UN rights envoy, Maungtaw Commission discuss alleged abuse in northern Rakhine

VICE President U Myint Swe, Chairman of the Investigation Commission on Maungtaw, held talks with Ms. Yanghee Lee, the UN Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, over alleged rapes and allegations of human rights abuses in northern Rakhine by security forces. At the meeting held at the Presidential Palace in Nay Pyi Taw yesterday, the Vice President clarified the formation of the investigation commission, which is comprised of experienced scholars from varied fields, adding that during the fact-finding field trips to conflict areas, members of the commission took individual as well as group responsibility.

The chairman of the commission also noted that the violent attacks of 9 October and 12 and 13 November were different from previous conflicts in the state, as the most recent attacks targeted security forces in an attempt to damage the sovereignty of the country.

The commission carried out its tasks of investigating and finding out the background situation and uncovering the details behind the violent attacks and alleged human rights abuses. The commission is making an assessment and giving recommendations to prevent such incidents again in the future. The Investigation Commission on Maungtaw released its interim report on 3 January and is in the process of finishing its final report.

Ms. Yanghee Lee expressed her thanks to the chairman of the commission and discussed information she received on alleged human rights abuses. Also present at the meeting were commission members U Aung Kyi, U Tun Myat, Dr Daw Thet Thet Zin, U Nyunt Swe, U Thar Nyan, Daw Kyang Ngai Man, U Saw Thalay Saw, Chief of Myanmar Police Force Police Maj-Gen Zaw Win, U Aung Naing and Secretary of the Commission U Zaw Myint Pe.—Myanmar News Agency

State Counsellor, UN human rights envoy hold talks

STATE Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi held talks with Ms. Yanghee Lee, the UN Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, over the peace-making process, efforts for promoting human rights, the situation in Kachin and northern Shan states, which saw armed conflicts recently, and promoting the sending of humanitarian aid to the areas.

At the meeting at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Nay Pyi Taw yesterday, Ms. Yanghee Lee strongly denounced the violent attacks on border outposts in northern Rakhine in November and October and openly discussed with the State Counsellor the allegations of human right abuses by security forces in northern Rakhine during area clearance operations and increasing humanitarian aid to the state.—Myanmar News Agency
Vice-President U Myint Swe addresses 17th Anniversary of Myanmar Traditional Medicine Practitioners’ Conference

Vice-President U Myint Swe addressed the opening ceremony of the 17th anniversary of Myanmar traditional medicine practitioners’ conference held at the Myanmar International Convention Center 2 in Nay Pyi Taw yesterday morning, reminding attendees that Myanmar traditional medicine is one of ASEAN standards, as Myanmar traditional medicine has been included in the agenda under negotiation to enter the ASEAN economic circle.

“It is necessary to make an effort to keep up with pharmaceutical knowledge, how they are preserved and how to effectively use them. Simultaneously, it is urgently necessary to systematically research workable traditional medicines and know-how so that they can be proved effective and workable. With Myanmar traditional medicine, there are several important factors — revival of extinct Myanmar traditional medicines and pharmacy, eternal survival of the Myanmar traditional pharmacy and implementation of systematic research works on Myanmar traditional medicines so that Myanmar’s younger generations can be well educated on traditional medicine, up to reaching the level of standing tall in the midst of other countries. Today, the world’s health and medical realm relies more and more on herbal medicines rather than chemical drugs. Departments of traditional medicine are performing research work on Myanmar traditional medicines more than ever and modernising techniques by linking with foreign universities. It is of great importance to discover workable herbs in Myanmar, to systematically breed herbs and produce for utilisation and to develop production by the process of Good Manufacturing Practices.”

Afterward, Dr Myint Htwe, Union Minister, read out a congratulatory message sent from the president to the 17th anniversary of Myanmar traditional practitioners’ conference. The Vice-President and party posed for documentary photos together with invited guests, inspecting the traditional medicine displays exhibited in the hall.

That evening, the Vice-President attended the dinner party held at the MICC 2.

Vice-President U Henry Van Thio visits agricultural farms in Mandalay

Vice-President U Henry Van Thio inspected vineyards which have been cultivated on a large scale in Sehteik Village, Yamethin Township, in Mandalay Region on Wednesday morning, accompanied by Dr Aung Thu, Union Minister, Deputy Ministers Maj-General Aung Soe and U Kyaw Myo.

The Vice-President and party were told about planting seeds and the necessity of stems being grown in the yard, the steps involved in the growing of grape plants, the average yield per acre and the proportion of cost and income by responsible personnel and vineyard owners.

U Henry Van Thio stressed the need for domestic production to be substituted for imported goods in consultation with professional viticulture experts so as to increase the income for vine growers and for the country to get more benefits.

Upon arrival at the No. 8 textile factory in Shwedan Area, Yamethin, the Vice-President was told about production and sales by month in the 2016-2017 financial year, the factory’s expected results and other matters by U Myint Soe, in-charge of the factory.

When the Vice-President arrived at the plantation of Ye-sin-1 Hybrid-Sunflower seeds on Yamethin street near Pyi-dawngsu Nay Pyi Taw-Mandalay Expressway, he was informed about situations at the sunflower plantation by responsible officials.

U Naing Kyi Win, director-general of the department of agricultural research, explained his corn plantation research work to the Vice-President at the Yard of Agricultural Research.

Later in the day, the Vice-President and party inspected the Sartarkei rice mill, which produces 200 tonnes of rice per day.

Workshop concerning natural resources held in Yangon

National-level political dialogues will be held in Kayin State, Taninthayi and Nay Pyi Taw prior to the upcoming second meeting of Union Peace Conference – the 21st Century Panglong, which will be held in February. Kayin ethnic groups held a dialogue on political, economic, social, land and natural resources on 12th January and the final discussion will be made on 18th, 19th and 20th January in a bid to reach consensus, with 700 Kayin ethnic people being invited. This dialogue is being supervised by a Kayin political party and three Kayin ethnic armed groups, with the assistance of the Kayin state government.

“This discussion hopes to yield benefits to the Panglong Conference, which will be held every six months. We encourage other ethnic groups to hold dialogues continuously in order to listen to weak and strong points to effectuate the development of the ethnic people, with an aim to move forward in the peace process,” Mahn Aung Pyi Soe, the vice chairperson of Phalon-Sawaw Democratic Party said at the discussion.

“The dialogues were held from different viewpoints and the facts produced from the discussion will be embodied into the natural resources policy research (draft). The dialogues will be ongoing to discuss the matters concerning the natural resources on the basis of the suggestions and opinions from the government and ethnic people,” said Sai Nyunt Lwin, the general secretary of Shan Nationalities League for Democracy (SNLD).

“This two-day-workshop has been held in Chiang Mai, Thailand, in the presence of civil society organisations (CSOs) and ethnic armed groups that are currently staying outside of the country. Now, the dialogues will proceed with the internal political parties. Myanmar’s government is making efforts to establish a federal union based on democracy, involving power sharing, resource sharing and revenue sharing. We’re making preparations for the Panglong Conference, and the facts from the discussion might not be submitted as there might be wider discussions with the CSOs,” he added.

“Jade is extracted in Kayin State. Systematic exploration is required to contribute to the country. The constitution will be drawn up in compliance with the opinion from the Union to practice the Federal Democratic System,” said Dr. Manan Tu Ja from the Kayin State Democratic Party.— Ye Khuang Nyunt

Number of circular trains to increase

The number of circular trains will be increased for the convenience of passengers during the time when passengers are becoming accustomed to the new YBS bus lines, said the traffic manager from Division 7 of Myanma Railways.

Currently, over 80,000 people are using the circular trains in Yangon daily. But the number of passengers taking circular trains has increased by over 16,000 beginning from 16 January. Myanma Railways now has three more trains for the six routes from Yangon to Toe Kyaung Galay and from Insein to Yangon.

Myanmar Railways is upgrading the road rails for the passengers to travel more conveniently with the circular trains.

Normally, Myanmar Railways has 23 trains that make 215 round trips daily. — 200

Customs check point reopened in Hsenwi

AN old customs check point which has been closed for 5 years was reopened in Hsenwi township, Shan State (North) on Sunday.

The customs check point has been closed since 16 January, 2012 by the Ministry of Planning and Finance. The local residents want the authorities to fix an awareness promotion period before the reopening of the check point.

“There should always be an education period before taking action. If you look at other departments, for example, the Road Transport Administration Department always prescribed an education period before taking action. Other departments also prescribe the awareness period to launch a new project. So, I want the authorities to prescribe an awareness period before they reopen the check point,” said U Sai Lon Aye, a driver. Reopening of the check point was aimed at increasing the government’s revenue and preventing smuggling.

The old customs check point was reopened on 16 January, 2017, expecting of boost in the trading sector, it is learnt.— Myitmakha News Agency

About 11,442 houses will be solar powered in August

KAYIN State rural department will supply solar power starting from the end of January until August, 2017 to 11,442 houses from 143 villages in five townships of Kayin State, it is learnt.

“There are three types of solar power systems—30 Watts, 45 Watts and 60 Watts. The meter charges for 30 Watts will be Ks 300,000 while those for 45 Watts and 60 Watts will be Ks 380,000 and Ks 420,000 respectively,” said U Nay Oo, the head of Kayin State rural development department.

“We will sell the solar power on an instalment basis. We have to make a down payment of 10 per cent — Ks 30,000 for 30 Watts, Ks 50,000 for 45 Watts and Ks 70,000 for 60 Watts. Then, we must pay the rest in two instalments. Currently, there are already over 100 houses that have paid the second instalment. They must pay the rest when the power line reaches the village,” he added. Twenty-three villagers from Hpa-an, 11 from Hlaingbwe, 73 from Kawkareik, 29 from Kya-in-Seikkyi and seven villagers from Thandaunggyi townships are on the list to buy solar power in Kayin State.

Foreign countries propose to become agricultural partners

FOREIGN countries have put forward the practice of the Profit and Loss Sharing System in order to cooperate with Myanmar farmers in agribusiness, said an official from Myanmar Rice Federation.

Japan, China, China (Taipei), Singapore and Brunei proposed to cooperate with the farmers and a law concerning this system is needed to be formulated, he added.

Those companies which want to join hands with local farmers under the Profit and Loss Sharing System in agricultural production have to support pedigreed paddy seeds, fertilizer, pesticides, agricultural equipment and modern techniques. This system means that companies have to purchase the rice at the prevailing price at the harvest time, it is learnt. — 200

Nissan & Tan Chong begin vehicle assembly in Myanmar

NISSAN Motor Co., Ltd. and Tan Chong Motor (Myanmar) Co., Ltd (TCMM) began assembling cars for the first time in Myanmar with the iconic Nissan sedan, the New Sunny.

Nissan and TCMM made a strong commitment to Myanmar market which includes strong product line up and local production capabilities. Today’s event is a key milestone in the ongoing expansion plans for Nissan and its partner TCMM.

This locally assembled New Nissan Sunny will be offered at an introductory price starting from 206 lakhs for a limited period and will be available at all Nissan showrooms or roadshows across the country.

The first generation of Nissan Sunny was introduced in 1966 and for over 50 years; now in its 10th generation, has sold more than 20 million units globally. The New Nissan Sunny retains Sunny’s original DNA of “luxurious and well balance family sedan” from generation past and boasts fuel efficiency, performance, comfort, convenience, advanced technology, safety, luxury and driving pleasure.

The New Sunny will be available in a choice of four colours and three grades.

Earlier in February 2016, Nissan and Tan Chong executive joined Bago government officials to sign a land lease agreement with representatives of the country’s Bago Region. — GNLM

Vegetable wholesale market to be built

A VEGETABLE wholesale market, including the laboratories to specify the quality of the products, will be built in cooperation with South Korea, according to the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Irrigation.

This market will be built with the aim of attaining a reasonable price for the growers because the farmers are offered lower than market price by brokers when there is stock left over at the depot.

The site for the new market is yet to be chosen. No region or state has been specified, either. The wholesale market will include laboratories to specify the quality of the commodities, which sometimes is in dispute when price negotiations take place, said U Myo Tint Tun, the deputy permanent secretary of the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Irrigation.

The ministry will find a site for the market and laboratories, and South Korea will take responsibility for construction, it is learnt.

To eliminate the price manipulation, the wholesale market plans to operate in collaboration with South Korea, it is learnt. — 200

Sembcorp Myingyan project powers Inks build-operate-transfer agreement with Ministry of Electric Power & Energy

SEMCORP Industries (Sembcorp signed a build-operate-transfer (BOT) agreement with the Ministry of Electric Power and Energy of Myanmar (MOEE), for its upcoming 255-megawatt Sembcorp Myingyan gas-fired power plant in Mandalay yesterday.

The agreement between Sembcorp Myingyan Power Company and MOEE was signed by Tan Cheng Guan, Sembcorp Industries’ Executive Vice President & Head, Group Business Development Commercial, and U Htein Lwin, Permanent Secretary at MOEE. Under the agreement, Sembcorp Myingyan Power Company will build and operate the power plant for 22 years, after which the facility will be transferred to the Myanmar government.

The BOT agreement comes after the signing of a long-term power purchase agreement in March 2016, for the sale of the plant’s entire power output to Electric Power Generation Enterprise (EPGE), the successor entity to Myanmar Electric Power (MEPE) pursuant to reorganization within MOEE.

The total project cost of the Sembcorp Myingyan Power Project is approximately US$300 million.

Commenting on the signing, Sembcorp Group President & CEO Tan Kin Fei said, “we are confident that we will be able to deliver this facility on time. This will help to meet the growing need for power particularly in Mandalay, support the nation’s progress and improve the quality of life for the Myanmar people.” —GNLM
Cambodia PM files fresh lawsuit against opposition leader

PHNOM PENH — Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen filed a $1-million defamation lawsuit against opposition leader Sam Rainsy on Wednesday, keeping up pressure ahead of elections.

Political tension has been growing in the Southeast Asian country ahead of local elections this year and a general election next year, in which Hun Sen’s three-decade grip on power will be challenged.

Sam Rainsy lives in exile in France after being sentenced in absentia last month to five years in prison for posting a fake government pledge to dissolve the border with Vietnam.

The latest lawsuit, against Sam Rainsy, in the Phnom Penh Municipal Court, accuses him of defamation over claims made in France that the prime minister bribed an activist to break his name off an opposition list for Cambodia’s National Rescue Party.

“What Sam Rainsy did was an act of distorting truth, affecting the prime minister’s reputation,” said Phnom Penh dean of the opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party.

Responding to the accusation, Sam Rainsy said on Twitter he welcomed lawsuits with Cambodia’s “Kamgaro court”.

“The discussion means more publicity for Hun Sen’s shamefull acts,” he said.

The activist, Thy Sovantha, also filed a suit against Rainsy for saying she had taken money from Hun Sen. Opposition politicians accuse the authorities of intimidation ahead of the elections.

In the 2013 general election, the CNRP won 55 seats in the National Assembly, leaving Hun Sen’s Cambodian People’s Party with 68 in the 123-seat assembly.

The latest lawsuits were a sign of the ruling party’s concern over its election prospects, said Miguel Chanco, regional lead analyst for the Economist Intelligence Unit.

“The government is using every tool in the box to discredit and suppress the opposition,” Chanco said.

Malaysian court revises clemency option for jailed leader Anwar

KUALA LUMPUR — Malaysia’s jailed opposition leader Anwar Ibrahim scored a minor legal victory on Wednesday, as a court ruled that he can proceed with his bid to challenge the rejection of his petition for a royal pardon.

Anwar is seen as the biggest political threat to Prime Minister Najib Razak, who has been buffeted by allegations of graft and mismanagement mostly related to a multi-billion dollar scandal at state fund 1Malaysia Development Berhad (1MDB).

Anwar, a former deputy prime minister, has served nearly two years of a five-year sentence after the country’s highest court upheld a sodomy conviction in February 2015, a charge the charismatic leader and his supporters say was trumped up.

The Court of Appeal ruled on Wednesday that Anwar can ask the Federal Court to determine if he has the constitutional right to legally challenge the Pardons Board’s decision to reject his petition.

A date for the case to be heard in Federal Court has yet to be set.

Clemency is the only option left for Anwar, 69, to get out of prison and clear his name.

“I’m here for the big fight,” Anwar told reporte.rs in court before being whisked away by prison officers following the ruling.

Anwar’s family requested a royal pardon shortly after his 2015 conviction. But it was rejected that year by the Pardons Board, which advises the king on candidates for clemency.

Last December, Anwar exhausted his final legal option for an acquittal after the apex court unanimously ruled that his application for review of his conviction was without merit.

Anwar is widely expected to be released late mid-2018, as Malaysia grants a one-third reduction of jail terms for good behaviour. His prison term ends in 2020.

But the conviction disqualifies him from political office and from contesting the next election that must be held by 2018.—Reuters

Abe, Pacific island nations chart mutually beneficial cooperation

Tokyo — Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe met on Wednesday with representatives of Pacific Islands nations, for talks focused on pursuing mutually beneficial cooperation.

“I want to work hand-in-hand with you in the fields of development, climate change and UN Security Council reform,” Abe told the group of leaders, foreign ministers and other officials from the Pacific Islands Leaders Meeting bloc.

Samoan Prime Minister Tuilaepa Lusipalosi Sailele Maafu indicated the Pacific island nations share Japan’s regional security and environmental concerns.

“We will continue to support each other on the international front to ensure that we adhere to the principles of international law and that we continue to maintain peace, security and prosperity in our region, as well as guarantee robust stewardship and management of the oceans we share,” Tuilaepa said.

And Lorin Robert, foreign affairs secretary of the Federated States of Micronesia, spoke of the need for multilateral dialogue.

In a portion of the meeting open to the media, Abe asked the island nations to work with Japan toward the success of the eighth PALM summit, or PALMS, to be held in Fukushima Prefecture, Japan, in May next year.

PALM, the United States and 15 Pacific nations including Australia and New Zealand. The group that Abe met on Wednesday included a delegate from each of the 15 nations and a representative of the Pacific Islands Forum Secretariat.

Members of the delegation attended an interim ministerial meeting in Tokyo the previous day as part of the preparations for PALMS, according to the Japanese Foreign Ministry.

Philippines’ Duterte says won’t declare martial law, but can if wants to MANILA — Philippine President Rodrigo Duterte on Wednesday appeared to rule out declaring martial law, but said he could do so if he wished, and anyone questioning his justification should “shut up” and stay out of his business.

The former prosecutor has threatened several times to invoke military rule to help his war on drugs and said he had the power to declare martial law, even though the Philippines did not meet conditions required by the constitution.

The mercurial leader has been criticised by opponents for acting in an authoritarian way and for showing willingness to circumvent the constitution. Some have ridiculed him for his contradictory remarks on whether he intends to pursue martial law.

“I will not declare martial law, and if I declare martial law, I will not make noise,” he said in a speech on Wednesday.

“And if you ask ‘what is the basis?’ you son of a bitch, it’s none of your business. Just shut up, all of you.”

The constitution states martial law can only be declared in the event of invasion or rebellion, when public safety requires it.

Congress can revoke a president’s declaration, as can the Supreme Court, but there is no scenario in the constitution outlining which of the two institutions would prevail should they disagree.

“For me, it is not found in the constitution, it is not written there. But if I feel as a president that I have to preserve my country, I will declare martial law.”

He also said the military and police were not prepared to fulfill martial law duties, but there was no scenario for acting in an authoritarian way and for showing willingness to circumvent the constitution.

Duterte said in May next year.

Duterte’s comments offer little clarity about why he is discussing martial law at a time when the government is fighting a civil war in Mindanao and is high, political opposition is muted, and the government is touting success in its drug war.

PresidentiCommuni- cations Secretary Martin Andanar on Sunday criticised media for reporting Duterte’s statements on martial law and for head- lines that “sow panic and confusion”. He called that “the height of journalistic irresponsibility”.

The presidential palace press corps hit back on Wednesday urging the government to stop censuring journalists.

“We are disturbed and appalled by the propensity of the officials of this ad- ministration to blame the media whenever the inflammatory statements of the president are disguised or disown, and now, they can cite ‘anti-constitutional irresponsibility’ as a legal basis,” the media group said in a statement.

“We hope that such behaviour is not an attempt to discredit or undermine the media.” —Reuters
Samsung chief questioned behind closed doors in arrest warrant hearing

SEOUl — A South Korean judge questioned Samsung Group leader Jay Y Lee behind closed doors on Wednesday to decide whether he should be arrested over his alleged role in a corruption scandal that led parliament to impeach President Park Geun-hye.

Lee, 48, in dark overcoat and purple necktie, did not answer questions from reporters as he left the Seoul Central District Court after the nearly four-hour hearing and headed by car to a detention centre to await his fate.

One of the five attorneys representing Lee struck a positive tone, saying the legal team had argued its case sufficiently.

“We are confident the court will make a wise decision,” attorney Song Wu-cheol told reporters.

The special prosecutor’s office on Monday said it would seek a warrant to arrest the third-generation leader of the country’s largest conglomerate on suspicion of bribery, embezzlement and perjury.

Lee, who has been the de facto leader of South Korea’s biggest conglomerate since his father Lee Kun-hee was incapacitated by a 2014 heart attack, was questioned last week for 22 straight hours at the prosecutor’s office in Seoul.

He has denied wrongdoing. Park, 64, was impeached last month by parliament over the influence-peddling scandal, a decision that if upheld by the Constitutional Court will see him become the country’s first democratically-elected leader forced from office early.

Park, who remains in office but stripped of her powers while the court decides her fate, has denied wrongdoing.

The judge may not announce his decision on the arrest warrant for Lee until after midnight, a court official told Reuters on Tuesday. The court ordered Lee to be held at the Seoul Detention Centre, a half-hour drive away, while it reviews the warrant request.

The special prosecutor has accused Lee of paying bribes totalling 43 billion won ($36.70 million) to organisations linked to Choi Soon-sil, a friend of the president who is at the centre of the scandal, to secure the 2015 merger of two affiliates and cement his control of the family business.

BEIJING/TAIPEI — The United States should not allow a delegation from Taiwan to attend US President-elect Donald Trump’s inauguration, China’s Foreign Ministry said on Wednesday, raising a new bone of contention in Beijing’s relations with the incoming government.

Trump broke with decades of precedent last month by telling a congratulatory telephone call from Taiwan President Tsai Ing-wen, and he has also said the “One China” policy was up for negotiation, a position Beijing strongly rejected.

A Taiwan delegation, led by premier and ex-ruling party leader Yu Shyi-kun, and including a Taiwan national security adviser and some lawmakers, will attend Friday’s inauguration, Taiwan’s Foreign Ministry said this week.

It is typical for Taiwan to send a delegation to US presidential inaugurations. A spokesman for Taiwan President Tsai Ing-wen’s office said no meetings were scheduled with the new Trump administration while the delegation was there for the event.

China considers Taiwan a breakaway province, with no right to have any kind of diplomatic relations with other countries.

Chinese Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying said China was opposed to Taiwan using any excuse to send people to the United States to “engage in activities to interfere in or damage China-US ties”.

“We again urge the relevant side in the United States not to allow the Taiwan authority to send a so-called delegation to the United States to attend the presidential inauguration and not have any form of official contact with Taiwan,” Hua told a regular news briefing.

“China’s position has already accurately and unmistakably been given to the US administration and Trump’s team.”

China’s ambassador to the United States, Cui Tiankai, will attend the inauguration on its behalf, she added.

Defeated Nationalist forces fled to Taiwan in 1949 after losing a civil war against the Communists.

China has never renounced the use of force to bring Taiwan under its control, and proudly democratic Taiwan has shown no interest in wanting to be run by Beijing.

China is deeply suspicious of Taiwan’s Tsai, whom it suspects of wanting to push for the island’s formal independence, a red line for China.

Tsai, who visited the US this month while traveling to and from Central America, says she wants to maintain peace with China.

The administration of President Barack Obama has repeatedly reinforced the US commitment to the “one China” policy, under which Washington acknowledges China’s position of sovereignty over Taiwan, since Trump’s call with the Taiwanese leader.

Indonesia can do business with “pragmatic” Trump, says minister

JAKARTA — Indonesia, the country with the world’s biggest Muslim population, can do business with a “pragmatic” US President-elect Donald Trump, a senior minister close to President Barack Obama’s “ideological” foreign policy had intensified differences between countries.

“President Trump is a pragmatist who is likely to adopt a non-ideological and non-confrontational approach to a diverse political world,” Pandjaitan said in an opinion piece published in Singapore’s Straits Times newspaper.

“As well as being close to Widodo — the two were business partners before entering politics — Pandjaitan plays an important role in formulating foreign policy, including in the South China Sea, where China and the United States are vying for influence.

His comments come after China has reacted negatively to comments from Trump and some of his Cabinet appointees about Taiwan, US adherence to the “one-China” policy and China’s occupation of islands and shoals in disputed waters in the South China Sea.

In the most expansive assessment of Trump from a senior Indonesian government member, Pandjaitan said the New York real estate mogul’s business background would enable him to strike deals with countries without judging the “colour of their political skin”.

“What matters is what they bring to the table,” he wrote.

Pandjaitan said this approach would benefit Indonesia, as would the complementary nature of the Indonesian and US economies and Trump’s vow to withe out Islamic State, which has inspired at least eight militant plots in Indonesia in the past 18 months.

Like Trump, Widodo was an outsider who had been labelled a “populist,” he added.

“That word is a loaded term used by the liberal intelligentsia to describe those who have had the audacity to rise to power outside its gilded, guarded gates.”

Pandjaitan said the policies of the outgoing US administration had had unintended consequences.

“Under President Barack Obama, America’s ideological desire to remould the world, including Europe, in America’s image helped precipitate the crisis in Ukraine that ended with Russia annexing Crimea. Its pivot to the Asia-Pacific concluded with China ignoring international law in the South China Sea.”

System of paying bus fare by I-Pay Card and our moral bankruptcy

Khin Maung Oo

We will suffer a disease, an illness or pain so long as we have mind and body. Whatever it is, any kind of such sufferings annoy us. Once they affect us, we need to consult with a medical doctor. Instead, if we take a cheap medicine from a road side drug shop, unnecessary side effects can result. These medicines may reduce our pain, but it is brief. In fact, drug shop sales persons are not skilled physicians. These days, drug shops are ubiquitous across the nation, especially in cities like Yangon. These are registered shops but unregistered brand medicines have occupied the shelves of many shops. The worst thing is that some people rush to road side drug shops for purchasing the medicines they want. Sometime in the past, many people lost their lives in the hands of charlatans, bogus doctors and fake drugs. Due to poor management of the administrative machinery, bribery and corruption are still everwhere but the move. Many are still reluctant to abandon their bad habits. Now, we have a government we ourselves chose. We believe in the integrity and good intention of our government. Our country had been deprived of our natural resources when the incumbent government took office. The present government has many things to do in the years ahead. In fact, these result from bad legacies left by former regimes. The State Counselor once said that we need not worry about deprivation of mineral resources as long as able and energetic human resources exist. It is quite right in saying so. Some are willing to give up their deep-rooted habits as they are not yet ready to do so, whereas some are unwilling to give up their deep-rooted habits as they are profiting from such bad habits. Some are finding and will find faults with every move the government makes although they know very well that the majority of Myanmar citizens support the government. Yet, the government we love and support will be moving on its way towards a federal democratic Union, making no aggressive responses to pessimistic criticisms. Youths, rebellious adults and those wishing to change came to take part in the government’s initiatives. This is as if they had declared themselves that they would contribute their manual labour in nation building. They all want their country to develop like Japan and Singapore. Our Myanmar youths admire the Japanese people for their discipline and hard work. Japan which had risen like a phoenix from the ashes of World War II is a good example to follow in many respects.

Now, the government is changing the country step by step, hand in hand with youths and the people. Now, the new YBS (Yangon Bus Service) is gaining success. In the near future, the system of bus fares will be changed, substituted by paying bus fare by I-Pay Card or something. At that time, buses will no longer need conductors onboard. In outward appearance, the system seems to be simple. Under the present situation, there can be a lot of budget wastage from the government and bus owners. Only if the new system is successful will the government be able to collect taxes exactly as expected. And doubts existing between employers and employees will vanish automatically. Yet, there is one condition that jobs need to be created for bus conductors. We firmly believe that the government has already planned for the no room for corrupt people to engage in corrupt practices, moral bankruptcy will be healed with the support of the people of Myanmar and the leadership of the government.

The noblest Religious Titles presented by the President of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar to the eminent Buddhist monks, nuns and laypersons at home and abroad for their utmost efforts for carrying out the purification, perpetuation, propagation and promotion of the Buddha Sasana (the Teachings of the Omniscient Buddha) throughout the world

Ba Sein (Religious Affairs)

In order to carefully preserve the noblest task for purification, perpetuation, propagation and promotion of the Buddhist teachings at home and abroad, the Government of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar always attaches great importance to the implementation of this noblest task.

In this regard, we all Buddhists throughout the country are very pleased and greatly honored to learn that the President Office of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar issued the Notification No.1/2017 regarding presenting religious titles on the Independence Day of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar which falls on the 4th January 2017.

According to the Notification No.1/2017 of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar, the respective religious titles have been presented as follows to internal and international outstanding Buddhist monks, Buddhist nuns and laypersons who earnestly carried out the noblest task for purification, perpetuation, propagation and promotion of the Buddha Sasana at home and abroad.

(g) Kammathanacariya title to three-eminent monks.

Religious titles for excellent missionary works on Buddhism (only for laypersons)

The outstanding laypersons who generously donated and provided the four requisites for this noblest task of excellent works on Buddhism at home and abroad have been presented the respective religious titles as follows. It is learnt that these religious titles have been presented since 1990.

(a) Sirisuddhammanijotadhara title to one layperson
(b) Sudhammanijotadhara title to one layperson
(c) Sirisuddhammanijotadhara title to one layperson
(d) Sdharmamanijotadhara title to five laypersons
(e) Sudhammanijotadhara title to fifteen laypersons

It is further learnt that the great grand religious titles presentation ceremony will be held at the precinct of the Uppatasanti Pagoda in Nay Pyi Taw, the capital of Republic of the Union of Myanmar on the Fullmoon of Taban 1378 ME (on 12th March, 2017). The religious titles will be changed, substituted by paying bus fare by I-Pay Card or something. At that time, buses will no longer need conductors onboard. In outward appearance, the system seems to be simple. Under the present situation, there can be a lot of budget wastage from the government and bus owners. Nawngkio bypass road to be constructed across Gothteik Creek

A bypass road including a bridge across Gothteik Creek will be built in Nawngkio Township in northern Shan State, according to the Nawngkio Township development committee.

“We will start the construction of the road and the bridge at Kyauk Kyan village at the entrance to Nawngkio Township. The road will be nine miles long. We had an agreement with the village residents to construct the road and the bridge on 72 acres of farmland. We will negotiate again soon with the local residents to measure the land for construction. We will be granted the compensation soon,” said Chairman of Nawngkio Township development committee U Myint Maung Maung.

The bridge across Gothteik Creek will be constructed parallel with the world famous Gothteik Bridge on Mandalay-Lashio rail road in Nawngkio so that vehicles will be able to travel across the bridge anytime.

“After construction, the transportation will be smooth for us in Nawngkio. But we need to be paid reasonable amount of compensation for our farmland. Now, an acre of farm land is worth Ks 20 lakh to 50 lakh, according to the prevailing prices," said local U Soe Myint.

“Our demand is that we are being faced with traffic jams near Gothteik on the Mandalay-Lashio Union Road because the up traffic and the down traffic have to use the road on an alternate basis.”—Myitmakha News Agency

Ammunition seized near Mongko

THE Tatmadaw seized ammunition in Mongko in north-eastern Shan State yesterday during an area clearance operation.

The troops found nine grenades, one mine and one mortar round of RPG hidden in a bush about two miles south-west of Haymoelo Village.

Following the finding, the troops conducted further area clearance operations.—Myanmar News Agency

Police arrest YBS bus conductors

THE police have detained and charged a conductor who punched two passengers at the Sawbwaargyone bus stop yesterday morning.

The fisticuffs occurred when U Min Htike, 47, an aluminium worker, and his wife Daw Khin Mya Hnit, a hawkew, asked for their change from the conductor, who was not responsible for collecting the fare. The conductor got angry and cursed them, leading to a quarrel that culminated with the conductor punching both passengers, police said.

Regional Hluttaw representatives, officials of the YCDC, police and volunteers were helping passengers at the bus stop. They learnt about the fight a few minutes later and had the conductor arrested along with another conductor involved in the attack. The bus was allowed to go on to avoid unnecessary trouble for passengers already aboard.

The two passengers received medical treatment at Insein Hospital.

Police have charged the conductors according to the law as they failed to change their mentality despite the bus system already being reformed, according to Hluttaw representative U Thar Aung. —Min Thit (MNA)
Biden calls Russia biggest threat to international order

DAVOS, (Switzerland) — US Vice President Joe Biden, in his last major speech before leaving office, described Russia on Wednesday as the biggest threat to the international liberal order and said Washington must work with Europe to stand up to Vladimir Putin.

Biden was speaking at the World Economic Forum in Davos two days before the inauguration of Donald Trump as US president.

Trump has sent conciliatory signals to Putin and seemed to encourage the disintegration of the European Union by praising Britain’s decision to leave the bloc and predicting that more countries could bolt.

Biden pushed back forcefully against Trump’s message, warning hundreds of leaders, CEOs and bankers gathered in a vast conference hall in the Swiss Alps resort town that Putin was likely to try to influence a series of elections in Europe this year, as it is accused of doing in the recent US vote.

“One President Putin, Russia is working with every tool available to them to whistle away at the edges of the European project, test the fault lines of western nations and return to a politics defined by spheres of influence,” Biden said.

With many countries in Europe slated to hold elections this year, we should expect further attempts by Russia to meddle in the democratic process. It will occur again, I promise you. And again the purpose is clear: to collapse the liberal international order,” Biden added.

US Secret Service settles race discrimination case with black agents

WASHINGTON — The US Secret Service has agreed to pay $24 million to settle a 17-year-old federal lawsuit filed by a group of black agents who accused the agency of racial discrimination in its employment practices.

The agreement settles a protracted legal battle that began in 2000 when 10 black agents filed a lawsuit in a Washington DC federal court, claiming the Secret Service had violated the civil rights of black agents for decades while ignoring their complaints, court records showed.

“Had the matter gone to trial, it would have required that we re-live things long past, just at a time when the Secret Service is on the mend,” Secretary of Homeland Security Jeh Johnson said in a statement. “This settlement is also, simply, the right thing to do.”

The 10 agents accused the Secret Service of racial discrimination in how it selected agents for promotions. They also claimed the agency conducted unfair hiring, assignment and transfer practices while fostering a racially hostile workplace, court documents showed.

A group of more than 100 agents joined the lawsuit over time, the Washington Post reported. Under the resolution, the Secret Service could pay as much as $300,000 each to the agents who originally sued the agency.

“At long last … black Secret Service agents will not be constrained by the glass ceiling that held back so many for so long,” Jennifer Klar, a lawyer for the agents, told the newspaper.

The Secret Service admitted no wrongdoing, but agreed to reform its employment and promotion practices, the complaint process for employees and how it keeps records, the agreement said.

Hong Kong has “no room” for independence from China — HK leader

HONG KONG — Hong Kong’s chief executive said on Wednesday in his annual policy blueprint that the city couldn’t become independent or separate from China.

Addressing recent growing calls from activists for Hong Kong to become independent from China, Leung Chun-ying told the city’s legislature that “there is no room for independence or any kind of separation” from China.

Leung was delivering his final policy address before he steps down after a five-year tenure leading the financial hub.

US, Mexico, Cuba ready to sign “Doughnut Hole” deal in Gulf waters

MEXICO CITY — The United States, Mexico and Cuba are ready to sign an agreement determining the territorial water limits in the Eastern Gulf of Mexico, three diplomatic officials familiar with the matter said on Tuesday. The talks on the agreement concluded at the end of 2016 after trilateral discussions began mid-last year, and the plan is to sign the accord before US President-elect Donald Trump takes office on 20 January, the three officials said.

One of the three, who were speaking on condition of anonymity, said the deal could be signed on Wednesday.

France says Mali army camp explosion is major “symbolic attack”

PARIS — France’s interior minister described Wednesday’s deadly car bomb explosion at an army camp in Gao, northern Mali, as a “major and highly symbolic attack” in an area visited days ago by French President Francois Hollande.

The attack came from Interior Minister Bruno Le Roux, who spoke to reporters shortly after news of the explosion with a provisional death toll of 25.

5.3-magnitude earthquake hits central Italy

ROME — A strong earthquake hit central Italy on Wednesday morning. The quake carried a magnitude of 5.3 on the Richter scale, and first struck at about 10:23 am local time (0925 GMT) in the province of Aquila in the Abruzzo region, Italy’s National Institute of Volcanology and Seismology (INGV) stated. It was registered at a relatively shallow depth of 9 km, the INGV added. No casualties or damages were immediately reported. Yet, the tremor was felt in the nearby central regions, and even as far as in the Italian capital, which lies some 110 kilometres to the west. The major highway connecting Rome to the affected areas was temporarily closed to verify its conditions, the managing society said.

Since August 2016, the central areas in the Lazio, Marche, and Abruzzo regions have been hit by three major quakes, which totally left some 300 people dead and several thousands displaced.— Xinhua

ISTANBUL — An Uzbek gunman who killed 39 people in an Istanbul nightclub on New Year’s Day told police he had to change target at the last minute to avoid heavy security and acted with direct orders from Islamic State in Syria, a newspaper said on Wednesday.

The gunman, named by the authorities on Tuesday as Abdulgadir Masharipov, had initially been told to attack the area around the central Taksim square and said his instructions came from Raqqa, a Syrian stronghold of Islamic State, the Hurriyet newspaper cited him as saying in police testimony.

“I came to Taksim on New Year’s Eve but the security measures were intense. It was not possible to carry out the attack,” he was quoted as saying.

“I was given instructions to search for a new target in the area,” he said, referring to Istanbul’s Bosphorus shore where the Reina nightclub is located.

“Reina looked suitable for the attack. There didn’t seem to be many security measures.”

Hurriyet did not say how it obtained the testimony and Reuters was not immediately able to verify the report.

Masharipov was caught in a police raid late on Monday in Esenyurt, a suburb on Istanbul’s western outskirts, following a two-week manhunt. He was captured with an Iraqi man and three women from Africa, one of them from Egypt.

On January 1, he shot his way into the exclusive nightclub and opened fire on New Year’s revelers with an automatic rifle, throwing stun grenades to allow himself to reload and shooting the wounded on the ground.

Islamic State claimed responsibility the next day, saying the attack was revenge for Turkish military involvement in Syria. Turkish troops entered Syria last August to push Islamic State away from the border and halt Kurdish militia advances.

Like many cities around the world on New Year’s Eve, Istanbul had taken additional security measures, deploying 25,000 police officers to try to thwart attacks after a year of bombings by Islamic State and Kurdish militants.

Istanbul Governor Vasip Sahin said on Tuesday that Masharipov had admitted his guilt and that his fingerprints matched those at the scene. Sahin described him as well-educated, able to speak four languages, and said he had received training in Afghanistan.

Arab Israeli and policeman killed in suspected car ramming attack in southern Israel

JERUSALEM — Police in Israel said an Arab Israeli on Wednesday rammed his car into a group of policemen in the southern Negev region, killing one before being shot dead, though a rights activist who was present disputed it.

Police said the violence sparked a riot in the village of Umm al-Hiran, where an operation was underway to demolish Bedouin dwellings deemed by a court as having been built illegally on state-owned land.

Police spokesman Merav Lapidot said the suspect was a local teacher who “surged towards the forces intending to kill” and that rioting erupted after he was shot.

But human rights activist Michal Haramati, who had come to Umm al-Hiran to observe the demolitions, said she witnessed the event and that the driver was not heading towards police when he was shot.

“Suddenly the car started to go down the hill, without control, absolutely,” she told Reuters in English. “The driver was obviously dead by the time that he lost control this way. That’s when he hit the cops.”

The Israeli Bedouin, who predominantly live in the desert area that accounts for two-thirds of Israel’s territory, are nomadic tribes which have wandered across the Middle East from Biblical times. Arab citizens make up about 20 per cent of Israel’s population of eight million, and 200,000 of them are Bedouin.

Bedouin leaders in Negev say Israel has long discriminated against their communities, denying them public funds and services. Half of Israeli Bedouin population live in towns and villages recognised as formal communities by the government. Others live rough, in tents and shacks on patches of desert.

Israeli forces have been particularly wary of car ramming attacks since a wave of Palestinian street assaults began in October 2015.

On January 8, four Israeli soldiers were killed in Jerusalem by a Palestinian who drove his truck into them.

In all, 37 Israelis and two visiting Americans have been killed in the past 15 months, while at least 232 Palestinians have been killed in violence in Israel, the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip in the same period.

Israel says that at least 158 of them were assailants while others died during clashes and protests.

Unsolved problems hang over Hong Kong leader’s last policy address

HONG KONG — Hong Kong’s leader on Wednesday delivered his last annual policy statement before stepping down, addressing longstanding problems including high property prices and stalled political reform though providing no substantial new measures to tackle them.

Chief Executive Leung Chun-ying took office in 2012 pledging to make housing more affordable, and to bring greater democracy to the city of 7.2 million, issues that had also stymied his predecessors.

Home prices have bucked repeated cooling measures, including a hefty new sales tax in November, to rise ever higher, putting prices on a par with those in New York and London.

Political reforms have stalled amid growing worries among democracy activists about mainland interference that they see threatening the city’s autonomy.

Demands for fully democratic city elections triggered Hong Kong’s most tumultuous protests for decades in late 2014 but Beijing refused to make any concessions. Leung said surging property prices posed the “gravest potential hazard” to society and he reiterated a need to increase the supply of land, including through reclamation and expanding new towns.

“If the government and the community do not resolve to expedite the identification of land for housing production, the housing problem will remain a tough nut to crack,” Leung said.

Only seven percent of city land is zoned for housing and the average price per square foot of city flats is about HK$10,700 ($1,380), spawning a boom in ever smaller “mini” flats no bigger than a car parking space. In the next decade, 460,000 housing units are expected to be built, he said. —Reuters

Pakistan will not free doctor who helped US find bin Laden

ISLAMABAD — A jailed Pakistani doctor believed to have helped US Special Forces hunt down al Qaeda leader Osama bin Laden will be neither released nor handed to the United States, Pakistan’s law minister has told legislators, media reported on Wednesday.

Dr. Shakil Afridi, hailed as a hero by US officials, was arrested after US forces killed bin Laden in May 2011 in a secret raid in a northern Pakistani town that plunged relations between the uneasy strategic partners to a new low.

Pakistan has accused the CIA of running a fake vaccination campaign in which it collected DNA samples to help the US Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) confirm bin Laden’s identity.

Afridi was arrested soon after the bin Laden raid and charged with having ties to militant Islamists, which he denied.

“The law is taking its course and Afridi is having full opportunity of a fair trial,” the Daily Times newspaper quoted Law Minister Zahid Hamid as telling the upper house, in response to a lawmaker’s query about reports of a possible release.

“Afridi worked against the law and our national interest, and the Pakistani government has repeatedly been telling the United States that under our law he committed a crime and was facing the law.”

In 2012, Afridi was sentenced to 33 years in prison after being convicted of being a member of militant group Lashkar-e-Islam.

That conviction was overturned in 2013, but Afridi was then charged with murder, relating to the death of a patient eight years earlier. He remains in jail awaiting trial.

Many Pakistanis were infuriated by the US raid to grab bin Laden in the military garrison town of Abbottabad, just a two-hour drive from Islamabad, the capital.

Pakistani officials describe bin Laden’s long presence in Abbottabad as a security lapse and reject any suggestion that members of the military or intelligence services were complicit in it.

Last May, Pakistan’s foreign ministry angrily criticised US President-elect Donald Trump for saying he could get Pakistan to free Afridi “within two minutes”.

Pakistan joined the US war on militant after the 11 September, 2001, attacks on the United States. But US officials often described Pakistan as an unreliable partner that has sheltered the Afghan Taliban leadership and demand tougher action against militant groups based along its border with Afghanistan.—Reuters

Australia says suspended MH370 search could resume in future

SYDNEY — Australia said on Wednesday it was not ruling out a future underwater search for a missing Malaysian Airlines passenger jet as families of those on board criticised the decision to suspend the hunt after three fruitless years.

The location of Flight MH370 has become one of the world’s greatest aviation mysteries since the plane, a Boeing 777, disappeared in 2014 en route to Beijing from the Malaysian capital of Kuala Lumpur with 239 people on board.

“I don’t rule out a future underwater search by any stretch,” Australian Transport Minister Darren Chester told reporters in Melbourne, a day after Australia, Malaysia and China called off the search in the southern Indian Ocean. The search cost about AS$200 million ($150 million), mostly paid by Malaysia, and had already been extended twice. But the three countries involved have been reluctant to keep looking without new evidence about the plane’s final resting place.

A recommendation from investigators last month to look to the north of the 120,000 sq km (46,000 sq mile) area that has been the focus of search efforts was rejected by Australia and Malaysia as too imprecise.

Chester said cost had not been the determining factor to halt the search, but he said re-starting it would require “credible new information which leads to a specific location.”

Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull on Wednesday expressed “deep regret” that the plane had not been found, but reaffirmed the agreement between Malaysia, Australia and China to stop looking. Boeing (BA.N) did not immediately respond to requests for comment. —Reuters

China says hopes for “win-win” deal between Britain, EU

BEIJING — China’s Foreign Ministry said on Wednesday it hoped Britain and the European Union could reach a “win-win” agreement on Britain’s departure from the bloc, after Prime Minister Theresa May said she would quit the EU single market when it left.

May promised to seek the greatest possible access to European markets but said Britain would aim to establish its own free trade deals with countries far beyond Europe, and rein in immigration from the continent. Prior to last year’s Brexit vote, China had not directly stated an opinion, viewing it as an internal matter and saying only that it wanted to see a strong and stable Europe.

Diplomatic sources, however, said that was coded support for the defeated “remain” camp, as the bloc, now China’s largest trading partner, will lose around a sixth of its economic output and an important supporter of free trade in the EU.—Reuters
Oldest gorilla in captivity dies in Ohio at 60 years old

CLEVELAND — The first gorilla born in captivity, who went on to become the oldest known member of her species, has died at the age of 60, officials at the Columbus, Ohio, zoo that served as her home said on Tuesday.

Colo, a Western lowland gorilla, was found dead on Tuesday morning in her enclosure, the Columbus Zoo and Aquarium said in a statement. She had been born at the same property on 22 December, 1956 and five years passed before another gorilla was born in captivity in the United States, the zoo said.

The zoo celebrated her 60th birthday less than a month ago weeks after a malignant tumor was removed from under her arm on 3 December. She was the oldest gorilla on record and exceeded her normal life expectancy by more than two decades, said Patty Peters, a zoo spokeswoman.

There had been no sign that Colo was unwell as some 13,000 visited the zoo on Monday’s Martin Luther King Jr. holiday, Peters said in a phone interview.

“There were lines of people. She interacted with guests all day,” Peters said.

Colo, whose name was a play on Columbus, was the mother of three, grandmother of 16, great grandmother of 12 and had three great-great offspring.

Her oldest, Emmy, was the first second-generation gorilla born in captivity. Colo’s grandmother, Cora, was the first third-generation gorilla born in captivity.

Gorillas, typically found in lowland and mountain tropical rainforests in central Africa, are the world’s largest primates, the mammalian group that includes lemurs, monkeys, apes and humans. Adult males reach up to about 440 pounds (200 kg).

There are approximately 350 gorillas of all species in accredited zoos across the United States and an estimated 150,000 to 250,000 Western lowland gorillas left in the world, the zoo said in a statement. Gorillas are listed as endangered due to loss of habitat, poaching, and susceptibility to diseases.

Colo will be cremated and her ashes buried at an undisclosed location at the Columbus Zoo. Results of the necropsy to further define the cause of death are expected in approximately four weeks.—Reuters
Shakira urges Davos elite to nurture future leaders

DAVOS, Switzerland — Music star Shakira urged world and business leaders at the opening ceremony of the World Economic Forum on Monday to support efforts to feed, educate and care for underprivileged children.

"Today’s babies will drive tomorrow’s business. Their capacity to contribute will shape tomorrow’s societies, will solve tomorrow’s problems," the Colombian recording star, who is also a UNICEF Goodwill Ambassador devoted to early childhood development, said in an impassioned speech.

Shakira, who was given a Crystal Award in Davos for her humanitarian work, is the founder of the Pies Descalzos Foundation, which works to provide underprivileged children in Colombia with access to quality education.

"In this room there are some of the most powerful people in the world, and definitely I’m convinced you know what it means to be ahead of the curve," she added.

"We need to apply the brains and strategies of business and the assets and human resources and talents of your companies to do social good and to solve social problems."

The World Economic Forum also gave awards to violinist Anne-Sophie Mutter, who runs a foundation providing scholarships for young musicians, and actor Forest Whitaker, who has worked as a global advocate for peace, focusing on empowering youth as leaders and entrepreneurs in communities touched by violence and poverty.—Reuters

Simon Rattle offers up musical ‘tapas bar’ for first season in London

LONDON — Conductor Simon Rattle unveiled what he described as a musical “tapas bar” on Tuesday as he presented an eclectic program for his first season with the London Symphony Orchestra (LSO).

Rattle, the outgoing chief conductor of the prestigious Berliner Philharmoniker, will take up his new role as music director of the LSO in September and will be running both orchestras concurrently for the 2017-2018 season.

“I’m doing the insane thing for one year that I promised I would never do in my life, run two orchestras at the same time,” Rattle told a news conference in London. “I hope the season is like a tapas bar of the type of things I can’t,” Rattle said.—Reuters

African-born actor in Hungary:
‘People just see me as a migrant’

BUDAPEST — Marcelo Cake-Baly came to study in Hungary from wartorn Guinea-Bissau in 1976, and has been working as a tram driver in Budapest for over a decade despite being a trained economist.

Now, at the age of 58, his life has taken a new turn. He has made his acting debut in a Hungarian movie about the life of an African refugee who settles in Budapest to work as a security guard in a shopping center.

The film, “The Citizen,” shows the difficulties of integration in Hungarian society through a tormented love story. The main character, Wilson, applies for citizenship and falls in love with a history and language teacher who tries to prepare him for the tough citizenship exam.

Director Roland Vránik’s feature film will be shown in cinemas on 26 January — at a time when Hungary has barely any refugees left, after its right-wing government raised a fence on the southern border and imposed tough laws to keep out a wave of migrants.

Vránik and Hungarian writer Ivan Szabo crafted their script in 2012, aiming to show how Africans in Budapest put down roots. They started to shoot the movie in 2015, just as Hungary became a transit route for hundreds of thousands of migrants fleeing war and poverty in the Middle East and Africa.

“What we think does not matter for them: they just need a safe place and clean water. They just need days when nobody tries to kill them,” Vránik said.

He said “mass psychosis” took hold when Europeans became scared of the wave of migrants. But Vránik remains optimistic; he believes people are still ready to help those in need and says his film is “completely timeless and also spaceless.”

“It can be anywhere in Europe,” he said.

Cake-Baly obtained Hungarian citizenship in the mid-1990s and has lived in the country for four decades. But the migration crisis had an impact on him.

“In my thoughts … I feel I am Hungarian, but in the street I look African. It is not written on me that I have a Hungarian family, I work here, I am a tax-paying citizen,” he said.

“People just see me as a migrant.”

He recalls his university years in the early 1990s as happy ones, when he faced no discrimination.

But he lost his job as an economist shortly before communism collapsed in 1989. After trying his luck studying in Belgium for three years, he returned to Hungary and eventually found work on Budapest’s trams.

He said the migration crisis had divided European societies and made life harder for immigrants.

“I asked a young man at a tram stop recently not to smoke, as it was forbidden. “He told me he was at home, and I was a migrant … and I should have drowned in the sea,” Cake-Baly recalled.—Reuters

CAIRO — Egypt will restore hundreds of coffins dating back thousands of years to the time of the pharaohs as part of a joint American-Egyptian project to document and preserve one of the world’s oldest civilizations, a director of the project said on Tuesday.

The conservation effort, funded by a United States grant, will restore over 600 wooden coffins that date to various eras of ancient Egypt and which are currently being stored at the Egyptian Museum in Cairo.

“There has been no other project like this worldwide with this number of coffins being documented or restored,” said head of the museum’s restoration department Moeamen Othman.

Egypt was awarded the conservation grant, worth $130,000, in December 2015. That project is part of a larger US-Egypt treaty signed in 2016 to curtail illicit trafficking of the country’s rich cultural heritage. Antiquities theft flourished in Egypt in the chaotic years that immediately followed its 2011 uprising, with an indeterminate amount of heritage stolen from museums, mosques, storage facilities, and illegal excavations.

Global interest in Egypt’s pharaonic era remains high. The hunt for the resting place of the lost Queen Nefertiti grabbed international headlines in 2015, though the search has yet to bear fruit.

The gilded ancient relics and resting sites of the pharaohs were once the cornerstone of a thriving tourism sector, a vital source of foreign currency that has suffered near extinction since the uprising that toppled autocrat Hosni Mubarak in 2011.

The Ambassador’s Fund for Cultural Preservation, a United States program founded at the turn of the century, has been responsible for the conservation and restoration of countless ancient sites, museums, and artifacts around the world.

The fund previously helped Egypt conserve a mausoleum in historic Cairo and an ancient temple in Upper Egypt.

“One of the main goals of the project is to ensure that the (Egyptian) museum has a full inventory of the objects and understands their conservation needs, so that the coffins can be made available for research by scholars but also for the public,” Ambassador’s Fund for Cultural Preservation Program Director Martin Perschler said.

“It means that in the long run more people here in Egypt and people from around the world will have the opportunity to discover and appreciate the full range of heritage and of history within this single collection of coffins,” he said.—Reuters

Juuso the bear makes artistic debut at Finnish gallery

HELSINKI — Artists usually like to attend the opening of their exhibitions but the painter of the works that went on display at a gallery in Helsinki on Tuesday preferred to carry on hibernating.

The artist behind the exhibition entitled “Strong and soft touches” is a 423-kilogram (930-pound) brown bear named Juuso who uses his body, especially his paws, as paintbrushes.

“We just leave paint for him, some plywood and paper ... If we ask him to do it, he doesn’t do anything. He does all the work in his own time, when he’s alone, sitting and moving his legs on the paper,” said Pasi Jantti, one of his keepers.

Juuso, who is 17 years old, favours blue and red, and paper ... If we ask him to do it, he doesn’t do anything. We noticed that he liked it,” Jantti said.

The centre raised about 8,000 euros ($8,500) by selling 15 paintings produced by Juuso. The exhibition now open- ing at the Rupla gallery in Helsinki features 11 pieces of original work and some prints and are priced from 50 to 4,000 euros.

Some of the paintings still feature bits of Juuso’s fur.

Funds raised from the exhibition will be used to make a documentary about bears.—Reuters

Springsteen tribute band pulls out of Trump inauguration bash

WASHINGTON — A Bruce Springsteen tribute band bowed to pressure on Monday and backed out of performing at a gala on the evening before Donald Trump’s inauguration, saying it was doing so out of respect for the New Jersey rocker, a vocal critic of the president-elect.

The B-Street Band, which has performed covers of Springsteen and his E Street Band since the 1990s, dropped plans to perform at Thursday’s Garden State Inaugural Gala in Washington after receiving a storm of emails both criticizing and praising the appearance.

“Our decision is SOLELY on the respect and gratitude we have for Bruce and the E Street Band,” the band said in a statement released to Backstreets.com, a Springsteen fan- zone.

The 67-year-old New Jersey native, known for such hits as “Thunder Road” and “Born in the USA,” has repeatedly voiced anger and disdain for Trump, calling the Republican maverick a “moron” in a September interview with Rolling Stone magazine.

Springsteen also appeared at a rally for Hillary Clinton, Trump’s Democratic opponent, just before the 8 Novem- ber election.

Springsteen had not commented in public about the B-Street Band’s planned performance. But E Street Band member Stevie Van Zandt said in a Twitter message: “Nice guys. Met them. I wouldn’t say right or wrong. Up to them. But it’s naïve to think one can separate Art and Politics. Art IS Politics.”

The B-Street Band performed at the 2009 and 2013 Garden State Inaugural Galas, which are sponsored by the New Jersey State Society. In 2013 the band signed a contract to perform at this year’s gala.

Trump, a New York real estate developer, won with a populist platform that included promises to build a wall along the Mexican border, restrict immigration from Muslim countries and dismantle President Barack Obama’s signature healthcare law.

The B-Street Band’s move came two days after Broadway star Jennifer Holliday dropped plans to sing at an inaugural concert, citing an online article that cast the performer in a “betrayal” of her gay and lesbian fans.

Nancy Fatemi, New Jersey State Society exec- utive director, said organ- izers had been swamped by requests from other groups wanting to take the B-Street Band’s place.

“We’ve actually already selected one, but we’re not ready to announce it,” she said.—Reuters
Federer wobbles but roars back to reach third round

MELBOURNE — Roger Federer dug himself out of a late slump to fend off American qualifier Noah Rubin 7-5, 6-3, 7-6(3) on Wednesday and enjoy a confidence-building win on the way to the third round of the Australian Open.

On the comeback trail after six months out of the game, a clinical Federer cruised through the opening two sets but fell into a hole in the third against the plucky world number 200.

Federer needed to save two set points on serve at 5-2 down and then came roaring back to take Rubin to a tiebreak.

The Swiss master, seeded 17th, raced to three match points at 6-3 and closed it out on the first with a crunching forehand that Rubin could only parry high and wide.

Ibrahimovic ‘invaluable’ for Man United youngsters, says Rashford

LONDON — The experience of playing and practising with Zlatan Ibrahimovic has proved invaluable for the young Manchester United players who should make the most of the charismatic striker’s presence at Old Trafford, according to team mate Marcus Rashford.

Ibrahimovic, who joined on a free transfer in July, has had a flying start to his United career and, with 14 Premier League goals, the 35-year-old is the joint-top scorer, along with Arsenal’s Alexis Sanchez and Chelsea’s Diego Costa.

“For the young players to see his character and the way he approaches every game is invaluable. Some players can’t bring that when they move clubs,” Rashford told British media.

“We have to try to learn from him while he is here and take what we can from his game,”

The 19-year-old also praised the influence of captain Wayne Rooney.

“Zlatan and Rooney are the two that stand out. I grew up watching Rooney play week in, week out at Old Trafford, so those are the two that you look at and try to emulate,” he added.

United are sixth in the league, 12 points behind leaders Chelsea after 21 games, and they travel to face ninth-placed Stoke City on Saturday.

China foreign talent curb gets mixed response from clubs

BEIJING — China’s decision to tighten rules over the number of overseas players amid concerns of over-spending on foreign talents has drawn mixed response from the clubs affected by the move.

Teams in the country’s top leagues would be limited to fielding a maximum of three foreign players per game for the 2017 season, down from the current five, China’s Football Association said in a statement on Monday.

Shanghai SIPG coach Andre Villas-Boas has questioned the timing of the move with the Chinese Super League kicking off on 7 March.

“This decision should have been made after the season, or with a certain buffer,” the Portuguese coach told reporters during his team’s training camp in Qatar. “Such a huge change shouldn’t be announced about a month before the new season.”

“Most of the clubs’ team-building plans have been in accordance with the previous rules. That’s when everyone gets caught off guard,” added the former Chelsea manager.

Brazil’s Oscar and Argentine Carlos Tevez made big-money moves to China over the last month with Shanghai SIPG’s deal to sign Oscar from English Premier League club Chelsea said to make him the highest-paid player in the world.

The spending drive prompted fierce criticism from officials and local media, with Xinhua saying earlier this month that clubs were “burning money” on overpaid foreign talent and neglecting the development of domestic players.

Su Yuhui, president of newly-promoted Tianjin Quanjian, said the abrupt move would have a negative impact on the standard of the game.

“And it will disarray many club’s pre-season arrangements, and even cause economic losses,” Su told Tianjin Sports TV.

Clubs would still be able to register five foreign players in their overall squad, the Chinese FA said, but the new rule would mean not all could be used in any one game, a potential disincentive to loading a squad with international imports.

Teams would also have to include two younger domestic players born in or after 1994 in their match day squad, of whom one would have to start the game.

Man City’s Kolarov refuses to give up title hopes

LONDON — Manchester City still have a chance of winning the Premier League title this season, defender Aleksandar Kolarov said, despite Pep Guardiola’s men sliding 10 points behind leaders Chelsea after 21 games.

City slipped to fifth position after Sunday’s 0-4 thrashing at Everton but will hope to get back to winning ways when they host second-placed Tottenham Hotspur this weekend.

“I still think the title race will go to the very last day and we have to make sure we’re involved,” Kolarov told the club website (www.mancity.com).

“We just need to turn more games into wins because we’ve dominated some matches but not ended up winning,” he said.

“Every game is tough in the Premier League whether they are at the top or the bottom. Guardiola wants us to be 100 per cent professional in everything we do — if we want to win things, every small detail is important.”

Kolarov also voiced his support for the under-fire manager.

“For all the players it is a beginning of a journey and I think we’ll get better and better.”
