Ex-Japan PM calls for cooperation beyond bilateral ties with China

BEIJING — Former Japanese Prime Minister Yasuo Fukuda said Saturday the time is ripe for Tokyo to strengthen cooperation that goes beyond bilateral relations with Beijing, so as to help quicken the pace of putting them back on the right track of development.

"While the world is facing a period of significant change, Japan and China, both major countries having stable political foundations, are now given a golden chance to discuss, seek solutions and act together not just for bilateral issues, but also for those of Asia and the world," Fukuda said in a keynote speech at a forum on Sino-Japanese relations in Beijing.

Fukuda, who was prime minister for a year from September 2007, said China’s rise is at the center of the drastic change. He added there is no other choice than to help and try to understand each other, for the sake of working toward a more peaceful and prosperous international environment.

This year’s two-day forum, attended by dozens of former government officials, scholars and journalists of the two countries as panelists, comes amid the emergence between Tokyo and Beijing of the best atmosphere in years for the recovery of their relationship strained over territorial and historical issues.

In a similar vein, Jiang Jianqing, China’s minister of the State Council Information Office, urged that two Asian powers should never forget “the original intent of peace, friendship and cooperation” when their diplomatic ties were normalized 45 years ago.

Jiang said that economic cooperation has been an important “booster of China-Japan relations” and that the two countries should “together actively promote regional economic integration.”

To build an open world economy, he called on Japan to get deeply involved in Chinese President Xi Jinping’s ambitious One Belt, One Road initiative aimed at expanding trade and infrastructure networks in Asia, the Middle East, Europe and Africa.

The event, co-hosted by Japanese nonprofit think tank Genron NPO and the China International Publishing Group, started in 2006 as a public diplomacy platform, with the purpose of facilitating communication even at a time of government-to-government difficulties.

To better understand each other’s views, several panel discussions covering such topics as security, economics and media issues have been held each year in parallel.

Serious differences of opinion most obviously remained between security experts of the two countries, ranging from how best to approach North Korea to what is essential for maritime order.

Still, the results of an annual survey released by the two organizers on Thursday on the back of more high-level political contacts between Tokyo and Beijing in 2017, showed significant improvements in perceiving the current status of bilateral ties.

Japanese respondents who said bilateral ties in recent months are “good” or “relatively good” accounted for 44.9 per cent, down sharply from last year’s 71.9 per cent and dipping below 50 per cent for the first time in seven years.

The survey found 64.2 per cent of Chinese respondents held a negative perception of ties, compared with 79.2 per cent in 2016.—Kyodo News
To the global light of Myanmar

A friend in need is a friend indeed, as the saying reflects. However, in times of need and hardship, true friends will never change—now this and now that.

Our value, our culture, our own custom, our own culture, our own language, our own tradition, our own customs, our own religion, are consistent with a pathway towards new growth opportunities.

According to the Minister for Environmental Conservation, Dr. Sham Abd-Alhakim, the “need for stronger emphasis on environmental conservation and the transition of energy systems towards renewable energy sources” is key to achieving the Paris Agreement’s goal of limiting global temperature rise to 1.5°C or 2°C above pre-industrial levels.

FINANCE and sector ministers from more than 30 countries in Asia-Pacific joined private sector representatives to identify ways to scale up climate action and find innovative solutions to close funding gaps for climate adaptation and REDD+.

First Asia-Pacific Climate Week brings together governments and private sector to scale up climate action.

In his remarks, Mr. Ina Se-Amar, Deputy Secretary-General for Global Climate Action and Minister for Agriculture, Rural Development & Natural Disaster Risk Management, and Meteorological Services Agency, highlighted the meaningful discussions shared during the High-Level Segment on climate adaptation in the region toward a clear and unified commitment to the transition for low carbon, climate-resilient economies.

On the first day of the event, organized by ESCAP in partnership with COP25, UNFCCC, UNEP, IFC, JICA, IGES, and TEG, also underlined the need for increased political and financial support, in particular for private sector involvement. Mr. Alvaro Bertola, Permanent Observer to ESCAP, commended the scale-up climate action and the shift towards low carbon, climate-resilient economies and the need for urgent climate action.

To meet this critical need, ESCAP is supporting the implementation of the Region’s UN Climate Change Strategic Framework, which identifies key priorities for accelerating action across the region.

In a recent statement, ESCAP highlighted that regional cooperation on climate action is crucial for achieving the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and the Paris Agreement’s goals of holding the global temperature increase to well below 2°C, and to pursue efforts to limit the increase to 1.5°C.

Evidently, the need for increased political and financial support, in particular for private sector involvement, is urgent. This is why ESCAP is supporting the implementation of the Region’s UN Climate Change Strategic Framework, which identifies key priorities for accelerating action across the region.

Fake drugs, low-quality denatured alcohol worth over Ks1.8 billion destroyed

Since September 2006, collaborative efforts have been made by the Ministry of Home Affairs, Special Investigation Bureau and the Ministry of Industry to inspect illegal production and distribution of fake drugs. A wide variety of counterfeit medicines accounting to over Ks2.8 billion were seized during raids at the warehouses, shops and other locations. Of the total, some confiscated drugs were firstly destroyed after final decisions for relevant cases have been made by judges.

U Ko Ko Aung said: “This is the first time authorities destroyed billions worth of those drugs with fake labelling and privately produced low-quality denatured alcohol in many years.” Those fake drugs were mostly confiscated in Yangon and Mandalay regions, with the majority of them illegally imported from foreign countries. “Those fake drugs are likely to remain in the domestic market as we continue measures to uncover a network of counterfeit medication sales distribution chains mainly in the two big cities. Thanks to the operation, the sale of fake drugs significantly decreased in the market. Further investigation will continue in the market in an effort to eliminate counterfeit drugs,” U Ko Ko Aung continued.

U Ko Ko Aung also urges people to check medicines before they buy so as to protect themselves from the possible risks of fake drugs and expired medicines. A total of 287 kinds of medicines have been produced by Myanmar Pharmaceutical Factory, which was previously known as Burma Pharmaceutical Industry (BPI), mainly from Yangon and Kyaukse. Those factories manufacture new medicines each year. The majority of medicines are imported from foreign countries as Myanmar produces below 15 per cent of national requirements, including the private sector. The MPF currently produces only 10 per cent of total consumption.

In April, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) was also able to identify and seize more than Ks16.5 million worth of sub-standard alcohol (spirits) produced and distributed without permission. The value of the confiscated fake BPI medicines are a record high throughout the history of seized fake medicines, officials said.

According to official statistics, the MPF produced medicines worth Ks28-30 billion in 2016-2017 fiscal year. The figures increased to Ks30 billion in the current FY.

Myanmar’s lacquerware on brink of extinction

LACQUERWARE is one of Myanmar’s traditional arts and crafts and it is widely made in various shapes and is made in Bagan, Pintaya, Inwa, Monywa, Kyaukkyi, Sagaing Region and Maungthauk villages.

Lacquerware is a Myanmar traditional craft made from raffia bamboo; and Myanmar lacquer ware makes such as Hsaung ola, Daeung, cups, plates and kettles were used during 12th and 13th centuries. Lacquerware is made from bamboo, which comes from Homalin and Kanti in Sagaing Region. Then, the bamboo is cut out and softened and given the shapes of the desired objects. The process takes over six months, going from raw material to becoming lacquerware. The lacquerware was mostly used in previous time periods because it’s heat-resistant and long lasting but also light-weight and beautiful. Now, there are few skillful lacquerware artists today and the raw materials have become scarce.

Moreover, the process of making lacquerware takes a long time, so glassware, ceramics, plastic and steel items are now more prominent in the Myanmar lacquerware market. Gradually, Myanmar lacquerware is facing extinction.

“Classic lacquerware is a traditional business in the Kyaukkyi village. Nowadays, there are 10 people who make lacquerware in the village and they can send their work to foreign countries such as Thailand, France, Germany and Spain, where there is a demand for lacquerware. Most people use modern items such as glassware, ceramics because lacquerware is now very expensive. So Myanmar lacquerware will disappear from the local market” said an owner of Gold Lacquerware U Soe Moe Kyaw. The lacquerware from the Kyaukkyi village is being exported to foreign countries, and also it’s sent to Mandalay, Taunggyi and Shwedagon Pagoda in Yangon.—Myanmar Digital News

Some of the fake BPI medicines and sub-standard alcohol were burnt or buried yesterday at Pharmaceutical Factory (Insein).

The remaining fake medicines will be burnt and destroyed in the YCDC waste-to-energy factory in Hlawga.

 Destruction of the fake medicines and sub-standard alcohol were conducted according to WHO guidelines in order to prevent damage to the environment. The sub-standard alcohol was diluted and treated in a wastewater tank, which was then discarded down the drain. The fake medicines were destroyed by roller and buried.

Medicines that are not produced according to GMP guidelines are not effective in treating illnesses and could make the patient’s situation worse. Detaining and destroying fake BPI medicines will support the health of the public in addition to having good quality medicines available in the market, officials said.

According to official statistics, the MPF produced medicines worth Ks28-30 billion in 2016-2017 fiscal year. The figures increased to Ks30 billion in the current FY.
Central Myanmar villages becoming popular for fossil ornaments

U Than Zaw @ Mg Thar Nyan (Natogyi)

PARTS of a prehistoric animal or plant hardened into rock are usually a very peculiar find, but not in some remote villages in central Myanmar.

Fossilized sal-tree plants can be commonly found in the rural villages of Natogyi Township, Myingyan District, Mandalay Region. The names of those villages are Phayargyi, Naywet-aw, Zitaw, Thaminbya, Hlanzin and Htan Gwa.

The villages are only a few minutes drive by car from Pyinzi, about six miles away in the east of Natogyi. From Pyinzi you need to drive south until you come upon a series of villages, one after another, before arriving in Phayargyi. Some foreigners have discovered the availability of these plentiful fossils.

In 2015, visitors from the neighbouring country of China came to these villages and bought large amounts of the fossilized sal-tree rock, paying very good prices. In addition to the fossilized rocks, they bought various sorts of ornaments made of these fossils. The villagers made a lot of money and were quite happy with their sales. Many of them were able to build brick houses with their windfall.

Word has slowly spread, and more visitors are coming to this remote area. The villagers have learned over the years how to decorate the fossilized rocks so they can be sold as ornaments. They use their own human milk as a solvent for the pigment they use to stain the fossil rocks different colours. This time-consuming technique seems to be the only way to colour the fossilized rocks. That is why the products are very costly but worth buying.

All customers from far or near are now warmly welcomed by the villagers for sightseeing and to buy these strange, unique ornaments in the villages of Natogyi Township. Visitors who find themselves in Yangon take the Famous or Shwe-Set-Kyar buses in the late evening and arrive in Natogyi Township early the next morning, before dawn. A motor vehicle is available just opposite the Natogyi bus stand. From there, a motor vehicle can be hired for a round trip, usually returning to Natogyi in the evening. In addition to the exotic fossil ornaments, visitors often go to worship at the very noted and omnipotent Shin-Pin-Thar-Tun-Oo Pagoda.

Difficult is life for the modest one who always seeks purity, is detached and unassumingly, clean in life, and discerning. Do not give way to heedlessness; do not indulge in sensual pleasures, only the heedful and meditative attain great happiness. Drop by drop is the water pot filled, likewise, the great happiness. Drop by drop is indulging technique seems to be the only way to colour the fossilized rocks. That is why the products are very costly but worth buying.

Hard is it to be born a human; hard is the life of mortals; hard is it to gain the opportunity of hearing the Sublime Truth, and hard to encounter is the arising of the Exalted Ones, the Buddhas. Hunger is the worst disease, conditioned things are the worst suffering; knowing this as it really is, the wise realize the Nibbana, the highest bliss. One who, while himself seeking happiness opposes with violence other beings who also desire happiness, will not attain happiness hereafter. One who, while himself seeking happiness, does not oppose with violence other beings who also desire happiness, will find happiness hereafter. One will always be happy by not associating with fools. Overcome the angry by non-anger; overcome the wicked by goodness; overcome the liar by truth. Mind precedes all mental states; mind is their chief; they are all mind-wrought; if with an impure mind a person thinks, speaks or acts, suffering follows him like the wheel that follows the foot of the ox; if with a pure mind a person thinks, speaks or acts, happiness follows him like his never-departing shadow. Man matters most and mindset is of great importance for all citizens of the nation to build a federal democratic union and the teachers play the crucial role in nurturing, cultivating, educating and training of the children and youths who are our future leaders. A well-guarded mind brings happiness, let the discerning man guard the mind, so difficult to detect and extremely subtle, seizing whatever it desires. Abandoning the dark way, let the wise man cultivate the bright path. All tremble at violence; all fear death, life is dear to all; putting oneself in the place of another, one should not kill nor cause another to kill. Good it is to see the Noble Ones; to live with them is ever blissful. Good is virtue until life’s end, good is faith that is steadfast, good is the acquisition of wisdom, and good is the avoidance of evil. Exceedingly difficult to do are things that are good and beneficial.

May the Dhamma (the teachings of Buddha) be with you!!! May all teachers in this planet be free from fears, all dangers, man-made disasters, violence, physical and mental suffering, enmity, aversion, conflicts and terrorism!!! May you all be healthy, happy, prosperous and peaceful!!! Wishing all of you a Very Happy, Peaceful and Prosperous New Year 2018!!!
United Nations — The threat of an armed conflict on the Korean Peninsula is big as never before and any reckless step may trigger deplorable consequences, Russia’s Permanent Representative to the United Nations Vasily Nebenzya said on Friday at a UN Security Council meeting dedicated to the situation in that region.

The world, in his words, is living through “a most acute and dramatic phase of the development of the situation on the Korean Peninsula.” “It wouldn’t be an exaggeration to say that peace in that region is going through serious trials and the threat of the confrontation developing into a hot phase is big as never before,” he said.

“Belligerent rhetoric and reckless show of muscle have led to a situation where the whole world is making guesses about the probability of a war,” the Russian diplomat said.

“It is a fact of life that in such a tense situation any reckless or wrongly interpreted step may trigger deplorable consequences. He stressed that attempts to resolve the crisis on the Korean Peninsula by military means are inadmissible and called to abandon the policy of mutual pressure and intimidation.

According to the Russian diplomat, North Korea will never abandon its nuclear programme as long as it “feels direct threat to its security.” He called on the United States and South Korea to refrain from regular military drills near the Korean Peninsula and on North Korea to stop nuclear tests.

He expressed doubts in the United States’ commitment to peace settlement of the crisis, pointing to the fact that whereas North Korea had refrained from provocative steps for more than two months, Washington and its allies had stages “unprecedented big maneuvers and drills near the North Korean border.” More to it, the United States had imposed further unilateral sanctions on Pyongyang and listed North Korea among terrorism sponsor countries, Nebenzya added.

UNSC resolutions Russia is committed to United Nations Security Council resolutions on North Korea and strictly implements international sanctions against that country, he went on.

“As for the international sanctions against North Korea, we would like to once again reiterate our commitment to their implementation,” he said, adding however that such restrictions should not be “a goal in itself but rather an instrument of encouraging that country towards constructive talks on the current problems.”

He noted that along with the sanctions that cannot resolve the Korean Peninsula’s nuclear problem, the diplomatic arsenal “includes a range of other methods.” He stressed that such measures must not be used to worsen either economic or humanitarian situation in North Korea. “It especially concerns unilateral restrictions that target civilian industries that have nothing to do with that country’s nuclear programmes. Such sanctions seriously worsen living standards,” Nebenzya stressed.

Earlier this week, US Secretary of State Rex Tillerson accused Russia of violating its liabilities concerning the implementation of the United Nations sanctions as it allegedly employed workers from North Korea. Speaking at the UN Security Council’s meeting on Friday, he called on Russia and China to toughen pressure on Pyongyang and use measures beyond the United Nations Security Council resolutions.

North Korean nationals work in Russia on the basis of intergovernmental agreements that guarantee their rights, he added.

“I would like to tell the esteemed Secretary of State that North Korean laborers have never worked in ‘slave-like conditions’ in Russia. They are working under the intergovernmental agreements with North Korea that guarantee their rights,” he said.—Tass

Venezuela talks to resume in January after government, opposition fail to reach deal

CARACAS — Venezuela’s government and opposition leaders will hold a new round of talks in January after failing on Friday to reach an agreement to ease a deep political and economic crisis in the troubled OPEC country. Expectations have been low for the talks being held in the Dominican Republic. Some critics have described them as a stalling tactic by the ruling Socialist Party which is struggling to control a worsening economic crisis.

“We will meet again on 11 January for a meeting with the Venezuelan opposition,” said Information Minister Jorge Rodriguez, leader of the government delegation, in a brief statement released by state television. Opposition leaders are demanding that President Nicolas Maduro accept humanitarian assistance from abroad to ease the crisis, which has left millions of people unable to eat properly due to triple-digit inflation and chronic product shortages. They also want the release of several hundred jailed opposition activists. Government leaders want the opposition to help seek the elimination of sanctions by Washington, which have been levied this year by the administration of US President Donald Trump on accusations that Maduro is undermining democracy.

An initial round of talks two weeks ago in the Dominican Republic also ended without a agreement. “We want an agreement that can be fulfilled,” said opposition legislator Luis Florido. “Because we have not concluded discussion of all the issues, we need another meeting so that there can be a permanent agreement.”—Reuters

China National Democratic Construction Association to elect new leadership

BEIJING — The China National Democratic Construction Association (CNDCA), one of China's eight non-communist political parties, will elect a new leadership at its 11th National Congress, which opened on Saturday.

Wang Yang, a member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the Communist Party of China (CPC) Central Committee and vice premier, met with the congress delegates and gave a congratulatory speech on behalf of the CPC Central Committee.

Wang said that the CNDCA had played a constructive role as a think tank in the past five years in the fields of urbanization, financial risks control and development of the Yangtze River economic belt.

"The CPC will uphold and improve the system of CPC-led multiparty cooperation and political consultation in accordance with the spirit of the 19th CPC National Congress," Wang said. "In handling its relationships with other political parties, the CPC will adhere to the principles of long-term coexistence, mutual supervision, sincere treatment with each other, and sharing the rough times and the smooth."

"The CPC would support these parties in performing their duties in accordance with the requirements of socialism with Chinese characteristics for their participation in state affairs, and consolidate and develop the broadest possible patriotic united front," he said.

Wang called on the CNDCA members to implement the spirit of the 19th CPC National Congress, fully understand the historic significance and rich connotation of Xi Jinping Thought on Socialism with Chinese Characteristics for a New Era, bring their close connection with business circle into full play and advise on key economic issues."

Chen Changzi, executive chairperson of the congress presidium, called on CNDCA members to "learn the spirit of the 19th CPC National Congress earnestly, implement new development concepts and contribute to the country's development," while delivering a work report on behalf of the 10th CNDCA Central Committee at the opening session.

At the congress, delegates will also hear and deliberate the work report of the party's 10th Central Committee, as well as review and approve an amendment to its constitution.

Japan to seek nonpermanent UN Security Council seat for 2023-2024

NEW YORK — Japan will contest the election for a nonpermanent member seat on the UN Security Council for the 2023-2024 period, with its current two-year term ending at the end of December, Foreign Minister Taro Kono said on Friday.

"Japan will contribute to the maintenance of international peace and security by attempting to be a nonpermanent member of the council as frequently as possible," he said. "We look forward to running in 2022."

Kono is visiting New York to preside over Friday's ministerial-level Security Council meeting on North Korea's nuclear and missile programs, which he did earlier in the day.

The Security Council consists of five permanent veto-wielding members — Britain, China, France, Russia and the United States — and 10 nonpermanent members that serve two-year terms.

During a news conference, he called for an overhaul of the powerful council, saying it is an "urgent task" needed to address threats to global peace and security more effectively.

"The Security Council still does not reflect the realities of the international community in the 21st century, as we can see from the fact that Africa, which is broadly and frequently discussed in the Security Council, is underrepresented," Kono said.

"While welcoming the progress of changes to the UN Secretariat, Kono said, "No reform of the United Nations will be complete without the reform of the Security Council."

"He called for text-based intergovernmental negotiations on revamping the council to begin during the current session of the UN General Assembly, saying the push is not solely motivated by Japan desiring a permanent seat."

Together with Brazil, India and Germany, Japan is one of a quartet of countries collectively known as the Group of Four that aspire to become future permanent seat holders on a restructured council.

Despite general agreement among UN member states that the current structure of the Security Council is outdated, there has been no agreement on how to realize the structural changes.

"We are committed to the reform of the Security Council," Kono said. "We need to establish a new structure that addresses the current challenges."

"We need to discuss the implications of the changes on how to realize the structural changes," he added. "Japanese government believes that the council should be reformed by November 2023." — The Global New Light of Myanmar

Wounded North Korean defector transferred to S Korean military hospital

SEOUL — A North Korean soldier who suffered critical gunshot wounds during a defection dash across the border to South Korea has been transferred to a military hospital, a South Korean intelligence official said Saturday. The North Korean soldier, 24-year-old Oh Chong Song, was transferred to the military hospital on Friday from a trauma centre at Ajou University Hospital south of Seoul, where his treatment for gunshot wounds and pre-existing conditions included two major operations.

"Oh has been transferred to South Korea's military hospital and South Korea's intelligence services will soon schedule the security question process depending on Oh's condition," the intelligence official told Reuters. "The official, who declined to be identified, also declined to provide a specific schedule for Oh's questioning. Oh was shot and badly wounded by his fellow North Korean soldiers while fleeing across the border into the South in November."

Three South Korean soldiers brought Oh to safety and he was immediately taken aboard a US Black Hawk military helicopter and rushed into surgery. — Reuters

Charoen Pokphand Produce Myanmar Co., Ltd (09-96279972)
WASHINGTON — Steven Spielberg's new movie “The Post” isn’t just a 1971 tale of press freedom or the place of women in the workplace. It poses key questions about the United States today, star Tom Hanks says.

“I think it’s a very good patriotic movie about ‘what is the state of America?’,” Hanks told Reuters at the world premiere in Washington DC on Thursday night.

“This is about a women’s place and equality in the workplace … It is definitely about the legacy of the Vietnam War and what 40 years of policy did to the United States of America. And it’s also about the journalistic integrity of people who view it as not their job, but their responsibility to go out and get the truth,” Hanks added.

Spielberg has said he rushed to film and release the movie within a year because the parallels between 1971 and 2017 were “terrifyingly similar.”

The movie, opening in US movie theaters on 22 December, arrives at a time when the media has been under attack by US President Donald Trump since his election in November 2016.

On Thursday, Spielberg said the theme of press freedom goes beyond any single government.

“Everybody goes through a tug of war with the media, with the press. Obama went through it. Bush goes through it, Clinton went through it. The current administration is going through it,” he said.

LOS ANGELES — “Star Wars: The Last Jedi,” the new film in the beloved space saga, opened with massive ticket sales that put it on track to ring up around $200 million at domestic theaters over the weekend, distributor Walt Disney Co said on Friday.

The movie brought in $45 million in the United States and Canada on Thursday night, second only to the $57 million from 2015’s “Star Wars: The Force Awakens.” That film went on to generate more than $2 billion worldwide.

“Last Jedi” is the eighth movie in the saga created by George Lucas in 1977. It picks up from the end of “Force Awakens” with the scavenger Rey asking Luke Skywalker to come out of seclusion to help fight the evil First Order.

The new film features actress Carrie Fisher’s final performance as Leia, the famous princess who has become a general leading resistance forces. Fisher died of a heart attack in December 2016.

Fans’ love of the franchise, and Fisher, is expected to drive heavy ticket sales for “Last Jedi” over the upcoming Christmas and New Year holidays, according to box office analysts.

“The Last Jedi” began rolling out on Wednesday in international markets, where it has brought in $60.8 million in its first two days, Disney said.—Reuters

Santa traffic cop sleighs it with Manila dance routine

MANILA — Directing motorists at busy intersections in Manila isn’t the easiest job, but traffic cop Ramiro Hinojas makes it fun by adding dance to his beat.

This Christmas, Hinojas, 51, is performing his regular routine dressed as Santa Claus to bring a little holiday cheer for passers-by.

“We are dressing up as Santa Claus to make people feel that it’s Christmas again, that we need to be giving and loving to one another, and be respectful of other motorists on the road,” Hinojas said on Friday morning, as he twirled and dipped while trucks, buses and jeepneys sped past him. Hinojas, who started directing traffic on Manila’s congested highways in 2005, first thought of dancing his second year into the job as a method of keeping fit.

Over time, he noticed that motorists paid more attention to his hand signals when they were matched with flashy footwork.

The added benefit to Santa’s dance routine is that it keeps things light-hearted, for both Hinojas and others around him.

“Our traffic here is so bad, so this is our small way of bringing joy to people,” said the policeman dressed in a red-and-white Santa costume, paired with a vest bearing reflective yellow and green stripes.

Onlookers are certainly amused by Hinojas’ moves, pedestrians stopping to take snapshots.

“Everyone loves what he’s doing!”, said jeepney driver Frankie Gustiló. “All traffic enforcers should be like that so that everyone will be happy.”

Zoo starts crowdfunding campaign to protect endangered bird

TOYAMA (Japan) — A central Japan zoo has launched a crowdfunding campaign to collect funds to protect an endangered Japanese bird designated as one the nation’s special natural treasures.

To supplement funding from the state and local governments as well as a private fund, the three-month campaign started on 1 December with an aim of raising 10 million yen ($88,780) to breed rock ptarmigans, called “raicho” (thunder bird) in Japanese, according to the Toyama Municipal Family Park Zoo.

As of Saturday, 1.65 million yen had been collected. Contributions from 3,000 yen can be made and donors will be rewarded with gifts such as pins of the bird, pictures, name plates and tours to see the species on Mt Tateyama in Toyama. “We want to solicit wishes to save rock ptarmigans. It will be great if we get support from across Japan and abroad,” said Yoji Ishihara, curator of the zoo. The Toyama zoo will also install donation boxes, while nine other zoos across Japan engaged in the conservation of rock ptarmigans will also join the fund-raising drive.

Rock ptarmigans, which on average are around 37 centimetres tall, have brown feathers in summer which turn white in winter. In Japan, they only live in high mountains in the central part of the country, such as Mt Tateyama and Mt Ontake.

In the 1980s, around 3,000 rock ptarmigans were found in Japan but the number is believed to have fallen below 2,000 in the 2000s because of increased attacks from predators such as crows and foxes. Under a Ministry of Environment conservation project which started in 2012, the Toyama zoo, the Ueno Zoological Garden in Tokyo and three other facilities have reared Japanese rock ptarmigans and conducted artificial breeding for the birds.

The Sunthy Fund for Bird Conservation has made an annual contribution of up to 3 million yen for three years, but its donations will expire at the end of March 2018.—Kyodo News

It’s about giving visitors to the British Museum the opportunity to engage with these more than five thousand, six thousand years of history. Because it goes all the way back to prehistory and taking it up to the present,” said the director. The gallery also has incorporated various rotating light-sensitive objects such as paintings, prints, and textiles.

Myanmar defeated by Viet Nam in Thanh Nien Challenge Cup

THE Myanmar U-21 national football team was defeated by the host team Viet Nam by a score of 0-2 in the Thanh Nien Challenge Cup at Can Tho Stadium in Viet Nam yesterday.

Myanmar lined up with goalkeeper Phone Thitsar Min, Kyaw Thu Tun, Ye Yint Aung, Win Moe Kyaw, Than Htike Zin, Zayar Naing, Kyaw Myint Win, Aee Soe, Zin Min Tun, Myat Htun Thit and Hein Htet Aung.

Yesterday’s playing style by Myanmar seemed lackluster and the strikers appeared to be tired, perhaps because of their previous match play.

Viet Nam mounted several attacks in the first half and the Myanmar team played defensively, resulting in the lack of goal scoring opportunities.

Myanmar did have two opportunities to gain goals, but Myanmar star Aee Soe could not convert.

Viet Nam had an opening goal scored by Nguyen Duc Chien just before the end of the first half.

Myanmar made more of an offensive effort in the second half after a few substitutions.

Myanmar defenders made a careless error in clearing the ball in the penalty area of their opponents, resulting in a penalty shot for Viet Nam at the 64-minute mark.

Viet Nam scored a second goal with the penalty shot scored by Le Min Soung.—Kyaw Zin Lin

Just Educated or Really Educated?

By Khaymar
Kyaukse University

EDUCATION...Education...it is the most popular words during these periods. The words “Education and Educated person” have been used widely since the past centuries. We all know “Education” is vital to survive and struggle throughout our life. And we all well know that “if we are uneducated, we will always be hiding between the crowds”. Against this “if we are educated, we will actually bright like the pole star”. Even we can direct the way to others in the dark. We know about “Educated” like that generally. The facts are true, not wrong.

But we should know and realize “What is the deeply meaning of an educated person?” Someone gets the Master or PhD degrees “Is him or her named an educated one?” Yes! I agree he or she is educated but don’t accept as “a real educated”. So, good...one may ask me “What and who is a real educated person?”

In my view, it does not concern with the normal or high degrees. It concerns with brain, our sapient brain. And also sapience don’t depend on colors, ethics, and religions. It only depends on the conscience comes from both heart and brain.

There is no problem we can or can’t pass the school education. Because school education can only give the degrees to get good jobs for money and just a good name in the society till now. Here I don’t mean that the school education is entirely bad. I just want to mention about the inner education in heart. Some educated guesses make the Side-Effects. For instance, the earth is highly demolished by humans who make air, water and soil pollutions because our advanced technology flows from the experts’ ideas. And again, other some educated may think of that. These cases are because of human beings. We must kill all them to clean and care for the Mother Earth. If so, can we call both are educated? Yes! I agree again. They are educated “Extremist Educated”. Ideas becomes thinking Thinking become words Words become manners Manners become habits Habits become characters Characters become personality. Personality describes our own life.

So the most important and needed thing in a person is the first idea to think. We start the good thinking, we will do the good things. We begin the bad thinking; we surely become the evil minded persons for the lovely world. All right! How do we make the good thinking? In our brain, if input is good, output will be great. Thus, we are responsible for our own thinking by ourselves. “How about children?” Even children have responsible by themselves? No, they aren’t.

Parents, teachers and the atmosphere around them have responsible and should be accountable to take. Such as White is easily to dye, Children can easily copy everything, the good or bad habits from their nearest persons.

Here I urge that everyone must change the evil mind firstly before we change the new society. Our Myanmar Society is good or bad, depends on us. After we have already decided to change, the first we must do is reading good books. It is an energy pill. It gives vitamin to possess the healthy brain. And it can also pour the poison liquid on the reader( evil minded person ) whom have never compassion and never seem a spark of pure spirit in their heart. Therefore, I said about the important of thinking above.

So, if everyone have conscience skills, our manners will be valuable, will benefit our surrounding, children (new generation) will copy and our society will be beautiful with diamond blossoms. The men who are rich or poor, well or disabled, got degree or not and whatever occupations, we can be the real educated persons because of our pure spirits. Finally, I would like to urge “Let we build towards our Federal Union of Myanmar together with the essence of all of our efforts”.

As teachers are the most important persons in carrying out the very good plans practically in the schools, we need to attain Mental Health of Teachers so that they will always be alert and active in their jobs.

To attain Mental Health of Teachers, the author thinks the following factors are necessary:

1. Well-paid Salary or Efficient Salary

To work as a teacher in any school, the main thing we should think for teachers is about their salary. The salaries of teachers should be well-paid and these should be efficient for the teachers’ families just for the basic needs for their lives. Most teachers who have families of their own have the responsibility to support their own families. Usually, fathers are bread-winners of the families, they need to try hard to meet the ends what the families need. These basic needs will include enough for basic foods (i.e. enough salary to buy things for rice and curries, cooking oil, fuel for cooking and basic ingredients as salt, sugar, pepper, dried prawns, fish paste etc. in our country), basic place to live in for the family, basic needs for clothing, and basic needs for health care for the family.

If we think well, these are the very basic needs of human beings. In some Western countries, the basic food supply for all citizens such as loaves of bread and chicken and vegetables are delivered as rations. (especially in some socialist and communist countries). So, as we are now a Democratic country, we need to supply all citizens to have sufficient amount of basic food or to give salaries enough to buy all these basic food up to the amount they can maintain their health.

As we have already calculated, a salary of 5000 Kyats per day cannot meet the ends for a family of 5 members. (Usually a family has at least 2 parents + children, but sometimes we have more as we have grand-parents, aunts and uncles in the same family in our country.) So, let’s think of it. For a month, we need at least more than 150000 Kyats. It means the lowest salary for a lowest worker, we need to have a salary of more than 150000 Kyats.

As teachers (may be PTs or JTs or STs), as we are more educated than such the lowest worker as a cleaner, housemaid, a gate-keeper etc., we need higher salaries. Think of how much we teachers get as salaries at the present. Even me, a Retired Professor with a service of 40 years in the Ministry of Education, the author gets only 150000 Kyats as pension salary now a days. Calculate whether it is enough for me to get basic food to maintain my health. It is just telling about the basic food.

But, as men are social animals, we need more to do donation, to buy medicines for our health, to use for some other things for our social life and so on.

We all retired teachers are lucky enough that all our old students who can or cannot do well, lay down to support us as honorary to pay homage to us, to take care of the health of old teachers, and so on. That’s why we can stand still as retired teachers at the present.

Not only about food and medical care, but we need to think of a house or a home for the teacher and his or her family to live in.

Some are lucky enough that the parents of the teacher has an own home (may be good or bad), it can be a shelter where the family can live in. But, for the unlucky ones whose parents have no house at all?

Up to this day, in the Basic Education Department, there are no decent homes or shelters for the teachers to live in where they have to go and serve at the schools there. Sometimes, they need to hire houses for their own families. For these hiring or rental fees, where should the money come from?

In some regions, even the young female teachers cannot get decent houses to rent, where they need security when they are away from their own home and family. And for rental fees where can they get from? Just from their own parents as there’s no consideration for these in their own salaries.

In such conditions, do you think teachers are happy in their own jobs? How can they have the will to be alert and to be active in such conditions?

Every day and every month, all these stresses and strains influence them in their own thoughts.

Do you think, we can get very active and alert and very good service from such kinds of teachers?

Here, the author is discussing only about basic food and basic shelter and just the basic health. There can be so many many more factors that can cause the teachers just for the very basic ones.

Even for these basic ones, some teachers are forced by their family needs to give tuitions to the students who are in need of extra teaching. But, according to the present law and order; it will be a great fault if a teacher gives tuition then where is the way out from these poverties?

Now, let’s think of another factor:

2. Conditions of Security

Here, security means both physical and mental. A teacher should have a place of security where he or she works. If these areas are places where we have no peace, it is a danger point for the teachers.

As most of the teachers are females or males who have no weapons at all to defend themselves, they all can be in great danger if all these insurgents or terrorists come to demand money and who do not want to go and serve there. But, the unlucky ones have to give their lives just because of these insecurity matters.

How can we teachers can serve well lonely in such kinds of conditions?

Another important factor is

3. Fairness from the Upper-hands

Here, the upper-hands mean all persons in authority and power who can give harms to the teachers. The headmasters or the headmistresses, the village heads, sometimes the village powerful monks, ATEOs, TEOs, District and Regional Education Officers, Persons in Authority from the Basic Education Department, and Persons in Authority from the Ministry of Education.

If all these persons are fair and square, everything will go on smoothly. But, if not all difficulties and harms and threatening and crisis will appear.

In such a condition, how can a teacher can serve well his duty?

The above are just the three little factors, but the very basic factors, that can cause the Mental Health of Teachers to be good or bad.

So many many more will come on soon.

On 9 December, a workshop concerning the Salon Museum to raise awareness and promote conservative efforts for the disappearing Salon ethnic group was held.

Chief Minister of Taninthayi Region Dr. Daw Le Le Maw said that there are around 4,040 total households in Salon villages combined. She said there are only 1,582 ethnic members left and she said the cause of decline could be drug abuse and alcoholism. A collection of Salon artifacts from the past 60 years were on display at the workshop.

A researcher of the Salon people, Dr. Fabienne Galangau said that there are also intangible heritage of the Salon people such as their songs, stories and music on display at the museum. He said they have about 30 films on the Salon people. He said that one of the difficulties in researching the Salon people is their lack of a writing system and hence written records.

The Salon museum is currently vied to be built in Kawthaung City. Last year there was an estimated 3.4 million tourists visiting the Tanintharyi State and the most entered route was through Kaethaung. Even though the Myeik Archipelago is designated as the territory of the Salon people, their pearling fishing trade requires them to lead a nomadic life than leading to a disappearance of their settlements and history.

Ko Aung Thant Zin, a hotel and tourism businessman, said there should be efforts to raise the tourism sector and at the same time help the livelihood of the Salon people. U A Mhat, a Salon ethnic member of Ma Kyone Galak Village, said the Salon had first stayed in Pale Island and then moved to La Nyan Kyun and now reside here but he said from experience that the current rising number of residents moving into their village may hinder the development of the Salon people.

As recent as of October this year, the number of tourists visiting the Tanintharyi Region has increased significantly every year since 2011.

Salon, Sea Gypsies

The only inhabitants in Myanmar or Mergui Archipelago of Myanmar are Sea Gypsies, namely Salon (Moken). They live on boats during dry season and remain on land during rainy season. They still practice the same fishing and boat building techniques used for generation. Even they are living in the sea for most of the time, they have their traditions, customs, cultures and their localized traditional festival. During the festival, all villagers gather at the village, offer foods and pray for their better on business, good luck, for good health and more prosperous for coming season. They are also enjoy their meals, drink and dance traditionally during their festival.

The Mergui Archipelago: The Mergui Archipelago, which consists of more than 800 untouched islands, is part of the Taninthayi Region. All islands lie in the Andaman Sea off the coast of southern Myanmar. Since 2016, the natural, unspoiled islands have become increasingly popular among international tourists, most of whom enter through neighboring Thailand.

Motorboat tourists from Asia, Africa and some European countries enjoy visiting Myeik Archipelago for its beautiful landscapes along the coast such as coral reefs, mangrove and a diverse species of birds and aquatic animals and traditional culture, such as the sea-based life of the Salon, also known as the sea gypsies, a seafaring ethnic minority.

Tourists also visit the country’s first marine national park on Lampi Island, 115 Island, Yaungwe Island, Philar Island, Myaukni Island, Bocho Island, Naungwe Island, Philar Island, Mokunl Island, Boche Island, Naungthi Island, Tower Rock Island, Cavo Island and Satan Island.

Tourism in Myanmar is growing rapidly. International tourists arrivals have increased significantly every year since 2011.

Refugee crisis: It’s not Muslims versus Buddhists, says writer Bertil Lintner

The journalist, who spent decades reporting on the excesses of the military junta in Myanmar, explains what the refugee crisis means for India and the region.

This interview originally appeared on Scroll.in, an independent website.

BERTIL LINTNER, former Myanmar correspondent of the now-defunct news-magazine Far Eastern Review, first visited the country at the age of 24 in 1977. He spent most of the next three decades reporting on the excesses of military rule, which stretched from 1962 to 2010. Linter’s work got him banned by the Myanmar military in 1985. Defying the ban, he sneaked into the country from the Naga hills in Indian territory along with his wife, Hseng Noung, an ethnic Shan from Myanmar, who had just given birth to their daughter. They spent the next 18 months travelling in the Shan and Kachin states of the country to finally reach China, braving not only inhospitable territory but also various armed ethnic groups.

The result was the book Land of Jade: A Journey from India through Northern Burma to China, considered one of the most insightful works on Myanmar’s many ethnic groups and conflicts. The Swedish journalist is the author of several books on South East Asia and its politics. He spoke to Scroll.in on the Rohingya refugee crisis and what it means for India and the region.

Excerpts from the interview:

As a long-time observer of Myanmar, what do you make of the current crisis?

Well, it is not a new issue. Basically, there are two questions here. One is of illegal immigration – whether it is real or imagined. And the other is the question of Islamic militancy. On August 25, that area from the other side of the river.

But there seems to be enough evidence to suggest the Rohingyas in Myanmar have been subjected to systematic oppression for years. Myanmar does not even recognise the Rohingyas as an ethnic community. Doesn’t that point to a deliberate attempt to undermine the legitimacy of a community that has lived in the country for a long time?

Yes and no. There have been Muslims living there for a long time. That is for certain. If you look at the nature of that area, that is where the Indian subcontinent ends and South East Asia begins. There is the Naf river, which is now the border between Bangladesh and Myanmar. For centuries, there have been Muslims and Buddhist living on both sides of the river. There was nothing wrong at all. And there have been Muslims living in the north-western corner of Rakhine state for a long time. There is no question about that at all.

Then during the British era, a Muslim population of labourers were brought into that area from the other side of the river. But they were not called Rohingyas. They were called Chittagagonians. Yes, there is a document by Francis Buchanan-Hamilton from 1799 that uses the word, but there is only one.

Hamilton was sent by the East India committee on a mission to Burma. But he never went to Rakhine state. He went to Ava and Amarapura, cities near what is now Mandalay. There he met people from Arakan (as Rakhine was called earlier) who called themselves Rohingyaas.

But that does not make it wrong for anyone to use it, of course. However, the question of having a separate identity for Muslims in the north-western part of Rakhine who speak a Chittagagonian dialect of Bengali is a new concept. You must remember that not all Muslims, even in Rakhine state, identify themselves as Rohingya. The people who do have also obviously been there for a long time. The identity, though, has been used for political benefit by radical groups. And it seems only recently that a lot of these people have started identifying as Rohingya.

How recently?

A couple of years ago, for some of them. Actually, it was in the 1990s that it really became popular.

But back in the 1950s, the Burmese government used the term Rohingya.

Yes, they did, but you must also remember that not all of them were happy about that term. After independence in 1948, there was a Muslim rebellion in the north-western corner of Rakhine state. But even at the time, the rebels did not call themselves Rohingyas, they called themselves mujahedees (fighters). They wanted to join East Pakistan. That rebellion sort of fizzled out.

Then, during the 1960s, some of these people started calling themselves Rohingyas, but not everyone. It was believed to have a separatist tinge to it. If you look at pro-Rohingya literature, they say there were several Rohingya ministers in the government in the 1950s. That is not true. There was actually one from that part of the country – Sultan Mahmud. He was a Muslim. But he did not call himself a Rohingya. He called himself an Arakanese Muslim. Also, U Nu, who was the prime minister then, wanted Muslim votes. That was one reason why he promoted that term.

Irrespective of what the situation was in the 1950s, a large section of the Muslim population in Rakhine identifies itself as Rohingya now, and have been persecuted. How would you explain that?

First of all, you have to realise that Burma has a big Muslim population. Most Muslims live in urban areas. They own businesses, have Burmese names and speak Burmese, and they are Burmese citizens. Muslims have a long history and have played an important role in the country. U Razak, a Muslim leader in the 1940s, was assassinated with Aung San [premier of the British colony of Burma] and is considered a martyr. Another leading Burmese Muslim was U Haschid, who was born in Allahabad. He was a highly respected student leader in the 1930s. Then there was Upi U Pe Khin, the leading architect of the Panglong Agreement [a 1947 treaty that established autonomy in the internal administration of the Shan, Chin and Kachin people in what was then called the Frontier Areas].

So, it is not Muslims versus Buddhists. The Rohingyas are different, though. They do not speak Burmese. They speak a Chittagagonian dialect of Bengali spoken on the other side of the border in Bangladesh. So, a majority of Burmese people see them as illegal. That is unfair, though, because most of them have been living in Rakhine for a really long time.

You had written earlier that the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army “leaders and extremist group links point towards a wider regional agenda”. Why do you say so?

The name itself. In their dialect, they call themselves Harakah al-Vaqif, which translates into the “the faith movement”. If you are an ethno-nationalist group, you do not call yourself a faith movement.

Also, the leader of this group, whose name is Akaullah Abu Amnar Junjuni, is not from Rakhine. He was born in Karachi [Pakistan]. He later lived in Saudi Arabia where he was an imam. Sometime around 2012, he started to get interested in the issue. His parents are most probably from Rakhine state, he is not.
It’s not Muslims versus Buddhists, says writer Bertil Lintner

FROM SUPPLEMENT-G

So, he does trace his ancestry to the region they come from.
Yes, sure. I have been listening to some of his tapes. He cannot pronounce the name of a single place in Rakhine state correctly. He speaks a Chittagogan dialect of Bengali peppered with Urdu words. Most of his close associates in the organisation are also from either Karachi or Bangladesh.

Apart from that, are the group’s methods any different from other ethno-nationalist insurgent groups in Myanmar?
Well, all the other ethno-nationalist insurgent groups in the country operate more or less like the traditional Army. All of them are dressed in uniforms, they have ranks, they are organised in platoons and companies and brigades. They carry automatic rifles or machine guns. The Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army’s methods are very different, the August attack demonstrated, as did their earlier attack in October 2016. They basically mobilise hundreds of villagers, surround their targets and give an impression that they are many more than they actually are. They have very few firearms. They mostly have daggers, spears, knives. Their ways are much more similar to the Maoist groups in Nepal and Central India than any other ethnic group in Myanmar.

What would the strength of the group be in your estimate?
We do not really know. Before August 25, the strength was in the hundreds. Maybe 500-600 organised cadre who had received some training in camps in Bangladesh. The trainers were all Afghan war veterans. A lot of them, around 150, are regarded as foreigners, including Bangladeshis. In addition, some of their fighters are from Pakistan, Indonesia, two from Uzbekistan, and a few who identify themselves as Malays, but we do not know if they are from Malaysia or southern Thailand.

If they are a motley group of people who are probably not even from Rakhine, what brought them together to fight for an independent Rakhine state?
Well, the rank and file of the group does include several local recruits. There are angry young men who are fed up of being treated the way they have been treated for years. But why would Pakistani and Uzbek and Malays come there? Those guys are actually talking about a jihad.

Do they enjoy popular support among people in the region who identify themselves as Rohingya?
Not much. I think it is very divided. They are blaming the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army for the August 25 attack. They are saying, “Why did you do it, why did you provoke them?”

One must note that the timing of the Arakan Rohingya Salvation Army was well thought out. The Kofi Annan committee report on the crisis, which actually criticised the Myanmarese state, had just come out a few hours ago. The attacks completely killed the report. It was by no means a coincidence. They want a more militarised space. So, on one hand, while people are blaming them for provoking the Army, on the other, a lot of angry young men have turned to them as they had hoped.

The Western media has been particularly critical of Myanmar leader Aung San Suu Kyi’s handling of the crisis. What would you say?
Although Myanmar had fair elections in 2015, the military is still in the driving seat with three important ministries in its hands. What is happening is completely out of her hands. So, she really cannot do much in terms of ordering anyone. The military takes orders from its commander-in-chief, not from any elected leader. She has to tread a really delicate balance. Let’s say she came out for the Rohingyas. It would be political suicide. It is clear where most of her electorate stands on the matter. If she came out in support of the hardline Arakan National Party, she would get flack from the Western press. If she does not do anything, she would get flack too, as she has. It is an extremely delicate situation for her.

The only thing she could have done but has not is that she could have gone to Sittwe (the capital of Rakhine state) and met some elected politicians. She does not like the leaders of the Arakan National Party, so she will not do that. But she had to just show that there is a civilian space in Rakhine too. She did not have to say anything. All she had to do was to go to a hospital, meet people from all communities. In the process, she could have widened a very limited civilian space.

Unlike many Western democracies, India’s response to the crisis in Rakhine has not been of outright condemnation. Is that right on the Indian government’s part?
Right or not is for me to say, but Myanmar’s two most important neighbours, China and India, have not joined in the Western condemnation. That is obviously for strategic reasons. For China, Myanmar is important for its access to the Indian Ocean. For India, the country is the gateway to South East Asia.

The Indian government has taken a very hardline stance on Rohingya refugees of late. It has even suggested that the Rohingyas could be a security threat. What do you make of that?
It is probably motivated by security concerns. Are they a security risk currently? There is so far no evidence to say that. So, not really. But with almost 800,000 refugees in Bangladesh, where are they going to go? Bangladesh is already overpopulated. There is only one slightly less populated area, and that is the Chittagong Hill Tracts. And if my information is correct, the Chakmas and Marmas, both Buddhist communities, are very worried.

What does the crisis mean for South Asia?
It is probably a little early to say. Suddenly you have a huge refugee community in the area. It is no secret that a large number of extremist Islamic groups are looking to take advantage. Groups in Indonesia, Bangladesh and Pakistan have been fishing around for recruitment opportunities. If there is a militant response, it could have a very adverse impact on the region.

Also, it is important to remember that there are elections in Bangladesh very soon. Remember that Bangladesh once offered to do joint operations with the Myanmar Army against Rohingyas and had initially even refused to take in Rohingyas. But when the trickle became a tsunami, Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina and the Awami League government changed their stance. This was to prevent the fundamentalist Bangladesh Jamaat-e-Islami party from exploiting the situation.

If the Bangladesh Nationalist Party comes to power with support from the Jamaat, which is known to be close to Rohingya insurgents, there could be a serious security concern. That is why Sheikh Hasina is so eager to show that she is on the side of the refugees.

What do you make of the recent repatriation agreement between Myanmar and Bangladesh?
Oh, that is play for the galleries. It is not going to happen. First of all, there has to be verification. And most of these people have no such papers. The other reason is: do they want to come back? I think the brutality the Army unleashed was meant to ensure that these people never come back. And what will they come back to? Their houses are all burnt down.

Do you see a solution to the crisis in the near future?
That is the big question. I do not know, to be honest. Can they stay in Bangladesh? Yes, they can but that may mean trouble in the Chittagong Hill Tracts. A third country? Who will accept them?—scroll.in

Views on The Robots

On modern days, technology has been more advanced in many things like computers and tracking devices, especially the robots.

The robot, in other countries has been recently used to do house cleaning, and other related things. It is very helpful for a lot of people who cannot handle their chores. Even though, it is helpful for a lot of people, the robot isn’t a good use in many cases. For example, it doesn’t have feelings and it cannot think, have feelings and express them. They cannot move heavy things either. This is bad because in meeting with people of different standards in living, the robot might not do well for expressing words in the right way or suitably, like meeting a teacher VS a student or a monk VS a friend.

The robot is precise in doing and working some things. So, if you want it to be neat or tidy, the robot is a better thing to use. It is also good for doing things such as using hands and feet continuously for long because the robot doesn’t know the meaning of tiredness. But your hands start to get tired, so it is good to use the robot invented in the case. Unlike humans, the robot cannot plan ahead. You cannot do what you want with a robot because it has a limited amount of time in working. You cannot make the robot think what to do next, it isn’t natural and you cannot teach the robot a way of living. These things are needed because if you doing have them like the robot, this can be useless in many ways because you have to be looking at every step the robot does and there is no looking in it.

The robot doesn’t have a heart. So it is bad because there are no personal things and you need personal stuff to think about them to use them in you need and outside.

In conclusion, the robot can replace a large amount of things but you need to use it wisely to gain a good robot in your hand.
