LOCAL, people of a popular tourist destination deserve direct and indirect benefits of tourism, said Vice President U Henry Van Thio on his inspection tour of community-based tourism in Kayah State.

While visiting the villages of local ethnic groups, the vice president promised them he would allocate more funds for vocational training of the locals so they can take advantage of the surging popularity of the region. The funds would be used for training of local tour guides, restaurateurs, hoteliers and arrangements for community-based and ecotourism.

Kayah State attracted 3,986 tourists during the period from January to September 2016. During his tour of the state, the vice president visited Htipwint Lake, near Ngwe Taung Village in Dimawhso Township, where an umbrella-shaped volcanic structure of 227 feet in height and 115 feet in width that was created by a now-extinct volcano is located.

Package vacation tours feature the Taungkwe Pagoda, Myonarm Pagoda, Kandarawadi Palace, Htipwint Lake and its umbrella-shaped volcanic structure, the seven-tiered lake, the Hiseikha waterfall and the Lawpita Hydropower Dam.

The vice president enjoyed the performances of local troupes and presented cash awards. At the seven-tiered Lake in Tahnelale Village, he heard reports on the revitalisation of Kayah traditions that are attracting an increasing number of tourists.

MYANMAR has scrapped the Emergency Provisions Act, a law that was often used to quell dissent.

The government enacted the Law Revoking the Emergency Provisions Act, effectively abolishing the 66-year-old law. The law was signed yesterday by President U Htin Kyaw after it was approved by the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw, the joint-session of the two parliaments.

The Emergency Provisions Act was enacted in 1950 after Myanmar gained independence from Britain.

Under the act, anyone committing treason - which ranged from sabotage of railways to damaging telegraph poles - could face life behind bars or even death. Hefty jail terms were also meted out for other crimes, such as spreading false news or disrupting public morality.

Also during yesterday’s session, Minister of State for Foreign Affairs U Kyaw Tin sought approval of the Pyidaungsu Hluttaw to ratify Protocol to the ASEAN Charter on Dispute Settlement Mechanisms.

Six ASEAN countries including Brunei, Cambodia, Indonesia, Thailand, Viet Nam and Laos have confirmed their entrance to the protocol, but Myan-

THE 42nd Session of 2nd Amyotha Hluttaw held with discussions over project budget allocations, water works

THE 2nd Pyithu Hluttaw continued for its 44th Session today with queries being fielded from parliamentarians and the discussion of one proposal.

U Mg Mg Oo, parliamentarian of Insein constituency, questioned what arrangements were being made to fulfill the need for the availability of a 24-hour power supply in the locomotive factory and staff housing complex of Myanmar Railway in Insein Township.

In response, U Thant Zin Maung, Union Minister for Transport and Telecommunication replied that it would cost K3.7 billion to supply 24-hour electricity to the locomotive factory and staff housing complex in Insein Township. The minister added, “To do so, as of the nearest fiscal year, a budget for the installation of transformer and its accessories should be submitted. It was learned that it would cost over K1.8 billion to provide a 24-hour power supply to the staff housing complex of Myanmar Railway in Yangon Region. Depending on the budget allocation during the ministry’s tenure, the ministry plans to provide that power supply.”

U Win Hla of Nan Yun constituency, Naga Self-Administered Zone raised a question as to when the installation of GSM-3G phone lines in Nan Yun Township and Pan Saung Don Hi sub-township would be finished.

The minister replied, “In Nan Yun and Pan Saung Townships, 2 CDMA -450 MHz mobile stations consisting of 750 lines each have been operating well whereas in Don Hi Township, one MPT Satellite Terminal mobile station has been set up. In Don Hi one GSM 3G mobile station, currently under construction, is expected to operate 3G mobile services by the end of December 2016. But, it will be possible only if new satellite towers have been built in substitution, in Nan Yun township and Pan Saung Sub-township. The ministry intends to provide phone and internet coverage services that will reach almost to the border areas by December 2018.”

U Than Nyunt of Phyu constituency tendered a proposal urging the Union Government to upgrade national rail transportation to a level consistent with international standards. The proposal was discussed by 13 MPs.

Concerning this, Maj Ye Naing Lwin, representative for the Tatmadaw, said that good rail technology is attributed to providing low cost transport with time accuracy. It behooves the country to urgently find solutions to the ministry’s annual losses in the rail transport sector, he said. With a view toward attracting investors from home and abroad, it is necessary to amend the Investment Law as well as rules and regulations for the benefit of the reason that it cannot be implemented within 5 years. U Win Myint, the speaker, announced that it would be recorded with the approval of the Hluttaw.

Corn price drops due to lower demand from China

A DROP in demand for Myanmar corn in China is making it difficult for corn growers to hit their profit targets this year, it has been learned from local corn growers. Myanmar grown corn is mainly exported to China. Last year, the price of corn remained high and so domestic corn growers planted more acres in anticipation of healthy exports this year.

China, however, has since tightened controls on corn imports, resulting in corn growers having to face losses, said corn grower U Sai Myint Han from Kyaukme township.

Last year, corn growers individually earned an average of K2,000,000 from exportting. This year’s average earnings have dropped to around K600,000. Currently, corn sells for around K220 per viss (one viss is approximately 1.6 kilograms) and dried corn sells for around K350 per viss.

“The yield of corn was over 1,000 visses this year. Growing corn seeds costs K250,000 per acre, which does not include corn mill costs and labour charges,” said another corn grower named U Sai Thar Aung.

“We borrowed money at high interest from outside the community because the agriculture loan was insufficient to grow enough corn to reap what we expected,” said U Kyaw Myint, a local corn grower from Yezagyo.

The total volume of exported corn between 10 and 16 September was 14,879 tonnes worth US$3.48 million. Myanmar growers export corn via Muse, Lwejai, Chin Shwe Haw and Kan Pat Tee trade camps.— Aung Thant Khine

Number of beekeepers increases due to foreign demand for Myanmar honey

WITH the demand for Myanmar’s honey on the rise from foreign countries, including the United States, private entrepreneurs engaged in honey beekeeping has reached about 750, it is learnt from officials.

Myanmar’s honey is exported annually to the United States, Canada, South Korea, Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand, China and Japan. The bee-keeping business could help reduce the poverty rate in rural areas by creating more job opportunities, officials said. The United States and Canada started placing orders for Myanmar’s honey in the 2014-2015 fiscal year, said an official from the Sagaing bee-keeping department.

Myanmar produced 10,875.81 metric tonnes of honey during the fiscal year, said an official from the Sagaing bee-keeping department. Myanmar produced 10,875.81 metric tonnes of honey during the past three fiscal years from 2013-2014 to 2015-2016, of which 8,471.24 metric tonnes were exported.—200

Myanmar’s Thanaka to be exported to European countries

Efforts are being made for the products of Myanmar’s Thanaka (a yellowish-white cosmetic paste made from the Thanaka tree) to be exported to European countries.

Thanaka products were previously sent to European countries to be tested in a laboratory. These products, already approved by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), are required to be in accordance with the quality and standards of the countries to which the products will be exported, said Kenneth Sein, a managing director from KSH Co., Ltd.

Thanaka is traditional cosmetic of Myanmar. Fifteen varieties of thanaka include soap, toner, perfume, shampoo and facial foam.

Apart from cosmetic use, Thanaka also imparts a cooling sensation with its fragrant scent that is similar to sandalwood and provides protection from sunburn. It is also believed among Myanmar women to help remove acne and promote smooth skin.—200

One to two million flats required for urban people

ONE to two million apartment rooms are required for urban people, said Mr. Jack Finegan, a UN-habitat’s Urban Programme Specialist.

According to statistics from the 2014 Population and Housing Census, about 1 to 2 million of rooms are needed for urban people. About 2 million of apartments are likely to be needed in 2030.

Myanmar’s urban development is 30 per cent and it will keep forward to next 30 years, said Mr. Jack Finegan.

The urban population yearly increases 2 per cent and the accumulative population in the urban city is higher when compared to other countries. Myanmar will soon have to deal with the requirements of low-cost housing, he continued. The burgeoning migration to Yangon is being witnessed, causing the increase in housing requirements, said Mr. Nitosh Khirwal, the managing director and co-founder of House.com.mm.

Yangon is possible to host above 10 million in the coming 10 to 20 years, resulting from the economic and social conditions. The city will turn into a Mega City, said U Myint Naing, the deputy director-general from the human settlement and housing development department.

Therefore, this will be the main problem for Yangonites to solve. The rural development might reduce the migration rate to the big cities. Thus, the rural development plan is given priority to carry out, he added. About 75 per cent of Yangon population earns Ks 2 Lakh and under, according to the survey in Yangon. Additionally, the accommodation for one third of Yangon’s population should cost Ks65,000 per month, said Mr. Jack Finegan.—Myitmaukha News Agency
Manila — The Philippines and the United States launched annual joint military exercises on Tuesday, barely a week after the new president in Manila said they would be the last. President Rodrigo Duterte has angrily rejected US concerns over the bloody war on drugs he has launched since coming to office in June. His frequent tirades have thrown into question one of Washington’s most important security partnerships in Asia. However, the annual amphibious landing exercises between the Philippines military and US Marines were to take place as planned in the northern island of Luzon on Tuesday. US and Philippine personnel were seen linking arms and chatting at an opening ceremony in Manila. The exercises run until 12 October. “We share an alliance to cement our influence in the region,” Deputy Chief of General John Jansen said in a speech. Military leaders from both countries have also started preparing for a new set of exercises next year. Duterte has engaged in near-daily outbursts against the United States for the past month, at one point calling US President Barack Obama a “son of a bitch”, raising questions about whether he can continue to mediate regional diplomacy.

Despite US disapproval over Duterte’s remarks, current and former US officials played down the impact. Duterte later said he regretted using that language to describe Obama. Washington relies on its alliance with the Philippines to cement its influence in Asia as a counterbalance to China’s rise. Duterte has appeared to actively court its rivals Russia and China, saying they expressed support when he complained to them about the United States. Duterte’s foreign minister has said his comments had been taken out of context and, while US officials have expressed concern over his remarks, they say they are reassured by the fact he has yet to translate his words into less military cooperation. The United States has sent the Philippines hundreds of millions of dollars in foreign aid and military and development assistance in recent years, making it the third-largest recipient of US military aid after Afghanistan and Pakistan. A US embassy official said on Tuesday both sides were continuing to co-operate.

“We’re continuing to work with our partners on our bilateral relationship as we know it to be and as it has existed for decades,” embassy official Emma Nagy said.—Reuters

Jakarta — Indonesia’s air force is holding its largest military exercise this week, near some of its islands in the South China Sea, in a show of sovereignty over the gas-rich area on the fringe of territory claimed by China, officials said on Tuesday.

President Joko Widodo in June launched an unprecedented campaign to bolster fishing, oil exploration and defence facilities around the Natuna island chain after a series of face-offs between the Indonesian navy and Chinese fishing boats.

China, while not disputing Indonesia’s claim to the Natuna islands, has raised Indonesian anger by saying the two countries had “over-lapping claims” to waters near them, an area Indonesia calls the Natuna Sea.

“We want to show our existence in the area. We have a good enough air force to act as a deterrent,” Indonesia’s spokesperson for Indonesia’s air force. More than 2,000 air force personnel were taking part in the two-week long exercise, which includes the deployment of Indonesia’s fleet of Russian Sukhoi and F-16 fighter jets.

Other branches of the Indonesian armed forces are not taking part in exercise, which ends on Thurs., day. China claims almost the entire South China Sea, where about $5 trillion worth of trade passes every year. Brunei, Malaysia, the Philippines, Taiwan and Vietnam also have claims.

Indonesia is not part of the dispute over claims in the South China Sea, it objects to China’s inclusion of waters around the Natuna Islands within its “nine-dash line”, a demarcation line used by China to show its claims in the sea.—Reuters
Establishment Thai MPs plan military-backed party to keep junta chief as PM

BANGKOK — Pro-establishment lawmakers, Thaïland’s Prime Minister Prayuth Chan-ocha, plans to ensure junta chief Prayuth Chan-ocha stays on as prime minister by fielding a proxy political party backed by the military in a general election planned for next year.

Thailand voted overwhelming in August to accept a junta-backed constitution, said to be set up to nominate Prayuth as the next prime minister.

“We have retired generals and soldiers that are interested in joining our party,” Paiboon told Reuters. “We need a good person to ensure the reforms put in place by the junta get carried out. For me, that person is General Prayuth.”

Thailand has seen 19 coups or attempted coups since the end of absolute monarchy in 1932 and the role of the military in politics is always closely watched. Politicians from main political parties said the military had been lobbying people to join Paiboon’s party.

For its part, the junta says it does not support the formation of a political party and it is not interested in the political changes beyond 2017. Prayuth has said that all options must be exhausted before he would accept any nomination to become prime minister again.

Suranand Vejjajiva, a former minister in the Yingluck Shinawatra government that was overthrown in May 2014, said a party that supports Prayuth as premier could gain enough seats to ensure military rule.

“There is something within the Thai political culture that longs for a figure of authority who comes in and solves our problems,” he told Reuters.

Kasit Piromya, a former foreign minister and member of the pro-establishment Democrat Party, said the military was reaching out to more conservative members of his party to form a coalition with Paiboon’s party.

Under the new constitution, a 250-member upper house Senate will be appointed by the military and six seats will be reserved for the heads of the armed forces and police.

The military will need at least 125 lawmakers from the elected lower house to join the appointed senators in voting for a non-elected prime minister.

The constitution will allow the military to retain extensive powers during a transition period following the general election and, following an eventual royal succession that has prompted worries about instability.—Reuters

Vietnamese customs seize over 300 kg of elephant ivory from Africa

HANOI — Vietnamese customs officers seized more than 300 kilograms of elephant tusks from Africa over the weekend, according to TRAFFIC, a wildlife trade watchdog of the conservationist groups WWF and the International Union for Conservation of Nature.

The seizure follows one in March at the same airport in Hanoi, were more than 16,000 ivory products in the greater Hanoi area were found by customs officers.

“The authorities in Viet Nam are to be commended for making this important seizure,” said Chris Shepherd, regional director for TRAFFIC in Southeast Asia, said in a statement.

Viet Nam is among 22 countries listed by authorities of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, or CITES, as “most heavily implicated” in the illegal trade in ivory that is threatening the survival of elephant populations in Africa.

Among them, Viet Nam and seven other countries — Malaysia, the Philippines, Thailand and China including Hong Kong, Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda — have been designated as countries of “primary concern.” A survey carried out over an approximately two-week period in 2015 found more than 16,000 ivory products in the greater Hanoi area alone, according to TRAFFIC.

North Korean missile advances expose Japan in two-decade arms race

TOKYO — Successful rocket tests have propelled North Korea ahead in a two-decade arms race with Japan, leaving Tokyo unsure it could fend off a missile strike by the Pyongyang regime without US help, military sources told Reuters.

Under young leader Kim Jong Un, North Korea has tested 21 ballistic missiles since the start of the year, an unprecedented burst of activity that has rattled its neighbours and the international community.

“Their progress has been faster than anticipated,” said a senior Japanese military commander said.

“There is a limit to what our current ballistic missile defence system can achieve,” he added, asking not to be identified because he isn’t authorised to speak to the media.

Planned upgrades to Japan’s ballistic missile defence (BMD) are not due to begin until April at the earliest, while the deployment of new systems designed to destroy incoming warheads could take years to complete.

Constrained by production schedules and tight budgets that limit its ability to accelerate those plans, Japan may instead have to lean more heavily on its US ally to guard against attacks, the sources said. “Our only option for now may be to rely on the US to stop them,” said another source at Japan Self Defence Forces (SDF).

Tokyo and Pyongyang have been locked in an arms race since 1998 when North Korea fired a missile at Japan.

In June, a medium range Musudan rocket reached an altitude of 1,000 km (620 miles) on a lofted trajectory, marking a breakthrough that could allow Pyongyang lob warheads over the range of Japanese BMD Aegis destroyers patrolling the Sea of Japan.

That would leave older PAC-3 Patriot missile batteries protecting major cities including Tokyo as a last line of defence. A $1 billion programme to improve their range and accuracy will begin after March, but the first will not be ready until the 2020 Tokyo Olympics, sources previously told Reuters.—Reuters

PHUKET — Devotees of the Thai island of Phuket parade with gruesome piercings as exploding firecrackers fill the air during an annual Vegetarian Festival.

For 10 days during the ninth month of the Chinese lunar year, believers from the country’s Thai-Chinese community abstain from meat, sex, and other habits thought to be vices that pollute the body and mind. Instead, they pray at temples, join in processions, walk over hot coals at shrines and have their faces pierced, all in the name of purification.

Piercings through the cheeks or lips are often done with knives, swords or skewers. More unusual ones are done with guns, umbrellas, or models of ships and motorcycles.

Believers are usually in a trance as the ritual is carried out. They may also choose to cut themselves with axes or pierce their skin with several hooks.

The festival, known as “Jia Cha,” which started on Saturday, and continues until 9 October, is thought to have first been observed more than 150 years ago, when an itinerant Chinese opera troupe which had fallen ill recovered after praying to the Nine Emperor Gods and adhering to a strict vegetarian diet.—Reuters

Tourism

Tha Sein

Tourism has experienced continued growth and deeper diversification to become one of the fastest growing economic sectors in the world. It can bring about a real sense of pride and identity to communities and provides financial support for the conservation of ecosystems and natural resource management, making the destinations more authentic and desirable to visitors. Modern tourism is closely linked to development and includes more new destinations for tourists. These dynamics have turned tourism into a key driver for socio-economic progress, leading to the alleviation of poverty in countries which are heavily reliant on tourism.

In his address at the ceremony to mark 2016 World Tourism Day held in Nay Pyi Taw the other day, Vice President U Henry Van Thio said that as long as those involved in tourism are working together with a sense of responsibility and accountability, the tourism industry will make progress, as Myanmar has seen its tourism sector improve year after year, receiving 4.6 million visitors in 2015, with arrivals expected to reach 7 million in 2020.

Ministry of Hotels and Tourism is implementing community-based tourism development project as an initiative for the progress of tourism at designated areas nationwide and on course of fostering awareness among local community of the importance of tourism and its social, cultural, and economic values. Despite the work and potential of the industry to contribute much to the national development, it remains largely on the sidelines of the formal process at the international level.

According to the World Tourism Organisation, it was estimated that the industry managed to create one-eleventh of global job opportunities, especially for women and youths with 540 million tourists to visit the Asia-Pacific region in 2030, occupying 30 per cent of the world market. The universal recognition of the tourism industry as the world’s biggest and most rapidly developing business is a major step forward, for it has created jobs for skilled and semi-skilled employees both in urban and rural areas.

As any kind of development requires some interference with disaster and development comes at the cost of nature with a possible damage to the rare species of flora and fauna, it is incumbent upon officials concerned to strike a balance between the negative impacts and positive impacts of tourism, when natural and man-made disasters and emergencies have become more frequent in the country, in order to see, will tourism development of the country be possible and meaningful.

Participating in Change:

Promoting Public Sector Accountability to All

Shabih Mohib, Soren Davensen and Robert Boothe

Successful development is about making a reality of aspirations and ambitious ideas through effective implementation – Myanmar can achieve just that for its people by instilling the values of transparency, accountability and public participation in its public sector.

Ideas and policies matter. They have the power to be transformative. A strong and efficient, transparent and accountable public sector is crucial for translating inspiring ideas and policies into real development outcomes. If we liken Myanmar to a car, then the public sector – a collection of institutions, processes and people which together function as the machinery of government – has an important role to play. The people of Myanmar sit in the driver’s seat, the private sector is the engine which moves the economy forward – and the public sector acts as the car’s transmission and gearbox. If it’s running well, the car moves forward smoothly – but if it’s poorly maintained, people may be in for a bumpy ride.

There are many examples of governments whose ideas inspired, but only a few manage to achieve their aspirations. In post-apartheid South Africa, the African National Congress, led by Nelson Mandela, inspired the hopes and dreams of a nation with their vision for peace and prosperity. However, it took many years of challenging public sector reform to help achieve the success we see in South Africa today. At this critical juncture, how can Myanmar’s government ensure that its vision for growth and development is translated into real outcomes?

An important place to start is with public participation. In the past, lack of transparency and participation in the public sector had hindered initiatives in Myanmar, and compounded loss of public trust in government. Global experience suggests that citizen participation, especially from the poor, is a critical ingredient for good service delivery – as accountability for results, where effective provision of services is rewarded, especially provision to those people with the greatest need. Both public participation and accountability for results are most effective in an environment of openness and transparency.

Myanmar has taken some important first steps towards a more accountable public sector, and better use of public resources to support growth and service delivery. Transparency has increased, with televised Union Budget debates, and published versions of both the enacted budget as well as a new, simplified Citizen’s Budget. This has had a major impact on spending, with large increases for services like health and education. The tax system has become more equitable and transparent, with the introduction of a new self-assessment system of taxation by the Large Taxpayer’s Office. In addition to building trust, this new system will likely increase revenues – when Vietnam undertook a similar phased approach introducing self-assessment in the late 1990s, compliance costs for taxpayers dropped significantly, and government revenues as a share of GDP grew by more than 50 percent by 2011. Myanmar has also moved towards greater transparency in the use of natural resource revenues, successfully becoming a candidate of the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI) with the first report published in early 2016. Together, these reforms have helped revenues grow by almost double 2009 levels, providing crucial resources for the services and public investment.

How can Myanmar build on the momentum of these different initiatives that are supporting an appropriate balance of Union-State/Regions government relations. Decentralization is a complex and often political process – and by establishing a technical secretariat within government to provide advice on key policy questions such as roles and responsibilities, spending and revenue raising powers, Myanmar can make informed decisions about the best path forward. Such a secretariat was established in Thailand in the early 1990s, and in 2009 the Office of the Prime Minister to support the decentralization program, and it proved very important in coordinating the decentralization program.

Fourth, authorities can seek more active public engagement and feedback on policy reforms. This can be conducted through workshops on key legislation, especially related to public finances, would help build trust and partnership with the people of Myanmar while also giving valuable feedback and ideas to government. A medium-term goal could include developing a general legal framework to govern the issuance, consultation and publication of legislation in order to entrench the principles of transparency and democracy.

Finally, Myanmar can commit to the principles of accountability by measuring and publishing performance figures for key public services and publishing regular reports, by continuing to promote transparency in the use of natural resource revenues, successfully becoming a candidate of the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI) with the first report published in early 2016. Together, these reforms have helped revenues grow by almost double 2009 levels, providing crucial resources for the services and public investment.

As any kind of development requires some interference with disaster and development comes at the cost of nature with a possible damage to the rare species of flora and fauna, it is incumbent upon officials concerned to strike a balance between the negative impacts and positive impacts of tourism, when natural and man-made disasters and emergencies have become more frequent in the country, in order to see, will tourism development of the country be possible and meaningful.

“World Teachers’ Day”

For many a year, teachers have watched the pupils playing to and fro. The great doctors, the famous statesmen, they’ll surely grow.

For many a time, teachers may come and teachers may go.

Around the world is held “World Teachers’ Day”.

Teachers are all kind and good, they may be from East or West. They never feel tired though they teach without a rest. With might and main, body and soul, they’ll do their best.

All the pupils, “May all teachers live long.”

The things that the teachers’ve longed and wished will come true.

They’re pleased if their pupils are good, clever, just and bright. Their pupils are well-trained to differentiate what’s wrong or right.

“World Teachers’ Day”.

Our Kind-hearted Teachers”

All the students are the same. From the point of teacher’s view. The students come from different land, And their complexion of different hue.

Teachers treat the pupils so kindly. That their love is genuine and true.

Though their work seems to be tiresome, There’s cheer in every teacher’s face.

How wonderful they train their pupils! Though each comes from different race. Neither religion nor nation matters much, Teacher’s smile is full of glow and grace.

East is East and West is West. Never the twain shall meet.

For many a year, teachers have watched the pupils playing to and fro. For many a time, teachers may come and teachers may go. For many a year, teachers have watched the pupils playing to and fro.

In new blow to campaign, Trump’s foundation ordered to halt fundraising

WASHINGTON — New York’s attorney general ordered Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump’s charitable foundation to immediately stop fundraising in the state, warning that a failure to do so would be a “continuing fraud.”

For Trump, the cease-and-desist order to make the latest in a series of blows that has sent his campaign reeling. The New York businessman and his aides spent much of the weekend pushing back against suggestions that he may not have paid US federal income taxes for almost 20 years.

New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman’s office said the Donald J. Trump Foundation was violating a state law requiring charitable organisations that solicit outside donations to register with the office’s Charities Bureau.

The order followed a series of reports in The Washington Post that suggested improprieties by the foundation, including using its funds to settle legal disputes involving Trump businesses.

“The failure to immediately and without delay to file information and reports required under Article 7-A with the Charities Bureau shall be deemed to be a continuing fraud upon the people of the state of New York,” according to a letter dated on Friday that the office posted online on Monday.

Trump’s campaign has suggested that the probe launched by Schneiderman, a Democrat, was politically motivated.

While again putting Trump’s campaign on the defensive, the order could also undercut his efforts to make the Clinton Foundation, the family charity of Democratic presidential rival Hillary Clinton, a primary target in his campaign against her.

Trump has sought to paint the Clinton Foundation as a “pay-to-play” operation under which the former secretary of state and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, rewarded big donors to the foundation with access.

The scrutiny of the Trump Foundation came as the Republican candidate was dealing with a torrent of bad news, including his shaky performance in first debate with Clinton on 26 September and the release by the New York Times of tax records that showed Trump taking an almost $1 billion loss in 1995 that may have allowed him to avoid paying federal income taxes for up to 18 years.

In its series on the Trump Foundation, The Washington Post reported that Trump may have violated US Internal Revenue Service rules against “self-dealing” by using foundation money to purchase two portraits of himself, which were then hung at his private golf clubs in New York and Florida.

The newspaper also said that Trump may have improperly used the foundation to settle legal disputes, including one at his Palm Beach, Florida estate; diverted income from his business to the charity to avoid paying income tax; and donated foundation money to support Florida Attorney General Pam Bondi, a Republican, who was considering launching an investigation into Trump University, Trump’s for-profit education venture.

The foundation ended up paying a $2,500 fine to the IRS for that donation.

In response to the Post’s report, Schneiderman’s office began a probe into the Trump Foundation.

The Trump campaign said in a statement on Monday that the charity would cooperate with the investigation. “While we remain very concerned about the political motives behind AG Schneiderman’s investigation, the Trump Foundation nevertheless intends to cooperate fully with the investigation,” said Trump campaign spokeswoman Hope Hikmet.

“Our success was not unusual for the regulator to send notices to charities whose filings are overdue or incomplete, but a cease-and-desist letter is more serious. While letters such as the one the Trump Foundation, which is based in Woodbury, New York, on Long Island, received are not judgements of wrongdoing, they are sent only after the office gets a ‘clear indication of wrongdoing.’” the spokesman said.

Trump established the charitable foundation in 1988, but it runs no programmes of its own. Instead, it donates money to other nonprofit groups such as the Police Athletic League for youths. Once the foundation began soliciting money from other donors beyond the Trump family, it was required by New York law to register with the state.

It is a radically different vehicle than the New York City-based Clinton Foundation, which has a $354 million in assets and almost 500 staffs. It has worked to reduce the cost of drugs for people with HIV in developing countries, eradicate childhood obesity in the United States and reduce greenhouse gas emissions, among other things.

Thomas Mair, 53, is accused of shooting and stabbing Cox, a member of parliament for the opposition Labour Party, as she arrived for a meeting with residents in the northern English town of Birstall, part of her electoral district.

The murder shocked the nation and led to the suspension of referendum campaigning for several days. Cox had been campaigning for Britain to remain in the EU. —Reuters

Vietnamese 3-member family die in wedding shop fire

HO CHI MINH CITY — A Vietnamese couple and their daughter died in a fire which broke out early Tuesday at their wedding shop in Ho Chi Minh City.

The fire in District 12 killed the shop’s owner Trinh Ngoc Tin, 35, his wife, and their two-year-old daughter, said the municipal Fire Prevention and Fire Police. Firefighters with six fire trucks managed to put out the blaze in around half an hour.

A total of 2,460 fires and explosions broke out across Viet Nam in the first nine months of this year, killing 90 people and injuring 216 others, while leaving losses of some 1,058 billion Vietnamese dong (47.4 million US dollars), the country’s Fire Prevention and Fight Department said.—Xinhua

Thouless, Haldane and Kosterlitz win 2016 Nobel physics prize

LONDON — British-born scientists David Thouless, Duncan Haldane and Michael Kosterlitz won the 2016 Nobel Prize for Physics for studies of unusual states of matter such as in superconductors, the award-giving body said on Tuesday.

“Thanks to their pioneering work, the hunt is now on for new and exotic phases of matter,” the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences said in a statement awarding the 8 million Swedish crown ($937,000) prize.

“Many people are hopeful of future applications in both materials science and electronics.”

Thouless was awarded half the prize with the other half divided between Haldane and Kosterlitz. Physics is the second of this year’s crop of Nobels and comes after Japan’s Yoshinori Ohsumi was awarded the prize for medicine on Monday.—Reuters

Wikileaks’ Assange signals release of documents before US election

BERLIN — Wikileaks founder Julian Assange said on Tuesday the organisation would publish around one million documents related to three governments and the US election before the end of the year.

Assange denied that the release of documents related to the US election was specifically geared to damage Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton, and said he had been misquoted in that regard.

Assange also signalled changes in the way Wikileaks is organised and funded, saying the group would soon open itself to membership. He said the group was looking to expand its work beyond the 100 media outlets it already works with.—Reuters

Afghan officials say troops clear Taliban from Kunduz amid sporadic clashes

KUNDUZ — Afghan forces re-gained control of most of the northern city of Kunduz city on Tuesday amid sporadic fighting, officials said, a day after Taliban militants appeared to encounter lit-tle resistance as they pushed to the city center.

But social media accounts linked to the Taliban, which had taunted Afghan forces and their Western backers throughout Mon-day, attacked, said the group’s fighters were still inside Kunduz city on Tuesday with “clashes on-going” and government troops “on the run”.

Taliban militants slipped past government defences early on Monday and occupied or attacked central areas of Kunduz, almost exactly a year after they briefly captured the city in one of their biggest successes of the 15-year war.

The attack in Kunduz, as well as Taliban gains in areas of Helmand and Uruzgan where they also threaten provincial capitals, has underlined the insurgents’ growing strength and exposed weaknesses in the government, which is meeting international do-mains, including the United Nations and US officials, to discuss the situation.

US President Barack Obama has been loath to get more deeply involved in a third war in the Islamic world and US officials have said he is unlikely to do so with less than four months left in office.

Just before Monday’s an- nouncement, Russian President Vladimir Putin suspended a trea-ty with Washington on clearing up weapons-grade plutonium, signalling he was willing to use nuclear disarmament as a new bargaining chip in disputes with the United States.

The senior State Department official dismissed links between the suspension of talks on Syria and Putin’s announcement.

Amid the growing tensions, the State Department announced that the top US diplomat on Eu-rope, including Russia, will travel to Moscow later this week to hold talks with senior Russian officials on Russia’s annexation of Ukraine’s Crimea region in 2014. The United States and European Union imposed sanc-tions against Moscow for its ac-tions in Crimea.

In Washington on Monday, Pentagon spokesman Captain Jeff Davis told reporters the Taliban at-tack was more of a “Western-mov- ie style shoot-them-up” rath than a concerted military offensive.

Afghan Defence Ministry spokesman Dawlat Waziri said the Afghan military was “one of the deadliest” since the war erupted in 2011. “These air strikes, mostly fo-cused on Aleppo, have utilized a wide variety of deadly munitions, including barrel bombs, thermobaric bombs, incendiary munitions, cluster bombs and bunker busters,” the official said, speak-ing on condition of anonymity.

The end of the talks could trigger deeper US consider-ation of military options such as pro-viding more sophisticated arms, logistical support, and training to Syrian rebel groups, either di-rectly or via Gulf Arab states or Turkey.

But the speed with which the ceasefire collapsed — after a UN aid convoy was bombed in Syria — appeared to take some officials in the Obama adminis-tration by surprise and without a clear plan on the immediate way forward.

Turkey suspends 12,800 police, tightening clampdown after failed coup

ANKARA/ISTANBUL — Hours after announcing a three-month extension of a state of emergency, Turkey suspended 12,801 police officers on Tuesday, saying they had suspected links to US-based cleric Fethullah Gulen, whom Anc-ka regards for orchestrating Jul-y’s failed coup.

In a statement, Turkey’s na-tional police headquarters said 2,523 of those suspended were police chiefs. The overall number represents more than 5 per cent of Turkey’s entire police force.

They “have been assessed to have communications or links to the Gulenist Terror Organisation, identified as a threat to national security,” the written police state-ment said.

Turkey lists the religious movement led by Gulen as an il-legal terrorist network, though he has denied having any link to the uprising. State-run Anadolu Agen-cy said 37 people working in the Interior Ministry’s headquarters had also been removed from their posts. It was not clear if both mea-sures were linked.

President Tayyip Erdogan has taken unprecedented steps to rid state institutions of staff deemed disloyal or potential enemies since the attempted coup on 15 July.

About 100,000 people in the mili-tary, civil service, police, judiciary and universities have been sacked or suspended from their jobs, and 32,000 people have been arrested. Turkey’s move came hours after deputy prime minister and government spokesman Numan Kurtulmus announced that a state of emergency imposed shortly after the failed coup would be ex-tended for a further 90 days when it expires on 19 October. —Reuters

Nobel winner Ohsumi says he hopes to encourage other researchers

TOKYO — Japanese scientist Yoshinori Ohsumi said Tuesday he hopes other researchers will be encouraged by his receipt of the Nobel prize in physiology or medicine for elucidating mechanisms for autophagy.

Ohsumi, who revealed the mechanism of how autophagy begins and opened up the possibility of new treatments for cancer and other diseases, said he hoped Japanese society would "support basic research for the future."

The 71-year-old honorary professor at the Tokyo Institute of Technology has been busy giving interviews and making TV appearances since Monday evening and indicated the win has yet to sink in.

"I am staying alive that three and a half hours (of sleep) and it still feels like an extension of yesterday, so I might feel differently once I get home and relax," he said.

"I saw people in my laboratory making a toast with beer on TV and wanted to join in, I haven’t been able to celebrate myself," he said smiling.

In a press conference held late Tuesday morning, Ohsumi targeted young people to see the world.

"It is important to go abroad and experience different cultures," he said.

While a number of Japanese have shared Nobel prizes with others, only two others before Ohsumi had singly won a prize in the field of natural sciences — Hideki Yukawa, who won the Physics prize in 1949, and Susumu Tonegawa, who won the physiology or medicine prize in 1987.

Ohsumi’s 69-year-old wife Mariko said she was "downright surprised" at the news that he had been chosen for the Nobel prize.

"I was like Mr. Trump," a senior Southeast Asian official said, referring to US Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump.

"He craves attention, and the more he gets, the more outrageous he becomes. It is wiser to ignore him."

Asked by a reporter for his response to that comment, presidential spokesman Ernesto Abella said: "That is their opinion."

While Duterte has publicly suggested he would end joint military exercises, push US special operations forces out of the southern Philippines, and review a defense pact signed two years ago, US officials stressed none of this has happened.

US military officials said they were well aware of Duterte’s comments, but their counterparts in the Philippines had reassured them that business continues as usual.

"No one is really losing sleep over it," said one US defense official on condition of anonymity.

"It is all bluster," said a second defense official, saying Duterte’s remarks "have not bled over into our atmosphere."

There are about 100 US soldiers in Zamboanga City in the south, a Philippine military spokesman said, well below the 1,200 US forces initially deployed to help train and advise local troops fight the Abu Sayyaf Group, an Islamist militant group.

NEW YORK — A UN General Assembly committee began discussions Monday on a state of disarmament and security issues, with major regional blocs and other nations showing support for the start of negotiations in 2017 to outlaw nuclear weapons.

Myanmar’s UN Ambassador Hau Do Suwan was among speakers who noted that little progress has been made in achieving a world free of atomic weapons in the 71 years since atomic bombs were dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, despite the existence of disarmament treaties.

"Sadly, nuclear weapons still exist in large numbers and we are not yet in a position to claim that we are close to achieving the goals of a world free of nuclear weapons," he said, speaking on behalf of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations.

He said the bloc has put its weight behind holding a conference in 2017 that would be open to all states along with international organizations and civil society “to negotiate a legally binding instrument prohibiting nuclear weapons, leading towards their total elimination.”

The move came after a group of six countries has submitted a draft General Assembly resolution urging the start of negotiations in 2017 to outlaw nuclear weapons.

The draft resolution is expected to be put to a vote at the First Committee, which is charged with overseeing disarmament issues, as early as late this month.

The Caribbean Community, or CARICOM, also supports the international effort to advance negotiations as it considers the use or threat of use of nuclear weapons a violation of the United Nations charter, as well as goes against international and humanitarian law.

On behalf of the group, Trinidad and Tobago’s Ambassador Penelope Beckles, said such a prohibition on nuclear weapons can lead to attaining a world without them, adding that they support the recommendation “to begin a multilateral process for the negotiation of a legally binding instrument for the prohibition of nuclear weapons towards their total elimination.”

Mexico’s Ambassador Juan Jose Gomez, whose country is one of the drafters of the resolution along with Austria, Brazil, Ireland, Nigeria and South Africa, spoke out about the move toward multilateral negotiations by calling it a “collaboration of the members in an attempt to fill the legal gap and in an effort to work toward prohibiting them.”

The United States has made clear its objection to any resolution calling for multilateral talks on the matter. Japan, the world’s sole atom-bombed country, which is also under the US nuclear umbrella, has yet to state its position.

Dela Rosa’s tour of Luzon, the country’s largest and most populous island, was the latest in a series of trips to stiffen the resolve of police officers at the cam- paign’s bloody frontline. “I have to encourage them to do our job,” he told a Reuters reporter who went on the trip last month. “We are at war.” Police said on 3 Octo- ber they had shot dead 1,379 people in operations since President Duterte took office on 1 July. They also report a further 2,066 “deaths un- der investigation”, many of which human rights activists attribute to vigilante killings. Reuters was unable to confirm the accuracy of these numbers or the extent to which the killings have been committed by vigilan- ties. The campaign has sparked outrage abroad, but in the Philippines it has won praise from a crime-weary population and only muted criticism from civil society groups. In a country where the police are generally despised and feared because of their reputation for corruption and violence, Dela Rosa is popular. After only two months as police chief, the national me- dia is already touting him as Duterte’s possible successor, an idea that the president’s spokesman Martin Andanar described as “speculative”. Duterte has often called for the killing of drug deal- ers. And Dela Rosa has ech- ed the incendiary language used by, the mayor said people “were at under pressure. “My worry is that I won’t be able to deliver what he ordered,” he told Reuters. Duterte vowed on 18 Sep- tember he would extend his anti-drug campaign for another six months, but Dela Rosa said he still felt pressed for time. The biggest obstacles to the campaign, he said, were the lack of rehab services for the many users of crystal methamphetamine, a highly addictive drug known locally as shabu, and halting its influx from abroad, particu- larly the flow from China. More than 700,000 drug users and pushers have reg- istered with the authorities in a process termed “surrender- ing”. But there are very few pro- grams or facilities to help most of them, and local me- dia have reported the killing of scores of people who have registered. Dela Rosa told Reu- ters the number of drug war killings would continue to rise. “Every day the number of dead increases,” he said. “Every day the arrests increase and those who sur- render.” Dela Rosa bristles at the mention of foreign critics. The United States has said that it is “deeply concerned” by the killings, while two Unit- ed Nations experts have ac- cused Duterte of incitement to violence, a crime under international law. “They’re making us out to be killers,” said Dela Rosa. “It really broke my heart. We’re doing this for the good of the Filipinos, for them.” Before the anti-drug campaign, he said, people were scared to leave their houses. “Now the sit- uation has been reversed. Law-abiding people are going out. Criminals are hid- ing. See the difference?” But while other serious crime has declined, the mur- der rate has soared, and in some communities residents told Reuters that police and vigilante killings had made them too frightened to go outside after dark. Dela Rosa, 54 — whose earliest ambition was to be a boxer — is popularly known as “Bato”, after his home- town south of Davao City. It also means “rock” in the national language Tagalog. His late father was a pedicab driver who could barely afford to send him to school, said Dela Rosa in a tribute on his Facebook page in June.

Duterte’s enforcer says ‘we are at war’, has no regrets about killings

LA UNION (Philippines) — When Philippines police chief Ronald Dela Rosa gave a rousing speech to his men at a regional headquar- ters in Luzon, they rewarded him with a gift: a replica of the sword used by actor Mel Gibson in the movie Braveheart. The barrel-chested police chief grinned and gave the weapon, which is al- most as long as he is tall, a practice swing. A voice on the camp’s loudspeaker de- clared him “the bravest of bravehearts”. Dela Rosa acts as the enforcer for Philippines President Rodrigo Duterte, whose war on drugs has led to more than 3,400 people being killed in just over three months. Dela Rosa’s tour of Luzon, the country’s largest and most populous island, was the latest in a series of trips to stiffen the resolve of police officers at the cam- paign’s bloody frontline. “I have to encourage them to do our job,” he told a Reuters reporter who went on the trip last month. “We are at war.” Police said on 3 Octo- ber they had shot dead 1,379 people in operations since President Duterte took office on 1 July. They also report a further 2,066 “deaths un- der investigation”, many of which human rights activists attribute to vigilante killings. Reuters was unable to confirm the accuracy of these numbers or the extent to which the killings have been committed by vigilan- ties. The campaign has sparked outrage abroad, but in the Philippines it has won praise from a crime-weary population and only muted criticism from civil society groups. In a country where the police are generally despised and feared because of their reputation for corruption and violence, Dela Rosa is popular. After only two months as police chief, the national me- dia is already touting him as Duterte’s possible successor, an idea that the president’s spokesman Martin Andanar described as “speculative”. Duterte has often called for the killing of drug deal- ers. And Dela Rosa has ech- ed the incendiary language used by, the mayor said people “were at under pressure. “My worry is that I won’t be able to deliver what he ordered,” he told Reuters. Duterte vowed on 18 Sep- tember he would extend his anti-drug campaign for another six months, but Dela Rosa said he still felt pressed for time. The biggest obstacles to the campaign, he said, were the lack of rehab services for the many users of crystal methamphetamine, a highly addictive drug known locally as shabu, and halting its influx from abroad, particu- larly the flow from China. More than 700,000 drug users and pushers have reg- istered with the authorities in a process termed “surrender- ing”. But there are very few pro- grams or facilities to help most of them, and local me- dia have reported the killing of scores of people who have registered. Dela Rosa told Reu- ters the number of drug war killings would continue to rise. “Every day the number of dead increases,” he said. “Every day the arrests increase and those who sur- render.” Dela Rosa bristles at the mention of foreign critics. The United States has said that it is “deeply concerned” by the killings, while two Unit- ed Nations experts have ac- cused Duterte of incitement to violence, a crime under international law. “They’re making us out to be killers,” said Dela Rosa. “It really broke my heart. We’re doing this for the good of the Filipinos, for them.” Before the anti-drug campaign, he said, people were scared to leave their houses. “Now the sit- uation has been reversed. Law-abiding people are going out. Criminals are hid- ing. See the difference?” But while other serious crime has declined, the mur- der rate has soared, and in some communities residents told Reuters that police and vigilante killings had made them too frightened to go outside after dark. Dela Rosa, 54 — whose earliest ambition was to be a boxer — is popularly known as “Bato”, after his home- town south of Davao City. It also means “rock” in the national language Tagalog. His late father was a pedicab driver who could barely afford to send him to school, said Dela Rosa in a tribute on his Facebook page in June.

Haitians flee homes as Hurricane Matthew hits

LES CAYES (Haiti) — Hai- tians living in vulnerable coastal areas fled shelter as the strong- est Caribbean storm in nine years, Hurricane Matthew, closed in on the southwestern peninsula, sending storm surges, wind and rain into seaside towns.

Matthew, a violent Cat- eegory 4 storm packing 145 mile-per-hour (230 kph) winds, was due to pound the zone late on Monday, flooding dozens of houses in the town of Les Anglais when the ocean rose, the lo- cal mayor said. In the town of Les Cayes on the southern coast, the wind bent trees and the power went out. “We have gusts of wind hitting the whole area and the people have fled to a shelter,” said Les Anglais mayor Jean-Claude Despierre. In Tiburon, another town near- by, the mayor said people who had been reluctant to leave their homes also fled when the sea rose. “Everyone is trying to find a safe place to protect themselves, the situation is very difficult,” mayor Remiza Denize said, de- scribing large waves hitting the town. The storm is forecast to spread hurricane-force winds and up to three feet of rain across denuded hills prone to flash floods and mudslides, threatening villages as well as shanty towns in the capital Port-au-Prince.—Reuters

Kim Kardashian back after being held at gunpoint in $10m Paris robbery

PARIS/NEW YORK — Reality TV star Kim Kardashian returned to New York “badly shaken” on Monday after being robbed at gunpoint in her Paris residence by masked men who stole some $10 million worth of jewellery.

Kardashian, wearing sunglasses and with her head bowed, was pictured entering her Manhattan apartment with her rapper husband Kanye West. She had left Paris by private jet hours after robbers tied her up in the bathroom and put a gun to her head.

According to her publicist, Kardashian was “badly shaken but physically unharmed.” She said nothing to waiting media upon her arrival.

The reality star’s friends, including Jonathan Cheban and La La Anthony, turned up at her residence shortly after her arrival and also avoided talking to the media.

“What happened is very unfortunate and those responsible must be severely punished,” French Foreign Minister Jean-Marc Ayrault told TV5 Monde. “We are fully mobilised to ensure the safety of the French people, as well as all those who visit France, and in particular tourists.”

A Paris police source earlier told Reuters that five attackers, wearing ski masks and clothes with police markings, struck around 3am (0100 GMT) inside the exclusive apartment block where Kardashian, 35, was staying while attending Paris Fashion Week.

Two of the men entered Kardashian’s apartment after threatening the night guard with a hand gun. Kardashian, who has two young children with West, was not beaten but the robbers put a handgun against her temple before tying her up, the source said. iTELE television said she had been tied up with packing tape.

E! News, whose US network broadcasts the “Keeping Up With the Kardashians” television show, on Monday quoted a source close to Kardashian as saying she feared for her life.

“She begged for them to let her live and (said) she has babies at home.... She thought they were for sure going to kill her,” the unidentified source told E! News.

The robbers stole a box containing jewels worth 5 million to 6 million euros ($5.6 million to $6.7 million) and a ring worth about 4 million euros ($4.5 million), the Paris police source said.

As news of the robbery spread, West abruptly ended a performance in New York less than an hour into his set on Sunday night.—Reuters

Stella McCartney models dance as if in Broadway musical

PARIS — Stella McCartney on Monday gave further evidence that fashion brands are increasingly becoming entertainment companies as she closed her show with models twirling and dancing as if in a Broadway musical.

Videos of the event at Paris’s Opera Garnier went viral after appearing on social media like Instagram and Facebook.

Fashion brands are stepping up their presence on social media to woo young consumers — the buyers of tomorrow — who spend more time online than with traditional media such as glossy magazines and TV.

Stella McCartney is one of the most active brands on Instagram, with more than 3 million followers. Last year, it invited artists to post illustrations of her show on Instagram, which raised the brand’s visibility worldwide.

“It is important that the show is fun,” McCartney told Reuters after the Paris show. “I am very irreverent. I am British, so I want to have fun, I want to enjoy it and this is what we do in this house.”

It has been all about sports this Paris Fashion Week — with fencing at Dior and car racing at Nina Ricci — and at Stella McCartney, the focus was on gymnastics.

Models strutted down the catwalk in all-in-one pieces with gym tops and wide trousers. There were also white cotton corsets featuring what appeared to be back-supporting belts and stitched in with baggy trousers.

At the end of the show, instead of sashaying down the runway to present the collection as a group one last time, as is normally done, the models formed circles and rows and danced for 10 minutes with arms in the air to loud electro-African music.

“It was magical, it was one of those shows you want to be part of as a model,” actress and model Natalie Vodianova told Reuters. “It was great to see the girls allowed to shine and show their true personality.”

Vodianova sat next to actress Salma Hayek and her husband Francois-Henri Pinault, chief executive of the Kering group, which has a 50 per cent stake in Stella McCartney.

Stella McCartney reported sales in its home British market of 31.8 million pounds ($40.83 million) in 2015, against 31.6 million pounds in 2014, and said operating profit in Britain grew 10 per cent to 6.63 million pounds over the same period. — Reuters

Grumpy Cat immortalized in wax, makes Broadway debut

LOS ANGELES — Grumpy Cat, the internet’s most famous scowling feline, not only wowed a waxwork of herself this weekend, but also joined the cast of Broadway musical “Cats” to close out the show with some added “meows.”

Grumpy Cat, 4, posed next to a wax replica of herself at Madame Tussauds waxwork museum in Washington D.C. last week, before snapping photos with the museum’s other famous inhabitants, including former US presidents Abraham Lincoln, John F. Kennedy and Ronald Reagan.

When asked how Grumpy Cat was feeling, her owner Tabatha Bundesen told Reuters, “She was thrilled. As you can see, she’s still thrilled.”

After her visit to the nation’s capital, Grumpy Cat’s next stop was New York’s Broadway, where she was the guest of honor at Friday’s curtain call for Andrew Lloyd-Webber musical “Cats.”

She was cheered on by the cast on stage and the audience as she received a placard commemorating her Broadway debut.

Grumpy Cat, whose real name is Tardar Sauce, went viral in 2012 after her permanent scowl, which her owner said was caused by feline dwarfism, became meme-worthy fodder.

She has appeared in Lifetime movie “Grumpy Cat’s Worst Christmas Ever” in 2014 and also has picture books and plush toys modeled after her.—Reuters

French artist brings floating fish to London’s Tate Modern

LONDON — French artist Philippe Parreno fills Tate Modern’s Turbine Hall with inflatable fish for a new installation in the vast central space of the London gallery.

“Anywhen”, on display until April, uses speakers and video screens to toy with time and space as the fish float into different formations.

“The sound objects interact with the light changes. The panels interact to the sound changes, so everything is connected,” Parreno said. “Although there is something at work, we don’t really know what is at work.”

The gallery’s Turbine Hall has previously displayed works such as Ai Weiwei’s “Sunflower Seeds”, made up of 100 million handmade porcelain “seeds” spread on the floor. Parreno’s previous work has explored boundaries between reality and fiction. He is also known for a film, “Zidane: A 21st Century Portrait”, which followed former French footballer and current Real Madrid manager Zinedine Zidane. “I think Philippe has this very rare capacity of bridging the history of modern contemporary art and what art might be,” said Andrea Lissoni, Tate Modern’s senior curator of international art.—Reuters

Danish park designed to promote tolerance in community wins architectural award

Al Ain (United Arab Emirates) — An urban park in Denmark to promote tolerance between immigrants and local residents and a mosque in a flood-prone area of Bangladesh were among winners of the Aga Khan Award for Architecture on Monday.

The $1 million prize is awarded every three years to honour architectural projects that address the needs of societies in which Muslims have a significant presence.

This year’s six winners also included a children’s library in Beijing and a pedestrian bridge in Tehran.

Superkilen, a series of public spaces in a deprived immigrant area of the Danish capital Copenhagen, was designed as an outdoor meeting place for people of 60 nationalities living in the area — including many refugees.

Islamic-themed sculptures and skateboard ramps are a feature of the urban park and Muslim women bring their children there to play on the swings.

“Architecture can be a means of joining people. It is a way to showcase commonalities between the Muslim communities that exist in all regions of the world,” said Mohammed Al Aqad, a member of the Award’s steering committee.

“Of course there are tensions in Europe between the immigrant and host populations. This project is unique because it brings together all the different... communities,” he said. The six winners were chosen from 348 projects in 69 countries nominated for the award, and were announced in a ceremony in the renovated 19th century Jalhi fort in the United Arab Emirates.

The winners were chosen by an independent jury of architectural experts appointed by the Aga Khan Foundation, named after the wealthy leader of the Ismaili branch of Shi’ite Islam.—Reuters

Serbia’s first Confucius Institute celebrates 10th anniversary

BELGRADE — The 10th anniversary of the Confucius Institute in Belgrade was celebrated at a ceremony at the Belgrade University followed by a forum on learning Chinese at Serbian elementary and high schools.

The celebration was attended by Chinese Ambassador Li Man-chang, Serbian and Chinese professors and students.

Radosav Pusic, a director of the Confucius Institute in Belgrade, said that the institute started at the faculty of philology of the Belgrade University in 2006.

“If we speak of numbers, during these ten years we had a constant increase of students. What is more important, that the interest of our children, and by that I mean kids from kindergarten, elementary schools and high schools, is also increasing,” he said.

Pusic added that the institute aims to spread Chinese language as well as to serve as a cultural bridge between the two countries.

In front of Confucius Institute, Pusic handed letters of gratitude to those who gave their contribution to the development of the institute — Ambassador Li, Belgrade City Library, Qi Gong Association of Serbia, 13th Belgrade High School and Belgrade City Museum.

He also handed awards to winners of the photo and video competition “China in My Eyes.” Li noted in his speech that an increasing number of Serbs learn Chinese and this can be a great result of the work of the Confucius Institute.

“Nowadays I can find Serbian-Chinese translators everywhere, and those are all Serbs,” Li said.

“This all shows that all of you gathering here gave a great contribution to advancing friendly relations between China and Serbia,” he stressed, concluding that he hopes that more Serbs will learn Chinese language. —Xinhua

World heavyweight champion Fury is now ‘here to stay’

LONDON — Britain’s world heavyweight champion Tyson Fury is now “here to stay” just hours after announcing his retirement from boxing on Monday.

“Boxing is the saddest thing I ever took part in, I’m the greatest, and also retired,” Fury said in an expletive-filled rant on Twitter.

A few hours later, however, the 28-year-old revealed he was planning to carry on fighting.

“Hahahaha u think you will get rid of the GYPSYKING that easy!!! I’m here to stay. #TheGreatest just shows u what the Medea are like. Tut tut,” he said. Fury, WBA and WBO champion, had been due to defend his titles against Wladimir Klitschko in July but pulled out with an ankle injury.

The fight was rescheduled for this month but postponed again due to an unspecified medical condition.

Fury has tested positive for cocaine, ESPN reported last week citing a leaked letter sent by the Voluntary Anti-Doping Agency (VADA). Reuters was unable to verify details of the report.

Fury’s uncle and trainer Peter Fury said recently that the boxer was “almost at breaking point” and receiving professional help.— Reuters

Murray aims to take bite out of Djokovic’s rankings lead in China

SHANGHAI — Andy Murray begins his late-season assault on Novak Djokovic’s world number one ranking at the China Open this week hoping to take a chunk out of the 4,695-point gap separating them.

The Briton has enjoyed one of the best years of his career, winning Wimbledon and the Olympics, and could still finish the season by toppling the Serb who has been ranked number one since July 2014.

While on the face of it the gap still looks huge, Djokovic is defending far more points than Murray until the end of the season and he will not be able to defend his China title after withdrawing due to an elbow injury.

Djokovic, 29, finished last season in unstoppable form, winning in China, Shanghai and Paris before claiming the ATP Tour Finals. He has 3,800 points to defend for the rest of the season to Murray’s 1,160, meaning there is the possibility of a large swing in Murray’s direction.

Should Murray win in China and take the 500 ranking points on offer he would move 1,000 points closer to Djokovic ahead of Shanghai where he lost to Djokovic in the semis a year ago.

Murray has spoken of his desire to become the first British player to reach number one since computer rankings were introduced and with Djokovic apparently suffering injury niggles he has a realistic shot.

“I’ve never been there and it’s something I would like to do for the first time, which is maybe more of a motivation for me than some of the guys that have been there before,” he said.

“But I want to just try and finish this year strong from a personal point of view. It’s been my best season to date, and I want to try to finish it as best as I can.”

However, Murray has also had a gruelling year and needed to rest a thigh injury ahead of Beijing — a legacy of his Davis Cup exertions when he lost a five-set cliff-hanger to Argentina’s Juan Martin del Potro last month.

“I needed a break anyway and I haven’t been able to practise as much as usual coming into an event like this,” he said.

“But I feel healthy, my leg feels good. I think this week I need to be realistic with maybe how I’m going to play. I have very few days of practise coming in here and I’m not putting too much pressure on myself right now.”— Reuters

CAS to rule on Sharapova’s doping ban on Tuesday

LONDON — The verdict in Maria Sharapova’s appeal against a two-year doping ban will be announced by the Court of Arbitration for Sport (CAS) on Tuesday.

CAS said it would issue the decision at 12.00pm BST.

Five-times grand slam winner Sharapova was banned by the International Tennis Federation (ITF) in June following a positive test for the banned drug meldonium during January’s Australian Open. The former world number one from Russia is seeking to have her suspension wiped out or reduced.

She had called the ITF’s ruling “unfairly harsh” as an independent tribunal had found that she had not intentionally violating anti-doping rules.

Sharapova, 29, admitted taking meldonium during the season’s opening grand slam in Melbourne but said she had been unaware that it had been banned by the World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA).

Meldonium was added to WADA’s list of banned substances at the start of the year after mounting evidence that it boosted blood flow and enhanced athletic performance.— Reuters
