Myanmar democratic transition requires greater attention

DURING the third day of the Forum on Myanmar Democratic Transition at the Myanmar International Convention Center-2 in Nay Pyi Taw, yesterday, Dr. Soeren Keil, associate professor of international relations at Canterbury Christ Church University in the United Kingdom addressed the fragile nature of Myanmar’s democratic gains.

While Myanmar has progressed, Dr. Keil noted that no new parties have recently signed the National Ceasefire Agreement and that economic development, a prerequisite for lasting peace, has been lack-luster.

Dr. Keil also warned that democratic transition is not always a smooth orderly process. “Democracy might not be as stable as we have believed,” he said.

Dr. Keil said that certain indisputable elements have changed for the better in Myanmar, including a new exposure to global communication flows. “In terms of social and cultural changes, we now see everybody has a mobile phone. Internet usage has substantially increased across the country,” he said. “Again, that provides access to information, and also access to different media.”

Dr. Keil noted that with new access to new ideas and sources of information, come new challenges to prevailing orders and traditions. “When we look at democratization key challenges remain,” said Dr. Keil, noting recent crackdowns on news organisations and Facebook posters for making political statements.
Comprehensive forum proves progress of democratic transition

Six papers presented at the Forum on Myanmar Democratic Transition were reviewed at the Myanmar International Convention Centre-2 yesterday in Nay Pyi Taw.

As regards the paper “Global Overview Setting the Framework” Professor Daw Chaw Chaw Sein of International Relations Department of Yangon University said she would like to highlight six points and discuss the topics on “Wave of Democratization and Types of Democracy; and “Third Wave”. There were discussions on the difference between Arab Spring and Myanmar Spring, the hardships of democratization and the greater degree of difficulties in countries facing wars or battles, she said. The discussions included China’s impact on the regional countries, democracy and progress which could draw the attention of youths, the transition of Myanmar, a multi-national state, is different from other countries, matters on commitment, coordination and cooperation, the need of patience in the transition which is an endless process, democracy and peace that should always stand together, and diversity which should be an opportunity, she said, adding, many agreed the absence of a fixed model in transition.

Recounting the discussion, Daw Chaw Chaw Sein said transition process needs stability, and Myanmar’s transition is stable and wins international recognition, the transition from military rule to civilian government, saying that international transition processes, especially the one in Indonesia were studied, that the summary of the Panel discussions pointed out the requirement of multi reforms involving reforms in military-civilian relations in the democratic transition in addition to free and fair elections. He said countries under transition have the military-controlled Security Council. Depending on situation the military influence is still large, and assumed that the strengthening of civilian organizations will gradually decrease military influence. He said some discussed the fact that powerful military involvement in politics will pose hardships in strengthening the government, parliament, and judicial bodies. He said it is found that economic growth and security have direct relations, which is a worrisome situation for the people of the countries under transition that military might seize power with lack of security and stability as the reason. Political and racial extremism and political confrontation are also worrisome for people. He said he also notices the various types of transition theories, and the possibility of the transition based on firm goals, views and unity among the civilian organizations. He said he was there in discussions in connection with the ending of internal armed conflicts through peaceful means, the support for military reforms, the new role and duties of the Tatmadaw in civilian and military reforms and sharing of benefits of the transition among all stakeholders including the Tatmadaw.

The discussions dealt with the work of building trust in the fact that the Tatmadaw also is a part of the government, reinforcing the peace process and transition process with the greater involvement of civilian organizations. In his review he said more forums should be held for the greater transparency of the political and peace process through distribution of authentic information, which would ensure public participation in making important decisions for the country. He said political and economic security and stability can be harmed during the transition, that greater military-civilian cooperation will support the transition through security and stability enforcement.

Deputy Minister for Commerce U Aung Htoo reviewed the paper on Central control economic system to market economy system, saying there were discussions on the practice of socialism in Myanmar in the past, the centralized economic system and the market economy system under the Tatmadaw government, 23 years the transition from centralized economic system to the market economy system, food security in reducing the Tatmadaw’s influence in which all-inclusiveness is an important part. He also said there were suggestions on the progress, corrupt-free administrative machinery, and the assessment of possible benefits in adopting a policy. Dr. Keil also noted that reform of the Tatmadaw remains a key issue. Dr. Keil said discussions at the 21st Century Panglong Conference remained relatively superficial and there was still no guarantee of their success.

And Dr. Keil noted that while Myanmar’s economy has improved, those improvements are relatively modest and mostly clustered in urban areas, giving rise to greater inequality.

“Economic growth figures are quite low. In other transition societies we have seen growth figures easily exceeding double figures,” said Dr. Keil. He then quoted a World Bank statement: “Substantial infrastructure investment, restructing of the economy and more foreign investment friendly policies are needed and need to be implemented in order to have positive economic growth.”

“Economic growth ensures greater success,” he said.

Concerning the question on revocation of the law of reporting the visitor list, Representative of Pyithu Hluttaw, U Phyo Zeyer Thaw explained that in 1885 some parts of Myanmar was occupied by English and became part of India in 1886. The law to report to the head of village if visitor came to house was enacted in 1889. The law was actually aimed to oppress the people. The law was not applied to the whole country even under the British rule. The law affects the only parts signed by the governor. The law of visitor list was revoked because it was considered incorrect and in the law was described if there is any suspicion of illegal undertakings was given the right to check or inspect. Without knowing the facts completely, the revocation of visitor list law was criticized. The security is also important. Therefore the preventive measures to curb the security risks were put in the law of village administrator. The breach of security can be prevented if the provisions in the village administrator law was strictly observed.

U Tin Maung Than of Myanmar Resource Development discussed regarding the working capacity of the incumbent government. I want to stress the importance of management and administration. In case the owner and the manager are the same person administration is not needed. If the owner and manager are different persons the administration system is needed so as to deter the misappropriation. People is the owner of sovereignty of the country in democracy system. Hluttaw and Ministers represent the people. The system that can prevent the misappropriation must be established. However, in the present system owner and manager is not clearly differentiated.

There may be some expense due to human rights violation. It should also consider whether the policy adopted can engender the direct benefit or not. The successive governments have been deemed weak in this capacity. There was moves in the previous and incumbent governments.

Views On The Discussions Made On Democratic Transition of Myanmar

The outcomes from the interview with the international professionals and experts who attended and spoke at the Forum on Democratic Transition of Myanmar held from 11-13 August at the Myanmar International Convention Centers at Nay Pyi Taw were described below.

Interviewer — Ms. Isabella Kurkowski, Country Representative Myanmar, DW Akademie

From my point of view this forum is a momentous step in democratic transition of Myanmar. The economic transition unprecedented in the previous governments was discussed with great enthusiasm. In the previous forums and seminars only peace and economic transition were discussed. As a Myanmar representative of DW Akademie I felt greatly honoured to have a chance to participate in such an event in which the responsible personnel from Ministry of Information, members of Hluttaw, skilled professionals in respective subject and youths are taking part. To have an opportunity to discuss with the professionals local and abroad, of great expertise in the respective field of study is the essence of this forum. Myanmar can have the chance to learn the experience of India, Sri Lanka and East European countries. According to the opening speech of State Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi in which she clearly warned to the opening speech of State of India, Sri Lanka and Eastern European countries, Myanmar can have the opportunity to learn the experience of these forums and seminars only in the previous years. The firm outcome resulted from the discussion among the 8 armed ethnic organisations of NCA-signatory group is also very supportive to peace development process. Since the military had initiated the transformation to democratic state, the democratic forces were responsible to move the process forward. In media sector the freedom of press in Myanmar is not in the satisfactory state and the media men are still in the haunted stage. Whatever it may be, this three-day forum is much beneficial to the people of Myanmar.

Myanmar democratic transition requires...

It was actually not the transition. It needs to carry on to realize the requirements. As the State Counsellor said, instead of blaming each other in national reconciliation, determination of the time with target should be adopted.

Regarding the questioning in the Hlutaw, Hlutaw representative U Phyo Zeya Thaw replied that question can be raised freely. As the ministers are not present all the time in Hlutaw according to the Hlutaw system, the questions have to be given in advance. He continued that he wanted to explain why the questions and motions of NLD representatives were limited. The NLD party had targeted to build a democratic country since the founding of the party. Now we were still in the transition process and as the questions that can lead to misunderstanding and the present time is not suitable for some questions, the questions were postponed.

The questions that did not hinder the democratization process were allowed to pose.

The question on whether there was time frame in democratic transition was answered by U Aung Kyi Nyunt. He stressed that different countries had different historical background and there could be no ideal model to copy. We had to consider on the works to be carried out in transition period.

In determining the time frame we had to try to take the time as short as possible. If we go forward with responsibility, but not with personal benefit we hoped we could reduce the span of time frame.

Stock-taking: where is Myanmar in its Transition?

Afterward, Mizzima Media Group director Daw Thin Thin Aung moderated the panel discussion on “Stock-taking: where is Myanmar in its Transition?” with panellists U Tin Maung Than of Myanmar Development Resource Institute, Pyithu Hlutaw representative U Phyo Zeya Thaw and Amyotha Hlutaw representative U Aung Kyi Nyunt.

U Tin Maung Than said democracy transition are observed to be not in stages, differing from country to country as well as in time. Existence of political prisoners and groups yielding veto power can be viewed as only reaching part way through the journey.

When measured with existence of independent political party, ability to live with disagreement, existence of political prisoner and (degree of) human rights, weaknesses still exist and there is a need to setup a wide ranging strategy: A Time Bound Action Plan need to be drawn up and the situation should be measured with the indicators. Work need to be done by the government, hlutaw and civil society organisations should be identified. An Open Government Partnership that includes government setup, check and balance system and participation of the people should be strengthened.

Armed organisations such as the military, police, ethnic armed groups must be made to understand more the concept of human rights. All must respect and abide by human rights and democracy. The government need to fulfil minority right and not only the government but civil society organisations also need to cooperate in this. Civil society organisations need to enable the grass root people to express their opinions and views on the daily issues they faced. Hlutaw also need to repeal laws that are hindering human rights. 1923 Colonial Secret Act need to be reviewed to be in line with human rights consideration. Laws protecting workers and farmers should be enacted.

Pyithu Hlutaw representative U Phyo Zeya Thaw said in Myanmar political transition process, mindsets need to be changed as mentioned by the State Counsellor. If the mindsets are as in the past, it will be an obstacle to the transition process. Similarly, the State Counsellor has guided us not to be trapped in the past.

In the past, the opposition didn’t dwell in the losses but thought and worked together with an optimistic view for the goodness and development of the country, for the birth of a true and a democratic nation and a democratic system that is acceptable by all ethnic nationals. Thus the military and civil services are urged to overcome what was done in past and work for a better future.

The strongest organisation in the present transition process at the Union Peace Conference - 21st Century Panglong is considered as a huge transition. Organisations involved need to meet repeatedly and through this (good) relation and understanding will be attained. Additionally, the aspirations of the each organisations will be known and must be made known transparently to the people of the country who are making the decision. This part will involve the media. Civil society organisation with good aims must be encouraged to implement with full power. It is expected that through this there will be transition and progress.

In the afternoon, a penal discussion under the same title was conducted with international ambassadors that were moderated by Mizzima Media Group Managing Director U Soe Myint and panellists were Singapore Ambassador to Myanmar H.E. Mr. Chua Hian Kong Robert and Norway Ambassador to Myanmar H.E. Ms. Tone Tinnes.

Singapore Ambassador H.E. Mr. Chua Hian Kong Robert said Myanmar had more than 130 nations and there were ongoing conflicts with some ethnic nationals. Myanmar is believed to continue with it works for democracy. Myanmar Summer is better than Arab Spring. Successful nation are disciplined and united. Myanmar’s independent architect Bo-gyoke was very far sighted. The need for unity was mentioned in his 1947 speech.

People of Myanmar can formulate Myanmar’s democracy. The government need to handle political processes with unity and wisdom. The government is seen to be inviting all stakeholders to the roundtable for peace. Work also needs to be done for economic development. Peace and democracy must be continued to be established with the government and people working together.

In economic, Myanmar is trying to become a middle-income country by 2030. Civil services reforms and capacity building will be provided by working in cooperation with international organisations. There are challenges of ethnic conflict in social development. An appropriate solution for the country should be sought with the help of international organisations. For social development in Myanmar, international organisations can assist in education and health sector and social discipline. These are just his view for Myanmar. He is confident that Myanmar will move forward to democracy. The cost will be enormous if there is back tracking.

Norwegian Ambassador to Myanmar H.E. Ms. Tone Tinnes discussed discussions made at the Forum on Myanmar Democratic Transition is related not only to Myanmar alone but also the entire world. I’ve heard of differences. Political transition, peace process and economic transition were being done. We will help Myanmar in its transition and share our experience. There are effective progresses in the economic sector. Laws are enacted to attract foreign and local investors. The challenge of attracting good investment is the same challenge faced by other countries.

Many countries are encouraging freedom of speech. What can be done and what is restricted need to be discussed in Myanmar in the same way as was discussed in Norway. Peace process was started in the political transition. This is a process that need to be done long term. There were important progresses. We have different experiences and the best experience need to be studied. Myanmar need to strive to become a middle income country from a least developed country. Norway and Myanmar is similar in being rich in natural resources. Norway will share its experience in these sectors. Norway can help in good management practise to get the best benefit from natural resources.

Afterward, forum attendees’ questions were answered by the panellists. —Myanmar News Agency ■

WHEN we say reforms it includes institutional changes both the government and the private sectors are undertaking. As for the government sector, normally, the departments will have to rely on the budget allocations of the Union Government as they are not money-making bodies.

They are just the institutions combating crime, enforcing the rule of law, conserving the environment, collecting revenues for the Union, taking care of public health and education, facilitating public communications and transport or rendering assistance to disaster-hit areas at the Union’s expense.

In fact, they are financial outflows of a nation, but on the other hand they are essential tools for the efficiency of the government’s administrative machinery.

Currently, government departments in our country are trying to adapt themselves more to the changing trend, while conducting staff capacity-building programs as every government-provided kyat they are spending on their functions is precious and should serve the people’s interest best in one way or another. In some cases, government departments are overstaffed, low in competence and they also lack enthusiasm.

But that can be changed. They can assess their structure, find their faults and weaknesses, modify staff welfare and training programs, cut unnecessary procedures where loopholes occur and later introduce means to become actually helpful tools of the government while spending less and doing more for the people and the country.

As the country is gaining more ground in conducting reforms that covers institutional changes, there is extra room for the departments to develop the sense of accountability, responsibility, liability and consideration among the staff.

What’s more, good governance and clean government is the most important and reliable force behind all measures to curb corruption, the worst enemy of all institutions trying to improve their image.

We believe no department will be left behind in this reform drive as failure will turn it into a burden intolerable for any democratic society.

A Wrong Step May Lead into Life-long Plunge

By El Cherry Aung / Myanmar Now

THE night-mare which started on her way home, came to an end just after many years. Now 30-year-old Ma May Khine Oo (the then 17-year-old girl) got well with a couple although they were total strangers, on the train bound for Mudon from Ye township, southern part of Myanmar where her granny lived. She refused to accompany them to accept their offer of employment for her personal reason that she was required to go back home. Yet, she happened to have drunk the water from them. Following that she lost consciousness to have fallen fast asleep in a moment. At the time she managed to open her eyes, she was in for a rude awakening that the train went past her destination.

Ma May Khine Oo who had to drop out prior to the completion of primary education recounted, “Lack of extra money for ticket and knowing nothing how to return home from somewhere strange I had never been to, made me decide that I would go back home just after saving some money by working at the job they would introduce.”

In fact, the couple took her to sell the latter in China, giving promises to send her back to her parents over three months after being employed at the eatery they would introduce. Thus, Ma May Khine Oo became the one among 3489 victims of human trafficking the Myanmar Police Force dealt with during the past decade.

According to departmental officials and civil societies, not only promulgation of effective law but also launching campaigns for sharing knowledge are needed to be performed for lessening human trafficking of female teen-agers.

Escape through the use of social media

Ma May Khine Oo said that an idea frequently occurred to her to run away from having been forced to enter wife-hood after having fallen prey to human trafficking. She said, “As my whereabouts is not well convinced, I don’t know where to go. I was afraid of being in a worse place again.”

At the time of having started a family with two children—one son and one daughter, she asked her spouse for a permission to go back home, he gave a consent. And she asked for a help from a neighbor, a Myanmar woman for her return trip. Since taking my jewels to sell them for my trip expenses, the so-called Daw Myint Myint Aye no longer appeared before me.

What is worse, she made me become a victim of human trafficking for the second time, in the hand of the trafficker.

On arrival at the second husband’s residence, she reached the age of 28. After 8 months when she arrived there she fortunately found a way to escape from present sufferings through “WeChat.”

“TV Programs in China very often broadcasts ways and means to use “WeChat,” through which I managed to link with Myanmar organizations for my escape, said Ma May Khine Oo.

At the time of arriving back at her native place, she is expecting a baby with her second husband. Daw Win Win Mar, head of social welfare department, Mawlamyaing explained that the department subsidized K 500,000 as a monetary aid so as to run a kind of kiosk in front of her house, and a rural dispensary is giving medical care to her pregnancy.

Police Inspector Hsan Oo of Mawlamyaing township human trafficking suppression team disclosed that Ma May Khine Oo’s case was under investigation under section 24 of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Law, 2015.

Human Traffickers’ Target

U Tun Haiing, project manager of Yangon Justice Center founded by lawyers asserted that the poor were targets of human traffickers. He said, “Sharing knowledge on human trafficking needs to be launched to the grass-root level in respective regions and checks need to be done at border gates. The organization is pleading for the victims free of charge. And he added that the more job opportunities increase in the country, the less and less victims we will have in future.

Simultaneously exodus of migrant workers to overseas countries will decrease if daily income of the poor is increased.

He added, “Cases of human trafficking can be found not only when going abroad for work but also when working in this country. As many cases go unreported to authorities concerned, they do not come to the media and social pages. Otherwise, they can grow bigger gradually.”

U Myo Aung, permanent secretary of the Ministry of Labor, Immigration and Population (labor branch) said, “Illegal immigrants are more likely to be prone to victims of human trafficking. There are many cases that were trafficked. Later these days, problems of being unpaid wages to the full are increasing. Especially, rural people are liable to be the targets. Sharing knowledge and educative talks on human trafficking should be made more broadly than ever to reach rural areas by the State, with a view to alleviating human trafficking. Yet, our country abound with exodus of migrant laborers who fall for cheatings of traffickers without paying attention to educative activities. Out the country, they know nothing what to do, finding it difficult to contact with anybody. As we have no particular facts, we cannot help. Only when cases happen, we come to know. The major problem is such a case.”

Head of Pazundaung township police force Khin Maung Latt assumes that more secure ways and means should be applied to reach those actually needed, in delivering leaflets of sharing knowledge on human trafficking. He added, “Mainly, it is necessary to educate the people. Sometimes, it is inconvenient to educate through talks. It will be more effective to share knowledge door to door while performing police routines.”

Human trafficking/trafficking in persons is defined in Anti-trafficking in persons law, 2015 that if a person is transported, transferred, purchased, hired, allowed to take shelter or received with a view to be exploited, regardless of their consent or not, these are human trafficking. Exertion of force, threats, frauds and cheats, power abuse, taking advantages in critical conditions for survival and giving or accepting bribery to get the agreement from the person with power or authority that can control someone, are involved with human trafficking.

If someone is acquitted of committing a crime under the law, he may be sentenced to 10-year imprisonment at least or life sentence to the utmost or the culprit may be fined as well.

Out of 1380 cases on trafficking in persons, dealt with by human trafficking suppression police force during the period from 2006 to 2016, forced marriages were on the top of the list, followed by sex slavery and forced labor. Most of the trafficked Myanmar nationals were sent to China, followed by homelands Thailand and Malaysia it was learnt, according to the statistics of the team.

Civil society says that human trafficking is generally attributed to being in debt, poor education, shortage of job opportunity and in-house terror; adding that the victims include those who are easily deceived, the ones with excessive decorum, naive ones, those desirous of risks, unprotected children, persons who are exceptionally impressed upon alien nations and kind of people who are dissatisfied with their present existences. Maung John, director of Agency for Basic Community Development said, “Kachin State sees exodus of local people who leave their region for the main land and overseas countries due to poverty, though the region is peaceful. It is the economic problem. It needs to broadly educate and share knowledge among them. On the other hand, it is necessary to create job opportunities.”

Ma May Khine Oo, who herself had been a victim, said she had been sharing her personal experiences to nearby friends and neighbors, warning that parents should not let their children travel alone, especially by taking lessons from my experiences, as for girls. Translated by Khin Maung Oo (Tada-U)

Death toll from H1N1 virus has remained stable at 23 people since 21 July

Myanmar health officials say that fatalities related to a recent outbreak of the H1N1 virus have not increased since last month, when 23 people were known to have died from the sickness.

On 12-13 August, 34 patients were tested for the virus and nine new positive cases were discovered, bringing the total number of H1N1 cases since 21 July to 230, according to the Ministry of Health and Sports.

As of yesterday, 73 patients had been treated for the virus at Walberg Specialist Hospital in Yangon, and, additionally, 66 patients received treatment in other states and regions.

Health officials said that 18 patients died from diseases other than H1N1 yesterday.

The ministry is working to improve its treatment and safety protocols at hospitals.

The ministry reminded the public that those most at risk of infection are the elderly, children, pregnant women and other people with weakened immune systems. People at risk of infection have been urged to wash their hands frequently and to avoid crowded, enclosed spaces. — Myanmar News Agency

Virginia police, FBI probe deadly violence at white nationalist rally

CHARLOTTESVILLE (Va.) — US authorities will investigate on Sunday the violence stemming from a white nationalist rally a day earlier that killed one person, injured more than 30, and challenged US President Donald Trump’s leadership.

The unrest in the southern college town presented Trump with a domestic crisis, with many on both left and right criticizing him for waiting too long to address it and then, when he did so, failing to explicitly condemn the white-supremacist marchers who ignited the melee.

“Absolutely we are going to have further demonstrations in Charlottesville, because our constitutional rights are being denied,” said Jason Kessler, identified by civil rights groups as a white nationalist blogger. He did not specify when.

Kessler organized the “Unite the Right” rally in Charlottesville against a plan to remove a statue to Confederate war hero Robert E. Lee from a park, saying in a telephone interview those who came in support will not back down.

Four people were arrested in the violence, including James Fields, a 20-year-old white man from Ohio being held in jail on suspicion of plowing a car into a crowd of counter-protesters on Saturday, killing a 32-year-old woman and injuring 19, five of them critically.

Police have not yet provided a motive for the incident but US attorneys and the Federal Bureau of Investigation have opened a civil rights investigation into the crash, an FBI field office said. Federal authorities were also looking into a helicopter crash on Saturday that killed two Virginia state policemen aiding efforts to quell the clashes.

Virginia Governor Terry McAuliffe, a Democrat, declared an emergency and halted the white nationalist rally planned for Saturday but that did not stop the violence.

About 15 people were injured after rival groups fought pitched battles using fists, rocks and pepper spray.

“Please go home and never come back,” was McAuliffe’s message for the white supremacists, delivered at a news conference.

“There is no place for you here, there is no place for you in America,” he added.

Trump said “many sides” were involved in the Charlottesville incidents, remarks that drew fire from across the political spectrum for not specifically denouncing white nationalists.

“We condemn, in the strongest possible terms, this egregious display of hatred, bigotry and violence on many sides,” Trump told reporters at his New Jersey golf course on Saturday.

The planned rally stemmed from a long debate in the US South over the Confederate battle flag and other symbols of the rebel side in the Civil War, which was fought over slavery.

The Charlottesville violence is the latest clash between far-rightists, some of whom have claimed allegiance to Trump, and the president’s opponents since his January inauguration, when black-clad anti-Trump protesters in Washington smashed windows, torched cars and clashed with police, leading to more than 200 arrests.

About two dozen people were arrested in Charlottesville in July after the Ku Klux Klan rallied against the plan to remove the Lee statue. Torch-wielding white nationalists also demonstrated in May against the removal.

Iran eyes more funds for missiles, Guards after US sanctions

DUBAI — Iran’s parliament gave initial approval on Sunday to a bill to boost spending on Tehran’s missile programme and the elite Revolutionary Guards in retaliation for new sanctions imposed by the United States.

Lawmakers overwhelmingly approved the outlines of the bill to “counter America’s terrorist and adventurist actions” as some chanted “Death to America”, the state broadcaster IRIB reported.

The measure came in retaliation to legislation passed by US Congress and signed by US President Donald Trump in early August to impose new sanctions on Iran over its missile programme.

Iran denies its missile programme violates a UN resolution which endorsed Tehran’s 2015 nuclear deal with world powers and calls upon the Islamic Republic not to conduct activities related to ballistic missiles designed to deliver nuclear weapons. Tehran says it does not design such missiles.

The Iranian plan would require Iran’s government and armed forces to draw up a strategy to counter US violations of human rights around the world, and to support Iranian bodies and individuals affected by US sanctions.

The measure would also allocate over $290 million each to Iran’s ballistic missile programme and the Quds Force – the external arm of the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps, which has been deployed to battlefields in Iraq and Syria.

Deputy Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi told members of parliament that the government backed the bill, which he said “was designed wisely so that it does not violate the (nuclear) deal and provide excuses for opposing sides”, state news agency IRNA reported.

The bill must now pass a second vote before being submitted to a clerical body for final approval and passage into law. — Reuters

BERLIN — German Foreign Minister Sigmar Gabriel warned Sunday that the provocations between Washington and Pyongyang could escalate to a military conflict.

Bomb kills at least 15 in Pakistani city of Quetta

QUETTA, (Pakistan) — A bomb exploded near a crowded market in the Pakistani city of Quetta on Saturday, killing at least 15 people, officials said, the latest attack to hit the restive southwestern province of Baluchistan.

The powerful blast hit as a paramilitary patrol passed by on the road, Baluchistan provincial home minister Sarfraz Bugti said, adding the patrol may have been the target.

“According to the information we have received so far, there are around 15 casualties, people who were martyred, and around 40 people were wounded,” Bugti said.

He added a state of emergency had been imposed in the city and all hospitals were on alert.

Quetta’s chief of bomb disposal squad, Aslam Tareen, said initial information was that a suicide attacker rammed a motorcycle into a military vehicle.

Pakistan’s army press wing said the patrol was the target and there were at least seven civilians among the 15 killed.

It cited army chief General Qamar Javed Bajwa as saying terrorists were trying to disrupt Monday’s celebrations of 70 years of independence from Britain.

“Our resolve won’t succumb to any challenge,” Bajwa was quoted as saying in an official tweet from a top military spokesman.

Separatist militants in Baluchistan have waged a campaign against the central government for decades, demanding a greater share of the gas-rich province’s resources.

Taliban and other Islamist militants also operate in the province, which shares borders with Afghanistan and Iran.

Iraqi forces kill 12 IS militants in Salahudin clashes

TIKRIT, (Iraq) — The Iraqi forces on Sunday killed 12 Islamic State (IS) militants in Iraq’s northern central province of Salahudin after fierce clashes, a provincial security source told Xinhua.

The clashes erupted before dawn when dozens of IS militants attacked the military bases of the security forces after heavy mortar barrage and machine guns in Zuwiyah area, some 250 km north of the Iraqi capital Baghdad, the source told Xinhua on condition of anonymity.

The troops fought back overnight and foiled the attackers from storming their bases, but the militants managed to block the main road between Salahudin’s province capital Tikrit and the city of Mosul in northern Iraq, the source said.

In the morning, reinforcement troops and helicopter gunships dispatched to the area and reopened the main road after defeating the extremist militant, who withdrew to their redoubts in Makhoul mountain range in the northern part of Tikrit, which itself located some 170 km north of Baghdad, the source added.

After the withdrawal of the extremist militants, the troops found 12 of their bodies and two destroyed armored vehicles, three trucks along with large amount of weapons and ammunition left in the battlefields, the source said.

The clashes also resulted in the killing of three soldiers and the wounding of eight others, the source added.

In Salahudin province, the terrorist IS group still in control of Makhoul mountain range and the villages between the range and the Tigris River, in addition to the eastern bank of the town of Shirqat, about 280 km north of Baghdad, as well as its surrounding villages and rural area that stretches to the IS-held town of Hawijah in the western part of the oil-rich province of Kirkuk, Xinhua

Senior Islamic State commanders killed in Afghanistan air strike — US military

KABUL — Several senior members of Islamic State’s central Asian affiliate were killed in a US air strike in Afghanistan, officials said on Sunday.

The attack on Thursday killed Abdul Rahman, identified by the US military as the Kunar provincial emir for Islamic State of Iraq and Syria-Khorasan, according to a statement from the command in Kabul.

“The death of Abdul Rahman deals yet another blow to the senior leadership of ISIS-K,” said General John Nicholson, the senior US commander in Afghanistan.

Three other senior ISIS-K members were also among those killed in the strike in eastern Kunar province.

Nicholson has vowed to defeat Islamic State militants in Afghanistan this year.

The group’s emir, Abu Sayed, was reported killed in a strike on his headquarters in Kunar in July, the third Islamic State emir in Afghanistan to be killed since July 2016.

In April, Nicholson deployed a 21,600-pound (9,797 kg) “Massive Ordnance Air Blast” bomb against Islamic State positions in neighboring Nangarhar province, one of the largest conventional weapons ever used by the United States in combat.

Senior Afghan officials said as many as 16 civilians, including women and children, had been killed by a US air strike in Nangarhar, but American officials said only militants were killed.

As part of an increased campaign against both Islamic State and the Taliban, the dominant Islamist militant group in Afghanistan, the US Air Force has dropped nearly 2,000 weapons in the country as of the end of July, compared to fewer than 1,400 in all of last year.

Despite some battlefield successes by Afghan and American special operations troops, Islamic State has continued deadly attacks around Afghanistan, fueling fears that the group is seeking to bring the group’s Middle East conflict to Central Asia.

At least 11 dead as post-election unrest erupts in Kenya

Nairobi/Kisumu, Kenya — Kenyan police have killed at least 11 people in a crackdown on protests as anger at the re-election of President Uhuru Kenyatta erupted in the western city of Kisumu and slums surrounding the capital, officials and witnesses said on Saturday.

However, the NASA opposition coalition, led by four-time presidential hopeful Raila Odinga, put the death toll at more than 100, including 10 children, but did not provide evidence. Odinga has rejected the poll and its result as “massive” fraud.

The eruption of violence has revived memories of a decade ago, when Odinga, now 72, lost an election in controversial circumstances that sparked a wave of political and ethnic unrest in which 1,200 people were killed and 600,000 displaced.

Kofi Annan, the former UN head who mediated during that crisis, on Saturday issued a statement warning Kenya’s leaders to “be careful with their rhetoric and actions in this tense atmosphere”.

Reuters was able to confirm 11 deaths, including one girl, in the space of 24 hours. The Kenya National Commission on Human Rights said 24 people had been shot dead by police since Tuesday, election day.

Top Odinga lieutenant Johnson Muthama said police had been packing corpses into body bags and dumping them, remarks likely to exacerbate the tensions that followed Friday night’s official announcement that Kenyatta had won, with 54.3 per cent of votes.

Mwenda Njeka, a spokesman for the Interior Ministry, said the opposition claims were “hogwash”. Acting Interior Minister Fred Matiang’i had earlier said trouble was localised and blamed it on “criminal elements” rather than legitimate political protest. He also denied accusations of police brutality.

“Let us be honest - there are no demonstrations happening,” he told reporters.

“Individuals or gangs that are looting shops, that want to endanger lives, that are breaking into people’s businesses - those are not demonstrators. They are criminals and we expect police to deal with criminals how criminals should be dealt with.” However, James Orogeno, another top NASA official, said the killings were part of a carefully laid plan by 55-year-old Kenyatta’s Jubilee party and the security forces to rig the poll, crush dissent and then hide the evidence.

“This violence, this state terror is being executed following very meticulous preparation,” he said.

He and Muthama urged Odinga supporters to stay calm and out of harm’s way but, ominously, said there would be no backing down. “We will not be cowed. We will not relent,” Muthama said.

As with previous votes in 2007 and 2013, this year’s elections have exposed the underlying ethnic tensions in the nation of 45 million people, the economic engine of East Africa and the region’s main trading hub.

In particular, Odinga’s Luo tribe, who hail from the west, hoped an Odinga presidency would break the Kikuyu and Kalenjin dominance of central government since independence in 1963. Kenyatta, the son of Kenya’s first president, is a Kikuyu.

BUENOS AIRES — Argentines vote on Sunday in a closely watched midterm primary election that will test their appetite for bringing back the left-wing populism of former President Cristina Fernandez.

Fernandez, who was indicted for corruption last year, is vying for a Senate seat in Buenos Aires province, home to nearly 40 per cent of the country’s voters. She is running against business friendly President Mauricio Macri’s former education minister and other candidates from a divided opposition.

Investors and wealthy Argentines fear a Fernandez comeback in Congress could pave the way to her running for president in 2019. Her return to power would likely mean the end of Macri’s reforms and a resumption of rampant spending, protection of industry and isolation from trade agreements and international capital markets.

A seat in Congress would give the 64-year-old Fernandez immunity from arrest, though not from trial. She dismisses the corruption accusations as politically motivated.

LIMA — Peru condemns the threatened use of force in Venezuela and is negotiating a written response with other nations in the region, Foreign Minister Ricardo Luna said in a statement sent exclusively to Reuters on Saturday.

US President Donald Trump on Friday threatened military intervention in Venezuela, a surprise escalation of Washington’s response to the nation’s political crisis. Caracas disparaged the threat as “craziness.” Peru under President Pedro Pablo Kuczynski has taken his toughest stance towards Venezuela’s socialist regime as President Nicolas Maduro seeks to consolidate power and crack down on anti-government protests and unrest that have left 120 dead since April. But the day after expelling Venezuela’s ambassador in Lima, Peru said force is not the answer. “All foreign or domestic threats to resort to force under mine the goal of reinstating democratic governance in Venezuela, as well as the principles enshrined in the UN charter,” Luna’s statement said. Venezuelan authorities have long said US officials were planning an invasion, and Maduro has accused Latin American countries critical of his government of being part of an “imperialist” conspiracy. A former military general told Reuters earlier this year that some anti-aircraft missiles had been placed along the country’s coast because of that possibility — Reuters.

Two girl scouts, three other people die in storms in Poland

WARSAW — Five people, including two teenage girl scouts, died and more than 30 were injured as a result of falling trees in a series of severe storms that hit Poland overnight.

The girls, 13 and 14, were crushed by falling trees while sleeping in a tent when a storm hit their campground late on Friday in the Tuchola Forest in northeastern Poland, according to the Regional Crisis Management Team office in Gdansk. Some 20 scouts were injured and taken to local hospitals.

Adam Kraizis, chairman of the Lodz Region of the Scouting Association of the Republic (Poland), where the scouts were from, told the private Polsat television that evacuation was ordered immediately, but conditions were horrendous. “We had to force our way for kilometres through the forest, among falling trees,” he said.

Three other victims also died as a result of falling trees and 10 people were injured in separate incidents in Poland’s north. More than 170,000 people were left without power and 800 buildings were damaged in storms that hit mostly Poland’s north and west, according to the Regional Crisis Management Team in Gdansk.

More storms were expected on Saturday and warnings of severe weather conditions in Poland continued for a number of regions amid unusually high for Poland temperatures that peaked at between 35 and 38 Celsius. An emergency meeting of the government’s Crisis Management Team was called on Saturday and Prime Minister Beata Szydlo promised to help all those in need.

Grzegorz Nowik, head of the Scouting Association of the Republic (Poland), ordered a month of mourning for the organisation.

Merkel’s predecessor critical of her handling of diesel scandal –Bliek

VIENNA — Former German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder has accused his successor Angela Merkel of neglecting her duties by going on holiday rather than chairing talks on diesel car emissions aimed at repairing the vital auto industry’s battered reputation.

Merkel’s conservative Christian Democratic Union (CDU) has a commanding lead in opinion polls ahead of a parliamentary election on 24 September. But her government has come under mounting pressure for not doing enough to crack down on vehicle pollution after an emissions scandal and for being too close to carmakers.

At a “diesel summit” in Berlin on 2 August, while Merkel was on a three-week holiday, politicians and carmakers agreed to overhaul engine software on 5.3 million diesel cars.

But environmentalists immediately dismissed the plan — almost two years after Volkswagen (VWOG.p.DE) admitted to cheating US diesel emissions tests — as too little, too late. “I don’t want to spoil anyone’s holiday. But here I would have taken charge personally. It is all far too important,” Schroeder, a Social Democrat who was replaced by Merkel after a narrow election defeat in 2005, said in an interview with Swiss tabloid newspaper Blick which was published on Sunday.

Ministers have been wary of angering the owners of 15 million diesel vehicles and damaging an industry that is the country’s biggest exporter and provides about 800,000 jobs. At this month’s meeting, politicians stopped short of demanding costlier mechanical modifications to engine and exhaust systems.

Environment Minister Barbara Hendricks, also a Social Democrat, accused the VDA car industry association of lacking humility for the way it trumpeted the deal. Schroeder, a former member of Volkswagen’s supervisory board, said that had he been in Merkel’s shoes he would have taken a more muscular approach.—Reuters

Study finds evidence of poor computer security practices in DNA sequencing

SAN FRANCISCO — A new study from University of Washington (UW) researchers finds evidence of poor computer security practices used in DNA sequencing tools.

By analyzing the security hygiene of common, open-source DNA processing programmes, researchers at the University of Washington confirmed that known security gaps could allow unauthorized parties to gain control of computer systems, potentially giving them access to personal information or even the ability to manipulate DNA results.

The DNA is a system that encodes information in sequences of nucleotides. Rapid improvement in DNA sequencing has sparked a proliferation of medical and genetic tests that promise to reveal everything from one’s ancestry to fitness levels to microorganisms that live in one’s gut. However, some open-source software programmes used to analyze DNA sequencing data were written in unsafe languages known to be vulnerable to attacks, in part because they were first crafted by small research groups who likely were not expecting much adversarial pressure.

But as the cost of DNA sequencing has plummeted over the last decade, open-source programmes have been adopted more widely in medical and consumer-focused applications.—Xinhua

Wild brass bands festival kicks off in Serbia

GUCA, (Serbia) — The 57th Guca Brass Band Festival, Serbia’s liveliest traditional music event, has attracted tens of thousands of people crowding the streets and savouring the trumpet beat.

Guca, a normally sleepy town with only 3,700 people in the rolling hills of southwestern Serbia, is hosting the country’s biggest party with 50 brass bands competing for the coveted Golden Trumpet.

Launched in 1961 with just four bands and only 2,500 visitors, Guca has since received more than 15 million people.

The “Dragacevo Trumpeters Assembly,” as the festival is officially called, now lures not only Serbians but tourists from around the world.

“One Serbian girl in Germany told me about it... and now I’m here, it’s great, I love it,” said Maria, a Bulgarian tourist in her 20s.

The music has a long tradition in Serbia — it goes back to a royal decree establishing a military brass band in 1831.

The bands, those competing for the prize and those weaving through dozens of tents teeming with guests eating, drinking and partying, make good money from tips. Most visitors drink beer and plum brandy and eat barbecued meat or a local delicacy, seasoned spicy cabbage with three kinds of meat which simmers for hours in large clay pots.

In an attempt to avoid the serious road accidents which have marred the festival in the past, police have ordered all drivers along the two roads leading in and out of Guca to take a breathalyzer test.—Reuters

Ninja proficiency test to be held for 1st time in Tokyo

OTSU (Japan) — A ninja proficiency test will be held at a Tokyo temple for the first time in October, far from the usual venue in Koka, western Japan, known as the home of a famous clan of the feudal mercenaries.

Zojoji, the family temple of the Tokugawa shogunate, will host the exam measuring knowledge of the Koka clan of ninja, which had close ties to the founder of the shogunate, according to the Koka city tourism association, which organizes the test.

The ninja test has been held every year since 2008 in Koka, Shiga Prefecture, but this year Zojoji will host the 10th exam as Tokugawa Ieyasu, founder of the Tokugawa shogunate, is said to have been helped by ninja in 1392.

Following the Honnoji Incident in Kyoto that year, which resulted in the death of warlord Oda Nobunaga, Ieyasu successfully fled from Osaka to his home in Mikawa, now central Japan's Aichi Prefecture, by travelling mountainous areas in Iga, Mie Prefecture, in a matter of a few days with the help of ninja from the Koka and Iga clans.

In the incident, Nobunaga was forced to commit suicide after an attack on Honnoji temple by his subordinate Akichi Mitsuhide which dashed the warlord's hopes of consolidating centralized power in Japan under his authority. Ninja employ covert techniques called ninjutsu and their tasks include espionage, sabotage and assassination.

Federer beats Haase, meets Zverev in Montreal final

MONTREAL — Roger Federer used a dominant service game to beat Dutchman Robin Haase 6-3, 7-6(5) in Montreal on Saturday, setting up a Rogers Cup final against German Alexander Zverev.

Haase, playing in his first ATP World Tour Masters 1000 semi-final, did well to force a second-set tiebreak but Federer proved too much to handle as the Swiss fired down nine aces and dropped only nine points on serve.

Federer, whose five titles this year include the Australian Open and Wimbledon, credited a positive mindset for helping him extend his winning streak to 16 matches.

“Confidence can get you a long way, and if you’re feeling fine physically and you are ready to fight mentally you have a lot of things in the bag,” said the 19-times grand slam champion.

“And then the only thing that maybe is missing is practice, but sometimes practice is overrated. It’s all about the matches at some stage. “I’m happy I’m playing as well as I am this year on the match courts. At the end of that’s what matters because I spent hours and hours on the practice courts in the last year.”

Next up for the Swiss right-hander, who is seeking his third Rogers Cup title after triumphs in Toronto in 2004 and 2006, is Zverev after the fourth seed advanced with a 6-4, 7-5 win over Canada’s Denis Shapovalov.

Federer owns a 2-1 edge against Zverev in head-to-head meetings, most recently a 6-1, 6-3 win at Halle in June.

Zverev ended Shapovalov’s magical week on his third match point when the 18-year-old, who had been the story of the tournament after a stunning run that included an upset win over world number two Rafael Nadal, sent a backhand wide.

Shapovalov, who was born in Israel and moved to Canada before his first birthday, had a great chance at 4-3 in the second set but failed to convert on his three break points.

“I wasn’t too sharp on the big points,” said Shapovalov, who made headlines in February for inadvertently blasting a ball into an umpire’s face in a fit of rage during a Davis Cup quarter-final.

“My coach gave me one thing that I’m going to do on serve and forehand to control the tempo against Halep.

The Romanian, who beat Frenchwoman Caroline Garcia 6-4, 6-2 earlier on Saturday, showed some life in the sixth game of the second set when she fought off a match point and earned her only break but Svitolina quickly shut down any chance of a comeback.

“It was a very tough match for me mentally because it was the second time I was playing on this court today,” said Svitolina. —Reuters
