State Counsellor: some success, but we are not home and dry yet

In an interview with the BBC, State Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi defended the progress her government has made since coming to power one year ago in terms of infrastructural improvements, the peace process and free elections, and also speculated that the October attacks last year on border police outposts that resulted in months of area clearance operations were an effort to derail attempts to negotiate peace between Myanmar and the many ethnic armed insurgent groups. The following is the complete text of the BBC television interview.

Q: In terms of change, in the lives of ordinary people, one of the things that has happened, as in South Africa, is there is a massive sense of disappointment when a liberation movement comes into power. What have you done to make their life better?
A: In practical ways, lots of roads. You think that may not be much because you come from a country where there were roads from your grandfathers time. But in our country that means a lot. Because all-weather roads make a great difference to ones lives. Last year one of our priorities was job creation. We discovered over this one year that if you start constructing all-weather Roads and provide electrification, people start creating jobs for themselves. That is what has made one of the big differences.

But I think, we think, what we've done better, or what I think we have done better is take forward the peace movement. We can't say that we are there by any means, and we can't say we are at the point where we are home and dry. But still, there has been success there, particularly because the people have become involved in it.

Q: You mentioned the peace process, and you felt proud that it was an achievement last year, but right at this moment you have some of the most bitter fighting taking place on the borders of this country with ethnic groups?
A: But Fergal, you work for peace particularly because there is fighting. If there were no fighting there would be no need for us to work for peace. If there were no fighting at all, if all this settles down, that means the peace process is over. Now I did say at the beginning that we are not there yet.

Q: You don't control the army, you don't control the security forces, and when fighting breaks out, they are free to do what they have always done, rape, pillage and torture.
A: They are not free to do. They are free to go in and fight. That is in the constitution. Military matters are to be left to the army. And that is why we are trying to change the constitution, we feel very awkward about it. Amending the constitution is one of our aims. Because according to the national cease-fire agreement, one of the last steps would be to adopt a federal constitution.

Q: If you look at the history of this country, that has been going on since independence?
A: Fergal, you were in South Africa, and you did manage to end apartheid there didn’t you, not you, the South Africans.
Q: Are we talking months or years?
A: We hope that it will not be more than a few years, that’s what we’re aiming at.
Q: Can I come to the issue which has caused most international concern and which has led to a real turn about in the way you are perceived internationally and you are aware of this. You have seen the newspaper headlines. The comments from international figures condemning how you have handled the issue of the Rohingya Muslims?
A: What exactly is it that they are condemning?
Q: They want you to let a UN fact finding mission into Rakhine State?
A: But that is just now, that is what they asked for last month. What have they been condemning over the last year?

A NEW agreement between Myanmar and Thailand would impose legal action or penalties on illegal fishing vessels that unload at Thai ports, according to the Port State Countermeasures. The implementation date of 1 April, that went into effect on 1 April for fishery enterprises, announced the Myanmar-Thai Directorates of Fisheries.

But the new agreement put owners, operators and seamen on fishing boats that were already out to sea in potential violation, with no way to contact them and inform them of the new rules.

The Kawthoung District Fishery Enterprises Association thus went to Ranong, Thailand and negotiated with their Thai counterparts not to incur punishments to the Myanmar seamen when they arrive back at port.

The Thai Directorate of fisheries postponed the implementation time for the purpose of sustaining long-term friendship between the two countries. The Thai Directorate of Fisheries will implement the Port State Measure Agreement (PSMA) 60 days after the original implementation date of 1 April.—Koaw Soe (Kawthoung)

MFF to cooperate with Vietnamese companies to boost fishery exports

WITH a view to scaling up fishery export volume, discussions on cooperation with Viet Nam’s companies is ongoing, according to an announcement of the Myanmar Fishery Federation (MFF).

Currently, fishery products are being shipped to European Union countries, but only a small volume can be exported because of a lack of production.

“You enjoy strong capacity in fish and meat production, and so we have decided to cooperate with Viet Nam companies to enhance Myanmar’s fishery industry”, said U Hnin Oo, the vice chairman of MFF.

A delegation including officials from the MFF attended a meeting in Ho Chi Minh City to introduce the International Exhibition and Conference on Agriculture, Livestock, Aquaculture, Fisheries for Cambodia and Myanmar.

The exhibition will be held from 2nd to 4th August in Phnom Penh, Cambodia from 27th to 29th September in Yangon, Myanmar, offering a good opportunity to understand more about those markets and explore business and investment opportunities.

In addition to showcasing the latest technologies and equipment as well as agriculture, livestock and fisheries products, the international agricultural exhibitions in Cambodia and Myanmar will also feature business matching between suppliers and distributors and professional conferences and seminars to help the participants realise the investment opportunities of the two markets.

Erratic weather adversely affects fisheries production and fish resources, and offshore fishing does not look very promising. As a result, to boost the export volume, the fish farming sector is required to prioritise and concerted efforts are needed to be exerted by all the stakeholders in the fisheries export supply chain, including the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Irrigation and Myanmar Fishery Federation (MFF), officials said.

Those engaged in Myanmar's fish and prawn farming need to switch over to a modern farming method from the traditional one. Adopting modern farming techniques can help prevent the fish from infectious disease, increase the growth rate of fish and prawn and clean the farming lakes, according to the MFF.

Over 2.3 million tonnes of sugar re-exported

Starting from fiscal year 2015-2016 to the first week of March in the current year, over 2.3 million tonnes of sugar were reportedly re-exported to foreign partners, earning US$1.29 billion.

Myanmar is making efforts to enhance re-export trade and grant permits for more items, negotiating with the departments concerned. Sugar, betel nut, fuel oil, clothes, garlic, sesame seeds, dried pepper, peanuts, cotton, electrical appliances, beverages, food, edible oil, and tyres are re-exported.

The country earns more revenue from re-export trade with the increase in trade volume. In addition, all the stakeholders in this industry are financially doing well, it is learnt. Sugar is imported mostly from sugar producing countries such as Thailand and India, and Myanmar re-exported them to China because Myanmar sugar millers are able to produce sugar mainly for the local market as Myanmar sugar does not look appealing and does not meet export criteria for the lack of advanced refining machinery.

The Commerce Ministry will also verify and approve the proposals concerning the commodities which can be re-exported, it is learnt.—Mon Mon

Thailand to assist in Myanmar plastics business

THAILAND will help develop plastic materials production in Myanmar by providing technical assistance, said Mr. Jukr Bun Long, Ambassador of Thailand to Myanmar.

“Thailand’s economy is likely to grow by 7.1 per cent on average in three years. Plastic materials production will play a part of it. Thailand is leading in plastic materials production in the ASEAN region and will contribute to upgrading production technology”, Mr. Jukr Bun Long said at a press conference held at the Chatrium Hotel on Tuesday.

The event was held in order to encourage Myanmar plastic materials businessmens to attend Interplas Thailand 2017, which will be held on 21st June in Bangkok, Thailand.

“With the development of small and medium-sized enterprises in Myanmar, the plastic materials production business has also risen. We are willing to cooperate with international countries to upgrade technology and enhance quality of the plastic materials”, according to a local plastic production organisation.

About 500,000 tonnes of plastic raw materials are yearly imported into the country. Myanmar can now start to manufacture personal plastic goods and plastic materials used in industry and construction to ship back to the foreign countries.

Viet Nam purchased large volume of maize from Myanmar

VIET NAM is a regular purchaser of Myanmar’s maize, placing large orders every year, according to the news of the Commerce Ministry.

A total of 6,370 tonnes of maize worth US$1.153 million were exported abroad through normal trade from the 12th to 18th March 2017, shipping 4,722 tonnes to Viet Nam, 808 tonnes to Singapore and 840 tonnes to Malaysia.

The total export volume is up by 2,439 tonnes when compared to that of last week. The increase in the export volume is attributed to the high export volume of Viet Nam against that of last week and retaining the new Singapore market this week.

A tonne of maize in the week of 12th to 18th March fetched US$180 to $200, according to the price announcement of Bayintnaung Commodity Depot.

Myanmar can yearly produce from 300,000 to 400,000 tonnes of corn. Myanmar’s corn was mainly exported to China and also to Malaysia, Indonesia, Singapore, India, Hong Kong, Bangladesh, Viet Nam, Bulgaria and Spain.—Ko Htet

State Counsellor: some success, but we are not home and dry yet

Q: Many many people, including those who would be sympathetic to you look at the situation and say why haven’t you spoken up more? Here is an icon of humanity?

A: Well it is not something I think because we were asked the same question over the last 30 years since I started working for the NLD. I am not concerned about an assassination, and all kinds of other dangers coming from the powers that be and from those who are in a position to engage in these activities. But it is not something you think about on a day to day basis, it’s just part of your job.

What The Whole Populace Want Is The Nationwide Peace!

Dr. Aung Soe @ Aung Kyaw Moe
Retired State Medical Superintendent

THE above mentioned slogan is meant for World Health Day 2017 which falls on April 7. As the depression cases are on rise globally as well as in Myanmar, together with increased incidence of suicidal attempts, World Health Organization has chosen Depression as theme for 2017 World Health Day. Psychiatric illnesses are fundamentally no different from medical illnesses. Historically, illnesses in which there was prominent disturbance of psychological function or behavior and no obvious pathology came to be regarded as ‘psychiatric’. However, we now know that there is demonstrably altered brain function in many psychiatric disorders. We also know that psychological disturbance is common in medical illness. Hence regarding psychiatric illness as ‘mental’ as opposed to ‘physical’ is incorrect. Psychiatric illness is no less real or less deserving of care than are medical conditions. Diagnosis in psychiatric, as in much of medicine, is based mainly on identifying recognized patterns of subjective symptoms. These symptoms involve abnormalities of behavior, mood, perception, thinking and intellectual function. When severe, these abnormalities may lead to patients being a danger to themselves or to other people. This is recognized in law, and the Mental Health Act gives doctors the authority to treat patients against their will in these cases. However, the great majority of ‘psychiatric’ patients are managed in general practitioners’ surgeries, mental health centers or hospital outpatient clinics in much the same way as patients with any other medical condition.

The average general practitioner (GP) can expect to be consulted by 1 in 7 of his or her patients each year because of a psychiatric disorder. Surveys in GPs and GPs see a greater proportion of patients with neurotic illnesses and relatively few with psychotic illnesses; their patients are less severely ill than those attending a psychiatrist, and are more likely to present with somatic bodily complaints. Prevalence of psychiatric illness in different populations are; in community 15-20%, in general practice attenders 30% where as, in general hospital outpatients 20-30%, and general hospital inpatients 25-40% respectively.

No, death is only one of the multiple major manifestations of psychiatric illness. Some of the other major manifestations include disturbed and aggressive behavior, anxiety symptoms, deliberate self-harm and suicidal ideas, alcohol misuse and withdrawal, misuse of drugs other than alcohol, medically unexplained physical symptoms and functional body syndromes and chronic progressive diseases with mental involvement.

During my assignment as United Nations Volunteer Medical Officer (UNVMO), UNDIP abroad, encountered quite a number of civil war victims suffering from Post Traumatic Stress Disorders (PTSD) with suicidal ideas. Perhaps suicidal attempts are the worst outcomes of depression most of which are fatal. Presumable causes of depression are many. Genetic factors play an important role, such as a higher prevalence among first-degree relatives than in the general population; a higher concordance rate in twins, even if the twins have been reared apart; a higher prevalence rate for children of mentally ill parents who are brought up by healthy adoptive parents. Family background also plays a decisive note. Many patients with psychiatric disorders report an unhappy childhood and it seems likely that a traumatic upbringing pre-disposes to future psychiatric illness. Important factors are loss of a parent, or physical or emotional abuse, death or separation, parental dis-harmony and physical, especially sexual, abuse. Physical illness and chronic ill health too precipitate mental illness. Both predispose to psychiatric disorder. There is an especially well-established link between brain injury and subsequent depressive illness. Physical illness of acute onset can give rise to psychiatric disorder due either to its effect on brain anatomy and physiology or to its emotional significance and implications for the patient’s future well-being.

Stressful life events also give rise to mental illnesses in vulnera- ble people. They usually involve a sense of loss or threat of loss, and include death of a close relative, marital breakdown, redundancy, retirement and major financial cri- sis. Social isolation leads to psychiatric problems. Many psychiatrically ill patients are socially isolated and this often appears to be a contributory factor in their illness. Particularly important is the lack of a close, comforting relationship. So- cial deprivation is associated with various conditions, such as attempted suicide, alcoholism and drug dependence.

Some Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs) were in touch with me when I was appointed as Medical Superintendent at General Hos- pital Myitkyina, Kachin State. As a health care provider, I noticed stress and strain, physical illness and chronic ailments which led to psychiatric health problems among community. Depression is present in a quarter to a half of all medical patients. Depressed mood is usually a consequence or adverse circum- stances in vulnerable persons.

Many cases of depression in medical settings are missed. It is therefore important to ask all patients about symptoms. Depression is the main risk factor for suicide and patients with depression should be asked about suicidal ideas and plans. The first step in managing depression is to find out the patient’s concerns and provide an appropriate explanation and reassur- ance where possible. It may emerge that he or she has an unjustifiably negative understanding of prognosis or treatment. If depression is persistent, specific treatment should be considered.

Deliberate self-harm (SSH) is a very common reason for pres- entation to medical services. The term ‘attempted suicide’ is poten- tially misleading in that the majori- ty of patients are not inequivalently trying to kill themselves. Most sui- cides are done with overdose, ei- ther of prescribed or non-prescribed drugs. Other less common methods include wrist-slash, asphyxiation, hanging, jumping from a height or in front of a moving vehicle, and using fire- arms. Methods which carry a high chance of being fatal are more like- ly to be used with a serious psychiatric illness. There was a steady increase in hospital admissions for suicide attempts from the early 1960s that by the end of the 1970s there were over 100 000 admissions annually in the UK. The trend varies between countries. Since then there has been a slight decrease but attempted sui- cide is still one of the most com- mon reasons for acute medical ad- mission.

Suicide attempts are more common in women than in men, and in young adults than in the el- derly. In contrast, completed sui- cide is more common in men and in the elderly, although there has recently been an increased rate of suicide in young adults. There is a higher incidence of suicide at- tempts among the lower socio-econo- mic groups, particularly those living in crowded, socially de- prived urban areas. Patients often have a deprived family background. A drug overdose, or through death or separation. There are also links with alcohol misuse, child abuse, unemployment and recently broken relationships.

Wish you all a very happy and prosperous new year and complete physical, mental and social well-being free from depression.
MPA arranges for embarkation of ocean liners

THE Managing Director of Myanma Port Authority (MPA) under the Ministry of Transport and Communications and the Master Attendant of the marine department have made proper arrangements for ocean liners which have 190 meters length overall or longer to enter the Yangon River.

International cargo ship owners use large ocean liners in order to be cost-effective and to minimise costs. Despite having many ports to load and unload at Yangon port along the Yangon River, super ocean liners are not allowed to embark at the river port because of the low level of draft as well as of narrow width of the river. Thus, cargo ships are allowed to embark only at the river ports if they have not more than 167 meters overall in length.

Cargo ships with an overall length of 200 meters, including ocean-going cargo ships, international tourist cruises, naval ships and container ships have to wait outside the transitional anchorage for docking at Thilawa Port for long periods of time. The cost of hiring cargo ships can be difficult because the ship’s owners are waiting to get a place at the port.

So, the Myanmar Port Authority is finding a new route in the river and is also systematically dredging the river so that the cargo ships will be able to dock at the jetties in the Yangon River. The MPA is also doing what is necessary to safely dock MV Top Fair cargo ships at Thilawa Port and assign duties to the chief navigation a marine at the pilot station on 23 March. —GNLM

Agricultural loans for crop growers to be increased this FY

THE Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Irrigation said it plans to raise the amount of agricultural loans for crop growers as of this fiscal year.

The amount of agricultural loans will be increased to Ks50,000 from Ks20,000 per acre of farmland through the Myanma Agricultural Development Bank as many crop growers were omitted at the time when the government increased its financial support for farmers, especially rice growers.

The authorities have no plans to raise the amount of farming loans per acre for rice farmers, but crop growers will be helped this financial year, according to an official from the Myanmar Rice Federation, which welcomes the new plan to enhance agricultural production.

30-mile greening project around Yangon City to continue this FY

A PROJECT for greening Yangon City and its environs in a 30-mile radius will be continued this fiscal year with the use of government budget funds, according to the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Irrigation.

The ministry will carry out construction of irrigation facilities such as spillways, water channels and silt excluders in project areas including the Moeyungi Wildlife Sanctuary, Shwekaung Dam and Salu Dam. The greening project has been implemented since 2013. Initially, authorities targeted development of 65,000 acres of paddy plantations in Kawa Township in Bago Region, Khayay, Thonewa and Kyauktan townships in Yangon Region. However, only about 9,000 acres of rice have successfully been planted in Kawa Township and more than 200 acres of paddy fields in Khayay Township.

Growers in Kyauktan Township are facing difficulties to cultivate summer paddy plants because of poor irrigation this season, while some summer paddy plantations were damaged in Thanyin Township due to the shortage of agricultural water. About 1,880 acres of paddy plantations were developed in Thanyin this year. —200

POEM:

Because it’s Time

Fly the banner of Peace because it’s time.
Do you hear the cries of the Bones?
Do you see the Bird
Ruffle off the burning ashes,
And soar into the azure sky?

Bury the hatchets because it’s time
our hearts were welded in love, our hands entwined in friendship.

Lay the foundation now
For the future of our children because what a waste of Hate Bullets, what a waste of the bloodshed of our brothers,
and our people in the throes of agony!

It’s time, dear Bros!

Letter to the Editor

DEAR Editor,

Is it the Government policy not to carry the news of the demonstration by the Confederation of Trade Unions Myanma CTUM of the 26th March 2017 in the government printed media?

On the 27th of March, almost all the private news papers and journals (7Daydaily, The Voice, Democracy Today, Myanmar Times – Myanmar version, Myanmar Times – Eng, Eleven - Eng ) carried the news of the demonstration by CTUM against the order of the Union Government that cut down the annual Thingyan Buddhist New Year Holidays from 10 days to five days on the printed media. MTV, RFA, VOA, BBC, Kamayut media all carried on the broadcast media.

As part of the demonstration, CTUM, which is the largest and only registered Confederation of Trade Unions requested the Union Government, when deciding on issues directly related to workers, to utilize the National Tripartite Dialogue Forum NTDF (nine MOLIP+ nine UMFCCI+ nine Workers). The NTDF was formed in 2015 to develop good Industrial Relations and has been in use regarding the Labor Law Reform process, the Employment Contract Act.

We are surprised that the Global New Light of Myanmar, the Myanmar Alin as well as the Mirror daily / Kye Mon did not carry the news. We gave interviews to many reporters including the Government media – to explain the why of the Demonstration and for a solution.

CTUM notes that on 24th March 2017 the Myanmar Alin carried news and photo of Shwe Li Plastic factory workers demonstration in Pathein Gyi township, Mandalay.

This shows that the government printed media does carry workers protests but not any criticism on the government’s policies.

Are we still under a single party society that denies any and all objections to Gov policy?

What happened to the Freedom of Expression and the Freedom of the Press?

A democratic, open society is not just the government and the Parliament.

For CTUM, denial of mutual respect to organized labor (formed in accordance with the Myanmar Labor Organization Law), denying acknowledgement of established mechanisms designed to develop good Industrial Relations ( in accordance with the ILO standards), closing eyes to positive criticism, and, refusing space for respective stakeholders to work together for the betterment of all, IS NOT DEMOCRACY IN ACTION.

All of us contributed to the political transition. All of us had worked / are now working for the betterment of our country, each in its own sector. Most importantly, now that transition is here, CTUM calls upon all to “Lend a hand play the game” to achieve our objective of an Open, Inclusive and Interactive society.

Drugs treatment capacities in Myanmar received a significant boost this week through the delivery of a new UNODC training package to strengthen access to community-based health services for people who use drugs. The training of officials of the Myanmar Police Force, Ministry of Health and civil society partners follows a symposium held late last year between ASEAN countries and UNODC on the new approach to strengthen voluntary community-based health services throughout the region was announced.

Currently, there is need in Myanmar and the wider region for an alternative to compulsory drug treatment centers, where people are held for different various periods. The training package introduces community-based treatment and care service concepts to those who have never before received practical training on such approaches, and will connect them with what is needed in Myanmar at the moment. In practical terms the training will support accessible and quality drug treatment and rehabilitation services. It will deliver knowledge and skills to those who need it most – welfare, community care and outreach workers, and others working in communities. This training will result in more effective drug treatment and care, and contribute to the general well-being of the community,” said Dr. Myint Han, Director General of the Department of Medical Services, Ministry of Health and Sports.

The training, and the wider regional strategy, are part of UNODC’s wider work in the region to move towards health-centric and evidence-based drug policies. The region continues to develop with the support of UNODC drug treatment through regional mechanisms, such as the Mekong MOU on Drug Control, to which Myanmar is also a signatory. — GNLM

Thousands of Myanmar migrant workers apply for identity cards in Thailand

THE Myanmar Embassy in Thailand warned Myanmar migrant workers to obtain a work permit in Thailand within 15 days after receiving a certificate of Identity issued by the Thai government.

“They are going to be arrested if they do not have a work permit in hand after 15 days from the date the certificate was issued when they are being investigated, said the Labor Attaché U Moe Aung Khaing of the Myanmar Embassy in Bangkok.

The objective of the Certifi cate of Identity, or CI, is to iden tify all migrants in Thailand and register their workplaces. The CI will replace the current Pink Card as permission to stay in Thailand and makes bear ers eligible to get the blue book work permit. All migrants in Thailand are required to obtain a CI or apply for a Burmese Passport.

The CI is for migrants who don’t have a Burmese ID card and household registration document at hand. A CI will allow migrants to travel freely in order to obtain necessary documents and ultimately apply for a Burmese Passport.

Last week, 37 migrant workers going back to Myanmar who held CIs were arrested in Mae Sot, Thailand because they could not show work permit documents. U Zaw Myo Htwe, an officer from Ministry of Labour, Immigration and Population in the CI centre helped the arrested to be freed.

“We requested Thailand immigration not to abolish their rights situation in Myanmar and give them temporary status as well. The events threaten our country’s security and existence. We could not yield in this matter for any reason,” he said.

There was an attempt by European Union to submit a resolution to United Nations Human Rights Council on this matter. We stated our position precisely on this matter. While making constructive engagements, we will not yield on matters relating to internal security and sovereignty. In addition, we will increase our engagement with countries that have understanding of us.

Questioned on whether there is any change on the inclusion of ex-officials in the appointment of ambassadors by the previous government, the Permanent Secretary U Kyaw Zeya said the appointment of ambassadors are decided by national level leaders. Appointment as ambassador is mainly dependent on their ability, the country’s interests, and improving relationship between the two countries.

On the question of human rights situation in Myanmar and the government’s authorizations, he said priority was given on the improvement and safeguarding of human rights by the new government. Success was achieved because the State Counselor and ambassadors work together hand-in-hand.

On the question of handling diplomatically the fightings in the northern region, he said there were some who seek refuge to neighboring country that cause some burden but we are regular ly engaged in this matter. Even though MOFA is not directly connected to the matter, there were instances of assisting the related ministries.

Answering questions on the challenges to the Ministry of Border Affairs first year performance, Permanent Secretary U Ye Naing said the ministry is satisfied with all the regional development works it had conducted. The challenge to the ministry is the long term maintenance of the achievements together with the people. Permanent Secretary U Hein Lwin replied to the questions on performance in the electric power and energy sector.

On the question of using Kyat 30 billion on lighting up Yangon, the Permanent Secretary said the fund was for a natural gas and diesel fueled generator that generated 25 megawatt. This is full partial fulfillment of the power requirement in Yangon. It is to help provide for the requirement shortage in the summer time. This generator was purchased under the arrangement of Yangon region government.

Regarding the question on tendering for offshore blocks in 2017, the Permanent Secretary said these blocks were tendered in 2013 and works are underway now. Depending upon the outcome of the geological surveys, tendering will be continued.

Regarding the lease of a power generating ship, the Permanent Secretary said this was intended to supplement the power shortages during the summer time. But due to many causes, it could not be done this year and will be considered again depending upon the situation of power distribution in the summer of 2018. On the matter of increasing electricity charge, the Permanent Secretary said the matter of production cost was reported. Production cost by hydropower is cheapest while production cost with natural gas is higher. Programs are being drawn to provide cheap electrical power to the grass root level people. Once it is drawn up, it will be submitted to the parliament.

About the rates applied for industrial products, the Permanent Secretary said different rates are used. Rates for the public are reduced as much as possible for the public to use while the rate for industries are at the level to recover production cost. Charging the same rate for both usages is not an international practice. For the sake of the public, we are taking time to calculate this.

National level committee was formed for the Myitsone hydropower project. Our ministry will also in November as well. The Permanent Secretary’s conclusion and inform the public about it. — Myanmar News Agency

Establishing community based drug treatment in Myanmar

Drug treatment capacities in Myanmar received a significant boost this week through the delivery of a new UNODC training package to strengthen access to community-based health services for people who use drugs.

The training of officials of the Myanmar Police Force, Ministry of Health and civil society partners follows a symposium held late last year between ASEAN countries and UNODC on the new approach to strengthen voluntary community-based health services throughout the region was announced.

Data collected from 7 countries in the region show that there are close to half a million people in treatment centers every year – and there is no evidence to suggest any clear treatment outcomes.

The training package addresses these gaps by supporting the roll-out of voluntary community based services in Myanmar and the region, being tailored to community context and gap assessment of a new national drug policy in Myanmar. This process has so far yielded a review of the drug law, and a first-of-its-kind improving process that has brought together various government agencies and civil society for in-depth discussions on policy direction.

“Even with limited resources we are committed to continuing to improve our delivery of treatment and care services,” said Dr. Myint Han, Director General of the Department of Medical Services, Ministry of Health and Sports. “Implementing voluntary outreach and patient-centered approaches is crucial to making this work. Public health and law enforcement agencies have a significant role to play to make sure our rollout of community treatment services is a success.”

The training is an important part of addressing gaps that we have identified in Myanmar based on the original Guidance for Community-Based Treatment and Care Services for People Affected by Drug Use and Dependence in Southeast Asia,” said Michael Cole, UNODC expert. “The package introduces community based treatment and care service concepts to those who have never before received practical training on such approaches – precisely what is needed in Myanmar at the moment.”

In practical terms the training will support accessible and quality drug treatment and rehabilitation services. It will deliver knowledge and skills to those who need it most – welfare, community care and outreach workers, and others working in communities.

“This training will result in more effective drug treatment and care, and contribute to the general well-being of the community,” said Colonel Zaw Lin Tun of the Central Committee for Drug Abuse Control (CCDAC) of the Myanmar Police Force. “We want to start referring drug users to health services and not put them in prison, where they do not have any support to stop drug use and other risky behavior.”

The training, and the wider regional strategy, are part of UNODC’s wider work in the region to move towards health-centric and evidence-based drug policies. The region continues to develop with the support of UNODC drug treatment through regional mechanisms, such as the Mekong MOU on Drug Control, to which Myanmar is also a signatory. — GNLM
France says priority in Syria remains UN resolution, peace talks

PARIS — France is still seeking a United Nations Security Council resolution on Syria, foreign minister Jean-Marc Ayrault said on Thursday, adding that diplomatic negotiations were a priority over possible military action.

A suspected chemical attack by government forces in Syria’s rebel-held Idlib province earlier this week, which killed at least 70 people, has sparked widespread criticism, including from US President Donald Trump.

Ayrault told CNESWS television that France was pursuing a UN resolution condemning the attack and trying to convince allies to back it, in spite of pushback from Russia.

“France is still seeking to talk with its partners on the Security Council, especially the permanent members, and Russia in particular,” Ayrault said.

He was more cautious on whether or not France, one of the main backers of the Syrian opposition to President Bashar al-Assad, would contemplate a military intervention if the United States decided to take action and ruled out stepping in for now.

Trump said on Wednesday that Assad’s government had “gone beyond a red line” with the poison attack on civilians, but did not detail how he might respond.

US ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley warned that countries “could be compelled to act.”

“The first stage is to get a resolution vote and above all to re-start peace negotiations in Geneva. It is not to go in ourselves, under the pretext that the US President may have a rush of blood to the head, and get onto a war footing,” Ayrault said, asked whether France would join any possible US military operation.

Ayrault added that the US response on Syria was still unclear, and that he was getting mixed messages from his counterpart, US Secretary of State Rex Tillerson, and Defence Secretary Jim Mattis.

“They’re not saying the same thing,” he said.

France has repeatedly said that Assad cannot be part of a credible solution on Syria as part of peace talks, and along with Britain renewed its call this week for the Syrian president to leave office.

“His crimes cannot remain unpunished. The day will come when international justice will have its say on Bashar al-Assad,” Ayrault said.

Venezuela’s opposition censures judges; 18 held after protests

CARACAS — Venezuela’s opposition lawmakers, some carrying injuries from this week’s protests, on Wednesday sought the dismissal of Supreme Court judges whom they accuse of propping up a socialist dictatorship.

Newly militant opposition leaders also announced another round of demonstrations against President Nicolas Maduro for Thursday, despite chaos and violence in Caracas on Tuesday that left 20 people dead and scores injured.

The opposition, which won control of the National Assembly in late 2015, accuses Maduro of wrecking the South American nation’s economy and squashing democracy.

Maduro says his foes are seeking a coup with the help of Washington and compliant foreign media.

The opposition’s main demand now is to bring forward the next presidential election scheduled for the end of 2018.

But there is no sign authoritarians will concede, analysts and diplomats say, unless foreign pressure ramps up considerably or Venezuela’s powerful military sways the equation.

The political drama is playing out against the backdrop of a deep economic crisis, with Venezuela suffering a fourth year of recession, widespread shortages of basic foods and medicines, the world’s worst inflation, and long lines at supermarkets.

Having been impeded from reaching the National Assembly on Tuesday, lawmakers headed for Caracas from dawn on Wednesday, some still nursing head wounds or bandaged arms from clashes in recent days.

“We are going to keep fighting for change, opposing repression and dictatorship,” lawmaker Juan Requesens, who had a gash on his head, said at 6:30 am while en route to the session.

Often at the forefront of provocative demonstrations, Requesens received more than 50 stitches after being hit by a stone when pro-government supporters confronted protesters at the public ombudsman’s office earlier this week.— Reuters

Assad tells paper he sees no ‘option except victory’ in Syria

DAMASCUS — Syrian President Bashar al-Assad said there is no “option except victory” in the country’s civil war in an interview published in a pro-government newspaper on Thursday, saying the government could not reach “reasonable solutions” with opposition groups that attended recent peace talks.

The interview, with Croatian newspaper Vecernji List appeared to have been conducted before US President Donald Trump accused Assad on Monday of carrying out a chemical weapons attack on the outskirts of Damascus.

Assad was not asked about the chemical attack in the northwestern Syrian town of Khan Sheikhoun, a text of the interview published by the Syrian state news agency SANA showed. The government has strongly denied any role.

More than six years into the Syrian conflict, Assad appears militarily unassailable in the areas of western Syria where he has shoved up his rule with decisive help from the Russian military and Iran-backed militias from across the region.

The interview published on Thursday underlined Assad’s confidence as he reiterated his goal of dealing a total defeat to the insurgency. He also reiterated his rejection of federalism sought by Kurdish groups in northern Syria.

“As I said a while ago, we have a great hope which is becoming greater; and this hope is built on confidence, for without confidence there wouldn’t be any hope. In any case, we do not have any other option except victory,” he said.

“If we do not win this war, it means that Syria will be deleted from the map. We have no choice in facing this war, and that’s why we are confident, we are persistent and we are determined,” he said.

More than 70 people, including at least 20 children, were killed in the chemical attack on Tuesday.

The Russian allies say the deaths were caused by a leak from an arms depot where rebels were making chemical weapons, after it was hit in a Syrian air strike. Rebels deny this.

Rebels have in recent weeks launched two of their boldest offensives in many months, attacking in Damascus and north of the government-held city of Hama. The army says both assaults have been repelled.— Reuters

 Israeli killed in Palestinian car ramming in West Bank

JERUSALEM — The Israeli army said a car driven by a Palestinian deliberately rammed into two Israelis, killing one and injuring the other, in the occupied West Bank on Thursday.

The driver was taken into custody after the incident near the Jewish settlement of Ofra, the army said in a statement. Witnesses told Israeli media that as he approached a bus stop, he accelerated and aimed the vehicle at two Israelis waiting there.

The death brings to 39 the number of Israelis killed in a wave of Palestinian street attacks, in which two American tourists also died, that began in October 2015.

At least 242 Palestinians have been killed in Israel and the Palestinian Territories over the past 18 months. Israel says at least 162 were Palestinians who launched stabbing, shooting or ramming attacks. Others died during clashes and protests.

Israel has accused the Palestinian leadership of inciting the violence. The Palestinian Authority, which exercises limited self-rule in the occupied West Bank, denies incitement and charges that in many cases, Israel has used excessive force in thwarting attackers armed with rudimentary weapons.

Photos from the scene of Thursday’s incident showed the driver, bound, blindfolded and guarded by a soldier, seated next to his damaged car, in the undergrowth behind the bus stop. The vehicle had Palestinian licence plates.

Big miners have trouble joining technology revolution

SANTIAGO/LONDON — Mining companies chasing the kind of technological breakthroughs made long ago in the manufacture of cars and mobile phones have veiled eye-catching innovations ranging from vast drills and remote-controlled trucks to second-by-second data analysis.

Behind the scenes, however, there has so far been limited progress towards a transformation the companies say is more and more vital to their survival.

They are being jolted into action by volatile commodity prices and the increasing difficulty and danger of accessing remaining reserves in hot, narrow seams several kilometers underground.

“There’s a big awakening in mining. The time is ripe for things to begin to change,” Anglo American’s head of technology development Donovan Waller said by telephone.

A major obstacle is the massive upfront cost for innovation that firms such as Anglo, BHP Billiton and Rio Tinto ´s Rio Tinto must pay off over the life of a mine in contrast to incremental upgrades common to mobile phones.

Sandvik, one of the world’s biggest suppliers of mining equipment, told Reuters it had doubled its installation of automation systems between 2015 and 2016.

But, asked what portion of the loaders and trucks it sells are fully automated, it gave an estimate of 5 percent.

While automation represents a potential threat to jobs the world over, it is particularly sensitive in an industry employing hundreds of thousands of blue-collar workers in nations where mining represents a major chunk of GDP.

Extreme environments and logistical barriers to transferring technology from other industries were other issues experienced by three big mining companies, in South Africa, Chile and Australia, which shed light on the complexity of the task.—Reuters

South Africa’s top court lifts ban on domestic sales in rhino horn

JOHANNESBURG — South Africa’s Constitutional Court has dismissed an appeal by the Department of Environmental Affairs to keep a moratorium on the domestic trade in rhino horn, according to court documents seen by Reuters on Wednesday.

The court decision meant that the sale of rhino horns was legal in South Africa.

“We welcome the Constitutional Court ruling, we believe it is a right we have been entitled to,” told Reuters. A global ban in the horn trade, which is regulated by a UN convention, remains in place, which means horns acquired legally in South Africa cannot be exported from the country.

In May last year, South Africa’s Supreme Court of Appeal dismissed the government’s bid to uphold a ban on the domestic trade in rhino horn put in place in 2009. The Constitutional Court was its last judicial option.

“This court ... has concluded that the application should be dismissed with costs as it lacks reasonable prospects of success,” the Constitutional Court said in a brief order. A spokeswoman for South Africa’s Department of Environmental Affairs said it would issue a statement shortly.

The court action was initiated by private rhino ranchers and other associations, who say they need to sell horn to afford spiralling security costs which include armed patrols, helicopters and electric fencing.

According to the latest figures from PROA, over 6,500 rhinos are in private hands in South Africa, over a third of the national population. Rhino horn can be harvested as it grows back and it can be removed from a tranquilized animal.— Reuters

Brazil’s Congress set to reject Temer’s pension reform

SAO PAULO — Brazil’s President Michel Temer’s landmark pension reform would not pass the Lower House of Congress at its stand, according to a survey of lawmakers published by newspaper Estado de Sao Paulo on Wednesday.

Not even a watered-down third version of the constitutional amendment, which is considered key for Brazil to plug a widening budget gap, would muster enough votes to clear the house, the daily said. The reform, submitted last year to Congress, sets a minimum age of retirement for both women and men of 65 years and demands more years on the job for workers to gain full pension benefits. Those points and others to limit benefits are criticized by lawmakers who face elections next year and are calling to ease some requirements that are already facing stiff resistance from unions and public servants.

Brazil’s pension system is one of the world’s most generous and expensive with many workers retiring in their early 50s with full benefits. A watered-down proposal would be rejected by 242 lawmakers with only 92 in favor, the survey shows. The amendment needs 308, or three-fifths of the house, to pass.

A special lower house committee is expected to vote on the proposal this month before it heads to the floor.— Reuters
Construction starts on world’s highest power transmission in Tibet

LHASA — Construction started Thursday on the world’s highest power transmission project in southwest China’s Tibet Autonomous Region.

The 16.2 billion yuan (2.35 billion US dollars) project includes the construction or upgrade of 16 110-kv substations and transmission lines, with a total length of 2,738 km. The average altitude is 3,750 meters, with the biggest altitude gap of 494 meters between two adjacent transmission towers.

The project also includes power supply facilities for the railway between Lhasa, the regional capital, and Nyingchi. The Lhasa-Nyingchi section of the Sichuan-Tibet railway began construction in December 2014.

Sheena Easton debuts at West End in ‘42nd Street’ musical

LOS ANGELES — Grammy award-winning artist Sheena Easton has made her West End debut in the musical “42nd Street”, with Britain’s Duchess of Cambridge Kate Middleton, actor Morgan Freeman and tennis coach Judy Murray attending the show’s premiere.

The musical follows a Broadway director named Julian Marsh as he attempts to put on a successful theatrical production in the middle of the Great Depression. Easton plays Peggy Marsh, one of the chorus line in the show, who takes over as the lead when the star actress breaks her ankle.

Produced by Johnny Hon and directed by Mark Bramble, “42nd Street” is famous for songs like “Dames”, “We’re In The Money” and “I Only Have Eyes For You”.

It is not the production’s first showing in London, having run in the West End from 1984 to 1989. A relatively unknown Catherine Zeta Jones performed in the chorus line in 1984. — Reuters

Trump defends Fox News host O’Reilly as ‘good person’

NEW YORK — US President Donald Trump on Wednesday defended TV anchor Bill O’Reilly after a report that the conservative commentator and his employer, 21st Century Fox, paid five women to settle claims of sexual harassment.

“O’Reilly, in a statement posted on his website on Saturday, said he had been unfairly targeted because of his prominence.

“I think he shouldn’t have settled; personally I think he shouldn’t have settled,” Trump told the Times on Wednesday. “Because you should have taken it all the way. I don’t think Bill did anything wrong.”

‘Your Name’ draws modern love film from ancient poem

LOS ANGELES — A thousand-year-old Japanese poem inspired filmmaker Makoto Shinkai to create “Your Name,” an animated story that weaves love and time travel into what he called a message of hope for Japanese millennials.

“Your Name” (Kimi No Na Wa) follows Mitsuha, a young girl fed up with living in an idyllic rural Japanese village, and Taki, a teenage boy in Tokyo. The two find themselves waking up randomly in each other’s bodies.

Shinkai, speaking in Japanese, told Reuters that he drew from poet Komachi’s words, written centuries ago in which she described meeting a lover in a dream and waking up feeling sad.

“It’s as if you could feel the love,” said the filmmaker behind 2013’s “The Garden of Words,” said he wanted to make a movie aimed at younger Japanese audiences in which “they can believe in their future.”

“I created this movie hoping that younger audiences would believe that ‘maybe there is the one for me in my lifetime. I might have not met yet but hopefully will see tomorrow or in the future,’” he said.

The juxtaposition of Mitsuha’s rural, traditional lifestyle with Taki’s modern city life was something Shinkai said he drew from his own life, growing up in a small village and later moving to Tokyo, a city that he said “feels like almost a different country” within Japan.

“I think it is one of the common themes for many Japanese people to choose where to live, Tokyo or their hometown,” he said.

Shinkai has been hailed as the successor to animator Hayao Miyazaki, the Studio Ghibli co-founder behind films such as “Howl’s Moving Castle” and “ Spirited Away.” But Shinkai said that while he was “honored and flattered” by the comparison, “people are overestimating me.”

“Miyazaki has a great talent, but I really struggle every time I create a new film and am far from Miyazaki,” he said.

“At the same time, I’m younger than him so I intend to make more animation films, which cannot be the same as his but created in a different way for my audience.” — Reuters

Ciaran Hinds to play Steppenwolf in ‘Justice League’

LONDON — “Game of Thrones” actor Ciaran Hinds has confirmed that he will play villain Steppenwolf in superhero team-up movie “Justice League”.

In an interview with The Independent, Hinds suggests that his performance as Lot in his 1981 movie “Excalibur” may help him get the role.

“They were great fans of ‘Excalibur’, Zack and his team,” says Hinds, addressing “Justice League” director Zack Snyder.

“Maybe that’s how I got the role (in ‘Justice League’)!” Who knows?”

Hinds reveals that he will play Steppenwolf through motion capture, which means that his character will be mostly computer-generated except for his eyes and mouth.

“Basically they’re going to construct something, digitally, and then they will use my eyes and mouth. He’s old, tired, still trying to get out of his own enslavement to Darkseid, but he has to keep on this line to try and take over worlds,” says Hinds.

In DC comics, Steppenwolf is a member of Darkseid’s elite.

He once leads an army to conquer the Earth in the name of Darkseid.

“Justice League” is scheduled to be released in US theatres on 17 November.

The movie will feature Ben Affleck as Batman, Henry Cavill as Superman, Gal Gadot as Wonder Woman, Ray Fisher as Cyborg, Amy Adams as Lois Lane, Ezra Miller as The Flash, Jesse Eisenberg as Lex Luthor and Willem Dafoe as Nudis Vulko. — PTI

New York’s Eleven Madison Park voted world’s best restaurant

MELBOURNE — New York’s Eleven Madison Park nabbed the top prize at the World’s 50 Best Restaurants on Wednesday, only the second non-European restaurant to win the gong.

The restaurant over-looking Madison Square Park was praised for its sense of fun in blending a creative tasting menu with gracious hospitality. It rose from third place last year, overtaking Italy’s Osteria Francescana and Spain’s El Celler de Can Roca.

“We get to help people celebrate some of the most important moments in their lives or give them the grace to forget something for a moment,” said owner Will Guidara on receiving the top gong with Swiss-born chef Daniel Humm.

The restaurant, where Humm’s prized dish is celery root cooked in a pig’s bladder, has just extended its lease for another 20 years and will close for three months for an overhaul.

“We’re about to embark on a completely new journey,” Guidara told reporters, calling the prize a fitting end to the first phase of Eleven Madison’s journey.

Since the inception of the award in 2002, California’s French Laundry is the only other non-European establishment to claim the top prize. It won in 2003 and 2004.

The top 10 included two Peruvian restaurants, Central, which slipped to no.5 from fourth place last year, and Maído which climbed to no. 8 from 13.

Peru is becoming a dining hot spot as the country has so many terrains at different altitudes for creative chefs to gather ingredients, one of the voters for the award, German food writer Christoph Teuner, told Reuters.

The only Asian restaurant in the top 10 was Bangkok’s Gaggan, where owner-chef Gaggan Anand has created a modern take on his native Indian cuisine by deconstructing favorites like samosas and tlaka masala.

Spain continued to dominate the list with three restaurants in the top 10, including Mugartz, while France had only one, the top 10 — Mirazur in the south-eastern town of Menton.

Rounding out the top 10 was Vienna’s Steirereck, housed in a glass cube, where freshwater mountain fish is cooked at the table in hot hewaneck.

The list was created by William Reed Business Media, and the gongs are now as coveted as Michelin stars.

Danish restaurant Noma, in the top 10 for nine successive years and winner of the award four-times, dropped out of the list as chef Rene Redzepi has closed the restaurant while moving it to a new venue in Copenhagen.

There are no criteria for putting a restaurant on the list, which is based on a poll of more than 1,000 chefs, food critics and other industry insiders spread across 26 regions. Each member gets 10 votes and at least four of those votes have to be for restaurants outside their region. —Reuters

NAGASAKI — A photo exhibition on a group of Japanese high school students seeking the abolition of nuclear weapons opened Thursday in Nagasaki.

The exhibition at the Nagasaki Atomic Bomb Museum will last until 23 April. Admission is free.

The student group was formed by civic groups in Nagasaki and Hiroshima in 1998 when India and Pakistan conducted nuclear tests.

The students traveled to the UN headquarters in New York for that year.

They have since visited the European headquarters of the United Nations in Geneva every August to deliver signatures for nuclear disarmament. Some 200 students have assumed the post of ambassador by last year.

Around 30 pictures are displayed at the museum including those showing the students collecting signatures in the street and their representative delivering a speech at the UN Conference on Disarmament in Geneva in 2014.

“Survivors of the atomic bombings (in Nagasaki and Hiroshima) will disappear someday,” Sakae Shimonura, an 82-year-old A-bomb survivor in Nagasaki, said at the opening of the exhibition. “I hope the (ambassadors) will continue to deliver messages on the cruelty of atomic bombs and wars in place of us.” —Kyodo News

Romé turns to cost-saving LED lighting but some residents unhappy

ROME — Rome is investing millions of euros in environmentally friendly, cost-saving LED street-lighting but some residents unhappy to lose the softer, golden glow of the historic centre. She said she was shocked to find the old

“This LED light is really bright, really blue, it feels softer, golden glow of the old sodium lamps,” Pitto, a Romer, told La Repubblica. “The light is real bright, really blue, it feels like a hospital light,” said Monica Larner, an American who lives in Rome’s historic centre. She said she was shocked to find the old bulbs replaced in her neighbourhood overnight, with no prior notice to residents.

The city’s electricity company Acea says the new lighting, which should be fully installed by the summer, will improve visibility and safety as well as saving money.

With an investment of about 50 million euros ($53.33 million) the town will save 260 million euros over the next 10 years, said the head of Acea’s public relations.

“With the conversion is carried out, the former, even if it is more aesthetically pleasing, will save 260 million euros over the next 10 years, said the head of Acea’s public relations.

Over the same period it will cut carbon dioxide production by 350,000 tonnes and reduce petrol consumption by 180,000 tonnes, Paolo Fioroni told Reuters.

“This is a great step forward in terms of technological advancement and energy efficiency,” he said. While the conversion is carried out, some central piazzas are now lit by old softer light bulbs, encased in romantic glass, and partly by the brighter LED glow.

Not all residents prefer the former, even if it is more aesthetically pleasing.

“I am more than happy. I find there is more light in this area and above all there is a real saving in energy level,” said shop owner Luca Candolo. “It was about time.” —Reuters

Stuffed menagerie, complete with lions, recovered from UK burglar

LONDON — A British burglar who stole 18 stuffed animals including lions, a giraffe and a snarling chimpanzee in a top hat and tie has received a suspended jail sentence, police said on Wednesday.

The loot, which also included a stuffed rhinoceros, a crocodile, a sloth, a zebra, a penguin and a pink flamingo, belonged to a licensed taxidermy company and was worth about £100,000 pounds ($124,850) in total, police said.

Jason Hopwood, 47, had pleaded guilty to burglary and fraudulent use of a registration plate. He was sentenced to 21 months in jail, suspended for two years, and ordered to do 200 hours of community service work.

The animals were stolen in March last year from a warehouse in Wimbledon, southwest London.

After receiving an anonymous tip-off, police found an abandoned van in Essex, east of London, with all 18 animals inside and sticky patches where fake number plates had been attached.

Hopwood was subsequently identified as the van’s owner.

“Cataloguing and exhuming the stolen items was a truly unique and memorable experience, and this is certainly an investigation which will stay with me for years to come,” said Detective Constable Stuart Goss of London’s Metropolitan Police. —Reuters
Aces wild as Kyrgios draws Isner in Davis Cup tie

BRISBANE — A barrage of aces can be expected in the second rubber of Australia's Davis Cup quarter-final against the United States in Brisbane after Nick Kyrgios was drawn to play John Isner in singles.

Australian Kyrgios, who has beaten Novak Djokovic twice and taken Roger Federer close over the last month on the back of some brilliant serving, is tied for third place with the tall American on the ATP leaderboard with 218 aces this season.

The clash between world number 16 Kyrgios and the 23rd ranked Isner will follow Jack Sock's first meeting with 22-year-old Australian Jordan Thompson on the hardcourt of the Pat Rafter Arena.

"I'm looking forward to getting back here and having some home support," said Kyrgios, who had to deal with a hostile crowd when he lost to Federer in Miami last week. "I feel comfortable playing second. I'll be out there for some of Thommo's match and I think it's a good match up with him against Sock.

Another Australian big server, Sam Groth, will team up with John Peers to take on Sam Querrey, who is no slouch in the service department, and Steve Johnson in Saturday's doubles before the reverse singles on Sunday.

The two countries have 60 Davis Cup titles between them but Australia have not won since they bagged their 28th crown in 2003, while the U.S. snared their 32nd a decade ago. Isner has a 2-1 record against Kyrgios after beating the 21-year-old in their first two meetings at the Canadian and Madrid Masters tournaments in 2015 before losing in two tight sets in last year.

"Right now, a lot of people could argue he's playing maybe the best tennis he's ever played," Isner said of Kyrgios.

"He [Kyrgios] goes to five sets I think it would make for a pretty cool atmosphere out there at the very least." In-form Sock, the highest ranked player in the tie at world number 15, will be going into the unknown all weekend as he has never previously faced Kyrgios either.

Thompson gets his chance to represent his country for a second time in the absence of Bernard Tomic, who declined to play the tie. Brazil top FIFA rankings for first time in seven years

ZURICH — Five-times world champions Brazil have returned to what they will consider their rightful place at the top of the FIFA rankings for the first time in seven years. Brazil have enjoyed a impressive revival since Tite replaced Dunga as their national team coach last year, winning nine matches they have played under his leadership including eight World Cup qualifiers.

They continued their run in March with a 4-1 win in Uruguay and 3-0 win over Paraguay to become the first side to book their place in next year’s World Cup in Russia with four games to spare.

Brazil, who replaced arch-rivals Argentina at the top, previously led the rankings going into the 2010 World Cup where they were eliminated by the Netherlands in the quarter-finals.

Since then, they have suffered a string of embarrassments, with elimination by Paraguay at successive Copa America tournaments in 2011 and 2015 and their infamous 7-1 loss to Germany in the 2014 World Cup semi-final. Argentina lost their place after last week’s 2-0 defeat in Bolivia which has left them struggling to qualify for the 2018 World Cup. Four of the top five teams in the rankings announcement by FIFA on Thursday, are from South America. Chile are fourth, Colombia fifth and Germany sandwiched in between in third.

Egypt are Africa’s best-placed team in 19th while Asia’s top side are 28th-placed Iran.

Kompany pleased with City display despite Chelsea defeat

LONDON — Manchester City captain Vincent Kompany believes his side put up a dominant display in their Premier League clash against leaders Chelsea despite losing 2-1 at Stamford Bridge on Wednesday.

Fourth-placed City controlled possession and had more shots on target than their opponents. However, a first-half brace from Eden Hazard helped Chelsea retain a seven-point lead at the top of the standings.

"Obviously, we are not happy but I can’t say I’m disappointed with the performance," Kompany told reporters. "We are disappointed we couldn’t win the game.

"Other than that, it was a good performance. Physically, we stood up to the challenge and we dominated the game.

"Kompany, who played 90 minutes in a league game for the first time in a year, said City were ready to fight for a top-four finish to qualify for Champions League next season.

"City will also face Arsenal in an FA Cup semi-final on April 23, which is their only hope for a silverware in manager Pep Guardiola’s first season at the club.

"Regarding our position, it will be a fight until the end for us," Kompany added.

Pacquiao to fight Australia’s Horn in July

BRISBANE — Filipino great Manny Pacquiao will defend his WBO welterweight title against unbeaten Australian Jeff Horn in Brisbane July after a bout with Amir Khan fell through, local media reported.

"We’re not able to fight Amir Khan because of Ramadan, so we decided to take this fight in the interim," Pacquiao’s adviser Michael Koncz said in comments published by News Corp media.

"We signed it, so yeah, we’re excited about it. But again, my preference was to fight Amir Khan. That didn’t work out. We had this on the table so we decided to take it.

"Eight-division world champion Pacquiao agreed to an April fight against Briton Khan in the United Arab Emirates but his promoter Bob Arum said last month it had been postponed after the $38 million offer for the bout failed to materialise.

The 2 July fight against Horn will be the 38-year-old Pacquiao’s first since his unanimous decision victory for the title over American Jessie Vargas in Las Vegas last November.

"Manny will train and do the best he can and hopefully we get the fight over with very quickly, we get out of there, we say ‘hi’ to the Australian fans and media and come home," Koncz said.

"Frankly and honestly, and maybe a bit unfair, Jeff Horn — I’ve never met the kid. I don’t know him personally — but the name recognition is I guess why the fans picked Amir Khan." — Reuters
