Green Gold cooperative exports first coffee container to European market

THE Green Gold cooperative has exported its first container of selected coffee to the European market on 12 October.

This represents an important milestone for the community of farmers in southern Shan State which has made important strides in the production and sale of coffee. It also represents a positive development in the United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime’s (UNODC) efforts to offer farmers a sustainable livelihood alternative to opium poppy cultivation.

Since its creation in 2015, Green Gold, which now comprises 968 farmers, has worked together with UNODC to acquire knowledge and expertise about the coffee business, create coffee nurseries, establish sustainable plantations and identify markets and buyers.

As a result, by the end of 2017, the cooperative signed a 5-year partnership agreement with French company Malongo for the commercialisation of its harvests under fair-trade conditions. The 2018 harvest came from 60 villages across Loilem, Hopong and Ywangan townships. In one community, Pan Lim, the coffee was of such high quality that Malongo agreed to pay a price of US$8.00 per kilogram of green coffee beans – double the market average in Myanmar.

With the support of donors (governments of Finland, Germany and Switzerland), partners, and UNODC, Green Gold is currently taking steps to have its own processing infrastructure for its next harvest, which will allow it to control additional steps in the value chain of coffee production. UNODC has also supported farmers’ attainment of land ownership certificates, women’s access to land ownership and forestry education. It will continue to undertake efforts to achieve goals set in the United Nations 2030 Sustainable Development Agenda: poverty reduction, hunger relief, sustainable and inclusive growth, gender equality and the promotion of peace, justice and strong institutions.—GNLM

First Public-Private Dialogue on e-commerce in Nay Pyi Taw

By Department of Trade (WTDO Division)

A viable e-commerce landscape is crucial to the growth and sustainability of the global economy. In Myanmar, e-commerce now accounts for approximately 10% of the economy, and its share is expected to increase in the coming years. To achieve this, the government has taken several initiatives, including the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) Report 2020, which highlighted the need for improving digital infrastructure. In light of this, the government has established the Myanmar National E-Commerce Strategy (MNECS), which aims to create a conducive environment for e-commerce development. The MNECS includes several key initiatives, such as improving the regulatory framework, enhancing digital literacy, and fostering public-private partnerships. In addition, the government is working closely with international organizations, such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), to support the development of e-commerce in the country.

In addition, the government is working closely with international organizations, such as the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD), to support the development of e-commerce in the country.

To ensure that the government and businesses can work together to overcome the challenges that e-commerce presents, a First Public-Private Dialogue on e-commerce in Nay Pyi Taw was held on 13 October 2018. This dialogue brought together government officials, businesses, and civil society representatives to discuss the challenges and opportunities of e-commerce in Myanmar. The dialogue was organized by the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD) and the Myanmar National E-Commerce Strategy (MNECS).

The dialogue was attended by representatives from the Ministry of Commerce, the Ministry of Communications and Information, the Ministry of Technology, and the Ministry of Planning and Investment. The representatives shared their views and concerns on the challenges and opportunities of e-commerce in Myanmar. They also discussed the need for greater collaboration between the government and businesses to overcome these challenges.

The dialogue was an important step in the development of e-commerce in Myanmar. It provided a platform for government officials, businesses, and civil society representatives to share their views and concerns on the challenges and opportunities of e-commerce in Myanmar. During the program, a movie titled “Still Life” shot by Director Jia Zhang-Ke will be shown and the film and reality analysis will be conducted, led by script writer Dr. Aung Min.

The movie, “Still Life” is an Art House Film type and achieved Film Award at Venice Film Festival in Italy in 2006 and also achieved Director Award Asian Film Festival in China in 2007.

As a sub-part of Cinematheque Program of Film Development Center Management group, a film and reality analysis were conducted on a movie titled “Yi Yi” shot by Director Edward Yang on 16 September and a movie titled “Rosetta” shot by Director Jean-Pierre and Lue Dardenne on 30 September. This is the third time a film and reality analysis is conducted, it is learnt.— MNA

THE domestic gold price climbed up above Ks1 million per tical (1.729 OZ) in recent days, which crashed the market, according to domestic gold market. The domestic gold price reached a high of above Ks1,008,300 per tical in mid-September, with the US dollar gaining in local currency market. But when authorities questioned the unscrupulous who manipulated the currency exchange market, it led to the price fall in gold market. The gold price on 8 October was Ks997,500 per tical, and thereafter, it turned on an upward trend. It fetched Ks1,011,000 per tical on 10 October. The domestic gold price yesterday peaked to a new high of Ks1,027,000 per tical, according to Aung Thamardi gold and jewellery shop.

Meanwhile, global gold price was US$1,220 per ounce. Since August, US dollar exchange rate has been above Ks1,500. Dollar exchange rate on 17 September increased up to Ks1,570-1,580. The US dollar exchange rate yesterday was Ks1,580-1,590, according to local currency market.

The US dollar appreciation against local currency is a contributing factor to a surge in domestic gold price, said gold entrepreneurs.

Chinese merchants prefer buying AQSIQ registered agro products

CHINESE merchants are willing to make massive buying of agro products if they receive approval from food safety inspection mechanism — the General Administration of Quality Supervision, Inspection and Quarantine (AQSIQ) of the People's Republic of China — which can guarantee safety and quality of goods, said Dr Myint Soe, vice president of Myanmar Fruit, Flower and Vegetable Producer and Exporter Association (MFVP).

"We had links with a great number of buyers through China-ASEAN expo held last month in Nanning city, China. What we need is just AQSIQ registration", he added. Chinese merchants expressed their interest in Myanmar’s Sein Ta Lone mango (Diamond Solitaire), avocado, muskmelon, chili, elephant foot yam, cardamom, banana, tea leaf, etc. "Chinese merchants carried apples and pears by air to Myanmar and took back Myanmar’s Sein Ta Lone, avocado, muskmelon and watermelon. We connected with a buyer who proposed to purchase 5 tons of tea leaves. Green chili produced form Kayan area are also received purchase order: Some want to buy banana."

This being so, exhibiting in international expos can bring about trade link between local suppliers and international traders, which benefits the farmers as well as the businessmen and also raise the country’s revenue", said Dr Myint Sein. Elephant foot yam and cardamom were previously restricted for export as they were included in the list of forest products. Now, the restriction has been lifted and they are available for export. Traders from China and Canada showed their interest in them. Sein Ta Lone mango production includes only 40 per cent of fresh and flawless fruits.

The remaining 60 per cent are for value-added production, which requires dryers and pest-killing machines, said the businessmen. MFVP called for government to government discussion in seeking AQSIQ certification at the meeting between Private Sector Development Committee, led by Vice President U Myint Swe, and businessmen, held on 6 October.

Additionally, he also requested to set respective zone areas for specific fruits and vegetables in order to produce quality vegetables and fulfill the market’s demand.—May Thein Hnin

35-year-old fisherman losses lag in crocodile attack in Bogalay

MYANMAR social enterprise, Myanmar Artisans, part of the INGO Turquoise Mountain, announced an investment of over US$730,000 in the Myanmar traditional textiles industry, during the next two years, in cooperation with the DaNa Facility The investment will initially take place in Kachin, Chin and Shan states, but it will spread to other states in Myanmar later.

Myanmar is bursting with rich, diverse textile traditions that live on through the abundance of highly skilled weavers. The Myanmar Artisans project will use these traditions and skills to improve the livelihoods of women and underserved groups in the sector through training, product development and forging better links to higher value markets. It will work across the country and also establish a central cut and sew workshop in Yangon's downtown area, keeping a crucial part of the tradition within the country, as well as focusing on product development and quality control.

"The British Government’s Department for International Development (DFID) want to work in states and regions across Myanmar to support new innovative businesses and ensure that all areas of this great country benefit from investment and economic growth. Investing in new models of inclusive business in sectors such as textiles, agriculture and financial services has the potential to help transform the Myanmar economy, creating jobs and raising incomes," said Dr. Gail Marzetti, the head of the DFID at Myanmar Artisans project opening ceremony, which was held in Myitkyina, Kachin State, on 10 October. "We are funding this programme because we believe that it is important that the traditional textiles of Myanmar continue to thrive and succeed in the future. We are supporting projects like this across every region of Myanmar because we believe that it is through responsible and inclusive growth that a country becomes truly prosperous." The unique scale and diversity of handweaving across Myanmar is extraordinary, and it is a real privilege to be working with such skilled artisans to develop products to get them to high value market, said Harry Wardill, country director of Turquoise Mountain.

Myanmar Artisans is already supporting hand weavers in Kachin State, and has a local regional coordinator in place to drive activity forward. During her visit, Dr Marzetti will also meet regional government officials at the Government Weaving School and visit one of the first weaving workshops the DaNa Facility is working with.—GNLM

A 35-year-old man lost leg in a crocodile attack on Thursday, becoming the fifth victim of the man-animal conflict in Ayeyawady Delta’s Bogalay which lying close to the crocodile sanctuary.

Tun Win, 35, was attacked by the reptile while he was fishing in a river together with his wife. He managed to escape from killing by the crocodile with the help of his wife, but lost his left leg in the attack occurred at 9 pm on Thursday.

The fisherman was taken to the hospital. In five attacks in 2018, four injured and one was killed. A woman was killed in a crocodile attack in June in a river in Bogalay.

Myanmar’s delta region is no stranger to crocodile attacks, as they occur yearly. Meinmahla Kyun Wildlife Sanctuary is located at the mouth of the Ayeyawady River. The sanctuary attracts visitors keen on viewing crocodile hatching camps and conservation projects in the region’s mangrove forests – the forests are in a steady decline due to deforestation in the area.

FRANKFURT AM MAIN (Germany) — As alarm bells over global warming ring louder, authors are increasingly turning to climate change fiction to dramatise the catastrophic effects of droughts, hurricanes and floods — and inspire action.

Dubbed “cli-fi”, the genre has seen an explosion in popularity in recent years as environmental changes sweep the globe and tales of a planet in turmoil appear less like science fiction and a lot more real.

“Climate change is slow-moving and intensely place-based,” said US literary expert Elizabeth Rush, a lecturer at Brown University.

“It is difficult for us to notice these things in our day-to-day lives,” she told AFP.

“But with climate fiction, “you can imagine being a person whom flood or drought displaces, and with that imaginative stance you can imagine being a person whom flood or drought displaces.”

Rush, a lecturer at Brown University, said: “I think we will see a lot,” she added. “We can all still do something. I absolutely think that climate change fiction can change minds.”

The age of cli-fi

US freelance journalist Dan Bloom, credited with coining the term “cli-fi” in 2010, described the genre as a literary cousin of sci-fi, but less escapist and “based on reality and real science”.

The earliest examples date back decades with JG Ballard’s 1962 novel “The Drowned World”, where melting ice caps have partially submerged an abandoned London, considered a classic of the genre.

But Taiwan-based Bloom said cli-fi was “made for the 21st Century”.

“There we are: floods, heatwaves, water shortages, climate refugees... Cli-fi invented itself."

This year’s unusually hot summer, when extreme wildfires ravaged parts of Europe and California, has made the public even more aware of climate events linked to global warming, Bloom said, heralding “a hunger to read cli-fi novels”.

But like any good novel, he stressed, cli-fi stories should at their core “be good storytelling, full of emotion and memorable characters.”

Barbara Kingsolver’s “Flight Behaviour” (2012), about the sudden arrival of huge flocks of monarch butterflies in a Tennessee forest, and Margaret Atwood’s dystopian MadADam trilogy count among the must-reads of the genre.

“Literary critics are taking the genre seriously now,” Bloom said. “We have entered the age of cli-fi.”

When done right, cli-fi novels can succeed where “boring” newspaper articles and scientific reports fail short, Bloom said.

“They can serve to help make readers more conscious of what’s at stake as the world warms degree by degree. These novels can be wake-up calls, a cri de coeur.”

University lecturer Rush agreed. Climate fiction “can be the spark that leads to planetary political transformation,” she said.—AFP

Two dead in flash floods in southern France

Marseille (France) — At least two people died when several cars were swept away by flash floods triggered by heavy rain Wednesday night in southern France, authorities said.

The storms were part of a weather front that moved across the Mediterranean Sea, killing at least 10 in the Spanish island of Majorca and carrying away part of a motorway bridge in the Italian island of Sardinia.

Two bodies were found in southern France in an overturned car stranded just off the Riviera coast near the town of Sainte-Maxime, French police said.

It was thought the car was among several that were carried out to sea after being swept away by the Garonne river, a statement from local authorities said.

Helicopters and police teams searched the area which received nearly 200 mm (2.3 inches) of rain overnight.

The fire service said it rescued 16 people.

In the Spanish holiday island of Majorca, rescue workers were searching Thursday for a five-year-old boy and two German holiday-makers still missing after the flash floods there.

In Sardinia, part of a motorway bridge crossing a river near Cagliari collapsed in heavy rains, but there were no casualties as the road had been closed following reports of subsidence.—AFP
Forbidden City hosts record label’s 120th anniversary concert

BELIJING (China) — The world’s oldest classical record label Deutsche Grammophon on Wednesday marked its 120th anniversary at a special concert in the historic Forbidden City in Beijing.

Once the seat of China’s emperors, the palace last played host to a classical music concert in 2001 when the Three Tenors — Plácido Domingo, Jose Carreras and the late Luciano Pavarotti — performed before a 30,000-crowd.

Under a crisp, cool sky, the Shanghai Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of conductor Long Yu, opened the evening with an arrangement of Chinese composer Liu Tianhua’s Enchanted Night.

The 1,200-strong crowd took in a repertoire which included Carl Orff’s Carmina Burana and Rachmaninov’s Second Piano Concerto.

Deutsche Grammophon president Clemens Trautmann told AFP that the Forbidden City was picked because of its significance.

“What I find really fascinating is that the Latin text written by Bavarian monks (that formed the basis for the Carmina Burana) came into existence around the same time as the Forbidden City was built in the 13th century,” he said.

“More fundamentally, Deutsche Grammophon has always been a very internationally minded label with a very diverse roster of exclusive artists and we want to foster cross-cultural dialogue here tonight and build bridges.”

Danish Jews recall desperate escape from Nazis, 75 years on

COPENHAGEN (Denmark) — Freddy Vainer was only four years old when he and his family were forced to flee Copenhagen to escape being deported to Nazi concentration camps, but he remembers it like it was yesterday.

“My grandfather was at the synagogue on 1 October, 1943 when he found out that he had to flee,” he said. That month nearly 7,000 Danish Jews made the desperate journey by boat to neighbouring Sweden.

Occupied by Nazi Germany since April 1940, Denmark surrendered but retained some independence of its institutions until the end of the summer of 1943, when the Danish government was forced to resign.

At first the Jewish population seemed relatively safe, and were not forced to wear a yellow star. But “in September orders from Berlin were being sent to deal with the so-called Jewish question,” Cecilie Banke, a researcher at the Danish Institute of International Studies, told AFP. She said that plans were leaked from within the German authorities so Denmark’s Jewish population could be warned.

“This is the essence of the rescue operation, the Jewish population knew so they could actually flee and since information was leaked, the Danish population could also help Jews to flee,” Banke added.

“What I find really fascinating is that the Latin text written by Bavarian monks (that formed the basis for the Carmina Burana) came into existence around the same time as the Forbidden City was built in the 13th century,” he said.

Modern art, antiques on show at Lebanon cube museum

EL-HERI (Lebanon) — At a new private museum in Lebanon, a contemporary sculpture of a mortar missile is displayed alongside millennia-old statues retrieved from the bottom of the sea.

Named after the Mesopotamian god of wisdom, the Nabu Museum opened in late September to showcase the cultural wealth of an ancient region devastated by conflict.

Its inaugural exhibition includes 60 contemporary works, as well as around 400 antiquities from Lebanon, Iraq, Syria, Egypt and Yemen.

“We have a more or less complete picture of what was once the cradle of civilization,” says French curator Pascal Odille. Next to a private beach in the village of El-Heri in Lebanon’s north, the museum’s collection sits in an impressive futuristic cube of steel, coated with a rusty orange patina.

A tall glass opening in the metal and concrete structure provides a view straight through the museum’s interior and out to the sea. Designed by Iraqi artists, the museum for the first time opens up the private art and antiquities collections of wealthy businessmen to the public for free.

French curator Pascal Odille says the Nabu Museum has “a more or less complete picture of what was once the cradle of civilisation”.

The project cost $7 million, the organisers say.

But the works on show only represent a fraction of its founders’ private collections, and there are plans to switch the exhibits every few months.

Adra’s personal collection includes 2,000 items from the Levant and Mesopotamia regions, according to the exhibition’s catalogue.

“The businessman says his hobby dates back to his childhood. “I’ve been collecting stamps and coins since I was 10,” says Adra, who now heads a Beirut-based polling company and owns quality control labs in the Gulf. He says it is time to give back. To set up the museum, he banded together with Syrian business partner Fida Jdeed, and fellow Lebanese entrepreneur Bard El-Hage, who runs a rare book firm in London.”

Ray of optimism

The museum’s founders — two Lebanese and a Syrian — want it to be a beacon of hope in a region scarred by conflict and the brutality of jihadists.

“Nabu is the god of writing and wisdom. Not the god of war,” says Lebanese co-founder Jawaad Adra.

“We’re a ray of optimism in this region, amid all this obscurity,” says the 64-year-old, whose colourful, modern-art inspired tie contrasts with his grey suit.

Crew of Soyuz rocket survive emergency landing after engine problem

MOSCOW (Russia) — The two-man crew of a Soyuz rocket made a successful emergency landing Thursday after an engine problem on lift-off to the International Space Station, in a major setback for the beleaguered Russian space industry.

US astronaut Nick Hague and Russian cosmonaut Aleksey Ovchinin were rescued without injuries in Kazakhstan.

“The emergency rescue system worked, the vessel was able to land in Kazakhstan... the crew are alive,” the Russian space agency Roscosmos said in a tweet.

The pair are in contact with ground control, the space agency said.

Over the past few years the Russian space industry has suffered a series of problems including the loss of a number of satellites and other spacecraft.

The rocket was launched from the Baikonur cosmodrome in Kazakhstan at 0840 GMT.

“Thank God”

The Kremlin confirmed the men had survived. Russian presidential spokesman Dmitry Peskov told journalists: “Thank God the cosmonauts are alive”.

Roscosmos’s online stream of the launch cut out shortly after lift-off.

Former military pilots Ovchinin and Hague were set to join Alexander Gerst of the European Space Agency, NASA’s Serena Aunon-Chancellor and Sergey Prokopyev of Roscosmos following a six-hour flight.

The International Space Station — a rare point of cooperation between Moscow and Washington — has been orbiting the Earth at roughly 28,000 kilometres per hour since 1998 and will mark its 20th birthday in November.

Hague was born in the same year the United States and the Soviet Union launched their first joint space mission, the Apollo-Soyuz, or Soyuz-Apollo mission in 1975.

Dmitry Rogozin, a firebrand nationalist politician who this year was appointed by President Vladimir Putin to head Roscosmos, said on Twitter he had ordered a state commission to probe the accident.

Scientists finger culprits decimating France’s oysters

PARIS (France) — A two-pronged attack by a virus and bacteria is responsible for decimating France’s 450-million euro ($520 million) oyster industry, scientists said Thursday, potentially solving a decade-long mystery.

Beginning in 2008, large numbers of young Pacific oysters have died in French waters in certain years, with mortality as high as 100 percent in some numbers of young Pacific oysters' immune systems, opening the way for several bacteria that come in for the kill.

The disease-complex hits both farmed and wild Crassostrea gigas oysters, by far the largest commercial species in the world.

Their findings were published in the journal Nature Communications.

The periodic outbreaks hit not only all French aquafarms, “but others in Europe, along with some in China, Australia, New Zealand and South Korea,” Mitta said.

Japan delays touchdown of Hayabusa2 probe on asteroid: official

TOKYO (Japan) — A Japanese probe sent to examine an asteroid in order to shed light on the origins of the solar system will now land on the rock several months later than planned, officials said Thursday.

The Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency (JAXA) told reporters the Hayabusa2 probe is now expected to touch down on the Ryugu asteroid in “late January” at the earliest, rather than at the end of this month as initially expected.

JAXA project manager Yuichi Tsuda said they needed more time to prepare the landing as the latest data showed the asteroid surface was more rugged than expected.

“The mission... is to land without hitting rocks,” Tsuda said, adding this was a “most difficult” operation.

“We had expected the surface would be smooth... but it seems there’s no flat area.”

Scientists are already receiving data from other machines deployed on the surface of the asteroid.

Last week, JAXA successfully landed a new 10-kilogramme (22-pound) observation robot known as MASCOT — “Mobile Asteroid Surface Scout.”

Loaded with sensors, the robot can take images at multiple wavelengths, investigate minerals with a microscope, gauge surface temperatures and measure magnetic fields.

Ten days earlier, a pair of MINERVA-II micro-rovers were dropped onto the asteroid — marking the first time that moving, robotic observation devices have been successfully deployed.

These rovers are taking advantage of Ryugu’s low gravity to jump around on the surface — travelling as far as 15 metres (49 feet) and staying above the surface for as long as 15 minutes — to survey the asteroid’s physical features with cameras and sensors.

Hayabusa2, about the size of a large fridge and equipped with solar panels, is the successor to JAXA’s first asteroid explorer, Hayabusa, which is Japanese for falcon.

That probe returned from a smaller, potato-shaped, asteroid with dust samples in 2010, despite various setbacks, during an epic seven-year odyssey hailed as a scientific triumph.—AFP
Leeds owner calls for ‘Premier League 2’ to boost coffers

LONDON — Leeds owner Andrea Radrizzani says it is time to create a “Premier League 2” to boost TV revenue for struggling Championship clubs.

The English Football League’s current deal with Sky is worth almost £90 million ($119 million) a season but will rise to £120 million a season from 2019-2024.

Championship clubs — playing in England’s second tier — get the lion’s share of that, as they do with the money the Premier League gives the EFL in solidarity payments, but this only adds up to about £7 million for each club.

Premier League clubs, however, get at least £100 million each from the league’s domestic and international broadcast deals.

Radrizzani, who bought former English champions Leeds in 2017 and recruited mercurial Argentinian coach Marcelo Bielsa, thinks the gulf in income is too wide.

“The model of the Championship should be reconsidered because to keep changing owners every one, two, three years is not a fair system for the fans, for the clubs,” he told the Sport Business Summit in London.

“It is really not sustainable to stay in the Championship. There are huge gaps between clubs coming down from the Premier League with parachute payments to the other teams on lower budgets. And the money generated from TV rights is small because it is split between 72 clubs (across three divisions).

“Maybe they need to consider another way to create value. Premier League 2 or something, that is sustainable even for the people who are not promoted.”

“I think we should consider that a club like Leeds, that is watched by 500,000-600,000 people live on Sky, is getting only £2-2.5 million from the league (in TV rights) and actually penalises us because we’re always on TV, maybe more than 20 times,” he added. “It doesn’t work.”

In a statement, an EFL spokesman said the Championship “remains one of the most competitive and unpredictable divisions in world football”, with attendances and revenues that beat many top divisions across Europe.

He also pointed out that the clubs promoted to the Premier League in 2016-17 all stayed up last season, while those relegated did not bounce back to the top flight. — AFP

England turn to next generation to get creative against Croatia

LONDON — Just three months on from the bitter disappointment of losing a first World Cup semi-final for 28 years, England visit Croatia on Friday in the Nations League seeking not only revenge, but also a long-term solution to a familiar shortcoming.

For all the progress made by the Three Lions in a glorious Russian summer, a familiar lack of midfield authority ultimately undid England as Croatia’s Luka Modric and Ivan Rakitic took control of their semi-final to come from a goal down in Moscow. It was a similar story when Spain came to Wembley last month to puncture England’s feel-good factor by dominating the ball in a 2-1 Nations League win.

A run to the last four with the third youngest squad at the World Cup raised expectations of what is to come from a richly talented generation under Gareth Southgate’s tutelage.

However, Southgate has gone even younger in his search for the midfield maestro he believes England have lacked since the days of Paul Gascoigne.

Jadon Sancho, 18, and Mason Mount, 19, who made moves to get more first team football, and James Maddison, who jumped to the Premier League, are all rewarded with a first call-up.

Sancho has lit up the Bundesliga since making a familiar decision to turn down Pep Guardiola’s pleas to keep him at Manchester City and join Borussia Dortmund last year.

Compared to Neymar by his former England under-16 coach D a n Micciche, Sancho has more assists than any player in Europe’s top five leagues with nine this season, including one in the Champions League.

“I believe in myself, so moving to Germany didn’t faze me,” said Sancho as he faced the media glare for the first time in an England shirt.

“I’m a bit tricky, direct, confident obviously. I believe in myself in one versus one situations.”—AFP
