KEY STORY

Cyclone Nargis damage assessed

On 10 July, the UN updated their cyclone Nargis appeal to US$481.8 million in humanitarian aid for Burma over the next three years. The appeal been 39.6% funded. The updated appeal was based on the findings of the Post-Nargis Joint Assessment (PONJA) assessment. Many key findings in the PONJA report – death toll, infrastructure damage – match what has already been reported by the SPDC and UN.

- 84,530 people dead, with a further 53,836 still reported missing. Sixty-one percent of those that were killed were female.
- Thirty-four percent of households reported having no food, and a further 45% reported having less a week’s supply of food. Thirty-eight percent of households reported obtaining food from humanitarian agencies.

2 Tripartite Core Group (Jul 08) Post-Nargis Joint Assessment
3 If those surveyed reflect the 2.4 million affected by the cyclone, 2.14 million people did not have enough food to last them a week.
Floods inundated over 600,000 hectares of agricultural land and killed nearly half of all draught animals. Fourteen thousand hectares of mangrove swamps were destroyed.

Over 450,000 homes were destroyed and an additional 350,000 houses were damaged.

Sixty percent of public schools and 75% of the health facilities were destroyed or severely damaged.

2008 GDP growth has been revised to show a 2.7% decrease because of cyclone-related losses. The adverse impact on the GDP will continue through 2009.

Twenty-three percent of people reported psychological problems since the cyclone, while only 11% reported receiving any treatment.

Significantly, the report put a price tag on many cyclone related losses – US$1.7 billion in damage and $2.3 billion in lost income. The report estimated Burma will need at least US$1 billion over the next three years for recovery and rehabilitation.

SPDC US$10 million aid windfall

On 28 July, the UN admitted that the SPDC has pocketed an estimated US$10 million from UN aid funds intended for cyclone Nargis recovery because of the regime’s manipulation of currency exchange rates. The UN estimate is based on a currency conversion loss of 15% on about $66 million spent for aid in Burma. The UN estimate is conservative because after cyclone Nargis currency exchange losses reached as high as 25%.

UN humanitarian chief John Holmes described the loss as a “significant problem” and said that it would be addressed immediately. However, before the true extent of the SPDC’s diversion of aid funds was revealed by the media, Holmes said that the issue was “not a significant problem.” On 10 July, UN humanitarian coordinator for Burma Dan Baker insisted that the regime had “not benefited” and that aid dollars were being exchanged for kyat “at the market rate”.

UNDP operations in Burma have been affected by currency conversion losses for 14 years. UN agencies and other humanitarian aid organizations have attempted to minimize losses by importing aid in goods and paying international staff outside of the country. The SPDC has thwarted these attempts by imposing restrictions on the import of aid items. This has forced UN agencies to make local purchases of aid at inflated prices from state-owned enterprises.

Survivor camps close but many still without food and water

SPDC camp officials summoned the 7,000 remaining survivors in the three camps in Labutta, Irrawaddy Division, and told them to return to their villages by 5 August. SPDC officials told the survivors that they would not receive assistance after that date and threatened to set fire to the camps. Camp members, who agreed to relocate, received a 10-day food ration. Despite the inducements and threats, the SPDC’s strategy of forcing cyclone survivors to return to their homes has failed. Hundreds of cyclone survivors the SPDC evicted from camps in June have not returned to their homes but are sheltering in monasteries.\textsuperscript{15}

The UN announced that it would be ending aid flights on 10 August.\textsuperscript{16} However, by their own estimates, 1.1 million survivors have still not received any assistance. Aid agencies warned that millions still lacked food and water in some of the most inaccessible parts of the delta.\textsuperscript{17} On 25 July, a WFP spokesperson described the situation as “dire”, and said that the vast majority of families simply didn’t have enough to eat.\textsuperscript{18}

Reconciliation

As part of its cyclone survivor resettlement plan, the SPDC awarded 18 private companies contracts for building 4,000 permanent houses in Bogale, Phyapon, Dedaye, and Labutta Townships, Irrawaddy Division.\textsuperscript{19} The SPDC told survivors that they would have to pay 1.5 million kyat (about US $1,265) for the houses.\textsuperscript{20} Most people have only received a plastic sheet to use for shelter.\textsuperscript{21}

Confiscations and forced donations continue

SPDC officials and soldiers have also continued to profit from humanitarian aid donations at the village level.\textsuperscript{22} In Dedaye Township, Irrawaddy Division, and Maungdaw Township, Arakan State, local authorities reportedly demanded contributions and held donation ceremonies but donated items were never delivered to survivors.\textsuperscript{23}

Health of survivors

The WHO said that cyclone survivors are now suffering from malaria, measles, dengue fever, and acute jaundice.\textsuperscript{24} Medical staff in Rangoon report that dengue fever has broken out in the city. Children are particularly affected by the outbreak. A nurse at a private clinic in Rangoon’s Yankin Township complained that public storm drains are still clogged by cyclone debris.\textsuperscript{25}

Child survivors

According to the SPDC, all schools in the Irrawaddy delta have resumed classes.\textsuperscript{26} However, many students are attending school in temporary buildings. Fifty-seven percent of schools do not have toilets.\textsuperscript{27} Monasteries in the Irrawaddy delta opened their doors to orphaned children but monks reported children as young as 10 had remained in their communities to work or had moved into cities to find work.\textsuperscript{28}

According to both farmers and the FAO, July was the last opportunity for farmers to plant paddy for the next harvest. According to villagers, at least 70% of farmland in the Irrawaddy delta remained uncultivated as a result of cyclone damage, lack of paddy seed, draught animals, or farm supplies and equipment.29

- The international community donated tillers but SPDC-imposed bribes and bureaucratic hurdles meant that most farmers never received them. Those that did receive tillers complained that there was no fuel or that they could not afford to purchase fuel on the black market. Farmers complained that tillers broke down almost immediately.30
- Other farmers received paddy seeds but said that the amount was insufficient because much of the seed had been diverted by bribes to SPDC officials before it reached them.31 Farmers in Bogale Township reported paying SPDC officials 1,000 kyat per basket of rice seeds that failed to sprout.32
- Even in areas where farmers managed to plant their paddy, fertilizer shortages are projected to decrease yield by as much as 40%.33
- Some farmers abandoned their farms to search for other work or were unable to work because of cyclone related trauma.34

INSIDE BURMA

Martyrs’ Day

On 19 July, about 300 NLD members gathered in front of the party headquarters in Rangoon to commemorate Martyrs’ Day. Foreign diplomats and journalists attended the event. The NLD reiterated its call for the immediate and unconditional release of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and other political prisoners.35 In Magwe and Mandalay Divisions, the NLD held activities to mark the anniversary despite SPDC authorities’ warning not to hold any commemoration.36

At the monasteries

Ahead of Buddhist lent and the return to monastic studies, reports emerged that the SPDC had ordered Rangoon monasteries to send monks back to their hometowns.37 Monks believed that the measures were intended to reduce the number of monks in Rangoon before 8 August.38 Additionally, it was reported that some abbots in Rangoon and Pegu did not accept students who participated in the Saffron Revolution.39

Monks in Tenasserim, Magwe, and Mandalay Divisions reported that they continued their boycott against SPDC members and their families despite pressure and scrutiny from authorities.40

Bombs

- 1 July: A small bomb exploded near the Union Solidarity and Development Association (USDA) office in the Northern Rangoon suburb of Shwepyithar. No casualties were reported.41 The underground group Vigorous Burmese Student Warriors (VBSW) claimed responsibility for the bomb blast.42

Food shortages in Chin and Arakan States

On 9 July, the Chin Human Rights Organization (CHRO) released a report on the ongoing food crisis in Chin State. The report warned that people in 200 villages in Chin State were facing starvation. The report also said that more than 600 people fled to India in search of adequate food supplies.\(^{45}\)

In Arakan State, flooding and landslides forced the closure of major roads that adversely affected trade and commerce. In Maungdaw Township, the price of rice, chili, and onions increased between 15 and 30%.\(^{46}\)

New Rohingya camps in Bangladesh

On 2 July, Bangladeshi authorities began moving Rohingya living in makeshift camps to a new refugee camp in Nil a Township. The new camp reportedly has better facilities and camp residences will be given to UNHCR recognized refugees along with a food ration book.\(^{61}\) Despite opening the new camp, between 2 and 19 of July, four refugees died of starvation.\(^{62}\)

Karen offensive

Renewed fighting between the Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) and the regime-sponsored Democratic Karen Buddhist Army (DKBA) resulted in more displacement in Eastern Burma.\(^{63}\) In early July, 200 Karen villagers fled and took refuge at a local school in Tak Province, Thailand.\(^{64}\) Later in the month, 300 Karen villagers fled to Thailand after DKBA and SPDC Army units invaded their villages.\(^{65}\)

Safety in Thailand?

In July, Thailand again demonstrated the limits to the security it offers to refugees seeking shelter in Thailand. On 17 July, the Thai Army deported 35 Karen, mostly women and children, from refugee camps in Mae Hong Son Province to the Ei Tu Hta camp in Burma.\(^{66}\) The refugees arrived in Thailand earlier in 2008 after fleeing from fighting between SPDC and Karen National Union troops.\(^{67}\)

Refugees are not the only Burmese being deported from Thailand. In the first half of 2008, 298,847 Burmese nationals crossed from Myawaddy into Mae Sot, Thailand, and 86,517 have not returned. In the same period, Thai authorities deported 72,124 Burmese who entered Thailand without proper documents.\(^{68}\)
ASEAN “disappointed”

At the ASEAN Ministerial Meeting in Singapore, ASEAN Foreign Ministers broke with their longstanding custom of appeasing the SPDC by not referring to Daw Aung San Suu Kyi by name in any of their statements or communiqués. After a dinner meeting on 20 July, ASEAN FMs expressed "deep disappointment" over the SPDC’s extension of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi’s detention and called for all political prisoners in Burma to be freed.69

SPDC ratifies ASEAN Charter but objects to HR body

On 21 July, the SPDC ratified the ASEAN Charter – which includes a provision for the creation of a human rights body. Following the ratification, ASEAN FMs issued a statement that urged the SPDC to take bolder steps towards a peaceful transition to democracy. The statement also reiterated the previous calls for the release of all political detainees, including Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, to pave the way for meaningful dialogue involving all parties concerned.70

In order to implement the Charter’s provisions for a for a human rights body, a high-level panel began to draft the terms of reference for its composition, role, and powers. The terms of reference will be presented the ASEAN summit in December. During the panel’s deliberations, it was reported that the SPDC does not want the body to have any investigative or enforcement powers. SPDC FM Nyan Win told his counterparts that the rights body should uphold ASEAN’s principle of non-interference in each other’s affairs.71

US Congress passes sanctions on Burma

On 15 July, the US House of Representatives unanimously passed the JADE (Junta’s Anti-Democratic Efforts) Act.72 On 22 July, the US Senate unanimously approved the bill. The legislation will block US companies from importing gemstones from Burma through “third party” countries and impose financial sanctions on the SPDC, SPDC-controlled companies, and companies controlled by junta cronies.73

On 24 July, the US Congress voted to renew the Burmese Freedom and Democracy Act which was first enacted in 2003. The legislation bans all direct imports from Burma.74 On 29 July, President Bush signed both the JADE Act and the Burmese Freedom and Democracy Act.75

SPDC invites Gambari to visit in August – UNSC wants results

On 15 July, a UN spokesperson said that the SPDC had extended an invitation to UN Special Advisor on Burma Ibrahim Gambari to visit the country in mid-August. Gambari had originally planned to visit Burma in May but the SPDC postponed the trip because of cyclone Nargis.76

On 24 July, Gambari briefed the UN Security Council on the situation in Burma and his planned visit in August. Prior to the briefing UK Ambassador to the UN John Sawyers said that the situation in Burma had gone backwards over the last six months because the SPDC had not responded to the demands of the international community. After the closed-door session with Gambari, US Ambassador to the UN Zalmay Khalilzad said that the 15-member council expected “concrete results” from the UN Envoy’s

ECONOMY

Foreign investment falls

Foreign investment in Burma in 2007-2008 fell 77%, according to the latest official statistics. Investment in energy was $172.72 million, compared to $752.7 million the previous year.

SPDC fundraisers

In July, the SPDC continued its extortion activities and wholesale-auction of the countries’ resources.

- The SPDC announced that they would open motorcycle registration from July to October in some areas after a ban of almost five years. Registration fees were quoted up to 500,000 kyat for registration, plus 20,000 kyat for “cyclone relief”. Most believe the registration drive and “contribution” were simply an income drive by the SPDC.
- In Rangoon, SPDC soldiers began selling wood from trees that fell during the cyclone to residents to use as firewood.
- On 15 August, SPDC authorities in Maungdaw Township announced they would force farmers to sell their paddy to the SPDC at a price that is 15% below the market price.
- On 28 July, China Non-Ferrous Metal Group Company Ltd and the state-run No. 3 Myanmar Mining Enterprise signed a production sharing contract to produce nickel in Mandalay Division.
- The SPDC granted permission to 12 local and foreign IT companies to invest in the Yadanabon Cyber City, Mandalay Division.
