suffered a bout of pneumonia last month, was up to the task of being president.

He tried to resurrect a tactic he employed against former Republican rival Jeb Bush, who Trump had derided as “low energy.”

Clinton kept her pneumonia diagnosis private until she was seen nearly collapsing while getting into her vehicle at a ceremony marking the September 11, 2001, attacks in New York.

Ticking off a list of world problems, Trump said, “She’s supposed to fight all of these things and she can’t make it 15 feet to her car. Give me a break.”

“Folks, we need stamina, we need energy, we need people who are going to turn deals around,” Trump said.

Trump has often told crowds who chant “lock her up” over her use of a private email server as U.S. secretary of state from 2009 to 2013 to instead help him defeat her.

But on Saturday, Trump told thousands of supporters that Clinton’s handling of classified emails and destroying of 33,000 emails that she had deemed of a personal nature meant that “she should be in prison, let me tell you.”

Trump did not stop there. He said he did not believe Clinton would be loyal to her supporters and şekled, “I don’t even think she’s loyal to Bill, to tell you the truth. And why should she be, right? Why should she be?”

In 1998, Clinton’s husband, former President Bill Clinton, was caught up in a sex scandal involving former White House intern Monica Lewinsky.

Trump was widely seen as having lost his first presidential debate with Clinton last Monday although he cited online polls showing he won. In the days since the debate, Trump has been struggling to regain his footing, getting caught up in a back-and-forth with former Miss Universe Alicia Machado, who Trump had criticized for gaining weight.

Protesters hold ‘die-in’ at Heathrow against airport expansion

LONDON — More than a hundred people demonstrated at London’s Heathrow Airport on Saturday, including dozens who took part in a “die-in” at one terminal, just weeks before Prime Minister Theresa May’s government is due to decide where to build a new runway.

After a decade of reviews and U-turns, the government is expected to rule in mid-October on whether to build a third runway at Heathrow, Europe’s busiest airport, or at its smaller London rival Gatwick.

Expansion plans have been opposed by residents and some lawmakers at both locations.

Protesters lay on the floor of Heathrow’s Terminal 2, with many wearing white masks in a so-called die-in to highlight the impact of air travel on climate change and pollution levels.

One woman wearing a mask lay next to a banner which read: “Stay Grounded.

No New Runways.” Others took part in a cycle ride nearby, wearing red T-shirts with the message: “No 3rd runway”, according to images posted on Twitter.

Documentary film on Tsukiji fish market released amid relocation row

TOKYO — The first documentary film about the famed Tsukiji fish market was released in Tokyo on Saturday, depicting the everyday lives of unsung seafood professionals, amidst an imbroglio over the site’s planned relocation.

“The Tsukiji Wonderland” has been released at a time when the wholesale fish market is drawing all the more attention after newly elected Tokyo Gov. Yuriko Koike recently postponed the relocation of the aging market in central Tokyo, citing safety concerns about soil contamination at the new site.

The 110-minute film, which is not about the disputed relocation but spotlights Japan’s food culture and hundreds of intermediate wholesalers in the market who devote their lives to procuring the finest, most desirable seafood, was directed by 38-year-old Naotaro Endo who first visited the market in 2012.

“The fishmongers at Tsukiji, Endo said, are a breed unto themselves, highly specialized in certain fish and shellfish species. Seafood is selected according to the seasons and depending on particular cooking methods for their meticulous customers.

“I wanted to portray their professional expertise accumulated over a long period of time,” Endo said in a recent interview with Kyodo News.

The film, Endo’s debut feature, preserves on screen the fish market that has been operating for about 80 years at the current location. Tsukiji, according to the Tokyo Metropolitan Central Wholesale Market, offered more than 400 types of seafood, with a total market value of about 1.6 billion yen ($15.8 million) a day in 2014. With an almost religious fervor, some of the country’s top chefs come to the market, where intermediate wholesalers bid for products for their customers, like restaurants and retailers, in competitive auctions, which start before dawn. The purchased fish are prepared for sale at their shops within the marketplace.

Over the years, Tsukiji has been dubbed the “kitchen of Japan” playing an unrivalled role in “washoku”, Japanese cuisine, which has been designated by UNESCO as an intangible cultural heritage. Endo was first impressed by the vibrancy of Tsukiji, which led him to want to film the people there. But the idea did not immediately materialize as he first had to obtain permission to film at the restricted marketplace, which is supervised by the Tokyo metropolitan government.

Endo was aiming for something unprecedented — shooting scenes at Tsukiji throughout a year — to showcase the market’s seasonal specialties, such as saury in autumn and blowfish in winter — Kyodo News.

Edward Snowden film premiers in Hong Kong

HONG KONG — The new movie ‘Snowden’ held its premiere in Hong Kong on Friday (September 30) night. The asylum-seeking family who, at one point, hid the US whistleblower in their Hong Kong apartment after he fled his country, attended the premiere of the film, which tells the story of the former US National Security Agency (NSA) intelligence contractor. Edward Snowden’s lawyer in Hong Kong, Jonathan Man, pointed out his client was actually helped by people who were also stateless. The movie was shot by US director Oliver Stone, known for his controversial revisions of key moments in American history and raising questions about US government accountability.

Snowden leaked details about the US government’s massive surveillance programs and was granted asylum in Russia, after fleeing the United States in 2013. Supporters see him as a whistle-blower who boldly exposed government excess. But the US government has filed espionage charges against him for leaking intelligence information. The film is based on two books about Snowden written by The Guardian journalist Luke Harding and Snowden’s Russian lawyer, Anatoly Kucherena. — Reuters.

Daniel Radcliffe recalls first meeting with Donald Trump

LOS ANGELES — Daniel Radcliffe has revealed he was left amused by Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump’s self-confidence when he first met him more than 10 years ago.

The 27-year-old British actor recalled the first time he met the Republican nominee when he was still a pre-teen and revealed the eyebrow-raising advice he got from the businessman, reported Aceshowbiz.

Radcliffe, who appeared on the show alongside Trolls co-stars Justin Timberlake and Anna Kendrick, first told the host that he ran into Trump while he was promoting the first Harry Potter film. He was 11 or 12 at the time.

“They took us to meet Mr. Trump,” Radcliffe said. “I told him for a laugh that I never thought I’d meet him before and I was quite nervous,” he shared.

Trump happened to be there as well and they got to interact before Radcliffe began his interview. That’s when the 70-year-old told the young star to brag about their meet-up to the morning show’s viewers.

“They sort of walked me over to him and he said, ‘Oh hi, nice to meet you.’ And I said, ‘Nice to meet you.’ He said, ‘How are you?’ I said, ‘I’m quite nervous. I’ve never been on TV before, I don’t know what I’m gonna talk about.’ And he brilliantly just said, ‘You tell them you just met Mr. Trump.’” Radcliffe said. As Timberlake and Kendrick showed unimpressed expressions, the actor added, “To me, that is the Everest of self-confidence. Imagine if I’d just been to you. When you go on that show, just talk about me. Don’t talk about your stuff,” said actor.— PTI

He saw himself disintegrating: Robin Williams’ wife

LOS ANGELES — Losing visual and spatial abilities, finding himself stuck in a frozen stance and unable to move are few of those struggles, which much-loved actor Robin Williams went through in his final months before the suicide, reveals his wife in a heart-wrenching essay.

Williams’ fans haven’t even properly moved on from the actor’s suicide in August 2014, and the latest details of his condition before he took his life only deepen those wounds. In a piece titled, “The Terrorist Inside My Husband’s Brain”, Susan Schneider chronicles the couple’s battle to arrive at a proper diagnosis.

“Robin was losing his mind and he was aware of it,” Schneider writes in the journal of the American Academy of Neurology.

“You can imagine the pain he felt as he experienced himself disintegrating? And not from something he would ever know the name of, or understand? Neither he, nor anyone could stop it — no amount of intelligence or love could hold it back.”

“At times, he would find himself stuck in a frozen stance, unable to move, and frustrated when he came out of it. He was beginning to have trouble with visual and spatial abilities in the way of judging distance and depth. His loss of basic reasoning just added to his growing confusion.” She notes that his conditions were so severe that he said he wanted to “reboot” his brain.

“[Robin] kept saying, ‘I just want to reboot my brain.’”

Doctor appointments, testing, and psychiatry kept us in perpetual motion. Countless blood tests, urine tests, plus re-checks of cortisol levels and lymph nodes. “Everything came back negative, except for high cortisol levels. We wanted to be happy about all the negative test results, but Robin and I both had a strong sense that something was terribly wrong.” Schneider recalls that the actor had trouble “remembering just one line” while filming “Night at the Museum 3”. “On May 26th, he was diagnosed with Parkinson disease. We had an answer. My heart swelled with hope. But somehow I knew Robin was not buying it.” — PTI
BOSTON — An accused mobster, near death, denies ties to Boston art heist: lawyer

Robert Gentile, 80, faces charges of selling a loaded firearm to a convicted killer. His attorney contended the case was brought to pressure him into leading federal agents to paintings stolen from Boston’s Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum in 1990. Attorney Ryan McGuigan said he visited Gentile in South Carolina this week after being advised by federal officials to tell Gentile’s wife, also 80 and in ill health, and son, in his early 50s, to prepare for the possibility of the man’s death.

“I told him that if there ever was a time to give up some information that you haven’t yet, that I don’t know, this would be it,” McGuigan said in a phone interview. He said he believed that if Gentile were to offer up new information about the paintings, federal officials would allow him to see his family in Connecticut.

“He said, ‘Yeah, but there’s no painting,’” McGuigan said. “His story has never changed in the six years that I have represented him.”

A spokesman for federal prosecutors in Connecticut declined to comment. McGuigan said he could not provide more detail on where Gentile is being held.

Gentile had been due to stand trial last month on the gun charge, but his failing health delayed proceedings.

He has repeatedly denied knowing the whereabouts of any of the paintings stolen from Boston. The theft was carried out by two men dressed in police uniforms who apparently overpowered a night security guard who had buzzed them in a back entrance. None of the 13 artworks, which include Rembrandt’s “Storm on the Sea of Galilee” and Vermeer’s “The Concert,” has been recovered.

Due to a quirk in Gardner’s will, the empty frames that held the paintings remain on the walls of the museum she built to house the collection she amassed with her husband. The art must be displayed the way it was during her lifetime, preventing curators from hanging new works and leaving a constant reminder of the theft.

At a court hearing last year, federal prosecutors said Gentile was secretly recorded telling an undercover FBI agent he had acquired at least two of the paintings and could sell them for $500,000 each.

A 2012 FBI search of Gentile’s home turned up a handwritten list of the stolen art, its estimated value and police uniforms, according to court documents. —Reuters

Lucky toddler becomes New Zealand’s youngest lottery millionaire after winning bond prize

WELLINGTON — A three-year-old boy has become New Zealand’s youngest ever Bonus Bonds prize recipient after winning 1 million NZ dollars (728,683 US dollars) in the investment lottery scheme.

The boy’s Bonus Bonds account was set up when he was born, with his family when they were always believed he was his father’s heir. McGuigan said in a phone call.

“His husband was literally pumping the air when he was on the phone,” the boy’s mother told the newspaper.

The toddler’s parents have repeatedly denied knowing the whereabouts of any of the artworks seized by agents in the Oceanic Park, said the report.

Bayern drop first points, Dortmund lose at Leverkusen

BERLIN — Bayern Munich’s perfect Bundesliga start came to a screeching halt when they drew 1-1 with Cologne on Saturday but they still protected their three-point lead after rivals Borussia Dortmund lost 2-0 at Bayer Leverkusen. The Bavarians, who won the over-all standings. "We can be disappointed but we should not be worried.”

The hosts struggled against the hard-working Cologne defenders for 40 minutes before Joshua Kimmich finally broke the deadlock, diving to head in a beautiful Jean Bentar cross for the lead.

Thomas Mueller came close to adding another goal four minutes after the restart as did Robert Lewandowski, with Bayern keeping up the pressure and looking to kill off the game.

But it was Cologne who scored when striker Anthony Modeste timed his run to perfection, taking off inside the box to volley a cross into the back of Manuel Neuer’s net for his fifth goal of the campaign. The hosts were left stunned for a few minutes with Cologne trying to hit them again on the counter-attack and Yuya Osako’s effort was ruled out for offside. Cologne keeper Timo Horn made the save of the day when he punched a point-blank Mueller volley on to the crossbar and the Bavarians also hit the woodwork with a powerful low drive by Bentar five minutes from time.

The last big chance fell to the visitors, however, when Simon Zoller coming agonisingly close to a stoppage-time winner as his shot rolled just wide of the post.

Hertha Berlin climbed to second on 13 points, after easing past Hamburg SV 2-0 with two goals from Vedad Ibisevic, who became a father late on Friday.

Reed helps put US in command after Europe rally

LONDON — Manchester United were denied a spirited Stoke City performance as Joe Allen pounced late to secure the visitors their first point at Old Trafford since 1989 in a deserved 1-1 Premier League draw.

United thought they had done enough when substitute Anthony Martial put them ahead on 69 minutes, two minutes after coming off the bench, with a curling shot from the edge of the area that beat Stoke’s excellent keeper Lee Grant. But Allen, who should have scored earlier, struck from close range in the 82nd minute after David De Gea fumbled a Glen John-son effort and Jonathan Walters’ shot came back off the bar. “To go a goal behind against a team like that and get a point is a tough ask but we did it,” said Allen, whose goal was his second in consecutive league games. “When you come to Old Trafford you’re not going to get many chances.”

“We haven’t been picking up many points but you can’t fault the effort. We were determined to come here and get at least a point. We did it, we were aggressive, we were dynamic,” said manager Jose Mourinho. “We were too good, we had enough chances to win it.”

Mourinho added: “It was much better than against Leicester (when United won 4-1 last week). It could have been 3-0 or 4-0 at half time, 6-0 at the end of the game, but the result was 1-1. But that’s football.”

Ricciardo leads Red Bull one-two as Hamilton retires

SEPANG, (Malaysia) — Daniel Ricciardo claimed his maiden Formula One win of the season in the Malaysian Grand Prix after reigning world champion Lewis Hamilton retired from the lead with a blown engine. The Australian’s Red Bull team mate Max Verstappen finished second to score the former champions’ first one-two finish since the 2013 Brazilian Grand Prix, denying Mercedes the champions’ first one-two finish ever.

Hamilton was as animated as he has ever been in the Ryder Cup as he and Belgian rookie Thomas Pieters took their record to 3-0 this week by beating Brooks Koepka and Dustin Johnson 3 and 1. Ryder Cup veteran Lee Westwood suffered heartbreak in the next match, missing from inside three feet at the last as he and fellow Englishman Danny Willett slid to a one-hole defeat at the hands of JB Holmes and Ryan Moore.

Phil Mickelson and Matt Kuchar never trailed in match three, recording a 2 and 1 victory over Sergio Garcia and Martin Kaymer. The irreplaceable Patrick Reed was the central figure in the last tussle of the session as he and Jordan Spieth took down England’s Justin Rose and Henrik Stenson of Sweden 2 and 1 on a sun-kissed second day.

World number three McIlroy was clearly irked by persistent heckling from the galleries, one day after Willett was teased and taunted as a result of his brother’s midweek rant against the home fans.
