President pays homage to Sangha Maha Nayaka Sayadaws and seeks advice

THE President of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar U Htin Kyaw paid homage to the State Sangha Maha Nayaka Sayadaws and sought Ovada from them at Vijaya Mingalar Dhamma Hall on Kaba Aye Hillock yesterday afternoon.

First, the President supplicated religious affairs before saying he was delighted to see the venerable abbots healthy enough to walk without any assistance and that it was encouraging for the Sasa-na and to seek Ovada from the abbots.

Afterwards, Chairman of the State Sangha Maha Nayaka Committee Abhidhaja Maharatha Guru Abhidhaja Agga Maha Saddhamma Jotika Bhamo Sayadaw Dr Bhaddanta Kumar-abbhivamsa delivered Ovada on Dana, Peyyavijja, Atthacariya and Samanatta.

Later, the Chairman and Sayadaws were presented offertories by the President, Union Minister Thura U Aung Ko, Yangon Region Chief Minister U Phyo Min Thein, Yangon Mayor U Maung Maung Soe and officials. —Myanmar News Agency

Indonesian FM presents humanitarian aid for Rakhine State

A ceremony to deliver humanitarian aid donated by the Government of the Republic of Indonesia in accordance with the policy of the Union Government of Myanmar was held at the meeting hall of the Rakhine State Government yesterday morning.

Indonesian Foreign Minister Retno L P Marsudi explained the purpose of the humanitarian aid before she, on behalf of the Indonesian Government, and Union Minister for Social Welfare, Relief and Resettlement Dr Win Myat Aye signed an agreement for the aid. Later, they posed for documentary photos with the guests.

The humanitarian aid included 10,000 articles of clothing, 1,500 boxes of dried noodles, 1,050 boxes of children’s nutritional supplements and 920 bags of flour.

The union minister and the Indonesian foreign minister later attended a ceremony to hand over two schools in Letmache Village and Thetkalpyin Village in Sittway donated by the PLPU, an Indonesian NGO.

Later, they visited the childcare centre founded by the ABC Foundation in Mingan Ward and presented food and cash donations for the children. —Myanmar News Agency
British foreign secretary visits Yangon

A delegation led by British Foreign Secretary Boris Johnson visited Yangon General Hospital yesterday morning, the final day of his three-day visit. Dr. Aye Ko Ko, superintendent of the hospital, explained recent renovations to the hospital and healthcare services provided before the delegation toured the wards and visited patients.

Later in the day, a dinner hosted in honour of the British foreign secretary was held at the house of the British ambassador and attended by National Security Advisor U Thaung Tun, Yangon Region Chief Minister U Phyo Min Thein, Yangon Mayor U Maung Maung Soe and Yangon Region Cabinet ministers and guests.

Earlier in the day, the British foreign secretary visited Shwe Dagon Pagoda.

On Friday, the British foreign secretary visited Nay Pyi Taw, where he met with State Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and discussed Myanmar’s change to a democratic government and pledged Britain’s full support of the effort.

Johnson said: “Myanmar’s transition to democracy is not yet complete but it is worth reflecting on just how far Myanmar has come since Daw Aung San Suu Kyi’s National League for Democracy party took office just nine months ago. Launching a major new peace initiative, establishing a commission led by Kofi Annan to resolve tensions in Rakhine and releasing more than 300 political prisoners are positive steps. It is clear that many challenges remain and full reform will take time. “The UK, as a longstanding and long-term friend to Myanmar, will continue to offer its fullest support. I look forward to seeing Burma continue to develop into a country where there is peace and prosperity for all its people.”

Government needs to control car import

GOVERNMENT needs to control systematically the import of motor vehicles either individually or through showrooms and sale centers, said Union Minister for Commerce Dr. Than Myint, chairman of Supervisory Committee for Motor Vehicle Importing under the Ministry of Commerce on Friday at the Supervisory Committee for Motor Vehicle Importing (1/2017) meeting.

“Our committee needs to control the vehicle import. We need to take account of the repressions upon issue of model year restriction rule. Whatever we do, we should be proactive in our draining of plans,” he added.

The inspection teams were formed in February 2016 to conduct field inspection tours of the car showrooms and sale centers to ensure that the car importing companies comply with the rules and regulations.

The government has already granted import of 350,852 vehicles as of 30 December, 2016. — MymoNews

EU will buy legally traded timber only

THE Mon state government is ready to comply with Forest Law Enforcement, Governance and Trade (FLEGT-VPA) according to which Myanmar and European Union members are required to be engaged only in legal trading of forest products, said U Min Min Go, Chief Minister of Mon State government.

“Our state government is ready to comply with FLEGT-VPA. I want to urge the respective government departments, private businessmen and civil society organisations (CSOs) to cooperate with positive attitudes,” he added.

The UK government will provide over 4 million pounds to implement FLEGT-VPA in Myanmar. Currently, both governments are taking necessary measures to sign a memorandum of understanding (MoU).

“Both governments are sharing the information, and will gely discuss to reach an agreement between the two countries. Then, they will sign a MoU,” said an official from the Mon state forestry department.

Fallow and virgin land Management Central Committee held the 4th meeting

Nobel Myanmar Literary Festival to be held on grand scale

NOBEL Myanmar Literary Festival-2017 will be held on a grand scale at the National Theatre in Yangon on 22nd, 23rd and 24th January.

U Maw Lin, Chairman of the Organization Committee for the literary festival said that it is the third time since the first such festival was held in Myanmar, with the first event highlighting literature and peace, the second focusing on children’s literature and third one on literature, which mainly appeals to those who start reading books and literary enthusiasts.

He also said that literary festival and a book fair will also be held in front of the theatre and the opening ceremony will be held in two agendas before saying that rare books will also available at the book fair.

U Win Cho, Secretary of the organizing committee, said that there will also be seven topics on literature and U Maw Lin will facilitate the topic on literature nursery while Saya Manug Khin Min, Saya Thitsu Ni, Saya Myayalatt Maung Myint Thu and Saya Nyein Min will participate in the discussions of the topic.

The festival will feature 24 rare book shops and 150 new book shops, morning free-of-charge Montlangha, afternoon Myanmar traditional drum entertainments and about 200 cartoons.—Yi Yi Myint and Ohnmar Thant

UN Rights envoy holds press conference in Yangon

MS YANGHEE LEE, UN’s Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Myanmar, held a press conference in Yangon Friday, calling for building trust between the two communities in northern Rakhine.

During her 12-day visit, she visited Kachin, Rakhine and Mon States as well as Yangon and Nay Pyi Taw.

During her visit to northern Rakhine, she visited the border outposts where the October attacks occurred, four villages in northern Rakhine and the prison in Buthidaung.

She also met with State Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, Union ministers, the Attorney-General, MPs from parliamento, committees, the Rakhine State Peace and Development Committee and the Investigation Commission on Maungtaw.

During her visit to Yangon, Ms Yanghee Lee held talks with responsible personnel of the Peace Commission at the National Reconciliation and Peace Centre and Myanmar National Human Rights Commission, officials of the Insein Prison and Myanmar Press Council.

She also visited a hard labour camp in Zin Gyaik, Mon State.

Ms Yanghee Lee arrived in Myanmar on 8 January to assess the recent developments in the human rights situation in the country, especially in northern Rakhine, where coordinated attacks by violent armed insurgents killed nine police officers.

At the press conference, she condemned the deadly October 9 attacks on the border guard posts.

In the security clearance operations that have followed, Ms Lee urged government forces to perform their duties within the law.

“It would be particularly important for the security forces to always act within the parameters of the rule of law and in compliance with human rights,” Ms. Lee said.

The envoy, however, expressed optimism, saying government officials are committed to improve the situation.

“From my meetings and conversations with the state councillor and various officials, I can see their genuine commitment and dedication in improving the lives of all in Myanmar,” she said.

She called for stepping up efforts for increasing humanitarian aid to northern Rakhine State.—GNLM

Local residents want IWT to run ships in Rakhine coastal region

LOCAL residents from the Rakhine coast who rely on water transport want the government to resume the operation of ships in the Rakhine coastal region, it is learnt.

The State government stopped running vessels in Rakhine coastal region in 2015, when Aung Dagan vessel capsized. Since then, authorities have banned the running of old vessels in the coastal area. But this has made local people suffer, because they now have to depend on express ships that are charging exorbitant prices, according to the local residents.

“Previsouly, we had to pay from Ks 500 to Ks 3,000, depending on the travelling distance, when we used the government-run ships. Now we have to pay from Ks 8,000 to Ks 21,000 per head when we ride on the private ships,” said U Soe Naing, a local resident.

Local residents are currently using privately owned ships such as the She Pyay Tan, the Malikha and the Maykha.

“A new ship from Japan will arrive in March, 2017. We will run this new ship for coastal routes. Another new ship will also arrive in April 2017. We understand the difficulty of the passengers’ problem,” said U Aung Kyaw Zan, Minister for Rakhine State Electric Power and Road Transportation.

There are 3,000 to 5,000 passengers dependent on water transport. The Rakhine city of Sittwe is well-connected and accessible to Kyaukpyu, Taunggyi and found 800 stimulant tablets on Thursday.

Police from Momeik Police Station also seized 44 grams of heroin and 690 stimulant tablets.

Ayeyawady dolphins population to be updated

TO prevent the extinction of dolphins and to update their population in Ayeyawady River between Bhamo and Mandalay, a survey will be conducted by the Fisheries Department together with Wildlife Conservation Society (WCS), said U Han Win, a Dolphin Specialist from Mandalay Fisheries Department.

According to 2016 February data, there were 65 dolphins in Mandalay and Bhamo towns, three died within 2016.

The Ayeyawady dolphins are listed as scarce species. We will update the population of dolphin this year because we want to know the exact number of dolphins to prevent their extinction, he added.

Although there are 25 dolphins in Mandalay area and 40 dolphins in Bhamo town, three dolphins died: one on 15 August, the other on 13 September and the third one on 13 November.

“Data will be collected with the use of a small boat and a ship. When they are searching the dolphin, they will use the GPS system, 7x50 mm lens, depth meter, sounder and cameras,” said the WCS manager. The Ayeyawady dolphins will come up to the water surface every 30 to 60 secs. The Ayeyawady dolphins do not jump like the sea dolphins, they only swim slowly, it is learnt.—Aung Thant Khine

Traffic accident on Yangon-Mandalay Expressway claims eight lives

A Toyota Hiace heading to Yangon from Nay Pyi Taw crashed into the aluminum road divider between Mile-posts 4/1 and 4/2 on the Yangon-Mandalay Expressway before it caught fire, killing eight out of the nine passengers, including seven women, and injuring one male passenger yesterday morning.

Police and the fire brigade rushed to the scene and sent the bodies and the injured male passenger to Hlegu Hospital.

The passengers on the vehicle were from Hexagon Construction Company in Thingangyun, Yangon.

They were reportedly on their return trip from a Bagan pilgrimage. Than Oo (Le-myathnar)
Chinese state media hopes for best with Trump, prepares for worst

BEIJING — Chinese state media on Saturday said that it hoped the new US administration of President Donald Trump understood the importance of relations with China, but that Beijing should also prepare for the worst.

On the campaign trail, Trump raised against China, accusing it of stealing American jobs, and also angered Beijing by taking a call from the president of self-ruled Taiwan, which China views as a wayward province with no right to formal foreign ties.

While Trump made no direct mention of China in his inaugural address, he struck a defiant tone, saying American workers have been devastated by the outsourcing of jobs abroad.

In a front page commentary, the overseas edition of the ruling Communist Party’s official Peo-ple’s Daily said the two countries should not try to force each other into submission, but look for win-win cooperation and manage their disputes.

“The new US government should realize that it’s normal for these two great countries to have problems and disagreements. What is crucial is to control and manage disputes and find a way to resolve them,” it said.

“China hopes the inauguration of the new US president can be a new starting point for the development of China-US ties,” the paper said.

“The stable and healthy development of relations accords with the interests of both peoples, and is the common expectation of the international community,” Sister paper the Global Times, an influential publication which often strikes a stridently nationalistic tone, noted that while Trump has said a lot about China, his actual policy has yet to take shape.

“Definitely, the Trump administration wants to boost exports to China and lure American factories from China back to the US. Taiwan will be merely a bargaining chip for them to put trade pressure on China,” it said in an editorial.

The paper said Trump’s China policy will hinge on how well he understands the overlapping interests of the world’s two largest economies and whether he will be motivated enough to change the existing structure with force.

Undoubtedly, the Trump administration will be igniting many ‘fires’ on its front door and around the world. Let’s wait and see when it will be China’s turn,” — Reuters

India pressed ahead with banknote ban despite RBI concerns

NEW DELHI/MUMBAI — India pushed ahead with its decision to scrap banknotes even as the Reserve Bank of India’s (RBI) own board expressed concern whether the cash could be replaced quickly enough, the central bank has said in written testimony to parliament.

The revelation comes amid growing criticism about whether the central bank and the government had sufficiently assessed the potential fallout from the 8 November ban of about 86 per cent of the cash then in circulation.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi’s shock move caused a severe cash shortage that brought large parts of the economy to a virtual standstill, as the central bank struggled to print new 500-rupee and 2,000-rupee notes, as it believed the move would rein in counterfeiting and reliance on cash, and pull unaccounted cash into the financial system.

“It might not immediately be possible to replace these notes fully in terms of both value and volume,” the board felt at a meeting ahead of Modi’s 8 November announcement, according to the central bank submission.

But the RBI’s board ultimately believed that “corrective” action could be taken and decided to recommend the move, the document showed. The RBI also believed the impact of such an exercise would be “transitory”, given its efforts to quickly replace the old notes, it said in the testimony.

The RBI’s endorsement of the government action has drawn strong criticism from several former policymakers, including former Prime Minister Manmohan Singh, the architect of India’s 1991 financial reforms and a former central bank governor.

The document also notes the proposal to ban the cash had come from the government, in a letter a day before the announcement that advised the RBI to “immediately” put the plan before its board for approval.

Under India’s RBI Act, such a move was necessary.

Crane falls on Takahama plant building housing spent nuclear fuel

FUKUI (Japan) — A crane collapsed Friday night at the Takahama power station in Fukui Prefecture, western Japan, damaging a building housing spent nuclear fuel, the plant operator said on Sat-urday.

No one was injured in the accident, which occurred around 9:50 pm near the plant’s No. 2 reac-tor building, and although the roof of the adjacent building was damaged, nothing fell into the spent nuclear fuel pool below it, according to the operator, Kansai Electric Power Co.

The crane also damaged the roof of another building nearby. A wind warning was in effect in the area, and strong winds were blowing at that time, according to the utility.

The 112-metre-long crane had been used to prepare for safety-enhancement work in which a concrete dome-shaped cover will be placed over the No. 2 reactor building. Work was not being undertaken at the time of accident.

An official apologized for the accident at a news conference at the plant, saying the utility would re-examine the risk of crane accidents amid strong winds and investigate the cause of the latest incident.

There are a total of 259 fuel assemblies in the pool, including spent ones, according to Kansai Elec-tric.

The No. 2 reactor is one of two aging reactors at the plant with over 40 years of operation. Safety-enhancement work for the facility is expected for completion in 2020.

In June last year, nuclear regulators approved the utility’s plan to extend the operation of the Nos. 1 and 2 reactors beyond the government-mandated 40-year service period. It was the first such approval given under new safety regulation introduced following the 2011 Fukushima nuclear accident.

The plant has two newer reactors. All four reactors are currently off-line. — Kyodo News
Chemical giant eyes bigger presence in China

BEIJING — The Dow Chemical Co. says it will continue to make investment in China, eyeing business opportunities emerging from the country’s ongoing economic transformation. “When I look at the market here, I see incredible growth opportunities across virtually every sector,” said Neil Hawkins, Dow’s chief sustainability officer and corporate vice president.

Despite the trade downward pressure, China’s ambition in urbanization, new energy technology, infrastructure construction and green growth provide ample room for innovation companies, Hawkins said.

A staunch investor for the world’s second largest economy, Dow is expanding its business in China in an unprecedented pace, opening one new business center each year since 2012 and stretching to inland areas that many overseas companies barely notice.

It currently boasts a 5,000-strong staff, and operates 10 business centers and 17 manufacturing sites across the country. The Shanghai Dow Centre, Dow’s largest R&D center outside the US, gathers more than 700 scientists working in over 80 world-class laboratories.

Instead of targeting “easy money” like many foreign firms, Dow is digging for gold through innovation and technological co-operation.

With its leading water filtration technology, Dow collaborated with Haier Group, China’s leading home appliance producer, to make washing machines that reduce 30 percent of water use. Dow’s formaldehyde abatement technology, developed by its China research team, has been applied in eco-paint in China and many other countries in the world.—Xinhua

ASEAN agree to develop a joint declaration on cruise tourism

SINGAPORE — ASEAN members on Friday reiterated their commitment to develop South-East Asia into a vibrant cruising destination during ASEAN Tourism Forum 2017 held in Singapore.

In support, they agreed to develop a joint declaration on cruise tourism, according to the joint media statement of the 20th meeting of ASEAN Tourism Ministers.

The five-day tourism forum came to a close on Friday after the launch of “Visit ASEAN@50” campaign on Wednesday. ASEAN ministers also made agreement on cruise tourism, quality tourism during the gathering.

The inaugural Cruise Dialogue was organized on Thursday to further realize the potential growth of cruise tourism in the region, showcase examples of cruise port development projects, and discuss how cruise lines and entities can partner ASEAN member states to develop cruise ports.

Hosted on board currently the largest cruise ship homeporting in Southeast Asia, ASEAN ministers were briefed on the industry. They urged to develop infrastructure to accommodate various cruise ships.

Noting that passengers expected to cruise in Southeast Asia would reach approximately 4.5 million by 2035, ASEAN ministers agreed to develop a joint declaration on cruise tourism.

According to the statement, the joint declaration will set out principles to spur port and destination development in the region, and further encourage key stakeholders to collaborate and grow cruise tourism.

Lionel Yeo, Chief Executive of Singapore Tourism Board, said the declaration to form a multi-destination product, it will take collective efforts within Southeast Asia in order for the industry to flourish.—Xinhua

Japan to urge US to lead free trade after Trump inauguration

TOKYO — Japan will continue to push the United States to join it in taking the lead in advancing free trade globally, officials and lawmakers said on Saturday, after Donald Trump announced the country will begin withdrawing from the Trans-Pacific Partnership following his swearing in as president.

“IT is not yet final that the TPP will not be ratified,” a Japanese government official close to Prime Minister Shinzo Abe said, referring to the trade pact which was signed by 10 other countries in February but is now in limbo due to the impending US withdrawal.

The official stressed the importance of “assessing the true intent of Mr. Trump,” saying, “We will gather information thoroughly and encourage the US to stay in the TPP.”

Abe and Trump’s predecessor Barack Obama together championed the policy as a means of reducing its potential economic benefits and the influence they hope it will give their nations in writing trade rules for the Asia-Pacific region. The pact would cover some 40 per cent of the global economy.

But on Friday’s inauguration day, the White House announced that the strategy of using international trade to grow the US economy “starts by withdrawing from the Trans-Pacific Partnership and making certain that any new trade deals are in the interests of American workers.”

Masahiko Komura, vice president of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party, defended the 12-nation trade deal, saying, “The TPP will have a very good impact on the US economy.”

“Putting aside the possibility that Mr. Trump would make a sudden change (in his position), there is a need to again explain the importance of the deal, he added in a statement.

Japanese business leaders, for their part, urged their government to boost efforts to build trust between Tokyo and Washington in areas such as economic cooperation and free trade.

If the pact fails to come into force, China, the world’s second-largest economy which is not part of the TPP, is likely to further strengthen its influence in regional trade rules. The TPP aside, lawmakers from Japan’s ruling and opposition parties expressed hope for stronger ties with the United States, its key ally, reflecting the country’s stance that casts the bilateral alliance as the linchpin of foreign policy and security.

The LDP’s Komura said the alliance is not only good for both countries but also for the international community. “We must firmly maintain such ties and make them even better,” he added.

Yoshihiko Noda, secretary general of the main opposition Democratic Party, said he wants Japan to “build even stronger ties” with the United States, calling on Trump to be more level-headed when faced with criticism.

He also said, “I don’t want Mr. Trump to be dictated by a cost-benefit analysis that puts his country’s interests first.”

Kazuo Shii, leader of the smaller opposition Japanese Communist Party, took issue with Trump’s “America First” agenda, which aims to protect American citizens on issues of trade and immigration. In a statement, he said he has “deep concerns” that the US government may try to impose its will on other countries.

Other Japanese business leaders also weighed in on the Trump administration’s trade policy, with Yoshimitsu Kobayashi, chairman of Keizai Doyukai, Japan’s association of corporate executives, saying in a statement that advancing free trade is indispensable for sustainably developing the world economy.

With Trump’s protectionist policies in mind, Sadayuki Sakakibara, chairman of the Japan Business Federation, the country’s largest business lobby known as Keidanren, stressed Japanese companies’ contribution to the United States.

“Japanese firms are greatly contributing to the US economy, with direct investment of up to 410 billion yen (around $3.6 billion) and creating jobs for 1.7 million people,” he said in a statement.

In contrast, Yoshiaki Tobita, chairman of the Hokkaido arm of the Central Union of Agricultural Cooperatives, sounded what more welcoming about the US move to withdraw from the TPP, crediting his organisation with waging a successful campaign to protect farming in the largely agrarian region.

Tobita went on to say that his group will keep “close tabs” on the United States, however, given that the Trump administration’s trade policies are likely to focus on bilateral deals instead of multilateral arrangements. —Kyodo News

Former UN chief Ban apologises over family in US bribery case

SEOUL — Former UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon, who is believed to be considering a presidential run in South Korea, apologised on Saturday for causing public concerns over his family members who had been named in a bribery case in the United States.

Ban said in a statement he hoped any discussions between law enforcement authorities of South Korea and the United States — if they were taking place as reported — would be “strict and transparent” so that there is no suspicion left in the South Korean public.

He also reiterated he has “absolutely no knowledge” of the case. A US prosecutor has said Washington has asked South Korea to arrest Ban’s brother, Ki-sang, on charges he engaged in a bribery scheme to carry out the sale of a Viennese building complex.

Apple files $1 billion lawsuit against chip supplier Qualcomm

NEW YORK — Apple Inc filed a $1 billion lawsuit against supplier Qualcomm Inc on Friday, days after the US government accused the chip maker of resorting to anticompetitive tactics to maintain a monopoly over key semiconductors in mobile phones.

Qualcomm is a major supplier to both Apple and Samsung Electronics Co Ltd for “modem” chips that connect phones to wireless networks. The two companies together accounted for 40 percent of Qualcomm’s $23.5 billion in revenue in its most recent fiscal year.

In the lawsuit filed in US District Court for the Southern District of California, Apple accused Qualcomm of overcharging for chips and refusing to pay some $1 billion in promised rebates. Apple said in its complaint that Qualcomm withheld the rebates because of Apple’s discussions with South Korea’s antitrust regulator, the Korea Fair Trade Commission.

“If that were not enough, Qualcomm then attempted to extort Apple into changing its responses and providing false information to the FTC in exchange for Qualcomm’s release of those payments to Apple. Apple refused,” Apple said in its lawsuit.

In a statement, Qualcomm General Counsel Don Rosenberg called Apple’s claims “baseless.”

“Apple has been actively encouraging regulatory attacks on Qualcomm’s business in various jurisdictions around the world, as reflected in the recent KFTC decision and FTC complaint, by misrepresenting facts and withholding information,” Rosenberg said in the statement.

“We welcome the opportunity to have these meritless claims heard in court where we will be entitled to full discovery of Apple’s practices and a robust examination of the merits.”

Qualcomm’s stock closed 2.4 percent lower at $62.88 on the news.

Qualcomm has patents for chips which include standard essential patents, a term used to describe technology that is required to be licensed broadly and on “reasonable” terms.

In its lawsuit, Apple accused Qualcomm of refusing to license the technology to other manufacturers to prevent them from making the chips.

It also accused Qualcomm of selling chips while requiring Apple to pay a separate licensing fee for the same chips, in a “no license, no chip” policy. In addition, Qualcomm pressured network carriers to not sell or support Apple devices made with Intel chips as Apple said.

The KFTC fined Qualcomm $854 million in December for what it called unfair patent licensing practices.

In February 2015, Qualcomm paid a $975 million fine in China, while the European Union in December 2015 accused it of abusing its market power to that effect.

On Tuesday, the US Federal Trade Commission filed a lawsuit against Qualcomm, saying the San Diego-based company used its dominant position as a supplier of certain phone chips to impose “onerous” supply and licensing terms on cellphone manufacturers. Qualcomm said it would contest the FTC complaint.

Qualcomm was the sole supplier of modem chips for Apple’s phones until the release of the iPhone 7 in September. Intel Corp supplied about half of the modem chips for the newest models, said Stacy Rasgon, a senior analyst at Bernstein Research. Intel’s shares closed up 1 per cent at $36.94 after the Qualcomm suit was announced.

Apple made the move around the same time that Samsung, which had switched to using its own internal chips for its Galaxy S6 phones, returned to Qualcomm for the Galaxy S7.

Amit Singhal announced on his personal blog on Friday that he will join Uber after 15 years at Alphabet Inc (GOOGL.O), where he led Google’s search division. Singhal will take the post of senior vice president of engineering, an Uber spokesman said, a role which oversees the company’s marketplace and mapping efforts — the core of Uber’s business. He will also act as an adviser to both Kalanick and Anthony Levandowski, who heads Uber’s self-driving programme.

In his blog post, Singhal said he was excited for the engineering challenges Uber is tackling, and called the company “a geek’s candy store.”

“And don’t even get me started on how interesting and exciting self-driving is for a computer scientist,” he wrote.

Uber debuted its self-driving car pilot in Pittsburgh, in September. It launched a second fleet in San Francisco last month, but a feud with California regulators over Uber’s failure to obtain proper permitting compelled the company to take its autonomous testing cars off the streets.

Uber then packed up its cars and brought them to Arizona, where there are no special regulations for autonomous testing.

Singhal announced his departure from Google nearly a year ago, and said his next career move would involve philanthropy. He founded the Singhal Foundation, which aims to provide education to underprivileged children in India.

Uber hires Google search veteran Singhal for senior engineering post

SAN FRANCISCO — Ride-hailing company Uber Technologies Inc [UBER.UL] has hired the man behind Google’s search division. Singhal will take the post of senior vice president of engineering, an Uber spokesman said, a role which oversees the company’s marketplace and mapping efforts — the core of Uber’s business. He will also act as an adviser to both Kalanick and Anthony Levandowski, who leads Uber’s self-driving programme.

In his blog post, Singhal said he was excited for the engineering challenges Uber is tackling, and called the company “a geek’s candy store.”

“And don’t even get me started on how interesting and exciting self-driving is for a computer scientist,” he wrote.

Uber debuted its self-driving car pilot in Pittsburgh, in September. It launched a second fleet in San Francisco last month, but a feud with California regulators over Uber’s failure to obtain proper permitting compelled the company to take its autonomous testing cars off the streets.

Uber then packed up its cars and brought them to Arizona, where there are no special regulations for autonomous testing.

Singhal announced his departure from Google nearly a year ago, and said his next career move would involve philanthropy. He founded the Singhal Foundation, which aims to provide education to underprivileged children in India.

Morgan Stanley, Citi plan Brexit job moves — sources

LONDON/FRANKFURT — US banks Morgan Stanley (MS.N) and Citigroup (C.N) have identified many of the roles that will need to be moved from Britain following its exit from the European Union, sources involved in the processes told Reuters.

Morgan Stanley, which basesthe bulk of its European staff in Britain, will have to move up to 1,000 jobs in sales and trading, risk management, legal and compliance, as well as slimming the back office in favour of locations overseas, according to one source.

Citigroup, which already has a large banking unit in Dublin, will need to shift 100 positions in its sales and trading business, sources with knowledge of the matter said.

Leading financial firms warned for months before last June’s Brexit referendum that they would have to move some jobs if there was a leave vote, and have been working on plans for how they would do so for the past six months.

More details are starting to emerge after Prime Minister Theresa May confirmed Britain would leave the European single market, ending banks’ hopes they might retain “passporting” rights that let them sell their services across the EU out of their London hubs.

HSBC (HSBC.L) and UBS (UBSG.S) said on Wednesday they could each move about 1,000 jobs out of London.

A spokesman for Morgan Stanley said no decisions had been taken with regard to its Brexit plans.

“Our focus is on ensuring that we can continue to service our clients whatever the Brexit outcome,” he said. “To that end, we continue to evaluate what changes we may need to make to our business.”

A spokeswoman for Citi declined to comment.

Morgan Stanley currently basesthe vast majority of its European staff in Britain, employing around 6,000 people there. It has relied on passporting out of London to service clients elsewhere in the EU.

In order to continue certain businesses such as trading European securities it will need to shift those operations to a licensed entity in the regional bloc.

The source said that given the bank already had a trading licence in Frankfurt, it was likely to move most of these jobs there despite some city’s other drawbacks.

“We don’t like Frankfurt but that’s the only place to go,” the source said. “ Culturally, it’s not a vibrant city.”

The source added that US regulators were expected to discourage US banks from moving to countries with a poor country credit rating such as Ireland and Spain.

James Gorman, chairman and chief executive of Morgan Stanley, told analysts this week that Brexit was “a moving chessboard”.

“We like the UK, we like the rule of law in the UK, [and] our aspiration is to keep as much of our business there as possible,” he said.

“But to the extent we have to comply with, obviously, the Brexit rules, we’ll be putting a headquarters somewhere in continental Europe and that will have some implications going forward”.

In the world, everybody or everything is worried with the word, “Beginning.” The word is defined in dictionaries as, “the time when something starts,” and “the first or early ideas, signs or stages of something.” Familiar as we are with the word, we tend to forget meaningful essence of this word. “Beginning”, the word, carries the characteristic meanings—inexperience, unfamiliarity and excitement and others. Here, remarkable experiences that nearly every individual had ever faced in their life need to be recounted. Most will be remembering their very first day of going to schools. Some will not believe that there are experiences at the very beginning of schooling, according to the students’ learning. The parents are also very, very interested in their children’s education,” he said. “From our side, we try to make available school resources,” he said. For example, resources are provided for primary school mathematics to be taught by “pictorial abstracts, learn by doing something.” “We are a small country, there is high availability of school resources…we can centrally plan our curriculum and make sure that everybody implements this curriculum,” he said.

“In this country there is a strong emphasis on math, science and technology. You cannot achieve, even with the best curriculum, if the students, parents and society at large don’t value math. …the team is working on the subject of probability in math. His comic-based teaching and learning materials as an alternative to the usual textbook began to be used at three secondary schools, and now eight other secondary schools have also come on board.”

When we conceptualized this project...we targeted our lowest achieving students, those students who are not interested in math and who would not want to have anything to do with math.”

Learning the Singapore way of toppling global education rankings

Siti Rahil

SINGAPORE’s climb to the pinnacle of global education rankings has put the spotlight on how an education system that had been seen as somewhat too competitive, stressful and exam-oriented has evolved into one of the best in the world.

Last year, the wealthy city-state, which has already done well in global educational rankings, outperformed the rest of the world in the OECD’s PISA survey, which tested around 540,000 15-year-old students in 72 countries and economies on science, reading, math and collaborative problem-solving.

Singapore’s Education Ministry’s website states that “we have been moving in recent years towards an education system that is more flexible and diverse” so as to provide students with “greater choice to meet their different interests and ways of learning.” Hence it aims to “reduce reliance on rote learning and encourage independent learning and experimentation.”

Clearly Southeast Asia’s most advanced economy can afford to pump huge amounts of money into boosting educational services. Teachers are carefully selected and go through rigorous training and retraining, while innovative ideas are infused into the centrally planned curriculum, which is reviewed every six years.

“Basically it’s a whole host of factors,” Ridzuan Abdul Rahim, lead curriculum specialist at the Education Ministry, said when asked about Singapore students’ strong performance in math. “The teachers are committed to the students’ learning. The parents are also very, very interested in their children’s education,” he said. “From our side, we try to make available school resources,” he said. For example, resources are provided for primary school mathematics to be taught by “pictorial abstracts, learn by doing something.” “We are a small country, there is high availability of school resources…we can centrally plan our curriculum and make sure that everybody implements this curriculum,” he said.

Trump, now president, pledges to put ‘America First’ in nationalist speech

WASHINGTON — Donald Trump took power as the 45th president of the United States on Friday and pledged to end what he called an “American carnage” of rusted factories and crime in an inaugural address that was a populist and nationalist victory cry. Striking a defiant tone, Trump said American workers have been devastated by the outsourcing of jobs abroad and that other countries were taking advantage of the United States.

“This from day forward it’s going to be only America First,” the Republican told thousands of people gathered on the National Mall to watch Trump being sworn in at ceremonies on his first day in office and then redistributed across the entire world,” he said.

Trump accused the Washington establishment of protecting itself but abandoning regular citizens who have suffered from poverty and crime. “This American carnage stops right here and stops right now,” he said. “Every decision on trade; on immigration, on foreign affairs, will be made to benefit American workers and American families,” he said.

Trump, 70, takes over a country divided after a grueling election campaign. The grim vision of America he often paints is belied by statistics showing low levels of unemployment and crime nationally, although Trump won many votes in parts of the nation where manufacturing industry has been badly hit.

While Trump positioned himself as a champion of working Americans, the Tax Policy Centre non-partisan think tank estimates that his tax proposals would not only add $7.2 trillion in US government debt over the first 10 years, but are skewed to help the wealthiest Americans.

Trump signalled the possibility of a more aggressive approach to Islamic State militants. “We will reinforce old alliances and form new ones, and unite the civilized world against radical Islamic terrorism, which we will eradicate completely from the face of the earth,” he said.

The US Senate overwhelmingly voted on Friday to confirm retired General James Mattis as defence secretary and retired General John Kelly as homeland security secretary, making them the first Trump Cabinet nominees to be approved. New Vice President Mike Pence swore both in Friday night.

After repeating the 35-word oath of office, Trump, who repeatedly promised to repeal Obama’s signature health-care law, signed his first executive order, directing U.S. agencies to delay, waive or grant exemptions from any provisions of the Affordable Care Act deemed burdensome for states or individuals.

Republicans in Congress hope to repeal the health care law, also known as Obamacare, and replace it with something better.

Sitting behind the presidential Resolute Desk, Trump signed the order in a hastily arranged ceremony. In the Oval Office, which Obama vacated Friday morning, gold drapes had already been hung in place of crimson ones.

Trump’s election was greeted with concern by many countries around the world, in part because of the potential for an isolationist foreign policy.

In an interview after Trump was sworn in, German Vice Chancellor Sigmar Gabriel said, “What we heard today were hyper nationalism tones.” “I think we have to prepare for a rough ride,” Gabriel told public broadcaster ZDF, adding that Europe should stand together to defend its interests.

Sixteen dead, mostly Hungarian teenagers, in Italy bus accident — police

ROME — At least 16 people were killed and some 40 injured after a bus carrying Hungarian students burst into flames on a highway in northern Italy, police said on Saturday.

Girolamo Lacquaniti, head of highway police in the city of Verona, said most of the passengers were teenagers and students. He told Sky TG 24 television that the bus went off the road near a highway exit during the night. Television images showed the bus engulfed in flames.

Blow kills at least 21 in Pakistan vegetable market, says official

PESHAWAR (Pakistan) — An explosion in a busy vegetable market killed at least 21 people on Saturday in Pakistan’s remote northwestern tribal region, an official said.

About 40 others were wounded in the blast in Kurram region, near the border with Afghanistan, said Saajid Hussain Turi, member of the National Assembly from the region.

“We received 21 bodies of the local tribal people killed in the blast,” Turi said, adding that there would be a mass funeral and then a demonstration over the attack. Reports differed on the cause of the explosion.

Turi said a homemade bomb had been planted in a pile of tomatoes and exploded as people gathered in the market in Parachinar, Kurram’s main town, early on Saturday morning.

Iran rescuers find three bodies at collapsed building, hopes for survivors fade

DUBAI — Iranian rescuers have removed three bodies from the rubble of a high-rise building in Tehran that collapsed after a fire, a fire department spokesman said on Saturday, as hopes of finding survivors trapped beneath the shopping mall were fading.

“Rescuers are tunnelling under the rubble to try to reach the cellar of the Plasco building, but we have not succeeded yet,” Tehran fire department Jalal Maleki told state television.

The television quoted Maleki as saying equipment used to locate survivors had not given any indications on the third day of rescue efforts, and that “the probability of rescuing anyone alive from under the rubble is very low.”

Mexico sends 91 Cubans back after US law change

MEXICO CITY — Mexican authorities have repatriated 91 undocumented Cuban migrants to their country, the first to be returned after the United States eliminated the “wet foot, dry foot” policy that allowed any Cubans reaching US soil to access permanent residency in the country, the Mexican government said.

The 91 Cuban migrants were found on Mexican territory, according to a release by the National Institute of Migration (INM) on Friday. Those illegal Cuban migrants, 71 men and 20 women, were sent to Havana Friday morning on a police plane leaving from the airport of Tapachula, in the southern Mexican state of Chiapas. Cuban authorities have previously agreed to receive them.

Passed in 1995, the “wet foot, dry foot” policy allowed any Cubans touching US soil to access permanent residency in the country, while any Cubans caught at sea between their country and the United States were sent back. The law was eliminated earlier this month by then US President Barack Obama as part of the normalization of diplomatic ties between Havana and Washington.

Dead miner pulled from under landslide in Peru, six others missing

LIMA — The body of one of seven miners trapped under a landslide for four days in southern Peru was pulled from a 200-metre (660 feet) deep tunnel on Friday, but hopes of finding the others alive diminished, authorities said.

The miners had been working in an underground copper mine owned by Chinchilico Minero SAC in the region of Arequipa when more than 50 meters of mud and rock piled on top of the entrance during a downpour on Monday. One miner managed to escape on Tuesday and reported that three of his seven colleagues inside had been alive when he left. But no sign of life has been heard since Wednesday, said Jorge Martinez, a chief of Peru’s all-volunteer firefighting force in Arequipa.

Gambia’s leader Jammeh says he will step down, ending political impasse

BANJUL — Gambia’s leader Yahya Jammeh said on Saturday he would step down from power in a statement made in the face of pressure from West African armies that entered his country to remove him after he refused to concede an election defeat to President Adama Barrow.

His decision ends a political impasse and will likely be welcomed by democracy advocates and viewed as a triumph for African diplomacy. It also brings to a close a reign that began in 1994 when he seized power in a coup.

Jammeh’s authoritarian government established a reputation for intimidation and killing perceived opponents to stifle dissent.

"I have decided today in good conscience to relinquish the mantle of leadership of this great nation," he said on state television, wearing a white robe and looking tired.

"All those who have supported me or were against me in this period, I implore them to put the supreme interest of our nation the Gambia above all partisan interest and endeavour to work together as one nation," he said.

Jammeh made no mention of whether he would go into exile but said he was leaving power in the national interest after prayer and was proud to have served the Gambian people and grateful there was no bloodshed during the political impasse.

In practice, he had little choice but to step down. Around 7,000 soldiers from Nigeria and neighbouring Senegal entered Gambia late on Thursday backed by tanks and warplanes and were poised to swoop into the capital as his army provided no resistance.

Jammeh lost to Barrow in December, sparking celebrations on the streets of Banjul but, after initially conceding defeat, he changed his mind and said he would challenge the result in court. — Reuters

Turkish parliament approves presidential system, paving way for referendum

ANKARA — The Turkish parliament approved a constitutional reform bill on Monday that strengthens the powers of the presidency, paving the way for a referendum expected in the spring which could see President Tayyip Erdogan in office until 2029.

Erdogan says the reform will provide stability in the European Union candidate country at a time of turmoil and prevent a return to the fragile coalitions of the past. His opponents fear it will herald increasingly authoritarian rule.

The bill was approved with 339 votes, parliament said on its official Twitter account on Saturday. The legislation needed at least 330 deputies in the 550-member assembly to support it in order to go to a public vote.

"A new door in Turkish history and in the lives of the Turkish people has been cracked open today. With our people’s ‘yes’ vote, this door will be completely opened," Justice Minister Bekir Bozdag wrote on Twitter.

The reform would enable the president to issue decrees, declare emergency rule, appoint ministers and top state officials and dissolve parliament — powers that the two main opposition parties say strip away balances to Erdogan’s power.

Erdogan assumed the presidency, a largely ceremonial position, in 2014 after over a decade as prime minister. Since then, pushing his powers to the limit, he has continued to dominate politics by dint of his personal popularity.

Critics accuse him of increasing authoritarianism with the arrests and dismissal of tens of thousands of judges, police, military officers, journalists and academics since a failed military coup in July.

Erdogan and the government say the extent of the crackdown is justified by the nature of the threat to the state from 15 July when rogue soldiers commandeered tanks and fighter jets in a violent bid to seize power.

Rockets fired at Istanbul police and AKP offices, no casualties

ISTANBUL — Unidentified assailants attacked Istanbul’s police headquarters and an office of the ruling AK Party with improvised rocket launchers on Friday, officials said about the latest acts of violence in a city which has seen a string of bombings and shootings.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attacks and there were no reports of casualties. Islamic State, Kurdish militants and far-leftist groups have all claimed or been blamed for attacks in the city in the recent past.

The first attack on the police headquarters in Fatih, a district on the European side of the city, damaged a wall, according to Istanbul Governor Vasip Sahin. There were no casualties, he said in a statement.

President Tayyip Erdogan has been informed about the attack on the police headquarters and the second one on the AK Party offices in the nearby Sultucu neighbourhood, his office said.

“A rocket attack has been carried out on our provincial headquarters by terrorist centres which are quickly melting down,” Selim Temurci, the AKP’s provincial head in Istanbul said on Twitter, adding there were no dead or injured. An AKP lawmaker was quoted by the Cumhuriyet newspaper as saying the attacks may have been carried out by the far-left Revolutionary People’s Liberation Army-Front (DHKP-C), which has carried out such acts in the past and is considered a terrorist organisation by the United States and Turkey.

Iraq slowly untangles Islamic State’s bureaucratic legacy

KHAZER — Bushra Mohammed med married two years ago in her hometown of Mosul and bore a child last spring but as far as the Iraqi state is concerned she is single and her son does not exist.

Bushra is one of thousands of Iraqis emerging from more than two years of Islamic State rule to find themselves in legal limbo: neither her marriage nor her son’s birth certificate issued by the militants are recognised by the Iraqi government.

As Iraqi forces retake territory from the militants, the state is working to reverse the bureaucratic legacy of Islamic State, which subjected millions to its rule after seizing large parts of Iraq during the summer of 2014. At a makeshift court house in a cluster of portacabins in a camp for the displaced in Khazer near Mosul, Iraqi bureaucrats are busily converting certificates issued by the self-declared caliphate into official government documents. “We are changing them so that we can feel like citizens again,” said 20-year-old Bushra, her infant child tugging at the bottom of her abaya. “(Islamic State) are not a state; this is a state.”

Despite the violence and privation that came with Islamic State rule, life went on in Mosul and other areas controlled by the militants: people married, had children, divorced and died.

Outside the portacabin court, displaced Iraqis clutch Islamic State documents as proof not only of their rites of passage, but also of the sophisticated bureaucracy the militants ran in their ambition to create a state for all Muslims.

“We don’t recognise Daesh (Islamic State) procedures,” said judge Khaldal al-Shammary, his suit and tie incongruous with the spartan portacabin in which he sits.

Malaria champions see Trump uncertainty at crucial time

DAVOS, (Switzerland) — When it comes to fighting malaria, Bill Gates and Ray Chambers are both inspired and concerned: With And Gates, who is in sight, will the world’s new leaders commit to finally beating this persistent parasite?

In exclusive interviews with Reuters in Davos, Gates and Chambers highlighted uncertainty about leadership changes in the US and in United Nations bodies and what this might mean for funding and commitment to global health.

“The imponderable is what happens with President Trump,” said Chambers, the United Nations special envoy for malaria.

“We’re just not sure.”

Falls in deaths and infections due to the mosquito-borne parasite in the past 15 years are “one of the greatest success stories in the history of public health”, Chambers said.

The Gates Foundation commits vast funds to global health projects, said the world has never been closer to ending malaria “once and for all”.

But with the disease still killing a child in Africa every few minutes, those eager to finish the job are worried that the presidency of the United States — a crucial funding source for international malaria control efforts — is now passing to a man whose commitment to global health projects is uncertain.

And with looming leadership changes at organizations key to global health and development aid — the heads of the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria, and the World Bank — malaria champions say the risk of setbacks is unnerving.

“With malaria there’s no standing still,” Gates said. “Malaria is very complicated.”

It is almost a decade since Gates first dared to revive what Gates declared in 2007. “We’re just not sure.”

But there’s still much to do. Despite a steep rise in malaria spending from 2000 to 2010, it has now plateaued.

Funding in 2015 was less than in 2013, with combined international and domestic sources totalling $2.9 billion. Even this is only 45 percent of what malaria experts say is needed annually to reach a target of a 40 percent reduction in malaria incidence and mortality by 2020.

The US is by far largest international malaria donor, accounting for about 35 percent of total funds in 2015, followed by Britain, at 16 percent.

The US government-funded President’s Malaria Initiative has been a powerful force in the past decade, and monies for that rose above $600 million in 2016 from $30 million in 2006.— Reuters
Four children and woman rescued, two days after Italy avalanche

NEW YORK — Drug kingpin Joaquin “El Chapo” Guzman appeared in a US court on Friday after his surprise extradition from Mexico and pleaded not guilty to charges that he ran the world’s largest drug-trafficking organisation during a decades-long criminal career.

Guzman, 59, once one of the world’s most wanted drug lords, was accompanied by two court-appointed lawyers during the appearance in federal court in Brooklyn Friday.

Best known by the nickname El Chapo, or “Shorty” in Spanish, the diminutive Guzman was extradited on the eve of Donald Trump’s inauguration, raising speculation about the timing.

Some officials said it was an olive branch to the incoming US president, who had said he would kick Guzman’s “ass” after taking office. But some Mexican officials pointed out that Guzman’s extradition came hours before Barack Obama’s term ended in a nod to the outgoing president.

Either way current and former law enforcement officials on both sides of the border said the move would likely boost cooperation and smooth the path for improved relations between the neighbours.

The Mexican attorney general’s office rejected claims the move was related to Trump’s securing-in, noting that Guzman faces 10 pending cases in Mexico following his US sentence.

Guzman, who was once known to carry a gold-plated AK-47 rifle, wore a blue jail uniform and was clean-shaven, without his signature mustache, and his hair was close-cropped. He did not appear to be wearing handcuffs and had no visible expression on his face as he listened to questions from a judge.

After US Magistrate Judge James Orenstein asked Guzman if he understood the accusations against him, he responded through a Spanish interpreter, “Well, I didn’t know until now.” Later, when asked again, Guzman said he understood.

An additional hearing was scheduled for 3 February. Guzman’s lawyers promised a zealous defense to ensure he receives a fair trial, and they said they would examine whether Guzman was extradited appropriately.

Mexico seeks stronger US ties despite Trump campaign barbs

MEXICO CITY — Mexico’s president said on Friday he wanted to strengthen relations with his new US counterpart Donald Trump, whose threats and barbs against the country raised fears of a major economic crisis, and battered its currency.

President Enrique Pena Nieto, pilloried at home for meeting Trump in August after the New York businessman called Mexican migrants rapists and murderers, said on Twitter he would defend the interests of Mexico and its people in a “respectful” dialogue.

“We will work to strengthen our relationship with shared responsibility,” said Pena Nieto, who likened Trump’s rise to the ascent of Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini after the American’s broadsides early in the election campaign.

Trump vowed to build a wall along the US southern border to keep Mexicans out and threatened to tear up a joint trade deal if he cannot recast it in his favor.

The White House website said on Friday that Trump was committed to renegotiating the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), which underpins Mexico’s economy, and would move to withdraw if no “fair deal” is forthcoming.

Mexico’s government said Pena Nieto will make a foreign policy address on Monday morning, a few days before a delegation of senior Mexican officials travel to Washington to discuss relations with top Trump advisors.—Reuters

Violence flares in Washington during Trump inauguration

WASHINGTON — Black-clad activists among hundreds of demonstrators protesting Donald Trump’s swearing-in on Friday clashed with police a few blocks from the White House, in an outburst of violence rare for an inauguration.

At least 217 people were arrested in the melee, police said.

The burst of civil disorder followed a fierce presidential campaign that ended in a stunning victory for Republican Trump over Democrat Hillary Clinton on 8 November and left the country divided.

Many of Trump’s supporters traveled to Washington to cheer their new president on Inauguration Day. Tens of thousands of detectors are expected to march peacefully on Saturday.

In the violence, knots of activists in black clothes and masks threw rocks and bottles at officers wearing riot gear, who responded with volleys of tear gas and stun grenades as a helicopter hovered low overhead.

At one flash point, a protestor hurled an object through the passenger window of a police van, which sped away in reverse as demonstrators cheered. Earlier, activists used chunks of pavement and baseball bats to shatter the windows of a Bank of America branch and a McDonald’s outlet, all symbols of American capitalism.

Multiple vehicles were set on fire, including a black limousine. A knot of people dragged garbage cans into a street a few blocks from the White House and set them ablaze, later throwing a red cap bearing Trump’s “Make America Great Again” campaign slogan into the flames.

Police said six officers were injured in scuffles with protestors. The people arrested would be held overnight before making court appearances on Saturday, police said.

Friday’s protests played out just blocks from Pennsylvania Avenue, where New York businessman-turned-Republican political Trump took part in the traditional parade a newly sworn in president takes from the US Capitol to the White House.

The various protest groups scattered around the city chanted anti-Trump slogans and carried signs with slogans including “Trump is not president” and “Make Racists Afraid Again.”

“Trump is not going to be stopped at the top, he’s going to be stopped from the bottom, from people rising up,” said Ben Allen, a 69-year-old retired teacher from San Francisco. “We support the right of everybody in this country, no matter what nationality, what religion, the color of their skin, to be respected as a human being, and this guy doesn’t respect anybody.”—Reuters
US Marine helicopter departs Okinawa islet after emergency landing

IKEI ISLAND, (Japan) — A US Marine helicopter on Saturday departed the small island in Okinawa where it had made an emergency landing the previous evening.

The AH-1 attack helicopter, from the Marine Corps Air Station Futenma on the adjacent mainland of Okinawa, was forced into a landing on a small rural road after apparently experiencing mechanical trouble.

Speaking to reporters on the Ieki Island on Saturday, Kicichiro Juhana, head of the Okinawa governor’s office, expressed displeasure over the second such landing in Okinawa involving a US aircraft in just over a month.

AN MV-22 Osprey aircraft from the same Marine base crash-landed in shallow coastal waters off the main island last month, prompting safety concerns about the tilt-rotor aircraft among the people of Okinawa.

Koichiro Nakajima, head of the Defense Ministry’s Okinawa bureau, was also on the island on Saturday morning. He directly lodged a protest with a US military officer at the site, saying that incidents like this have heightened anxiety among local people.

The helicopter left the ground at around 11:15 am after undergoing maintenance. It apparently developed some trouble during a flight aimed at determining if nighttime training is possible, according to the prefecture.

The spot where the helicopter landed is about 1 kilometer from a nearby rest hotel and is surrounded by farmland.

Interpol launches project to fight wildlife crime in Africa, Asia

NAIROBI — International police (Interpol) on Friday launched a new project to identify and dismantle the organized crime networks making billions in illicit profits behind wildlife trafficking between Africa and Asia. The project led by Interpol’s Environmental Security programme will draw on the expertise of other specialised units and will focus on high profile traffickers in Asia sourcing wildlife from Africa.

“[The project will provide] a strengthened law enforcement response in source, transit and destination countries, particularly those linked to the illicit trade in ivory, pangolins and Asian big cat products,” Interpol said in a statement received in Nairobi. With environmental crime estimated to be worth up to $28 billion US dollars and linked to other criminal activities including corruption, money laundering and fraud.

“The project led by Interpol’s Environmental Security programme will draw on the expertise of other specialised units. “These include the Anti-Corruption and Financial crime unit, the Digital Forensics Lab for the extraction of data from seized equipment, the Firearms programme for weapons tracing and ballistics analysis and the Fugitive Investigations unit to assist countries locate and arrest wanted environmental criminals,” the statement said.

A recent Interpol-UN Environment report showed 80 per cent of countries consider environmental crime a national priority, with the majority saying new and more sophisticated criminal activities increasingly threaten peace and security. —Xinhua

Chile declares state of emergency due to massive wildfires

SANTIAGO — Chile declared a state of emergency on Friday as more than a dozen wildfires that have scorched nearly 50,000 hectares (123,500 acres) threatened to encroach on towns, factories and vineyards.

Firefighters, forestry service personnel and members of the military are battling 18 separate blazes in the centre and south of the country that have been fueled by strong winds and a heat wave.

The largest has consumed 24,000 hectares in and around Pumpanque, a rural area some 140 kilometers (87 miles) south of the capital Santiago that is near some of Chile’s vineyards.

“I’ve instructed the Interior Ministry to declare a catastrophe zone and a state of emergency in the areas affected by the blaze,” President Michelle Bachelet said on Twitter.

The smoke from the blazes cloaked Santiago in a thick haze. Television news images showed helicopters and planes trying to douse the out-of-control fires, apparently to little avail.

The head of Chile’s CONAF forestry service, Aaron Cavieres, said the fires were caused by humans, but that it could not be determined whether they were set intentionally.

CONAF said it would close access to all national parks between the northern Coquimbo and south-central Biobio regions until Sunday.

VATICAN CITY — Pope Francis urged US President Donald Trump to be guided by ethical values and as he took office on Friday, saying he must take care of the poor and the outpost during his time in office.

“At a time when our human family is beset by grave humanitarian crises demanding a response from our fellowmen, I pray that your decisions will be guided by the rich spiritual and ethical values that have shaped the history of the American people and your nation’s commitment to the advancement of human dignity and freedom world-wide,” Francis said in a message sent to Trump minutes after he was inaugurated.

“Under your leadership, may America’s stature continue to be measured above all by its concern for the poor, the outpost and those in need...,” Francis said in the message released by the Vatican.

Francis, the first pope from Latin America, has made concern for the poor and the weakest members of society a key platform of his nearly four-year-old papacy.

Last year, in response to an answer about Trump’s views on immigration and his intention to build a wall on the border with Mexico, Francis said a man with those views is “not Christian.”

With Oscars in sight, Amazon, Netflix lead streaming at Sundance

PARK CITY (Utah) — After revolutionizing television with bold, award-winning original content, streaming networks are on the cusp of their first potential Oscar wins, and are back at the Sundance film festival looking for more awards-worthy fare.

Amazon Inc raised eyebrows when it paid $10 million for the North American distribution rights to Sundance drama “Manchester By the Sea” last year. But the film is now the frontrunner to win Casey Affleck an Oscar for best actor, which would be the first Academy Award for a streaming platform.

Netflix Inc had four documentaries in previous Oscar races, but has yet to win the coveted accolade. Its documentaries “13th” and “The Ivory Game” have not been shortlisted this year for Oscar nominations, announced Tuesday, along with Amazon’s “Gleason.”

“This year could be really great for the filmmakers,” Netflix Chief Content Officer Ted Sarandos said in an interview. “We’ve campaigned four times and it’d be really great to see it through to the finish line.”

Netflix and Amazon both plan to increase 2017 spending to create market original movies and series and are being watched closely this year as Netflix US independent film festival. Liel Copland, partner and finance and distribution agent at talent agency William Morris Endeavor, which sold “Manchester” and “Gleason” to Netflix and Amazon, said each streaming endeavor, which sold “Manchester” to Amazon and “Gleason” to Netflix, is opening in US movie theaters on Friday.

“Amazon is very much a pro at integrating the theatrical release. Netflix is very much doing things for their large, international subscriber base, and now Hulu is working more like a pay television network,” Copland said.

Amazon acquired its first Sundance film, music documentary “Long Strange Trip,” on Wednesday, and plans to release it to US and UK Prime subscribers in May. Filmmaker Amir Bar-Lev said he was drawn to Amazon’s global reach and ability to air the entirety of his four-hour film across six parts.

“We showed this film to a number of people and everyone was excited, but the guys from Amazon really understood the film on a level I hadn’t really experienced,” Bar-Lev said.

Netflix, with 94 million global subscribers, entered Sundance this year having already purchased six films and two documentary series, including sci-fi drama “The Discovery,” which will air on March 31, and documentary “Casting JonBenet,” debuting in April.

“We acquired films ahead of Sundance so that we could really showcase them at the festival,” Sarandos said.

He said the strategy was in part to capitalize on publicity at the festival. Netflix will release the films exclusively soon after their Sundance premieres. —Reuters

Cute ‘Dog’s Purpose’ movie turns disturbing after stunt video

LOS ANGELES — What was billed as a heart-warming comedy movie aimed at dog lovers turned into a marketing nightmare on Thursday after a video emerged of a frightened dog being forced into cold rushing water on the film set.

Animal activist group PETA called for a boycott of the movie, “A Dog’s Purpose,” its director, Lasse Hallstrom, said on Twitter that as a lifelong animal lover he was “very disturbed” by the video and had not witnessed the event.

The American Humane Association, which monitors the treatment of animals in films, said in a statement that it had suspended its representative who was on the film set and was bringing in a third party to investigate.

The video, obtained by celebrity news website TMZ, showed a dog handler repeatedly trying to coax a German Shepherd into cold rushing water. Off-camera, someone is heard laughing, saying, “You just got to throw him in.”

The Universal Pictures release, starring Dennis Quaid, is about a devoted dog re-born several times to different owners, bringing warmth into their lives. It is due for release in the United States on 26 January.

Actor Josh Gad, who voices the dog in the film, said he was “shaken and sad” at the video, although he did not know the circumstances as he was never on set.

“I signed on for a film that truly stands out as one of the most beautiful love letters to animals I have ever seen,” Gad wrote on Twitter. “I am shaken and sad to see any animal put in a situation against its will.”

Producer Amblin Entertainment said it was investigating the incident but had followed protocols about the use of animals on film sets.

“There were several days of rehearsal of the water scenes to ensure Hercules (the German Shepherd) was comfortable with all of the stunts. On the day of the shoot, Hercules did not want to perform the stunt portrayed on the tape so the Amblin production team did not proceed with filming that shot.”

“Hercules is happy and healthy,” Amblin said in a statement on Wednesday. However, animal lovers were shocked.

“Do not take your children to see this movie unless you want to reward and encourage animal abuse,” wrote Jerry Sprinkle on the user review page for “A Dog’s Purpose” on movie website IMDB.com.

“As an animal lover, I wanted to see this film. As an animal lover, I can never see it,” tweeted a user called @Amitisacheva under the trending Twitter hashtag #BoycottADog'sPurpose.

Behind the Big Mac: McDonald’s gets movie and literary spotlight

LOS ANGELES — The man who turned a popular California hamburger stand into the McDonald’s global fast-food empire is having a posthumous Hollywood moment.

Michael Keaton plays Ray Kroc, a hard-drinking, somewhat desperate middle-aged milkshake equipment salesman who 60 years ago out-hustled the McDonald brothers to gain control of their namesake brand in “The Founder,” which is opening in US movie theaters on Friday.

Kroc, who died in 1984, convinced Richard and Maurice McDonald to let him franchise their clean, quick-service restaurants that helped end the US carhop era. He then wrested so much control over the brand that the brothers agreed to be bought out in 1961 for $2.7 million.

“I’m drawn to stories about polarizing, difficult men,” said screenwriter Robert Siegel, who also wrote “The Wrestler.”

“Keaton is good at that oily charm,” Siegel told Reuters.

The film closes with the bombing allegation that Kroc cheated the McDonald brothers out of what would have been a massive annual royalty payment.

The McDonald brothers’ survivors, who struck a rights deal with the film’s producers, have made that charge. However, it was not confirmed by other sources or in media interviews with the brothers themselves, whose major complaint appeared to be Kroc’s appropriation of the McDonald’s founder’s title.

McDonald’s Corp declined comment on the issue.

Joan Kroc, who died in 2003, lived lavishly while using Kroc’s billion-dollar fortune to promote causes sure to have sent her husband, a pro-business conservative who supported US President Richard Nixon, spinning in his grave.

The book traces their tumultuous relationship, which blossomed through a mutual love of music and business. But Napoli says it was Ray’s unwavering devotion to bargain-barrel “Early Times” whiskey that fueled both conflict in the marriage and aspects of Joan’s charitable giving.

In keeping with the times, Joan did not speak openly about Ray’s drinking, which “doesn’t square well with the mythology of McDonald’s,” Napoli said.

“[Joan] couldn’t get him to quit, so she helped other people like herself to deal with people who drink,” Napoli said.

Joan supported addiction research, awareness and treatment through gifts to major universities and facilities such as the Hazelden Foundation and the Betty Ford Clinic.

Other major recipients include the Salvation Army, National Public Radio and the Ronald McDonald House Charities. —Reuters
Silk Road lanterns light up British gardens for Lunar New Year

LONDON — Hundreds of traditional Chinese lanterns lit up the sprawling gardens of London’s Chiswick House to celebrate the upcoming Lunar New Year.

This week’s Magical Lantern Festival focused on the Silk Road, a network of trade routes connecting China with the West, which expanded on Wednesday with the arrival of the first China-to-Britain freight train in London.

Around 1,500 lanterns replicated this journey along the ancient Silk Road, featuring gardens of London’s Colosseum, the Egyptian pyramid and a Tang dynasty palace.

The decorations, using 60,000 light bulbs, were also seen in figures associated with the Middle East, such as camels, and the characters of Aladdin, Jasmine and the Genie from the Disney film “Aladdin.”

The festival of lights and color runs for 29 days, and incorporates both traditional lanterns and technology, such as virtual reality.

London’s official Lunar New Year celebrations take place in Trafalgar Square on January 29, when tens of thousands of people are expected to fill the iconic landmark.

Melania Trump’s hometown hopes new-found fame will boost trade, tourism

SEVNICA (Slovenia) — “First Lady” apple pies in the Slovenia bakery in Melania Trump’s hometown of Sevnica in Slovenia are selling like hot cakes.

“We sell more than a hundred a day so the pies are our main product these days,” said Sergeja Gorenjec, a saleswoman at the bakery. “Our workday is longer but we are glad and proud of Melania.”

Tourist numbers have doubled over the past year, when interest in Melania rose during her husband Donald Trump’s presidential election campaign, said tour guide Janez Levstik. He did not give figures.

“We were a bit unprepared for the attention at first but now we are getting used to it and we expect tourist numbers to increase further in the future,” said Mojca Pernovsek, the head of local tourism bureau KSTM. As Donald Trump was sworn in as the 45th president of the United States, the local municipality invited tourists and journalists to Sevnica on Friday to join in the celebrations.

Melania cakes, Melania pancakes and Presidental Burgers are among the offerings in the restaurants and cafes in the town in southeastern Slovenia, on the banks of the river Savja and surrounded by forest-covered hills.

It was there that Melania, born in 1970 when Slovenia was part of Yugoslavia, spent most of her youth in a flat in the town center before moving to the capital Ljubljana to attend high school. She started modeling at 16 and pursued her career in Milan and Paris before moving to New York in 1996. Her parents, former car dealer Viktor Knavs and his wife Amalija, live in Sevnica when not in the United States with their two daughters.

“So far we’ve had mostly Slovenian tourists but we expect to get more from abroad in future, particularly from neighbouring countries,” said Levstik.

Visitors will see no photographs of Melania in the town of about 5,000 people — they were removed after her lawyer issued a warning in November that using Melania’s photo for commercial purposes without her consent was not allowed.

But as well as the “First Lady” pies, made from local apples and complete with a letter M on top and a paper US flag attached, they can sample local wine, tea, chocolate, sausages and honey. Other local products include face creams, lingerie, shoes and furniture. —Reuters

TEL AVIV — Sap surfing — standing upright on a board using an oar to paddle — has become a popular pastime for tourists and locals alike off the shores of Israel. In a series of pictures taken by Reuters photographer Baz Ratner sap surfers appear suspended in the shot, with the hazy skyline merging with the still waters against a misty backdrop.

Tourists’ luxury spending up in December for first time since February

PARIS — Global spending on luxury goods by tourists was up in December for the first time since February, lifted by strong business in Britain and France, a study by tax-refund services firm Global Blue showed.

Tourism spending on luxury goods was up 3 per cent year on year in December overall, with a 26 per cent increase in Britain and 21 per cent in France, which had suffered from a sharp downturn after deadly Islamist attacks in Paris and Nice.

Nadal holds off rising talent Zverev to reach last 16

MELBOURNE — Rafa Nadal held off a fierce challenge from one of the hottest prospects in the game when he outlasted German teenager Alexander Zverev 4-6, 6-3, 6-7(5), 6-3, 6-2 to reach the last 16 of the Australian Open on Saturday.

The Spaniard, champion here in 2009, needed to be at his resilient best to come out on top after more than four hours of top quality shot-making and thrilling rallies which earned both players a huge ovation from the Rod Laver Arena crowd.

The 19-year-old Zverev showed in spades why many consider him a future grand slam champion but was just unable to stay with the uber-fit 30-year-old in a gripping deciding set.

“Everybody knows how good Alexander is, he’s the future of our sport and the present too,” said Nadal, who reached the fourth round for the 10th time in 12 appearances at Melbourne Park.

“Today was a great battle, I am very happy to be through. It was an important result for me as I’ve lost my last couple of matches in the fifth.”

Returning to Melbourne Park as ninth seed after curtailing his 2016 season because of injury, Nadal will next face Gael Monfils of France as he bids for a 15th grand slam title.

While Zverev’s performance reinforced his position in the vanguard of generation next, Nadal confirmed that he is healthy enough to take advantage of the early exit of 2016 champion Novak Djokovic from his half of the draw.

It was the younger man, however, who got off to the quicker start, grabbing a break in the opening game with a sumptuous backhand dropshot and moving the former world number one around the court.

Zverev had a 20 kph advantage over Nadal on first serve but the German was unable to dominate in the second set the way he did in the first and a single break evened up the contest.

The third set developed into a ding-dong battle with neither player able to snare a single break point and it was Zverev who edged the tiebreak with an angled winner, again off his backhand.

Nadal grabbed the only break of the fourth set on Zverev’s first service game and tied the contest up with his eighth ace, sending it into a decider.—Reuters

Konta calls the shots to ease into fourth round

MELBOURNE — Britain’s Johanna Konta called the shots to ease into fourth round when Wozniacki put a backhand wide.

Gerrard returns to Liverpool as Academy coach

LONDON — Liverpool’s former captain and talisman Steven Gerrard will return to his roots as part of the Academy’s coaching set-up, the Premier League club announced on Friday.

Gerrard, who made 710 appearances for his boyhood club during 17 years at Anfield, will begin his new role in February.

“It feels like completing the circle; returning to the place where professionally it all began,” the 36-year-old told the club’s website (www.liverpoolfc.com).

“However, this isn’t a decision based on emotion — it’s about what I can offer and contribute to Liverpool.” Gerrard ended his playing career in November when he announced his retirement a week after confirming he would not be returning to play for MLS side LA Galaxy.

A return to Liverpool in some capacity has always been on the cards and news that he will be working with the club’s youngsters will be welcomed by the fans who idolised him. He will work under Academy manager Alex Inglethorpe at the club’s Kirkby complex.

“I don’t think I need to explain to people what this football club means to me,” said Gerrard, who famously led Liverpool to an unlikely Champions League final win over Milan in 2005.—Reuters

Liverpool title challenge dented by Swansea sensation

LONDON — Liverpool were on the end of the biggest sensation of the Premier League season when bottom club Swansea City repelled a dramatic comeback from Juergen Klopp’s title chasers to earn their first-ever league win at Anfield on Saturday.

The Welsh strugglers leapt out of the bottom three with a quite extraordinary win that stunned Liverpool fans who had not seen their title challengers lose a home match league there since defeat by Manchester United a year ago.

Spanish international Fernando Llorente was the hero in Swansea’s first league victory under new manager Paul Clement, toe-poking the ball home two minutes after halftime and heading home another five minutes later.

After Roberto Firmino had dragged Liverpool back into the game with two quite superb goals, it seemed wholly unlikely that the visitors could survive the onslaught until the ball broke for Gylfi Sigurdsson to slot home their 74th minute winner.—Reuters
