China to UN: We support Myanmar’s efforts for stability

China supports efforts by the Myanmar government to protect its national security and opposes the recent violent attacks in northern Rakhine State, Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi told UN Secretary-General Antonio Guterres.

The military response to insurgent attacks last month by the ARSA extremist terrorists, which has been described as a terrorist group, sent more than thousands of Muslims fleeing to neighbouring Bangladesh and thousands of ethnic people to temporary camps in southern Rakhine.

Myanmar’s government says about 400 people have been killed in the fighting. Britain, France and Australia urged Myanmar leader Daw Aung San Suu Kyi on Monday to push for an end to military operation. Her national security adviser said those who had fled could return, but the process had to be discussed.

Wang told Guterres at a meeting at the United Nations on Monday that China “understands and supports” Myanmar’s efforts to protect its security in Rakhine and hopes the “fire of war” can soon be extinguished, China’s Foreign Ministry said in a statement released on Tuesday.

Tatmadaw: ‘We will never again send trainees to Britain’

IN response to Britain’s recent suspension of its training programme in England for Myanmar soldiers due to the violence in Rakhine State, the Tatmadaw said yesterday it would recall the officers as soon as possible and will “never send any trainees to Britain, including trainees agreed on previously”.

“In this multi-party democratic era, the Tatmadaw is constantly striving for cooperating in friendly ways with armies from neighbouring countries, regional ones and international countries.

“Accordingly, five Myanmar military trainees are attending training in Britain. But due to the demand of Britain parliamentarians concerning the events which took place in Rakhine State, the military officials will be deported”.

The five Myanmar soldiers arrived at the Myanmar military attaches office in London on Wednesday.

The Tatmadaw will recall them as soon as possible and said they will “never ever send any trainees to Britain (in the future)”, according to a statement released yesterday by the Tatmadaw True News Information Committee. —GNLM

Union Minister meets departmental staff in Nay Pyi Taw

THE meeting between the Union Minister for Information and staff from the state-run newspapers of the News and Periodicals Enterprise and Nay Pyi Taw Printing Press under the Printing and Publishing Department was held yesterday at Bo Waizya Hall, Kyemon Press, in Zeyar Thiri township in Nay Pyi Taw.

Following the meeting, the Union minister also met with staff from MRTV at 1 pm at the MRTV auditorium in Yangon.

At the meeting at Bo Waizya Hall, Dr. Pe Myint said, “Personnel from the News and Periodicals Enterprise need to strive for issuing your articles into prestigious papers which can stand on its own in accord with journalism ethics and for describing voices of the people and national brethren, the government’s stance and performances. Being a non-stop routine, stress can occur to the staff. As newspapers are being issued daily to keep pace with the time, mistakes can be made occasionally. So, it must be co-operated collectively to be free from errors.”

The Union Minister added, “Staff under the Printing and Publishing Department need to strive for making high-quality productions and publishing and for upgrading production level by competing with outside businesses. Sarpay Beikman under the Printing and Publishing department is continuously making performances for the development of the literary world. Very soon, it will hold seminars in cooperation with the organisation of publishing house-owners.”

Afterward, U Kyaw Soe, Managing Director of News and Periodicals Enterprise and U Aung Myo Myint, Director-General of the Printing and Publishing Department, clarified the situations of accomplishment over the submissions of the staff. Following that, the Union Minister made a closing address.

At the meeting at the MRTV Auditorium, the Union Minister said, “Formerly, MRTV stood as the sole national television in the country. But starting from a century ago, two private media were granted to run the television industry. MRTV needs to change in accord with the changing times after careful consideration, by studying international techniques. I want our media to firmly stand as a national media. Discussions are under way as to whether it will stand as public-oriented media or it will stand as a government media. The present meeting is designed for making present performances convenient.” Officials and staff then submitted advantages and disadvantages experienced in performing the tasks, and U Myint Htwe, Director-General of MRTV, explained the tasks to be implemented presently and the tasks to be performed in the future.—Myanmar News Agency

China to UN: We support Myanmar’s efforts for stability

China expresses sympathy with those who have fled into Bangladesh and will send humanitarian aid to Bangladesh, Wang said.

“China advocates Myanmar and Bangladesh resolving the problem via dialogue and consultation,” the Foreign Ministry cited Wang as saying.

“China is willing to continue promoting peace talks in its own way and hopes the international community can play a constructive role to ease the situation and promote dialogue,” he said.

Mr. Wang Yi also told his Indonesian counterpart there should be understanding of the Myanmar government’s efforts to protect social stability and that “violent incidents” in Rakhine state are unacceptable, state media said.

The two met on the sidelines of a United Nations meeting on Tuesday, state news agency Xinhua said on Wednesday. China and Myanmar have close economic and diplomatic ties and China has defied expectations that democratisation in Myanmar could lead to weaker relations between the two countries.

The meeting between Chinese Foreign Minister Wang Yi and U.N. Secretary-General Antonio Guterres came one day after State Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi called on the world community to help find peace for Myanmar at a diplomatic briefing in Nay Pyi Taw.

In reaction to her address, diplomats in Myanmar acknowledged that her address contains a very positive message.

“There is no evidence of ethnic cleansing in Rakhine, only a constructive approach can solve the Rakhine issue, which is complicated,” said Russian Ambassador to Myanmar Mr. Nikolay A. Listopadov.

“The Chinese government’s position is very clear. We support the Myanmar government in its efforts for restoring peace and stability in Rakhine,” said Chinese Ambassador to Myanmar Mr. Hong Liang. —GNLM/Reuters
Tourists arrivals increase in Kayin State

PEACE is the reason why there is increase in the number of tourist arrival in Kayin State, officials said. Kayin State is located in southeastern Myanmar with residents primarily descended from the Kayin race and other minority ethnic groups. Progress in the peace process has led to regional stability as well as better roads and communication, officials said.

With the increasing number of tourists, businessmen are more interested to invest in hotels and guest houses this year compared to last year.

In 2016, Kayin State received a total of 159,000 tourists and over 574,000 local visitors. As of August 2017, a total of 156,000 tourists and over 374,000 local visitors visited Kayin State, according to the deputy director of the Hpa-an branch office of the Hotels and Tourism Department.

In 2016, there were only 20 hotels in Hpa-an Township. With the increasing number of tourists, the number of hotels has climbed up to 23. Kayin State is one of the famous states in Myanmar because of its scenic beauty, the hospitality of the local people and their unique culture. Hpa-an has become one of the popular destination.

There are many natural caves and waterfalls lying on the western bank of Thanlwin river that attract nature-loving tourists. Tourists visit Hpa-an from Yangon and can return in one day trip.

Myanmar’s sterculia sold at lower prices for its poor quality

Myanmar’s sterculia gum fetches only one-third of the price compared to other types in the international market because of poor quality and low processing technology, according to a report in the Myawady Daily yesterday.

Currently, the price of sterculia gum is between Ks30,000 and Ks80,000 per viss, depending on the quality, much less than that in the international market. Local growers are cultivating Myanmar’s sterculia gum on a commercial scale. The agricultural department and the land records department will conduct a survey to find out the exact acreage and yield per acre of sterculia gum farming. “Although we can get a higher price for sterculia gum, we still lack the quality and technology. Therefore, our sterculia gum price is lower than that in the international market. We cannot export it legally now. But if we can export it legally, we will get new markets and Myanmar’s sterculia gum will fetch a better price”, said U Ohn Myint, a local sterculia gum grower in Magway Region.

Myanmar’s sterculia gum is mainly grown in Mandalay, Sagaing, Magway and Bago regions, it is learnt.—GNLM

THE GLOBAL NEW LIGHT OF MYANMAR

MYANMAR’S bamboo annually earns US$5 million, said U Ohn Win, Union Minister for Natural Resources and Environmental Conservation.

The Union Minister made the remarks at a World Bamboo Day event held at the Excel River View Hotel on Monday in Thanlyin Township.

Myanmar’s income from bamboo is less than that of China and Thailand. China’s bamboo production fetches US$36 billion, he said. There are over 1.7 million hectares of bamboo in Bago Yoma Mountain, Rakhlime Yoma Mountain and Taninthayi Region. Myanmar is still endeavoring to systematically manage bamboo farms to be able to produce marketable bamboo products. Myanmar’s bamboo products are exported to Pakistan, Bangladesh, Singapore and South Korea. Myanmar initiated the Sustainable Development Project for Bamboo Resources in cooperation with the Thailand International Cooperation Agency in 2016. The project will be implemented up to 2018.

Some bamboo products—bamboo charcoal, bamboo fishing rods, and bamboo shoots cannot be exported due to a lack of packaging techniques. If suitable packing methods can be upgraded, large volumes of bamboo shoots can be shipped because there is adequate demand, the ministry said. But industrial development is required to improve the bamboo market. Currently, only bamboo baskets are exported, said U Kyaw Thu, the chairman of Myanmar Bamboo and Bamboo Entrepreneurs Association. Natural bamboo forests also need to be preserved, and a bamboo farming zone should be established, officials said. To keep up with Thailand’s and China’s bamboo exports, building a factory for bamboo products is a must, he continued.—GNLM

Watermelon planned to enter more export markets

MYANMAR’S watermelons will soon penetrate the markets of the UAE and Russia, according to a report yesterday in City News.

The Myanmar Watermelon and Muskmelon Growers and Exporters Association plans to introduce Myanmar’s watermelon and muskmelon to foreign merchants at a fruit fair which will be held in Dubai in February. More than 60,000 tons of watermelon were exported to foreign trade partners during the last fiscal year, officials said. Continued efforts are being exerted to boost the volume of exports. Myanmar’s watermelon harvest period is different from other countries, and can this extend into more markets, said an official.

Currently, watermelon growers are receiving watermelon growing methods to produce higher-quality watermelons, allowing them to earn more as they enter new markets, said a watermelon grower. Apart from Kayah and Chin states, watermelon is cultivated across the country. Watermelon can be grown throughout the year with systematic ways of irrigation.—GNLM

Japan purchases five Myanmar’s products at a high price

JAPAN, trading partner with Myanmar, primarily purchases shrimp, sesame seeds, green gram, pearl and natural rubber at a high price, according to a report of Myanna Alinn. Myanmar Trade Promotion Organization and Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) has discussed matters relating to boosting export of those five items to Japan’s market, upgrade agro production technology and improve distribution channels. Myanmar mainly sells to Japan various shrimps which are naturally caught. Myanmar is the single market of Japan for sesame seeds. Myanmar’s green gram is also exported to Japan, said U Yan Naing Tun, the director-general of Commerce Ministry. Myanmar’s natural catch and traditional farming methods limit shrimp production. If farming methods is upgraded, there is likely to be an increase of about 10 per cent against traditional farming. Market competition in export market needs to be always considered.—Zar Lin Thu (AMIA)

Advanced purchases using bank deposits smooth trade flow

ADVANCED purchase and sale of vegetables have been put into practice in commodity deposits by making a deposit of 10 per cent of the goods’ value from both sellers and buyers at Myanmar Citizens Bank, facilitating trade flow and minimizing fraud, according to a report of Myanmar Alin.

This system of trading in advance with a deposit of 10 per cent of the total value has been performed in international countries, officials said. Advanced purchase and sales without use of a bank have a risk of fraud. Therefore, the new system with deposits made at a bank was begun at the Bayintnaung commodity depot in 2015. U Myo Thu, director of the Trade Promotion section of the Commerce of Ministry said that trading in trust does not make sense in external trade. Contracts are a must in international trade, in accord with trade rules and regulations. However, it does not mean a bank guarantee or pledge is a must to put up at the bank.

Even though there were more than 50 commodity depots in Myanmar as of last year, only a small number of depots has steady trade. There will be 13 commodity depots which will be opened. Panel discussions, courses and education talks are needed to effectuate the development in the depots.

Commodity depots need to control quality assurance of the goods. The trade system with 10 per cent deposit will be effective in export, said U Myint Nge, a merchant.

Each individual member of the Bayintnaung commodity depot will have to open an account at Myanmar Citizens Bank. If sellers and buyers want to make transaction with a pledge, both of them need to pay in 10 per cent of the total value and a code number will be issued by the bank.—Zar Lin Thu (AMIA)

12th meeting of Union Level JMC-U held

By Ye Khaung Nyunt

Standard operating procedure set by Union Level Joint Monitoring Committee (JMC-U) are to be observed as they are the lifeblood of the Peace Process.

CHAIRMAN of the Union Level Joint Monitoring Committee (JMC-U), Lt-Gen Yar Pyae said at the 12th meeting of JMC-U held at National Reconciliation and Peace Center in Yangon that Standard Operating Procedures and Terms of Reference set and approved by Union Level Joint Monitoring Committee (JMC-U) are to be strictly observed as they are the lifeblood of the Peace Process and only when SoP and ToR are respected will the peace process be achieved.

The JMC-U has already set the policy and SoP to be employed in the difficult situations, engagements and conflict that are encountered.

The 12th regular meeting of the JMC-U is being held for three days from 20-22 September. In the meeting, the discussion regarding organising local civilian monitors, holding workshops for the placement of the armed groups in order to avoid engagement, acquiring policy to review the SoP and ToR which had already been approved will be conducted, it is learnt.

JMC-U Vice Chairman 1 Saw Isaac Po from the ethnic armed groups stressed that mutual trust is very important and both parties need to observe the provisions dictated in the Nationwide Ceasefire Agreement.

In addition to acknowledging equality and mutual respect, it is also essential to implement the JMC-U agreements. It is known that JMC-U civilian members are conducting the programme to elevate the inclusion of civilians and promote capacity-building tasks. Only when the civilians stand smart as intermediary and monitor without bias between the two armed groups, will the JMC tasks be accomplished. Then, the grassroots people need to understand the NCA and it needs to build trust of people on the JMC works. The civilians have been suffering from the scourge of wars and they should be included in JMC as bold and resolute players, Saw Isaac Po added.

“I like to remark that JMC has been activated to some extent due to our effort and participation. Civilian monitors becomes important players now and the people are interested in and inclined to help JMC’s works,” explained the Vice Chairman 2, Saw Matthew Aye of JMC-U.

Yesterday’s meeting was attended by government representatives, members of JMC-U, representatives from ethnic armed groups of NCA signatories and civilian representatives.

Japan PM Abe to delay timing of achieving budget balance target

TOKYO — Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe is set to delay the timing for balancing a primary budget from the current fiscal 2020 to later in the decade, sources told Reuters on Wednesday, calling the government’s fiscal discipline into question.

Abe will unveil the decision on Monday at a news conference at which he is expected to announce a snap election, the government sources said on condition of anonymity because they are not authorized to speak to media.

Abe is expected to call the general election for 22 October to take advantage of a rebound in his damaged approval ratings and disarray in the opposition, ruling party and government sources said. The government has vowed to achieve the ambitious target of returning to a primary budget surplus in the fiscal year ending in March 2021, as a crucial step to rein in the world’s heaviest public debt burden at twice the size of Japan’s economy. Now, Abe plans to push back the timing to sometime in 2020s while prioritizing spending on education, innovation on human resources and productivity, the sources said, confirming an earlier report by the Nikkei daily and other domestic media.

A primary budget balance, which excludes new bond sales and debt servicing costs, is a key gauge of measuring how spending on policy measures is financed without relying on debt.

Some analysts say the loss of fiscal discipline could cause the government to pile pressure on the Bank of Japan to prolong monetary stimulus to keep borrowing costs ultra-low, which effectively help finance government debt.

That would further delay an exit from the BOJ’s quantitative easing, at a time when other major central banks — US Federal Reserve and European Central Bank — are shifting towards normalizing monetary policy.

But with massive government bond purchases by the central bank under its yield curve control policy, the bond market has already lost its price-setting mechanism that should serve as warning against weakening of fiscal discipline, they say.

“Japan’s fiscal discipline appears to be loosening steadily, which is worrying, while harmful rises in bond yields are unlikely to happen,” Yasunari Ueno, chief market economist at Mizuho Securities, noted in a report.

Some academics are even floating an idea that bonds held by the BOJ should be replaced with perpetual bonds, which would pave the way to virtually giving up on repaying the principal of government debt,” he added.

Analysts polled by Reuters earlier this month had expected the BOJ would not start scaling back stimulus anyway until late 2018 at the earliest as inflation remains stubbornly weak despite an improving economy.

Abe has told reporters he will make a decision on the snap election after he returns from the United States on 22 September.

Abe wants to go ahead with a planned rise in the nation’s sales tax to 10 per cent from 8 per cent in 2019 and use some of the revenue to create a “social security system for all generations”, which would invest in education while decreasing the proportion of sales tax revenue used to pay down government debt, other sources have said.

Using less tax revenue to pay down debt, however, would make it more difficult to balance the budget. “We have to maintain fiscal discipline, regardless,” Finance Minister Taro Aso told reporters on Monday when asked about reports of such a shift.

Japan’s biggest bank sells off stake in Malaysia’s CIMB Group

TOKYO — The Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi UFJ, Japan’s largest bank, announced Wednesday that it has sold its entire 4.6 per cent stake in Malaysia’s CIMB Group Holdings Berhad, Malaysia’s second largest financial services provider.

The bank, owned by Mitsubishi UFJ Financial Group Inc, cited tightened international financial regulations and other changes in business environment as the reason for its disinvestment. It sold its 425,063,345 shares in CIMB for approximately 2.56 billion ringgit (about 68 billion yen) as part of MUFJ’s “re-imagining strategy” released in May which included a review of overseas investments.

The Japanese bank has had close relations with CIMB for more than 40 years, ever since one of its predecessors, Samwa Bank, invested in one of CIMB’s predecessor banks in 1974.

It said that despite its divestment in CIMB, the two banks will continue collaborating in broad-ranging areas and the Malaysian bank will remain one of its alliance partners in Southeast Asia.

The Bank of Tokyo-Mitsubishi UFJ has its regional headquarters in Singapore. It has majority-ownership in one of Thailand’s major banks, the Bank of Ayudhya, or Krungsri, with nearly 700 branches. The CIMB Group, headquartered in Kuala Lumpur, has the most extensive retail branch network in Southeast Asia, with around 900 branches, and its investment banking arm is also one of the Asia-Pacific region’s largest investment banks. The two banks have collaborated to date in such areas as Islamic finance, trade finance and infrastructure projects.—Kyodo News

Potential prospects for Myanmar’s future

Khin Maung Oo

THE State Counsellor gave a speech regarding efforts made by the Government for national reconciliation and the peace process, at the Myanmar International Convention Center 2 in Nay Pyi Taw at 10 am on 19 September 2017. All diplomats accredited to Myanmar as well as Union Ministers and senior government officials, Myanmar citizens all over the country watched and listened to the State Counsellor’s speech which was broadcast live on national television as well as on FM radio stations.

The speech delivered in English seemed to have been designed to make our people and those from the international community well convinced of the actualities regarding Myanmar affairs. And, it was very encouraging and heart-warming to have seen our people listen to her speech enthusiastically.

In her address, the State Counsellor emphasized that the ultimate goal of all Myanmar citizens was peace and stability of the nation, peaceful democratic transition and national development. She made an appeal to international community and all friends of Myanmar to understand and take heart-felt consideration for the national aims and the problems that the country was now facing. She disclosed that constructive new ways and means were urgently needed to be sought for national peace and stability. These are the facts and suggestions of great importance to be implemented.

At present, the most important thing is the affairs in the Rakhine State. The government is dealing strictly with humanitarian matters which are now being discussed by the international community, in accordance with the law. The State Counsellor invited the diplomats to come and see the actual situations on the ground, adding that displaced people who fled to Bangladesh would be accepted after scrutinizing their documents, in accord with the 1993 Agreement.

The nationwide address made by the State Counsellor will surely reduce worries of the international community, because it can point out constructively to accept genuine facts, without pessimistic views on Myanmar, and simultaneously it can make the world know the government’s actual performance in dealing with Rakhine Affairs and peace and stability of the Rakhine State.

In building up the nation, Myanmar is presently facing many challenges and difficulties, and the Union Government is solving them in a systematic way.

If and when any nation or any community wants Myanmar’s well-being they need to willingly and actively participate in Myanmar affairs with optimistic minds.

It seems that the international community views Rakhine State affairs only from the narrow perspective of human rights and the rights of only one particular type of people professing a particular religious belief. They seem to have forgotten or have chosen to ignore that fact that many other people live in the Rakhine State such as Hindus and some other ethnic national races which have been equally affected by the recent attacks of the ARSA terrorists. The events in the Rakhine State are important and urgent no doubt, but peace and stability in other parts of Myanmar are equally important for the stability and prosperity of the whole country.

To sum it up, the speech made by the State Counsellor provided a good summary of the events in the Rakhine State and the opinions and positions of the Union Government on the recent events. So, we firmly believe that it would go a long way to clear up any existing misunderstandings over Myanmar, thus bringing about effective co-operation from the part of the international community in general and the diplomatic corps in particular.

In Myanmar, Nature Can Help Communities Face Climate Challenges

Ryan Bartlett
Senior Specialist, Climate Resilience, World Wildlife Fund

THE impacts of climate change are becoming an ever starker reality around the world, with 2016 on pace to be the hottest year in human history - topping the previous record set just last year. While the Paris Agreement represents significant progress toward addressing this global challenge, international leaders need to accelerate emissions reductions to keep global temperature rise “well below 2°C above-pre-industrial levels and aiming for 1.5 degrees Celsius,” as called for in the landmark agreement.

And that need is more urgent than ever. With current greenhouse gas emissions levels, we are tracking toward a much more severe scenario: a planet that is 3 to 5°C degrees warmer by the end of the century and potentially much sooner. As we have already experienced with increasingly extreme and variable weather around the world—from unprecedented heat waves to increasingly frequent and intense “1,000-year” floods occurring year after year—even just 1 degree Celsius of warming yields devastating impacts on humans and wildlife.

Building resilience to these increasing extremes and many more unavoidable effects of warming is imperative. It is especially important in developing countries like Myanmar, where millions of subsistence farmers with limited access to services and poor infrastructure are disproportionately vulnerable. By some metrics, Myanmar is the second most vulnerable country to extreme hazards like floods and extreme storms. I have seen this first hand through our engagement with local communities in the dry zone towns of Pakokku, where changing rainfall patterns have already made farming in an arid region even more difficult, forcing people to move to the capital as climate refugees.

As we are increasingly seeing around the world, one of the best ways to help communities like these adapt to such changes by working with nature to increase resilience, from providing coastal defenses against storms to reducing flood risk for millions of people downstream. Today, Myanmar is in a unique position to do exactly this: it is transitioning to democracy and rapidly growing its economy after decades of military rule— which effectively limited economic growth and exploitation of its natural resources for the past 50 years. As a result, the country now has an opportunity in its development trajectory to increase prosperity for millions while also “baking in” climate resilience from the start, in part through protecting its abundant natural wealth. That’s wonderful news for conservationists worldwide as Myanmar is home to some of the last truly pristine, healthy ecosystems and rich biodiversity on our planet.

When other nations faced critical decision points like these in the past, a deficit of information about the value in preserving nature often contributed to unsustainable development outcomes that also contributed to increased vulnerability to climate change. The economic benefits of natural resource exploitation through carbon intensive and extractive industries like timber, mining, and oil and gas have always been well understood. Yet, those associated with protecting and conserving ecosystems and biodiversity and enhancing climate resilience — clean air, water, carbon sequestration, local climate control, flood reduction, or coastal defenses against extreme storms — have been more obscure.

But now we have the power (and the data) to change that dynamic. Now common technological tools, like geospatial information systems (GIS), which make use of high-quality satellite imagery, are being used in ever more innovative ways to help us put prices on these benefits. As a result, today conservation scientists can produce comparable, “apples to apples” assessments of the economic values provided by intact, healthy ecosystems. And every year, we are learning new ways to conserve nature as new research and studies add to our understanding of how benefits from on-the-ground preservation can outweigh those from extraction and exploitation.

Police break up riots who disturb shipping aid to IDPs

Police dispersed a crowd who disturbed a boat carrying aid under the program of Red Cross Movement in Sittway yesterday, detaining eight for interrogation, according to local authorities.

The police in riot gear broke up the crowd comprising about 300 people and controlled the situation around 11 pm, according to a statement of the Information Committee of the government.

Some police were injured in the incident but they are not in critical condition.

The riot began when about fifty people forced an in-charge of the ICRC to unload the aid from a boat at a jetty in Sittway and prevented the boat from leaving while U Naing Wai Lin, the in-charge of ICRC is loading aid including solar lamps, sanitary towels, clothes, blankets, tarpaulin, water buckets, mosquitos nets and kitchen utensils weighing about 50 tons in total.

Local authorities and Buddhist monks tried to leave the boat by negotiation.

However, people gathered to see the situation reaching the number about 300 at 8 pm and some threw stones and Molotov at the riot police. About 200 police used 20 12-bolt greener and water cannons to disperse the crowd. Some people from the crowd threw homemade arrows, locally called ‘Jingali” with the use catapulls. Currently, security forces are stationed in Sittway providing security to local people and the situation under control.—Myanmar News Agency

In Myanmar, Nature Can Help Communities Face...

We have much more to learn, especially from a largely under-studied element of this growing field: how exactly can intact ecosystems help us adapt to our changing climate? That’s why I’m here at the IUCN World Conservation Congress this week. I’m here to talk with conservation practitioners and leaders from around the world about our efforts to develop this kind of new information for decision-makers in Myanmar.

WWF is working with diverse partners and the national government to create nationwide maps of Myanmar’s ecosystem services and explain how these natural systems - mangroves, forests, watersheds - buffer against both immediate and longer term climate change impacts. Our analysis shows how Myanmar’s intact inland forests provide clean water by reducing soil runoff into rivers and streams, reduce flooding by retaining and slowing down water flows, and how its coastal mangroves and reefs provide key protection against increasingly extreme storms.

With this improved understanding of the services these natural systems provide, Myanmar can make progress toward its goal of developing a green, resilient economy. And, it can become a model for how to leapfrog over standard brown development and manage the ever increasing impacts of climate change in the 21st century.

WWF will continue working with our partners in Myan- mar and around the world to provide information on the enormous benefits nature provides to local livelihoods and national economies. In this way, we can help governments around the world make similar investment and planning deci- sions that reduce the difficult trade-offs between economic growth and ecosystem conservation, all while building resilience to the effects of our changing climate.

This post is part of a series on the World Conservation Congress taking place this week. Held every four years, it brings together about 6,000 people, including heads of state, government officials, business leaders, representatives from indigenous groups, scientists, academics, influencers, educators, artists and NGOs, from all over the world to discuss and decide on solutions to the world’s most pressing environmental challenges.

Hong Kong in fourth place for FDI in Myanmar

Hong Kong placed fourth in the foreign direct investment sector in Myanmar with five Hong Kong enterprises in the hotel sector, according to a report in Tuesday’s City News.

The statistic was revealed during a visit to Myanmar by a delegation led by Hong Kong Chief Executive Mrs. Carrie Lam on Friday following an invitation of Vice President U Myint Swe. The delegation arrived at Ministry of Hotels and Tourism in Nay Pyi Taw on Friday and met with Union Min- ister U Ohn Maung, who said that Hong Kong has invested in five projects in Myanmar’s hotel industry and welcomed further investment from Hong Kong.

The Union Minister said the country also needs human resource development aid from Hong Kong. Myanmar is rich in tourist sites, and so there are many chances to attract Hong Kong travellers. Hong Kong investors are expanding their businesses and are interested to invest in the hotel sector, the Union Minister said.

At the same meeting on Friday, Mrs. Carrie Lam said they are planning to make Hong Kong into training hub and offer scholarships to ASEAN countries for human resource development.

The Hong Kong chief executive and the Union Minister also exchanged ideas to preserve historical buildings and come on with a plan to intro- duce cultural heritage and promote bilateral tourism, includ- ing ocean cruises. Since 1988, 156 Hong Kong enterprises with a total estimated investment of US$7.7 billion have been made in Myanmar, according to statistics of the Myanmar Investment Commission.—GNLM

At UN, Britain to push internet firms to remove extremist content quicker

UNITED NATIONS — The leaders of Britain, France and Italy will push social media companies on Wednesday to remove “terrorist content” from the internet within one to two hours of it appearing because they say that is the period when most material is spread.

British Prime Minister Theresa May, French President Emmanuel Macron and Italian Prime Minister Paolo Gentiloni will raise the issue at an event on the sidelines of the annual gathering of world leaders at the United Nations.

Internet companies including Facebook Inc (FB.O), Microsoft Corp (MSFT.O) Alphabet Inc’s (GOOGL.O) Google said they will attend the meeting.

Google will be represented by general counsel Kent Walker, who will also speak on behalf of a recently formed industry group called the Global Internet Forum to Counter Terrorism.

Facebook is sending Monika Bickert, head of global policy management, who is expected to make remarks reiterating the companies’ commitment to combating online extremism.

Microsoft is sending Dave Heiner, a senior policy advisor.

The European Union has threatened legislation if internet companies do not step up efforts to police what is available on the web.

The British UN mission said May will welcome progress, but urge companies to go “further and faster” to stop groups like Islamic State spreading material that promotes extremism or shows how to make bombs or attack pedestrians with vehicles.

“Terrorist groups are aware that links to their propaganda are being removed more quickly, and are placing a greater emphasis on disseminating content at speed in order to stay ahead,” May plans to tell the event.

“Industry needs to go further and faster in automating the detection and removal of terrorist content online, and developing technological solutions which prevent it being uploaded in the first place,” she will say.

Responding to pressure from governments in Europe and the United States after a spate of militant attacks, key firms created the Global Internet Forum to Counter Terrorism in June to share technical solutions for removing extremist content and work more with counter-terrorism experts.

Twitter said it had removed 299,649 accounts in the first half of this year for the “promotion of terrorism”, a 20 per cent decline from the previous six months, although it gave no reason for the drop. Three-quarters of those accounts were suspended before posting their first tweet.

May said ahead of Wednesday’s event: “We need a fundamental shift in the scale and nature of our response — both from industry and governments — if we are to match the evolving nature of terrorists’ use of the internet.”

Brazil ex-president Lula charged with bribe-taking in automotive sector

RIO DE JANEIRO — Brazil’s former President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva and one of his former Minister for bribe-taking in exchange for extending incentives of automobile industry.

The denouncement was presented by the Federal Prosecution Office. With the decision, Lula and his former cabinet minister Gilberto Carvalho officially become defendants in the new corruption charge.

According to the prosecutors, Lula, Carvalho and other five are accused of favoring vehicle manufacturers through presidential decrees.

The prosecution office states that manufacturers Mitsubishi and Casa promised bribes of 6 million reals (1.9 million US dollars) to Lula and Carvalho in exchange for benefits of the automobile industry.

Lula denied all the accusations. “Former President Lula’s innocence will be acknowledged in this case as well, because he did not participate in any illicit acts. The Prosecution’s charges are immaterial,” said his lawyer, Cristiano Zanin.

The former president stands accused in at least five cases of corruption and was found guilty in keeping a fancy apartment bought with bribe money off the books. Lula denied the ownership of the apartment. His lawyers appealed to a superior court.

Lula intends to run for presidential candidacy again next year. His legal situation may block his way as planned.—Xinhua ■

Austria checking indications nine foreigners abducted in Libya in 2015 are dead

VIENNA — Austria said on Wednesday it had some evidence that nine foreign oilfield workers abducted by Islamist militants in Libya in 2015 were killed the same year, though it was still trying to verify the information. The four Filipinos, two Bangladeshis, one Austrian, one Czech and one Ghanaian worked at the al-Ghani oilfield for equipment firm VAOS, which specialises in Libya and has offices in Austria and Malta.

An Austrian Foreign Ministry spokesman said a crisis team was trying to verify information from a militant Islamist website suggesting that all or some of the hostages may have been killed in 2015. They were seized in March of that year. “We have some evidence that the worst is to be feared. We are working on verifying the information. It is still unclear what happened exactly to whom,” the spokesman said. Foreign Minister Sebastian Kurz had contacted the family of the Austrian man. “Even if it turns out that the evidence is correct it will be extremely difficult to retrieve bodies from the area where fighting continues,” the spokesman said. “It is nearly impossible to be ready for that date.”

The court on 1 September identified some procedural problems in a brief ruling but the key finding against the election board on Wednesday was that officials had announced results before being able to verify them.

Kenya has the region’s richest economy and is a diplomatic, trade and security hub for East Africa so the court’s ruling, as well as the fresh election currently scheduled for 17 October, is being closely watched. NAIROBI — Kenya’s Supreme Court on Wednesday criticised the election board for failing to verify official results of last month’s presidential election before announcing them but stopped short of saying there was rigging.

The court was offering a detailed ruling as to why it annulled the 8 August election and ordered a fresh presidential vote within 60 days. The 1 September decision was the first of its kind in Africa.

Election board officials had said incumbent President Uhuru Kenyatta won the contest by 1.4 million votes. Opposition leader Raila Odinga rejected the result and said he had won. He has also said the previous two elections were stolen from him.

Kenya has the region’s richest economy and is a diplomatic, trade and security hub for East Africa so the court’s ruling, as well as the fresh election currently scheduled for 17 October, is being closely watched.

On Monday, the French technology company supporting the election said it would be nearly impossible to be ready for that date.

The court on 1 September identified some procedural problems in a brief ruling but the key finding against the election board on Wednesday was that officials had announced results before being able to verify them.

Kenya used two parallel systems: a quick electronic tally vulnerable to typos and a slower paper system designed as a verifiable, definitive back-up. The official results were based on the electronic tally before the paper results were fully collated, the judges said.

The system was designed that way after a disputed 2007 presidential vote sparked violence that killed around 1,200 people and displaced around 600,000 more.

But the board overseeing the 2017 vote did not have all the tally forms when they announced official results, and some forms lacked security features like water marks, signatures or serial numbers, calling their authenticity into question, the court said.

“Not every irregularity, not every infraction of the law is enough to nullify an election. Were it so, there would not be any election in this country, or even the world, that would withstand judicial scrutiny,” said Chief Justice David Maraga.

But, he said, “these discrepancies were widespread ... the election did not meet the simple test ... we are unable to validate the result.” Judge Philomena Mwilu said the forms should have been quickly available for inspection, noting officials said thousands of forms from polling stations were still unavailable four days after the official results were announced.

“The board cannot therefore be said to have verified the results,” she said. “It is an inex- ecusable contravention ... of the election act.”

She also censured the board’s refusal to comply with court orders to open its computer servers, saying it meant that opposition claims of hacking or manipulation could be true.

“Noncompliance or failure by the board to do as ordered must be held against it,” she said.

But although the tallying process was questioned, voter registration, identification and voting all appeared to be “conducted in accordance with the law,” she said.

Opposition claims against Kenyatta were largely dismissed. Maraga said the opposition had failed to show evidence Kenyatta had campaigned using state resources or undue influence.

As judges spoke, police also used tear gas to disperse groups of rival political supporters holding demonstrations outside the Supreme Court.

The election re-run has divided Kenya, with many opposition supporters celebrating it and the president and some members of the ruling party criticising it harshly. On Tuesday evening, Deputy President William Ruto tweeted: “So has CJ taken sides? Listening to the tone, language & drift of (Chief Justice David) Maraga’s lecture the only phrase missing is NASA HAO! TIBIN! & TIALALA!” — phrases that are a rallying call for the opposition coalition.

Earlier, the chief justice told a news conference that judges were getting death threats and the police were not offering adequate protection, an allegation that the chief of police denied.— Reuters
Desperate night search for children in Mexico school ruins after quake

MEXICO CITY — Desperate parents and rescue workers pulled through rubble in a floodlit search on Wednesday for dozens of young children feared buried under a Mexico City school destroyed by the country’s most lethal earthquake in a generation.

The magnitude 7.1 shock killed at least 216 people, nearly half of them in the capital, 32 years to the day after a devastating 1985 quake and less than two weeks after a powerful tremor killed nearly 100 people in the south of the country.

Among the twisted concrete and steel ruin of the Enrique Rebsamen school, soldiers and firefighters found 22 dead children and two adults, while another 30 children and 12 adults were missing, President Enrique Pena Nieto said. There were chaotic scenes at the school as parents clung to hope their children had survived. “They keep pulling kids out, but we know nothing of my daughter,” said 32-year-old Adriana D’Fargo, her eyes red after hours waiting for news of her seven-year-old. Three survivors were found at around midnight.

“Relatives of Fatima Navarro, one soldier shouted cupped hands at the school the Coapa district in the south of the city. ‘Fatima is alive!’ The earthquake toppled dozens of buildings, broke gas mains and sparked fires across the city and other towns in central Mexico. Falling rubble and billboards crushed cars. Parts of colonial-era churches crumbled in the state of Puebla, to the south of the capital, where the US Geological Survey (USGS) located the quake’s epicenter. As the earth shook, Mexico’s Popocatépetl volcano, visible from the capital on a clear day, had a small eruption. On its slopes, a church in Atizapán collapsed during mass, killing 15 people, Puebla Governor Jose Antonio Gali said. US President Donald Trump mentioned the earthquake in a tweet, saying: ‘God bless the people of Mexico City. We are with you and will be there for you.’

After night fall in Mexico City, a metropolitan region of some 20 million people, prepared to sleep in the streets while authorities and volunteers set up tents to collect distribution centers to distribute food and water. Volunteers, soldiers and firefighters formed human chains and dug with hammers and picks to find dust-covered survivors and dead bodies in the remains of apartment buildings, schools and a factory.

With power out in much of the city, the work was carried out in the dark or with flashlights and generators. Rescue workers requested silence as they listened for signs of life. Emergency personnel and equipment were being deployed across affected areas so that ‘throughout the night we can continue aiding the population and eventually find people beneath the rubble,’ Pena Nieto said in a video posted on Facebook earlier on Tuesday evening.

In Obrera, central Mexico City, people applauded when rescuers managed to retrieve four people alive, with cheers of ‘si se puede’ — ‘yes we can’ — ringing out. Volunteers continued arriving throughout the night, following calls from the civil protection agency; the Red Cross and firefighters.

The quake had killed 86 people in the capital by early Wednesday morning, according to Civil Protection chief Luis Felipe Puente — fewer than he had previously estimated. In Morelos State, just to the south, 71 people were killed, with 43 in Puebla.

Another 16 people were reported killed in the states of Mexico, Guerrero and Oaxaca. As many as 4.6 million homes, businesses and other facilities had lost electricity; according to national power company Comisión Federal de Electricidad, including 40 percent of homes in Mexico City.

Moises Amador Mejia, a 44-year-old employee of the civil protection agency, was working late into the night to rescue people trapped in a collapsed building in Mexico City’s bohemian Condesa neighborhood.

“The idea is to stay here until we find who is inside. Day and night,” he said.

London’s Parliament Square to get its first statue of a woman

LONDON — A century after she successfully campaigned to win women the right to vote, British suffragette Millicent Fawcett will become to first women honoured with a statue in London’s Parliament Square.

Plans to erect the bronze monument next to those of Winston Churchill, Nelson Mandela and nine other historic male figures received the final go-ahead on Tuesday, London City Hall said. Authorities hoped to unveil the ‘long overdue’ statue in time for the centenary of the 1918 Representation of the People Act, which gave some women the right to vote for the first time, said London’s mayor, Sadiq Khan.

“We want this statue to depict the strength and determination of the women who dedicated their lives to the fight for women’s suffrage and to inspire many generations to come,” Khan said in a statement. Fawcett, who formed the National Union of Women’s Suffrage Societies in 1889, spent decades advocating for equal rights for women, including voting rights and access to higher education. The idea for the statue gained momentum following an online petition which garnered more than 80,000 signatures and was backed by Harry Potter author JK Rowling and actress Emma Watson. The contemporary monument will depict Fawcett at the age of 50 holding a placard reading “courage calls to courage everywhere” — a quote from a speech she gave following the death of fellow suffragette, Emily Davison, who died after running out in front of the king’s horse at the 1913 Epsom Derby.

Designed by Turner Prize-winning artist Gillian Wearing it will be the first created by a woman to adorn the iconic square in front of Britain’s houses of parliament. “I am really delighted that planning has been granted, now Millicent Fawcett’s statue can stand as an equal amongst male statues in Parliament Square,” said Wearing.

Fawcett led a peaceful campaign for equal rights including petitions, lobbying members of parliament and non-violent protests. The movement gave rise to the more radical suffragettes, whose tactics included hunger strikes, arson and bomb attacks.

“We need statues of women in all our town squares and major cities. Who we commemorate and celebrate says a great deal about who and what we value,” said Sam Smethers, chief executive of the Fawcett Society which campaigns for women’s rights.

China, Singapore look to put difficulties behind them

BEIJING — China and Singapore on Tuesday sought to put recent difficulties in their relationship over Taiwan in the past as Singapore’s Prime Minister Lee Hsien Loong began a trip to Beijing.

Singapore is not a claimant to any disputed part of the South China Sea but is home to the biggest port in Southeast Asia, and has made clear its open economy depends on continued free navigation in the area.

China is also suspicious of Singapore’s good military relations with the United States and self-ruled Taiwan.

Meeting in the Great Hall of the People, Chinese Premier Li Keqiang told Lee that China and Singapore had maintained mutual respect.

Singapore, Li said, is an important member of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, and next year will be rotating chair of ASEAN.

“I trust this will inject new energy into not just China-Singapore relations but also China-ASEAN relations,” he said.

China is worried it could face fresh criticism over its actions in the South China Sea when Singapore becomes ASEAN’s chair, and is putting pressure on the city-state to make sure that doesn’t happen, people familiar with the situation have told Reuters.

Lee said he was grateful for the attention to the bilateral relationship but also for the “opportunity to discuss how to work together in the regional context and with ASEAN.”

Singapore hopes it will be able to bring China and ASEAN closer together, Lee added.

The visit of Lee so close to the opening of next month’s Communist Party Congress demonstrates the maintenance of high level visits between the two countries, said Bai Tian, the vice director of the Asian department at the Chinese Foreign Ministry.

“This is an important political signal,” Bai said.

Overall development of bilateral ties was fairing well, and both leaders agreed to “strengthen co-operation and cooperation on international and regional matters,” according to a readout of the meeting provided by the Chinese foreign ministry.

The United States and Singapore announced an enhanced defence relationship in late 2015, which included deployments of long range P-8 surveillance planes out of Singapore - aircraft which frequently track Chinese submarines.

Singapore also has close though unofficial ties with self-ruled Taiwan, which Beijing regards as a Chinese province.

Tensions between the two countries began to burst into the open last November when Hong Kong port authorities impounded nine Singaporean armoured military vehicles being shipped home from training grounds in Taiwan.

Hong Kong released the vehicles earlier this year amid rare open debates in both Singapore and China about a deteriorating relationship.

Blast inside fireworks godown kills 4 in northern India

NEW DELHI — At least four people were killed and five others injured after a blast went off inside a fireworks godown in northern Indian state of Punjab, police said on Wednesday.

The blast took place at Sular Gharat in Sangrur district, about 137 km southwest of Chandigarh, the capital city of Punjab.

“Four people were killed and five others injured after a blast triggered inside fireworks godown,” a police official said.

“The blast took place at around 9:30 pm (local time) yesterday.”

The blast triggered fire inside the godown. Authorities rushed fire tenders and rescue teams to the spot, following the blast.

Officials said several laborers were present inside the godown at the time of blast.

Some houses in the vicinity were also damaged in the incident, reports said.

Accidental explosions are common at Indian fireworks factories and shops.

Chances of fire in Indian factories and buildings are often high as owners usually ignore safety standards vis-a-vis fire.

Firecrackers are set off during festivals, weddings and other merry-making ceremonies in India.

Avril Lavigne, Bruno Mars named ‘most dangerous’ in online searches

LOS ANGELES — Pop singers Avril Lavigne and Bruno Mars topped a list of celebrities on Tuesday ranked the most dangerous to search for online because of results that could expose fans to malicious websites.

Cyber security company McAfee said singers Carly Rae Jepsen, Zayn Malik and Celine Dion were also in the top five of their annual list because searches for their names can lead fans to click on suspicious links that expose them to malware.

It said that searching for “Avril Lavigne free mp3” results in a 22 per cent chance of landing on a malicious website. Lavigne, 32, who found fame in 2002 with the hit single “Complicated,” has been off the celebrity scene for a number of years because of Lyme disease which she has said left her bedridden.

However, she said in 2016 that she is planning to release a new album in 2017 — her first in four years — apparently leading to increased searches for news about her music.

The 2017 McAfee study was dominated by musicians but actors who made the top 25 list included “Pitch Perfect” star Anna Kendrick, Jennifer Lopez and rising star Hailee Steinfeld.

“In today’s digital world, we want the latest hit albums, videos, movies and more immediately available on our devices,” Gary Davis, McAfee’s vice president of global consumer marketing, said in a statement.

He said consumers should slow down and consider the risks. —Reuters

Tommy Hilfiger closes out London Fashion Week with ‘rock circus’ show

LONDON — US designer Tommy Hilfiger closed out London Fashion Week with a rock-themed show held at a venue famous for classic rock concerts, featuring model and social media star Gigi Hadid as the centerpiece of the event.

The show — dubbed “TommyNow” — represented Hilfiger’s third collaboration with Hadid, with whom he designed the “TommyxGigi” collection that was on display at Tuesday’s event, in addition to the Hilfiger label’s spring/summer 2018 styles.

The collection was a rock and grunge-infused take on the traditional “preppy” styles — clothing associated with upmarket US schools and universities — that have come to be associated with Hilfiger.

These included cheerleader skirts and letterman jackets, offset with studded leather shoes and thigh-high socks, as well as T-shirts and woolly hats reminiscent of 1980s rock band tour merchandise.

“TommyNow continues to put the consumer at the heart of the event, fusing fashion, pop culture and entertainment, and connecting with our global fans in an authentic way,” Hilfiger told Vogue magazine before the show.

Hadid, who has over 35 million Instagram followers, was one of the highest-profile models to grace the London Fashion Week catwalks this season.

She was joined by her sister Bella and brother Anwar, in a show that saw models walk through the audience as well as on the runway which ran through the center of the venue’s “in the round” stage.

Hilfiger’s show was a “see now, buy now” event - a recent trend in the fashion industry that sees labels make outfits displayed in catwalk shows available to consumers to purchase immediately.

Viewers watching the event live online were able to click on any outfit they chose and purchase the items right away.

Hilfiger’s autumn 2016 “Tommy Pier” show in New York featured a Ferris wheel and a range of fun-park amusements, while “TommyLand,” the spring show held in Los Angeles this year featured roller skaters, skateboarders, acoustic musicians and fire-breathing performers.

Hilfiger is one of the best-known names in the U.S. apparel business, with over 1,600 retail outlets in the Americas, Europe and Asia. The company, which is now owned by clothing giant PVH, reported global retail sales of $8.6 billion in 2016.

Hilfiger, along with Italian label Emporio Armani, were the most prominent international brands that chose to forego showing collections at other fashion weeks — New York and Milan respectively — to participate in the London event this season.

Their participation gave the event a boost, as Britain’s fashion industry — which experts say contributes £28 billion ($37 billion) to the country’s economy — faces uncertainty as the UK negotiates its exit from the European Union. —Reuters

Taylor Swift shakes off copyright lawsuit as ‘ridiculous’

LOS ANGELES — Representatives for Taylor Swift on Tuesday rejected a copyright infringement lawsuit filed on Monday by two songwriters over Swift’s hit song “Shake It Off” as a “ridiculous claim.”

Songwriters Sean Hall and Nathan Butler said in a lawsuit filed in US federal court in Los Angeles that Swift’s song used the phrase “players, they gonna play, and haters, they gonna hate,” that they had coined for a 2001 song “Playas Gon’ Play” by R&B girl group 3LW.

Swift’s lyric from her 2014 hit “Shake It Off” is: “the players gonna play, play, play, play, and the haters gonna hate, hate, hate, hate, hate.”

“This is a ridiculous claim and nothing more than a money grab,” Swift’s representatives said in a statement. “The law is simple and clear. They do not have a case.”

Hall and Butler are seeking unspecified damages and a jury trial. Hall, a songwriter and producer for artists such as Justin Bieber and Maroon 5, and Butler, who has worked with artists such as Backstreet Boys and Luther Vandross, claimed that the combination of plays or players with hatas or haters was unique to its use in 3LW’s “Playas Gon’ Play.”

“In 2001 it was completely original and unique. Indeed, the combination had not been used in popular culture prior,” the lawsuit said.

Hall and Butler said the phrase accounts for about 20 percent of the lyrics of “Shake It Off.” They claimed that Swift and her team “undoubtedly had access to ‘Playas Gon’ Play’” before writing and releasing her song.

“Defendant Swift has admitted that she watched MTV’s TRL which promoted ‘Playas Gon’ Play,’” the lawsuit said.

It said “Playas Gon’ Play” debuted at No 7 on MTV’s Total Request Live in March 2001 and that 3LW’s debut album sold more than 1 million copies. —Reuters

IN preparation for the 2019 AFC Asian Cup qualifications, the Myanmar national football team will play a friendly match against Thailand at the Mandalay Thiri Stadium in Mandalay at 6:30 pm on 5 October, according to the Myanmar Football Federation website.

Previously, officials had scheduled to hold this friendly match in Yangon, but the match was rescheduled to play in Mandalay, giving fans in upper Myanmar the chance to enjoy an international friendly football match. As Thailand is one of the best football teams in Southeast Asia, there will be anticipation for an entertaining game in Mandalay, said a Myanmar football fan.

Myanmar will also play against Kyrgyzstan as one of the qualifying matches of the 2019 AFC Asian Cup in Yangon on 10 October. The friendly with Thailand will give needed experience for Myanmar in both game tactics and stamina. Myanmar has collected three points with one win and one loss in the 2019 AFC Asian Cup qualifiers.

Township Football Federations to be established soon

Kyaw Zin Lin

TOWNSHIP Football Federations across Myanmar will be established within a few months, according to the Myanmar Football Federation. The plan has already been agreed upon by all the officials of the Myanmar Football Federation at the meeting of executive committee members held on Sunday.

“Because of some weaknesses seen in our football at the previous championships and at international matches, we shall promote young new players from almost each and every township along with maintaining the sustainable development of our football”, said an MFF official.

Special training and internships for local football coaches will also be needed in Myanmar, he added. If the township federations will come out, the physical and intellectual manners of Myanmar youth will be developed, and Myanmar football quality will likely be changed to international standards.

West Brom have nothing to lose against City, says Pulis

LONDON — West Bromwich Albion will still be facing a formidable Manchester City line-up even if the Premier League pace-setters rest some of their key players for Wednesday’s League Cup clash at The Hawthorns, manager Tony Pulis has said.

“I don’t think we’ve got anything to lose. City are on fire at the moment and everybody will expect them to be close to winning the Premier League title,” Pulis told British media.

City skipper Vincent Kompany, who returned to training last week from a calf injury, could make his return to the line-up and Pulis had no doubts about the depth of Pep Guardiola’s squad.

“They are an exceptionally strong club in respect of depth so it’s going to be a tough game, but an enjoyable one,” he said.

“They have players who can play at the top level – from 1-24 they are really top-class players. If he makes a few changes, the players coming in will still be exceptional players, so we have to be right on it,” he added.

The manager said he would field a strong team in the hope of pulling off an upset.

“It will be a tough game but we’ll put out a strong team and going to have a go at it and give it the best we’ve got.”—Reuters

Messi leaves everybody but Valverde stunned in Eibar rout

MADRID — Lionel Messi’s four-goal masterclass in the 6-1 demolition of Eibar on Tuesday was warmly welcomed by Ernesto Valverde but held little surprise for the Barcelona coach.

The clinical Argentine Messi now has 11 goals in his last five games in all competitions and with record signing Ousmane Dembele injured and Luis Suarez rested, he put on a sensational show at Camp Nou to extend Barcelona’s La Liga lead.

“From a move where it looks like nothing is going to happen, he can create something good for us and bad for the opposition,” Valverde told reporters.

“Him scoring four goals isn’t news anymore. He’s done this time and time again, on many nights and in many games. He repeats it, he repeats it and he repeats it.”

Having coached Athletic Bilbao before joining Barcelo- na, Valverde has faced Messi multiple times, but for summer signing Nelson Semedo, experiencing the Argentine’s magic live is a relatively new sensation.

“Game by game he surprises us, there are no words for him,” said the Portuguese right back, who won the penalty which Messi converted for his first goal of the night in the 21st minute.

Messi’s second was a remarkably accurate finish inside Marko Dmitrovic’s far post just before the hour mark, while Paulinho played him in to stab home his hat-trick just three minutes later.

Barcelona’s rout was completed when Messi played a one-two with Aleix Vidal and tucked home in the 85th minute past the despairing Dmitrovic.

“He’s one of the most intelligent players I’ve seen on a football pitch. He’s extraordinary,” Valverde added on Movistar.

Denis Suarez, who scored and set up Paulinho with a corner for Barcelona’s second of the night, said, “Messi makes everything easy, he’s the best in the world, nobody has any doubt of that. I hope we can have him for a lot of time.”

Despite losing Neymar in the summer to Paris St Ger- main, suffering frustration in the transfer market and seeing president Josep Maria Bar- temont’s reign questioned, Messi’s virtuoso displays have kept Barcelona top of the table with a 100 per cent record. Cristiano Ronaldo is set to return for Real Madrid on Wednesday against Real Betis after his five-match domestic suspension, but Messi already heads the Pichichi chart of La Liga’s top scorers with nine goals.

Like Real Madrid, who are seven points behind the Catalans having played one less game, Ronaldo has to follow the trail Messi is blazing.—Reuters
