ASEAN, Australia committed to countering terrorism

THE ASEAN-Australia Summit concluded on 18th March with both sides adopting a joint statement - the Sydney Declaration - which sets out their shared commitment to boost cooperation on various issues.

The Memorandum of Understanding between the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and the Government of Australia on Cooperation to Counter International Terrorism signed on 17 March 2018 will deepen and expand our strong existing cooperation.

The signatories agreed to share intelligence and strengthen law enforcement cooperation, among a host of other joint initiatives.

The leaders exchanged views on ways to boost cooperation on security issues, particularly cyber security. The landmark MoU to combat international terrorism inked on Saturday focused on developing capabilities to deal with terrorists' use of technology to spread their ideology.

State Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and other Southeast Asian leaders signed an agreement at the summit with the Australian government to strengthen cooperation and collaboration to counter violent extremism and terrorism within the region.

Both sides unequivocally condemned in the strongest terms terrorism in all its forms and manifestations, reiterating their commitment to work together even more closely to enhance regional cooperation to counter terrorism, including to prevent and suppress the flow of foreign terrorist fighters in the region, and address the underlying factors and conditions that contribute to the growth and spread of violent extremism and radicalization.

"Nowhere is far away from anywhere when it comes to terrorism, and none of us can tackle this threat alone," said Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull.

Australia has continuously supported humanitarian aid to Myanmar and is also a valuable ally with ASEAN. In 2016, the ASEAN-Australia summit was held in Laos and the recent one was held in Australia herself. Relations between ASEAN and Australia reached mutual strategic levels in 2014, and in 2016 the ASEAN-Australian trade value reached USD 73 billion placing it in third place after China and the European Union.

Australia has pledged to contribute humanitarian aid to Myanmar and last year agreed to support an additional AUD 16 million (approx. USD 12.3 million), as well as to follow the recommendations from Kofi Annan's final report on Rakhine State in providing assistance to the area. Since July 2016, Australia has provided USD 18 million in cash assistance to Myanmar.

In all the meetings between Australia and ASEAN, the subject of counter terrorism has been given careful deliberations and Myanmar has been quick to discuss the recent surges of terrorism and violent attacks in her border areas. As Myanmar increases cooperation with her allies and elevates her standing in the international community, then surely goodwill and collaboration will also increase between all stakeholders. ■

Energy Consumption with Sustainable Development in Myanmar

By Khin Yadananar

THE energy sector is the totality of all of the industries involved in the production and sale of energy, including fuel extraction, manufacturing, refining and distribution. Modern society consumes large amounts of fuel, and the energy industry is a crucial part of the infrastructure and maintenance of society in the world.

Exploitation of energy

The use of energy has been a key in the development of the human society by helping it to control and adapt to the environment and managing the use of energy is inevitable in any functional society.

In the industrialized world the development of energy resources has become essential for agriculture, transportation, waste collection, information technology and communications that have become prerequisites of a developed society. The increasing use of energy brings about a number of serious problems, some of which, such as global warming, can create potentially grave risks to the world.

Discovery of energy sources

Ever since humanity discovered various energy resources available in nature, it has been inventing devices, known as machines that make life more comfortable by using energy resources.

In this time of globalization uncertainty one thing we do know is that the world is in need of energy -- and in increasing quantities -- to support economic and social progress and build a better quality of life in the country.

But providing this energy around the globe comes with a responsibility and commitment to developing and using our resources responsibly. Commitments should be made to protect both people and their environment, thereby making positive economic contributions.

Reliable and Affordable energy sources

Energy sector enables the productivity and services which can enrich the quality of human life in our modern world. For developing nations like Myanmar, the need for reliable and affordable energy becomes more and more crucial and it can also improve and even save our lives.

Moreover, reliable energy can support the development of industry, agriculture, trading and transportation sectors respectively. Also it can help the people escape poverty and create higher living standard. The majority of the countries in the world use energy which comes from hydrocarbons, with crude oil being the dominant source of transportation fuels and its demands is getting higher and higher.

It is of paramount importance to increase the growing needs of energy consumption including oil and gas because renewables alone cannot meet the demand in the market but all sources of energy are needed to address this problem.

The Yadana Gas project

The Yadana Gas project is one of the biggest gas production fields in Myanmar and is an extension of Yadana gas field, an offshore gas field in the Andaman Sea.

French oil and gas giant Total is the operator of Yadana project with 31.2 per cent interest, while partners own the rest: US Chevron-Unocal is holding 28.3pc, Thai firm PTTEP with 25.5pc and state-owned Myanma Oil and Gas Enterprise (MOGE) with 15pc.

This project has been thriving since 1995 and the production started in 1998. Moreover it is still producing with plateau production of 8 billion cubic meters per year.

Energy Sectors in Myanmar

The energy sector plays an important role in the country's economy, with natural gas providing by far its most important among businesses about electricity shortages.

According to the records, Myanmar has been one of the major natural gas producers and exported to China and Thailand. But power demand has grown steadily since Myanmar overhauled its economy in 2011 to encourage foreign investment.

Production of usable energy

Producing energy to sustain the needs of the country is an essential social activity, and a great deal of effort goes into this activity.

Efforts should be made to increase the production of electricity and oil, and to explore newer ways of producing usable energy resources from the available energy resources. One such effort is to explore means of producing hydrogen fuel from water and though hydrogen use is environmentally friendly.

Endeavors of Ministry for Electricity and Energy

Myanmar has been blessed by its low-CO2 energy which is quite an issue for the country because it is one of the countries which are most affected by global warming.

As for the Ministry for Electricity and Energy, efforts are being made to set up a proper energy policy and effective plans which can be implemented the process and increase the product of energy sector.

Also the Ministry has planned to establish the joint venture projects for laboratory services to analyse petroleum and petrochemical products and certify them in accordance with the International Organization of Standardization (ISO).

Priority should be made to its energy reforms, harnessing the power of the various stakeholders. Ensuring public support in a sustained and sustainable development of its energy potential while attracting the financial and technical capability of investors will be important.

Moreover, public, private and civil society stakeholders must collaborate and partner in concrete initiatives. ■
