Aid flows into northern Rakhine

AID from the UN, the Rakhine State Government and NGOs has flowed into two local communities in northern Rakhine State, where unrest occurred following attacks by violent armed men on border posts on October 9 that killed nine police officers.

The Rakhine State Government and the organization One More delivered food to 318 households from five village tracts in Maungtaw Township yesterday. The aid included 79 bags of rice, 159 viss of cooking oil, 159 viss of beans, 159 viss of salt plus basic medicines.

Rakhine State Chief Minister U Nyi Pu, Mr Chris Carter, UN senior adviser for Rakhine state, and officials left Sittway for Maungtaw by watercraft on Friday morning and visited the villages of the two communities in the northern and southern parts of Maungtaw.

At a meeting with the Muslim community in Ducheertan Village, Ywathitkay Village and Ohntaw Village, Chief Minister U Nyi Pu expressed his delight at seeing an improved socio-economic situation for the residents, calling on them to abide by the law as the situation in Maungtaw District returns to normal.

“The two communities need to live in peaceful coexistence.”

The cyclone could still cause squalls and rough seas off and along the Myanmar coasts, with surface wind speeds reaching 35 miles per hour, the announcement said.

The weather bureau has warned fishing boats and vessels against the rough seas.

Cyclone Vardah in the Southeast Bay of Bengal has intensified into a severe cyclonic storm. It will continue to move west-northwestwards, gradually moving closer to the state of Andhra Pradesh on the coast in India. Tuberculosis cases in Mandalay increased by 56 over past 11 months

THE number of patients living with tuberculosis in Mandalay Region has risen to 635 this year from 579 last year, an increase of 56 cases, according to the 200-bed TB Special Hospital in Patheingyi Township in Mandalay Region.

According to figures collected over the past nine months, people between the ages of 30 and 50 were found to be the group most affected by the communicable disease, said Dr Moe Zaw, medical superintendent of the hospital.

Dr Moe Zaw said that the hospital continues to treat not only TB patients, but also patients with multi-drug resistant TB (MDR-TB), which is present among patients who have also contracted HIV. Some of them are being treated in the serious disease section of the hospital as in patients. The majority of TB patients are from Mandalay followed by Shan State, Sagaing Region and Magway Region.

A specialist in infectious diseases at the 200-bed TB Special Hospital established in 1996 said the disease has strong correlations to poverty and sub-standard living condition. “TB cases are reported mostly in peri-urban areas. The outbreaks of the cases are linked to living standards. A decline in the poverty rate may reduce the outbreak of the disease,” the specialist said.

According to a World Health Organisation survey, Myanmar has one of the highest burdens of tuberculosis in the world with an estimated 180,000 new cases of TB every year, more than 40,000 of them in children. It is estimated that over 20,000 people die from TB each year. About 9,000 people are annually diagnosed with multi-drug resistant TB.

The WHO report shows that there are approximately 500,000 people with MDR-TB around the world. In Myanmar, it is found that about 5 per cent of new TB patients have MDR-TB.

Solomon Islands scrambles to reach areas hit by second major quake

SYDNEY — The Solomon Islands plans to dispatch emergency supplies to areas affected by a 6.9 magnitude aftershock on Saturday, a day after a much larger tremor triggered a tsunami warning that sent hundreds of coastal people fleeing into the hills.

General Secretary of the Solomon Islands Red Cross Joanne Zoleveke said the supply boat could take almost 24 hours to reach Makira Island, which lies close to the epicentre of Friday’s deeper 7.8 magnitude earthquake.

Both quakes triggered tsunami warnings which were lifted a short time later.

“We are working with the National Disaster Office of the Government and we’ve mobilised our emergency response teams to accompany the government officers and other international non-governmental organisations that are going on this boat,” Zoleveke said.

Makira Island’s airstrip services small planes incapable of shuttling the volume of aid required for the relief effort.

“We still don’t have that much detail but we know people are really affected by what’s happened,” Zoleveke said.

Zoleveke said based on reports received by two-way radio, Friday’s quake caused significant damage and forced people from homes in the town of Kirakira on Makira Island, about 200 km from the Pacific Island nation’s capital of Honiara.

She said she knew of only one reported casualty, a 25-year-old with non-specific injuries. The remoteness of the region and the failure of communications meant it was impossible to know the full extent of any injuries or damage, she said.

Australia has provided A$50,000 ($37,235) worth of supplies and a helicopter to undertake an initial assessment of affected areas to help target relief efforts, Zoleveke said.

Suzy Sainovski of World Vision in Honiara said staff from the humanitarian organisation in Kirakira saw people fleeing to higher ground.

“One of the reasons we need to get them shelter assistance (is) because it’s the start of the wet season here,” Sainovski said.

Japan launches cargo spaceship to take supplies to ISS

TANEGASHIMA, Japan — Japan launched a rocket late Friday carrying an unmanned cargo ship loaded with supplies for the International Space Station.

The H-2B rocket carrying the Kounotori6 cargo transporter blasted off from the Tanegashima Space Centre in Kagoshima Prefecture in southwestern Japan at 10:26 pm.

If successfully put into orbit around the Earth, the spaceship is expected to dock with the space station on Tuesday, according to the Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency.

The cargo spaceship is carrying 5.9 tons of supplies including food, drinking water and other daily necessities for astronauts on board the ISS, seven ultrasmall satellites developed by some universities and firms, and Japanese-made lithium-ion batteries for use on the space station.

The launch of the Kounotori was delayed from its originally scheduled 1 October launch due to a leak in its piping. —Kyodo News

Thailand’s poor people get giveaway cash from govt banks

BANGKOK — Nearly 7 million people, officially categorised as “impoverished,” are receiving a sum of giveaway cash from government banks throughout Thailand.

Under condition set by the Ministry of Finance, those who may earn no more than 30,000 baht (about 857 US dollars) per year are entitled to 3,000 baht (about 85.7 US dollars) and those who may earn more than 30,000 baht but less than 100,000 baht (about 2,857 US dollars) per year are entitled to 1,500 baht (about 42.8 US dollars) in giveaway cash. According to an official of the ministry, about 8.27 million Thais had earlier filed for the government’s grant nationwide.

However, 6.98 million of those people were certified by the authorities as eligible to the giveaway cash, the official said.

Prime Minister Prayut Chan-o-cha earlier commented that the government’s grant was not a populist campaign and that it was merely meant to help stimulate the country’s grassroots economy.

Beginning on Saturday until the end of this month, the eligible poor can get money from the government banks — the Bank for Agriculture and Agricultural Cooperatives, the Government Savings Bank and Krung Thai Bank. The money is available via ATMs throughout the country. —Xinhua
Japan SDF in South Sudan may withdraw if security worsens: defence chief

TOKYO — Japanese Defence Minister Tomomi Inada has said Self-Defence Forces personnel stationed in South Sudan to take part in UN peacekeeping operations could withdraw if the security situation deteriorates with a protracted gangfight.

“The situation could abruptly change so we will consistently gather necessary information for ensuring safety,” Inada said in a recent interview with Kyodo News and other media before SDF members become ready Monday to perform their new task of rescuing UN staff and others in response to an urgent request.

Inada said she is “not concerned” about the new mission in line with Japan’s new security legislation, which provides them with more leeway in the country’s war-renouncing Constitution. The SDF troops “are well trained” and the chief commanding the unit in South Sudan “is a person who can assess the situation calmly,” the minister added. In the capital Juba, more than 270 people died in July due to a large-scale clash between government forces and rebels. While admitting that the overall security situation in South Sudan is tough, the Japanese government has said Juba is relatively calm. “If a gun battle lasts longer than the (July) fighting, and the SDF cannot secure their safety, it is possible that we would consider their withdrawal,” Inada said.

The new role legally includes a rescue operation of foreign military personnel but Inada said such a scenario “is not expected in actual situations. Foreign troops can protect themselves.”

The rescue mission remains controversial at home, with some critics warning that the new role could lead SDF members to become embroiled in overseas military actions for the first time since World War II, in possible violation of the postwar Constitution.—Kyodo News

Aussie experts call for ‘9-to-5’ work week to be scrapped during heatwaves

CANBERRA — Health and weather experts in Australia have called for the traditional 9-to-5, 38-hour work week to be revised in the case of extreme heatwaves.

Dr Peng Bi, professor of Public Health at the University of Adelaide, said on Saturday that as Australia continues to experience more heatwaves during the brutal summer months, workplaces need to adjust accordingly so worker health is not put at unnecessary risk. He told the Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC) that working traditional hours in a heatwave could be detrimental to the health of many workers — particularly older workers and pregnant women, for example.

“During a heatwave, the 38-hour, nine-to-five week may not be the best thing, if the most healthy way to work,” Peng said.

“I reckon some regulations should be set up to get employers to pay attention to the occupational health and safety of their employees,” he said.

Peng said lawmakers should consider drafting legislation which would amend Australia’s health and safety laws to accommodate the changing climate.—Xinhua

Security council meets on North Korea human rights despite China opposition

UNITED NATIONS — The United Nations Security Council discussed Friday what a senior UN official described as “appalling human rights violations” in North Korea despite a failed attempt by China to stop the third annual meeting on the issue.

China’s UN Ambassador Liu Jieyi said the Security Council was “not a forum for discussing human rights issues and still less for the politicization of the human rights issue.”

“Given the current context, where a plethora of dire challenges are confronting international peace and security, the council should scrupulously honour its responsibility and focus on issues concerning international peace and security with undivided attention,” Liu told the 15-member council.

China, an ally of Pyongyang, called a rare procedural vote to stop the meeting. Nine countries voted to hold the meeting — the minimum required — while Angola, China, Egypt, Russia and Venezuela were against.

Senegal abstained.

US Ambassador to the United Nations Samantha Power told the council that Pyongyang had displayed increasingly aggressive behavior throughout 2016 by conducting a record number of missile launches and two nuclear tests.

“We see the DPRK (North Korea) regime grow its illicit weapons program rather than growing its own children,” Power said, citing World Health Organisation data that one in four North Korean children suffers stunted growth from malnutrition.

She warned North Korea’s human rights situation was “so bad that we are methodically documenting your abuses and your impunity will not last forever.”

The impeachment, which has to be reviewed and approved by a nine-judge Constitutional Court within 180 days to remove Park from office, sets the stage for her to become the country’s first elected leader to be ousted in disgrace.

Park, 64, the daughter of a former military ruler, is accused of colluding with a friend and a former aide, both of whom prosecutors have indicted, to pressure big businesses to donate to foundations set up to back her maiden campaign.

If Park leaves office early, an election must be held within 60 days. She would also lose presidential immunity from prosecution. Prosecutors have named Park as an accomplice in their investigation.

Earlier, the Bank of Korea said the financial market impact of the impeachment appeared to be limited after a meeting to review policy measures that it may take. Governor Lee Ju-yol asked for close monitoring of the markets.

After impeachment, South Korea prime minister urges calm, vigilance

SEOUL — South Korea’s prime minister sought to calm anxiety over national security and to reassure financial markets on Saturday after the over-week-long impeachment vote, and with more protests against Park due later on Saturday, called on authorities to ensure that rallied are peaceful.

“So far, financial and foreign exchange markets have been relatively stable and there are no signs of unusual movements by the North, but all public servants should bear vigilance in mind as they conduct their duties,” Hwang told a meeting.

He said national security was the priority and reiterated that the military should be on high alert for any provocation by old rival North Korea, including the possibility of cyber attacks aimed at sowing confusion in the South.

Park’s powers were suspended after 234 of parliament’s 300 members voted to impeach her, meaning more than 60 members of her own party backed the move against her.

“South Korea’s national security is on high alert for any provocation by North Korea,” Hwang said.

“North Korean human rights situation is ‘so bad’ that we are methodically documenting your abuses and your impunity will not last forever. The start, not the end,” he said.

If Park leaves office early, an election must be held within 60 days. She would also lose presidential immunity from prosecution. Prosecutors have named Park as an accomplice in their investigation.

CIA says Russia intervened to help Trump win White House

WASHINGTON — The CIA has concluded that Russia intervened in the 2016 election to help President-elect Donald Trump win the White House, and not just to undermine confidence in the US electoral system, a senior US official said on Friday.

US intelligence agencies have assessed that as the 2016 presidential campaign drew to a close, Russian government officials devoted increasing attention to assisting Donald Trump’s effort to win the election, the US official familiar with the finding told Reuters on Friday night on condition of anonymity.

Citing US officials briefed on the matter, the Washington Post reported on Friday that intelligence agencies had identified individuals with connections to the Russian government who parted with thousands of hacked emails from the Democratic National Committee and others, including the chairman of Hillary Clinton’s presidential campaign, to WikiLeaks.

US President Barack Obama ordered intelligence agencies to review cyber attacks and foreign intervention into the 2016 election and deliver a report before he leaves office on 20 January, the White House said on Friday.

As summer turned to fall, Russian hackers turned almost all their attention to the Democrats. Virtually all the emails they released publicly were potential damage to Clinton and the Democrats, the official told Reuters.

“That was a major clue to their intent,” the official said. “If all they wanted to do was discredit our political system, why publicize the failings of just one party, especially when you have a target like Trump?”

A second official familiar with the report said the intelligence analysts’ conclusion about Russia’s motives does not mean the intelligence community believes that Moscow’s efforts altered or significantly affected the outcome of the election.

Russian officials have denied all accusations of interference in the US election.

A CIA spokeswoman said the agency had no comment on the matter.

The hacked emails passed to WikiLeaks were a regular source of embarrassment to the Clinton campaign during the race for the presidency.

US intelligence analysts have assessed that at some point in the extended presidential campaign Russian President Vladimir Putin’s government had decided to try to bolster Trump’s chances of winning.

The Russians appear to have concluded that Trump had a shot at winning and that he would be much friendlier to Russia than Clinton would be, especially on issues such as maintaining economic sanctions and imposing additional ones, the official said.

Moscow is launching a similar effort to influence the next German election, following an escalating campaign to promote far-right and nationalist political parties and individuals in Europe that began more than a decade ago, the official said.—Reuters

French election’s ‘third man’ kicks off campaign for presidency

PARIS — France’s popular former economy minister, Emmanuel Macron, has vowed to campaign for the French presidency into gear with a rally in Paris on Saturday, which should mark him out as a dark horse in the race for the Elysée.

The 38-year-old Macron, once a protege of President Francois Hollande, has facedering criticism from the Socialists for deciding to stand as an independent in the 2017 election outside of the party structure.

He has steadfastly refused pleas — most recently by former prime minister Manuel Valls who is seeking the Socialist party ticket — to join the Left in an attempt to decide on a single candidate for next spring’s election.

Macron, a former investment banker, will be going for a turnaround of more than 5,000 at his rally on Saturday, eclipsing last weekend’s modest gathering by the Socialist party grassroots who deposed struggling to re-energise the faithful at a gathering that drew only 2,500 supporters.

Polls show there is little chance of any left-wing candidate reaching the run-off next May and, barring an upset, the stage seems set for a head-to-head between conservative Francois Fillon and far-right leader Marine Le Pen.

Fillon, a centre-right former prime minister who has pledged to cut deep into the public sector, would easily beat the anti-immigrant and anti-euro Le Pen, taking two thirds of the vote if the polls are correct.

Macron quit as economy minister in the Valls government after he spearheaded his own political movement called “En Marche”, which translates as “Forward” or “Onwards”.

Promising to be “neither on the left nor on the right”, he is widely seen as a wild card in an election that will be fought on high unemployment, national security and immigration.

Some say he could fragment the left-wing electorate and enhance Le Pen’s chances of reaching the presidential ballot next May.

Opinion polls show him consistently ahead of Socialist candidates such as Valls who will compete for the party ticket in late January.—Reuters

Death toll rises as cargo train explodes in Bulgaria

SOFIA — At least five people were killed and 25 injured when a cargo train derailed and exploded in the northeastern Bulgarian village of Hitrino, demolishing around 20 buildings, police said on Saturday.

At least three of the victims remain in critical condition and the number is likely to rise, authorities said.

“There will be more casualties for sure,” outgoing Bulgarian Prime Minister Boiko Borisov said after arriving to the village, some 280 km northeast of capital Sofia and home to around 800 people. Seven of the train’s tanks, carrying propane-butane and propylene, derailed at the station in the village, hit electricity line and exploded in flames on Saturday, National Railway Infrastructure Company’s general director Mincho Lambrev said.—Reuters

France seeks to extend state of emergency until July — PM Cazeneuve

PARIS — The French government will propose extending the state of emergency until July 15 2017 due to presidential and parliament elections in spring next year, prime minister Bernard Cazeneuve said on Saturday.

The Socialist government imposed the state of emergency, which gives police extended powers to search and arrest, in November 2015 following the attacks on Paris last year.

The extension needs to be approved by parliament, which will debate the proposal on Tuesday. The senate will review it on Thursday.—Reuters

Two runners die at Xiamen Half-Marathon

XIAMEN (China) — Two Chinese runners died on Saturday after they collapsed at Xiamen International Half-Marathon in southeast China’s Fujian province, according to the local organizing committee.

A runner, with the surname Lin, fell down and suffered sudden heart failure with 4.5 kilometers to go before the finish. The other runner, surname Wu, fell down after crossing the finish line.

Both runners were given first aid by medical staff and immediately sent to hospital, where they were pronounced dead.

The organisers expressed their deep condolences to the runners’ families. The Xiamen International Half-Marathon used to be a spin-off race of the annual IAAF gold label race Xiamen International marathon, which will be staged on 2 January 2017, and has been separated as an independent race since 2016. The organisers did not demand compulsory physical exams in the registration process for participants.—Xinhua

China, Japan agree on early launch of air, maritime contact system

HAIKOU — China and Japan have agreed to work for the creation of an air and maritime contact system between their defence ministries as early as possible.

The agreement was reached during the sixth round of high-level consultations on maritime affairs between the two countries’ various departments, held from Wednesday to Friday in China’s southern city of Haikou.

They also agreed to hold the first meeting of expert discussions on marine environment before March 2017, and expand information exchanges to jointly crack down on transnational crimes such as smuggling and drug trafficking. The two sides pledged to beef up cooperation on fisheries management and sign a marine search and rescue agreement as early as possible.—Xinhua

Vucic: We are considering 25-year concession for airport

BELGRADE — The Serbian government is considering offering a 25-year concession for Belgrade’s Nikola Tesla Airport, which would bring a 350-400 mln euro advance payment and a further 10-11 mln every year, PM Aleksandar Vucic said on Friday.

A decision has not yet been made, but the government is closest to offering a concession, he said.

“We would go for an advance payment for the entire contract and an annual concession fee. A tender procedure would be opened and I think we would be able to secure a 25-year concession,” Vucic said. Talks about this are underway with concession adviser Lazard Freres, Vucic added.—Tanjug

VERYTHING or every individual is impermanent. In other words, all are being consumed by time. Very often, we see and hear news about devastation caused by natural disasters and great destruction caused by wars. These are, in fact, the ruins of physical properties. With the increasing population, we need to build more and more for living, storing or applying for such-and-such a purpose. For our increasingly urbanized society, urban renewal and urban sprawl projects are urgently needed. At such a time, some old buildings and unimportant ones need demolishing. Some may be very old, but if it is regarded to be things of sentimental value to them, it is required to keep intact. That is to say, if people cherish and value these old buildings, we are responsible to maintain them.

Each country has its own characteristics: culture, customs and traditions, language, art and literature. Undeniably, these distinguish us from others. Socially unacceptable ideas and habits disappear naturally. But we need to keep our own image. Our na-ton owes its existence to the maintenance of these characteristics by our ancestors, our language of which is an important factor. Here I would like to express my emphatic regret about our mother tongue, “Myanmar Language.”

It is none other than colonization of Myanmar usages used only in Facebook, during recent times. We can see people like and want to be avante-garde. Yet, this can be said to be destroying the Mya-anmar language accidentally. Otherwise, Myanmar is generally said to be a monosyllabic language and many words are corrupted Pali words. Out of the new words they have invented, a few are presented here. “Nyil-lay” is a combined word— Nyi and Lay, the former is meant for brother and the latter for younger. Now some are writing and calling each other, “Ngay-yay-se” which means nothing. Similarly, “Mingasaung-haazol” is being used for “Mingalar-saung-haazol.” Mingalar-saung is a corrupted Pali word and it has a good meaning—aus-spiciousness.” “Baw-a-oo” is replacing “Baw-a-so” that means life.

It will be an endless task to name all these neo-nonsense-words. Before we recognize it, many of these will have been lost in our youth. They may be using these terms for pleasure, seeming to fail to notice that they are destroying their language as well as themselves. There seems to be an element of hyperbole in such a claim that this is a big problem for the country. This problem of misuse of words will continue due to our indifference. It is just a matter of time before our most cherished language will be on the brink of extinction. The government, Ministy of Education, teachers, all literary workers and conscientious people who love our language are responsible to solve this problem.

Pali is a spoken language, not a written one. But it based on a systematic Pali grammar. It has no alphabets and writings, All Buddhist teachings were transcribed into Sanskrit. Wonderfully enough, Theravada Sayadaws maintained it for an enormous period of time. We need to note that the Pali language was not built in a day, but it can be ruined in a moment. Something new is being built, and old things are being destroyed and renovated. Let us protect our language from being harmed by our carelessness, understanding the sentimental value of our cultural heritage from the deepest part of our souls.

N December 6, I heard the CNN news referring to Mr Kofi Annan, the former UN secretary-general as saying that he hoped for humanitarian aid workers and media men to have an access to the place very soon, in which violent armed attacks originated, making people convinced of the Rakhine Af-airs.

The above statement was made by Mr Kofi Annan, chair-m An of the Advisory Commission on Rakhine State during the visit to the northern area of Rakhine area in the state of instability, accompanied by the commission members.

As regards the fact, the Mirror Daily describes in its Decemmaw, the military sector plays an important role in protecting the benefits of Rakhine State. Yet, it is necessary to take careful attention of protecting rights of civilians in the region. In terms of these, there had had prolonged arguments. Some governments say that security needs to be prioritized with freedom of civilians to be reduced, severed or suspended as needed depending upon situations, in fighting against terrorism. In my opinion, it is a questionable one whether security

UK retail sales in November show strongest growth in 14 months — BDO

LONDON — Britain’s retailers enjoyed their strongest monthly sales growth for 14 months in November, helped by a return to growth in the fashion sector for the first time since January, industry data showed on Saturday.

UK high street sales rose 1.7 per cent year-on-year in November, according to BDO, the accountancy and business advisory firm.

Like-for-like growth in consumer spending has been one of the main things sustaining Britain’s economy since June’s vote to leave the European Union. But many retailers expect to have to raise prices next year, probably squeezing consumer demand.

“Consumer spending may appear to be robust for now as many people are having a final shopping spree while the economy is exceeding growth expectations,” Sophie Michael, head of retail and wholesale at BDO, said.

“(But) the challenges facing retailers continue to mount, which will inevitably impact on retailers’ costs and consumers’ disposable income and the question is ‘when’ not ‘if’ the spending squeeze will come.”

The BDO data contrasts with more subdued numbers from the British Retail Consortium, published on 6 December — a disparity which may be partly explained by the slightly longer period of the BDO data.— Reuters

Bitcoin hits highest levels in almost three years

LONDON — Web-based digital currency bitcoin hit its highest levels in almost three years on Friday, extending gains since India sparked a cash shortage by removing high-denomination banknotes from circulation a month ago.

Bitcoin was trading as high as $774 on the New York-based itBit exchange, up almost 1 per cent on the day and the highest since February 2014, having climbed almost 9 per cent in the past month.

Bitcoin is a cash alternative that can be used for moving money across the globe quickly and anonymously with no need for a central authority to process transactions. It has climbed around 80 per cent so far this year, far exceeding its 35 per cent rise in 2015.

The cryptocurrency’s value has been highly volatile — after rocketing above $1,100 in 2013, it had fallen to around $510 by early 2015. But it has since stabilized, staying above $500 for the past six months.— Reuters

Samsung to disable Note 7 phones in the US via software update

NEW YORK — Samsung Electronics Co Ltd said on Friday that a software update for Galaxy Note 7 smartphones will be released mid-December in the United States preventing them from charging and functioning as mobile phones, rendering them useless.

The smartphone maker said that more than 93 per cent of all recalled Galaxy Note 7 devices had been returned as a part of its exchange programme in the United States.

The US Transportation Department and other agencies in October ordered Galaxy Note 7 owners from carrying the devices or stowing them in checked baggage during flights following reports of fires in replacement Note 7 devices.

However, Verizon Communications Inc said it would not take part in the update because of the added risk this could pose to Galaxy Note 7 users that do not have another device to switch to.— Reuters

Hawkish Fed a potential speed bump for stock bulls

NEW YORK — Next week’s Federal Reserve meeting and possible signals on the pace of rate hikes for next year could pose the biggest risk yet to the rally the US stock market has seen since last month’s presidential election.

While investors have long anticipated the Fed will raise rates at the 13-14 December meeting — in what would be its first such move in a year and second in nearly a decade — the worry for some stock investors is that the Fed takes a more aggressive stance on inflation and future hikes.

Stocks have set a string of record highs since the 8 November election on hopes of a pickup in US economic growth, thanks to President-elect Donald Trump’s promises of increased infrastructure spending, lower taxes and easier regulations.

US investors seem optimistic about prospects of future growth, but the question remains if the Fed does as well.

The US central bank should announce new economic forecasts next week, along with a rate hike. If inflation is expected to pick up quickly, the Fed may need to raise rates faster than investors expect, and that could be a negative for US stocks.

“If they believe that inflation is going to march higher and more rapidly ... That would give the market reason to pause,” said Quincy Krosby, market strategist at Prudential Financial in Newark, New Jersey.

“I don’t think investors want to hear that this is going to be an aggressive Fed.”

Fed Chair Janet Yellen will more likely want to reassure investors that the transition to higher rates will be gradual, she said.

Last December, the Fed raised rates for the first time in nearly a decade, and later signaled four more hikes would come in 2016. But the outlook quickly changed as the economy did not pick up speed, oil prices fell further and the stock market plunged at the start of 2016.

Next week, “the market is going to try to key off of whether we are going to fall into the one-to-two (hikes), or the three-to-four for 2017,” said Jason Ware, chief investment officer at Albion Financial Group in Salt Lake City.

“If in the statement and the discussion afterwards it appears that the Fed is getting more concerned that they are behind the curve and they have to tighten more aggressively than the market currently expects, that could knock stocks back.” — Reuters
Syrian army rushes forces to historic Palmyra in IS battle

BEIRUT — The Syrian army said it has sent reinforcements to Palmyra, where Islamic State fighters have advanced to its outskirts in some of the heaviest fighting since the group lost the historic city earlier this year.

The group had taken over areas to the northwest and southeast of Palmyra, and clashes continued on Saturday, the army said in a statement.

A rebel commander from the Jaish al-Mujahideen group based in the Aleppo countryside said the IS attack was forcing the Syrian government to divert troops from Aleppo, where the army and its allies are on the verge of a major victory against rebels.

The army did not specify where reinforcements were brought from.

Islamic State’s assault, which began late on Thursday, has killed dozens of Syrian soldiers and quickly taken over grain silos and control of some oil and gas fields around Palmyra, monitoring group the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said.

A statement by Islamic State’s Amaq online news agency said the militants had pushed towards Palmyra airport on the town’s eastern outskirts, which Russian forces have been using to support the Syrian army.

A US-led coalition which is separately fighting against the jihadist militants said late on Friday it had carried out 168 IS oil tanker trucks near Palmyra in a large air raid.—Reuters

US allies caution Trump on Syria strategy

WASHINGTON/PARIS — Key US allies in Europe are quietly expressing concern over President-elect Donald Trump’s approach to Syria, warning that his pledge to work more closely with Russia, Damascus’ main backer, will do little to diminish the terrorist threat emanating from Syria.

The diplomatic persuasion campaign has taken on new importance in recent days as the Syrian army, backed by Russia, Iran and Shi’ite militias, appears poised to retake all of Aleppo city in a major defeat for Western-backed rebels.

Moscow and Syrian President Bashar al-Assad are expected to cast Aleppo’s fall as the end of a revolt against Assad that began in March 2011, although Western analysts predict the civil war, which has killed more than 300,000 people and made more than half of Syrians homeless, will continue, perhaps for years.

Western diplomats, who described discussions with Trump advisers on condition of anonymity, said their message was that a US alliance with Russia, and by extension Assad, to crush groups like Islamic State will backfire.

Trump has said defeating Islamic State was a higher priority than persuading Assad to step down.

“On Syria the new administration says crushing Islamic State is its priority, but we’ve explained our view that without a political solution in Syria those efforts will be fruitless because new pockets of radicals will reform,” a senior French diplomat told Reuters.

France has been the target of coordinated attacks claimed by Islamic State. Western capitals fear that a prolonged conflict will exacerbate mass refugee flows in which radicalized individuals might hide.

A political solution in Syria, as envisioned by Western powers, would involve a transition in which Assad eventually left power. Assad, from the minority Alawite sect, cannot unite Syria and quash extremists after nearly six years of warfare, they argue.

In a rare public speech in London on Thursday, Alex Younger, chief of Britain’s MI-6 intelligence agency, said, “we cannot be safe from the threats that emanate from (Syria) unless the civil war is brought to an end. And brought to an end in a way that recognizes the interests of more than a minority of its people and their international backers.”

Trump has frequently said that he wants to work with Russia to fight Islamic State, which holds territory in Iraq and Syria, and other militant groups.

“When you think about it, wouldn’t it be nice if we got along with Russia?” he said during a campaign rally in July. “Wouldn’t it be nice if we got together with Russia and knocked the hell out of ISIS?” Trump added, using another name for Islamic State.

US defence officials have repeatedly said the vast majority of Russian strikes in Syria are not against Islamic State.

How Trump will actually proceed remains unclear. He has not named a secretary of state, and some current and prospective members of the president-elect’s national security team have voiced more skeptical views of Russia.

Trump’s transition team did not immediately respond to a request for comment on the allies’ concerns.

“Whatever we’re getting from our conversations with the Trump administration is that already they are toning down the prospect of a Russia-US deal on fighting Islamic State and a full-on rapprochement with Moscow,” the senior French diplomat said.

A senior Arab diplomat also was cautious about Trump’s Syria policy.

“We can’t really predict it now,” the diplomat said.

A diplomat from another US ally, while declining to discuss the American political transition, expressed doubts about the advisability of a Western alignment with Moscow and Assad.—Reuters

Drone strike kills militant linked to Charlie Hebdo attack

WASHINGTON — A US drone strike in Syria has killed an Islamic State militant linked to the 7 January 2015 attack on satirical weekly Charlie Hebdo in Paris, defence officials said on Friday.

Boubaker el Hakim was killed late last month in Raqqa, the Islamic State’s de facto capital in Syria, the officials said, adding he was believed to be involved with planning the attack.

Charlie Hebdo, known for its satirical covers gleefully ridiculing political and religious leaders, lost many of its top editorial staff when brothers Cherif and Said Kouachi, armed with assault rifles and other weapons, broke into an editorial meeting and killed 12 people and wounded 11 others.

The attacks prompted a worldwide solidarity movement, with the “Je Suis Charlie” (I am Charlie) slogan going viral on social media.

Islamic State, which has controlled parts of Iraq and Syria in recent years, has lost some territory this year to Iraqis and Syrians supported by a US-led coalition of air strikes and advisers. Apart from the killings at Charlie Hebdo, Islamic State sympathizers around the world have carried out other shootings and bombings of civilians.—Reuters
Michael took a very special trip last month. He went back to Fullerton, his home town. His visit to Fullerton was very special to him. He was born there, he grew up there, but he hadn’t been back there since he finished high school.

He went to places he hadn’t gone to in years. He walked through the park in the center of town and remembered the days he had walked through the same park with his first girlfriend. Her passed by the empty field where he and his friends had played baseball every day after school. And he stood for a while in front of the movie theater and thought about all the Saturday afternoons he had spent there sitting in the balcony, watching his favorite movie heroes and eating popcorn.

He did things he hadn’t done in a long time. He had some homemade ice cream at the ice cream shop, rode on the merry-go-round in the park, and went fishing at the lake on the outskirts of town. For a while, he felt like a kid again. He hadn’t had homemade ice cream, ridden on a merry-go-round, or gone fishing since he was a young boy.

He also saw people he hadn’t seen in years. He visited several of his old neighbors who had never moved out of the neighborhood. He said hello to the owners of the candy store near his house. And he even bumped into Mrs. Riley, his tenth-grade science teacher. United States, Russia, trade barbs at European security meeting

HAMBURG — The Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) remained divided over the conflict in eastern Ukraine at the end of a two-day meeting in Hamburg, with the United States accusing Russia of blocking a resolution.

German Foreign Minister Frank-Walter Steinmeier, OSCE chairman for the past year, said that even though no formal resolution on eastern Ukraine had been signed, ministers agreed on the need for the parties involved in the war to meet their commitments to end the violence.

But the US ambassador to the OSCE, Daniel Baer, blasted Russia for what he called its ongoing “obstructionism”.

He said many of the few resolutions ultimately adopted were “weakened considerably” by Russia, while others, notably on human rights and the Ukraine crisis, were blocked outright.

“It’s really important to recognise that on most things in the OSCE today there is still consensus among 55 or 56 of the participating states,” Baer told reporters. “It sends a political signal that Russia is isolated.”

Russia added the Black Sea peninsula of Crimea from Kiev in March 2014, and went on to back a rebellion in east Ukraine. The conflict has claimed nearly 10,000 lives and efforts at implementing a peace agreement, brokered by Germany and France, have stalled for nearly two years.

Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov in turn accused Washington of stalling talks about evacuating remaining rebel-held parts of the Syrian city of Aleppo, which is on the verge of falling to Moscow-backed Syrian government forces.— Reuters

Germans see refugees as biggest problem despite falling numbers

BERLIN — More than half of Germans see refugees and integration as Germany’s biggest problem, a survey showed on Friday, despite the number of newcomers falling significantly on the year.

A record 890,000 mainly Muslim migrants from the Middle East, Africa and elsewhere arrived in Europe’s largest economy in 2015, prompting concerns about security and integration.

Arrivals have slowed this year, with the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF) saying on Friday around 305,000 new asylum seekers were registered in its ‘EASY’ computer system in the first 11 months of 2016; but ‘EASY’ numbers are seen as too high as some migrants registered more than once. The BAMF received 26,438 asylum applications in November — a fall of around 54 per cent on the year.

Nonetheless, a survey by pollster Forschungsgruppe Wahlen for broadcaster ZDF found 58 per cent of Germans deem refugees and integration the most important problems facing Germany.

Chancellor Angela Merkel’s popularity has waned since migrants started arriving in large numbers last summer and she expects next year’s federal election, in which she plans to run for a fourth term, to be “tough like no other”.

Merkel, whose conservatives have lost support to the anti-immigrant Alternative for Germany (AfD) party, hardened her stance on migrants’ integration in Germany at a congress this week and her Christian Democrats (CDU) passed a resolution on tackling forced marriage and honor killings, and cracking down on dual citizenship.— Reuters

OPEC, Russia see smooth road to global deal on output cut

VIENNA — Russia and Saudi Arabia said they expect OPEC and non-OPEC producers to reach an agreement on Saturday to curtail oil output and prop up prices in the first such joint move since 2001.

“We have a deal already. We are just putting the final touches. Everything is good!” Khalid al-Falih, energy minister of OPEC’s de facto leader and top oil exporter Saudi Arabia, told reporters.

Russian Energy Minister Alexander Novak, speaking as he joined a breakfast with OPEC and non-OPEC ministers in Vienna, said: “I don’t see such risks (of a deal failing).”

The Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries will meet producers from outside the group later in the day, hoping non-OPEC will commit to cutting 600,000 barrels per day after its own members agreed a reduction of 1.2 million bpd last week.

OPEC Secretary-General Mohammed Barkindo said he expected 12 non-OPEC countries to sign a declaration with the organisation and fully contribute to cuts of 600,000 bpd or more.

“This is a very historic meeting ... This will boost the global economy and will help some OECD countries to reach their inflation targets,” Barkindo said.

He said many of the few resolutions ultimately adopted were “weakened considerably” by Russia, while others, notably on human rights and the Ukraine crisis, were blocked outright.

Scientists detect radiation from Fukushima disaster on US west coast

NEW YORK — Scientists have for the first time detected radiation from Japan’s 2011 Fukushima nuclear disaster on the west coast of the United States, local media reported.

The radioactive matter, in the form of an isotope known as cesium-134, was collected in seawater samples from Tillamook Bay and Gold Beach in the U.S. northwest state of Oregon, according to a report released by New York Post Friday.

The levels are very low and cannot harm people eating fish from the West Coast or swimming in the ocean, Ken Buessel, a senior scientist at Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution, was quoted as saying by USA Today.

“Put it in context, if you were to swim everyday for six hours a day in those waters for a year, that additional radiation from the addressed cesium from Japan is 1,000 times smaller than one dental x-ray,” said Buessel.

On 11 March, 2011, a massive 9 magnitude earthquake, the strongest quake ever recorded in Japan, created three tsunamis that knocked out the Fukushima-Daichi plant, causing the worst nuclear crisis since the Chernobyl disaster three decades ago. Massive amounts of contaminated water were released from the crippled nuclear plant, more radiation was released to the air, and then fell to the sea.— Xinhua
Tiny parties throng to have their say on Italy’s new leader

ROME — President Sergio Mattarella is consulting a total of 23 parties to help him find a successor to outgoing Prime Minister Matteo Renzi, showing how little progress Italy has made in reducing political fragmentation.

On Friday, Mattarella met separately with groups that few Italians have even heard of, such as the Thought and Action Party, the Civic Innovators Party and one known only as “Fare!”, which roughly translates as the “Doing” party.

The political landscape is even more fragmented than it looks. Several of the delegations holding talks with the president are actually mini-coalitions and the total number of movements in parliament is around 40.

The first group to emerge from the meetings in Mattarella’s sumptuous Rome palace on Friday, recognize their encounter in German. They represented the Austrian minority in the South-Tyrolean border region.

One of the bigger players, the Northern League, which polls show is Italy’s third most popular party at about 15 per cent, said it favoured a snap election rather than creating a new government with anything other than a short-term caretaker role.

“We must vote as soon as possible,” Giancarlo Giorgetti, the League’s deputy secretary, said after his meeting with Mattarella.

The president’s consultations will continue on Saturday, including with Renzi’s Democratic Party (PD), which has more parliamentarians than any other bloc. The fragmentation of politics into countless parties and factions is one of the reasons Italy has had 63 governments in the last 70 years.

Until the early 1990s an electoral system of proportional representation (PR) was widely blamed for allowing small parties to prosper, yet since pure PR was scrapped in 1993 the fragmentation has only got worse.

To preserve their existence at elections, tiny parties merge into broad coalitions, but then often splinter again and change names and allegiance once the new parliament has been formed.

At the same time, individual parliamentarians move freely between parties from one election to the next, often changing the make-up of the majority backing the government. In the first 18 months of the current parliament, 116 of the 315 senators elected in 2013 changed their political colours.

The cause of Italy’s latest political crisis was Renzi’s decision to resign after failing to get popular support for constitutional reforms aimed at increasing government stability. Critics said one weakness was that his proposal did nothing to prevent party-swapping.

East Japan Railway line suspended since 2011 tsunami partially reopens

SENDAI — A 23-kilometer section of East Japan Railway Co.’s Joban Line reopened Saturday five years and nine months after the March 2011 quake and tsunami.

The reopened section runs between Soma Station in Fukushima Prefecture and Hamayoshida Station, both in Tohoku Prefecture, and Hamayoshida runs between Soma Station and Tsunawiki Station in the town of Tomioka in Fukushima Prefecture.

“This station is a symbol of recovery. I pray that many people visit this place,” said Prime Minister Shinzo Abe as he attended an opening ceremony for the new Shinchi station.

Tsunami waves were as high as 10 meters in the region after the 9.0 magnitude quake. The Tohoku coast was hit by a massive tsunami that killed 18,000 people and destroyed towns.

“I want to go to Sendai for shopping,” said Tamaki Fujikawa, 12, who was at Yamashita Station with her mother and younger sister to see the train off. Of the whole Joban Line, chiefly running along the Pacific coast to connect Tokyo and Miyagi Prefecture, “I become overwhelmed by emotion when I think about the roads after the quake. I celebrate the start of the first train,” Yamamoto Mayor Toshio Suzuki said at the ceremony.

Motherhood is biggest challenge for ‘Woman of the Year’ Madonna

NEW YORK — Madonna was presented on Friday with Billboard magazine’s Woman of the Year award, but the seven-time Grammy Award winner said one of her biggest challenges was being a good mother.

“The biggest accomplishment I think was finishing my tour, doing my shows every night. And dealing with the challenges of being a mother. That’s always the challenge for me. Being a good mother, being an artist, getting through it all,” the “Material Girl” singer told reporters on the New York red carpet.

Madonna, 58, who has four children, in March completed her 82-show “Rebel Heart” world tour while embroiled in a legal battle over the custody of her 16-year-old son Rocco with ex-husband Guy Ritchie.

Rocco left Madonna during the tour to live with Ritchie in London. The dispute was settled in September.

The annual Billboard Women in Music awards recognise women who have made significant contributions to the music business and who have inspired other women.

Other honorees on Friday included, pop singer Kesha, country-pop star Shania Twain, rapper Run DMC, singer Andra Day, pop star Meghan Trainor, electro-pop artist Halsey and country singer Maren Morris.—Reuters

Country star Garth Brooks in talks for Trump inaugural celebrations

NEW YORK — Country star Garth Brooks is in discussions to perform at the inauguration of US President-elect Donald Trump, the singer’s representative said on Friday, as organisers of the event denied media reports that they were struggling to find A-list stars to take part.

Brooks, 54, one of the world’s best-selling solo artists, performed for Democrat Barack Obama’s inauguration in 2009, along with a line-up that included Bruce Springsteen, U2, Beyoncé, and Stevie Wonder.

“Garth has performed for the five living presidents,” his publicist Nancy Selzer said on Friday. “While rumour has it that he has been asked to perform for President-elect Trump, he has not been able to commit yet.”

No celebrities have yet been announced as taking part in the 20 January inauguration.

Brooks, a Country Hall of Fame with US sales of more than 135 million albums, is currently in Hawaii as part of a world tour. He is due to perform in Cincinnati, Ohio on 21 January — the day after the inauguration in Washington.

As the world prepares for the inauguration of Trump, they have been asked to perform for President-elect Trump, he has not been able to commit yet.”

The 67th edition of the Berlin Film Festival Jury will be held in the German capital from 9 February to 20 January.

Rihanna denies throwing shade at Beyoncé

LOS ANGELES — Rihanna has denied that she threw shade a Beyoncé on Instagram after she did not get nominated for Album of the Year category at Grammys. Rihanna earned eight nominations this year, including Record of the Year for “Work,” her collaboration with ex Drake — her acclaimed album Anti was not nominated for Album of the Year, while Beyoncé’s stunning visual album, Lemonade, was.

Shortly after the nominations were announced, Rihanna liked a fan’s Instagram post dissing Beyonce, sparking rumours of a feud between the two pop superstars. The singer, 28, later took to the social media to quash fueled speculation.

“I never actually read your caption, thought the pic was funny and moved right along! ‘Til I saw it pop up over and over! (sic)” she wrote. “I’m pet-ty of, yes. But this is just unnecessary! I wish y’all would drop this topic and see things from the bigger picture! We don’t need to be putting black women against each other! We deserve to be celebrated, and the Gram- my Academy agrees! (sic),” she added.

Rihanna also made it clear that despite missing out in the Album of the Year category, she was happy to bag 8 nods.

“How could y’all say that?” she replied to another fan’s comment saying Anti was snubbed.

United States returns stolen 14th century image of saint to Italy

WASHINGTON — A stolen 14th century illustration of a Roman Catholic saint was returned on Friday to Italy, where it will be put in a museum, US Customs officials said.

The image, an ink, tempera and gold image of a haloed Saint Lucy, had spent decades at the Cleveland Museum of Art, which bought it in good faith in 1952, the Immigration and Customs Enforcement agency said in a statement.

It said the artifact was turned over in a ceremony at the Italian Embassy.

A two-year investigation determined that the item, a leaf of the book, had been stolen and the museum turned it over to US officials last month after another stolen leaf from the same book came up in the Swiss market. That leaf has also been returned to Italy.

The Cleveland leaf, which measures about 17.4 inches (44.3 cm) by 13.9 inches (35.2 cm), was taken from a page in an illuminated parchment antiphony, a type of hymnal, created around 1340. Known as Codex D, the manuscript is in a museum in Castelfiorentino, near Florence. The custodians did not say bow or when the leaf had been stolen. In addition to the manuscript leaf, US officials repatriated a 19th century painting by artist Consalvo Carelli that had been stolen from a home in Naples in 2001. — Reuters

National Museum of Singapore's Glass Rotunda reopens with new installations

SINGAPORE — The National Museum of Singapore's Glass Rotunda reopened on Saturday after two years of renovation to show case two new permanent installations, which offers visitors a journey to Southeast Asia's tropical rainforests and local old trees.

On the Glass Rotunda, visitors will be greeted by a larger-than-life interactive digital installation called "Story of the Forest". Inspired by the museum's prized collection — The William Fargher Collection of Natural History Drawings, art collective teamLab utilizes cutting-edge technology to transform 69 drawings from the collection into animated illustrations.

Toshiyuki Inoko, founder of teamLab, said this installation is by far the most challenging digital artwork created by teamLab due to the massive size and scale of the Glass Rotunda. With a ceiling measuring 15-meter high and a 170-meter passage stretching down to the base, the installation is divided into three segments.

A constellation of flora that cascade endlessly from the top of the dome structure will embrace the visitors at the upper rotunda. As visitors start their journey down the passage, they will encounter various fauna such as an animated Malayan Tapir or a mouse deer. The installation concludes at the lower part, where visitors can witness flora which are native to the region, such as palmyra palm, lotus flower, durian, mangosteen and rambutan.

At the bottom of the Glass Rotunda, visitors will be able to tour the exhibition "Singapore, Very Old Tree" by renowned local photographer and artist Robert Zhao. Inspired by one of the oldest postcards found in the National Archives of Singapore depicting an unspecified tree dating back to 1904, the set of 30 images from the project have been acquired by National Museum of Singapore and are the newest additions to the National Collection.

The exhibition showcases 17 images out of the 30 that have been acquired, highlighting intimate stories of each and giving visitors an alternative perspective of Singapore's history and the personal connections that Singaporeans have with local trees.

Director of National Museum of Singapore Angeline Teo said the two new installations at the revamped Glass Rotunda are inspired by the region's rich ecological heritage, and remind people of the museum's early beginnings almost 130 years ago. —Xinhua

LONDON — "Harry Potter" fans will be able to bid for a piece of history next week when a book designed, hand-written and illustrated by J.K. Rowling goes on sale at Sotheby's auction house in London.

"The Tales of Beedle the Bard" is a volume of five wizarding fairy tales left to Hermione Granger by Albus Dumbledore in the final book in the "Harry Potter" series. "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows". The manuscript being offered for sale was presented to editor Barry Cunningham who signed Rowling and published her magical debut "Harry Potter and the Philosopher's Stone" and contains a personal dedication from Rowling.

"This one has an inscription to Barry, thanking him," said Sotheby's books and manuscripts specialist Philip Errington. "It says, 'To Barry, the man who thought an overlong novel about a boy wizard in glasses might just sell, which is a lovely little insight into the role of author and editor.'

West Ham’s Bilic praises Sturridge before Liverpool trip

LONDON — West Ham United manager Slaven Bilic has admitted his team need to improve in front of goal and praised Liverpool striker Daniel Sturridge who has been linked with a move to the Premier League strugglers.

West Ham, who travel to Anfield on Sunday, are 17th in the Premier League table, having scored 15 goals in 14 matches so far.

“Sturridge didn’t score against us but he is a great player,” the manager said.

“The talent is there, the touch, the finishing, everything is great. The only thing that’s stopped him being regular for club and country are the injuries.”

Sturridge, who has lost his starting place to Brazilian Roberto Firmino under manager Juergen Klopp, will sit out Sunday’s match with a calf injury, and Bilic would not confirm if he would bid for the striker in January.

“He’s just a player that has been linked with us, basically, and we’ve been linked with almost every player,” he said.

“We’re always there in contention. Most of the time it’s absolutely not true, 95 per cent of the time. But you’re asking me about Sturridge and I have no problem about that.

“All the clubs are thinking about him because he is that kind of player. I don’t know his work rate, I don’t know his dedication to his job or whatever but unfortunately for England and for Liverpool and especially for him he’s injured. That’s his problem.”

British police say football child sex scandal may affect 98 clubs

LONDON — British police investigating allegations of widespread child sex abuse at football clubs dating back to the 1970s said on Friday they had identified 83 potential suspects and possible links to 98 clubs, including some from the Premier League.

Police forces across the country launched inquiries after former player Andy Woodward revealed he had been abused as a boy by a youth team coach, prompting other ex-professionals to come forward with more allegations.

The National Police Chiefs’ Council (NPCC) said 639 referrals had been made to officers from a helpline set up by the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children charity, involving about 350 potential victims.

“All allegations received by police forces across the country are being swiftly acted upon,” said Chief Constable Simon Bailey, the NPCC lead for child protection.

“We are also liaising closely with the Football Association to ensure all relevant information they hold is shared to inform investigations moving forward.”

The harrowing tales of abuse suffered by the former players, some of whom have broken down in tears in television interviews, have shocked Britain. They raise questions about the scale of the problem, how many clubs and football authorities knew, and whether they tried to cover it up.

English football’s governing body, the Football Association, has launched an internal review into what it admitted could be one of the sport’s biggest crises, and promised to fully publicise its findings.

The NPCC said not all the 98 clubs whose names were mentioned to the police were under investigation.

“The figure spans all tiers of football, from premier clubs through to amateur,” it said in a statement. It added that 98 per cent of the victims were male, aged between seven and 20 at the time.

The football abuse revelations are the latest in a series of paedophilic scandals to have hit Britain in recent years.

Victims said the scale of wrongdoing was likely to be worse than in the case of TV star Jimmy Savile, a ci-gar-chomping BBC television host who abused hundreds of youngsters over six decades until his death in 2011.

Messi, Suarez finish off Osasuna to get Barca back on track BARCELONA — Barcelona put pressure on La Liga leaders Real Madrid by picking up their first win in four games as two second-half strikes from Lionel Messi and one from Luis Suarez secured a 3-0 win at struggling Osasuna on Saturday.

The champions missed a slew of chances in a dominant first-half display but their class eventually shone through when Suarez tapped Jordi Alba’s cutback into an empty net in the 52nd minute to break the deadlock.

Messi sealed the points in the 72nd by finishing off another pass from Alba and in stoppage time the Argentine wizard toyed with the Osasuna defence to grab the third and move ahead of Suarez and Cristiano Ronaldo as the league’s top scorer with 11 goals. Barca are second in the standings and provisionally moved three points behind Real, who host Deportivo La Coruna later on Saturday hoping to set a club record of 35 games unbeaten in all competitions.—Reuters

LONDON — Italy international Stefano Okaka scored either side of halftime to give Watford a 3-2 Premier League win over Everton on Saturday, their first victory over the Merseyside club in any competition since 1987.

Watford, who started with players of 11 different nationalities in their line-up, went behind in the 17th minute when Romelu Lukaku scored from close range for Everton after Gareth Barry lobbed the defence.

The goal was the Belgian’s eighth in the league this season but the lead was short-lived, Okaka equalising in the 36th with a back-heeled flick at the near post from Nordin Amrabat’s cross.

Okaka followed up on his first Watford goal by heading in the Hornets’ third from a corner in the 64th after Austrian Sebastian Prodl had headed in his first league goal of the season from Jose Holebas’ free kick.

Lukaku headed in his second of the afternoon with four minutes of normal time remaining but Watford hung on to go seventh in the standings on 21 points and ahead of ninth-placed Everton.—Reuters
