After asking them some questions, we released them on bail,” explained a police officer.

Pigeon peas price surges with India lifting import restriction

FOLLOWING the demand for 200,000 tonnes of pigeon peas from India on 11 May, the price of pigeon peas (red grams) surged from Ks385,000 to Ks481,000 on 12 May, up by Ks96,000 per tonne.

Yangon market had not fixed the pigeon pea price on 5, 8 and 9 May. Pigeon peas (red grams) RC fetched Ks75,500 on 7 May and Ks77,000 on 10 May. On 11 May, some 15 containers of pigeon peas RC were traded, while 25 containers were traded on 12 May.

Similarly, following the news that India lifted restrictions on pulses importation, the mung bean price increased from Ks382,000 on 4 May to Ks454,000 per tonne on 5 May in the Yangon market, with 135 containers traded on this day.

India lifted its ban on importation and allowed an import quota of 150,000 tonnes of mung beans and green gram each and 200,000 tonnes of pigeon peas. The quota is applicable not only for Myanmar but also for all the bean exporting countries. Therefore, Myanmar is facing a competitive market to export pulses to India.

India is the main buyer of Myanmar’s pigeon peas, mung beans and green gram. Mung beans and green gram are exported to other countries. However, the export of pigeon peas is heavily reliant on India’s market.

With pigeon peas and fresh peas piling up in the market, growers must choose other cash crops, market observers have suggested.

India’s purchase of Myanmar’s mung beans, pigeon peas and green gram came to a halt in May 2017, leading to chaos in Myanmar’s pulses market. The market has now recovered with India lifting the restriction on pulses importation. — Maung Sae Aung

One permit, two endorsements approved by MIC

THE Myanmar Investment Commission (MIC) issued a joint venture investment permit and two endorsements for wholly foreign-owned enterprises under the Myanmar Investment Law, according to a meeting held by MIC last Saturday.

The joint venture approved by MIC is EC Terra Agriculture Co. Ltd. for cultivation, production and sales of agricultural commodities, including rice, corn, beans and pulses, sugarcane, oilseed crops and other cash crops, creating 40 job opportunities for local people.

The two endorsements are for wholly foreign-owned enterprises— Best Garment (Myanmar) Co. Ltd. for manufacturing of garments on cut-make-pack basis and Coffee Concepts (Myanmar) Limited for catering and sales of Starbucks brand products, as well as the operation of Starbucks stores.

The two permits will create more than 4,100 job opportunities, according to the MIC meeting (6/2018).

MIC intends to attract foreign direct investments worth US$3,000 million during the transitional period from April to September of the 2018-2019 FY. The manufacturing and real estate development sectors will attract the highest FDI during the six-month interim period.

FDI worth $5.7 billion through some 222 projects were received in the 2017-2018 FY. Singapore made the largest investments of $2.1 billion, while China brought in $1.39 billion. — Htet Myat

Vice President wants trade promotion with Nepal

VICE President U Myint Swe stressed the importance of trade promotion with Nepal on 13 May during his meeting with Mr. Bhim K Udass, Nepal’s Ambassador to Myanmar.

“Bilateral trade between Myanmar and Nepal is still low. Trade between the two countries must be promoted, especially the pulses trade,” said U Myint Swe.

“To bolster bilateral trade with Nepal, we will endeavour to reach an agreement through a memorandum of understanding. Myanmar will cooperate with Nepal in the education sector; also, we will try to export fisheries products to Nepal besides pulses and rice,” he maintained.

“India exports pulses to Nepal and some varieties are re-exported from Myanmar. This being so, we believe the quality of Myanmar’s beans is good. Last year, Nepal bought Myanmar’s good quality pulses piled up in the market at a cheap price. We would also like to boost trade with Myanmar,” said Nepal’s Ambassador to Myanmar.

To save transport and transaction costs between Nepal and Myanmar, the Lumbini International Airport will be opened next year. It will help enhance the tourism sector. Further, the two countries will send trade commissioners to observe the markets.

The vice president also invited Nepal to sell its products in Myanmar’s market.

The value of Myanmar’s bilateral trade with Nepal during the last 2017-2018 fiscal year was less than US$8 million, according to the commerce ministry. — Nyein Nyein

Interview with stakeholders in Kachin State

THE media group that travelled to Myitkyina on 9 May for three days visited the Maria Heavenly Maiden Church in Tang Hpre, Myitsone Village, the Trinity Baptist Church in Kawarka, Naungnan Village, the Nyaung Yan Camps (1, 2, 3, 4) previously held by KIA Brigade (2) and the brigade’s headquarters in Awng Lawt Village.

The following are excerpts from interviews with displaced villagers, military personnel, and officials from the Myanmar Red Cross.

Injong Jartaung, 60
Tanaungyan Village
Maria Heavenly Maiden Church

“I’m from Nan Paw Yan Village and I came here with my entire village. There are a hundred of us. We receive necessary food and a place to stay. I was a farmer in my village and I have four family members. We didn’t bring anything with us. We want to live peacefully in our hometown. They are fighting each other but we are in the crossfire. We left because we were afraid of getting caught in that crossfire.”

La Taung Thu, 80
Ingyanyan Village
Naungnan Village Trinity Baptist Church

“I come from Ingran Kaung Village near Ingyanyan Village. We fled because we were terrified of the war. I came with my son, his wife and their children. I still have family members left back in the village but I don’t know if they will flee the village or not. I’ve been facing war since I was 20 years old. I just wish for all fighting to end.”

Brig-Gen Kyaw Soe Min
(Regional Command)

“Our fighting mainly took place in Tadar Nyi Naung Hpa-kant Myitkyina on 6 April. Another one took place in Lamone Village on 8 April when the other side attacked us first. Because of that we carried out area clearance operations in Tanai at the KIA Nyaung Yan Camps (1, 2, 3, 4) and Brigade (2) Headquarters. We avoided civilians and focused on military targets and avoided villages from getting damaged. Everyone who’s visited the villages can see the houses were not damaged. Everyone wants to return to their homes and we can take care of their security here.”

Lt-Col Soe Htet
(Regional Command)

“I’m assigned to security details in Awng Lawt Village. I arrived here on 1 May and the first thing we saw was the KIA Brigade (2) Headquarters burning. The other side of the village was completely untouched. Since our arrival we have not received any villagers coming to us for help saying they are trapped. Before we arrived here the church organizations contacted 200 people the first time and transported them with help from the Red Cross. But these people were not from Awng Lawt. They were workers from Shwe Maw and merchants and they were taken back to their hometowns. We’ve cleaned the churches in the village and left the houses in their normal state.”

U Gae Nest, Chairman
Kachin State Red Cross Society

“We received news on 17 April that people were trapped in Awng Lawt Village so we asked for permission from the state government and received it immediately. We received additional permission from the regional command on 18 April and then we arrived in Awng Lawt on 20 April. We did not see anyone when we first arrived in Awng Lawt. When the workers and merchants heard the Red Cross was here they appeared on 20 April. We contacted Awng Lawt villagers five times through the people who arrived. They thanked us for coming but they said they will discuss among themselves and didn’t come out. We waited at our temporary camp in KBC Church for three days. In the end we just took the 225 workers and merchants to Tanai Administration Department and send them back to their various hometowns. The people in Awng Lawt said they were at a place three days’ walk away and didn’t appear any more.”

The Pyay Canal is one of the main waterways of the Ayeyawaddy Delta and Upper Myanmar and the commercial hub of Yangon city and it can be used in all weathers. In 1918, the length of 1.5 mile section of the Canal was stretched to a length of 100 feet and deepened to allow for larger watercrafts. Tong gates were opened to collect taxes from vessels using the Canal. The canal was also dredged in 1982. Since then, maintenance works for the Canal have been carried out. The Canal is a shortcut waterway between the Ayeyawaddy Delta and Upper Myanmar and the commercial city of Yangon and it can be used in all weathers. In 1982, the length of 1.5 mile section with 25 feet in width was added to the original length of 3.5 miles by a work of someone in a press. The original length of 3.5 miles along the coastline connected Ayeyawaddy Region and Yangon Region with the Canal 300 feet in width and 9 feet in depth which was dug in 1913. A drainage channel and a system Leptangin customs gate to zero mile was simultaneously constructed. With protest by the Yangon Harbour Administrative Engineering Department by giving sound reasons for getting Kanaytigo Canal silted up, the width of the canal was reduced from 300 feet to 180 feet in 1961. After that, the Canal was completed in 1972. But due to erosion of the bed and the channels made the Canal to lose 90 feet wider than original width.

The construction of the Canal The construction of the Twante Canal which connects Pun Hlaing River which could be used during the rains and not the dry season. Toll gates were opened to control the flow of currents from the Pyay River. Poor maintenance and cleaning of the Canal led to siltation and thereby leading to the collapse of the banks. A channel at 1.5 mile section of the Canal was stretched to a width of 100 feet and a depth of 10 feet in 1982 and from that point on, all kinds of vessels have been allowed to travel in all weathers through the Canal.

Maintenance works for the Canal Sustainable development, safe passage for all vessels and prevention of bank collapses are implemented under the supervision of the government in a timely manner. Stone walls were built along the Canal to prevent bank collapses at villages near the bank and for sustainable development of the Canal. Ministry of Transport and Communication techniques were also included. They were implemented in accordance with the Pyay River Canal and Rangoon River and Demonstrations of educational techniques were also included. Maintenance of the Canal was carried out by the Irrigation Department. Port Authority has taken over the tasks concerning with the Pyay River Canal. &&&

The association laid down the seven-point program at the Myanmar-China Friendship Association (Central) held in Yangon, under the guidance of the Chinese ambassador Muhammad Xi Xianyan. It also includes extension of branches of the association to regions as the waterway transport is the cheapest among the other means of conveyance.

Thanking you Sincerely yours

Ancient cave in Kayin State boosts tourism

Kayin State is popular for its natural limestone caves and waterfalls. Some of the famous limestone caves are Kawgun Cave, Yathaypyan Cave, Sadan Cave, and Bayin Nyi Naung Caves. Another cave that is drawing tourists is the Esathara Cave near Naungpalain Village.

To improve access to the cave for tourists and build better roads, Kayin State Chief Minister Daw Nan Khin Htwe Myint and state ministers visited the area yesterday morning.

The Esathara Cave is located on some 90 acres of the Esathara mountain near Naungpalain Village. It is accessible by travelling on Hpa-an-Hlaingbwe road and turning into the Mebaung Village-Naungpalain Village road. Some seven miles into the road, there is a checkpoint that diverts into a dirt path and into the cave entrance. A reclining Buddha image can be seen near the entrance, with the cave being some 1,000 feet deep.

The cave is filled with numerous natural beauties, and at the end of the passage is a small opening 10 feet above the cave floor that can be accessed with a bamboo ladder.

Hpa-an is a central tourism attraction in Kayin State that houses natural caverns, scenes of the state’s traditions and culture, waterfalls, hot springs and other tourist destinations, for which Hpa-an received the ASEAN Sustainable Tourism Award 2018.

The chief minister and other state ministers will survey the area to ensure no modifications or changes are carried out that will damage the natural environment of the area. —Nay Myo Lwin (District IPRD)

Iran FM hopeful of forging ‘clear future’ for nuclear deal on diplomatic tour

BEIJING — Iran’s foreign minister said Sunday he was hopeful of forging a “clear future design” for the nuclear deal facing collapse after Washington’s withdrawal, at the start of a diplomatic tour aimed at rescuing the agreement.

“I hope that with this visit to China and other countries we will be able to construct a clear future design for the comprehensive agreement,” Mohammad Javad Zarif told reporters after talks in Beijing with his Chinese counterpart Wang Yi.

Zarif will later fly to Moscow and Brussels to consult the remaining signatories to the 2015 agreement denounced by US President Donald Trump.

Washington’s decision to withdraw from the deal and reimpose sanctions angered its European allies as well as China and Russia.

China was one of the six powers — with the United States, Russia, France, the UK and Germany — that signed the historic pact, which saw sanctions lifted in return for the commitment by Tehran not to acquire nuclear weapons.

As he arrived in Beijing, Zarif said Tehran was “ready for all option(s),” according to the semi-official ISNA news agency.

“If the nuclear deal is to continue, the interests of the people of Iran must be assured,” he added. After their meeting, Zarif and Wang hailed the “comprehensive strategic partnership” between their countries, with the Chinese minister saying: “I hope and believe that these visits to multiple countries will help protect Iran’s legitimate national interests and peace and stability in the region.”

Tehran’s chief diplomat embarked on the tour as regional tensions spiked just days after unprecedented Israeli strikes in Syria which a monitor said killed at least 11 Iranian fighters, triggering fears of a broader conflict between the two arch-enemies.

Extremist administration

Before leaving, Zarif published a government statement on his Twitter page, slamming Trump’s “extremist administration” for abandoning “an accord recognised as a victory of diplomacy by the international community”.

It reiterated that Iran was preparing to resume “industrial scale” uranium enrichment “without any restrictions” unless Europe provided solid guarantees it could maintain trade ties despite renewed US sanctions.

Trump hit back Saturday evening, tweeting that the accord had failed to contain Iran’s militarism.

“Iran’s Military Budget is up more than 40 per cent since the Obama negotiated Nuclear Deal was reached... just another indicator that it was all a big lie,” he wrote.

Zarif’s delicate diplomatic mission was complicated by the reports of clashes between Iran and Israeli forces in Syria on Thursday. The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said Saturday that at least 11 Iranians were among the pro-regime fighters killed in strikes by Israel, which has vowed to prevent Iran from gaining a military foothold in neighbouring Syria.

Tehran, which has sought to avoid an escalation in a regional conflict that could alienate its European partners, has not commented on whether its forces were hit.

Israel and its allies have blamed Iran’s Revolutionary Guards for initiating Thursday’s exchange by launching missiles into the occupied Golan Heights.

Iran denies the claims, saying the Israeli strikes were launched on “invented pretexts”.

Allies fume at Trump

Meanwhile, European diplomats in Tehran fumed that Trump’s decision to withdraw from the deal could undermine years of patient work to restore commercial and diplomatic ties with the Islamic Republic.

“Since the signing of the JCPOA (nuclear deal), we have gone from an atmosphere like a gold rush, to one of utter depression,” said a Western trade diplomat on condition of anonymity.

“We are waiting now for how the decision-makers in the European Union will react. If the EU leans towards accommodating the US, all the progress we have made since 2015 will be lost.”

Iranian hardliners who have long opposed President Hassan Rouhani’s moves to improve ties with the West — are already mobilising against the efforts to save the nuclear deal.

Mohammad Ali Jafari, head of the Revolutionary Guards, said the country could not rely on the West. “We hope recent events will lead us not to trust in the West and even Europeans,” he said Sunday, according to the conservative-linked Fars news agency.

“The Europeans have repeated on several occasions that they will not be able to resist US sanctions.”

He added if the European powers were unable to make guarantees, “we must choose the path of self-sufficiency and nuclear industry with our own capabilities”.

The sentiment was echoed on the streets. “Officials shouldn’t trust France and Britain. They will never abandon the US for us,” said housewife Poroomeslam at a protest against Trump on Friday.

A photo on the official Instagram site of supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei showed him reading a Farsi translation of Michael Wolff’s blistering account of the Trump White House, “Fire and Fury”, quickly picking up more than 100,000 likes.

Khamenei said last week he was highly doubtful that Europe would provide the “real guarantees” needed for Iran to stay in the nuclear deal.

But analysts said Iran was determined to maintain the moral high ground in the coming weeks.

“For the first time, Iran has the chance to show the world they are not the rogue nation they are always presented as, that they negotiated in good faith and keep to their commitments,” said Ka’rim Emile Bitar of the Institute for International and Strategic Studies in Paris. —AFP

Dutch firm ASML perfecting ‘microchip shrink’ for tech giants

VELDHOVEN (NETHERLANDS) — They call it “the shrink” — it’s the challenge of how to pack more circuits onto the microchips which power everything from our phones to our computers, even our coffee machines.

And pushing the boundaries of this technology is Dutch company ASML, which since its foundation in 1984 has quietly become a world leader in the semiconductor business.

“There is more power in your smartphone today than was used to put man on the moon,” says ASML’s chief operating officer Frederic Schneider-Maunoury, animately waving his mobile phone in the air.

When you open an app on your phone, the chain allowing you to book a flight, message a friend or check out who’s hot in your neighbourhood area all the way back most likely to ASML.

Headquartered in Veldhoven, near the Belgian border, it builds sophisticated lithography machines to enable the world’s top chip makers — Intel, Samsung and Apple supplier Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing (TSMC) — to produce the smallest, most powerful, most cost-effective microprocessors on the planet. Its newest machines use highly-focused extreme ultra-violet (EUV) light to imprint designs on the chips, and are at the cutting-edge of what is scientifically and technologically possible in the art of miniaturisation.

Phones are not for calling

Last year after two decades of research and development and billions of euros, ASML shipped its first 12 EUV machines to clients. Each costs about 120 million euros ($145 million).

This year it has projected sales of 20 machines — by 2020, it hopes to be selling 35 to 40 a year.

It is ironic that these machines, which produce chips of infinitesimally small dimensions, are the size of a bus. Three Boeing 747 aircraft are needed to transport one machine to a client.

Long seen as a bellwether of the tech industry, the company is listed on both the Amsterdam bourse, the AEX, and the Nasdaq in New York. Last year it announced profits had almost doubled to 2.12 billion euros on record sales of 9.66 billion euros. —AFP

North Korea to destroy nuclear site ahead of US summit: KCNA

SEOUL — North Korea will destroy its nuclear test site later this month, ahead of a summit with the United States, it said Saturday, pledging to blow up its tunnels in front of invited foreign media.

US President Donald Trump praised the North’s decision to dismantle the Punggye-ri test site in a ceremony expected to be held between 22-25 May, the latest step in leader Kim Jong Un’s charm offensive.

“Thank you, a very smart and gracious gesture!” Trump tweeted.

Dialogue brokered by Seoul has seen US-North Korea relations go from trading personal insults and threats of war last year to a summit between Kim and Trump due in Singapore on 12 June.

But sceptics warn that Pyongyang has yet to make any public commitment to give up its arsenal, which includes missiles capable of reaching the United States. Washington is seeking the “complete, verifiable and irreversible denuclearisation” of the North and stresses that verification will be key. Punggye-ri, in the northeast of the country, has hosted all six of the North’s nuclear tests, the latest and by far the most powerful in September last year, which Pyongyang said was an H-bomb.

Kim has declared the development of the North’s nuclear force complete and that it had no further need for the Punggye-ri test site. PHOTO: AFP

“Fire and fury”

Saturday’s announcement is the latest move in a rapid sequence of events on the Korean peninsula triggered by the Winter Olympics in the South. Indonesia church attacks kill at least 11, dozens wounded

SURABAYA (INDONESIA) — A series of blasts, including at least one suicide bombing, struck churches in Indonesia on Sunday, killing at least 11 people and wounding dozens in the deadliest attack for years in the world’s biggest Muslim-majority country. The nation has been on high alert following attacks by homegrown militants, including some claimed by the Islamic State group, as it grapples with rising intolerance towards religious minorities.

No one has yet claimed responsibility for the bombings during Sunday services in Indonesia’s second-biggest city Surabaya.

East Java police spokesman Frans Barung Mangera confirmed the deaths of 11 people with 41 injured after three churches were hit by apparently coordinated attacks around 7:30 am (0030 GMT).

TV footage appeared to show a person on a motorcycle driving into the grounds of one church before a bomb went off seconds later.

Television eyewitness reports suggested that one suicide bomber was a veiled woman with a couple of children in tow.

Police have not confirmed details about the suspects and it was not clear what happened to the children after the blast.

Other images showed a vehicle engulfed in flames and plumes of thick black smoke as a body lay outside the gate of Santa Maria Catholic church, with motorcycles toppled over amid the debris.

“I was frightened... many people were screaming,” 23-year-old witness Roman told AFP after the blast at Santa Maria.

Police experts disarmed two unexploded bombs at the Gereja Pentecostal Pusat Surabaya (Surabaya Centre Pentecostal Church), which was also hit by a live blast.

Also targeted was the Kristen Indonesia Diponegoro Church.

Shootout kills four

The attacks came just days after five members of Indonesia’s elite anti-terrorism squad and a prisoner were killed in clashes that saw Islamist inmates take a guard hostage at a high-security jail on the outskirts of Jakarta.

The Islamic State group claimed responsibility for that incident although police denied its involvement.

Police on Sunday said four suspected members of the radical group Jemaah Anshar Daulah had been killed in a shootout during raids linked to the prison riot, but would not comment on whether the group was connected to Sunday’s bombings.

Nearly 90 percent of Indonesia’s 260 million people are Muslim, but there are significant numbers of Christians, Hindus and Buddhists.

Concerns about sectarian intolerance have been on the rise, with churches targeted in the past.

Police shot and wounded an IS-inspired radical who attacked a church congregation outside Indonesia’s cultural capital Yogyakarta with a sword during a Sunday mass in February. Four people were injured.

In 2000 bombs disguised as Christmas gifts delivered to churches and clergymen killed 19 people on Christmas Eve and injured scores more across the country.—AFP

Greece celebrates Mother’s Day with wishes for better future

ATHENS — Greece marked Mother’s Day on Sunday with a series of events held by municipalities to honor motherhood.

Officials and ordinary citizens sent wishes for a better future for mothers and their children in the country which is set to exit an acute eight-year debt crisis this summer.

“This day reminds us of the role of the Mother who brings life and keeps family united... We should never forget that thanks to strong family ties we avoid the collapse of the social fabric during these difficult years,” Greek President Prokopis Pavlopoulos said in his e-mailed message for the day.

The celebration of motherhood in Greece has roots in antiquity. Ancient Greeks held spring festivals to honor Hera, the goddess of fertility and ‘mother of Olympian Gods’, according to ancient Greek mythology.

Mothers who took their children in a central Athens park on Sunday to enjoy music and dance performances and take part in various workshops noted that parenthood, in particular during the years of financial hardship, is not easy.

Greeks women have fewer children than the average for the EU, according to figures for the year 2016 released by Eurostat this spring.

The average for Greek women is 1.38 children each, while the EU average fertility rate is 1.6 children. Birthrates in Greece have been reduced by 10 per cent in the past decade, according to the official statistics. As social benefits to support motherhood have been slashed and couples faced pay cuts, tax hikes, unemployment and uncertainty, fertility rates also declined—Xinhua

Israel wins Eurovision with #MeToo inspired song

LISBON — Israel won the Eurovision Song Contest in Lisbon early Sunday after singer Netta Barzilai beat 25 other contestants with her uptempo song “Toy,” whose lyrics were inspired by the #MeToo movement.

The winning track, which contained refrains such as “I am not your toy, you stupid boy,” summed up the concerns of many women who have adopted the growing global movement against sexual harassment.

The 25-year-old, who wore a multicoloured kimono, accompanied her winning performance with trills, chucking sounds and chicken-like dance moves in an eye-catching and bizarre performance that is often typical of the Eurovision contest.

“I am so happy. Thank you so much. Thank you for supporting diversity,” she as she took the stage to perform her song after her win was announced.

“People chose different, people chose refreshing.”

Barzilai secured 529 points, beating stiff competition from Cyprus’ Eleni Foureira and her fiery song “Fuego” which got 436 points.

She received the Eurovision trophy from the last year’s winner, Portugal’s Salvador Sobral, who had called her song “barbile” in an interview published in Portuguese daily Publico on Wednesday.

“I felt he respected me and I send only love to him.” Barzilai said when asked at a press conference what it was like to receive the award from Sobral.

Shortly after her victory Barzilai managed to break the glass trophy she had been awarded — but organisers gave her a replacement at the post-concert press conference.

Stage invasion

The annual musical extravaganza has long been known for its ludicrous costumes, glitz and high-tech stage effects.

Highlights from this year’s contest which was hosted by Portugal for the first time included a staircase that was set alight and a giant projection dress that came to life with colourful animations.

British singer SuRie’s performance was interrupted by a man who jumped on stage and snatched her microphone as she performed her entry “Storm.”

She calmly turned to one side and clapped while the man was escorted away before quickly resuming singing after being handed another microphone.

The man is in police custody, the European Broadcast Union, which stages Eurovision, said in a statement.

SuRie and her team were offered the chance to sing again but opted not to because they were “extremely proud” of her performance, it added. She finished in 24th place.

Israel has won the contest in 1978, 1979 and 1998.

Ariel Lopstein, a Jewish Puerto Rican who lives in Madrid who was at the final, said Barzila’s victory was a way of celebrating the 70th anniversary of the establishment of the state of Israel.

“I am really excited, really happy,” the 43-year-old, who wore a blue and white Israeli flag around his back, told AFP.

‘Best ambassador’

Barzila’s victory sparked celebration in Israel, which has won the contest three other times, in 1998, 1999 and 1998.

Hundreds of fans danced in front of Tel Aviv’s city hall. Some threw themselves fully clothes into the shallow water of the building’s esplanade.

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu congratulated Barzilai by telephone, telling her she was “the best ambassador of Israel. We love you.”

Israel will now host the contest next year. Eurovision was first held in 1956 with the aim of unifying Europe after World War II. Today it has an estimated global audience of around 200 million people — more than the Super Bowl in the United States — and has served as a global launching pad for the likes of ABBA and Celine Dion.

“It’s just harmless fun, it is just a really good atmosphere,” said Lee Torrance, a 43-year-old from Worcestershire in the United Kingdom who wore a vest and bowtie with the Union Jack pattern to the final.

China ban

Although the contest is supposed to be nonpolitical, this year’s Eurovision, like many others before it, was not stranger to controversy.

The European Broadcast Union barred China’s Mango TV from airing Saturday’s final after it edited out a romantic dance sequence by two men from Ireland’s entry during the contest’s first semi-final.

Mango TV also blurred out rainbow flags in the audience.

After two semi-finals held this week, 20 countries moved on to Saturday’s final while Britain, Italy, Spain, France and Germany got free passes as they are the biggest contributors to the European Broadcasting Union. Portugal automatically qualified because it was the host.

Barzilai said she would celebrate her win with her fans who had come to Lisbon from Israel to support her at the contest.

“There is nothing like an Israeli party. You will find out next year,” she added. — AFP

‘Star Wars’ as big as The Beatles, says Ron Howard

LOS ANGELES — Oscar-winning filmmaker Ron Howard said Saturday directing a movie in the “Star Wars” universe was as daunting as making his Beatles documentary thanks to the intense fanbase.

Howard, 64, who made the acclaimed “The Beatles: Eight Days a Week” (2016) about the peak years of The Fab Four, told a news conference in southern California he felt just as much pressure on “Solo: A Star Wars Story.”

“The level of anticipation is unlike anything that I’ve done. You fall into it and it’s amazing. It was a little bit like the Beatles documentary that I took on,” said Howard, who won directing and producing Oscars for “A Beautiful Mind” (2001).

“I could tell from the moment it was announced. ‘Ron, don’t mess this up.’ So I immediately felt the same thing with this. The fans care, and they should care. ‘Solo,’ which gets its US release on 25 May, charts the adventure-filled past of smuggler Han Solo — made famous in four “Star Wars” movies by Harrison Ford — before he was the galaxy’s most adored scoundrel.

The second of three planned spin-offs from Disney-owned Lucasfilm, it follows “Rogue One: A Star Wars Story,” the second highest-grossing movie worldwide in 2016.

The latest episode sees Han meet his mighty future co-pilot Chewbacca and encounter the notorious gambler Lando Calrissian, in a journey that sets the course of one of the Star Wars saga’s most unlikely heroes.

“It’s really wild. It’s really exciting and it’s bigger than you can wrap your head around. Particularly being in the Millennium Falcon, is very cool,” said Alden Ehrenreich, 28, who stars as the titular hero. ‘Life-changer’

“You get in and you can’t believe you’re in it and it’s so surreal. And then, a couple months into shooting, you’re inside of it, you’re flying it, you know where the buttons are and you’re like, ‘Okay, this feels like my ship now.’”

Donald Glover, known to cool kids the world over as US rapper Childish Gambino, was the only name on Lucasfilm’s list to play Lando. One of the world’s hottest rising stars, Glover is an award-winning writer, director, musician, stand-up comedian and actor, known for his television work on “Community,” “Atlanta” and “30 Rock.”

“I love that there are rich people and poor people in this movie,” said Glover, who racked up a record-breaking 90 million YouTube views this week with his new single “This is America.”

“You get to see why Han is complicated. That’s a rough world out there and I really love that it’s not simple.” — AFP
First female Bishop of London installed

LONDON — Sarah Mullally was installed as the first female Bishop of London on Saturday, becoming the third most senior cleric in the Church of England.

Mullally was installed as the 133rd Bishop of London at St. Paul’s Cathedral on International Nurses Day — Florence Nightingale’s birthday — echoing the new bishop’s former career as a nurse.

She followed the tradition of knocking three times on the cathedral’s Great West Door with her pastoral staff.

She is now the state church’s third most senior cleric, after the archbishops of Canterbury and York.

In her sermon, she spoke of the challenges facing London, particularly escalating knife crime, and referenced historical sexual abuse within the church.

“We need to speak up for the whole of London, to work to challenge the violence and the crime that have led mothers to clean their own children’s blood from our pavements,” she said.

“If there is a darker image of the world today or a more urgent wake-up call for all who love this city, who believe it can have an even better future?”

The Church of England’s general synod gave final approval to a historic reform allowing female bishops in 2014 after years of bitter wrangling between factions who opposed and supported the move. The CofE consecrated its first female bishop in January 2015. Women have been able to be ordained as priests in England since 1992 and now make up a third of the clergy.

The CofE separated from the Roman Catholic Church in 1534. It claims that more than 40 per cent of people in England regard themselves as members.

It is the mother church of the global Anglican Communion, which has around 85 million followers in more than 165 countries.

Frank Sinatra, five parts of a remarkable life

PARIS — Crooner, charmer and fighter: Frank Sinatra died 20 years ago, leaving an indelible mark on the world.

AFP draws on its archives to look over his exceptional life.

'The Voice'
Born on 12 December, 1915 in Hoboken, New Jersey, Sinatra — the son of Italian immigrants — cut his first record in 1939 and three years later was a star.

Over his lifetime, the elegant and clean-cut performer produced more than 100 records and dozens of hits such as “Strangers in the Night,” “I’ve Got You Under My Skin” and “My Way.”

His singing career saw highs but also lows, during which he turned to Hollywood, winning an Oscar in 1953 for the World War II army drama “From Here to Eternity.”

On the stage into his late 70s, “The Voice” pulled in the crowds.

In 1962, at the height of the Elvis Presley craze, he caused a riot at Paris’s legendary Olympia venue when fans rushed to see him on stage, turned out in “a night-blue suit with a pocket handkerchief and a bow tie,” according to an AFP report.

“At 11.30 pm organisers were still pushing back latecomers who were prepared to pay 5,000 old francs (today worth around 70 euros) for a stand-up place for the end of the performance,” it says.

A ladies’ man
Renowned for his many romantic conquests, the dashing Sinatra was first married to teenage sweetheart Nancy Barbato (1939-1949), with whom he had his three children Nancy, Frank Jr and Tina. Then followed Hollywood stars Ava Gardner (1951-57) and Mia Farrow (1966-68), and model Barbara Marx (from 1976).

In 1965, as rumours swirled of his impending marriage to Farrow, the performer made a highly public return to New York with the actress, 30 years his junior, on board his luxury yacht and pursued by boatloads of journalists.

“The arrival of Sinatra and his beautiful ‘siren’ made the front pages of all the local dailies alongside large headlines announcing that an American fighter jet was shot down by a Soviet missile near Hanoi,” AFP writes.

Shadow of the mafia
Sinatra was dogged by allegations of links with the mafia which he always denied, including in the courts, but was never able to shake completely.

In 1963 he was stripped of his casino licence on allegations of ties with Chicago mobster Salvatore “Momo” Giancana. At a 1961 gaming control board hearing on his request for a new licence, he was grilled about claims that he had delivered two million dollars in an attachment case to mafia boss Lucky Luciano in Havana in 1947.

“If you can find me an attachment case that could hold $2 million, I’ll give you the $2 million,” the singer replied,” says an AFP story.

Sinatra won back his casino licence with the support of president Ronald Reagan.

Battlin’ Frankie
Sinatra was also known for getting into scraps and fistfights.

In 1969 a security guard said he was punched up by the singer after he had been thrown out of an event. Just before, “Sinatra, who had been singing at a charity benefit banquet, had had a heated altercation with actor John Wayne and was escorted out in a very bad mood,” the AFP account says.

Four years later, French photographers issued an outraged statement after the star swept through.

“Paris is not Chicago and we don’t want Mr Sinatra acting out his number of ‘tough guy’ or ‘charming gangster’ by taking journalists for targets,” they fumed.

1998: a voice silenced
Sinatra died on 14 May, 1998 in Los Angeles at the age of 82, after suffering a heart attack.

From the Cannes Film Festival in France, director Martin Scorsese said “words cannot express my sadness.”

His funeral was held in the only Catholic Church in Beverly Hills with leading lights such as Nancy Reagan, Kirk Douglas and Bruce Springsteen among the hundreds in attendance.

The church was “filled with gardenias, roses and white lilacs, Frank Sinatra’s preferred colour of the flower,” AFP’s piece describes.

The only one of his songs played in the church was “Put Your Dreams Away,” the piece with which he habitually closed his concerts, it says.—AFP

Sagaing United advances to next stage in General Aung San Shield 2018

SAGAING United has advanced to the second stage of the General Aung San Shield 2018 by beating Myawady FC 5-2 after the penalty shootout yesterday.

Both teams showcased their main players for the knockout match.

Myawady drew first blood at the 25th-minute mark through Thet Paing Ko.

Sagaing goalkeepers then saved three attempts by Aung Phyo, Kyaw Zin Htike and Myo Min Htike earning a 5-2 win for Sagaing United.

The team has advanced to the next stage of the tournament.
