UNION Government expressed condolences yesterday for the deaths of scores of passengers after a ferry capsized in the Chindwin River, promising to carry out a probe into the deadly accident.

“A systematic investigation will be made into the accident to find the causes and take action against those who are responsible for this tragedy,” said the announcement of the government signed by President U Htin Kyaw.

The Sagaing Region government announced that it would hold a press conference on the ferry tragedy at Myathala Hall of the GAD at noon on 22 October.

The regional government has formed a fact finding mission led by Sagaing Region Police Chief Pol-Col Lu Lu Than.

The Union Government expressed its sympathy and pledged its assistance to the bereaved families. The incident occurred on 15th October in the Chindwin River in upper Myanmar.

A total of 68 passengers, including 14 men and 54 women, were confirmed dead as of 1 pm yesterday, according to authorities.

One-hundred and fifty-nine passengers survived the accident, and 80 people are still missing.

The ferry was said to be carrying about 300 passengers when it capsized, according to survivors.

According to a preliminary enquiry, the Aung Soe Moe Kyaw-2 ferry left Homalin at 10.30 am on 14 October and landed in Phaungpyin, Mawlike, Kalewa and Minkin before it capsized near Kanni after apparently hitting a rock on its way to Monywa.

Crew members had reportedly been warned about its overloading, according to survivors. Search operations are still ongoing in the downstream area of the Chindwin River.

Authorities have properly recorded the retrieved bodies and provided information to relatives. Some unclaimed bodies had to be buried after recording their information.

The sunken ferry was salvaged from the river yesterday. — Myanmar News Agency

Over 300 red and blue licence plates granted in Taunggyi for transportation of tourists

Over 300 red and blue licence plates have been granted as of 17th October under the recommendation of the Ministry of Hotels and Tourism to facilitate the transportation of tourists in Taunggyi, Southern Shan State, it is learnt.

The Road Transportation Administration Department (RTAD) issued the blue licences starting on 1st October in Taunggyi. The Hotels and Tourism Ministry has already announced that tourists must take the cars with the blue licence for transportation.

Cars with red licence plates can also transport tourists, but have a limited geographical area in which to operate. The licence plates are issued by the RTAD after certifying that the vehicles have met the set criteria to transport tourists. The car owners have to hold a "D" driving licence.

Cars with black licence plates can be used only for family and personal use, not for commercial purposes. This is the reason why many car owners apply for blue licences.

The licences are issued only after checking if the vehicles have enough capacity to transport, carry a fire extinguisher and medicines on board and provide air-conditioning. The drivers must be sober while transporting the passengers and are liable for any accidents. Traffic rules have to be strictly followed.— Mymitukha News Agency

Yusen Logistics’s refrigerated warehouse under construction in Thilawa SEZ

JAPAN-based Yusen Logistics is constructing a refrigerated warehouse in the Thilawa Special Economic Zone (SEZ) situated in Southern Yangon to facilitate the cold storage logistics infrastructure for perishable foods, it is learnt from an announcement released by Nikkei.

The company is building the warehouse on 6,200 square metres of land. The warehouse is slated to start operation in July, 2017.

The warehouse will have sophisticated temperature management, which is critical for cold storage. Foods can be stored in three different temperatures — 15C to 20C, 5C and -20C, it is learnt.

“ Myanmar looks promising, with more economic opportunities and possessing a production base”, said Shoji Murakami, the senior managing executive officer at Yusen Logisties.

The Myanmar market is quickly growing and attracting an increasing amount of foreign direct investment, but the lack of sophisticated cold storage infrastructure has caused problems for entrepreneurs dealing in perishable foods.—Mon Min

JAkarta — A suspected supporter of Islamic State attacked police in Indonesia on Thursday and wounded three of them in what appeared to be the latest violence inspired by the militant group in the world’s biggest Muslim-majority nation.

Indonesian authorities are increasingly worried about a resurgence in radicalism in Southeast Asia’s largest economy, driven in part by a new generation of militants inspired by Islamic State (IS).

Police shot and wounded the attacker after he stabbed three traffic police officers during the rush hour in Tangerang, on the outskirts of the capital, Jakarta.

An unexploded pipe bomb and a large sticker were found near the scene, police said.

“All of a sudden a man brutally attacked our officers with a sharp weapon. The perpetrator was shot in the thigh and leg,” police spokesman Roy Raffi Amar told reporters.

“We suspect the perpetrator is an ISIS sympathizer,” he added, referring to Islamic State.

The police officers and the attacker, who was born in 1994 and unemployed, were being treated in hospital.

The assault comes after a series of Islamic State-linked attacks beginning in January when four militants mounted a gun and bomb attack in Jakarta. Eight people were killed, including the militants.

Police in August arrested IS supporters plotting to launch a rocket at Singapore’s Marina Bay casino resort area using a boat from the nearby Indonesian island of Batam.

The vast majority of Indonesia’s 250 million people practice a moderate form of Islam. Small militant groups that have periodically mounted attacks against the state and foreigners have been largely disbanded or driven underground.

In Indonesia’s most serious attack, militants set off explosives at a nightclub on Bali island in 2002 killing 202 people.

Authorities believe Islamic State has more than 1,200 followers in Indonesia and nearly 400 Indonesians have left to join the group in Syria.

Police are on alert in case more Indonesians return home after Iraqi forces this week launched an offensive to take back the IS stronghold of Mosul.

“The war there is affecting our youth here,” Amir said. “We have to be vigilant about parties that are changing the mindset of our youth.” Authorities are monitoring about 40 returnees, concerned they could be linking up with existing networks, police chief Tito Karnavian told Reuters on Monday. —Reuters

Empress Michiko ‘shocked’ to see headlines on emperor’s abdication

TOKYO — Empress Michiko said in a statement released on Thursday that she was shocked and felt pain when she saw newspapers reports saying Emperor Akihito intends to relinquish the throne “while alive.”

The Imperial Household Agency usually describes the act of an emperor relinquishing the Chrysanthemum throne as a “abdication,” according to agency sources.

Empress Michiko said she heard “with awe and respect” the 82-year-old emperor’s video message in August in which he signaled his desire to abdicate out of concern that advanced age could one day stop him fulfilling his duties. “It came as a shock to me, however, to see the words written in kanji (Japanese, literally, abdicate while living) printed in such big letters on the front pages of the papers,” she said.

“It could have been because until then I had never come across this expression even in history books that, along with surprise, I briefly experienced pain upon seeing those words,” she added, adding she may have been too sensitive.

The empress was present when the emperor recorded the video message prior to its release on 8 August. The emperor said he was concerned that his age and failing health could one day mean that he cannot fulfill his constitutional role as the symbol of the state and the unity of the people.

Currently, only post-war, platform doors only, I think it would be idealistic to install at every station to prevent such accidents.

But she added, “Instead of making this a matter of platform doors only, I think it is important to consider the issue further from many aspects and for everyone to work together to create a society in which all of us support those who are affected by disasters and never leave anyone feeling left behind and alone,” she said.

The empress also expressed appreciation for the opportunity to visit the Philippines with the emperor in January to pay tribute to both Japanese and Filipinos who lost their lives in World War II.

On the Rio Olympic and Paralympic Games in the summer, the empress said she was moved by the beauty of athletes and without disabilities showing their brilliance. “I have kept many newspaper clippings of those photographs.” As a matter that has been weighing on her mind recently, the empress pointed to incidents of visually impaired people falling from platforms onto railroad tracks at train stations. The emperor expressed the opinion to his daughter-in-law that it would be idealistic for platform doors to be installed at every station to prevent such accidents.

Saying US has lost, Duterte aligns Philippines with China

BEIJING — Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte announced his “separation” from the United States on Thursday, declaring that it had “lost” and he had realigned with China as the two agreed to resolve their South China Sea dispute through talks.

Duterte made his comments in China, where he is visiting with at least 200 business people to pave the way for what he calls a new commercial alliance as relations with longtime ally the United States deteriorate.

His trade secretary, Ramon Lopez, said $13.5 billion in deals would be signed.

Duterte’s efforts to engage China, months after a tribunal ruling in the Hague over South China Sea disputes in favour of the Philippines, marks a reversal in foreign policy since the 71-year-old former mayor took office on 30 June.

“America has lost now,” Duterte told Chinese and Philippine business people at a forum in the Great Hall of the People, attended by Chinese Vice Premier Zhang Gaoli.

“I’ve realigned myself in your ideological flow and maybe I will also go to Russia to talk to (President Vladimir) Putin and tell him that there are three of us against the world - China, Philippines and Russia. It’s the only way,” he added.

“With that, in this venue, your honours, in this venue, I announce my separation from the United States,” Duterte said to applause. “I have separated from them. So I will be dependent on you for all time. But do not worry. We will also help as you help us.”

Duterte’s remarks will prompt fresh concern in the United States, where the Obama administration has seen Manila as a key ally in its “rebalance” of resources to Asia in the face of a rising China.

The administration agreed a deal with Duterte’s predecessor granting US forces rotational access to bases in the Philippines and further doubts will be raised about the future of this arrangement.

However, a White House spokesman stressed the traditional bonds between Washington and Manila when asked about Duterte’s comments and stuck to a US approach of seeking to play down the Philippine leader’s repeated attacks.

“The US-Philippines alliance is built on a 70-year history, rich people-to-people ties, including a vibrant Filipino-American diaspora, and a long list of shared security interests,” spokesman Ned Price said. “We also remain one of the Philippines’ strongest economic partners; the current stock of US foreign direct investment stands above $4.7 billion.”

China has pulled out all the stops to welcome Duterte, including a marching band complete with baton-twirling band master at the official welcoming ceremony outside the Great Hall of the People, which most visiting leaders do not get.

Approval given for $23.2 billion development project in Cambodia

PHNOM PENH — A $23.2 billion development project in southern Cambodia has been given the green light by the government, with construction set to begin in March, the head of the scheme said on Wednesday.

The first project of its kind in the country, the plans include residential, business and tourist zones, according to Cheheang Sophanna, executive director and head of international sales for Palpas Group, and will also involve recreation facilities, such as a film studio and an equestrian centre.

Sophanna said the aim is to create a world-class destination, while his company’s website describes the vision for the site in the southern province of Kampot as a “French Riviera City.”

Speaking to Kyodo News, he said the Cambodian government had given the scheme the green light on 12 October, and construction was expected to begin in March.

According to the company’s website, the site will occupy 6,056 hectares of land on the gulf of Thailand, while company documents seen by Kyodo News showed a planned smaller development in neighboring Kep Province will cover 144 hectares.

Another failed North Korea missile launch detected, likely of Musudan

SEOUL/TOKYO — North Korea on Thursday made another failed attempt to test-fire what is believed to be its intermediate-range Musudan missile following last week’s failed launch, promptly drawing further condemnation from its neighbours.

The missile was launched at around 7 am JST near the city of Kusong, North Pyongan Province, in North Korea’s northwest, but failed, according to the US Strategic Command and the South Korean military.

Regardless of whether it succeeded or failed, our government strongly condemns the (missile launch) made in violation of UN Security Council resolutions,” South Korean Foreign Ministry spokesman Cho June Hyuck said during a regular press briefing in Seoul.

In Tokyo, Japanese top government spokesman Yoshihide Suga told a press conference, “We are aware that the launch failed.” He added that Japan has lodged a stern protest with North Korea through its embassy in Beijing, strongly criticising the launch.

“North Korea’s repeated missile launches are a severe security threat compromising the peace and security of our region and the international community, and simply cannot be allowed,” Suga said.

The chief Cabinet secretary did not give details as to the missile’s trajectory or how far it may have travelled.

Japanese Foreign Minister Fumio Kishida told reporters that the North Korean act is “a serious challenge to the international community including our country.”

By What Name Should Our Country be Known?

Khin Maung Myint

WHAT should we call our country, is it Myanmar or Burma? My opinion is: “It doesn’t matter whether the colour of the cat is black or white, as long as it catches the rats it’s OK”. Thus, whether it is called Myanmar or Burma, it wouldn’t be a problem. For over half of my age I had been a Burmese from Burma. When it’s changed to Myanmar, I didn’t mind to be called a Myanmar, but the problem was I had to do a lot of explaining whenever I went abroad to attend seminars or conferences. In fact most of us were accustomed to and also comfortable with the name Burma, which had been the name of our country for centuries. Most people from abroad also knew and recognized our country as Burma and the people as Burmese or Burman. Thus I would like to call my country “Burma”.

Only over two decades ago it was changed to Myanmar. It was changed without the general consents of the people, that is, it wasn’t by holding a referendum or by a constitution, but the change was first declared in a circular and then regularized later in the constitution many years later. At that time, not only the name of the country was changed, but also the names of some cities, towns and roads too were changed. Though changing the names just like that was easy, many complications ensued.

The first problem was to change the names of the government departments, which involved the changing of the signboards, letterheads already printed on numerous official forms and receipts and even the currencies, postal and revenue stamps had to be reprinted, which caused much inconveniences and unnecessary expenses.

Here, I would like to mention one such inconvenience, which the Burma Five Star Line (BFSL) had to face as the result of the name changes. As the ships of the BFSL travel all over the world their names, the name of the home port and the initials of the company name had to be written, on the ships’ hull and funnel, in English. When the circular ordering the changes to be made came out, all the ships including those out at sea were given instructions to carry out immediately. Thus, the ships had to urgently repaint the name BFSL as MSFL (Myanmar Five Star Line), the name MV Bassein, for example had to be changed to MV Pathein and the home port Rangoon had to be changed to Yangon, while still underway at sea. As most of the ships of the BFSL were given the names of the cities, most had to undergo changes. When they entered the foreign ports they encountered many problems and there were much explanations to do and wrangling with the port authorities as the latter parties were not yet been notified of the changes.

Of course there are a few countries, which changed their names. For example, Camphuca for Cambodia (later switched back to Cambodia), Korea for Manchuria, Malaysia for Malaya, Sri Lanka for Ceylon, Taiwan for Formosa, Thailand for Siam, and Zimbabwe for Rhodesia, and etc. Different countries that changed their names might have their own reasons and I have no intention to go into detail discussions. As for our country, there may be many reasons, but I’m in no position to know the real reason behind the changing of the name.

At this juncture, I would like to draw the readers’ attention as to how we came to be known as Burma. According to some historical records found on the Internet, during the 9th century AD, the Mongolians invaded our country and put an end to the Pyu City states. Among them was a tribe called the Bara. When the main Mongolian forces returned to their country, they left the Bara people behind to administer their occupied regions. With the passage of time, the Pyu’s identity faded away as the results of the intermarriages with the Baramas and a new race known as Bamaras emerged. Those Bamaras were supposed to have founded the Bagan dynasty. This piece of information may be contradictory to some other records, because different scholars have different opinions or theories on this matter. However, I chose to accept this theory as it makes the most plausible explanation of the emergence of the Bamar race.

Some historical records mentioned the name Miramna, also known as Barama, as a tribe that accompanied the Mongolian army, and thus there was a possibility that the name Myanmar also could have been derived from that name. However, I couldn’t find any mention of the name Myanmar in the old records of those periods. I found that almost all the chronicles of those periods recorded the name Bamar only.

Thus it can be deduced that our country had been known as the Bamar Naing Ngan since the Bagan period. Thus when the British annexed our country they called her Burma, in their accent. Different people have their own peculiar way of pronouncing the word Bamar. Indians call it Bramar (bramark), the Japanese Biruram (hiruram), the Thai word for us is Phrama (prra), and Birmane, Birmania or Birmin by some Europeans. All these examples indicate that the name Burma is appropriate when written or spoken in English and Bamar Naing Ngan (southeast) when expressed in Burmese, the official language.

Here, it would need more clarification as to the naming of a country. Almost all countries chose the name of the majority race as the name for their country though there may be multitude of ethnic races. If we don’t want to call our country Burma, because it appeared to represent the Bamar race, which race will we choose to represent our country’s name? It would only be proper to respect the wishes of the founders of our country who had chosen the name Bamar Naing Ngan since her birth, many centuries ago.

Thus in conclusion please allow me to repeat what I had mentioned at the beginning: “It doesn’t matter whether the colour of our cat is black or white, as long as it catches the rats it should be alright for everyone”. In the same trend, whether the country is called Myanmar or Burma, as long as it is peaceful and prosperous it would benefit the citizens. It shouldn’t be a big issue or let it become an obstacle in our strive towards a peaceful and prosperous nation, which we could rightfully claim as the Shwe Naing Ngan, the Golden Land. As for me, I prefer Burma, the traditionally accepted name, to Myanmar. ********

Efficient Police Force Vital to public security

Opinion

Myint Win Thein

THE police are essential to civil stability and tranquility. When the police are efficient, the public can live safely and peacefully. This is because the most important responsibility of a police force is to enforce laws and to provide public security. When the police are inefficient, public security is jeopardised.

We have seen many inci- dents in which the police of ten fell victim to resistance from lawbreakers. About a year ago, a murder suspect attacked and killed a police officer with knife who tried to arrest him in a township in Yangon, the largest city in Myanmar. A few months later, more police officers were attacked and killed by another fugitive in Thanbyuzayat, a satellite town of Yangon. Since then, public security has been deteriorating in the entire country and more crimes of a cruel nature are occurring and being discussed. Public security is dwindling. City dwellers feel unsafe even in their homes behind multiple-locked doors in broad daylight. In the countryside, where only a few policemen are deployed, the situation may be even worse. The rural security situation was highlighted by recent violent raids on border police posts in northern Rakhine State.

The police were taken aback by the violent attacks, and a number of policemen sacrificed their lives for their country and many others were injured. Many weapons were looted and local people had nowhere to turn to for help. Although the police were overpowered by the violent attackers, one of the weaknesses of the police is the lack of combat readiness, according to high-ranking police officers. There may be many reasons behind the tragedy but the first victim of the inefficiency is the public security. Local people in the attacked areas are feeling unsafe even in their village. It is of great relief to learn that India, during the State Counsellor’s recent visit, agreed to support Myanmar in creating police training infrastructure and to share expertise in developing training in anti-terrorism, forensics and cyber security. An efficient police force is essential to stability and security of the people.

UNFC likely to take part in political dialogues

Efforts are being speeded up to pave the way for non-signatories to the Nationwide Ceasefire Agreement (NCA) to sign the agreement as only signatories to the NCA are allowed to participate in the national-level political dialogues, according to the Secretary of UPDJC Dr Salai Hlyan Hmone Sar Khaung, a representative of the ethnic armed groups.

“Under the provisions 21 and 22, it is necessary for participants to be signatories to the NCA. Political dialogues are based on the NCA. Negotiations the DPN, which represents the UNFC, are underway so that they can sign the NCA,” he said.

Dr Salai Hlyan Hmone Sar Khaung made the statement on the third day of the fourth framework review meeting for national-level political dialogues held at the National Reconciliation and Peace Centre in Yangon.

“Representatives of the DPN submitted their talking points and they said that they are trying their utmost to participate in the process. They requested us to understand their situation. I think the negotiation will conclude tomorrow”, Dr Salai Hlan Mhon Zarkhon said.

He also added that it is necessary for the UPDJC to approve the outcome of the framework review meeting.

National-level political dialogues are scheduled to start in November and terms of reference for them have been drawn.

Yesterday’s meeting was attended by 14 representatives of the government, 17 representatives of the ethnic armed groups and 14 representatives of political parties.

Archaeological excavation being conducted in Sri Ksetra

This month, an excavation was made at Khin Ba Mound in Sri Ksetra, listed as a World Heritage Site, located near Pyay Township in Bago Region, where golden parchments were discovered.

The major purpose of the project is to discover original artifacts and restore the structure, said U Kyaw Myo Win, deputy director of the Sri Ksetra based Department of Archaeology and Museum.

During the excavation process, ancient objects including gold coins, gold remains and earthen sculptures were found on the archaeological site, he added.

The authorities have also carried out maintenance works covering cleaning moss that spreads over some parts of the ancient structures with the use of cleaning chemicals during this budget year.

Khin Ba Mound was excavated in colonial era in 1926-27 when hundreds of ancient objects including seven golden parchments, throne made of stone and statues were found. Now, those ancient materials have been displayed at Yangon’s National Museum and Sri Ksetra Museum for public observation.

The government accelerates archaeological excavation, research and preservation at cultural sites after the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) designated three Pyu ancient cities—Hantin, Beikthano and Sri Ksetra—as UNESCO World Heritage Sites on 22 June 2014.

Women in Asia-Pacific express dismay over US presidential campaign

TOKYO/TAIPEI — Women in the Asia-Pacific region expressed dismay on Thursday about the US presidential campaign’s focus on the emotional topic of sexual harassment, saying it shows both democracy and the rights of women in America have some way to go.

In a fiery final debate on Wednesday night in Las Vegas, Republican nominee Donald Trump accused Democrat rival Hillary Clinton’s campaign of orchestrating a series of accusations by women who said the businessman had made unwanted sexual advances.

Clinton, who would be America’s first female president, said the women came forward after Trump said he had never made unwanted advances on women. His denial came after a 2005 video surfaced earlier this month in which he was recorded bragging about groping women against their will.

Hsiao Bi-khim, a lawmaker from Taiwan’s ruling Democratic Progressive Party, said she found it “rather incredible” Trump had survived politically in the face of the allegations.

If a candidate in Taiwan was caught on tape making similar remarks, “I don’t think such a person would survive a presidential campaign,” she said.

Taiwan in January elected its first woman president, Tsai Ing-wen, and on gender equality at least, appears more advanced politically than the United States, she said.

“No only have we elected a woman president, but we have a higher percentage of women who are independently involved in politics and in leadership positions,” Hsiao said.

Japan’s former minister for gender equality, Kuniko Inoguchi, said the rest of the world has been dismayed to see the US campaign devolve into “a downgraded debate on women’s issues” and it wouldn’t be happening if Clinton were a man running for president.

“So when the glass ceiling breaks, there are a lot of injuries that a woman must bear,” Inoguchi said.

Mari Miura, a Sophia University political science professor specializing in women’s issues, said Japanese politicians have also sparked outrage for comments de-meaning women in the past.

“We hear such comments constantly from Japanese conservative men,” she said. “There are so many incidents that people get used to it and it’s easier to let it go.”

A study commissioned by Japan’s Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare, published in March, found 28.7 per cent of women had experienced some form of sexual harassment, and 40 per cent of those said they had experienced unwanted touching.—Reuters

Major Russian naval deployment to intensify Aleppo assault: NATO diplomat

BRUSSELS — Russian warships off the coast of Norway are carrying fighter bombers that are likely to reinforce a final assault on the besieged Syrian city of Aleppo in two weeks, a senior NATO diplomat said on Wednesday, citing Western intelligence.

The fleet passed by the Norwegian city of Bergen on Wednesday, the diplomat said, while Russian media has said it will move through the English Channel, past Gibraltar and into the Mediterranean Sea to the Syrian coast.

“They are deploying all of the Northern fleet and much of the Baltic fleet in the largest surface deployment since the end of the Cold War,” the diplomat said on condition of anonymity.

“This is not a friendly port call. In two weeks, we will see a crescendo of air attacks on Aleppo as part of Russia’s strategy to declare victory there,” the diplomat said.

Photos of the vessels have been released by the Norwegian military, taken on Monday. A Norwegian newspaper quoted the head of the Norwegian military intelligence service saying the ships involved “will probably play a role in the deciding battle for Aleppo”.

Russia, which supports Syrian President Bashar al-Assad with an air campaign against the Western rebels in the devastated eastern part of Aleppo, has said the deployment will target Islamic State militants in Syria.

But the NATO diplomat said the additional military firepower was designed to drive out or destroy the 8,000 rebels in Aleppo, the only large city still in opposition hands, and allow Russian President Vladimir Putin to start a withdrawal.—Reuters

BUDAPEST — A Hungarian man has been arrested in western Hungary on suspicion of carrying out a bomb attack in central Budapest last month which police said was aimed at two police officers who were injured by the blast, local media reported on Thursday.

Police have said they regarded the attack on one of the capital’s busiest thoroughfares as a case of attempted murder and that there was no sign it had been carried out by a foreign militant organisation.

Private news website Origo reported the arrest, citing unnamed sources, and other media said the suspect had been detained in the western county of Zala by the anti-terror police TEK.

Hungary’s anti-terror police and the chief prosecutor’s office on Thursday did not immediately reply to an emailed request for comment from Reuters.—Reuters

LONDON — Scottish First Minister Nicola Sturgeon has published a draft bill for a second independence referendum on Thursday as she ramps up the pressure on the British government to make sure Scotland’s voice is heard in Brexit talks.

Scots voted by a large margin to remain in the European Union in June this year and Britain as a whole voted to leave.

Sturgeon, the fervently pro-EU leader of the ruling Scottish National Party (SNP) argues that the prospect of Scotland being taken out of Europe against its will validates a possible re-run of the 2014 independence referendum, in which 55 per cent of voters opted to remain in the United Kingdom.

Although she has said she regards a second referendum as “highly likely”, Thursday’s bill is merely for formal consultation and sets no date for another vote.—Reuters

Djordjevic: Cooperation with UN for further reforms

BELGRADE — Cooperation with the UN and its specialised agencies and bodies has been of great significance for furthering the reform process, which is especially important for Serbia’s progress towards EU membership, noted Minister of Defence Zoran Djordjevic at a meeting with UN Resident Coordinator and UNDP Resident Representative for Serbia Irena Vojackova Sollorano.

The framework of the development partnership for the period until 2020 was presented in order to define future cooperation, a statement said.

They also noted that the cooperation of the Ministry of Defence with UNDP and UN Women was invaluable for implementing the National Action Plan for the UN Security Council Resolution 1325 on Women, Peace and Security in Serbia. Iran denies ‘possible role’ in attacking US warships in Red Sea

TEHRAN — Iran’s Foreign Ministry spokesman on Thursday denied any possible role in recent attacks on US warships in the Red Sea near Yemen waters, official IRNA news agency reported.

The spokesman Bahram Qasemi was responding to allegations by a US army official who said Iran may have played a role in recent missile attacks against US warships in the Red Sea.

On Wednesday, Joseph Votel, commander of US Central Command, said that Iran may be behind recent missile attacks by Shiite Yemeni Houthi militants on US Navy ships.

“I do think that Iran is playing a role in some of this,” said Votel.

“They have a relationship with the Houthis, so I do suspect there is a role in that.”—Xinhua

Russian rocketeers conduct tactical exercises in Western Military District

MOSCOW — The crew from the mobile short-range ballistic missile system Iskander-M have conducted tactical exercises at the firing field of Luga in Russia’s Western Military District, authorities said on Thursday.

According to the District, over 100 servicemen and over 20 pieces of equipment were involved in the training.

During the drills, the abilities of the commanders to make independent decisions in different situations was also checked.—Xinhua
Four-way talks move ahead on Ukraine, scant progress on Syria

BERLIN — Germany and France pressed Russian President Vladimir Putin to extend a pause in air strikes in Syria and halt the “criminal” bombardment of civilians, but Putin said Tuesday that four-way talks aimed at ending violence in eastern Ukraine made some progress.

“We are talking here about criminal activities, about crimes against the civilians,” German Chancellor Angela Merkel told reporters after what she described as a difficult discussion with Putin about the crisis in Syria.

French President Francois Hollande used the phrase “war crimes,” and both leaders criticised Russia for attacking the civilian population under the pretext of fighting terrorism.

“We agree that terrorism must be combated, but not at the price that 300,000 people there must lose their lives and suffer without all necessary supplies,” Merkel said, reflecting growing concern in Europe and the United States about Russia’s support for Syrian President Bashar al-Assad.

Merkel and Hollande will discuss the talks at an EU summit meeting on Thursday evening, with the bloc due to consider whether to impose new sanctions on Russians over their bombing in the besieged Syrian city of Aleppo.

While there is no immediate consensus for more sanctions, Britain and France, with support from eastern and Nordic countries, said they could push for them in the coming weeks if Russia continues to bomb the rebel-held east of the city.

Merkel said she could not rule out sanctions, but said Thursday’s EU meeting would be focused on helping civilians.

“We made it very, very clear tonight that Russia has a great responsibility that extends far beyond the bombardment,” she said.

“It will decide whether humanitarian supplies can be delivered (and) whether a political process can be begun.”

Putin told a separate news conference that Moscow had proposed to speed up adoption of a new constitution in Syria to facilitate future elections, and said Russia was ready to extend an eight-hour pause in air strikes in Syria.

He underscored the importance of “eradicating terrorism” and called on the Islamic State, which has cooperation with Al Nusra Front militants from what he called “the healthy opposition” in Syria.

Hollande acknowledged Putin’s offer of extending the ceasefire, but said a longer pause in bombing was needed to bring in much-needed humanitarian supplies.

“A respite of a few hours makes no sense,” he told a joint news conference with Merkel after the talks.

“The main point is that the population of Aleppo cannot continue to live in conditions that are unbearable.”

Merkel had insisted that Putin agree to discuss Syria on the sidelines of the so-called “Normandy Format” meeting on Ukraine.

It was the Russian leader’s first trip to Germany since 2013.

The meeting took place hours after news emerged that Russian warplanes off the coast of Syria were preparing to reinforce a brutal assault on Aleppo.— Reuters

ISTANBUL/BEIRUT — Turkish jets pounded a US-backed group of Kurdish-led militia fighters in northern Syria with more than 20 air strikes overnight, highlighting the conflicting agendas of the two NATO allies in an increasingly complex battlefield.

The jets targeted positions of the Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) in three villages northeast of the city of Aleppo which the SDF had captured from Islamic State, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said late on Wednesday.

The Turkish military confirmed its warplanes had carried out 26 air strikes on areas recently taken by the Kurdish YPG militia, the strongest force in the SDF, and that it had killed between 160 and 200 fighters.

The British-based Observatory monitoring group reported a much lower toll of 11 dead and dozens wounded. Officials of the Kurdish-led administration that controls much of northeastern Syria said dozens had been killed.

The United States has backed the Kurdish-led forces in their fight against Islamic State, infuriating Ankara, which sees the YPG as an extension of Kurdish PKK militants who have waged a three-decade insurgency in southeastern Turkey.

Turkey fears the YPG will try to connect three de facto autonomous Kurdish cantons that have emerged during the five-year war to create a Kurdish-run enclave in northern Syria, stoking the separatist ambitions of Kurds on its own soil.

The air strikes, the heaviest against the YPG since Turkey launched a military incursion into Syria two months ago, came hours after President Tayyip Erdogan warned that Turkey could act alone in rooting out its enemies abroad.

They also came ahead of an expected visit by US Defence Secretary Ash Carter to Ankara on Friday.

“From now on we will not wait for problems to come knocking on our door, we will not wait until the blade is against our bone and skin, we will not wait for terrorist organisations to come back at us,” Erdogan said in a speech on Wednesday.

The Observatory named the bombed villages as al-Hasyia, Um al-Qara and Um Hosh. They lie around 30 km (19 miles) west of al-Bab, the last big town held by Islamic State in northwest Syria.

Turkey, a main backer of the insurgency against President Bashar al-Assad, entered the Syrian conflict in August, using its armor and air power to help Free Syrian Army rebel groups take territory near the border held by Islamic State.

But its intervention also aimed to prevent the SDF from gaining more ground.

The SDF has been moving eastwards towards al-Bab, a town that the Turkish-backed rebel forces also want to capture from Islamic State.

The Turkish military said its air strikes had destroyed nine buildings, one armored vehicle and four other vehicles that belonged to the YPG.

LAS VEGAS — Republican candidate Donald Trump on Wednesday would not commit to accepting the outcome of the 8 November US presidential election if he loses, challenging a cornerstone of American democracy and sending shockwaves across the political spectrum.

Trump’s refusal, which his Democratic rival Hillary Clinton called “horrifying,” was the standout remark of the pair’s final debate and ratcheted up claims he has made for weeks that the election was rigged against him.

Asked by moderator Chris Wallace whether Trump would not commit to a peaceful transition of power, the businessman-politician replied: “What I’m saying is that I will tell you at the time. I’ll keep you in suspense. Ok?” Trump’s statement may appeal to his anti-establishment followers, but it was unlikely to reverse opinion polls that show him losing, including in key states that will decide the election.

“That is not the way our democracy works,” Clinton said during the debate. “We’ve been around for 240 years. We’ve had free and fair elections. We’ve accepted the outcomes when we may not have liked them. And that is what must be expected of anyone standing on a debate stage during a general election.”

Later she told reporters: “What he said tonight is part of his whole effort to blame somebody else for where he is in his campaign.” A CNN/ORC poll said 52 per cent thought Clinton, the former US secretary of state, won the debate while 39 per cent said Trump, making his first run at public office, was the victor.

Mexico’s peso currency, seen as a measure of Trump’s prospects, rose to its highest level in six weeks at the end of the debate, suggesting growing investor confidence of a Clinton victory. Trump has vowed to build a wall on the border with Mexico to keep out illegal immigrants and has said he would make Mexico pay for it. — Reuters

French police defy government in snowballing protest over lawlessness

PARIS — Hundreds of French police officers protested in Paris and other cities overnight to denounce what they say are insufficient resources to fight mounting lawlessness, defying government demands that they stop the unauthorized demonstrations.

Six months after an election, the protest, now in its third day, has put President Francois Hollande’s Socialist government on the defensive at a time when security forces are struggling to combat the threat of further terrorist attack.

Political opponents have seized on the discontent to accuse it of letting violent crime and everyday lawlessness proliferate despite a large police recruitment drive.

“I understand the anger of the police,” conservative former president Nicolas Sarkozy said. “I’ve never seen such an erosion of authority in this country.” Sarkozy, who is campaigning to become president again, told Europe 1 radio.

In Paris, hundreds of police officers protested at the Place de la Republique square and the Champs Elysees avenue, scene of similar protests earlier this week that have since spread to other cities.

Thousands of police and soldiers have been deployed to boost security at airports, train stations and schools after a string of militant Islamist attacks in which more than 230 people have died in the past two years.

Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve promised police unions at a meeting Wednesday that local policing needs would be reviewed, but highlighted that his government had recruited 9,000 police to fill most of some 12,000 posts axed under Sarkozy’s 2007-2012 administration.

While police officers are allowed to protest like anybody else under French law, codes of conduct for law enforcement employees prohibit them from doing so during work hours, or with the use of police equipment such as official cars and uniforms.

Latin America’s left set to suffer new blow at Chilean local polls

VALPARAISO/SANTIAGO — Chilean voters are expected to shift right in local elections this weekend, dealing a blow to the center-left governing coalition and serving a further setback to Latin America’s already struggling leftist movement.

But as Chileans prepare to vote for mayors and local councils this Sunday, it appears the left’s era of dominance is drawing to a close, with likely consequences for next year’s presidential election.

A series of high-profile corruption scandals among politicians, in a country that prides itself on its probity, has angered Chileans, and both the government and opposition have seen approval ratings drop into the teens.

That anger will hurt Bachelet’s coalition the most, analysts say, as the right would win, “The traditional political system, as we’ve known it, will cease to exist,” said center-left lawmaker Pepe Auth.

But few Chileans are enthusiastic about the right-wing opposition, either, and new parties are threatening to make a splash on the domestic political scene.

The number of official parties has increased to 32 from 15 in the last election cycle, according to Chile’s electoral service, most of them left of centre.

Today’s voters aren’t going to move from one party to another; they’re going from the parties to no affiliation at all.”

Cher goes classic for new tour starting in Las Vegas

LOS ANGELES — Veteran singer and performer Cher is not slowing down at 70, bringing her catalog of classic pop hits to a new North American residency show early next year.

The singer announced her “Classic Cher” tour on Tuesday, which will open in February for three weeks at the Park Theater in Las Vegas’ Monte Carlo venue, move to Maryland in March before returning to Las Vegas in July.

“You try to take the most important things from each decade and you try to distill them into a story about yourself and you try to do it with film clips and music and movement and costume and then you make it as entertaining as you can,” Cher told Reuters.

The Oscar and Grammy-winning performer, known for her eccentric and flamboyant costumes and her sultry vocals, has adopted numerous musical genres over her career spanning five decades, dabbling in dance and pop to rock and folk sounds.

Her hits over the years have included “Bang Bang (My Baby Shot Me Down),” “If I Could Turn Back Time,” “The Shoop Shoop Song” and “Believe.”

She has also starred in a number of high-profile films including 1987’s “Moonstruck,” for which she won the best actress Oscar.

Although the singer has performed thousands of times, she said she still suffers from stage fright.

“Right before I go on, I always want my mother,” she said.

“I’m like ‘I want my mother’ but then you go on ... and then you go ‘This isn’t quite as bad as I thought’ and then when the end of the first song happens, it’s like ‘oh, this is kind of good’ and then it gets better and better.” —Reuters

Scorsese says new film explores persecution of Christians in Edo era

TOKYO — American film director Martin Scorsese said Wednesday the making of his upcoming historical drama “Silence” has been an obsession since he read a Japanese novel of the same name nearly 30 years ago.

In a press conference in Tokyo, the 73-year-old director said he is “a great admirer” of the works of Japanese author Shusaku Endo, whose 1966 novel “Silence” provided the film’s inspiration.

The adaptation follows two 17th century Portuguese Jesuit missionaries who travel to Nagasaki, southwestern Japan, in the early Edo era when Christianity was banned and people of the faith were persecuted by the government.

Scorsese, who read the novel in 1988, said, “Endo’s work along with my interest in Catholicism and my basis in the Catholic church has kept me interested and focused on making this film.”

The director was drawn to the novel particularly because it depicts “the difference in the cultures, the meeting of the cultures, and the clash (between them),” said Scorsese, who is most famous for his films “Taxi Driver” and “Raging Bull,” released in the late 1970s and early 1980s. The film is scheduled for a limited release in the United States on 23 December. In Japan, it will be released nationwide on 21 January 2017.

In his basement, son designs prosthetic arm for father in Belarus

MINSK — Sergei Galtsev, a Soviet army captain at the time, lost his right arm in an accident when he was 26. Two years ago he teamed up with engineer Sergei Arefyev to develop an artificial arm. The video of its final tests hit almost a million views on YouTube, with the partners making all the designs and software available on the internet for free.

“We did not patent it as it made more sense to spend money on development,” Oleg said.

“It’s like Lego, designed for people who are not at ease with electronics: just put the parts together. If I managed it, then others can do it, too.”

In a country better known for its Soviet-era collectivized farming and run by President Alexander Lukashenko since 1994, the software industry is thriving. Belarus’s 54 universities turn out 4,000 software engineers every year.

The prosthetic arm was created in a small workshop in the basement of a residential building in Minsk. Some parts were created using a 3D-printer, some were bought on the internet.

Galtsev and Arefyev say their design is 10 times cheaper than $15,000 mechanical prostheses from big manufacturers, although it lacks sensor controls.

Sergei Galtsev presents the largest book ever devoted to his art on Tuesday, a limited-edition volume costing $2,500 that spans more than 60 years of work by one of Britain’s most influential British artists of the 20th century.

Hockney, 79, at the opening news conference of the Frankfurt Book Fair, spoke however of his newfound passion for drawing on the Apple iPad, and before that the iPhone.

“I’ve always liked to draw. The computer doesn’t stop you drawing...I’ve noticed,” he said, showing speeded-up video of his process of drawing flowers, friends and the Eiffel Tower. “Who would have thought the telephone would bring back drawing?”

Book fairs continue to be a driving force in the $105 billion global publishing market, which is stabilizing after years in which ebooks — with their lower production and distribution costs — ate into the profits of the traditional book trade.

This year, more than 7,100 exhibitors from more than 100 countries are expected at the Frankfurt Book Fair, the world’s biggest.

Born in Bradford, England in 1937, Hockney studied at the Royal College of Art from 1957-62. He cemented his reputation with the “Young Contemporaries” exhibition in London in 1960, before moving to Los Angeles in 1974.—Reuters

Hockney presents ‘Bigger Book’ at world’s largest book fair

FRANKFURT — David Hockney presented the largest book ever devoted to his art on Tuesday, a limited-edition volume costing $2,500 that spans more than 60 years of work by one of the most influential British artists of the 20th century.

“David Hockney: A Bigger Book” — a collaboration with publisher Taschen — weighs 35 kg (77 pounds), measures 50 by 70 cm (20 by 28 inches) when closed and comes with its own custom-made stand.

SYDNEY — Australia’s annual “Sculpture by the Sea” exhibition got under way on Tuesday with more than 100 giant figures looming along the coastline between Bondi and Tamarama beaches near Sydney.

The exhibition showcases both Australian and international artists and will stop beachgoers in their sandy tracks with sculptures such as a red flipflop sandal and a dismembered rhinoceros with its tusk.

The event, which began in 1997 and is free to the public, received close to 500 submissions this year from sculptors in 27 countries around the world.

It runs until 6 November and is expected to attract thousands of visitors working on their tan amid the huge sculptures.—Reuters

Revenue in South Korean duty free shops hits record high on rising foreign tourists

SEOUL — Revenue in South Korean duty free shops hit a record high on the back of a rising number of foreign tourists visiting the country, customs data showed on Thursday.

Revenue of 50 South Korean duty free stores posted a combined 8.93 trillion won (7.93 billion US dollars) for the first nine months of this year, up 36.4 percent from the same period of last year, according to the Korea Customs Service (KCS).

Given the January-September figure, this year’s total revenue in duty free shops is expected to reach almost 12 trillion won, surpassing the previous high of 9.2 trillion won tallied in 2015.

Downtown duty free shops recorded 6.4 trillion won in revenue in the cited period, accounting for 72 percent of the total. The country has 22 downtown duty free stores in major cities such as the capital Seoul, the southern port city of Busan and the southern resort island of Jeju.

Duty free stores in airports and ports posted revenue of 2.08 trillion won, taking up 23 percent. Designated stores made up 5 percent of the total sales.

Per-capita expenditure by foreigners in duty free shops averaged 350 US dollars, more than tripling the 106 dollars spent by local customers.—Yonhap
Ozil nets hat-trick as Arsenal thrash Ludogorets 6-0

LONDON — Mesut Ozil applied the gloss to a ruthless Arsenal display with a second-half hat-trick in a 6-0 hammering of Ludogorets that put the Gunners on the brink of the Champions League knock-out rounds on Wednesday.

Arsenal were cantering against the Bulgarian champions thanks to sublime first-half goals from Alexis Sanchez and Theo Walcott and a strike straight from Alexis Sanchez and Theo Walcott were both substituted but Ozil stayed on, first converting substitute Lucas Perez’s low cross, then burrying a volley to become the fifth Arsenal player to score a Champions League hat-trick.

“Ozil has got the taste to score goals,” said Aaron Ramsey.

“Without him we cannot win the battle, he is a great player,” added Laurent Koscielny.

Hot Costa out to spoil Mourinho’s Chelsea return

LONDON — Jose Mourinho will always have a place in the hearts of Chelsea’s faithful but his former charges are hoping to make him suffer when he returns to Stamford Bridge as manager of Manchester United on Sunday.

Two days before being sacked in December a doomed Mourinho spoke of a “betrayal” of his work by some of the players who had propelled Chelsea to the Premier League title the previous season.

Fingers were pointed at Diego Costa, among others, and the Span striker’s huge dip in form was a contributing factor to the Portuguese tactician’s bitter exit.

Costa has started this season like the marauding forward Mourinho signed from Atletico Madrid, scoring seven goals in eight Premier League games, and he will be relishing the high-charged atmosphere expected on Sunday.

The visit to Stamford Bridge could hardly have come at a worse time for a United side who have won only one of their last five Premier League games to stall what had been a promising beginning to the Mourinho reign.

Fifth-placed Chelsea have also had a whole week to prepare following their demolition of champions Leicester City last weekend while United have been working overtime.

Mourinho’s new team drew 0-0 at Liverpool on Monday and will play Turkish club Fenerbahce in the Europa League on Thursday before they can fully focus on the visit to west London.

No wonder Mourinho, whose side are seventh in the table, said it was a time for digging in.

“This is not the week where we were expecting to close the distances to the top of the league. This is the week we have to keep contact with them,” he told the club’s website (www.manutd.com).

“Then we will arrive at the moment where we win three, four or five matches in a row and we will be there fighting with almost everybody for the title.”

It is not the first time Mourinho, who won two Premier League titles for Chelsea before his first sacking in 2007, will sit in the away dugout at Stamford Bridge. — Reuters
