Reports of hundreds fleeing Myanmar being pushed back by Bangladesh said to be false

AN inquiry into news reports by Reuters that nearly 200 people fleeing Myanmar had been arrested and repulsed yesterday by Bangladesh border guards has been found to be false, according to the News Information Committee of the State Counsellor’s Office.

A representative of the Myanmar Border Guard made a contact with Lt Col Abu Zar Al Zahid, Commander of No. 2 Border Guard Bangladesh with the help of an interpreter to inquire about the media reports that claimed hundreds of people trying to enter Bangladesh across the river Naf were stopped and pushed back into Myanmar. Lt. Col. Abu Zar Al Zahid said he had also heard the same reports, but stated such events never happened, it is learnt.

The news reports allegedly said the mass exodus from Myanmar into Bangladesh was the result of situations currently occurring in the north-western part of Maungtaw in the villages of Yaykhatchaung Gwasone, Myawtaung, Dargyizar, Yedwinkyun, Pwintphyu, Ushaygya and Ngakhuya. It was further reported that nearly 200 may have been kept in the refugee camps in Bangladesh.

Due to the faulty news reports, the News Information Committee of the State Counsellor’s Office said that inquiries were made by Myanmar of the Bangladesh army and border guard forces as to whether there were armed conflicts or not at the border areas.

The news item of November 16 from Reuters News Agency’s report in which government troops were said to have shot dead 72 people who tried to flee is also found to be false. The border guard representatives said that there was no conflict at the border areas and stated that their combined forces were launching inland area clearance operations. —Myanmar News Agency

Third meeting of Pyithu Hluttaw continues

THE government has no plan to grant a general amnesty as a sign of welcoming the 21st Century Panglong Peace Conference as the conference has already started since 31 August, 2016, said Deputy Minister Maj-Gen Aung Soe for Home Affairs at the Pyithu Hluttaw yesterday.

The deputy was responding to a question whether the government had a plan to grant an amnesty at the session.

Law offenders are sentenced to prison in accordance with the law for stability and the rule of law of the country but the president has the right to pardon prisoners under Sub-section (a) and (b) of Section 204 of the State Constitution, the deputy minister added.

Moreover, the deputy minister continued to say that the president can also release prisoners under Sub-section (1) of Section 401 of the Criminal Procedure Code either without or on condition that such a released prisoner who commits crime again shall serve both the remaining prison term and the new prison term.

However, as the union peace conference has already started since 31 August, it is too late to welcome it and the government has no plan to grant an amnesty, according to the deputy minister.

In response to another question, the deputy minister said that application for permit to organize events like literary talks and preaching will not be lengthy process after the third amendment bill for The Ward or Village-tract Administration Law has been approved.—Myanmar News Agency

Japan and Myanmar to boost trade, investment this year

Japan and Myanmar are planning to boost trade and investment this year through effective bilateral business strategies, according to a member of the local chamber of commerce.

The news comes from meetings on Wednesday in Yangon between the Japan-Myanmar Friendship Association and the Republic of the Union of Myanmar Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry.

This is the first time both parties have gathered to discuss promotion of bilateral business relations and cooperation. The two sides also discussed the effective use of Japanese loans.

Japanese government vowed to grant nearly US$8 billion in aid, loans and investment to promote development and reconciliation in Myanmar during the official visit of State Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi earlier this month.

Development of infrastructure as well as improvement of industry business in the country top the list of priorities, said U Maung Maung Lay, vice-president of the RUMFCCI.

Japan is one of main trading partners of Myanmar. Since 2011, Japanese investment has rapidly increased in the country.

In 2015-2016 fiscal year, Japanese investment in Myanmar totalled US$886 million, according to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Over 140,000 tonnes of rubber to be exported this fiscal year

With the demand of natural rubber rising from foreign countries, over 140,000 tonnes of rubber is planned for export in the current fiscal year, said an official from the Commerce Ministry.

The demand was not that high in previous years, with about 80,000 tonnes of rubber exported per year. This year, the demand from countries such as Japan has risen, possibly a result of Japan’s increased export volume, it is learnt.

The demand of synthetic rubber made from petroleum by-products has declined as a result of the high global price. That has made the demand for natural rubber from Myanmar to increase in the international market. The Myanmar rubber price has also risen with exports to Indonesia, Malaysia, Japan and especially to China.

The prevailing domestic price of rubber is Ks150 higher than that of last month. However, Myanmar’s rubber is offered about US$200 lower than the export market price due to unstable quality.

Concerted efforts are being exerted to control the quality of rubber with technical assistance from the Japanese government.

Over 180,000 tonnes of rubber are produced per year in Myanmar and from 80,000 to 90,000 tonnes of rubber are exported to foreign countries, according to the statistics of the Commerce Ministry.—Mon Mon

MELBOURNE — A fire in a Melbourne branch of Commonwealth Bank of Australia on Friday, which police said was allegedly set by a man, injured 27 people, including six critically.

Victoria police, in a statement, said the man who allegedly started the fire “has been taken to hospital in a serious condition under police guard”.

A statement from Ambulance Victoria said the injured ranged from a toddler to people in their 80s.

In a short documentary broadcast Thursday by Al Jazeera, Duterte lambasted critics for complaining about his deadly war on drugs and praised at the United States for “bullying” that he said someone had to stand up to.

He accused Washington of double standards and said where human rights were concerned the Philippines was in the same league as the United States, where “bigotry is very much alive” and where police kill innocent people, not drug pushers.

In interviews crammed with expletives, the 71-year-old former mayor spoke warmly of Beijing and Moscow, describing Chinese President Xi Jinping as “a very courageous person” and Vladimir Putin as a ma who was sincere.

Commenting on the refugee exodus that has plagued Europe, Duterte said Western countries had failed those most in need and the Philippines, a developing country of 100 million, was willing to take them in.

“These can always come here, and will be welcome here, until we are filled to the brim,” he said.

“At the end, I will survive. I say send them to us. We will accept them. We will accept them. They are human beings.”

Since he was elected in May, Duterte has been shaking up the Philippines and scoring high approval ratings, despite his hostility towards ally the United States and an anti-drug campaign that has killed more than 2,400 people.

Many of the deaths have come during police operations to arrest suspects, but some are believed to be the work of vigilantes.

Duterte denied responsibility for unleashing a wave of vigilante killings and denied that gunmen were hired by authorities to carry out hit-and-run killings.

But he said he would take the law into his own hands if his own family members were killed, saying, “I will kill you.”

As he was invading Malaysia, he responded: “Yes I am encouraging. So what’s wrong now?”

Duterte said he was “pissed off” hearing criticism from the West about his drugs crackdown.

“If I look like a bad boy to them I really do not give a shit,” he said. “Who are they to me? They are nothing.”

Aid convoy reaches quake-hit New Zealand town as damage bill mounts

WELLINGTON — A convoy of 27 military trucks, reached the quake-stricken New Zealand town of Kaikoura on Friday, five days after the massive underwater earthquake that triggered a tsunami was completely cut off by huge landslides caused by a 7.8-magnitude earthquake that killed two people.

The convoy, which had been delayed by bad weather on Thursday, carried food and medical supplies and a team of civil engineers, officials said.

The New Zealand Defence Force said that on Friday, not all tourists had left, and New Zealand media had reported that a local lawmaker and motel owner had complained that some were staying to get drunk and party through the night for a “cheap holiday” as residents tried to clean up.

The quake’s cost could add up to almost NZ$12 billion ($8.4 billion), which would likely take a toll on the government’s finances and possibly push the country’s budget back into deficit after two years of surpluses, according to analysts.

“The week’s disaster struck in more lightly populated areas but damage to infrastructure has been severe,” said Citibank economists in a research note. The note compared this week’s tremor with the 2011 quake in Christchurch, the South Island’s largest city, that killed almost 200 people and required a NZ$40 billion rebuild.

Others have put the bill lower. Prime Minister John Key said earlier this week the damage bill would be about NZ$2 billion ($1.40 billion), although he cautioned that only an early estimate.

Duterte says Philippines would welcome refugees: ‘They can always come here.’

MANILA — Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte has lashed out at the “hypocrisy” of the West for closing borders to an exodus of refugees he said would welcome to his country and accept until it was “filled to the brim”.

In a short documentary broadcast Thursday by Al Jazeera, Duterte lambasted critics for complaining about his deadly war on drugs and praised at the United States for “bullying” that he said someone had to stand up to.

MANILA — Former Philippine dictator Ferdinand Marcos was buried with military honours at a heroes’ cemetery in the capital Manila on Friday, almost 30 years after his death in Hawaii, amid protests by human rights groups and opposition politicians.

Many in the Philippines were angered by the way Marcos’ family had kept the timing of the burial secret, with Vice President Leni Robredo likening the ceremony to “a thief in the night”. “This is nothing new to the Marcoses — they who had hidden their human rights abuses and now hidden burial — with complete disrespect for the rule of law,” Robredo said in a statement.

President Rodrigo Duterte, who is attending the Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation summit in Lima, Peru, had ordered the burial in August, fulfilling an election campaign promise.

Marcos’ eldest daughter, Bocso Norte Governor Imee Marcos, thanked Duterte for allowing her father, a former soldier and guerrilla leader during World War II, to be laid to rest with soldiers.

“At last, my beloved father’s last will to be buried with fellow soldiers was fulfilled today,” she said. She also asked people to understand the family’s decision to keep the ceremony “simple, private and solemn”.

Human rights groups opposed his burial at the heroes’ cemetery south of Manila but the Philippines Supreme Court ruled against their protests last week.

Marcos ruled the Philippines for 20 years, during which time he, his family and cronies amassed an estimated $10 billion in ill-gotten wealth, a commission found. Tens of thousands of suspected communist rebels and political foes were killed.

Abe, who took office in 2012. He has also raised his country’s global standing among right-wing constituencies.

Abe, who has been more assertive and taken a bigger global role. In the United States, he made a joint statement with US President-elect Trump on 20 January. He met with Abe earlier this year at the State of the Union address. He is expected to meet with Abe again in Washington in March.

Japan’s PM Abe meets Trump, says confident can build trust

NEW YORK — Japan’s Prime Minister Shinzo Abe described Donald Trump as a “trustworthy leader” after meeting the US president-elect on Thursday to get clarity on statements Trump had made while campaigning that had caused concern about the alliance.

Abe, speaking after the hastily arranged 90-minute meeting at Trump Tower in Manhattan, reporters: “The talks made me feel sure that we can build a relationship of trust.” But he would not disclose specifics because the conversation was unofficial.

Japan’s leadership has been nervous about the future of an alliance that is core to Tokyo’s diplomacy and security.

Trump had warned in Tokyo and beyond with comments on the possibility of Japan acquiring nuclear arms, demands that allies pay more for keeping US forces on their soil or face their possible withdrawal, and his opposition to the US-led 12-nation Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP) free trade pact.

Abe had worked closely with President Barack Obama on the TPP trade pact, which was part of Obama’s push to counter the rising strength of China, a pillar of Abe’s economic reforms.

“Alliances cannot function without trust. I am now confident that President-elect Trump is a trustworthy leader,” said Abe, describing the talks as “candid” and held in a “warm atmosphere”.

Abe gave Trump a gold driver and received golf-wear in return, Japanese officials said.

Photographs taken inside the ornate meeting room at Trump Tower showed Abe accompanied only by an interpreter and Trump by his daughter Ivanka, her husband and Trump adviser Jared Kushner, and retired Lieutenant General Michael Flynn whom a senior Trump official said on Thursday had been offered the national security adviser position.

Abe said he had agreed to meet again with Trump “at a convenient time to cover a wider area in greater depth.”

It was unclear if that would happen before Trump’s inauguration on 20 January. Trump official Kellyanne Conway told CBS earlier on Thursday that “any deeper conversations about policy and the relationship between Japan and the United States will have to wait until after the inauguration.”

Trump officials did not immediately comment following the meeting with Abe.

Back in Tokyo, Finance Minister Taro Aso commented: “The meeting ran longer than planned, which means that they were on the same wavelength and it went well.”

Some of Trump’s campaign rhetoric suggested an image of Japan forged in the 1980s, when Tokyo was seen by many in the United States as a threat to jobs and a free-rider on defence.

A Trump adviser who spoke earlier in the week, however, stressed a more positive view and credited Abe with making changes. “Frankly, the prime minister has been more assertive and forthright in trying to make those changes to Japan’s global posture,” he said.

Trump, a billionaire real estate magnate, and Abe, a political blue blood, share a stated desire to raise their countries’ global standing and both have support from right-wing constituencies.

Abe has boosted Japan’s overall defence spending since taking office in 2012. He has also stretched the limits of its pacifist postwar constitution to allow the military to take a bigger global role.

Japan’s defence spending, though, still stands at just over 1 per cent of GDP compared with more than 3 per cent in the United States.

Abe was expected to see Obama at an Asian-Pacific summit in Peru on the weekend. Hours before Abe and Trump met, Obama’s secretary of state, John Kerry, and Japanese Foreign Minister Fumio Kishida met in Lima to discuss the Paris climate accord — a deal Trump has pledged to rescind.

Diplomatic analysts say that however good the atmospherics, it will be hard to assess Trump’s policies on security issues ranging from overseas deployments of US troops, China’s maritime assertiveness and the North Korean nuclear threat until Trump makes key appointments. — Reuters

Mysterious disease kills buffalo herd in eastern Thailand

BANGKOK — Some 21 buffaloes in Thailand’s eastern Prachin Buri province have died in 3 days, which local official said may be caused by Hemorrhagic Septicemia.

These buffaloes belonged to 31-year-old Suthat Somthong, who lives in Kabin Buri district of the province.

Suthat said one of the 47 buffaloes died on Tuesday, following by another one on Wednesday and 19 more on Thursday, the Bangkok Post reported.

Local officials and vets were investigating the cause and trying to control the spread of the disease by burning those dead animals and monitoring the remaining buffaloes.

Wanlop Prawatpong, chief of Kabin Buri district, said it was not yet known what kind of disease had struck these buffaloes, but it was possibly caused by Hemorrhagic Septicemia, an acute, highly fatal form of pasteurellosis that affects mainly water buffalo, cattle and bison.

Wanlop said tissue samples of these dead buffaloes had been sent to livestock office in Chon Buri for testing. —Xinhua

Agriculture is a major industry in Myanmar but is also one of the most vulnerable sectors of the economy. The sector is prone to natural disasters such as floods, droughts and storms that have an enormous impact on crop yields. This year, Myanmar suffered losses due to floods, with many acres of rice paddies inundated at the start of the rainy season.

Moreover, economic factors such as demand and supply also determine crop prices. According to a recent news report, Myanmar’s rice exports dropped by over 100,000 tonnes compared to the same period last year. Declines in export demand will greatly affect the local prices of rice at present and during cultivation next year.

In addition, rising prices of imported fertiliser and pesticide also place a burden on the sector. Farmers have to take out agricultural loans from banks as well as borrow money from private lenders at high interest rates. When natural disasters and economic factors are not in their favour, they struggle to repay their debts on time.

Therefore, it can be safely said that the people who are engaged in the agriculture sector are unusually vulnerable to natural disasters and economic impacts. Peasant farmers make up a great majority of the population of Myanmar. Economic damage to the majority of the population of a country will have long-term consequences for the entire country.

Therefore, it is important that the impact of natural disasters and economic factors are reduced as much as possible by finding out a means of safeguarding them from its effects. Disaster preparedness in the agriculture sector may be able to reduce the impact of natural disasters, while diversification of export markets is likely to help raise the demand. It is time we paid attention to the agriculture sector.

Water service delivery in Myanmar cities

Reinforcing operators’ capacities to sustain upgraded services

Dr. Khin Maung Lwin

A ccording to the 2015 data from the HO-UNICEF Joint Monitoring Program (JMP), 93% of the urban population of Myanmar has access to improved water supply and 97% to improved sanitation. However, as stated in the most recent sector situation analysis, there is some concern that JMP data presents an improved sanitation. However, as stated in the most recent sector situation analysis, there is some concern that JMP data presents an opportunity to rapidly upscale service delivery to urban citizens, while there is an increasing effort to extend the service to rural populations.

However, despite these improvements, process are faced by local authorities to provide high quality treatment and infrastructure similar in all Myanmar cities. First of all, no city is in a position to provide water to its whole population. When water networks exist, they are often insufficient in terms of coverage and greatly deteriorated: physical losses are important, aging pumps do not run at their optimal capacity, water quality cannot be ensured, and monitoring of the networks prevents to carry out monitoring of their components spread into sub-national offices between the cities, thus limiting water wastage and environmental health risks caused by defective water services will remain. Poor supplied water quality will continue to threaten consumers’ health, especially for the poor whose cannot afford buying purified water. In a context where water resource mobilization becomes increasingly difficult and costly, deteriorated facilities and an inefficient management of the urban water systems will lead to widespread and significant waste of precious water. In order to really improve the quality of the service delivered to urban citizens, infrastructures and operators’ skills should therefore be built together.

Improving management skills is a crucial step to sustain the improved service. In Yangon and Mandalay, large scale projects under preparation or implementation generally include the provision of technical assistance through transfer know-how from international experts to local services providers. But the lack of capacity building measures is particularly striking in secondary cities where ongoing projects include very limited activities of such kind. And when trainings are provided through internationally-funded projects, they are usually provided to managers only and they almost exclusively focus on purely technical matters. Therefore, we may well be justified in thinking that most improvements cannot be sustainable if operators are not endowed with the required skills to maintain facilities and to properly manage the service. Therefore, we may well be justified in thinking that most improvements cannot be sustainable if operators are not endowed with the required skills to maintain facilities and to properly manage the service. Therefore, we may well be justified in thinking that most improvements cannot be sustainable if operators are not endowed with the required skills to maintain facilities and to properly manage the service.

The time for action

The increasing presence of private investors, donors and other sector actors in Myanmar repre- sent an opportunity to rapidly up-grade and develop water infrastructures. As highlighted above, improvements brought by new facilities will be sustainable only if sector actors adopt an approach where the rein- forcement of operators’ capacities to manage the service is at the heart of the projects. Contrary to shared belief that new facilities will not solve the problem of themselves, sustainable improvement of water services will only be achieved by better management.

A rapid assessment of the situation of water services in Myanmar cities shows that existing fa- cilities could already be much better managed. Enhancing billing and fee collection modalities, bet- ter monitoring water volumes at stake, eliminating illegal connections, only a few operators are some measures which could be implemented without significant investments. Such improvements will contribute to increase revenues, to limit water production costs and to contribute to a fairer access to the service for all.

And these measures are far from being utopian. Several cities across Myanmar have already started to implement a series of action and to reap their benefits. In Mawlamyine city for instance, monthly revenues generated by the sale of water to one thousand customers were doubled after the re- placement of their meters. In the same city, the Township Development Committee managed to negotiate with schools, hospitals, monasteries and other public institutions to transfer their water bill from one thousand customers to one thousand customers. The consequence for the entire city.

NOW that paddies in the paddy fields have ripened, process of harvesting, threshing and winnowing is being seen about Maungtaw Township.

A farmer in Myothagyi village, Maungtaw said, “My family ekes out our living by farming alone. We own 20 acres of farming land and we get some 1200 baskets of paddy a year at the crop yield rate 50/60 baskets of paddy per acre. In recent years, rates of crop yield have lowered, compared to those of previous years.

Most populace in Maungtaw District mainly lives on farming and fishery as their occupation. After harvesting, monsoon crops—paddy, they grow winter crops on small scale such as peas, chilli, eggplant, tomato, etc., it is learnt.

U Aye Tha Kyaw of Myothagyi village told, “I grew 14 acres of monsoon crop—paddy this year. I am a tenant farmer, having no land of my own. I have to give 25 baskets of paddy per acre to the landlord as a tenant pay. Last year only a small amount of baskets was left for me with tenant pay excluded, as crop yield was not good. Yet this year it is expected that at least 200 baskets of paddy will go to my hut barn.”

Main paddy seeds for paddy growers in Maungtaw Township are Manaw Thokha(2), Sinn Thwe (lait), Yadanar Aung, Thitthatt Yin and Vietnam—kinds of short and medium-aged seeds.

U Shwe Hlaing Maung, a local from Inn Din village, expressed, “This year I grew only 3 acres of monsoon paddy, growing less than ever because of few family members in my family. In this area the amount of monsoon paddy produce is greater than summer crops.

In recent years, rates of crop yield are lessening as we cannot use fertilizers, which are too expensive for farmers to afford for purchase. Formerly we can apply natural fertilizers, like cow dung/manure as a substitute for chemical fertilizers.

We found farmers reaping paddy by the use of 40 harvesting machines hired from the department, during our visit at the village of “Mawrawady.” We learnt that the agricultural department shared knowledge to farmers how to use these harvesters.

With a view to collecting news, we went to the Buthaung-Maungtaw road, Maungtaw-Kyeinchaung road and Taunggyo Letwe road and Maungtaw-Alaithankyaw road, seeing many farmers performing the process of harvesting, threshing and winnowing by applying machinery along the ripe paddy fields.

We imagined in our mind that the area would have a great promise of benefits if the authorities concerned would fulfill the needs of the farmers—subsidy of fertilizers and insecticides.

Investigation commission vows to help local residents . . .

It is said that they leave their villages during mornings and come back at nights. We also found that some buildings in some villages, including Ngakhuya and Kyikanpyin, were burnt down. We later learnt that the buildings were set on fire by residents to cast suspicion over security forces. Another fact we found is that ethnic local people are too afraid to go out as they are minority in the area. They have to live on donations of local social organizations. It is difficult for them to move to Maungtaw. Their rice is ripe but they do not have harvesting machines. Although the government and social organizations are donating harvesting machines, it is still not enough. They urgently need harvesting and winnowing machines at the moment. The paddies will be ruined. We will discuss the issues with the state government as soon as we arrive back.”

In addition, the chairman said that the ethnic families are requesting the government to resettle them in Kyainchaung as they had to live in fear in their native village. One of members of the ethnic group lost his ear and was injured on the throat as he was attacked with swords. He was left as his attackers thought he was dead. He was later treated by the Tatmadaw.

“Education and health conditions are also bad. Schools are still closed. No student dares to go to school,” the chairman added. The ethnic group also want security for them to go to market in Maungtaw.

Terminally ill British girl wins right to freeze her body: BBC

LONDON — A 14-year-old girl who died of cancer has been cryogenically frozen in the hope she could be brought back to life in the future after winning a landmark court case shortly before her death, the BBC reported on Friday.

It said the girl was supported in her wish to be preserved by her mother but not by her father. The BBC said a High Court judge ruled that the girl’s mother should be allowed to decide what happened to the body.

The girl, who lived in the London area, cannot be named for legal reasons. When she died in October her body was taken to the United States and preserved there, the BBC added.

DIYARBAKIR, (Turkey) — Rescue teams sought to free 13 workers trapped in a copper mine in southeast Turkey on Friday after it was hit by a landslide that killed at least three people, the local governor’s office said.

The mine’s owner, Park Elektrik, said heavy rain appeared to have caused the landslide at the Madenkoy mine, in the Sirvan district of Siirt province. All activity at the mine has been suspended given the risk of further landslides, the company said in a statement to the Istanbul stock exchange. Multinational crew blasts off, bound for space station

HOUSTON — A multinational crew, including a US astronaut who is the oldest and most experienced to travel in space, blasted off from Kazakhstan on Thursday for the International Space Station, where it should arrive in two days, a NASA TV broadcast showed.

The Russian Soyuz rocket carrying American Peggy Whitson, Russian cosmonaut Oleg Novitskiy and French astronaut Thomas Pesquet lifted off from the Baikonur Cosmodrome at 3:20 pm EST (2020 GMT). Whitson, 56, a biochemist and NASA’s chief astronaut, is making her third trip to the station, NASA said.

By the time she returns to Earth in six months, she will have accumulated more time in orbit than any other US astronaut, surpassing the 534-day record set in September by astronaut Jeff Williams.

“The most important thing about the station is ... the friendships and the work we accomplish here,” Whitson said during a prelaunch news conference on Wednesday in Kazakhstan.

Novitskiy, 45, who is making his second spaceflight, added: “The station is a place where we can demonstrate to the entire world that you can work without being distracted by things that don’t really matter.”

Joining the veteran fliers is Pesquet, 38, a rookie astronaut representing the European Space Agency.

The crew is due to reach the station at 5:01 p.m. EST (2201 GMT) on Saturday, where it will be greeted by NASA astronaut Shane Kimbrough and Russian flight engineers Sergey Ryazhikov and Andrey Borisenko, who arrived on 21 October.

China’s Jade Rabbit moon rover landed on the moon in late 2013 to great national fanfare, but soon suffered severe technical difficulties. The rover and the Chang’e 3 probe that carried it there were the first “soft landing” on the moon since 1976. Both the United States and the Soviet Union had accomplished the feat earlier. China will launch a “core module” for its first space station some time around 2018, a senior official said in April, part of a plan for a permanent manned space station in service around 2022. — Reuters

“The Tiangong 2 and Shenzhou 11 flight duties were a complete success,” Zhang said.

Tiangong 2 will remain in its orbit and next docks with Tianzhou 1, China’s first cargo spacecraft, which is set to be launched in April next year, according to state media. In a manned space mission in 2013, three Chinese astronauts spent 15 days in orbit and docked with a space laboratory, the Tiangong 1. Advancing China’s space programme is a priority for Beijing, with President Xi Jinping calling for the country to establish itself as a space power. The US Defence Department has highlighted China’s increasing space capabilities, saying it was pursuing activities aimed at preventing other nations using space-based assets in a crisis. China has been working to develop its space programme for military, commercial and scientific purposes, but is still playing catch-up to establish space powers the United States and Russia. It insists the programme is for peaceful purposes.

Hollande awards France’s Legion of Honour to UN’s Ban Ki-moon

PARIS — United Nations Secretary General Ban Ki-moon received the Legion of Honour from French President Francois Hollande on Thursday for his contribution to tackling climate change.

The South Korean diplomat helped push through the 2015 Paris Agreement, a deal aimed at moving away from fossil fuels to cleaner energies that was signed by almost 200 countries after nearly two decades of negotiations.

“It was largely because of your contribution, because many years ago you started putting this topic on all the agendas,” Hollande said at the ceremony of Ban’s efforts.

The Legion of Honour was established in 1802 by Napoleon Bonaparte and is considered to be one of France’s highest civilian awards.

“By doing this you are rewarding our honourable organisation and I feel deeply honoured and proud,” said Ban, who will step down as head of the 193-member world organisation after 10 years on 1 January. He will be replaced by Antonio Guterres of Portugal.

Planet heads for hottest year after third-warmest October — US agency

WASHINGTON — The earth is on track for its warmest year on record after October temperatures equalled the third-warmest for the month ever, a US government agency said on Thursday.

October generally was 1.31 Fahrenheit (0.73 Celsius) above the 20th century average of 57.1°F (13.9°C) and tying it with 2003 as the third-warmest October on record, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) said in a statement.

For the year through October, the average global temperature was 1.75°F (0.97°C) above average, topping the record set in 2015 by 0.18°F (0.1°C).

“With only two months left in the year, the globe remains on track to be one of the warmest years, if not the warmest, in the 122-year record,” the agency said.

It said temperatures had begun to fall because of the La Nina weather pattern. It is characterized by unusually cold temperatures in the equatorial Pacific Ocean.

Among standout last month, Alaska and Finland had the driest Octobers on record. Africa also noted the second-warmest October, behind the record set in 2015. The US weather agency’s report comes as negotiators meet in Morocco to hammer out the fine points of the historic 2015 Paris accord aimed at staving off climate change.

Almost 200 nations reaffirmed support for the deal on Thursday. The talks which have been overshadowed by worries that US President-elect Donald Trump, who has called climate change a hoax, would pull out of the accord.

UN climate conference adopts declaration for action

MARRAKECH, Morocco — The United Nations climate conference on Thursday adopted a proclamation calling for the highest political commitment and solidarity in the fight against climate change, amid fears that the next US administration may change US policy in this regard.

“We call for the highest political commitment to combat climate change, as a matter of urgent priority,” said the proclamation adopted at the closing plenary session of the conference.

“We call for strong solidarity with those countries most vulnerable to the impacts of climate change, and underscore the need to support efforts aimed to enhance their adaptive capacity, strengthen resilience and reduce vulnerability,” read the document. This brief proclamation was issued to “signal a shift towards a new era of implementation and action on climate and sustainable development.”

The proclamation stressed that an “extraordinary” momentum on climate change generated worldwide this year is “irreversible” since “it is being driven not only by governments, but by science, business, and global action of all types at all levels.”

“Our task now is to rapidly build on that momentum, together, moving forward purposefully to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and to foster adaptation efforts, thereby benefiting and supporting the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development and its sustainable development goals,” it said.

The conference, which opened on 7 November to pave the way for the implementation of the landmark Paris Agreement, has been overshadowed by the unexpected win of Republican candidate Donald Trump in the US presidential election.

During his campaign, Trump described the issue of climate change as a “hoax” and vowed to cancel various actions taken by the Obama administration, including the US ratification of the Paris Agreement.

The statement also reaffirmed the goal of mobilizing 100 billion US dollars to help developing countries cope with climate change, but it doesn’t mention any clear timeline or roadmap for developed countries to provide this funding as promised in 2009.

According to US special envoy for climate change Jonathan Pershing, developed countries have pledged more than 60 million dollars to help developing countries build their capacity to report on their efforts in addressing climate change.

Greeks march to mark 1973 student revolt, protest against austerity

ATHENS — Thousands of Greeks vented frustration at their economic lot on Thursday as they marched in Athens to mark the anniversary of the bloody 1973 student uprising that helped topple the then-military junta.

Students, workers and pensioners helped lead protests attended by at least 100,000 people.

“We won’t become a generation of unemployment and fear,” reflecting widespread fury at the leftist-led government which signed up to more austerity as part a third international bailout, despite its pre-election promises.

Hundreds of police guarded the peaceful march to the Embassy of the United States, which supported the seven-year military dictatorship that collapsed in 1974. At the front of the procession, individuals held a blood-stained Greek flag which belonged to students engaged in the revolt which triggered an army crackdown.

Clashes between police and a separate, much smaller group broke out in the streets near the Athens Polytechnic University, to have been killed when tanks smashed its gates in 1973.

Several dozen hooded protesters threw petrol bombs at riot police and TV images showed thick clouds of tear gas rising into the air.

The annual march often becomes a focal point for protests against government policies amid rising public anger at the austerity measures demanded by the European Union and International Monetary Fund in exchange for loans.

“We want the government to do a true redistribution of wealth and, at long last, tax the wealthy. Not just pass the burden of the crisis onto the poor,” said Sotiris Vapordis, 58, a pensioner.

A group of self-proclaimed anarchist protesters occupied one of the Polytechnic University’s buildings: "We won’t forget the fallen of the war waged against society," they said in a statement on the Internet, referring to the financial crisis.

Since 2009, the debt crisis has shrunk Greece’s economy by about a quarter, putting thousands of Greeks out of work and shuttering businesses.

Many Greeks blame governments since the fall of the junta of driving the country to near-bankruptcy.

Iraq’s oil contracts make joining OPEC output cut more painful

LONDON/BAGHDAD — Iraq would have to compensate international oil companies for limits placed on their production, according to industry sources and documents seen by Reuters, further reducing the prospect it will join any OPEC deal to curb the group’s output.

The compensation — stipulated in contracts — would compound the financial hit of losing much-needed revenue from crude sales, if the cash-strapped country were to yield to OPEC entreaties to curtail national production.

OPEC member Iraq pays developers a fixed dollar-denominated fee for every barrel of oil produced in the south of the country — home to its biggest reserves — under technical service contracts agreed by the company to develop the 20-billion-barrel Rumaila field.

The compensation, according to the excerpt seen by Reuters, “may include, amongst other things, a revised field production schedule or an extension to the term or payment of all or part lost income to contractor”.

The compensation is in line with the technical service contracts in the south, including fields being developed by Anglo-Dutch Shell, US major Exxon Mobil and Italy’s Eni, according to industry sources.

A Shell spokeswoman said it did not comment on contracts. Exxon and Eni did not immediately reply to requests for comment.

A senior oil official with SOC told Reuters the country would not have to worry about curtailment clauses because it had no plans to limit production.

“When the contrary, we’re encouraging the foreign companies to raise production as much as they can,” said the official, who declined to be named as they are not authorized to speak publicly.

The Organisation of the Petroleum Exporting Countries agreed in Algiers in late September to limit its collective output to 32.5–33 million barrels per day (bpd). The group’s production hit a record 34.36 million bpd in October.

Iraq has asked to be exempted from output curbs, arguing it is still trying to regain market share lost when sanctions were imposed in the 1990s during the Saddam Hussein era, and that it needs to keep up a costly battle against Islamic State.

Longueuil, Quebec — It remains uncertain whether the European Commission will launch an infringement proceeding against Hungary’s nuclear project.

The European Commission has ended proceedings against Hungary over the award of a contract to Russia’s Rosatom to expand the Paks nuclear power plant, although it is still investigating the country’s funding for the project.

The Commission said in a filing that its infringement proceedings had closed on 17 November. EU rules allow public procurement without call for competition if the contract can only reasonably be given to one company.

Hungary has said that no supplier other than Rosatom would have met the government’s demand of keeping the plant in Hungarian state ownership permanently. Hungary plans to build two Russian VVER 1200 reactors for a total budget of 1.25 billion euros ($13.2 billion), of which 80 per cent will be financed by Russia and 20 per cent by Hungary.

Brussels honours French singer Polnareff by dressing up Manneken Pis

BRUSSELS — Brussels honoured French singer Michel Polnareff by dressing up the Manneken Pis, the Belgian capital’s iconic bronze statue of a boy urinating, in one of the singer’s exuberant stage costumes.

“I love it. I love it. It’s great fun,” Polnareff, who has sold around 60 million records during his 50-year career, told Reuters after the unveiling on Thursday night.

Polnareff, 72, rose to prominence in 1966 with the song “La Poupée qui fait non” (“The Doll That Says No”), where he was accompanied by future Led Zeppelin band members Jimmy Page and John Paul Jones.

Known for his colourful outfits, Polnareff followed up with many more French chart hits such as ‘Mes regrets’, ‘Le Bal des Laze’ and ‘Lettre à France’ and will perform at Forest National, one of Brussels’ largest concert halls, later on Friday.—Reuters

Late Mexican singer Juan Gabriel wins three Latin Grammys

LAS VEGAS — Late Mexican singer and actor Juan Gabriel finally won his first ever Latin Grammy on Thursday, taking album of the year for “Los Duo 2” and two other awards three months after his death.

Gabriel, one of world’s best-selling Latin singer-songwriters, also won for best traditional pop/vocal album, while his work for Puerto Rican singer India on “Intensamente India Con Canciones de Juan Gabriel” led her to a win for best salsa album.

Gabriel, who died in August at the age of 66 in California while on tour, had never won a Latin Grammy despite recording some 18 albums.

Colombians Shakira and Carlos Vives were the other big winners, taking home two Latin Grammys for their catchy summer song “La Bicicleta.”

“La Bicicleta,” the first collaboration between the two singers, won record and song of the year on a night that celebrated the best of Latin music.

Mexican sibling duo Jesse & Joy’s “Un Besito Mas” was declared the best contemporary pop/vocal album and Mexican-American guitar player Julieta Venegas won the rock/pop album Latin Grammy for “Algo Sucede.”

Colombian singer Manuel Medrano was named best new artist. The three-hour show featured a collaboration between Marc Anthony, the newly-crowned Latin Recording Academy’s person of the year, as well as Wisin, and Jesse & Joy. The assault on Sherawat took place on 11 November, AFP said.

“Sherawat was punched in the face and sprayed with tear gas by masked attackers who tried to steal her handbag,” the French news agency said, citing a police source.

The attackers fled without taking anything, a source close to the investigation told AFP.

Japan Post, others to set up firm to help elderly people nationwide

TOKYO — Japan Post Co. will launch a service to help the elderly with activities such as shopping and health management by forming a new company with a telecommunication company, a security service and other firms, company officials said on Friday.

The envisioned company aims to satisfy the increasing needs among the elderly in the rapidly aging society by providing house-to-house visits utilizing the existing network of Japan Post, which has more than 24,000 offices nationwide, the officials said.

The postal service firm and Japan Post Insurance Co., another unit under Japan Post Holdings Co., will hold a majority stake in the joint venture with six other firms such as NTT Docomo Inc. and Seicom Co., IBM Japan Ltd., Dai-ichi Life Holdings Inc., Sohgo Security Services Co., popularly known as ALSOK, and Dentsu Inc. are also expected to join the alliance, which aims to launch the service in February, the officials said.

Japan Post workers will visit customers once a month, and check on their health and notify family or medical institutions of results upon individual approval.

The postal workers can also deliver products from retail shops such as local supermarkets when an order is placed via a tablet computer, which has been specifically developed by IBM Japan. Japan Post Insurance and Dai-ichi Life will give advice on health, while Secom and Sohgo Security Services will provide staff round-the-clock who can call on customers suffering health problems and then report on their condition to their family if the relatives live away from them.

Skydiving magic, bungee dunk for Guinness World Records day

LONDON — From the highest dunk of a biscuit into a cup of tea by a bungee jumper to the most magic tricks performed during a skydive, the adventurous and imaginative are marking Guinness World Records Day on Thursday with all sorts of feats.

Thousands of people around the world are attempting new records for the occasion, which was launched to mark the day when the 100th millionth copy of the Guinness World Records book was sold and is now in its 12th year.

In Britain, Simon Berry took the Guinness World Records title for “highest dunk of a biscuit” after dipping a biscuit into a cup of tea from his 73-metre (239.5 ft) bungee rope.

Martin Rees did about 10 magic tricks while skydiving from roughly 15,000 feet to get his name into the record book.

In London, Paulo Gabriel da Silva Barros and Katyuca Lie Hoshiba were crowned the new title holders for “shortest married couple” with a combined height of 181.41 cm (71.42 inches).

“We hope our new record will encourage the world to look past the physical differences in others and understand all people should be treated equally,” they said in a statement.

In California, Skipper, a blue and gold macaw, was awarded the “most rings placed on a target by a parrot in one minute” title, with a total of 19 rings.

Basketball team the Harlem Globetrotters also secured records, including the titles for the “farthest basketball shot under one leg” at 15.98 metres.

In Japan, Keisuke Yokota secured the record for “the most traffic cones knocked down by a bird” with 26.

Australia's fitness guru Kayla Itsines led a mammoth exercise class for the titles of “most people performing squats” with 2,201 participants, “most people star jumping” with 2,192, “most people performing lunges” - 2,146 - “most people performing sit-ups” — 2,005, and “most people running in one place” — 2,195.

Separately, at a ceremony in Beirut on Wednesday, former Lebanese racing driver Nabil Karam broke his own Guinness World Records title when he was awarded two new records for having the largest collection of miniature cars, with 37,777 models, as well as 577 dioramas.

Nagoya castle warns structure could collapse in strong quake

NAGOYA — The Nagoya municipal government on Friday took the unusual step of posting a warning to tourists that they enter Nagoya Castle’s tower structure at their own risk due to the building being in danger of collapse in a strong earthquake.

Three signs were installed within the castle grounds to warn of the risk of entering the multistory building, whose concrete is degrading and therefore lacks resistance to tremors, or staff's instructions to evacuate.

The city is hoping to restore the castle’s tower, rebuilt in 1959 and which has two fish-like golden ornaments on the roof, within one year.

“Something happened, it would be the city’s responsibility. I’m angry” at the lack of progress, Kawamura said.

—Kyodo News

Unimpressed by the mayor’s move, an assembly member said, “He’s been this city’s mayor for years. Why call for (anti-earthquake) measures now? I’m amazed.”

The signs read: “After more than 50 years, the concrete and facilities are deteriorating. As a result, the main tower has insufficient earthquake resistant capabilities...In the event of an emergency earthquake alert or earthquake, please follow the security guard’s or staff’s instructions to evacuate.”

They continue that in the event of a temblor measuring upper 6 on the Japanese seismic scale of 1 to 7, the building poses “a high risk of collapse or destruction.”

Sachie Yokoyama, a 68-year-old woman from Aomori Prefecture who visited the castle with her colleagues, said the signs make her feel a little safer. “If the city is going to rebuild the castle anyway, I hope they spend enough time building a sturdier one.”

English Premier League sells China TV rights for $700 million

SINGAPORE — The English Premier League has sold its television rights in China to streaming service PPTV for $700 million (565 million pounds), a source familiar with the matter said, several times the size of past deals as it cashes in on a growing enthusiasm for football.

A spokesman for PPTV, part of retail group Suning (002024. SZ), confirmed a three-year deal that will kick in from the 2019/20 season. He did not comment on the value as the agreement has not yet been formalised.

“We were successful in our bid, but it hasn’t formally been signed yet,” said PPTV spokesman Sun Xiaobo. “We’ve definitely already won the tender.”

The Premier League has not confirmed the deal. PPTV is one of China’s largest streaming services and already owns the rights to Spain’s La Liga.

Under President Xi Jinping, China has been looking to expand its global presence in the sport. It has invested billions of dollars to develop grassroots football academies, brought high-profile players and managers into China from overseas, and is buying into global assets from Italian club Inter Milan to Manchester City.

The Premier League, for its part, has seen television revenues shoot up globally in recent years — back home in Britain, pay-TV group Sky (SKYB.L) last year agreed to pay 4.2 billion pounds ($5.21 billion) to show 126 live English Premier League matches a season from 2016 to 2019.

NBC last year paid around $1 billion for a six-year deal to broadcast the league in the United States until the end of the 2021/22 season, near double that of their prior three-year deal.

Beijing-based Super Sports Media is the current rights holders in China with local media reports suggesting they paid more than 1 billion yuan ($145.13 million) for a six-year deal until the end of the 2018/19 season.

The deal with PPTV will allow the English Premier League to tap into the growing market for pay-per-view online streaming and subscription services in China.

A 2014 survey by Repucom estimated there were 170 million fans of the English Premier League in China, while Chinese state media last year reported that some 350 million had tuned into matches beamed live from Britain.

Suning has been enthusiastic supporters of President Xi’s ambitious plans for China to become a dominant force in the global sports market.

The acquisition of nearly 70 per cent of Italian glamour club Inter for about $300 million in June was the first major step in its plan to create a global sports empire stretching from football clubs to online broadcasting.— Reuters

Djokovic thrashes Goffin, picks row with umpire

LONDON — Defending champion Novak Djokovic trounced stand-in David Goffin 6-1, 6-2 for a clean sweep of his group at the ATP World Tour Finals on Thursday but spiced up a leisurely afternoon of play with a row with the umpire.

There was more at stake last week in the final round robin clash between second-ranked Murray, the man who ended his 122-week reign as world number one last week, and fifth-seeded Milos Raonic, who did not face a single break point, became the first Canadian to reach the last four when he downed Thiem in straight sets.

There were no breaks in the opening set but Raonic stole his opponent’s serve in the first game of the second and did not look back, ending the contest on his second match point when Thiem netted a backhand.

Belgium world number 11 Goffin had been hanging around all week in case of a withdrawal. He tried his best to make a match of it but looked off the pace from the moment he double-faulted to give Djokovic his first break in the fourth game.

“Yesterday I was feeling a bit like I was on holiday,” Goffin, who would have received a cool $100,000 even if he had not been required for action, told reporters.

“All of a sudden someone tells you you have to play in front of 15,000 people against Novak.”

It was poor value for the O2 Arena crowd who probably expected something more competitive — not that Djokovic was too concerned. He was able to conserve energy for what could yet be a Sunday showdown with Andy Murray, the man who ended his 122-week reign as world number one last week.

After losing a colossal points lead over the Briton since beating him to win the French Open, Djokovic is now two wins away from grabbing it back.

He bristled at suggestions that it would be a surprise if he did achieve that by claiming a fifth successive London title.” — Reuters
