Parboiled rice exports to European market on the rise

Parboiled rice exports to the European market are experiencing an upward trend, with an export volume of 2,000 tonnes this year. The parboiled rice is being exported to European markets through normal trade. China is the main buyer of Myanmar’s rice, but the export volume to China this year decreased, resulting in a glut of rice stock in the domestic market, according to an official from the Myanmar Rice Federation (MRF).

Rice exports through border trade this year were with an export decline, although exports via sea trade had not changed, officials said. Currently, border trade has raised its head again but there is still confiscation of rice by Chinese authorities. Rice exported through border trade is considered legal trade in Myanmar but exports above a certain limit are not legitimate to China. Although this regulation has been largely ignored in the past, it has recently been enforced by Chinese authorities. Myanmar officials are currently conducting discussions with Chinese authorities concerning an increase in rice export quota to China and border trade, it is learnt.

Myanmar has reached an agreement with Indonesia to export nearly 300,000 tonnes of rice. Similarly, discussion regarding rice exports to Viet Nam and the Philippines is ongoing.

Myanmar is still weak in techniques for rice production, with foreign direct investment required to improve the agriculture sector, it is learnt.—200

Export of bamboo and rattan furniture increases by 30 per cent

EXPORTS of furniture made from bamboo and rattan this year has increased by 30 per cent when compared to last year, fetching about US$13 million, according to the Myanmar Rattan and Bamboo Entrepreneurs Association.

Furniture exports experienced a boost due to high demand from abroad this year. Nevertheless, the export volume is negligible when compared to the neighbouring countries.

The price of materials is also high in keeping with the appreciation in the dollar price and raw material prices. Previously, only about US$10 million worth rattan and bamboo furniture were exported. This year, the export value earned from rattan and bamboo furniture will be about US$13 million, said an official from the association.

The association will put forth efforts to have wider access to more rattan and bamboo markets and to boost the technology.

The exports constitute ninety per cent of rattan and bamboo products, flowing into Korea, Japan and European countries, it is learnt. The finished products of rattan and bamboo are mostly manufactured in Yangon and Ayeyawady regions. The raw materials are supplied from Kachin and Rakhine states, Taninthayi and Ayeyawady regions.—Ko Khant

Singapore says deported close to 70 suspected radicals in past two years

SINGAPORE — Singapore has deported the majority of the 70 odd foreigners it has investigated for suspected radicalism in the past two years, although none were planned to carry out attacks in the city-state, the ministry of home affairs said on Monday.

Singapore, which has never seen a successful attack by Islamist militants, has been on heightened alert in recent months, with authorities telling the population that such an event was a matter of "when not if".

Earlier this year, Indonesian police arrested six suspected militants believed to be linked to the Islamic State group and plotting an attack on Singapore. The city-state has also jailed six Bangladeshi workers who were charged with contributing money for attacks in Bangladesh.

"None of them had any plans to carry out acts of violence in Singapore at the time they were investigated, but as they were in various stages of radicalism, their presence posed a security concern for Singapore," the statement said.

"Consequently, they were deported after the authorities in their home countries were informed of their cases." Five of those deported were maids working in Singapore. Dian Yulia Novi, who was arrested in an anti-terror raid this month for plotting to attack the presidential palace in Jakarta, worked in Singapore as a maid in 2008-09, but at the time did not show signs of being radicalised, the ministry said. — Reuters

China says discussing return of underwater drone with US military

BEIJING — The Chinese and US militaries are having "unprecedented" talks about the return of US underwater drone taken by a Chinese naval vessel in the South China Sea last week, China’s foreign ministry said on Monday.

The drone, known as an unmanned underwater vehicle (UUV), was taken on Thursday in waters off the coast of the Philippines, the first seizure of its kind in recent memory.

The Pentagon went public with its complaint about the incident and said on Saturday it had secured a deal to get the drone back. China’s defence ministry had earlier accused Washington of hyping up the issue.

"What I can tell you is that at present, China and the United States are using unimpeded military channels to appropriately handle this issue," foreign ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying told a regular briefing on Monday.

US President-elect Donald Trump, who has vowed to take a more aggressive approach in dealing with China over its economic and military policies, jumped on the unusual seizure with a pair of provocative tweets over the weekend, accusing Beijing of stealing the equipment.

Asked about Trump’s comments, Hua said describing the drone as stolen was "completely incorrect".

"The key is that China’s navy had a responsible and professional attitude to identify and ascertain this object," she said.

"If you discover or pick something up from the street you have to examine it and if somebody asks you for it you have to work out if it’s theirs before you can give it back. The drone, which the Pentagon said was operating lawfully was collecting data about the salinity, temperature and clarity of the water about 50 nautical miles northwest of Subic Bay, off the Philippines.

The Philippines said the occurrence of the incident inside its exclusive economic zone (EEZ) was "very troubling".

"Not only does it increase the likelihood of miscalculations that could lead to open confrontation very near the Philippine mainland but the commission of activities other than innocent passage which impinge upon the right of the Philippines over the resources in its EEZ are violations of the Philippines rights over its EEZ," Defence Minister Delfin Lorenzana said in a statement.

China is deeply suspicious of any US military activities in the resource-rich South China Sea, with state media and experts saying the use of the drone was likely part of US surveillance efforts in the disputed waterway.

The overseas edition of the ruling Communist Party’s People’s Daily said in a commentary on Monday the USNS Bowditch, which was operating the drone, was a "serial offender" when it came to spying operations against China.

"The downplaying of the actions of the drone cannot cover up the real intentions in the background," it said. "This drone which floated to the surface in the South China Sea is the tip of the iceberg of US military strategy, including towards China."

South Korea very concerned over bird flu outbreak, aftermath: vice finance minister

SEOUL — South Korea is very concerned about a bird flu outbreak that has seen the biggest-ever cull of chickens and other poultry, its second vice finance minister said on Monday.

"The number of culled birds is rising very quickly," Song Eon-seok told reporters in an unscheduled briefing at the government headquarters in Sejong, south of Seoul.

"It’s grown in a short amount of time and we are very worried," Song said the government has enough funds to aid farmers and those in the industry who face financial hardship in the wake of this outbreak, which has seen the culling of more than 16 million birds, almost one-fifth of South Korea’s poultry population.

The lack of manpower to help in the culling and sanitizing has emerged as the most urgent issue, he said, despite the deployment of soldiers stationed in nearby areas and public workers to help.

Song also said South Korea’s debt-to-gross domestic product ratio is expected to be managed to stay below 40 per cent in 2017. This year, the finance ministry sees the ratio standing at 38.7 per cent or 38.8 per cent. — Reuters
Filipinos fear extrajudicial killings, but approve of drugs war — survey

MANILA — Eight out of 10 Filipinos worry they or someone they know might become a victim of extrajudicial killings, an opinion poll published on Monday found, although a majority also gave President Rodrigo Duterte’s drug war an “excellent” rating.

More than 2,000 people have been killed by police in anti-narcotics operations in the Philippines since Duterte took office on 1 July. Another 3,000 deaths, some attributed to masked men on motorcycles or vigilantes, are under investigation.

“Social Weather Stations (SWS), an independent pollster, asked 1,500 Filipinos nationwide if they were concerned that either they or someone they knew could fall victim to an extrajudicial killing, and 78 per cent said they were either very worried or somewhat worried.

The SWS survey was conducted with face-to-face interviews on 3-6 December, with the results posted online on Monday.

Despite those fears, the survey also found Filipinos were staunchly behind Duterte’s drug war, which has drawn international concern and a request from a United Nations human rights expert to investigate. Duterte’s drugs war received an “excellent” mark from an overwhelming majority of respondents, a rating determined by deducting the eight per cent of respondents who said they were dissatisfied from the 85 per cent who were satisfied.

“I am not surprised with the conundrum that people acknowledge that the anti-drug campaign is fitting, so they allow it. But they would like less killings,” said Ramon Casiple, executive director of the Institute for Political and Electoral Reform.

Martin Andanar, Duterte’s communication secretary, said the government recognised concerns among Filipinos but reiterated that the killings were not state-sponsored.

“Rest assured that the Duterte administration respects the law and upholds the basic rights of our people, regardless of beliefs and political persuasion,” he said in a statement.

The survey, which had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 per cent, also found 71 per cent felt it was important to keep those suspected of drug use or drug trafficking alive. A similar figure said the extrajudicial killings were a serious problem. A convincing 86 per cent also believed there had been a decrease in the illicit drug problem in their communities.

The firebrand leader, known as the “Punisher” and “Duterte Harry”, has said he personally killed criminals while he was mayor of southern Davao City, leading senators to warn him that he risked being impeached.— Reuters

Scientists discover 163 new species in Greater Mekong region: WWF

BANGKOK — A rainbow-headed snake and a dragon-like lizard are among 163 new species that scientists recently discovered in the Greater Mekong region, conservation group WWF said on Monday, adding rapid development in the area, from dams to mines, was threatening wildlife survival.

The discoveries, published in a report on Monday, include a gecko in Laos with pale blue skin and a rare banana species discovered in northern Thailand that is critically endangered because of increasing deforestation.

The Greater Mekong is home to some of the world’s most endangered species. Rare or endangered animal parts, including tiger bones and rhino horns, are seen as collector’s items by some and are often used in traditional medicine.

In June, Thai wildlife authorities raided the Tiger Temple west of Bangkok, a popular tourist attraction. There they discovered scores of dead tiger cubs, frozen tiger carcasses, skins and dead cubs in jars, as well as other protected species.

It remains unclear why the Tiger Temple was storing dead tiger cubs and parts, although officials have said it might have been used for traditional Chinese medicine.

It remains unclear why the Tiger Temple was storing dead tiger cubs and parts, although officials have said it might have been used for traditional Chinese medicine.

Jimmy Borah, Wildlife Programme Manager for WWF-Greater Mekong, said the new species discovered in the Greater Mekong region were a reminder that there is hope at a time when extinction rates are increasing at an alarming rate.

“The Greater Mekong region keeps reminding us that there are many incredible, unexplored areas, leading to new discoveries happening every year and it is crucial that we protect them before they are lost,” Borah told Reuters.

A 2016 report by WWF found that by 2020 global populations of fish, birds, amphibians, mammals and reptiles could have declined by two-thirds in just 50 years.

The Greater Mekong is a global hub for illegal wildlife trade. “Many collectors are willing to pay thousands of dollars or more for the rarest, most unique and most endangered species, often buying them at the region’s illegal wildlife markets,” said Borah.

“To save them, it’s crucial that we improve enforcement against poaching and close illegal wildlife markets.”— Reuters

South Korea returns eight North Koreans and vessels after sea rescue

SEOUL — South Korea sent eight North Koreans and two vessels it had rescued drifting at sea last week back across their maritime border on Monday, and patrol vessels from the North were on hand to receive them, the South’s unification ministry said.

All eight of those rescued had said they wanted to return to the North, ministry spokesman Jeong Joon-hee said. Their return came after North Korea had ignored notice on Thursday of plans to repatriate the crew, some of whom were suffering frostbite, and the vessels, Jeong told a media briefing.

At least one person was believed to have died from starvation, and possibly more, according to survivors, Jeong said last week. One of the ships set sail in September and the other in November, he said.

South Korea’s relations with the North are at a low point after the North conducted two nuclear tests and numerous test-launches of ballistic missiles this year.

The North reacts sensitively to announcements by South Korea of defections of its people. It has accused the South of kidnapping 13 employees of a restaurant in China who defected to the South in April.— Reuters

Peace and Stability will bring about development

Editorial from Kyemon (the Mirror)

It can be said that the region has now begun to regain a certain state of peace and stability due to the government’s efforts, in the best way possible, to deal with the problems of instability in the area which occurred on account of violent armed attacks on Maungtaw region, northern Rakhine State.

The Maungtaw region situated in northern Rakhine State shares a border with Bangladesh, managing to open a border pass gate and to operate a border trade business with it. Mountains, rivers, creeks, beaches and fair weather which are typical features of the geographical landscape of the State has given the local populace favorable conditions for living and making a decent living for themselves.

The area can be said to be a good place for creating job opportunities and fruitful business as the border trade zone had been used for importing commodities and equipments used for businesses from Bangladesh and exporting rice, fish, fried fish and marine prawns from Myanmar.

Yet, a series of armed attacks disrupted the border trade for over two months, thus border trade businesses bore fruits no longer as in previous years. As goods had to be exported via Sittwe trade zone. As the Maungtaw border gate has not yet reopened, the area suffered a great loss.

Now that respective responsible officials are trying their best to reopen the Maungtaw trade zone, prospects for reopening the border gate are very good. Infiltration of destructive elements from across the border to conspire subversive armed attacks together with some locals has contributed to the ruin of peace and stability in Maungtaw area.

Having collected circumstantial evidence, arrangements to totally remove these destructive elements are now underway.

It is not an easy task to bring the situation back to normal with a certain degree of peace and stability from the current state of unrest in the region. But, it is hoped that it is just a matter of time to reach the normal state if and when the problem is subtly solved with strict rules and laws, with a view to bringing about the benefits of peace to the local populace.

It is the locals who suffer losses if peace and stability is lost in the region. Keeping in mind that peace and stability can bring about development, all the locals are required to take responsibility to cooperate with responsible persons enforcing the rule of law and effectuating area development, without taking part in destructive activities.

Börge Brende, Foreign Minister of Norway

Norway supports the move towards closer regional cooperation in Asia

Over the past generation, the global economic centre of gravity has been moving towards Asia. This economic shift is now accompanied by deepening cooperation in the region. Norway supports this development, and over the past few years we have actively sought to strengthen relations with Asia. Here I would like to outline the main reasons for this, and describe the areas where we see the greatest potential for future cooperation.

Norway has made an effort to join some of the most important arenas for political and economic cooperation in Asia. In 2012, we were accepted as a member of the Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM), the principal meeting place for political dialogue between Asia and Europe. ASEM is a valuable and effective arena for political discussions with our Asian and European partners. Then in 2015, Norway gained sectoral dialogue partner status with ASEAN, the first medium sized economy outside the region to do so.

One of our main reasons for approaching Asia has been to increase trade and investments. Asia currently accounts for 30% of the global gross domestic product, and the Asian Development Bank estimates that by 2050 this will have increased to over 50%. In countries like India and China, growth has been accompanied by the lifting of hundreds of millions of people out of poverty. Moreover, at a time when free trade is under pressure, many countries in Asia are taking laudable steps towards removing trade barriers between them.

Norway is a strong supporter of free trade, and we recently gathered over 20 countries in Oslo to move the free trade agenda of the WTO forward, in preparation of the WTO ministerial meeting in Buenos Aires in 2017.

Norway’s trade with Asia is both deepening and widening. ASEAN is today our fourth largest trading partner. We want to increase our trade with Asia even further. As a member of the European Free Trade Association, Norway has given priority to negotiating free trade agreements with a number of Asian countries, including Hong Kong, Philippines, Singapore and South Korea. Negotiations are also underway with India, Indonesia, Malaysia, and Vietnam.

Norway’s economic links with Asia date back several centuries. In the 1850s, when China and India accounted for around 50% of global GDP, and Tokyo was a capital with several million inhabitants, the Norwegian merchant navy was the largest in the world. Norwegian ships, together with thousands of Norwegian seamen, played an important part in the economic growth of Asian countries 150 years ago.

Still today, Norwegian companies in the maritime sector continue to play a vital role in many Asian countries. At the same time, there are also important investments in fisheries, hydropower, and oil and gas. In total, around 500 Norwegian companies have been established in Asia, increasing foreign direct investment in the region. The Norwegian public sector is also investing in Asia. The Norwegian Government Pension Fund Global, one of the world’s largest sovereign wealth funds with almost USD 900 billion invested abroad, has placed over 20% of its equity investments in Asia.

The Norwegian Government Pension Fund Global, one of the world’s largest sovereign wealth funds with almost USD 900 billion invested abroad, has placed over 20% of its equity investments in Asia. As a sign of our commitment to further regional integration, in Asia, Norway became a founding member of the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB) earlier this year, providing USD 550 million in capital. It is no coincidence that the two most recent Norwegian diplomatic missions to be opened are in Asia, in Yangon and Mumbai. Myanmar’s abundant resources, its growing domestic market and steadily improving business environment are attracting increasing interest from Norwegian companies, many of which are setting up operations there.

Another key area in our cooperation with Asia is the 2030 Agenda and the Sustainable Development Goals. We are united by a common interest in solving global challenges such as education, health and climate change. Norway is engaged in extensive cooperation with Indonesia on reducing deforestation through REDD+, and we have pledged USD 1 billion for these efforts.

In Myanmar, Norway has a comprehensive bilateral cooperation programme with the Government in the environmental sector, as well as on natural resource management. Other areas where we can make a difference are the maritime sector and fisheries. World-leading Norwegian companies in these sectors have already invested in Asia. Drawing on the extensive experience of the Norwegian Government, we hope to stimulate green shipping and sustainable fisheries and fish farming in the region.

Ensuring that the oceans are healthy and productive for future generations is a key priority for Norway’s foreign policy, and we are currently working on a new government strategy to move this agenda forward, including in Asia.

A third broad area of interest in our cooperation with Asia is the promotion of peace and stability, international law and human rights. Norway has acted as facilitator in peace processes in a number of Asian countries, with particular focus at present on the Philippines, where formal negotiations are now taking place.

Norway has also been engaged in the peace process in Myanmar for several years, in close dialogue with the parties. From 2016 we have been providing funding for the Joint Peace Fund, the implementation of the Joint Ceasefire Monitoring Committee (JCMC), and a wide range of other initiatives related to the peace process. We are a strong defender of human rights, and earlier this year Norway hosted the sixth World Congress Against the Death Penalty, which was attended by representatives from over 80 countries.

Global change is profoundly affecting Asia – in terms of economic development, in the technologic shifts of global politics, and in the increasingly serious impacts of climate change. We are part of the same international community, and are all affected by these developments. We therefore stand ready to work with Asian nations both directly and through regional arenas for cooperation to seek sustainable solutions and stable development in Asia.
Man Killed in Maungtaw in policeman’s self-defense

A suspected drug trafficker was killed yesterday as a security policeman defended himself against a knife attack in Maung-taw, northern Rakhine.

Acting on a tip-off, a security force led by Police Maj Kyaw Thu, together with townswellers of the Ducheeratan Village, searched a house owned by Hammad Tusung, 50, in Ducheeratan Village (West).

While the border guard police were carrying out the search, Hammad Tusung attacked Private Sai Htet Lin Aung with a 15-inch long knife. The policeman suffered a knife wound in his arm and fell.

As the attacker tried to stab him, the police officer fired a shot at the attacker. During the search of the house, the police found items including two pipes used for sniffing drugs.

Three suspects arrested in Maungtaw

A suspected drug trafficker was arrested three locals on Saturday on suspicion of involvement in abducting a resident from Thawunchaung Village on 13 December.

While carrying out an area clearance operation near Thaw-baw-gwe Village in Maungtaw township, security forces managed to arrest Hammi Dusung, Jamam Hsaung and Abu Karan.

The three were reportedly involved in the abduction of Habi Rahman from Thawunchaung Village.

Middle-aged men, some cancer specialists say an increased role by the government would help in the fight against cancer.

According to the latest statistics, Myanmar spends roughly two percent of its GDP on healthcare.

“There are two main reasons for this inaction,” said Dr Soe Aung. “First, being a Low-Medium Income Country, the government has other competing priorities, like infectious diseases, maternal and newborn health, etc. Secondly, some are so used to an old-age mindset and find it difficult to get rid of the tendency to regard cancer as a ‘can’t-do-much-and-not-worth-investing’ issue. We are steadfastly persevering in our advocacy to overcome this”.

Dr Soe Aung said there are also challenges from the community side that include poverty and the stigma of cancer.

“Low socioeconomic status, communication difficulties because of language barriers, and geographical terrains in remote areas, language barriers among ethnic groups (there are more than 100 ethnic groups, each with their own dialect), insufficient media access, traditional taboos and stigma are hampering our efforts at oncological health education to all communities,” said Dr Soe Aung.

He added, “This leads to a lack of awareness, late presentation, and failure to seek proper treatment. Our society, in collaboration with the Ministry of Health and Sports and various other stakeholders, is working hard to overcome these issues. It will take time.”

Cancer rising in Myanmar

Dr. Soe Aung says the rising, troubling rate of cancer in Myanmar could be reversed in two simple steps – early detection and prevention, which includes a healthier lifestyle and vaccination.

Lung and oral cancer patients are first seen by doctors only when the disease has already progressed to its end stages, when it is harder to treat and when the survival rate is low.

“Awareness is the key,” said Prof. Soe Aung, a Yangon oncologist and the president of the Myanmar Oncology Society, at a gathering of health professionals last month at Yangon General Hospital.

Awareness for the people of Myanmar includes the dangers of tobacco and betel. Early signs of cancers and the need to seek proper medical advice early.

“If you don’t know about early warning signs, the value of early intervention or the risks of smoking or chewing betel, behaviour will not change”, Prof Soe Aung said.

Asia accounts for 60 per cent of the world population and half the global burden of cancer. The incidence of cancer cases is estimated to increase from 6.1 million in 2008 to 106 million in 2030. According to the International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC), Myanmar faced an estimated 64,000 new cancer cases in 2012. Since that time, the figure has steadily increased. Cancer deaths are predicted to increase by over two thirds by 2030.

For Myanmar men, the most prevalent cancer is lung or oral cancer, which is linked to smoking and the chewing of betel. For the female population of Myanmar, the biggest cancer risks are cervical and breast cancer. Testing, annual screenings and early intervention for both types of cancers are currently inadequate, Prof Soe Aung said.

But there is good news about cancer, for the world and for Myanmar. Cancer research and treatment has progressed by leaps and bounds and now more people are beating cancer today than ever before. Survival has doubled in the last 40 years and half of people diagnosed will survive cancer for more than 10 years.

The Vaccinations for women against the human papilloma virus (HPV), which is strongly linked to cervical cancer, are now widely available.

But how this progress can be reversed in Myanmar could be in two simple steps – early detection and treatment, capacity building in terms of training adequate human resources for cancer control programmes, radiology safety and the establishment of a population-based cancer registry, which is essential for the future planning of the cancer control programmes.

Another potentially big step in bringing Myanmar in line with the rest of the world is occurring now in Singapore, at the European Society of Medical Oncology (ESMO) Asia Congress.

“We need to have a close collaboration with all partners, both national and international, concerning prevention, creating awareness, early diagnosis and treatment of cancer”, said Dr. Maung Maung Lin, the ESMO, which was formerly a European-centric organisation, is holding a major gathering for the first time in Asia. The meeting is focusing on resources, organizational capacities and ongoing future activities planned in the country, we can maximise efforts in line with the respective mandates, priorities and areas of expertise of the partner and achieve better results for cancer prevention, control and treatment”. Dr. Maung Maung Lin said.

Failure to seek proper treatment is a major factor in the fight against cancer.

WASHINGTON — The US Electoral College is expected on Monday to officially select Republican Donald Trump as the next president in a vote that is usually routine but takes place this year amid allegations of Russian meddling and efforts to try to influence the election.

At meetings scheduled in every state and the District of Columbia, the institution’s 538 electors, generally chosen by state parties, will cast official ballots for president and vice president.

It is highly unlikely the vote will change the outcome of the 8 November election, which gave the White House to Trump after he won a majority of Electoral College votes. The popular vote went to Democrat Hillary Clinton.

But the conclusion by US intelligence agencies that Russia hacked into the emails of the Democratic National Committee in an attempt to sway the election for Trump has prompted Democrats to urge some electors not to vote as directed by their state’s popular ballot.

The leaked emails disclosed details of Clinton’s paid speeches to Wall Street, party infighting and inside criticism about Clinton’s use of a private server to send emails while US secretary of state.

The disclosures led to embarrassing media coverage and prompted some party officials to resign.

Trump and his team dismiss intelligence claims of Russian interference, accusing Democrats and their allies of trying to undermine the legitimacy of his election victory.

Russian officials have denied Russian grievances in interfering in the election.

On Sunday, Clinton’s campaign chairman, John Podesta, said it was an open question whether the Trump campaign colluded with Russia about the emails, an allegation that Trump’s incoming White House chief of staff, Reince Priebus, denied. NATO seeks to allay concerns at meeting with Russia

BRUSSELS — NATO will seek to reassure Russia on Monday that its troop deployments to the Baltics and Poland next year are purely defensive, in a rare meeting of the alliance’s envoys with those of the Kremlin that is unlikely to resolve long-standing grievances.

The NATO-Russia Council, the forum bringing together North Atlantic Treaty Organisation ambassadors and Russia’s top diplomat, will convene for only the third time this year with the crisis in Ukraine still the top concern for Brussels and Washington.

Russia says it is concerned about a NATO military build-up near its borders. “We count on having a frank discussion about the security situation in Europe including the consequences of NATO reinforcements on the eastern flank,” Russia’s ambassador to NATO, Alexander Grushko, said on Friday. With relations already at a low ebb, Russia’s devastating bombing campaign in Aleppo, which is not expected to be formerly discussed, has provided a dark backdrop for the meeting, diplomats said.

However, NATO allies, particularly Germany, have been pushing for a meeting with Grushko to explain why they are sending four multinational battalions of up to 4,000 troops to the former Soviet states of Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Poland from early 2017. NATO governments say the measures are modest compared with the 330,000 troops the alliance believes Russia has amassed on its western flank near Moscow since May.

Allies say the four battalions, backed by additional US forces on rotation, are justified by Moscow’s 2014 annexation of Crimea that alarmed the Baltics that they might be next. “The whole idea with re-enforcements is to prevent the conflict,” NATO Secretary-General Jens Stoltenberg said earlier this month following a meeting with Estonia’s president. “It’s to send a clear message of deterrence.” NATO’s top commander, Curtis Scaparrotti also said this month he wants the NATO-Russia Council to address the massive military exercises that Russia has often held, with very little warning given. “Russia has not been transparent,” he told reporters. —Reuters

UN Secretary-General’s message on International Human Solidarity Day

THE world has achieved significant progress in human development over the past two decades. The global poverty rate fell by more than half. People are living longer and healthier lives, and are better educated.

Despite these and other advances, prosperity has not been shared by all. Inequalities, extreme poverty, unemployment, social exclusion and environmental degradation continue to be prominent features of societies around the world. Discrimination and prejudice remain major barriers to building inclusive societies. Many vulnerable social groups find their situation worsening. The impacts of climate change will fall most heavily on those who did least to cause the problem.

Solidarity is essential to address these gaps in sustainable development.

Leaving no one behind, promoting prosperity and ensuring inclusiveness and equality are core principles of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development, adopted by world leaders in September 2015, and of the Paris Agreement on climate change adopted in December of that same year. As nations strive to uphold their promises and to meet the 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), mutual support will be crucial. Global problems require collective solutions. At a time of divisiveness on many key global issues, from armed conflict to forced migration, people need to turn toward each other in common cause, not away from each other in fear.

On International Human Solidarity Day, let us emphasize the role of human solidarity in building lives of dignity for all on a healthy planet. We must work together to achieve the SDGs and secure the future we want.—UN/Gyong

Norway, China normalise ties after Nobel Peace Prize row

OSLO — Norway and China on Monday normalised diplomatic and political ties, frozen since 2010 when Chinese dissident Liu Xiaobo was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. Norwegian Foreign Minister Boerge Brende said the two countries would immediately resume negotiations on a free-trade deal. “Through meticulous and numerous conversations, the two sides have over the last years reached a level of trust that allows for resumption of a normal relationship,” they said in a joint statement in Oslo. Liu, 61, a dissident involved in the 1989 Tiananmen Square pro-democracy protests crushed by the Chinese army, was jailed for 11 years in 2009 on subversion charges for organising a petition urging an end to one-party rule. Twenty five die in Siberia after drinking bath oil for alcoholic kicks

MOSCOW — At least twenty-five residents of the Siberian city of Irkutsk have died after drinking bath oil, hoping it would give them the same sensation as alcohol, Russian investigators said on Monday.

Use of counterfeit or surrogate alcohol is rife in Russia’s regions, where two years of economic pain have pushed more people below the poverty line, though the death toll from this latest incident is unusually high.

Investigators in Irkutsk, a city of around 6,000 people around 2,600 miles (4,240 km) east of Moscow, said in a statement that they had detained two people suspected of distributing the bath oil.

The product had a warning on its label saying it should not be swallowed, but investigators said people had ignored that and consumed it as if it was alcohol. The bath oil contained methylated spirit, they said.—Reuters

Suicide bomber kills seven in Libyan city of Benghazi

BENGHAZI (Libya) — At least seven people were killed and eight wounded when a suicide bomber targeted forces loyal to Libya’s eastern government in Benghazi on Sunday, medical and security officials said.

A police spokesman said it carried out the bombing, in the besieged district of Ganfouda. The area is one of the last pockets of resistance being fought against the Libyan National Army (LNA), a self-styled force loyal to eastern commander Khalifa Haftar.

Haftar has been waging a military campaign in Benghazi for more than two years against Islamists and other opponents. The fighting is part of a broader, low-intensity conflict in Libya, which splintered into multiple political and armed factions after the uprising that toppled Muammar Gaddafi in 2011. This year the LNA has made major gains in Benghazi, though fighting and attacks have continued in parts of the city. All those killed in Sunday’s bombing were from the LNA, a medical source from Benghazi’s main hospital said.

The attack came after the latest advance on Saturday by the LNA, which said following heavy clashes that it had taken control of buildings along the seafront west of Ganfouda, encircling its opponents. At least three LNA troops were killed in Saturday’s fighting, security and medical officials said. An LNA spokesman, Ahmed al-Masmari, said 13 fighters from “terrorist groups” had also been killed.

Recently there have been efforts to evacuate civilians trapped by the fighting in Ganfouda but only small numbers of women and children and foreign workers have left the area. Masmari said on Sunday that about 120 families have left the area. Masmari said 13 fighters from “terrorist groups” had also been killed.

That incident threatened to derail the evacuation, the result of intense negotiations between Russia and France, and the United States said it was expected to pass unannounced.

On Sunday, some of the buses sent to al-Foua and Kefraya to carry evacuees out were attacked and torched by armed men, who shouted “God is greatest” and brandished their weapons in front of the burning vehicles, according to a video posted online.

Russian military plane crashes in Siberia, injuring 32

MOSCOW — The Russian Defence Ministry said on Monday that one of its planes had crashed in northeast Siberia with 39 people on board as it tried to make an emergency landing near a Soviet-era military base.

Russian news agencies reported that nobody had been killed in the incident, but said 32 people had been airlifted to hospital, 16 of whom were in serious condition.

The Il-18 aircraft came down around 30 kilometers (18.64 miles) from an airfield near the town of Tiksi in the Sakha Republic at 4:45 a.m. local time, the TASS news agency reported.

High winds may have forced the plane to make an emergency landing. Alexei Kholedezevko, the deputy head of the regional government, was quoted as saying by the Interfax news agency.

The Defence Ministry said a team of military investigators had been flown to the crash site.

The Il-18, a Soviet-era propeller plane whose design dates from the 1950s, had taken off from an air base in Kansk in western Siberia with 39 people on board, including seven crew. Tiksi, a coastal town of around 5,000 people inside the Arctic circle, hosts a Soviet-era military air base that has been renovated in recent years as part of President Vladimir Putin’s drive to rearm the Arctic.
Hundreds arrested in Venezuela cash chaos, vigilantes protect shops

CARACAS — Security forces have arrested more than 300 people during protests and lootings over the elimination of Venezuela’s largest currency bill, President Nicolas Maduro said on Sunday.

The socialist leader pulled the 100 bolivar note this week before new bills were in circulation, creating a national cash shortage on top of the brutal economic crisis overshadowing Venezuela’s Christmas and New Year holidays.

After two days of unrest over the measure — including one death and dozens of shops ransacked — Maduro on Saturday postponed the measure until 2 January.

That helped stem violence, though there were still reports of more lootings in southern Ciudad Bolivar on Sunday. The detainees include leaders and members of the opposition Popular Will and Justice First parties.

Maduro said on state TV, accusing them of following US instructions to incite chaos. “Don’t come and tell me they are political prisoners…. They are the two parties of the ‘gringos’ in Venezuela,” he added, accusing President Barack Obama of wanting to engineer a coup against socialism in Venezuela before leaving office.

From Venezuela’s southern jungle and savannah to the Andean highlands in the north, hundreds of protesters have been burning bolivar notes, cursing Maduro and decrying scarcity of food and medicines. The worst looting was on Friday and Saturday, especially in El Callao and Ciudad Bolivar in the southern state of Bolivar, and police have used teargas to control crowds in some places.

Chinese-run shops have been particularly targeted, witnesses say, and a 14-year-old boy was shot dead in El Callao on Friday.

The governor of Bolivar state was shot and arrested, with lootings from food shops to science laboratories. The local business group said 350 businesses have been ransacked in Ciudad Bolivar, including 90 per cent of food outlets.

In Santa Elena de Uairen, near the border with Brazil, shopkeepers and inhabitants formed vigilante groups to join police and soldiers after they were ransacked on Saturday.

“We’re not lowering our guard, we’re forming protection brigades,” said local business group leader Gilmer Poma.

Food prices were reduced in some establishments in Santa Elena as a way to defuse tensions.

Maduro, a 54-year-old former bus driver and foreign minister who replaced Hugo Chavez in 2013, has seen his popularity plunge during a three-year recession. He justified the currency measure as a way of suffocating mafia on Venezuela’s borders. But opponents say it is further evidence of disastrous economic policy in a nation reeling from runaway prices and shortages of basics.

They want him to resign.

“The only person guilty of the chaos and violence of recent days is Nicolas Maduro,” the Justice First party said, accusing inteligence agents of taking advantage of the situation to frame opposition leaders with false evidence. With the 100 bolivar bill originally out of circulation from Friday, many Venezuelans had found themselves unable to purchase food or fill up cars in the busy run-up to Christmas. “As if we don’t have enough to cope with anyway, now they inflect this craziness on us,” said a grandmother in Caracas, Zoraida Gutierrez, 74, who spent a day lining up under the sun to deposit cash she had under her bed.

Despite Maduro’s suspension of the measure on Saturday, some businesses were still refusing the notes on Sunday.

Maduro has been urging Venezuelans to use electronic transactions instead of cash where possible, but 40 per cent of the country’s 30 million people are without bank accounts.

State TV showed a plane arriving on Sunday afternoon with a first batch of new currency notes. Central Bank Vice President Jose Khan said they were 13.5 million 500 bolivar bills.— Reuters

Los Angeles marchers protest against Trump as Democrats vow policy fight

LOS ANGELES — About 2,000 people protesting against the rhetoric and proposals of US President-elect Donald Trump marched peacefully through downtown Los Angeles on Sunday in advance of Monday’s planned Electoral College vote to formally choose him as leader.

Trump, a Republican businessman who campaigned against illegal immigration and threatened to imprison Democratic rival Hillary Clinton if elected, lost the popular vote in the 8 November US election but won the contest for the electoral college, which is calculated on a state-by-state basis.

“I want to tell Mr. Trump that we are immigrants, we help this economy grow, we don’t want nothing for free,” said marcher Horalia Jauregui. In addition to marking the day before the Electoral College is set to vote, the march took place on International Migrants Day, designated by the United Nations to draw attention to the plight of refugees.

Marchers in Los Angeles carried signs with phrases such as “Stop Trump, I’m bilingual,” “In the name of America Think Again,” a play on Trump’s “Make America Great Again” campaign slogan. Heavily Democratic California voted overwhelmingly for Clinton in the election, and its leaders have begun positioning their state as a welcoming state that will fight the incoming Trump administration on any challenges to its progressive policies.

On Sunday, state Senator Kevin de Leon, a Democrat from Los Angeles, said he would fight any moves by Trump that conflict with what he called California’s values.

AMMAN — Jordanian security forces said they killed four “terrorist outlaw” men after flushng them out of a castle in the southwestern city of Karak where they had holed up after a shoot-out that killed nine people.

An official statement said the four assailants, who shot at police targets in the town before heading to the Crusader-era castle, carried automatic weapons. Large quantities of explosives, weapons and suicide belts were seized in a hideout, the statement said.

It made no mention of their identity or whether they belonged to any militant group, raising speculation they could have been tribal outlaws with a vendetta against the state rather than Islamic State fighters, who control parts of neighbouring Syria and Iraq.

A Canadian woman, three other civilians and five police officers were among the nine killed during the exchange of gunfire between the assailants and security forces. At least 29 people were hospitalised, some with serious injuries.

Earlier, government spokesman Mohammad al-Momani said a manhunt to “eliminate” the gunmen had entered its final phase. Jordan’s position made it vulnerable to spill-over of violence, Momani said.

“When we are in a region engulfed with fire from every side you expect that such events happen,” the official said.

Witnesses said exchanges of fire continued for several hours between the gunmen and security forces. Police said earlier they had rescued 10 tourists and trapped inside the historic site when the gunmen went into the castle.

A former government minister from Karak city, Sameeh Maaytah, said there were signs Islamist militants may have been behind the attack.

“This was a group that was planning certain operations inside Jordan,” Maaytah told pan-Arab news channel al-Hadhath. Video footage on social media showed security forces taking groups of young Asians tourists up the castle’s steep steps to its main entrance as gunshots were heard overhead.

The castle is one of Jordan’s most popular tourist attractions. Prime Minister Hani al-Mulki told parliament “a number of security personnel” had been killed and that security forces were laying siege to the castle. The Canadian government confirmed one of its nationals had been killed.

Police and witnesses said gunmen had earlier gone on a shooting spree aimed at officers patrolling the town before entering the castle, perched on top of a hill. They used one of the castle’s towers to fire at a nearby police station.

Police said the gunmen had arrived from the desert town of Qatrah near 30 km northeast of Karak city, a desert outpost known for smuggling, where many tribal residents are heavily armed and have long resisted state authority. They had fled to Karak after an exchange of fire with the police at a residential building, security forces said.

Jordan is one of the few Arab states that have taken part in a US-led air campaign against Islamic State in Syria. But many Jordanians oppose their country’s involvement, saying it has led to the killing of fellow Muslims and raised security threats inside Jordan.

Several incidents over the past year have jolted the Arab kingdom, which has been relatively unscathed by the uprisings, civil wars and Islamist militancy that have swept the Middle East since 2011. Last November three US military trainers were shot dead when their car failed to stop at the gate of a military base and was fired on by a Jordanian army member in an incident which Washington did not rule out political motives.— Reuters

Human-induced climate change worsened 2015 heatwave in India

NEW DELHI — The deadly heat waves that killed nearly 2,500 people in India and 2,000 people in Pakistan last year were exacerbated by human-induced climate change, scientists including those from IIT-Delhi have found. Researchers examined observational and simulated temperature and heat indexes and found that the heat waves in the two countries “were exacerbated by anthropogenic climate change.”

While the two countries typically experience severe heat in the summer, the 2015 heat waves — which occurred in late May/early June in India and in late June/early July in Pakistan — have been linked to the deaths of nearly 2,500 people in India and 2,000 in Pakistan.

Researchers used “factual” simulations of the world and compared them to “counterfactual” simulations of the world that might have been had humans not changed the composition of the atmosphere by emitting large amounts of carbon dioxide, said Daithi Stone from the Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory (Berkeley Lab) in US.

“It is relatively common to run one or a few simulations of a climate model within a certain set of conditions, with each simulation differing just in the precise weather on the first day of the simulation; this difference in the first day propagates through time, providing different realisations of what the weather could have been,” said Stone.

“The special thing about the simulations used here is that we ran a rather large number of them. This was important for studying a rare event; if it is rare, then you need a large amount of data in order to have it occurring frequently enough that you can understand it,” Stone added. Researchers, including those from Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) Delhi, examined both observational and simulated temperature alone as well as the heat index, a measure incorporating both temperature and humidity effects.—PTI
Actress Zsa Zsa Gabor dies at age 99

NEW YORK — Actress Zsa Zsa Gabor, who parlayed beauty, di-amond-studded glamour and nine marriages into a long celebrity career, died on Sunday. She was 99.

Edward Lozzi, who was a longtime publicist for Gabor, said the Hungarian-born actress passed away at her Los Angeles home after years of decline and illness. She would have turned 100 in February.

Gabor, by most accounts, had a personality that general-ly outshone her acting skills. Her bubbly demeanor and looks helped land her a string of wealthy husbands. She had a penchant for calling everyone “dah-ling” in her thick Hungarian accent.

Along with her two sisters, Eva and Magda, she became a fixture on Hollywood’s social circuit in her prime—when her marriage to husband No. 2, hotel mo- narch Conrad Hilton, was financial-ly motivated.

In fact, marriage could have been the Gabor family business and Zsa Zsa, the company’s CEO. Her nine marriages topped the five by Eva, who starred in the 1960s sitcom “Green Acres,” and the six of Magda, whose Hol-lywood career was mostly based on being the third Gabor sister.

While her acting skills were rarely lauded, Zsa Zsa Gabor carved out a career in her early days in Hollywood. Her finest film roles came with “Moulin Rouge,” where she earned good reviews, in 1952 and “Lili” in 1953.

She appeared in more than 30 movies and by the 1970s she began to reject smaller roles, say-ing: “I may be a character but I do not want to be a character ac-tress.”

Gabor eventually ended up in low-budget films with such titles as “Queen of Outer Space” and “Picture Mommy Dead.”

Greater success came with nightclub and TV appearances where she disclosed she called everyone “dah-ling” because she could not remember names well, and she relied on self-parodying jokes based on her marriages, haughty de-meaning and taste for opulence.

Gabor was an “honor and a great re-sponsibility” to represent her country.

The top five married No. 2, hotel mo-narch Conrad Hilton, was financial-ly motivated.

The last of Hollywood’s golden age, was not seen in public in her final years as she struggled with her health, including bro-ken bones and cuts from a car accident. She also suffered a stroke and a broken hip, en-during complications from hip replacement surgery. She had much of her right leg am-putated in 2011 because of an infection.

Gabor’s most recent stint at the hospital came just days after her 99th birthday last February for breathing diffi-culties.

Born Sari Gabor into a wealthy family, she was named Miss Hungary in the 1930s. When World War Two approached, Zsa Zsa and her sisters headed for the Unit-ed States, leaving behind her first husband, Burhan Belge, a Turkish diplomat.

LONDON — From hoping the world can “get it together” in 2017 to reminiscing about Christmases filled with food and gifts, celebri-ties were enjoying “Collateral Beauty” during Christmas time.

Celebrities toast tradition, getting ‘love going’ in Christmas wishes

“Happy holidays ... 2016 was an interesting, potentially difficult year, so let’s just get it togeth-er, let’s get some love going for 2017,” Hollywood star Will Smith said.

His “Collateral Beauty” co-star Helen Mirren said: “Be full, be happy and hopefully be peaceful and let’s all work towards peace in the new year because, honestly, it’s time.”

Canadian singer Shania Twain said she liked to be surrounded by snow for the festivities. “I come from a very cold part of Canada so there’s always snow. I like tradi-tional Christmases ... so I go for a pretty quiet low-key traditional Christmas environment.”

Actor Liam Neeson said he also favored tradition: “We cele-brate Christmas, myself and my two sons very, very traditionally. Lots of food, maybe too much food, a few gifts and a few prayers too with thanks, certainly with thanks ... It’s a very important time of the year.”

However at this month’s 2016 Fashion Awards in London, rock-er Marilyn Manson said he “hates Christmas.”

“I’ve spent every Christmas without a Christmas tree ... since some while, I’m like Charlie Brown’s Christmas - the sad tree, the Grinch,” he said. — Reuters

LOS ANGELES — “Rogue One: A Star Wars Story” sold out multi-plexes around the country and brought fanboys and fangirls out in force over the weekend. The “Star Wars” prequel scored the second largest December open-ing in history, the second largest launch of the year, and one of the top debuts in history, opening to a massive $155 million.

Globally, the film has earned $290.5 million, after touching down in nearly every major for-eign market save for China and South Korea.

Disney, which shellled out $4 billion to buy “Star Wars’ creator LucasFilm in 2012, had been trying to downplay expec-tations for “Rogue One.” Execu-tives noted that the film is the first “Star Wars” movie to exist outside of the main Skywalker clan storyline. It’s also a darker, war-themed tale; one that has an unusually high body count for a popcorn flick.

But the “Star Wars” pedigree proved irresistible to audiences, and the film seems positioned to play well through the holidays.

Disney is planning to do more “Rogue One”-style spinoffs. The company is already working on a film about the early years of Han Solo that will star Alden Ehren-reich.

Artist Liu Bolin live streams Beijing smog to raise awareness

PHNOM PENH — A haul of elephant ivory, tiger bones and pangolin scales was found at a dry port on the western outskirts of Phnom Penh on Saturday in hallowed-out logs imported from Africa, a senior official confirmed on Monday.

Un Vannarith, deputy chief of the Phnom Penh Forestry Administration, said, “As an artist, to disrupt it with images is what I think we should do,” Liu told Reuters Television.

As north China battled with poor air quality for a third straight day on Monday, Liu said the recent pollution warnings inspired him to show live video of the smog in the capital, Beijing.

To do that, Liu walks around wearing an orange vest with 24 smartphones attached on the front and back, live-streaming scenes of smog which he calls “a disaster”.

“It’s about the power of art,” Liu said. “As an artist, to disrupt it with images is what I think we should do.”

NEC to develop cancer drugs using artificial intelligence

TOKYO — NEC Corp said Monday that it will develop cancer drugs using artificial intelligence, aiming to put new vaccines on the market within the next eight years as key substances in treatment and conventional cancer drugs.

“Artificial intelligence is a promising technology to quickly choose the right type of peptide, it said. Under joint research with pharmaceutical companies, NEC has already discovered a peptide for the project, Cytlimic Inc., plans to commercialize effective peptide vaccines in cooperation with pharmaceutical companies, NEC said. NEC has jointly launched Cytlimic in Tokyo with such firms as a group firm of Somitomo Mitsui Banking Corp.

With minimal physical burdens on the patients, peptide vaccines are widely considered as a “fourth” cancer therapy, following surgery, radiation treatment and conventional cancer drugs.

Unique Messi dazzles Espanyol with derby exhibition

BARCELONA — Lionel Messi proved his ability to excite has no foreseeable expiry date by producing a virtuoso display as Barcelona brushed Espanyol 4-1 in a local derby on Sunday and team mates and opponents were equally enthralled by his magic.

The five-time world player of the year produced two exhilarating solo runs in the space of a minute in the second half which lead to Luis Suarez and Jordi Alba scoring and capped his stunning display with a deserved goal late on.

“In the second half we saw the most spectacular version of our attacking players, particularly Messi, and we should never stop praising him,” said Barca coach Luis Enrique.

“It looks routine but we should not get used to it because it’s something unique.”

Messi’s brilliance inflicted the heaviest defeat since August on Espanyol, who went into the game boasting the most in-form La Liga defence, having conceded once in their previous six games.

After the Argentinian was finished with them, they had shipped as many goals as they had in their last nine games.

“Messi is capable of constantly changing every game he plays in, he’s the only player you could imagine scoring a hat-trick in every game,” said Espanyol coach Quique Sanchez Flores, who approached the forward after the game.

“I congratulated him for his humility, he never complains, he gets kicked, he gets thrown to the floor, it’s amazing. We have a good relationship, I’ve lost count of how many times people have asked me to get hold of his shirt.”

Messi, 29, will return to Argentina on Monday after Luis Enrique gave permission to his maestro plus Suarez, Neymar and Gerard Pique, to miss Wednesday’s King’s Cup, last 32 second leg at home to Hercules so they can travel to South America.

The first leg against the third-tier side finished 1-1. Suarez laid on the pass for Messi’s late goal and said he felt guilty about scoring the second, which was created by his strike partner’s mesmeric run past five defenders.

“I would have preferred for him to have completed his amazing move rather than me scoring it, it was like a Playback move,” he said. “Messi is a unique player.”

Murray wins record third BBC sports award

LONDON — Britain’s world number one men’s tennis player Andy Murray won a record third BBC Sports Personality of the Year award on Sunday after claiming his second Wimbledon title and first ATP World Tour crown in a stellar 2016 season. Murray, who also retained his Olympic men’s singles title in Rio de Janeiro, picked up the BBC trophy again after claiming it in 2013, when he won Wimbledon for the first time, and in 2015.

“It’s been a great year for British sport and I am so proud to have been a part of it,” Murray, who led Britain to the Davis Cup semi-finals after their first triumph for 79 years in 2015, said via a video link from his training camp in Miami.

“The 29-year-old Scot, who joined boxer Henry Cooper and racing drivers Damon Hill and Nigel Mansell as the only double winners of the event last year, is now out on his own after a year in which he also reached the Australian and French Open finals. Although Murray lost to Novak Djokovic at Roland Garros, he became the first British man to reach the French Open final since Bunny Austin in 1937. He also lost to Serbian Djokovic at the Australian Open but finished the year as world number one.

Triathlete Alistair Brownlee was runner-up and show jumper Nick Skelton took third in the annual BBC awards.

Brownlee, 28, became the first man to retain the Olympic title when he took gold in Rio, finishing ahead of brother Jonny, who claimed the silver.

Skelton, 58, won the individual show jumping title in Rio 2016, becoming Britain’s second-oldest Olympic gold medalist. 16 years after retiring with a broken neck in two places.

In his acceptance speech, a delighted Murray revealed to much laughter that his wife Kim, who gave birth to their first child, daughter Sophia, in February, had voted for Skelton.

“A huge thanks to my wife and my daughter — she won’t know what this means yet but maybe in a few years she will. Actually, I’ve got a bone to pick with my wife about because about an hour ago she told me she’d voted for Nick Skelton. Not smart from her with Christmas coming up,” he said.

Manchester City see off Arsenal with stirring comeback

MELBOURNE — Second-half goals from Leroy Sane and Raheem Sterling stunned Arsenal at the Etihad Stadium on Sunday as Manchester City came from behind to win 2-1 and move seven points behind leaders Chelsea.

The result capped a miserable week for Arsenal who lost the lead — and all three points — for the second time in five days, having also gone down at Everton on Tuesday.

Coming away with nothing again had seemed inconceivable after an opening 45 minutes which Arsenal dominated, taking the lead on five minutes when Theo Walcott seized on Alexis Sanchez’s weighted pass to round off a thrilling three-man move. City almost equalised immediately when Sterling headed just wide but they looked strangely hesitant going forward and could have fallen further behind as Arsenal played with confidence and menace.

City came out for the second half completely transformed, hitting back almost immediately as David Silva found Sane with a precision pass that allowed the German to score his first goal since his 46-million-pound ($57.49-million) move from Schalke.

Arsenal wilted alarmingly and frequently came off second best in the physical contest. It was no real surprise when City went further ahead after Kevin de Bruyne supplied Sterling with a raking crossfield pass on 73 minutes. Sterling cut inside on his left foot and beat Petr Cech at his near post with a low shot. It was the first time since 2012 that City had won at the Etihad after trailing at the interval.

“It was good to get on the scoresheet,” said Sterling. “We stayed in the game and got the winner.”

The result dropped Arsenal to fourth place. —Reuters
