UN FAO supports flood-affected Magway

THE UN’s Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) has collaborated with Myanmar’s Heart Development Organization (MHDIO) Livestock Breeding and Veterinary Department (LBVD) and the Department of Agriculture (DoA) in providing emergency support to around 23,000 people affected by the 2016 floods in Magway Region. The FAO-led project is funded by the United Nations Central Emergency Response Fund (CERF) that allocated US$ 1 million in September 2016.

“Timely funding from UN CERF permitted to provide farmers with necessary means without which they would not be able to recover fast after the disaster,” said FAO Representative Ms Xiaojie Fan. “This agricultural and livestock distribution had an enormous positive impact on rural populations affected by the 2016 floods, because it contributed to maintain food security at household level and avoid further risks of malnutrition.”

Support came in the form of 30 kg of tanker to 2,800 farmers, enough for one acre of land, vegetable kits consisting of onion, tomato, yard long and bitter gourd seeds, and 45 kg of fertilizers while 3,000 landless people were provided with two piglets and pig feed per household. Last year’s flood particularly affected the agriculture sector since the rising waters damaged many farmlands just before harvesting season.

“In the aftermath of crisis, when people are in need of immediate life-saving support, even short delays can cause detrimental implications for their lives and livelihoods. Designing accurate emergency interventions require detailed assessments that help to estimate damages of floods in the agriculture sector,” said FAO Senior Resilience Officer Mr Andrea Berloff.

FAO utilized drones to gather reliable information after a project with the Department of Agriculture in the Philippines gave inspiration, while also increasing understanding of hazard impacts.

“FAO goes beyond traditional ways of working and in collaboration with the Myanmar Aerospace Engineering University (MAEU), applies new and cost-efficient technologies, such as drones, that allow for increased availability of timely and reliable data as a crucial component to augment efficiency and accuracy of emergency support,” said Mr. Andrea Berloff. UN CERF remains among key donors for the FAO emergency interventions in Myanmar, having contributed a total of US$ 3 million last year.—GNLM

Nepali PM urges Madhes-based parties to participate in local elections

KATHMANDU — Nepali Prime Minister Pushpa Kamal Dahal on Friday urged Madhes-based political parties to participate in the local elections on 14 May. The prime minister’s call came a week after the parties’ announcement of launching nationwide protests to disrupt the local elections.

Dahal said during his meeting with the agitating party leaders that the constitutional amendments submitted to the parliament will be approved in due course.

The meeting between the prime minister and Madhes-based parties was held at the prime minister’s office in Baluwatar in the capital which was also attended by ruling party leaders.

During the meeting, the six Madhes-based parties have reiterated that amendments to the constitution should be made prior to elections. The Madhes-based parties, which represent Nepal’s southern belt bordering India, announced their unification and the launch of a new group called Rashtriya Jana Party on Thursday.

The Nepali government has registered a new constitution amendment bill at the parliament last week in a bid to address demands of disgruntled Madhes-based parties.

However, the parties have rejected to join the local body elections, saying the constitutional amendment bill does not meet their demands.

The bill stated that changes in federal boundaries, a key demand of the Madhes-based parties, will be determined by a federal restructure commission to be formed by the government in future.

The Madhes-based parties also demand more political representation at the provincial and upper house and re-demarcation of provincial boundaries.

Front-runner Moon widens lead in South Korea’s 9 May presidential race

SEOUL — Moon Jae In, the front-runner in South Korea’s presidential race, has widened his lead over second-place Ahn Cheol Soo ahead of the 9 May presidential election, according to an opinion poll released by Gallup Korea on Friday.

Moon, of the Democratic Party of Korea, which holds the most seats in parliament, received 43 per cent support, up 1 per centage point from last week, while Ahn of the People’s Party, the country’s third-largest party, saw his approval rating plummet 7 points to 30 per cent.

“It appears some of Ahn’s supporters have reversed their stance in the wake of the vetting process and negative campaigns that have been intensified after official campaigning start- ed” on Monday, according to the pollist.

In recent opinion polls, Ahn, a 55-year-old former medical doctor and anti-virus software developer, has emerged as a major contender to Moon, a 64-year-old former human rights lawyer and close aide to former President Roh Moo Hyun.

Hong Joon Pyo of the conservative Liberty Korea Party, Sim Sang Jeung of the progressive Justice Party and Yoo Seong Min of the splinter conservative Bareun Party were trailing far behind in the poll.

The presidential election is heavily tilted toward candidates from liberal parties in the wake of the corruption and abuse-of-power scandal that brought down President Park Geun Hye.

Park, impeached by parliament in December and put behind bars late last month, stands accused of letting her now-jailed confidante Choi Soon Sil, a private citizen, meddle in state affairs while colluding to extort donations from businesses for two foundations under Choi’s effective control. She had one year left in her five-year term when ousted from office in March.

The poll was conducted Tuesday through Thursday on 1,004 voters nationwide.

South Korea’s presidential race is taking place amid rising tensions, as North Korea continues to defy UN resolutions with ballistic missile launches and is showing signs of possibly conducting what would be its sixth nuclear test.

CANBERRA — A new ocean debris drift analysis shows missing Malaysia Airlines Flight MH370 is most likely within a proposed expanded search area rejected by Australia and Malaysia in January, the Australian government’s scientific agency said on Friday.

A $200 million (£117.67 million) search for the aircraft, which went missing in 2014 with 239 people onboard, was suspended when the two nations rejected a recommendation to search north of the 120,000 sq km (46,000 sq mile) area already canvassed, saying the new area was too vast and was too far to reach.

The new debris drift analysis suggests the missing Boeing 777 may be located in a much smaller 25,000 sq km (9,652 sq mile) zone within that proposed northern search area.

“This new work leaves us more confident in our findings,” Dr David Grif-fin, a principal research scientist at the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organisation (CSIRO) said in a statement.

The CSIRO report featured data and analysis from ocean testing of an actual Boeing 777 flaperon cut down to match the one from MH370 found on Reunion island off the coast of Africa in 2015, rather than the wood and steel models used in a previous test.

The location of MH370, which went missing on a flight to Beijing from the Malaysian capital of Kuala Lumpur, has become one of the world’s greatest aviation mysteries.

Australian Minister for Infrastructure and Transport Darren Chester said he welcomed the new CSIRO report but said it was important to note it did not provide new evidence leading to a specific location of MH370.

He said a copy of the report had been provided to Malaysia for consideration in its ongoing investigation into the disappearance of the aircraft.

“Malaysia is the lead investigator and any future requests in relation to searching for MH370 would be considered by Australia, at that time,” Chester said.

Singapore researchers turn water into ‘virtual lemonade’ but is it tart enough?

SINGAPORE — It looks like lemonade, tastes like lemonade, but it’s simply water. Researchers in Singapore say they have invented a “virtual lemonade”, using electrodes to mimic the flavour of the beverage and LED lights to imitate its colour, that could one day allow people to digitally share drinks over the internet.

“We are primarily motivated by the fact that our current digital interactions are not supportive for sharing beverages and food, which is something very common in our everyday lives,” said Nimesha Ranasinghe, who led the team that did the research.

The team conducting the research at the NUS-Keio CUTe Centre, a collaboration between the National University of Singapore and Japan’s Keio University, decided to focus on the sour taste of lemonade to prove their idea.

A sensor dipped into a glass of real lemonade collects data on its acidity and colour, which is transmitted via Bluetooth to silver electrode strips on the rim of a tumbler. The action of a drinker running their tongue over the strip in taking a sip causes the electrodes to simulate the sour taste, while a light-emitting diode (LED) flashes yellow.

The technology can also simulate bitter and salty sensations, Ranasinghe said, adding that it could help people on restricted diets who need to cut back on salt or calories.

“We can even help the people who want to cut down their calorie intake,” she added. “If he craves lemonade, and can have a virtual lemonade, he can get the same experience, but zero calories.”

Still, the design needs some improvement, said student Ge-nevieve Low, a volunteer who participated in tests of the drink. “I think it’s definitely the way the tongue touches the cup, because no one would, sub-consciously or consciously, put their tongue onto the electrode and then drink the water,” she said in a recent test round.

Another volunteer student, Wang Pan, was surprised by the taste. “I was imagining the electronic taste, but it’s actually quite real to me because it’s really mild, like mild-sweet. It’s less sour than the real lemonade,” she said.— Reuters

Damages suit dismissed over tsunami deaths at disaster-use facility

MORIOKA, (Japan) — A court on Friday dismissed a damages suit filed by the families of two women who were killed in the March 2011 tsunami that ravaged northeastern Japan after fleeing to a disaster-use facility where tsunami drills had been held before.

The Morioka District Court brushed aside the families’ claim that the city of Kamaishi failed to evacuate residents to a disaster-use facility when the waves hit the city. The court said the city did not mislead residents to understand that the facility was a designated evacuation site, as it had notified residents of the names and locations of real tsunami evacuation spots prior to the disaster.

During the trial, the plaintiffs claimed that the city had used the facility for drills despite tsunami having reached the area in the past, and did not make sure residents understood that it was not the right place to go in the event of tsunami.

The court said the city did not mislead residents to understand that the facility was a designated evacuation site, as it had notified residents of the names and locations of real tsunami evacuation spots prior to the disaster.

Out-of-court settlements were reached in two other cases after initial rulings in favour of the plaintiffs, with administrators agreeing to apologize or pay settlement money. There were also five lawsuits that were settled at courts of first instance.

The court said the city did not mislead residents to understand that the facility was a designated evacuation site, as it had notified residents of the names and locations of real tsunami evacuation spots prior to the disaster.

Global communities need to work together to fight global warming

Aye Min Soe

The people of Myanmar have been struggling to adapt to a warmer climate that is largely due to global warming. Currently, climate change is winning and the people of Myanmar are losing.

The consequences of climate change are unavoidable. However, we can carry out preventive measures and improve preparedness to reduce the impact of natural disasters. It is necessary not only to build infrastructure but also to conserve natural resources such as mangrove forests, coastal reefs and coral reefs.

The destructive results of climate change demand that Myanmar invest heavily in dealing with it to be able to adapt to these changes as the country’s people continue to experience adverse effects, which are getting worse and worse every year.

Experts have warned that warmer ocean temperatures could also increase the destructive potential of cyclones and storm surges, to which the country’s coastal areas are already prone.

The Myanmar coastal region is 2,832 kilometers long, abounding with important natural ecosystems in the environs of Indian Ocean. The country’s ecosystems in the coastal regions include mangrove forests, coastal reefs and marine grass, which support marine life and the environment.

If we do nothing, the natural resources of the coastal area in Myanmar will continue to be exploited. Systematic protection of the coastal areas will be helpful to the development of marine life as well as the socio-economic life of the people and protection from natural disasters.

During the past decades, mangrove forests, coastal reefs and marine grasslands have been destroyed, according to the study.

With a large investment, the extensive natural resources of Myanmar can be carefully managed and maintained so that future generations can enjoy their benefits.

But the country has very limited capacity in terms of human resources, institutions, finance and technology.

To fight climate change, the global community is urged to cooperate with Myanmar in tackling the challenges.

Petrified rocks should be protected

Khin Maung Myint

For decades our country had been preyed upon and exploited by the greedy businesspersons from within and without. Almost anything is being smuggled out of the country. Among the many things that are being smuggled out, but not much attention or interest given to, are the petrified woods or rocks (Ingyin Kyauk). The petrified woods or rocks, mostly silicates of quartz, onto which petro means wood transformed into stones or rocks, while still retaining the original structure of the plant tissues and their general appearances. Sometimes Opal stones, a type of precious gem, are found embedded in the petrified woods. Some petrified woods were dated as old as approximately 230 million years.

Such woods or rocks are abundantly found in the Nahtogyi township in the Mandalay Region, where a lucrative trade in them had been going on for decades.

NEW YORK/WASHINGTON — The administration of US President Donald Trump is debating whether to rescind the waivers that have allowed tens of thousands of terror victims to immigrate to the United States in the past decade, including 6,700 Myanmar nationals.

The possible change stems from the concerns of immigration hard-liners who believe the exemptions could allow terrorists to slip into the country. Refugees from Myanmar are the largest single group of beneficiaries to date of the exemptions granted by USCIS known.

When Raj, a Sri Lankan fisherman, sought refuge in the United States in 2005, he had precisely the kind of fear of returning home that US asylum laws require.

In 2004, he was kidnapped by the separatist rebel group the Tamil Tigers and had to pay U$500 to secure his release, according to Raj, his lawyer and court records reviewed by Reuters. The group then demanded more money, which he could not pay after a tsunami destroyed his house and fishing boat.

Raj, 42, who asked that only his first name be used because of the sensitive nature of his situation, decided to flee. He boarded a plane using a false Canadian passport and requested asylum upon arriving in the United States.

There was a catch, however. US laws ban immigration by anyone who has provided “material support” to terrorists, and the Tamil Tigers are designated as a terrorist group by the United States.

A judge ruled that Raj’s ransom payment to them constituted material support.

Ultimately, Raj was granted asylum in 2011 because of rules that allow for waivers for people who provided aid to terrorists under duress. He now lives in San Diego, California, works in an Indian restaurant and hopes to become a citizen.

Raj said it was “a big relief” when he finally received his green card around a year after receiving asylum. “I am not a terrorist,” he said.

But now, Trump directed the secretaries of State and Homeland Security, in consultation with the attorney general, to consider abolishing the waivers in an executive order in March. That directive was overshadowed by the same order’s temporary ban on all refugees and other immigra- tion-related Inadmissibility Grounds.

Those changes ensured people like Raj who were coerced or inadvertently provided support to terrorists, as well as members of persecuted ethnic groups that supported rebel organisations, and even US-allied groups fighting against authoritarian regimes.

Without an exemption, members of Kurdish groups that battled Saddam Hussein’s forces in Iraq, Hmong groups who fought alongside US troops in Vietnam, or some Cubans who fought Fidel Castro’s regime would not be allowed to immigrate to the United States.

Under the exemptions, US authorities have the discretion to grant people residency in the United States after they have passed background checks and are found to pose no threat to national security. Congress initially passed waivers “is another example of a non-existent problem,” said Eric Schwartz, who served in the State Department during the Obama administration.

Schwartz and immigration advocates say the waivers are granted after a thorough review and are extremely difficult to get. “These are case-by-case exemptions for people who represent no threat to the United States but rather have been caught in the most unfortunate of circumstances,” said Schwartz.

For Raj, the initial ruling that his ransom payment supported a terrorist group led to more than two years in US immigration detention, followed by more years of electronic monitoring. His waiver allowed him to bring his wife to the United States after two years apart. She now studies nursing — Reuters

New transformers installed in Mandalay District

NEW transformers were installed in the water supply system of Mandalay District starting from the second week of April, according to the Mandalay Electricity Supply Corporation.

“New transformers were installed to provide enough power supply to the public in the coming years. Mandalay Electricity Supply Corporation performs constantly for the public to receive enough electricity”, said U Aye Kyaw, Electrical Manager of Mandalay District.

Mandalay Electricity Supply Corporation will provide electricity to the villages, Patheingyi Township, northern Mandalay with no electricity as the electricity became fully loaded at 100/2MVA and 203/11KV transformers in power station.

“Electricity in Mandalay has been supplied more than in previous years. Power supply also has been sufficient and regular. But power usually goes out when it is windy or raining. It shouldn’t be happening,” said Mr U Soe, a resident of Mandalay.

Inadmissibility exemptions

The US Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) granted 21,659 exemptions to the Terrorism-Related Inadmissibility Grounds (TRIG) from 2006 through September 30, 2016, according to the latest data available.

President Donald Trump signed an executive order asking government agencies to consider the rescission of the exemptions.

take no threat to national security. Congress initially passed waivers to the terrorism bars in 2007 with bipartisan support, and in the years that followed both the Bush and Obama administrations added additional groups and circumstances to the exemptions.

PHANTOM PROBLEM

US Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) has granted nearly 22,000 Terrorism-related Inadmissibility Grounds (TRIG) exemptions in total over the last decade, according to the latest data available, which goes through September 2016. The Department of Homeland Security, in consultation with the secretaries of State and Homeland Security, grants TRIG exemptions, but a spokesperson could not provide data on how many.

Refugees from Myanmar are the largest single group of beneficiaries to date of TRIG exemptions granted by USCIS, with more than 6,700 waivers.

The wave of Myanmar refugees dates to 2006, when USC Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice ruled that thousands of members of the Karen ethnic group, then fighting for independence, could resettle in the United States, even if they had supported the political wing of an armed group that had fought the country’s military regime.

One high-profile supporter of scrapping the waivers is House of Representatives Judiciary Committee Chairman Bob Goodlatte, a Republican from Virginia whose staffers were instrumental in drafting Trump’s travel ban. Goodlatte told Reuters he was “pleased that the Trump Administration is reviewing the dangerous policy.”

“Personally don’t think that a bureaucrat should be deciding how much support for terrorism is enough to ban someone,” said Goodlatte.

A USCIS spokesperson, when asked if a recipient of an exemption had ever been involved in a terrorism-related case after arriving in the United States, referred Reuters to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which said it was a question for the State Department to answer. “I don’t know of any cases where beneficiaries of exemptions have gotten into trouble after arriving,” the State Department official said, noting that the department does not typically track people after they arrive in the United States.

Trump’s order to review the waivers “is another example of an attempt to address a non-existent problem,” said Eric Schwartz, who served in the State Department during the Obama administration.

Schwartz and immigration advocates say the waivers are granted after a thorough review and are extremely difficult to get. “These are case-by-case exemptions for people who represent no threat to the United States but rather have been caught in the most unfortunate of circumstances,” said Schwartz.

The incident occurred at about 9:30 pm in Calabar, the Cross River State capital, while a Europa Football League match between Manchester United and Anderlecht was being televised, a police spokeswoman Irene Ugbo said.

BEIJING — China said it believes the Venezuelan people can protect the country’s stability and economic development following casualties caused by nationwide protests in the Latin American country on Wednesday.

China is aware the Venezuelan government hopes to resume talks with the opposition, Foreign Ministry spokesman Lu Kang said at a daily press briefing.

“As a friend of Venezuela, China sincerely hopes and believes that the Venezuelan people can properly handle their domestic affairs,” Lu said.

US defence secretary says Syria dispersed warplanes, retains chemical weapons
TEL AVIV — US Defence Secretary Jim Mattis said on Friday that Syria had dispersed its warplanes in recent days and retained chemical weapons, an issue that would have to be taken up diplomatically.

The United States launched dozens of missiles earlier this month against a Syrian airbase in response to a chemical attack that killed 90 people, including 30 children. It says the Syrian government launched the attack from the Shayrat airbase.

The Pentagon has said that the strike had damaged or destroyed about 20 per cent of the Syrian military’s operational aircraft. During a press conference alongside his Israeli counterpart, Mattis said it was not clear whether the Syrian military had moved warplanes to a Russian base in Latakia.

“They have dispersed their aircraft, no doubt. They have dispersed their aircraft in recent days,” Mattis said.

Mattis also reiterated that the United States believed Syria had retained some chemical weapons.

“The bottom line is, I can say authoritatively they have retained some (chemical weapons). It’s a violation of the United Nations Security Council resolutions, and it’s going to have to be taken up diplomatically,” Mattis said. Israel’s military said on Wednesday it believes Syrian President Bashar al-Assad’s forces still possess several tonnes of chemical weapons.

In a 2013 agreement brokered by Russia and the United States, Syria agreed to destroy its chemical weapons.

France mobilised for election security after Paris attack
PARIS — France said its security forces were fully mobilised for a presidential election at the weekend after the killing of a policeman by an Islamist militant threw a dark shadow over the last day of an unpredictable campaign.

With the first round of voting in the two-stage election due to take place on Sunday, centrist Emmanuel Macron still held on to his position as frontrunner in the closely contested race.

An Elvis-style secret voter intentions, carried out before the Thursday night shooting on the Champs Elysees shopping avenue in central Paris, showed Macron with 24 per cent of the first-round vote and far right leader Marine Le Pen falling back slightly to 21.5 per cent.

Two other candidates — a former conservative prime minister Francois Fillon and the far left’s Jean-Luc Melanchon — were snatching at their heels with 20 and 19.5 per cent respectively. Campaigning and the publication of voter surveys are banned from midnight on Friday until polling stations close. Sunday’s round of voting will be followed by a second-round runoff on 7 May between the top two candidates.

The Champs Elysees attack was claimed by militant group Islamic State. One attacker was killed and officials said they were looking for a potential second suspect.

Emerging from an emergency meeting of security officials, Prime Minister Bernard Cazeneuve announced a full mobilisation of security forces, including elite units, to back up 50,000 police already earmarked to ensure citizens’ safety during the election.

“The government is fully mobilised. Nothing must be allowed to impede the fundamental democratic process of our country,” Cazeneuve told reporters. “It falls to us not to give in to fear and intimidation and manipulation which would play into the hands of the enemy.”

The shooting abruptly pushed national security up the agenda, potentially making the outcome of Sunday’s first round vote even more difficult to call. With their hardline view on security and immigration, the positions of Le Pen and Fillon may resonate more strongly for some voters.

But attacks that have taken place soon before elections, including the November 2015 attacks in Paris ahead of regional elections and the shooting in a Jewish school before the 2012 presidential, have not appeared to change the course of those ballots.

An assault on a soldier in February at the Paris Louvre museum by a man wielding a machete also had no obvious impact on this year’s opinion polls, which have consistently said that voters see unemployment and trustworthiness of politicians as bigger issues. —Reuters

Libya’s stability is priority, says UN envoy
TRIPOLI — The UN special envoy to Libya said restoring security and stability in the war-torn country will be the priority when he travels to Tripoli next week.

Serry told the Puntimes hotline the UN envoy to Libya meeting on Friday in Tripoli with the prime minister and other officials was an important step.

“The main priority for the Security Council is that the political process in Libya is not stopped,” Serry said. “The UN envoy is a very good example of the United Nations and the Security Council’s commitment to security and stability and we will ensure that the Security Council fully supports him.”

The envoy will visit Tripoli on Wednesday and will meet with Prime Minister Fayez al-Sarraj and Saad al-Megri, deputy chairman of the General National Congress.

Serry will also meet with the UN envoy to Libya, Martin Kobler, before leaving for Rome on Wednesday to brief the UN Security Council about the talks between the two sides.

Syria’s air force is dispersed, retains chemical weapons
The United States on Wednesday launched an air strike on a Syrian air base in response to a chemical attack that killed 90 people, including 30 children.

It said the strike was a response to Syria’s use of chemical weapons against civilians.

The US military said that it has identified a “chemical-related signature” in the attack, which killed the pilot of the Syrian warplane that carried out the strike.

It also said the attack was carried out by a second-round runoff on 20 and 19.5 per cent respectively. Campaigning and the publication of voter surveys are banned from midnight on Friday until polling stations close. Syria evacuations of besieged towns continue after two-day halt — monitor, state media

BEIRUT — The evacuation of Syrian civilians and fighters from four besieged towns, part of a swap deal between the warring sides, resumed on Friday after a 48-hour halt, state media and a monitoring group said.

Five buses carrying rebels and their relatives from towns near the capital left a transit point outside Aleppo city where they had been waiting to cross into rebel territory, the state-owned news channel Ikhbariyah said.

Meanwhile, tens of loads of people from the rebel-encircled Shi’ite towns of al-Foua and Kefraya arrived in Aleppo city, which is under government control, al-Ikhbariyah said.

Thousands of evacuees from the two Shi’ite towns have been stranded for two days at a second nearby staging area outside Aleppo, where a bomb attack on an evacuation convoy last week killed scores of people.

The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said the 48-hour suspension was due to rebel demands for the government to free 750 prisoners as part of the agreement.

The Britain-based war monitor confirmed the resumption on Friday morning of evacuations under the reciprocal deal, but said it remained unclear if authorities had released the prisoners.

Under the deal, thousands of Sunni rebels and civilians have been moved out of Zabadani and Madaya, which have long been under siege by pro-government forces. They departed for rebel-held Idlib, bringing the two towns near Damascus under state control.

In exchange, thousands of civilians and pro-government fighters were moved out of al-Foua and Kefraya, besieged by insurgent groups in Idlib in northwest Syria.

On Saturday, a bomb blast hit a convoy carrying evacuees from al-Foua and Kefraya killing at least 126 people, including more than 60 children, who were waiting on Aleppo’s outskirts.

Suspect in German soccer bus attack wanted to profit on stocks

FRANKFURT — German police arrested a man on Friday suspected of detonating three bombs that targeted the Borussia Dortmund soccer team bus in the hope of sending the club’s shares plummeting and making a profit on an investment, prosecutors said.

In a statement, the federal chief prosecutor said the 28-year-old man, a dual German and Russian national identified as Sergei V., had bought options on Borussia Dortmund’s stock (BVB.DE) before the attack.

The team bus was heading to the club’s stadium for a Champions League match against AS Monaco on 11 April when the explosions went off, wounding Spanish defender Marc Bartra and delaying the match by a day.

Prosecutors last week expressed doubts about the authenticity of three letters left at the site of the attack that suggested that Islamist militants had carried it out.

The prosecutor’s office said the suspect had bought 15,000 put options, or contracts giving him the right to sell Borussia Dortmund’s shares at a pre-determined price, on the day of the attack, using a consumer loan he had signed a week earlier.

“If the shares of Borussia Dortmund had fallen massively, the profit would have been several hundred thousand,” the prosecutor’s office said.

The serious injury or death of any of the soccer players could have resulted in such a slump, it said.

Shares in BVB (BVB.DE) rose 1.8 per cent on 12 April, the day after the attack, and are up about 2 per cent so far this year.

Police detained the suspect in the city of Tuebingen in the south-western state of Baden-Wuerttemberg. He faces charges of attempted murder, inflicting serious bodily harm and causing an explosion, the prosecutor’s office said.

In March, the suspect booked a room for 9-13 April in the same hotel where the Dortmund team players were staying for their home game against Monaco AS.

Prosecutors said the suspect had bought the Dortmund shares on the day of the attack using the IP address of an Arrive hotel, some 7 kilometres south of Dortmund’s stadium.

The chief prosecutor will hold a news conference on the arrest at 12:30 pm (1030 GMT).

Security is a hot issue in campaigning for Germany’s federal election on 24 September, in which Chancellor Angela Merkel is seeking a fourth term.

In December, a Tunisian man killed 12 people when he ploughed a truck through a Berlin Christmas market, one of a spate of Islamist militant attacks across France, Belgium and Germany in the past two years.

Last year, Merkel lost support to the anti-immigration Alternative for Germany (AfD) party after opening the country’s doors to more than a million migrants. The AfD has since seen its ratings fall while Merkel has regained some ground.—Reuters

Six qualify to run in Iran presidential election, Ahmadinejad rejected

TEHRAN — Iran’s Guardian Council announced six candidates “qualified” to run in the 19 May presidential election, including incumbent President Hassan Rouhani, while former President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad’s candidacy was rejected, local media reported Friday.

In addition to Rouhani, First Vice President Eshaq Jahangiri, Tehran Mayor Mohammad Bagher Ghalibaf and former Attorney General Seyed Ebrahim Raisi are among the most famous of the six approved candidates.

Although more than 1,600 Iranians, including politicians, actors and ordinary citizens, were registered as candidates for the election, the Guardian Council — the sole authority for approving or rejecting candidacies — has already asked famous faces with distinguished executive records to submit their names and said others are not likely to qualify.

Ahmadinejad was advised by Supreme Leader Ayatollah Seyed Ali Khamenei to refrain from participating in the election, but he surprised everyone by announcing his candidacy on 12 April.

The former president had also said he would use his power to gain qualification for close aide Hamid Baghaei, but his candidacy too was rejected by the council.

Although rejected candidates will have four days to appeal the council’s decision, the overturning of a rejected application is unprecedented.—Kyodo News

Sudan, Egypt agree to leave Halayeb dispute to presidential meetings

KHARTOUM — Sudan and Egypt on Thursday agreed to leave their dispute over Halayeb area to be discussed at presidential-level meetings.

“We have agreed to discuss Halayeb issue in meetings of the two countries’ presidents and to leave the consultations at the leadership level,” said Sudanese Foreign Minister Ibrahim Ghanour at a joint press conference with his Egyptian counterpart Sameh Shoukry.

He added that the two sides also discussed the issue of armed movements and agreed that both should completely avoid supporting any opposition in the two countries.

For his part, Sameh Shoukry said “Halayeb issue is of the powers of the two countries’ leadership. There is understanding between the two presidents on what must be done.”

Meanwhile, a statement by Sudan’s Foreign Ministry regarding the joint political consultation committee meetings said “both sides stressed the depth of the historical relations between the two countries and agreed to continue exchanging support and coordination at all levels regionally and internationally.”—Xinhua
WASHINGTON — Finance chiefs from the Group of 20 major economies on Thursday reaffirmed a G-20 commitment to orderly currency movements as a way to promote world economic growth and ensure stability in financial markets, according to Japanese Finance Minister Taro Aso.

Speaking to reporters ahead of the G-20 meeting, Bank of Japan Governor Haruhiko Kuroda declined comment on Trump’s recent claim that the dollar “is getting too strong.”

Kuroda said the BOJ’s ultra-easy monetary policy is aimed at achieving a 2 per cent inflation target, not lowering the value of the yen against the dollar and other currencies.

“The Japanese economy is steadily recovering and on an expansionary trend,” he said. “Momentum for a price increase is continuing but not strong enough. The BOJ will firmly continue its monetary easing so as to achieve the 2 per cent target as early as possible.

The series of financial meetings in Washington came as uncertainties persist such as heightened tensions over North Korea’s aggressive development of nuclear weapons and ballistic missiles and Syria’s use of chemical weapons, as well as rising protectionism in some developed countries.

Citing a potential clash between the United States and North Korea and a possible advance by a far-right candidate in the French presidential election which begins Sunday, a senior Japanese Finance Ministry official said he is closely watching such risk factors because they “could have a major impact on financial markets.”

Aside from Trump’s “America First” mantra, protectionist sentiment appears prevalent in Europe. Marine Le Pen, leader of France’s National Front who opposes immigration and pledges to withdraw France from the European Union, is a major contender in the presidential race.

Aso said he told the G-20 meeting that free trade will further bolster the current economic recovery, and that countries should not take action that would run counter to free trade a message apparently directed to the Trump administration and some other advanced economies.

Last week, IMF Managing Director Christine Lagarde, a former French finance minister, cautioned of a “sword of protectionism” that she said threatens to put a damper on the global economy’s ability to expand.

Other risks to the world economy include faster-than-expected US interest rate increases, which could affect some developing economies by triggering an outflow of capital and investment, as well as China’s reliance on excessively rapid credit expansion for growth, according to the IMF.

US and Japanese delegation members said they do not expect the G-20 financial leaders to issue a communiqué after the meeting, noting that they just did so at their 17-18 March gathering in Baden-Baden, Germany.

The G-20 groups Argentinia, Australia, Brazil, Britain, Canada, China, France, Germany, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Russia, Saudi Arabia, South Africa, South Korea, Turkey, the United States and the European Union.

G-20 reaffirms commitment on orderly currency movements

Finland likely to quit euro in coming decades, lawmaker says

HELSINKI — Finland’s exit from the euro zone is possible and even likely in the future, eurocopic lawmaker Sampo Terho, the front-runner in a race to lead the co-ruling Finns party, said on Friday.

With his comments, Terho moved closer to his nearest rival, the hard-liner Jussi Halla-aho — a sign of challenges ahead for the country’s unpopular triple-party government. Terho kicked off his party leadership campaign on Friday, telling a press conference that it was hard for Finland to keep its exports competitive because of its euro membership. “The only way to sustain our competitiveness is internal devaluation, which we carried out,” he said, referring to a hard-focus on boosting the local currency that sparked anti-government demonstrations and strikes in 2015.

“The other option, if looking forward to the 2020s, 2030s and 2040s, is for us to have our own currency... When we take this long look, that option seems possible, even likely,” Terho said. Terho is considered the most popular candidate for the party leadership, trailed by Halla-aho. A poll for Finnish broadcaster MTV released this Wednesday showed support for Terho among party activists at 60 per cent, compared with 22 per cent for Halla-aho.

He has generally taken more moderate positions than Halla-aho, a member of European Parliament who has said bluntly he would take Finland out of the euro zone and the European Union.

The Finns party, previously known as True Finns, rose from obscurity during the euro zone debt crisis. It has since softened its anti-EU rhetoric, a move that helped the party enter government in 2015 but also angered voters: its support tumbled in municipal elections earlier this month to 8.8 percent.

Terho also said he would be ready to campaign for a referendum on EU membership in the 2019 parliament elections, if the majority of the party backs the idea. “We will strengthen our position as Finland’s only eurocopic party,” he said. According to a survey last year, 68 per cent of Finnish citizens support EU membership. Analysts have said a move back to a more hard-line platform in the party could spell trouble for the government, which is committed to the euro but is now having a hard time pushing through a major health care reform. The Finns will elect a new chairman in a party congress in June. The winner will replace Timo Soimakoskinen, the foreign minister, who is stepping down from the leadership after 20 years.— Reuters

NATO forces start services in Estonia

TALLINN — The NATO forces in Estonia on Thursday held a flag-raising ceremony at a military parade to mark the beginning of its services in the Baltic country.

At the Tapa Army Base in northern Estonia, about 1,200 troops from Britain, France, Denmark, and Estonia participated in the event, which was attended by British Secretary of State for Defence Michael Fallon. Danish Defence Minister Claus Hjort Frederiksen and Estonian Defence Minister Margus Tsahkna, said the Estonian Ministry of Defence in a statement.

Tsahkna termed the ceremony as a symbol of “NATO’s resolve and unity”, which was followed by the signing of a declaration about the establishment of NATO’s enhanced Forward Presence in Estonia by the three defence ministers and the French Ambassador to Estonia Claudia Delmas-Scherer.

Also present were Estonia President Kersti Kaljulaid, who met Fallon at the Office of the President in Tallinn on bilateral defence cooperation and regional security situation, and Estonian Prime Minister Juri Ratas, who said in a statement that the presence of allied forces shows NATO’s unity and enhances Estonia’s confidence on security. At the Warsaw Summit in July 2016, 28 leaders of NATO Member Nations decided to establish an enhanced Forward Presence in Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania and Poland. For the 1200-strong NATO battalion battle group in Estonia, Britain is contributing more than 800 troops, while France, 300 troops. Queen celebrates 91st birthday

LONDON — Queen Elizabeth, the world’s oldest and longest-reigning monarch, celebrated her 91st birthday in a usual low-key fashion on Friday.

Artillery gun salutes in London’s Hyde Park and at the Tower of London will mark the occasion although the queen, who normally spends her birthday privately, has no formal engagements planned herself.

Elizabeth was born on 21 April 1926 in Bruton Street in central London when Calvin Coolidge was US President and Joseph Stalin had just taken control in the Soviet Union and became queen in 1952 at 25.

Despite her age, she still regularly carries out official duties although she has cut back on the number of engagements in recent years, passing these onto other members of the Windsor family such as to her son and heir Prince Charles and grandchildren, Princes William and Harry.

Polls show she remains very popular amongst Britons and royal aides say there is little prospect of her abdicating. Asked if she was well during a trip to Northern Ireland last year, she quipped “Well, I’m still alive”.

The queen has an official birthday in June which is publicly marked with a large parade of soldiers through central London, known as Trooping the Colour.—Reuters

Elon Musk on mission to link human brains with computers in four years

NEW YORK — Tesla Inc (TSLA) founder and Chief Executive Elon Musk said his latest company Neuralink Corp is working to link the human brain with a machine interface by creating micron-sized devices.

Neuralink is aiming to bring to the market a product that helps with certain severe brain injuries due to stroke, cancer lesion etc, in about four years, Musk said in an interview with website Wait But Why.

“If I were to communicate a concept to you, you would essentially engage in consensual telepathy,” Musk said in the interview published on Thursday.

Artificial intelligence and machine learning will create computers so sophisticated and godlike that humans will need to implant “neural laces” in their brains to keep up, Musk said in a tech conference last year.

“There are a bunch of concepts in your head that then your brain has to try to compress into this incredibly low data rate called speech or typing,” Musk said in the latest interview.

If you have two brain interfaces, you could actually do an uncompressed direct conceptual communication with another person.

The technology could take about eight to 10 years to become usable by people with no disability, which would depend heavily on regulatory approval timing and how well the devices work on people with disabilities, Musk was quoted as saying.

In March, the Wall Street Journal reported that Musk had launched a company through which computers could merge with human brains.

Neuralink was registered in California as a “medical research” company last July, and he plans on funding the company mostly by himself.—Reuters

TOKYO — Western Digital Corp. is considering bidding jointly for Toshiba Corp.’s chip unit with the state-backed Innovation Network Corp. of Japan and the state-owned Development Bank of Japan, sources close to the matter said Friday.

Officials as the US company is aiming to gain approval from the Japanese government, which is keen for domestic suitors to submit a joint bid as it is concerned Toshiba’s key technology could get into the hands of a foreign company deemed risky to national security. The government is especially worried about a sale to a Chinese or Taiwanese company and could step in to block such a deal.

Western Digital, which has jointly invested in Toshiba’s Yokkaichi flash memory plant in central Japan, is demanding exclusive negotiations for purchasing Toshiba’s chip unit based on a joint-venture contract between Toshiba and US semiconductor maker SanDisk Corp., which it owns. The contract says Toshiba cannot put its chip unit up for sale without approval from Western Digital.

But with Taiwan’s Hon Hai Precision Industry Co., which bought Japanese display maker Sharp Corp, submitting the highest bid of nearly 3 trillion yen ($27 billion) for chip company Toshiba Memory Corp., Western Digital has apparently decided to join a Japan consortium to have Toshba prioritize the US firm in negotiations. Toshiba spun off its prized memory chip business as a subsidiary this month, and now plans to sell a majority stake in it to raise funds to cover massive losses from its US nuclear business.

On Tuesday, INCl Chairman Toshiyuki Shiga told a press conference that the state-backed turnaround fund may invest in Toshiba’s memory chip company. And an official at the fund said, “As part of the Japanese consortium, we will decide who to partner with. Team-up with Western Digital could (make the process) smoother.”—Kyodo News

China, Canada to create joint research centre for future energy and environment

OTTAWA — The University of Alberta is teaming up with China’s Tsinghua University to develop low-carbon, sustainable energy solutions while tackling global environmental challenges, according to the University of Alberta on Thursday.

Officials from the University of Alberta, Tsinghua University and the Government of Alberta led by Premier Rachel Notley are in Beijing now to sign an agreement to create the Joint Research Centre for Future Energy and Environment.

Researchers of the center will collaborate on a range of problems related to energy, environment and climate change, renewable energy, advanced power systems, energy transport and more.

“This is a rare opportunity for a Canadian university to partner with Tsinghua University in such a significant way,” said Larry Kostik, University of Alberta associate vice-president. “We come from different places and backgrounds, but we’re going to come together and leverage our different perspectives to solve common problems.”

Kostik said the joint research centre is the latest evolution in more than two decades of collaborations between the University of Alberta and Tsinghua University in China, which is one of the best university in China and among the top in the world.

The centre will be based at Tsinghua in a state-of-the-art research facility. Once construction is completed in the next three years, the centre will be able to apply for grant funding through the Chinese Ministry of Education, which is establishing strategic international research centres across the country.—Xinhua

‘Guardians of the Galaxy’ sequel gives heroes new ‘million-piece puzzle’

LOS ANGELES — The stars of “Guardians of the Galaxy,” the Marvel movie about a rag-tag group of intergalactic heroes, landed in Hollywood to debut their return in a much-anticipated sequel that sees them embark on another high-stakes space adventure.

In “Guardians of the Galaxy Vol. 2,” space heroes Peter Quill, Gamora, Drax, Rocket and Groot find themselves pursued by a villain and once again are given the task of saving the universe.

They are joined along the way by Gamora’s petulant sister Nebula, space pirate Yondu and Mantis, an empathic alien. The film is scheduled to open in theaters on 5 May.

“This is a million-piece puzzle and when you sit back and see the mosaic put together you get this one incredibly even, fully executed idea,” Chris Pratt, who plays Peter Quill, said at the red carpet premiere on Wednesday.

Sylvester Stallone, who makes an appearance as Stakar Ogord leader of the space pirates known as “ravagers,” said action films “are modern mythology when it’s done right.”

The kind of action films I’ve done are sort of more mano-a-mano ..., now they’ve developed this Marvel universe Guardians that have a heart, that has a lot of emotion to it, that takes it another step further,” he said, using the Spanish phrase for “hand to hand” combat that has come to be associated with any kind of competition between two people.

The sequel follows 2014’s “Guardians of the Galaxy,” which smashed summer box office records and ushered in a new cadre of edgy heroes in the Marvel cinematic universe.

“I made a movie about outcasts for outcasts and it’s very touching for me that people all over the world, whether here or in Japan or in Russia or in England have been touched by the movie,” writer-director James Gunn said.

Gunn will write and direct the third “Guardians” film, due for release in 2020. — Reuters

Underlining Dior’s connection with Japan, which is an “important market” for the fashion brand, Chiuri drew her inspiration from cherry blossoms and Christian Dior’s 1953 “Jardin japonais” dress for her latest creations.

House of Dior Ginza’s champagne-fuelled opening on Wednesday comes as spending by visitors to Japan is at record levels, although growth has slowed partly due to Chinese tourists buying less. But Sidney Toledano, chief executive of Christian Dior Couture, told Reuters on Wednesday he was not concerned about cycles in tourism, which he has seen go through many phases during two decades running the French fashion house.

“What we want to do in Japan is look for the local market. We look for the Japanese customers,” who have long been “super customers for luxury and high fashion,” he said.

“Our business is not based on the tourist business ... my objective always in a country is to have a very strong local plan,” said Toledano, who is also CEO of Christian Dior SE, the holding company for luxury group LVMH. As well as revealing the eight new looks from Chiuri, Dior used the occasion to present the autumn 2017 collection from men’s line Dior Homme for the first time. — Reuters

Brexit makes campsites cool again as Britons tighten belts

NEWTON FERRERS, (England)/LONDON — Before last year’s Brexit vote, Scott McCready was struggling to fill his holiday cabins on the coast of southwest England. Now the site is fully booked with British tourists avoiding more expensive foreign trips following a plunge in the pound.

This turnaround in the 10 months since Britons decided to leave the European Union reflects a jump in demand for “staycations”, with British consumers seeking ways to make their money go further as rising inflation squeezes their incomes.

McCready, who gave up a job in IT to build his site between ancient woodlands and a creek in the county of Devon, recalled the hectic days after last June’s referendum.

“My phone just took off,” he told Reuters. “It was like someone flicked a switch. We were booked out for the rest of the summer and now this year we’re having to turn people away.”

The reason why Britons and some Europeans have flocked to his 24 wooden lodges in Newton Ferrers, once a quiet fishing village 370 km (230 miles) from London, is straightforward.

The referendum result caught financial markets off guard, sending the pound down about 20 per cent against the dollar and 16 per cent against the euro at one point. That rapidly pulled up the cost of holidays to the United States and continental Europe, both popular destinations for Britons.

Since then, sterling has recovered some of its losses but remains down about 14 per cent against the dollar and 8 per cent against the euro.

So about 15 km away, Chris Duff is enjoying a similar jump in demand at his 90-lodge Thatches park, where he is investing to upgrade facilities which include a swimming pool and a fitness suite.

“If we could, we would like to expand,” he said.

Britain’s $2.6 trillion economy surprised almost all forecasters by withstanding the initial shock of the Brexit vote, a point made by Prime Minister Theresa May on Tuesday when she called a snap 8 June election.

“Despite predictions of immediate financial and economic danger since the referendum we have seen consumer confidence remain high, record numbers of jobs and economic growth that has exceeded all expectations,” she said. But the picture for the years ahead looks weaker as sterling’s fall raises import costs. With annual inflation pushing up toward 3 per cent, outstripping sluggish wage growth, Britons are becoming cautious in their spending - and not just on holidays.

Retail sales rose at the slowest pace in nearly a decade in the first three months of 2017, according to the British Retail Consortium, and surveys have shown that households are increasingly worried about the outlook for the economy.

German supermarket groups Aldi and Lidl, which attracted new British shoppers during the global financial crisis due to their deeply discounted prices, have seen accelerating sales in 2017.

“Customers are voting with their feet,” Matthew Barnes, Aldi’s CEO for Britain and Ireland, told Reuters in February. The squeeze facing many people in Britain is unlikely to be as sharp as in the years following the 2007-09 financial crisis when inflation hit 5 per cent and annual wage growth was even weaker than it is now. Nonetheless, the Bank of England expects almost no growth in the spending power of households over the next three years. Many private economists say even this forecast may be too optimistic.

“The extent of the hit to consumer spending is the most important factor behind the central bank’s view that the economy cannot be weaned off its record low interest rates.”

“The big story in terms of the strength of the UK economy is... the strength of consumer demand, and there are some signs of (that) coming off slowly,” Governor Mark Carney said.—Reuters

After three weeks, French artist succeeds in hatching eggs

PARIS — French artist Abraham Poincheval, who famously spent a week inside a rock and two weeks inside a bear sculpture, has succeeded in hatching chicken eggs after incubating them for some three weeks.

Poincheval embarked on his latest project in late March. With a mother hen, he incubated some 10 eggs with his own body heat inside a glass vivarium at Paris’ Palais de Tokyo contemporary art museum.

At the time, he estimated it would take 21-26 days for the eggs to hatch and the first did so on Tuesday.

A spokesperson for the museum said on Thursday nine had hatched and the chicks were on their way to a farm.

For the endeavor, Poincheval sat on a chair, wrapped in an insulating blanket, over a container with the eggs. He could position his seat for no more than 30 minutes a day for meals.

Earlier this year, the artist spent a week inside a block of stone, while in 2014, he lived in a hollowed-out bear sculpture for two weeks.—Reuters

Robots, chefs hope to bring invasive lion fish to restaurants near you

LOS ANGELES — As it turns out, some of the best cooks in the world think lionfish, a venomous predatory fish which is breeding out of control and destroying marine ecosystems in the Atlantic Ocean and the Caribbean Sea, is delicious.

The chefs gathered in Bermuda on Wednesday for a competition dubbed the “Lionfish Throwdown” where they challenged one another to come up with the tastiest dish. The contestants included award-winning chefs and restaurateurs who were given a beastly ingredient to work with and create a dish.

“Every chef likes to be sustainable in what they are doing,” said Chris Kenny, chef and owner of The Lionfish Experience.

Lionfish are being encouraged to keep spreading and it’s not going to stop unless people step in and do something about it.

“The key to the lionfish is to keep spreading, and it’s not going to stop unless people step in and do something about it,” said Kenny.

“On reefs where sport divers are actively diving with harpoons to try and control the lionfish, they actually do a pretty good job,” said Colin Angle, executive chairman of iRobot Corp, a consumer robotics company that builds and designs robots.

“But that’s a very small percentage of the ocean... We needed something far more flexible that could go far deeper, longer.”

Angle, who recently founded Robots In Space, a nonprofit organization set up to protect the oceans, built a machine named the Guardian specifically designed to hunt and capture lionfish.

“We basically drive the Guardian up to the fish, position it between two electrodes, apply a current and stun the fish, knocking the fish out,” said Angle. —Reuters

MADRID — Lionel Messi requires two more goals to reach 500 for Barcelona and will have his sights set on achieving the milestone against great rivals Real Madrid in Sunday’s Clasico.

It is almost 12 years to the day since the diminutive Argentine netted his first, against Albacete in the Camp Nou, and there could not be a better time to bring up the magic number, particularly in a week that began with his great rival Cristiano Ronaldo netting a record 100th Champions League goal. Barca, who trail Real by three points having played a game more, are under even more pressure than usual after Wednesday’s Champions League elimination by Juventus.

The sight of Messi flat out with blood gushing from his face after a heavy tackle from Miralem Pjanic seemed to sum up his club’s recent fortunes.

What perhaps was most striking as they meekly exited Europe was that even the mercurial Argentine appeared drained of his superpowers against a resilient backline. He was bullied, harangued and harried out of the game by the Italians.

In complete contrast to Ronaldo, who almost single-handedly dragged Real Madrid through against Bayern Munich 24 hours earlier, the five-time world player of the year looked dejected as the game drew to its inevitable conclusion before sloping off at the final whistle.

However, former team mate Ronaldinho is backing Messi to return to his best. “It’s a wonderful story. He’s on the verge of 500 goals for the club and my pass set up the first of them,” Ronaldinho said. “He’s a great man. It’s wonderful to see everything he’s achieved – and he still has lots left to give.”

The Brazilian’s words will be put to the test this weekend as, in the absence of the suspended Neymar, the focus on Messi will be even more intense. The Argentine will need to be at his brilliant best if Barca are to overcome Zinedine Zidane’s in-form side, who are unbeaten in their last 12.—Reuters

Murray denies top ranking pressure after Monte Carlo exit

MONACO — Andy Murray has dismissed suggestions that the pressure of being the world’s top tennis player is affecting his performance after losing to Spaniard Albert Ramos-Vinolas in the Round of 16 of the Monte Carlo Masters.

Murray’s defeat to Ramos-Vinolas was only his fourth match in two months after an elbow injury ruled him out of the Miami Open and the following Davis Cup game between Great Britain and France.

The 29-year-old’s only tournament win this year came at the Dubai Championship in March after he lost to Novak Djokovic in the Qatar Open final followed by a Round of 16 exit at the Australian Open. He also exited Indian Wells in the Round of 64 stage last month.

“It has been a difficult year for me because I know what it takes to get right up to the top and have the consistent results you need. This year has been stop-start for me, for a few different reasons,” Murray said. “Now that I’m feeling better again I’m hoping that... my results will start to pick up. Injuring my elbow has nothing to do with getting to No 1, or getting sick. “I’m hoping that I can stay healthy now and hopefully my results will follow.”

Murray said he did not feel doubtful about his participation in the upcoming Barcelona Open and the Hungarian Open as he considers focusing on his fitness.—Reuters

Rashford scores winner but Man United suffer Ibrahimovic blow

MANCHESTER, (England) — Manchester United needed an extra-time winner from Marcus Rashford to defeat Anderlecht 2-1 at Old Trafford on Thursday and move into the last four of the Europa League with a 3-2 aggregate victory.

While the result keeps open a possible path to next season’s Champions League for Jose Mourinho’s side, it came at a high price with defender Marcos Rojo and forward Zlatan Ibrahimovic both suffering possibly serious knee injuries.

United took the lead in the 10th minute through Henrikh Mkhitaryan, but Sofiane Hanni brought the Belgian side back level in the 32nd.

Ibrahimovic wasted two great chances in the final stages of normal time, the contest went into extra time and Rashford settled the tie with a fine finish early in the second period.

It was not the comfortable passage into the semi-finals that United might have expected with Anderlecht showing no shortage of guts and enterprising football, but it was a deserved victory for the English side.

United, buoyed by their Premier League win over Chelsea on Sunday, started confidently and grabbed the early advantage.

Paul Pogba played a pinpoint 40-metre pass along the ground to Rashford who, at the second attempt, found Mkhitaryan on the edge of the box and the Armenian midfielder drilled home his fifth goal in this season’s Europa League. There was almost a swagger about United’s approach and they twice came close to instantly doubling their advantage with Pogba seeing a firm header tipped over by Anderlecht keeper Martinuz Ruben who moments later excelled again as he pushed a curling Jesse Lingard shot wide.

But the 33-times Belgian champions, were not willing to be swept away and after a defensive mix-up Frank Acheampong out-paced Eric Bailly and fired dangerously into the side-netting.

After Rojo was taken off on a stretcher with a knee injury, being replaced by Dutch international Daley Blind, United appeared to lose focus. The Belgians struck back when Youri Tielemans hammered a powerful long-range shot against the bar, Lukasz Teodorczyk got the loose ball stuck under his feet but was able toudge it into the path of Algerian Sofiane Hanni who drove in the equaliser.

Rashford was again the main threat after the break, shooting off target from a promising position. He then robbed Dennis Aogo, burst past Gevorgyan and rounded Ruben but was forced too wide for an effective shot. United certainly should have been back in the lead when Marouane Fellaini headed down a cross to Ibrahimovic but the normally clinical forward shot straight at Ruben from point-blank range.—Reuters
