Message of Greetings from President U Win Myint
on the occasion of the 63rd Anniversary celebrations of Kayin State Day
(7 November 2018)

We will also have competitions for “done” cultural dances, “zat pwes” and food stalls, product exhibition stalls and boat races. I have been informed that these festivities will be organized on a scale grander than previous years without losing touch with age old traditions. I therefore send good wishes and hope that all ethnic brothers and sisters would be able to participate in good cheer happily.

When the States/Regions were formed after Independence, deliberations were made in the Parliament to designate as Kayin State all the regions where the Kayin nationals were residing. Thus in accordance with the Amendment Act 62 of the 1951 Constitution, Papun region of Thanlwin District was constituted as Kayin State as an initial step. In continuation, according to Act 14 of the 1952 act to extend Kayin State, all the adjacent areas of Thanlwin District such as Kyarin Seikyi Township, Kawkareik Township, Hlaingbwe Township, Hpa-an Township, and Thandaung Gyи Township were designated as Kayin State as a second step of extension. Again on 1st March 1969, Myawady Town was designated as Myawady Township and Kayin State was reconstituted with 7 townships namely Hpa-an Township, Papyin Township, Hlaingbwe Township, Thandaung Gyи Township, Kawkareik Township, Kyarin Seikyi Township and Myawady Township.

Thus the 7th of November, the day on which the Union President signed the Amendment Act of the 1983 Constitution to designate Thanlwin District as Kayin State, has been designated as Kayin State Day. Since 1955 we have celebrated the Kayin State Day and this year marks the 63rd year.

If we look back at history, it may be found that 11 Kayin racial groups have been living in Kayin State together with other ethnic groups happily and in friendship since ancient times. However, after gaining independence because of the impact of political instability, there were long years of internal conflicts. However, after gaining independence because of the impact of political instability, there were long years of internal conflicts. As a result of which we were not able to do development works with full steam. Thus, our country lagged behind in many sectors.

The states where ethnic nationals live suffered more from the internal conflicts. At this time we are working for internal Peace and National Reconciliation to build a Union based on democracy and federalism.

Therefore, now is the time, for all ethnic Union nationals to take lessons from undesirable experiences of the past and march forth in unity with collective strength and joined hands for the emergence of a peaceful Union.

That is why our Union Government has been exerting strenuous efforts for internal peace and national reconciliation ever since the time we took over state responsibilities. For the emergence of a democratic federal republic we have conducted political dialogues and the Union Peace Conference - 21st Century Panglong for three times. We have now reached agreement on 51 fundamental principles of the Union Accord.

The sounds of guns have now almost fallen silent in Kayin State which has suffered heavily the brunt of internal armed conflicts. Ethnic brothers and sisters and all armed groups living in Kayin State have worked ardently with courage for peace in Kayin State. They have made a bold decision and joined hands to work under the leadership of the Union Government in development projects with vision and enthusiasm. Because of this cooperation, Kayin State is now enjoying the fruits of peace and development.

Kayin State has the Thanlwin river and is rich with waterfalls, mountain streams, caves and the natural beauty of forests and mountains. These are good prospects for developing eco-tourism for foreign and local travelers. Furthermore, this is also an important region for border trade and commerce, being in the south-eastern flank of the country. Presently, since we are about to construct two Thai-Myanmar Friendship Bridges and many border trading posts, this will mean increased job opportunities for the local ethnic nationals.

As the Union Government has been implementing development projects all over the country, it has also been implementing projects for Kayin State development in areas such as transport, education, health, human resources, supply of electricity, development of SME’s, and development of eco-tourism.

In striving for the transformation of the Republic of the Union of Myanmar into a stable, peaceful and prosperous Federal Democratic Republic, all ethnic nationals and Union citizens need to work strenuously with collective strength, hand in hand and cooperate to overcome all difficulties and challenges.

As Myanmar walks on the path of peace and development, I wish to urge all our ethnic brothers and sisters from Kayin State to continue working hard in unity, with hands joined together, for the emergence of a peaceful, beautiful and developed Kayin State. Furthermore, as I send this Message of Greetings, I pray that we would be able to successfully build the Federal Democratic Republic with the good foundations already laid down for peace and development.

Export of manufacturing sector up by $290 million in October this FY

THE value of exports in the manufacturing sector was worth $487 million last month, which is a significant increase of over $290 million compared with the same period in the last FY, according to data from the Ministry of Commerce.

Myanmar’s manufacturing sector is largely concentrated in garment and textiles on a Cutting-Making and Packaging basis, which contributed to the country’s GDP to a certain extent.

The CMP industry has emerged as very promising in the export sector. The export value of CMP was only $850 million in the 2015-2016 fiscal year, but export income from the CMP industry tripled within two years, with $2.5 billion in the 2017-2018 FY, as stated at the Myanmar Global Investment Forum 2018 held on 12 September.

Meanwhile, garment producers are eying Myanmar for investment because of its inexpensive labour, which sometimes causes conflicts between garment factory employers and labourers, according to market observers.

There are currently over 400 garment factories in Myanmar, employing over 300,000 workers.

Of note, the manufacturing sector is likely to maintain the top position in attracting FDIs during the current FY.

Do quality control by yourself

Thike See Tun (Nat Twa)

As a responsible quality control inspector in the construction sector, I got a lot of chances to have regular quality checks over building structures. At every inspection step, there was a spiral of errors. They are helpful on their skilled expertise, but not in every step of the construction. The peace process is continuing and the UPDJC is making strenuous efforts for peace, and these efforts can be seen as rays of hope for peace and our country.

(Translated by Myat Thandar Aung)
Musa, 67, was arrested by anti-graft officials and brought to a Kuala Lumpur court where he pleaded not guilty to the charges. “I will fight this case to clear my name,” Musa told reporters as he exited court after being released on a bail of two million ringgit ($479,000). Musa formerly headed UMNO in Sabah, Malaysia’s second biggest state that is rich in oil, gas and timber. He is the older brother of former foreign minister Anifah Aman.

The once-powerful UMMO, the main party in the Barisan Nasional coalition that had ruled Malaysia since its independence from Britain in 1957, has been rocked by desertions after its humiliation in the 1999 general election.

The prize will be an environment where it will significantly easier to do business, cutting red tape and allowing businesses to do what they do best. This will send an important signal to investors, both local and foreign, and will help encourage the formation of new companies, creating jobs and lifting people out of poverty.

He said that the measures the government has taken over the last year include: the formation in January 2018 of the Doing Business Reform Working Group, which reports to the Private Sector Development Committee, chaired by the Vice President, H.E. U Myint Swe; the drawing up of a comprehensive reform action plan; the strengthening of inter-agency coordination; the preparation of an awareness strategy to engage the private sector and the public; and the development of a website, which will go live by the end of 2018.

The Doing Business Report 2019, published on 31 October 2018, recognized two reforms undertaken by Malaysia during the reporting period: making it easier to start a business by reducing the burden of registering a company (from 1 April 2018); and increasing the reliability of electricity supply and the transparency of tariff information.

Myanmar now records and publishes details of every power outage, including time, duration and the reason for the outage (planned, unplanned and for load shedding). “The cut-off date for reforms to be captured in the Doing Business Report 2019 was the end of April 2018”, the Deputy Minister pointed out. “This means that a number of reforms implemented recently are not reflected in this report. These include: the provisions of the new Companies Law coming into effect on 1 August 2018; the launching on the same date of the electronic companies registry (MyCo), which allows companies to register online; and reductions in the number of procedures to obtain a construction permit and get an electricity connection. In addition, a new Insolvency Law was introduced into Parliament in October 2018.—MNA

Wind farm ‘predator’ effect hits ecosystems: study

PARIS (France) — Wind farms act as a top “predator” in some ecosystems, harming birds at the top of the food chain and triggering a knock-on effect overlooked by green energy advocates, scientists said on Monday.

Wind is the fastest-growing renewable energy sector, supplying around four per cent of global electricity demand.

Close to 17 million hectares — an area roughly the size of Tunisia — is currently used for generating wind energy worldwide, and researchers warned that developers had “greatly underestimated” the impact the technology has on wildlife.

In new research, an international team of scientists studied the effects of wind turbine use in the Western Ghats, a UNESCO-listed range of mountains and forest spanning India’s west coast region and a global “hotspot” of biodiversity.

They found that predatory raptor birds were four times rarer in areas of plateau where wind turbines were present, a disruption that cascaded down the food chain and radically altered the density and behaviour of the birds’ prey.

In particular, the team observed an explosion in the raptors’ favourite meal, fan-throated lizards, in areas dominated by the turbines. Furthermore, they saw significant changes in lizard behaviour and appearance, living as they were in an essentially predator-free environment.

“What was remarkable to us were the subtle changes in behaviour, morphology, and physiology of those lizards,” Maria Thaker, assistant professor at the Indian Institute of Science’s Centre for Ecological Sciences and lead study author, told AFP.

As the levels of raptors fell around the turbines, so too did the rate of predatory attacks the lizards had to deal with.

As a result, the team found that lizards living in and around wind farms had lessened their vigilance against possible danger.

Simulating “predator attacks”, humans in the study could get up to five times closer to a lizard in the wind farm zones than one living away from the turbines before the creatures fled.

“The more we find out about how we deploy green energy solutions, the better,” Thaker said.

Scientists warn that the impact of wind turbines could have consequences for the balance of animals in the area.

“As man-made carbon emissions continue to rise, we expect that wind energy will be vital in mitigating the effects of climate change,” Thaker said.

With evidence that the impact of wind farms reaches further into Earth’s ecosystems than previously thought, she called for greater consideration of the environmental impact of the vital green energy source.

“It took decades for scientists to realise that wind-turbines were negatively affecting animals that fly,” Thaker said.

“We need to be smart about green energy solutions. Let’s reduce our footprint on the planet and put turbines in places that are already disturbed in some way — on buildings for example.”

Project nears end for sustainable freight, logistics in Mekong

By May Thet Hnin

THE project for Sustainable Freight and Logistics in Mekong countries, funded by the European Union and the German development agency GIZ, is nearly finished, said Daw Pyai Pyai Pwint, national project coordinator of GIZ.

Five countries making up the Great Mekong Subregion, including Cambodia, Myanmar, Laos, Viet Nam and Thailand, have been simultaneously carrying out this project during the term February 2016 - January 2019. The project for the five countries has received financial support of 2.4 million euros. The EU contributed 90 per cent of the funds, while the remaining 10 per cent is supported by German government and the project is implemented by GIZ.

The project focused on safe fuel handling, safely transporting dangerous goods, formulating business plans for small and medium enterprises working freight and logistics, and education about green freight policy, are being carried out.

The Ministry of Transport and Communications and the Road and Transport Administration Department are primarily carrying out this project, and the GIZ has already provided technical assistance to them. Additionally, more than 150 entrepreneurs operating small and medium enterprises had access to trainings, said Daw Pyai Pyai Pwint. A national workshop, “Promotion of Logistics Alliance and Policy Development”, was held yesterday as part of this project at the office of the Myanmar International Freight Forwarders’ Association (MIFFA). Officials from Mekong Institute also delivered remarks.

Sanga Sattanun, project manager of the Mekong Institute, explained about the website, which contains data and profiles of entrepreneurs from five countries. It was noted that Myanmar freight forwarders require capital to keep up with other countries with advanced technology. Also, another impediment is infrastructure constraints for transportation, said Quan Anh Nguyen, Program Specialist of Mekong Institute, who spoke about policy development. After this workshop, GIZ will submit policy recommendations to the government to ensure a sustainable freight and logistics industry in Myanmar.

WWII sites called most popular in Katha Tourist Zone

ENGLISH and Japanese tourists primarily visit sites of famous World War II events in the Katha Tourist Zone, according to officials. “Most English, American and Japanese tourists are interested in the Katha Tourist Zone. They are, in fact, the relatives of soldiers who fought battles which took place during World War II. So, relatives of soldiers visit Katha, where their grandparents served”, said U Nyo Ko Naing, the secretary of the Katha Region Heritage Protection Association.

The Katha tourism zone includes Katha, Indaw and Banmauk Townships, and is expected to be extended to other townships.

“Tourists are interested to visit these three townships. Due to well-known literature, tourists visit some of the famous places described in the novel “Burmese Days”, written by George Orwell. Some tourists are here to visit sites from Operation Thursday launched in 1944. Also, tourists are interested in visiting Man Htuang village, which was built from parts of airplane bodies in Banmauk Township. “Some parts of airplanes are still found in those areas. White City was also constructed in Katha Township. In 2016, No 77 Brigade Commander erected a memorial stone, in cooperation with the Myanmar government”, noted U Nyo Ko Naing.—Myo Win Tun (Monywa)

A machine makes water out of air - Watergen’s atmospheric water generator

HANOI (Viet Nam) — Imagine you could quench your thirst with water that doesn’t originate from a river, spring or lake, but comes directly out of the blue sky; from the air that surrounds you. What sounds like a science fiction movie is already a reality, and it is potentially for everyone.

The new technology, developed by Watergen, an Israel-based tech company, is currently being showcased in Viet Nam’s capital city Hanoi. And this is how the air-to-water magic-happening inside the machine works: The atmospheric water generator takes in ambient air through a filter, and cools it at its dew point, extracting water through condensation. The water is then purified, mineralized, and is ready and safe to drink.

Drinking water for homes, buildings and whole villages

Watergen’s medium scale generator GEN-350 can produce an average of 600 liters of clean drinking water per day. It comes with a built-in reservoir and a water treatment system. In Viet Nam, with its high air humidity, the machine can extract even more water, says Watergen President Michael Mirilashvili: “Here in Viet Nam, in the three locations where we tested the technology, it performed even better than we expected.”

A large scale unit can extract up to 3000 liters per day. It is designed to provide water to approximately 2500 people per day, and it can be installed on a rooftop and connected directly to the building’s water grid. A small generator, GENNY, can provide drinking water for homes and offices, it generates 25 to 30 liters per day. The machines only need electric infrastructure to operate, and can be installed anywhere.

Watergen wants to take its technology even further: “Our scientists already developed the technology that implements the Watergen core technology inside cars, buses, trains and all kinds of transportation”, Mirilashvili also points out that the use of atmospheric water generators could drastically reduce plastic waste.

Access to safe water during droughts

In Viet Nam, a country still suffering from water shortages and poor water quality, the demand for clean water solutions is increasing, says Ambassador of Israel to Viet Nam, Nadav Eshkar: “Viet Nam is one of the countries most affected by global warming, suffering from droughts in the South and Central region in recent times. In Israel, we already have solutions, which we are introducing here”.

Watergen’s generator has already been in use in numerous countries around the globe, in India, the United States, Latin America, China, Russia and several African countries, to name a few. It is also being listed as one of the Technology Pioneers in 2018 by World Economic Forum.

The water generator presented at the event “Israel in the heart of Hanoi” is a gift from Watergen to the Hanoi People’s Committee. It will be on display in Ly Thai To square in the city center for a month, allowing Hanoi’s citizens to take a sip from the sky.

The exhibition coincides with a celebration of 25 years in diplomatic relations between Israel and Viet Nam. -AFP

Worldwide web inventor wants new ‘contract’ to make web safe

LISBON (Portugal) — The inventor of the worldwide web on Monday called for a “contract” to make internet safe and accessible for everyone as Europe’s largest tech event began in Lisbon amid a backlash over its role in spreading “fake news”. Some 70,000 people are expected to take part in the four-day Web Summit, dubbed “the Davos for geeks”, including speakers from leading global tech companies, politicians and start-ups hoping to attract attention from the over 1,500 investors who are scheduled to attend.

Tech firms now find themselves on the defensive, with critics accusing them of not doing enough to curb the spread of “fake news” which has helped polarise election campaigns around the world. The firms are under scrutiny for harvesting profits by harvesting data on consumers’ browsing habits. British computer scientist Tim Berners-Lee, who in 1989 invented the worldwide web as a way to exchange information, said the internet had deviated from the goals its founders had envisaged. “All kinds of things have things gone wrong. We have fake news, we have problems with privacy, we have people being profiled and manipulated,” he said in an opening address.

Berners-Lee, 63, called on governments, companies and citizens to iron out a “complete contract” for the web that will make the internet “safe and accessible” for all by May 2019, the date by which 50 percent of the world will be online for the first time.

‘Going through a funk’

He has just launched Inrupt, a start-up which is building an open source platform called “Sol-id” which will decentralize the web and allow users to where their data is kept, along with who can see and access it. Solid intends to allow users to bypass tech giants such as Google and Facebook. The two tech giants now have direct influence over nearly three quarters of all internet traffic thanks to the vast amounts of apps and services they own such as YouTube, WhatsApp and Instagram.

Employees of Google, Facebook and other tech giants have in recent months gone public with their regrets, calling the products they helped build harmful to society and overly addictive.

Tech giants are also under fire for having built up virtual monopolies in their areas. Amazon accounts for 93 per cent of all e-book sales while Google swallowing 82 per cent of all European internet-search ad spending.

“I think technology is going through a funk... it’s a period of reflection,” Web Summit founder and CEO Paddy Cosgrave told AFP. “With every new technology you go through these cycles. The initial excitement of the printed press was replaced in time by a great fear that it was actually a bad thing. Over time it has actually worked out OK.” Among those scheduled to speak at the event is Christopher Wylie, a whistle-blower who earlier this year said users’ data from Facebook was used by British political consultancy Cambridge Analytica to help elect US President Donald Trump — a claim denied by the company. Another tech veteran who has become critical of the sector, Twitter co-founder Ev Williams, will on Thursday deliver the closing address. —AFP

MIT researchers develop drone fleet system to find lost hikers in lush forest

WASHINGTON — Researchers from Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) developed an autonomous system for a fleet of drones to collaboratively search lost hikers in forests.

In a paper to be presented at the upcoming International Symposium on Experimental Robotics conference, the researchers described the drones using only on-board computation and wireless communication, requiring no GPS, according to MIT’s official website.

Helicopters and drones can’t get a glimpse through the thick tree canopy and ordinary autonomous drones that can bob and weave through trees demand GPS signals that can be unreliable in forest.

The new technique equipped each quadrotor drone with laser-range finders for position estimation, localization, and path planning.

The drone can create its own 3-D map of the terrain. Algorithms help it recognize unexplored and already-searched spots, so it knows when it’s fully mapped an area.

Then, an off-board ground station combines individual maps from multiple drones into a global 3-D map that can be monitored by human rescuers.

When located, the drone would tag the hiker’s location on the global map and rescuers could then use this information to plan a rescue mission.

“Essentially, we’re replacing humans with a fleet of drones to make the search part of the search-and-rescue process more efficient,” said the paper’s first author Tian Yulun, a graduate student at MIT.

The researchers tested multiple iterations of randomly generated forests, and tested two drones in a forested area within NASA’s Langley Research Centre.

In both experiments, each drone mapped a roughly 20-square-metre area in about two to five minutes and collaboratively fused their maps together in real-time. —Xinhua
Midfielder Maung Maung Lwin wants Myanmar to reach AFF Suzuki Cup semifinals

MYANMAR midfielder Maung Maung Lwin is poised to give it everything he can to help his side reach the AFF Suzuki Cup semi-finals for the second successive tournament.

The 23-year-old Yangon United player was part of the team that produced the country’s best ever performance at the AFF Suzuki Cup when they reached the 2016 semi-finals. But Myanmar was defeated by champions Thailand in the semi-finals.

The midfielder was part of Myanmar’s U-23 side that recently returned from the Asian Games in Indonesia after putting in a strong showing that saw them finish level on four points with continental powerhouses Iran and Saudi Arabia, as well as DPR Korea. Myanmar had only to exit by the narrowest of margins because of a low-grade goal difference.

Maung Maung Lwin scored in the draw with the Koreans and the tournament is likely to have instilled further confidence ahead of the hotly anticipated AFF Suzuki Cup, where many of the players that lined up in Indonesia will turn out for their nation at senior level.

In 2016, I didn’t expect to be in the line-up at all,” admitted Maung Maung Lwin, who has scored two goals for his country since making his debut in 2015.

“Our first match was against Viet Nam (at home) and we lost 2-1, but it was such a sensational feeling. We tried our best to get to the semi-finals, which we managed to do, before we lost to Thailand and unfortunately had to leave the tournament. “I was very happy that we could get that far and now, in 2018, we will again be giving it everything we have to be part of the semi-finals”, said Maung Maung Lwin. —Htut Htut (Twantay) ■
