Second round of national drug policy consultations completed in Myanmar

THE second round of inter-agency consultations on a new national drug policy have concluded this week in Nay Pyi Taw. The consultations come on the back of high-level discussions between the Government of Myanmar and the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) in late June on strengthening Myanmar’s response to the production, trafficking and use of illicit drugs, and a subsequent first round that took place in mid-October.

The sessions—a third round is planned between 21 and 28 November—have been organized by the Ministry of Home Affairs, Myanmar Police Force (MPF) Central Committee for Drug Abuse Control (CCDAC) and UNODC, focusing on prevention, treatment and rehabilitation, law enforcement and supply reduction, alternative development, and new and cross cutting challenges.

As MPF Brigadier-General Kyaw Win, Commander of the Drug Enforcement Division and Joint Secretary of CCDAC, stated during the first round of consultations, Myanmar drug control policy has “traditional- ly focused on supply reduction and law enforcement, which has led to limited results”. A comprehensive national drug control policy that is fit for the times is urgently required, not only because of the limited results of the previous policy, but because the challenges Myanmar is currently facing are significant, including areas of high and potentially rising opium poppy cultivation and heroin production, increases in methamphetamine production and trafficking, cross-border precursor chemical trafficking, and increasing drug use and associated harms.

In addition to the five thematic areas being prioritized, the Government of Myanmar is also emphasizing cooperation with neighbouring countries of the region to deal with the transnational nature of organized drug crime, and the significant two-way trade of precursors being trafficked into the country, and drugs being trafficked out. The priority for regional cooperation—emphasizing cooperation with ASEAN, China and India.

Drug policy is not an isolated field. The Government of Myanmar has signaled that the coming national drug policy will address cross-cutting issues including public health, human rights and the needs of women and children, and it will also contribute to sustainable development. The approach taken by the Government of Myanmar with the support of UNODC is also intended to contribute to several of the 2030 Sustainable Development Goals or SDGs. Olivier Lermet, Regional Advisor on Drugs and Health and HIV/AIDS, emphasized during the discussions, “different aspects of the policy need to be looked at together, and implementation will require engagement of many parts of the Government of Myanmar including those more traditionally aligned with social and economic development plans. While the Myanmar Police Force will maintain a leadership role, it will mean a much greater role for health and local authorities.” Mr. Lermet further emphasized that the coming update of the 1993 Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances Law in 2017 will complement the new policy.

Aside from organizing the three rounds of consultation rounds, the Government of Myanmar and UNODC will partner to undertake a national drug use survey in 2017 to better understand the nature and extent of drug use and associated health risks and harms.

The combination of drug policy and law reform, and ongoing alternative development work in Shan State, regional cooperation, the introduction of community based drug treatment and harm reduction standards and services, and a first ever national drug use survey, will contribute to a renewed approach to managing the drug situation. Ultimately the intention is to reduce illicit drug production and transnational trafficking, while alleviating social problems and improving the health of people and communities across the country.—UNODC

Japan now paying ‘enough’ for hosting US forces: defence minister

TOKYO — Japan is now paying “enough” for the cost of stationing US forces in the country, Defence Minister Tomomi Inada said on Friday, though she was silent on how the government would respond if the next US administration led by Donald Trump demands an increase in Japan’s budget.

“I believe it is enough. We are bearing the costs of what we ought to pay at present,” Inada told a press conference, referring to the nearly 200 billion yen ($1.9 billion) in so-called host-nation support paid every year.

Attention is growing in Japan to how the Japan-US alliance may be influenced under the presidency of Trump, who has called for Japan and other US allies to pay more to toward the cost of stationing US forces there and even threatened to pull troops out of the countries unless they do so.

Asked by a reporter whether Japan will reject any US requests to increase the host-nation support, Inada said, “I’m not in a position to answer a hypothetical question.”

The defence minister, meanwhile, highlighted the significance of the US forces stationed in Japan amid the tough regional security environment.

“The Japan-US alliance is the linchpin of our country’s security and the US military presence in our country is important not only for our defence but also for the peace and stability of the Asia-Pacific region,” she said.

The host-nation support, which began in fiscal 1978, covers various expenses such as salaries for workers and utilities at US military facilities and is shouldered voluntarily by Japan.

Strong Japan-India ties can help stabilise the world, says Modi

TOKYO — Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi on Friday praised the “growing convergence” of views between his nation and Japan, saying strong ties will enable them to play a stabilising role in Asia.

Modi is in Japan to sign a landmark nuclear energy pact and strengthen India-Japan’s alliance, which is the linchpin of the United States’ efforts to develop security ties with Asian powerhouses.

“America First” campaign promise, the US administration under President Donald Trump’s election has raised concerns about a reduced US engagement in the region — an approach that could draw Modi and Japan’s counterpart Shinzo Abe closer.

Modi told Japanese business leaders that the 21st century is Asia’s century, urging them to invest in India.

“The growing convergence of views between India and Japan and our special strategic and global partnership have the capacity to drive the regional economy and development, and stimulate global growth,” he said.

“Strong India and strong Japan will not only enrich our two nations, it will also be a stabilising factor in Asia and the world.”

The nuclear agreement, which Modi and Abe are set to sign later in the day, follows a similar one with the United States in 2008 which gave India access to nuclear technology after decades of isolation, a step seen as the first big move to build India into a regional counter-weight to China.

The Yomiuri newspaper said the main accord will likely be accompanied by a separate document stipulating that Japan, the only country to have suffered a nuclear attack, will suspend nuclear cooperation if India conducts a nuclear test. Initially, Japan wanted that inserted into the agreement itself, but India resisted, it said.

India has declared a moratorium on such testing since its last explosion in 1998.

The two countries have also been trying to close a deal on the supply of amphibious rescue aircraft US-2 to the Indian navy, which would be one of Japan’s first sales of military equipment since Abe lifted a 50-year ban on arms exports.

Thailand’s crown prince returns from abroad for official duties: sources

Bangkok — Thailand’s Crown Prince Maha Vajiralongkorn returned to Bangkok on Friday, just weeks before he is due to ascend the throne, four senior military sources with knowledge of the matter said.

Fresh questions about the succession arose when the prince flew to Germany last month to attend to personal business. Thailand is making preparations for the prince to ascend the throne on 1 December, though a formal coronation will be at least one year from now.

The country has been without a monarch since revered King Bhumibol Adulyadej died on 13 October and has been ruled by regent Prem Tinsulanonda, the 96-year-old former head of the royal advisory council.

Prime Minister Prayuth Chan-ocha said last month that the prince had asked to delay his ascension to the throne while he mourns his father.

“His Highness has arrived back in Thailand from Germany and will attend an event this evening at the 1st Infantry Regiment, King’s Own Guard. This is confirmed,” said a senior military source who declined to be named because of the sensitivity of the matter.

The prince’s return to Thailand will likely ease any concerns about the succession, said Bangkok-based lecturer and analyst Gothom Arya.

“His return will likely stop any lingering rumours that the process, when it happens, will not proceed smoothly,” he told Reuters.

The prince has spent much of his adult life abroad, and has a home in Germany where his son, Prince Dipangkorn, is enrolled at a private school.

Thailand’s military government submitted a new constitution for royal endorsement on Tuesday. Prayuth Chan-ocha has said that only the new monarch can approve the charter.

Malaysia again rebuffs Swiss request for help in 1MDB probe

ZURICH — Malaysia has again rebuffed Switzerland’s request for legal assistance in probing suspected corruption linked to scandal-hit state fund 1MDB, the Swiss attorney general’s office said on Friday.

But it said Kuala Lumpur’s decision would not hinder the Swiss probe as it works with other countries on the case.

“We respect Malaysia’s independent decision on this matter. However, the Malaysian authorities remain free to use the information provided in Switzerland’s requests for assistance in their own investigations,” Attorney General Michael Lauber said, confirming a report by the Financial Times.

“What is certain is that our own criminal proceedings, which are about maintaining the integrity of the Swiss financial system, will continue. We will ask other jurisdictions for support — for example Singapore, with which we have worked very well, other European jurisdictions and the US.”

The FT cited the Malaysian attorney-general’s chambers as saying it was unable to accede to Switzerland’s requests because of a continuing criminal investigation by Malaysian police in relation to matters concerning 1MDB. Malaysia was committed to co-operating with international partners and there was “no issue of Malaysia blocking the Swiss criminal inquiry”, it added, according to the FT.

A source familiar with the discussions told Reuters that while Swiss officials publicly allude to expectations that Malaysia will cooperate, privately the Malaysians have demanded that the Swiss drop their investigations.

NEW DELHI — As New Delhi grappled with its worst smog in 17 years, the head of India’s largest mobile payment firm got on a plane and left, one of thousands of professionals escaping pollution that could cost the capital and the broader economy dear.

Vijay Shekhar Sharma, founder of PayTM payment start-up, left last Sunday for a temporary stay in the Thai capital Bangkok to Chiang Mai, adding that it would adjust its base, as costs of working there spluttered and watering eyes, but local industry lobby group Assocham estimates “several billions of dollars” of new investments are under threat.

A study by the World Bank shows Asia’s third-largest economy lost 8.5 per cent of its GDP in 2013 due to air pollution.

Jones Lang LaSalle (JLL), a global real estate services firm serving large corporates, said some clients were reconsidering Delhi as a base, as costs of working there rise. “This is increasing their operational costs as they are being made to spend more to provide a healthy workplace to their employees,” said Santosh Kumar, a senior executive at the firm.

Delhi’s image is deteriorating more widely, a headache for tour promoters and a government touting “Brand India”.

MNL — Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte said on Friday he would respect defence treaties with “friends” and “ally” the United States, but still wanted foreign troops to leave his country by the end of his term.

Duterte spared the United States one of his trademark verbal lashings and took a more conciliatory tone than usual, although he hinted at revoking the 2014 Enhanced Defence Cooperation Agreement (EDCA) that gives US troops rotational access to Philippine bases.

“We are friends, with an ally, we have a military pact that would bind us,” he told a pre-dawn news conference upon his return from a visit to Malaysia.

“We will maintain our cooperation ... and respect is there, and in all matters between the two countries, especially the treaties we signed with them, so many agreements, we will honour all of these things.”

Duterte has been strongly against, at times furious about, dependence on the former colonial power and has called for the scrapping of dozens of joint exercises.

He said the Philippines did not need the exercises and by the end of his six-year term he wanted no foreign soldiers in his country.

“We do not need any foreigner to train Filipino troops. By themselves they are warriors,” he added. He also said he would be turning to other countries for defence procurements, like China, Israel, Japan and Russia, because US “gadgets” were expensive.

Duterte, who is often dubbed “Trump of the East” due to his fierce rhetoric and outrageous comments, was asked by a reporter if he thought the Donald Trump comparison was accurate.

“I am just a small molecule on this planet, he is now president of the most powerful country in the world. I am just a president struggling barely just above the water,” he responded.

“So I don’t think so, what we share in common maybe is the passion to serve.”

A change at the White House would not affect his decision to build closer alliances with countries beyond the United States, like China and in Southeast Asia, he said.

“I will pursue what I started, I’m not into habit of reneging on my work,” he said. — Reuters

Thailand cancels, adjusts flights ahead of lantern festival

BANGKOK — Dozens of flights to northern Thailand will be canceled or rescheduled when the country celebrates its annual Floating Lantern festival next week, airport officials said on Friday.

Chiang Mai International Airport, the main airport in northern Thailand — a destination popular with foreign tourists — said some flights would be canceled between 12 November and 16 November as floating lanterns released during the festival could affect safety.

The Floating Lantern festival is celebrated at the end of the so-called “rainy season” when paper lanterns are launched into the air to coincide with a full moon.

In recent years, authorities have asked revelers to refrain from launching the lanterns because they pose a fire risk. In 2015, a Bangkok Airways flight was canceled after a lantern was sucked into the plane’s engine.

The government has asked that activities held during the festival be scaled back this year as a sign of respect for revered King Bhumibol Adulyadej, who died on 13 October.

Thailand is officially in a one-year period of mourning for the late monarch.

National carrier Thai Airways International said in a note on Thursday that it would cancel some roundtrip flights from the Thai capital Bangkok to Chiang Mai, adding that it would adjust its flight schedule and increase flights to compensate. — Reuters

THE use of propaganda has come into existence during the First World War along with the advent of modern media outlets. Propaganda – spreading ideas, information or rumours for a politically motivated objective – was refined into an art. Mr Edward Filene helped establish in 1937 the Institute of Propaganda Analysis, the goal of which was to help educate the American people as well as to understand the techniques by which propaganda is spread. Filene and his fellow researchers have identified the seven techniques for the propagandists to employ in fulfilling their objectives be they political or economic, social or educational.

One technique known as name-calling involves application of negative or discriminatory words. The propagandists use such words to incite people into suspicion and prejudice. The objective is to cause a general dissatisfaction for a group of people. This technique is frequently employed in ridiculing cartoons or writing.

Another technique is use of slogans or simple catchphrases. The propagandists use slogans to make general statements which attract their audience. Generally, such statements include the notions of love, honour, glory, peace, family values, freedom, patriotism – anything general enough to inspire pride.

Another famous technique is called transfer. A transfer links a reversed symbol with an idea that is wanted to promote. A testimonial makes an association between a respected or authoritative person and the cause. The expectation is that the respected person can impose his ideas upon other people. It is, in fact, something like an endorsement by a celebrity of a product. There is also a technique called the plain folks, the objective of which is to make the audience convinced that the spokesman is like them and shares their woes and concerns. Application of plain language and mannerisms can build trust by his followers. The sixth technique is knowledge as a weapon. In truth, this technique capitalizes on the human drive to be part of a crowd, a member of the winning team. The propagandists, creating the illusion that there is widespread support, expect those sitting on the fence to join the cause. Last but not the least, the card stacking technique involves mere use of those facts that support their ideas. By stacking cards against the truth, the propagandists can control the beliefs of their audience.

As outlined in Article 17 of the FCTC, economic viability must be at the very core of efforts to find alternative livelihoods and plan for a tobacco-free world. While promoting such alternatives will help tobacco farmers diversify their income as demand for tobacco ebbs, it may also alert them to more lucrative crops or other livelihood options before this happens. Not only would this leave them better off financially, but it would also free them of the onerous, anti-market contracts so beloved of tobacco oligarchs.

To make this happen, governments and local authorities can take a number of proactive steps. First, appropriate research on market opportunities should be pursued. This research should take into account the many variables that affect a community’s ability to prosper, including the natural, human, physical and financial capital that a community can access, as well as the market linkages they are able to tap into. Through the production and dissemination of high-quality information, tobacco farmers can make decisions that harness market forces to their advantage and best reflect their interests.

Second, adequate human, material and financial resources should be made available. This includes providing training that gives the skills needed for tobacco farmers to diversify their crops and income, while also emphasizing tobacco’s harmful environmental and health outcomes for consumers and farmers alike. Authorities should consider creating incentives for promoting, supporting or shifting to alternate livelihoods, including by facilitating access to rural credit, crop and income insurance, and infrastructure and services among other possibilities.

Third, obstacles to crop diversification should be mitigated or removed. Where appropriate, this could include addressing key concerns that prevent farmers leaving tobacco cultivation, such as tobacco-related debts. Despite a farmer’s best intentions, excessive debts written in to supply contracts often leave them tied to tobacco farming, limiting their ability to diversify their income and creating a vicious circle of indebtedness and poverty. Government programs must meet and overcome such challenges.

Finally, industry strategies to promote tobacco farming must be identified and regulated. Policies should be developed to protect tobacco growers and workers from industry practices that fix prices or create conditions that are disadvantageous. This means raising awareness among tobacco farmers so that they can increase their autonomy, as well as creating a network of civil society organizations able to monitor industry malpractice. It also means creating government mechanisms that can do the same, only with the full weight of the law.

By discussing these and other initiatives at the COP7 meeting in New Delhi this week, health authorities and governments across the South-East Asia Region – and indeed the world – will explore how best they can support tobacco farmers as demand-targeted initiatives make their mark.

Though this is already happening in several countries in the Region, there is scope for assistance to be scaled up. WHO is pleased to facilitate this process and emphasizes the ongoing need to work with tobacco-growing communities while circumventing the vested interests of the tobacco industry. No matter the half-truths circulated, a tobacco-free world is one of opportunity rather than loss.

This point deserves emphasis. Through the FCTC countries across the globe have gained the legal and technical support they need to resist Big Tobacco’s incursions. They are now making the changes needed to support healthier populations and to lower the social and economic burden of tobacco-related illness and death. Alongside the clear benefits these changes bring, they also provide opportunities for present-day tobacco farmers to diversify their income and breakout from an industry in terminal decline. The notion that a tobacco-free world should come at their expense is an untruth. And it is an untruth that is cynical in the extreme.
Trump praises protesters’ ‘passion’ after calling them ‘unfair’

WASHINGTON/New York — US President-elect Donald Trump on Friday praised demonstrators for being passionate about their country, just hours after he accused them of being “professional protesters” incited by the media. “Love the fact that the small groups of protesters last night have passion for our great country. We will all come together and be proud!” Trump tweeted early on Friday.

On Thursday night, the president-elect had posted: “Just had a very open and successful presidential election. Now professional protesters, incited by the media, are protesting. Very unfair!”

Mostly peaceful and orderly protests took place in at least eight cities following the Republican businessman’s defeat of Democrat Hillary Clinton in Tuesday’s election. Demonstrators have voiced concern Trump would harm Americans’ civil rights.

Trump’s critics worry that his often-inflammatory campaign rhetoric about immigrants, Muslims, women and others — combined with support from the Ku Klux Klan and other white supremacists — could spark a wave of intolerance among minorities.

German defence minister says Trump can’t treat NATO like a business

BERLIN — US president-elect Donald Trump needs to clarify his views on Russia, and to understand that NATO must be treated as an alliance of shared values rather than a business, Germany’s defence minister said.

“What his advisors will hope to learn is that NATO isn’t just a business. It’s not a company,” Ursula von der Leyen told a ZDF talk show on Thursday. “I don’t know how he values NATO.”

During his election campaign, Trump threatened to abandon US allies in Europe if they do not spend enough on defence.

“You can’t say ‘the past doesn’t matter, the values we share don’t matter’ but instead try to get as much money out of it (NATO) as possible and whether I can get a good deal out of it,” she said.

Von der Leyen advised Trump against getting too close to Russian President Vladimir Putin, noting that NATO had stood by the United States after the 9/11 attacks.

Donald Trump has to say clearly on which side he is. Whether he’s on the side of the law, peace and democracy or whether he doesn’t care about that and instead he’s looking for a best buddy (with Putin),” she said.

Trump has expressed admiration for Putin, condemned by the West for his actions in Ukraine.

Asian Executes 17th Inmate in 4 Years Under Abe Government

TOKYO — Japan executed a death row inmate Friday, the Justice Ministry said in announcing the 17th execution in about four years since the current government of Prime Minister Shinzo Abe was inaugurated in December 2012. The ministry said Kenichi Tajiri, 45, was hanged for murder in Fukuoka Prefecture. This was the first execution ordered by Justice Minister Katutoshi Kaneda since he assumed his post in August.

The latest execution is the second involving an inmate who was sentenced to death in a lapy trial judge. Japan’s lapy judge system, in which three professional and six lay judges hear a case, began in 2009. The justice minister said in an interview shortly after he took office that the issue of the death penalty needs to be handled carefully since it is an extremely serious penalty that involves the taking of human life, while also noting that court judgments must be strictly carried out in a nation governed by law.

Museum to Yasser Arafat offers facts, leaves open questions

RAMALLAH — The battle for Palestinian statehood consumed Yasser Arafat’s life and a new museum in his name puts the nature of that fight front and centre — the sub-machine gun on his desk, the AK-47 assault rifle in the corner, the pistol at his side.

Twelve years after his death in Paris at the age of 75, the Yasser Arafat Museum opened its doors in Ramallah on Thursday, attempting to flesh out some of the facts behind a divisive figure who remains something of an enigma long after his demise.

Arranged along four corridors over two floors, the museum takes visitors through a potted history of the Palestinian liberation movement: the exile in Tunisia and Lebanon, the return to the West Bank, the shared Nobel Peace Prize in 1994, and the violent first and second uprisings against Israel.

The corridors lead to the inner sanctum of Arafat’s besieged life in the Muqata, the Palestinian headquarters in Ramallah, where he was holed up for nearly three years in a poky bedroom. Arafat’s body is now buried in the Muqata compound.

While revered by many Palestinians, Arafat was a thorn in the side of several Arab states and a ruthless killer in the eyes of Israelis. The museum largely lauds his legacy, while spending little time on those who stood by and with him, including his wife, Suha, and his successor, Mahmoud Abbas.

Hanging in the simple wardrobe next to the single bed in his hideout are his khaki military jackets and a pile of black-and-white keffiyehs, the checked scarves he nearly always wore and which remain a symbol of resistance for Palestinians. On the desk in his office, a pile of papers held down by a submachine gun, a copy of the Koran, and in a guards’ room an AK-47 leaning against the wall. In a separate display case, the ornate revolver he often wore in a holster on his hip.

The museum begins at the start of the 20th century and charts the rise of Palestinian nationalism, the struggle for international recognition, the confrontation with Zionism and with Israel after the state’s founding in 1948.

Archival photos and videos mark high and low points: handshakes with then-US President Bill Clinton and Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Barak; bulldozers knocking down parts of the Muqata, which Arafat barely left during an Israeli siege from 2002-2004; a landmark 1974 address to the UN General Assembly.

Palestinian attacks, including the killing of Israeli soldiers at the 1972 Munich Olympics, the hijacking of airplanes throughout the 1970s and deadly suicide bombings during the second intifada (uprising), are covered in a purely factual way.

Yet while lots of background and history are provided, several elements of Arafat’s life remain a conundrum. The museum relates that Arafat was born in the Old City of Jerusalem on 4 August, 1929, and was later taken to Cairo. But historians say the evidence suggests he was born in Cairo and brought to Jerusalem at the age of four, when his mother died.

Others believe he was born in Gaza, the Palestinian territory on the Mediterranean coast.—

Taliban claim deadly attack on German consulate in Afghan city

Mazar-i-Sharif (Afghanistan) — A Taliban suicide bomber rammed a car packed with explosives into a wall around the German consulate in the northern Afghan city of Mazar-i-Sharif late on Thursday, killing at least four civilians and wounding scores, officials said.

A NATO spokesman said the explosion had caused “massive damage” to the building, where around 30 people normally worked. Heavily armed attackers followed up the blast, battling with Afghan and German security forces late into the night.

The Taliban claimed responsibility for the attack, saying it was in retaliation for NATO air strikes against a village near the northern city of Kunduz last week in which more than 30 people were killed.

The Islamist movement’s spokesman, Zabihullah Mujahid, said by telephone that heavily armed fighters, including suicide bombers, had been sent “with a mission to destroy the German consulate general and kill whoever they found there”.

Noor Mohammad Faiz, the head doctor in Mazar-i-Sharif provincial hospital, said four dead bodies and 120 wounded had been brought to the hospital and that the numbers may rise.

The attack highlighted the security problems spreading across Afghanistan in recent months, with heavy fighting in areas from the volatile southern province of Helmand to Kunduz in the far north.

More than 30 people, many of them children, were killed last week when US aircraft carried out air strikes in support of Afghan and US special forces who came under attack during a raid against suspected Taliban militants threatening Kunduz.

Germany, which heads the NATO-led Resolute Support mission in northern Afghanistan, has about 850 soldiers at a base on the outskirts of Mazar-i-Sharif, with another 1,000 troops coming from 20 partner countries.

A foreign ministry spokesman in Berlin said the attack was suppressed in the early hours of Friday by Afghan and German security personnel as well as NATO special forces.

“All German employees of the Consulate General are safe and uninjured,” he said. It was not yet known how many Afghan civilians and security personnel were killed or wounded, the spokesman said. The explosion occurred about an hour before midnight local time, a spokesman for the German military joint forces command in Potsdam said.

Witnesses reported sporadic gunfire from around the consulate and said the huge blast shattered windows in a wide area around the compound.

“It was a prepared attack for which we made all arrangements,” Mujahid said. “As per our plan, a suicide bomber driving an explosives-laden vehicle rammed the main building of the consulate and that enabled other fighters to move in and kill all the foreigners there.”—Reuters

Accused New York bomber faces charges in federal court

NEW YORK — The man accused of injuring more than two dozen people in September bomb attacks in New York and New Jersey made his first appearance in federal court on Thursday to face charges of using a weapon of mass destruction.

Ahmad Khan Rahimi, 28, did not enter a plea during a brief morning hearing. He was charged with injuring 30 people by setting off a homemade bomb on a crowded sidewalk in Manhattan’s Chelsea neighborhood on the night of Saturday, 17 September.

The attack came hours after federal prosecutors contend a gun bomb planted by Rahimi went off along the course of a charity road race by the New Jersey shore, without injuring anyone. Prosecutors say he was driven by a radical jihadist ideology.

“The alleged Chelsea bomb- er was brought today to Manhat- tan to face terrorism charges,” Preet Bharara, the US Attorney for the Southern District of New York said in a statement.

He was arrested two days after the bombing following a gunfight with police, who found him sleeping in the doorway of a bar in Linden, New Jersey.

His court-appointed attorney, David Patton, said Thurs- day he was concerned Rahimi would not receive adequate care for conditions he suffers. The 28-year-old, Afghan-born naturalized US citizen “nearly lost the use of one of his hands,” has an open wound on his leg from “serious liver damage,” Patton said.

He said he had raised these concerns with the jail where Rahimi will now be held, adding, “They gave a generic response they could handle it, but I’ll be honest, I don’t have great confidence.”—Reuters

Terrorists use chemical weapons in Syria’s Aleppo: Russian Defence Ministry

‘Mud Dragon’ fossil shows dinosaurs thrived on eve of destruction

WASHINGTON — In a humid, tropical jungle in southern China eons ago, a remarkably bird-like dinosaur with wing-like arms, a toothless beak and a dome-shaped crest atop its head became trapped in mud, struggled in vain to escape and died.

Workmen blasting bedrock while building a school near the city of Ganzhou unearthed a beautifully preserved fossil of the roughly 6.5-foot-long (2-meter-long) dinosaur, nicknamed the “Mud Dragon,” still in that contorted position, scientists said on Thursday.

The Cretaceous Period creature, called Tongtianlong limosus, lived 66 to 72 million years ago, at the twilight of the dinosaurs’ more than 160-million-year reign on Earth. It was a member of a group called oviraptorosaurs, one of the closest relatives to birds, which evolved earlier from small, feathered dinosaurs.

Paleontologist Steve Brusatte of Scotland’s University of Edinburgh, who worked on the study published in the journal Scientific Reports, said the fossil adds to the understanding of dinosaur evolution on the eve of destruction.

The discovery of Tongtianlong and five other oviraptorosaur species in southern China showed this group was still blossoming and diversifying during the last few million years before an asteroid struck Earth about 66 million years ago, wiping out the dinosaurs, Brusatte said.

“The fact there were so many of them is a testament to just how well the dinosaurs were doing right up until the end,” Brusatte added.

The fossil preserved a tragic moment for posterity. “Its neck is arched, its head sticking up, its arms out-stretched to the sides. It is a strange posture,” Brusatte said.

“The fact that the fossil was found in rock formed from mud and the skeleton is in pristine condition suggests the dinosaur got mired in mud, tried to get free, but died and was buried, Brusatte said. Its scientific name means “muddy dragon on the road to heaven,” paying homage to how it perished.

Other previous dramatic fossil finds include Mongolia’s famous “fighting dinosaurs,” a Velociraptor and Protoceratops apparently locked in mortal combat when a sand dune collapsed on them. Tongtianlong was a two-legged omnivore, with a bony crest on its short, squat skull that was probably used for display purposes to attract mates and intimidate rivals. Its arms likely had quill-like feathers layered over each other like on a wing, though it could not fly. “If you saw the ‘Mud Dragon’ alive, you probably would have said, ‘That’s a big, funny-looking bird,’” Brusatte said.—Reuters
Brazil’s Rousseff alleges President Temer received illegal funds

SAO PAULO — Lawyers for Brazil’s former President Dilma Rousseff, impeached and removed from office in May, filed documents with a top electoral court Thursday which they said proved her former vice president and now-leader Michel Temer took a large bribe.

Brazil’s top electoral court has for months investigated whether illegal funds were used in Rousseff’s successful 2014 re-election campaign for the Workers Party (PT).

If the court rules that occurred, it could reverse her entire ticket’s win.

That would mean Temer, a member of the Brazilian Democratic Movement Party (PMDB), would also be removed from office.

Fears that Rousseff’s filing meant Brazil’s sweeping anti-corruption investigations were creeping closer to Temer helped push Brazil’s currency down as much as 5.7 per cent to 3.39, the weakest since late June, before ending at 3.385. The nation’s benchmark Bovespa stock index fell 2.66 per cent to 61,578.

Temer’s camp has asked the top electoral court to separately judge his and Rousseff’s campaign donations, arguing that Rousseff, as head of the ticket, held all responsibility for any wrongdoing.

The court has yet to indicate if it would judge the cases separately.

The investigation told Reuters this week that a new name had been added to the web of militants involved as coordinators — Oussama Atar, a 32-year-old from a Brussels suburb, now believed to be in Syria.

“It’s a very strong suspicion,” said the source, speaking on condition of anonymity, “We are wary of being definitive while the investigation is still under way.”

Atar was jailed in Iraq on arms-trafficking charges before ultimately joining IS ranks in Syria in 2012, and is suspected of playing a key coordination role in the 13 November rampage, but not of being “mattamidin in chief”, the source said.

In particular, Atar is suspected of having recruited two Iraqis who blew themselves up outside the Stade de France sports stadium north of the French capital as part of a broad series of assaults in the heart of Paris on Nov. 13 last year.

He is also suspected of being the person to whom other suicide bombers reported before blowing themselves up in further attacks in Belgium that killed 32 on 22 March this year.

Atar, the latest addition to France’s suspects list, was identified in a group of photos shown to a militants arrested in Austria. But that advance means little for the survivors of the attacks, in which 90 of the 130 killed were shot or blown up by armed suicide bombers at the Bataclan concert hall in Paris. “Even if there’s little chance of bringing the attack mattamidin to justice, it would be nice to know his name,” said Emmanuel Domenach, who was at the Bataclan when it was attacked.—Reuters

UK campaigners win appeal case over preventative HIV drug

PARIS — French investigators believe they have identified a Belgian militant in Syria as a coordinator of the deadly Islamic State (IS) attack on Paris, but a year on they are still struggling to pinpoint the mastermind.

Just ahead of the 13 November anniversary of an assault that killed 130 people and injured hundreds, victims and relatives of the dead still seek answers. And the only living person believed to be part of the hit-team, now behind bars, refuses to talk.

A painstaking investigation led by an exceptionally large team of six judicial magistrates has inched forward in search of the “remote-controllers” — those who pulled the strings from abroad, at IS bases in Iraq and Syria or elsewhere.

A source close to the investigation told Reuters this week that a new name had been added to the web of militants involved as coordinators — Oussama Atar, a 32-year-old from a Brussels suburb, now believed to be in Syria.

“It’s a very strong suspicion,” said the source, speaking on condition of anonymity, “We are wary of being definitive while the investigation is still under way.”

LONDON — The state health service in England has the legal power to fund an HIV pill to prevent infection, the court of appeal ruled on Thursday, in a victory for AIDS campaigners who have been calling for its widespread use.

But it is still unclear whether the state system will have the financial resources to make the drug widely available. So-called pre-exposure prophylaxis (PrEP) against HIV can cut the risk of getting the virus during sex by more than 90 per cent, according to clinical studies.

NHS (National Health Service) England said it was not in a position to fund the medicine because PrEP was a preventative service and therefore the responsibility of local authorities.

The NHS lost that argument in an initial court case in August, prompting the appeal. “We are delighted to have been vindicated by the court a second time,” said Deborah Gold, chief executive of the National Aids Trust (NAT), which brought the case.

The NAT argues that PrEP is a potential game-changer and is urgently needed in Britain, where more than 4,000 people acquire HIV annually.

NHS England said it would now formally consider whether to fund PrEP. It noted the court ruling established that the NHS had the ability but not the obligation to pay for the medicine.

Gilead Sciences’ Truvada is currently the only drug approved in Europe for PrEP, although several generic companies in India make cut-price versions of the product. The original Gilead drug costs around 400 pounds ($500) for a month’s supply and its unavailability on the state health service has prompted some people to turn to online “buyers clubs” to get cheaper copies delivered from India.

NHS England said it would ask Gilead to reconsider its current “excessive and high pricing” and would also explore options for using generics.—Reuters

Year-old Paris attack probe sights new suspect, but mastermind elusive
Boat deaths cast spotlight on Indonesian illegals in Malaysia

JOHOR BAHRU, (Malaysia) — When Malaysian officials went to an island near the site of a boat accident that killed dozens of Indonesians on their way home last week, they were told the vessel was plying illegally with more than double the permitted number of passengers aboard.

For Paul Khiu, commander of the marine police in Johor state at the southern tip of peninsula Malaysia, the discovery came as no surprise.

“These boats can take 30 to 50 people, but they always overload,” Khiu told Reuters on his return from Batam island, on the other side of the Singapore Strait.

The boat had come from Johor, a one-hour voyage, carrying Indonesian workers and their families before it capsized near Batam.

Hundreds of thousands of Indonesians are illegal migrants in Malaysia, doing construction, plantation and domestic work that pays much more than they could earn at home. Some have lived in Malaysia for years and have also brought over their families.

Advocacy groups say the illegal workers are subjected to many abuses and the two governments are doing little to address the situation. Between 600 and 700 illegal Indonesian workers die in Malaysia each year of various causes, including disease, work accidents, drowning and starvation, said Anis Hidayah of the Migrant Care group.

A spokesman for Indonesia’s foreign ministry, Armanatha Nasir, said illegal workers remained “a challenge” but both governments were committed to finding a solution.

Malaysia’s Home Affairs Ministry said it would soon be meeting Indonesian Embassy officials for preliminary talks on the illegal workers issue, but did not give any further details.

The government said in March that it would stop bringing in new foreign workers in a bid to encourage businesses to hire locally and also to stop illegal migration. It had launched a major exercise to legalise foreign workers in 2011, including an amnesty that expired in 2014.

South Korea president’s approval rating remains at all-time low: Gallup

SEOUL — South Korean President Park Geun-hye’s approval rating remained at an all-time low for a second week amid a deepening political crisis, according to a Gallup Korea poll released on Friday, underscoring the challenges faced by her administration.

Park’s presidency has been rocked by allegations that a personal friend of hers used her ties to meddle in state affairs and wield improper influence.

Gallup said its survey of 1,003 South Koreans from 8-10 November showed that 90 per cent of participants disapproved of her performance, up from 89 per cent last week and a new high.

Park’s support dropped to single digits across the country, including in her traditional support base in the conservative stronghold of the southeast. She had zero support among people under the age of 30, the poll showed.

The results of the Gallup poll came after Park gave her second public apology last week and indicated she was willing to relinquish some power.

Park offered to withdraw her nominee for prime minister this week if parliament recommended a candidate that opposition parties could agree upon, but her offer did little to quell public anger. The post of prime minister is largely a figurehead role in South Korea, where power is concentrated in the presidential office.

The two main opposition parties have rejected Park’s offer and demanded she hand over most of her presidential authority to a new prime minister and the Cabinet. Some lawmakers have called on her to step down but the main opposition parties have not raised the idea of launching impeachment proceedings.

A large crowd was expected at an anti-Park rally on Saturday, with organizers saying the number could reach 1 million, according to Korean media reports.—Reuters

ADB chief calls for continued US involvement in Asia

TOKYO—The chief of the Asian Development Bank on Friday called on the United States to maintain its economic involvement in the Asia-Pacific region in the wake of Republican Donald Trump’s victory in the US presidential election.

“A continued involvement by the United States will lead to the stability and prosperity of the Asia-Pacific region and have economic and security advantages for the United States,” ADB President Takehiko Nakao told a symposium in Tokyo.

Nakao, a former Japanese bureaucrat, added that Japan and Asian countries will urge the United States to keep playing a significant role in investment and trade in the region following Trump’s protectionist remarks during his election campaign.

Touching on the Asian economy, Nakao said while the Chinese economy has been decelerating, “Taken as a whole, the theory of a long-term deceleration is not applicable in Asia. Asia is still continuing to grow,” he said.

He said countries such as India, Indonesia, Thailand and Vietnam possess great potential to push up the whole Asian economy in the future.

Developing countries in Asia saw a nearly 10 per cent economic expansion in 2010, but the rate has dropped to 5.9 per cent in 2015 due partly to a slowing economy in China, according to the Manila-based bank.

On speculation about a US interest rate hike within the year, he shrugged off concerns about capital flight from Asia.

“Even if the interest rate is raised slightly...that would not have a big impact on Asia,” he said, adding there is unlikely to be a wider fluctuation in foreign exchange rates as a result.

While the number of participating countries in the China-led Infrastructure Investment Bank is likely to exceed that of the ADB, which is mainly funded by Japan and the United States, Nakao said he has no intention to try to expand the ADB membership, such as by inviting Russia and countries in the Middle East.

“Rather than focusing on expanding member states, it is better to include states with strong will and capacity,” to support Asian economic development, he said.—Kyodo News

Leonard Cohen, rock music’s poetic visionary, dies at 82

LOS ANGELES — Leonard Cohen, rock music’s poetic visionary, died Monday at 82 after a long illness, according to sources close to Cohen and his family.

The family said in a statement that Cohen had been in poor health for some time. Cohen had been living in Montreal, Canada, where he had spent much of his life.

Cohen was known for his rich voice and poetic lyrics that often explored themes of love, loss, and spirituality. He was a key figure in the folk revival of the 1960s and became a household name with hits like “Hallelujah,” “Suzanne,” and “So Long, Marianne.”

Cohen was also a respected poet and novelist. His first book, “Let Us Compare Mythologies,” was published in 1966, and he released 14 other collections of poetry and prose over the course of his career.

His music has been covered by a wide range of artists, from Bob Dylan to Adele, and his influence can be heard in the work of many modern songwriters.

“Leonard Cohen was a true original,” said Bob Dylan, who was close friends with Cohen. “He was a poet who sang and a singer who wrote poems. His work was deeply affecting and his voice was uniquely beautiful.”

Cohen was born in Montreal, Canada, on Oct. 21, 1934, the son of a rabbis. He grew up in the lower-middle-class neighborhood of Mile End and later moved to the Bowery area of Manhattan.

Cohen was inducted into the Rock & Roll Hall of Fame in 2010 and was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature in 2016.

In addition to his music, Cohen was also a distinguished essayist and poet. His book “If It’s Not Me, It’s You” was widely praised.

Cohen is survived by his son, Adam Cohen, and his daughter, Krakow.

“Leonard was a confirmed optimist, and he believed that every day was a new beginning,” said Krakow. “Although he was in poor health for many years, he never gave up hope. He was a remarkable man and we will miss him deeply.”

Cohen’s death was announced on his website and social media accounts.

LONDON — A new addition will soon be coming to Madame Tussauds, London’s famed wax museum, which on Thursday showed some of the behind-the-scenes work on making a replica figure of US President-elect Donald Trump.

The museum had already created clay sculptures of the Republican Trump and his Democratic rival, Hillary Clinton, before Tuesday’s election. It is now embarking on the full wax figure in time for Trump’s 20 January inauguration.

On its Facebook page, Madame Tussauds on Thursday revealed the wax head for the Trump figure, with a hair inserter slowly starting work on the New York businessman’s distinctive blonde hairstyle. —Reuters

Rubik’s Cube loses EU trademark fight over its shape

BRUSSELS — Rubik’s Cube, a multicoloured three-dimensional puzzle, lost a trademark battle on Thursday after Europe’s top court said its shape was not sufficient to grant it protection against copycats.

The toy, invented in 1974 by Hungarian Erno Rubik, is popular among young and old, with more than 350 million cubes sold worldwide.

British company Seven Towers, which manages Rubik’s Cube intellectual property rights, registered its shape as a three-dimensional EU trademark with the European Union Intellectual Property Office (EUIPO) in 1999.

But German toy maker Simba Toys challenged the trademark protection in 2006, saying that the cube’s rotating capability should be protected by a patent and not a trademark.

Patents allow inventors to block rivals from making commercial use of their inventions without their approval for a certain period of time while trademarks give intellectual property owners’ an exclusive and perpetual right to their designs, logos, phrases or words as long as they use them. The German company took its case to the Luxembourg-based European Union Court of Justice (ECJ) after EUIPO and a lower EU court dismissed its lawsuit.

ECJ judges agreed with Simba Toys’ arguments. Their decision is final and cannot be appealed.

“In examining whether registration ought to be refused on the ground that shape involved a technical solution, EUIPO and the General Court should also have taken into account non-visible functional elements represented by that shape, such as its rotating capability,” they said.

EUIPO will now have to issue a new decision based on the ECJ judgment. —Reuters
Brazil blitz hapless Argentina in 3-0 win

SAO PAULO — Brazil dealt Argentina’s hopes of reaching the 2018 World Cup finals a serious blow on Thursday with a resounding 3-0 win that dropped the world’s top ranked side into sixth place in the 10-team South American qualifying group.

Argentina are sixth on 16 points, with the top four teams qualifying automatically for the finals in Russia and the fifth-placed side going into a play-off with the Oceania winners.

“We today performed ourselves, the fans helped from the first minute and we leave here very happy,” Coutinho said in a pitchside interview.

Argentina’s Lionel Messi, who returned to the side after three games out injured, was anonymous in a match lit up by brilliant moments from the home side.

Brazil took the lead after 24 minutes when Neymar slipped the ball to Philippe Coutinho on the left with the deftest of touchers and the Liverpool midfielder hammered an unstoppable drive into the top corner of the net.

The Barcelona striker was lucky not to concede a penalty after he handled in the box 12 minutes later but he was always dangerous at the other end and he doubled Brazil’s lead just seconds before half time when he coolly slotted home after taking a defence-splitting pass from Gabriel Jesus.

Paulinho sealed it 13 minutes into the second period when the midfielder charged into the box between defenders and poke home a cross from Renato Augusto.

Brazil were dominant in a rampant second half and could have scored more with Neymar and substitute Roberto Firmino both coming close.

In the evening’s other games, Peru got four goals in the second half to beat Paraguay 4-1 away in Asuncion, while Jose Martinez became the first Venezuelan to score a hat trick in World Cup qualifiers in the 5-0 win over Bolivia.

Earlier, Colombia drew 0-0 at home to Chile and stay in third, while Uruguay beat Ecuador 2-1 to remain second, a point behind Brazil.—Reuters

World number one might be a step too far, says Wawrinka

ZURICH — A lack of year round consistency is likely to ensure that three-times grand slam champion Stan Wawrinka does not topple Britain’s Andy Murray from the top of the rankings, the Swiss has said.

Murray recently ended Novak Djokovic’s 122-week spell as world number one but might still need to win the final ATP tournament of the year in London to ensure he finishes the year at the top of the rankings.

Wawrinka, who won his third grand slam title by beating Djokovic at the US Open this year, has been drawn in the same group as Murray at the ATP Finals, but feels he does not have the consistency to leap to the top of the rankings.

“I don’t think so. Right now I’m 31, the world number three Wawrinka told Sky Sports when asked whether he could become the top ranked player. “I know I can beat every player. I need to do it more often in the year if I want to think about that, but so far I’m way off that.”

Wawrinka expected the 29-year-old Scot, who won Wimbledon and his second Olympic gold medal as well as six other titles this year, would handle the pressure of being number one and was the man to beat at the O2 Arena in south-east London.—Reuters

Wie continues comeback with two-under start in Mexico

MEXICO CITY — Michelle Wie broke her LPGA duck back at the tournament where she posted her first professional victory, continued to re-emerge from a slump with a good opening round at the Lorena Ochoa Invitational in Mexico City on Thursday.

Wie birdied three of the first seven holes en route to a two-under-par 70, ending the day three rounds behind leaders Carlota Ciganda of Spain and Australian Sarah Jane Smith at Club de Golf Mexico.

Wie, 27, had been mired in an awful form slump for the best part of two years until she tied for 10th at the Blue Bay LPGA in China three weeks ago.

Plagued by multiple injuries and a subsequent loss of confidence, her form spiralled downwards until her visit to China, where she finally produced a performance she credited to being healthy again and practice.

Sharapova to resume as UN goodwill ambassador in April

NEW YORK — Maria Sharapova will be allowed to resume her role as a United Nations (UN) goodwill ambassador when her drug suspension ends in April, the body said on Thursday.

Five-times grand slam champion Sharapova became an ambassador for the UN Development Programme (UNDP) in 2007, but was dropped in March after admitting she had used the banned substance meldonium.

The United States-based Russian was originally banished from the sport for two years, a suspension that was later cut to 15 months.

She will return to action in time to contest three of the four grand slams next year, missing only the Australian Open.

“The UNDP is glad to learn that Maria Sharapova can return to the sport she loves sooner than expected and we will lift the suspension of her role as our goodwill ambassador once the reduced ban expires,” the UN said in a statement.
