Permission denied to repair Mon National schools in southern Ye township

HURFOM, Khaw-Zar Sub-township, March 25, 2009

An appeal to repair Mon national schools in southern Ye township has been denied by the Township Peace and Development Council (TPDC) and the local SPDC Battalion based in the area, according to the local Mon Youth Association’s members and activists who have been trying to repair the NM SP-run schools for their young people.

Members of the joint Mon Youth organizations in the villages under the control of Khaw-Zar Sub-township have tried to ask for the permission to repair their national schools from both the Sub-township PDC and the local Infantry Battalion No. 31 since the beginning of January, 2009. However, both Sub-township officials and the local military Commanders postponed the decision for more than two months and eventually gave a negative response, according to Mehm Lyeh, a 28 year old Yin-Ye villager and worker for Mon national schools.

He explained, “at first, we tried to repair the schools without any official permission. But most of the schools in this area needed major maintenance such as replacing the zinc roofs, the wooden frames and the brick fencing. The Mon Forum

On the other hand, we have been afraid of the possible consequences from the local authorities if we do it ourselves without any permission.”

According to another 27 year old Mon man from Yin-Ye village, “in our village the school building needs major repair to be in a good condition. If not, it might cause harm to the students. Most of the frames under the roofs are not really strong enough right now.”

In the first week of March some members of the Joint Mon Youth Association under Khaw-Zar Sub-township attempted to meet with the TPDC leader but received a reply from an assistant officer instead of the council chairman U Kyaw Moe, 48, an ethnic Burman, originally from the middle part of Burma.

“We didn’t get a chance to talk with the chairman. But we met with an assistant officer and he told us that the proposal was rejected by the Sub-township’s management board during the last weekly meeting,” a 25 year old villager from Yin-Dein village, who wishes to remain anonymous, told a HURFOM reporter.

In Toe-Tat-Ywa-Thit village, some security troops from Infantry Battalion No. 31 used the Mon national school as a base to organize village security with the local residents. While based in the school the soldiers broke some classrooms’ windows, chairs, tables and blackboards, according to a local resident who used to work as a Mon national school teacher in the village.

“The soldiers have to repair the wrong they have done in the last three weeks in our school,” said a 30 year old Mon man, a member of the local Mon Youth Association in the village. “This is the main reason why we want to fix our school. We have been ready to repair it for three months. We have collected sufficient funding through the support of our friends who are working abroad in countries like Singapore, Malaysia and Thailand. We have even bought 70 bags of cement, sand, iron frames and zinc roofs in order to repair the schools. But now we have been denied permission by the authorities. Of course, most of the officials are ethnic Burman and they might want to maintain the junta’s systematic policy of ethnic cleansing. Language and Literature are very important for every minority ethnic groups and thus they have always harassed our Mon education system.

The schools in this area have been running without a break since 1995 after the cease-fire between the main Mon political armed force, the New Mon State Party (NMSP) and the current regime, SPDC. Occasionally Mon national schools have been threatened with closure by local authorities in a way similar to other Mon areas in the north. The authorities even took photographs of teachers and students in Mon national schools when the session began, to increase fear among the staff and the learners.

In southern Ye township, some Mon schools were forced to close down by a military order in 2004. Local military authorities forced a Mon National School teacher to resign after they demanded that the teacher sign a paper agreeing to teach Burmese instead of the Mon language.

Considerations on Human Rights and Political Progress

There has been a new process of international community’s involvement for the national reconciliation in Burma. Recently, an ASEAN Summit, the Thai Foreign Minister and an official from US State Department have attempted to engage with the regime to encourage national reconciliation in the country.

However, both pro-democracy oppositions and ethnic political groups have concerns about what strategies the international community will use in pushing the regime to move forward towards national reconciliation.

Can national reconciliation be built upon the SPDC’s 7-point roadmap to “Disciplined Democracy”? Not likely! The process has been designed by the SPDC with no input from the opposition.

Therefore, the international community should be careful to include all groups and be sure to work with a deep understanding of conflict in Burma.

If the SPDC has real intentions to bring about a peaceful political settlement, it must do the following:
1. Unconditionally release of all political prisoners and Daw Aung San Suu Kyi.
2. Declare of countrywide ceasefire with non-ceasefire groups.
3. Review the steps of 7-point roadmap.
Night time travel banned in Mudon and Thanbyuzayat

Residents of Mudon and Thanbyuzayat Townships in Mon State are not being allowed outside of their houses after 9 pm. The order comes after rumors of insurgent activity in the area.

Earlier this week, army officials notified the New Mon State Party (NMSP) liaison offices in Moulmein and Thanbyuzayat Townships of the restrictions. According to NM SP sources, the party was asked to ensure that its members and, particularly, soldiers in the Mon National Liberation Army (MNLA), were careful not to travel at night.

If MNLA soldiers go out at night, the NMSP paraphrased the army official, they should travel in groups and inform local Burmese army battalions. If they do not, said the official, the army would not take responsibility if NMSP members were shot by mistake.

The MNLA is the armed wing of the NMSP, which is the largest political party representing Mon people. The party was able to retain its arms and control of a small amount of territory after agreeing to a ceasefire with the Burmese military in 1995.

According to another local resident, however, the restrictions had already been in place for two weeks prior to the contacting of the NMSP. Village headmen in Kamarwet and Kalort Thort villages in Mudon Township, for instance, informed their residents that they should not leave home after 9 pm and should take particular care to register outside guests.

The order follows rumors of insurgent activity in the area. According to an NM SP source, the army official that contacted the party said that over 200 insurgents had entered the area.

How 200 insurgents could effectively, secretly operate in the Mudon and Thanbyuzayat is unclear, however. The townships are primarily made up of agricultural land and rubber plantations, and home to five Burmese army battalions.

One local source did, however, claim to have seen the Karen National Union (KNU) stopping buses bound for Tenasserim Division on the Moulmein to Ye motor road. About 30 KNU troops stopped a bus near Waekami village in Thanbyuzayat Township last month, said the witness.

A traveler who recently made the trip from Mudon to Moulmein, however, said that the situation along the highway seemed normal. Highway travel is not being restricted for travel through the area, he said, though local residents are restricted from traveling outside their villages.

Another traveler said that he saw an increased number of soldiers out at night, however. “When we came back from Moulmein, we saw that [soldiers] were guarding the plantations. But we didn’t see them the next morning.” Other local sources say that an added military presence can be seen in villages, where increased numbers of soldiers are patrolling.

The travel restrictions are causing particular problems for rubber plantation workers, who need to be at their plantations at midnight. Rubber is best tapped before the heat of the sun thins the sap. Plantation workers typically begin work at midnight, hoping to finish harvesting the sap by the morning so that it can be pressed into flats in time for them to sleep before rising again for work at midnight.

“It is very difficult for us to work in that amount of time,” explained a worker, who now must cover 4 acres with just a few hours to work each morning. “We just cannot finish our job.”

Six villages suffer actions by DKBA

In the second week of January the Democratic Karen Buddha Army (DKBA) committed a number of abuses in six different villages in Karen State. They demanded rice and bamboo some from villagers, forced some to work as porters, accused others of being members of the Karen National Union (KNU), demanded money, took property and used some villagers for protection from a KNU ambush.

On 16th January the DKBA Security Battalion (SB), which travels in advance of other DKBA battalions to secure areas and is led by Majors Kyaw Kyaw and Ba Nyain, demanded four thousand bamboo poles and one hundred and twenty baskets of rice from Kauk Sign, Kyait and Ban Ka Lar Don villages, based in Kawkareik Township, Karen state, Burma. The villagers were given a deadline of 18th January to hand over the rice and bamboo to the DKBA camp.

One of the villagers from Ban Ka Lar Don quoted Major Kyaw Kyaw as saying, “if you do not bring the rice and bamboo before 18th January all of you will face problems.”

The day before this incident, on 15th January, DKBA Brigade No. 999 arrested two villagers from Zat Ka Wat village which is based near KNU brigade 6 and is in Kawkareik Township, Karen state. The

Since the New Mon State Party (NMSP) ceasefire with the State Peace and Development Council (SPDC) villagers in Southern Ye Township and Tenasserim Division have suffered from both Burmese military soldiers and the well known Mon rebel group, the Chan Dein. Villagers have had to pay illegal taxes, faced torture and forced labor, denied access to their plantations and had their travel restricted.

Nai Ong Change, a 60 year old resident of Daniya village in Southern Ye Township left his home and arrived in the Thai-Burma border area a few days ago. He spoke of his experiences and how he had faced abuse by the soldiers in his village.

“Soldiers from Light Battalion No. 107 soldiers came to my village area and took what they wanted and ordered the villagers not to go and work on their plantations while the Chan Dein group were active nearby. When the villagers wanted to travel or work on plantations they had to ask permission from the soldiers and they had to pay 500 to 1,000 Kyat for three days. Villagers can only work three days a week and sometimes the soldiers would not allow them to work for a month. If a villager did not have permission papers they were fined 10,000 to 100,000 Kyat or tortured by the soldiers. Villagers also had to pay the soldiers' food fee of 5000 Kyat every month.”

Residents also had to pay 1000 Kyat per student for a school teacher and 16 Kg of rice a month even if they did not have children attending the school.

“My life is in my plantation. If I could not work, where could I get food and money to pay for the soldiers? I need to work and earn money to survive,” says Nai Aung Change.

When the soldiers entered the village they went through all the houses and took everything they wanted and also arrested villagers to use as porters. Villagers had to do forced labor nearly every week and were not allowed to travel. Villagers were forced to stay only in their own village.

“I worked as a porter three times and it was very difficult because I had to carry around 30 Kg on my back and I could not eat for two days because I was sick so I could not work well. While I was walking I fell down and when the soldiers came, instead of picking me up, they kicked me on my cheek two or three times with their boots and left me there. When I got home I was nearly dead.”

Many villagers wish to escape but anyone wanting to leave has to pay 60,000 Kyat per head. There are many people still in the village who can’t afford that amount of money. Three years ago there were around one hundred households in the village but now there are only twenty households left.

“When I left the village I had to pay 120,000 Kyat to the soldiers for my family and I also had to pay them to visit a relative in another village. I had to borrow money from my brother who works into Thailand. I was very happy to leave the village and I was a lucky one who was able to do so. When I lived there my life was like living in hell.”

He and his family had to travel on foot for six day to get to a refugee camp. They could not stay there because there was a lack of support and lack of jobs there. They had to find a place to get a job so they contacted a friend who lives in the Mon Relief Development Committee (MRDC) We Jar Tha area. They asked if they could come and live there because We Jar Thais is on the Thai side of the border so it is easier to get a job. In that area there are a lot of rubber plantations and they can get work clearing bush and planting the rubber plants.

“This area is safer than my village but I have to work harder than back home because I own a large plantation there and it is ready to make soap but now I have to work for someone else. Also I used to live in a big house in my village but now I have to live in a small hut here. But I am happy to live here because I do not have to pay soldiers or work as a porter for them or be forced to labor or tortured. It is much safer to live here.”

On the second week of March, 2009, a HURFOM reporter met with a 38 year old ethnic Mon villager, Nai Ah Ju, who was originally from Tamok Karaining, southern Ye Township, and fled to the Thai-Burma border because of the abuses committed by both Burmese Army and a well known Mon rebel armed group led by Chan Dein.

Until recently, Nai Ah Ju (38) and his family lived in Tamok Karaining, southern part of Ye Township, where he owned a 12 acre rubber plantation. However, faced with constant abuses and human rights violations by the Burmese military, he was finally forced to flee to a Mon Relief Development Committee (MRDC) area where he met a HURFOM reporter on March 4th.

For the last six years Battalion No. 107 have run five army bases around Tamok Karaining village with between 30 to 50 soldiers at each base. The armed Mon rebel group, Chan Dein is also active in the area.

“While the battalion is there we cannot do our work properly. Their officer, Captain San Aung is well-known in our village as he's been there for four years. The army knows that the Chan Dein group comes to the village and they abuse us by not allowing us out to work our farms or travel, compelling us to do forced labor and taking money from us;” says Nai Ah Ju.

“If someone leaves the village they are punished when they come back. I saw a friend of mine beaten by soldiers when the Chan Dein were nearby and he had returned late from his farm. They beat him nearly to death and I was very afraid after I saw this. None of us in the village dared to go outside.

“Both the battalion and the Chan Dein group were collecting money from us. We had to give between 3000 and 5000 Kyat to the soldiers and 3000 to the Chan Dein every month. The soldiers said they were collecting money for food and the rebels said they needed to buy ammunition. We were all scared of both groups because they're both armed and could kill us all so we made sure to always have money for them.

“The soldiers were also coming into the village and taking our livestock, such as chickens, pigs, bulls and ducks, without paying. I had six pigs and they took one and also took about thirty of my chickens. I didn't want to hand them over but I was afraid to say so.

“The soldiers also force us to work as porters when they go out on missions. One of my nephews had to carry ammunition for them but he was unable to because of pain in his leg so the soldiers beat him. As a result of this his head is swollen now. Almost all the village forced to work as porters were beaten. Also, they had to carry equipment for between three days and a week so, if they got a chance to escape, they'd run back to the village. But if the soldiers caught them they were punished with more beatings and forced to continue working as army porters.

“Whenever the Chan Dein group came to the village we faced trouble from the battalion. We told the rebels about this and asked them to stop coming but they kept coming every couple of months.

“Three years ago the army and the rebels were fighting and seven villagers died and two were injured. Amongst the dead were: Ah Lon (25), Hong Htaw (21), Ah Boot (32) and Ah Phot (20). The fighting was close to the village and a large artillery shell landed near them. The villagers had to give medical treatment to the two injured women, Ah Linn (26) and Ah Win (40) but neither the army nor the rebels cared about the deaths and injuries.

“The army always prevented us working on our farms outside the village so we could not do our jobs and, as a result, we had no income yet we had to work for the soldiers. When they did give permission to go to our farms we had to pay 3000 Kyat for three days, so it cost us 1000 Kyat to work on our own land for a day.

“On top of all this, my niece, Ma Hla Win (18) was raped by a soldier. He called her to ask something and then raped her. We didn't dare to complain to the headman or the battalion so my niece had to move to Duya village. Many of the good-looking women have moved to other villages because they are afraid of the soldiers.

“When we wanted to leave the village and travel we had to pay a lot of money to the battalion. I had to pay 300,000 Kyat to leave and I lied and said I was going to visit a relative for a few days. I didn't want to stay there because I couldn't work on my own land and always had to work for the army and, what's more, I had to pay both the army and the rebels every month. Many villagers ran away because of this and there are now only 28 households left when there used be over 100.

“I found a way to escape the village. I got in contact with my sister who went to live in Wi ja Tay village in the M R D C controlled area. So I left my house and my plantation and followed her. I was very happy to get here because I could work and get support from the M R D C. When I get an opportunity I will call my relatives from Tamong Karaig and tell them to come here. I hate the Burmese army so much and I don't want to return to my village.”

brigade’s leader, Major Mya Khein and his soldiers were outside of the village preparing to enter when they saw the two villagers returning home from their plantations. The soldiers accused them of being KNU soldiers and the villagers were detained. However, after the village headman confirmed their identity as villagers the major demanded seventy five baskets of rice and 70,000 Kyat before he would release them. The headman had to collect the money and rice from the whole village and once it was handed over the two detained men were released.

On the same day DKBA Battalion No. 907, led by Major Poo Kyaw and Lieutenant Zaw Thein, entered Mae Ka Nae and Ah Kwin Pyin villages, also in Kawkareik Township, and seized villagers’ phones and small batteries from local shops and took 20 villagers for portering.

A source in the KNU said, “if KNU soldiers try to ambush the DKBA while they have those 20 villagers in their hands they will kill them.”

According to a 50 year old woman from Mae Ka Nae, “since 2007 the DKBA (which split from KNU since 1994) have oppressed the Karen, burnt down houses and burnt more than thirty plantations belonging to villagers. I don’t why. What is the DKBA’s purpose and what has it to do with the same Karen people?”
Economic predation: taxation, extortion and commandeering in Mon State

I. Introduction

The economic situation on Burma’s southern peninsula is demonstrative of the often spoke truisms about the interconnectedness of the globalized world economy. Though Burma’s foreign trade is limited by government mismanagement and international sanctions, it is still reliant on and impacted by changes in the international financial environment. Today in Mon State, the reduction in the international demand for rubber has lead to a plummet in the value of rubber. Similarly, a bumper paddy croup in Southeast Asia following last year’s international rice shortages has paddy at a fraction of its normal value. The precipitous decline in price of Mon State’s primary agricultural products is being matched by a decline in remittances as migrant workers earn less in now-struggling neighboring countries Thailand and Malaysia.

Burma’s State Peace and Development Council (SPDC) government has done little, however, to respond to the deteriorating economic environment; in December Prime Minister Thein Sein went so far as to say that Burma would be “unaffected” but international financial problems. But the SPDC’s negative impact on the economic livelihoods of its residents goes beyond ignorance and mismanagement. Indeed, the SPDC has continued to actively undermine the economic wellbeing of residents in Mon State, maintaining or even increasing levels of punitive taxation in spite of villager’s rapidly shrinking incomes. This is perhaps what has lead Macquarie University’s Sean Turnell to describe the SPDC as predatory, and “not so much parasitic of its host as all-consuming. If in other countries ruling regimes behave occasionally as racketeers in skimming a ‘cut’ from prosperous business, then Burma’s is more like a looter – destroying what it can neither create nor understand.”

This economic predation is the subject of this month’s report. The first section provides a brief background of the economic environment in Mon State. The next section breaks down the common categories of taxation, extortion and commandeering suffered by residents in Mon State with examples documented during more than 60 interviews in the area over the last six months. The taxation is not limited to the areas detailed in the examples; they are simply recently documented cases, with many other similar cases occurring elsewhere. The report then concludes with analysis and interview excerpts of residents explaining the taxation’s very real, very dire impact on their basic ability to survive.

II. Background

A. Bad times, getting worse

Countrywide, Burma’s economy is among the weakest in the world. In 1987 it was officially designated a “Least Developed Country;” 20 years later, manufacturing and services remain an extraordinarily low percentage of the country’s GDP while agriculture and related activities make up nearly 50%. Strict international sanctions, domestic political problems and government mismanagement of the economy mean that the country sees little foreign investment. What investment does make it into the country is mostly limited to resource extraction, with the largest percentage concentrated in the gas and oil sectors. Calculated at the official exchange rate, this sector earned the government $US S1.25 billion in 2006/2007. The government exchange rate, however, over-values the currency by 150-200 times its market value. Calculated at the market exchange rate of 1,000 kyat to $1USD, revenue from natural gas sales more than fund government expenditures.

Unfortunately, SPDC expenditures on health and social services are amongst the lowest in the world. The junta spends just 1.4 percent of GDP on education and health, half that of neighboring countries. The impact for residents of the country is substantial; only a quarter of children complete primary school and UNICEF rates Burma’s health system as “the second-worst in the world,” ahead only of Sierra Leone. Burma is the only country in the region, meanwhile, to spend more on the military than education and health combined.
Burma's generally poor economic environment and paucity of social services leaves many residents struggling to get by. In 2008, per-capita GDP amounted to an average of only $290 USD, with 70 percent of this income spent on food. This is the highest proportion of household income spent on food in the region, and a solid indicator of the narrow gulf separating households from times when they can feed themselves and times when they cannot. These numbers worsen markedly in rural areas; in 2006, a joint survey by the UNDP and the SPDC's Central Statistical Organization found 50 percent of the population in non-Burman regions to have incomes insufficient to pay for food and other basic needs.

Compared to other parts of Burma, however, M on State is relatively well off. Primarily an agricultural area, it is home to thousands of acres of fertile rubber plantations and paddy fields, with lesser acreage devoted to lucrative crops like betel nut, durian, and other orchard products. Perhaps the best indicator of M on State's economic position in relation to other parts of Burma is the fact that large numbers of ethnic Burman workers have moved to the area in search of work. M on State is by no means a wealthy or affluent area, however, and many young people from M on State leave to seek work in Thailand, Malaysia or other nearby countries.

Though extensive international sanctions limit Burma's involvement in international trade, the country is still feeling the effects of the global financial crisis. Though accurate statistics on Burma's economy are scarce, discussions amongst the country's wealthiest businessmen offer a respectable barometer of the country's future. In December, for instance, tycoon and junta ally H tay Za told senior executives from his H too Trading Co. Ltd and affiliates that the global recession would severely impact business in Burma. According to media reports, he told the meeting that Burma's GDP would fall by almost a third. Ironically, just a day earlier, state-run newspaper Myanma A lin quoted Prime Minister Thein Sein saying that global economic problems were "irrelevant" to Burma's economy.

In the case of M on State, the crucial paddy and rubber markets have been hit particularly hard. Rubber, subject to declining manufacturing demand, is worth just 25% of its 2008 value. Paddy, which saw a bumper crop in Southeast Asia after the 2008 rainy season, is selling for 100,000 kyat less per 100 baskets. Remittances sent home to relatives from migrant workers employed abroad, meanwhile, have slowed to a trickle; according to the Independent M on News Agency (IMNA) earlier this month, money transfer agents are receiving transfers at half of their normal rate. "I lost half of my business," IMNA quoted an agent in Three Pagodas Pass, on the Thai-Burma border. "Although some migrant workers still send money, they now send less – just enough for their families' basic needs." In February, the agent said he transferred 200 million kyat; the number was close to 500 million during the same period in 2008. As might be expected, the decline in these major sectors of M on State's economy is having knock-on effects; shop owners report that they are selling fewer products and even betel nut farmers have seen their normally lucrative products drop in value from 2800 kyat per viss to just 1150. A viss is a unit of measure used in Burma, equivalent to 1.633 kilograms.

B. Taxation

Though Burma's military government continues to skimp on social services and maintain high rates of defense spending, the SPDC struggles to fully support its over 400 thousand troops. Front-line battalions are subsequently encouraged to be "self reliant," and instructed to raise funds and rations on their own. Such a directive, when given in a context in which the army conducts itself with virtually no oversight or culpability, is tantamount to giving the Tatmadaw carte blanche to extract resources from rural villagers however it sees fit.

Many civilian authorities appear no less hesitant to extract funds from local residents. This is perhaps why international corruption watchdog group Transparency International Village meeting organized by local authorities to issue orders for taxation in southern Ye Township, Mon State rates Burma the second most corrupt country in the world, trailed only by Somalia. The taxes and fees are rarely codified in any law, let alone crafted with the input of local residents. Nor are they necessarily predictable or consistent, compounding their toll on local residents. For these reasons, the taxation is often referred to as “akok” in Mon, which loosely translates as “illegal tax.”

The combination of rapacious corruption, lack of oversight and a demanding army mean that villagers continue to be forced to make a variety of payments, payments that are taking an increasing toll as Mon State’s economic situation worsens. The following sections of this report document examples of these payments, organized into 4 broad categories:

1. Payments in lieu of forced labor
2. Payments for development projects, special events and visits by VIP government officers
3. Payments for basic government services and general exploitative opportunism
4. Payments for support of the army

Following these sections, the report concludes with testimony by local villagers, who explain how taxation impacts their livelihoods.

III. Taxation, extortion and commandeering

A. Forced labor fees

In spite of condemnations by the International Labor Organization, villagers continue to report being conscripted as forced laborers by the army and township and village Peace and Development Council (TPDC or VPDCC) officials. Demands for forced labor are particularly common in southern Ye Township and northern Tenasserim, but they persist even in townships to the north like Thanbyuzayat and M undon. Though forced labor demands are less common in these northern townships, local residents of these areas – as well as areas like Ye – are frequently required to pay for the right not to work as unpaid laborers. “I used to have to go work [as an unpaid laborer] on the motorway repairs in 1999 and 2000. At that time, organizations like the International Labor Organization – ILO] they cared about forced labor in Myanmar. Suddenly, the government stopped forcing us in 2001 after the ILO visited,” said a woman from Ye Township. “But they changed to another way of forcing the people – they make us pay money.”

Forced labor fees are often required when PDC officials are undertaking “development” projects, on which they demand area residents work as unpaid laborers.

During February, villagers were forced to repair a 17-mile section of the Moulmein to Ye railway line in Thanbyuzayat Township. Based on orders from Infantry Battalion (IB) No. 62, every household in confirmed villages including Anin, Ankay, Kyaun Ywa, Tin Yu, Karot Pi and Kaw Htaa was required to either provide a laborer or pay 5000 kyat. Most residents are opting to pay the fee rather than work. “This is not self-help,” a resident told HURFOM. “It should be part of the government infrastructure projects. The whole January to February, my parents had to give a total of 8000 kyat. This is too much to pay. The normal tax we pay is around 4000 to 5000. But because of this road repair, my parents have to give extra. It’s too much for self help, it should be the government.”

Forced labor and fees for annual repairs to dirt roads are also common in Mon State following the end of each rainy season. In 2008, HURFOM documented such forced labor or fees in every township in Mon State. In the area around Toe-Tat-Ywa-Thit and Yin Yev villages, Ye Township, villagers began being forced to repair sections of road in September. According to local sources, the early onset of the project was triggered by a visit by an important official from Moulmein. Each household was consequently responsible for providing materials and labor to fix six square meters of road. Households failing to work had to pay 10,000 kyat. “We have had to dig soil, carry it in baskets to the road where it is used to build the road,” a resident explained to the end of September. “People must go to work. If not we have to hire someone to go on behalf of us. We are not paid.”

Residents are also often required to make payments in substitution for minor projects like brush clearing or repairs to schools or government buildings.

In Thanbyuzayat, resident of the Waekami villages are being required to clear brush along the Moulmein to Ye road or pay 2000 kyat per day to avoid the labor. The fees are based upon orders by IB No. 62, which reportedly worries that the primarily ethnic Karen villagers are connected to an armed Karen rebel group. According to local sources, 10 feet to each side of the road must be kept clear of brush.

Similar orders are reported by villagers in other areas where SPDC battalions worry about encountering armed insurgents. In October, Light Infantry Battalion (LIB) No. 299 ordered residents in southern Ye Township to clear brush on roads, rubber plantations and the army barracks. Households possessing gas-powered grass trimmers were required to participate. 4 days per month. Residents who could not or would not work were required to pay 12,000 kyat per day.

In Kaloh Tort village, Mudon Township, VPDC head U Aung Zaw Moe began collecting funds for school repairs in January. Every student household was required to pay between 5,000 and 6,000 kyat, depending on income. The collection came in spite of the donation of 200 bags of cement by SPDC Major General Thet Naing Win. According to a teacher quoted by another villager, U Aung Zaw Moe sold the cement: “I don't want to collect money from the students but I have no choice as the order came from the head man. I have to do this to improve the school. He sold all the cement we got from Major General Thet Naing Win.”

Residents in areas with stationed or patrolling Burmese army battalions also report being forced to make payments to avoid work as unpaid porters carrying military equipment.

Beginning in January 2008, residents of at least 9 villages in Ye Town have been required to make monthly “village security and offensive porter” fees. According to local residents, in 2009 the monthly fee was raised from 800 or 1000 to 1500 or 2000 kyat. “Since January 2008, when armed clashes happened between some M on guerrilla soldiers and the Burma Army battalions, [the Burmese Army] have started forcing all of us to pay them this kind of monthly fee,” explained a man from Asin village. “But I don't understand why they increased the amount of payment even though there are no more clashes between those groups in this area.” Confirmed payments are being made in Duya, Abaw, Asin, Demin Seik and Zebyutaung villages on the order of Major General Thet Naing Win. According to a teacher quoted by another villager, U Aung Zaw Moe sold the cement: “I don't want to collect money from the students but I have no choice as the order came from the head man. I have to do this to improve the school. He sold all the cement we got from Major General Thet Naing Win.”

Residents in areas with active insurgent groups are also required to stand sentry and walk patrols around their villages. Like the pipeline security duty, each household must supply a person to take their place among rotating guard duties. Villagers wishing to avoid the duty must pay 3000 to 4000 kyat.
"If someone could not go and do sentry duty, they had to replace with someone else," explained a villager from Puck Pin Kwin. "Sometimes they had to send their child for sentry duty. Sometimes children only twelve years old had to take sentry duty." Recently confirmed affected villages include Puck Pin Kwin, Lae Kyi, Nat Kyi Zin, Min Tha and Sein Bone in southern Ye and northern Yebyu, Tenasserim Division.

B. Projects and events

Separate from situations in which villagers must pay for the right not to work as unpaid laborers, local sources also report being required to pay for government projects and special events. Though sometimes for needed and appreciated endeavors like road construction or school repairs, villagers consistently described paying for projects that never fully materialized or only partially came to fruition.

Starting in January, residents along the 10-mile Kyaikmayaw to Kyun Ywa road in Kyaikmayaw Township have been required to make payments for tarmac repairs. According to a source close to the TPDC, however, funding from the "Na Ta La" Border Area Development Program was already allocated to pay for the repairs. Nonetheless, households in each of the 14 villages along the road must pay the TPDC 2000 kyat. According to the same source, money has been collected for repairs to this stretch of road several times over the last 6 or 7 years. The funds have never visibly been used for anything beyond the cursory filling of potholes. According to another source, the majority of area's at least 4000 households have already made their payment.

Starting in January, residents of 16 villages along the 10-mile road connecting Baw Htaw and Kyun Taw villages in Ye Township have been required to pay for repairs. IB No. 61 and TPDC Chairman U Thein Zaw required each village to provide a sum payment of at least 700,000 kyat, with some required to pay as much as a 1 million. This has presented serious difficulties for villages like Ku Taing, which must divide the burden of the payment among just 45 or 50 households.

Residents reported paying monthly fees into a general reserve fund ostensibly to be used for visits from VIPs from the Southeast Command in Moulmein or government departments like the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation. In Kyaikmayaw Township, residents of a confirmed 13 villages are required to make monthly payments of 1000 kyat. Affected villages include Darana, Kayen, Chan gone, Mya Gone, Nee Done, Kawduu, Kaw Panow, Kaw Kalart, Shan Gyi, Myawe House, Pan Gone, Kyun Ywa, Mat Katar. Residents of 22 villages in Ye have also been confirmed to be making similar payments of 1,500 kyat per month. Confirmed villages include all 19 villages in Khaw Zar Sub-township, made up of Ko Mile, Man Aung, Kwan Hlaing, Sin Gu, Toe Thet Ywar Thit, Theh Khon, Yin Ye, Yin Dein, Win Tamout, Ma Gyi, Than Ee Kyaw, Mi Tar Ka Gyi, Mi Tar Ka Ley, Kyone Kanya, Do Baung, Pok Htaw, Yin Dein Lamwat, Kabyar Gy and Kabyar Ley as well as Kyaun Ywar, Kyone Lown, Kyaun Dat in eastern Ye Township.
Villagers are also required to provide materials for projects spearheaded by local army battalions or PDC officials. Most often, this means stones and sand for road repairs, timber and bamboo for construction and firewood for the firing of brick kilns operated by the army.

Over the first three weeks of January, at least 6 villages in Kha Zaw Sub-Township were each required to provide three metric tons of large timber as well as other materials like nails and cement for the construction of a Dhamma Hall by IB No. 31. “Timber woods are very hard to find even in the forest. Most of the buildings in my village were built using betel nut and rubber trees. How do we get timber wood for them?” asked a young resident of Yin Dein. In Yin-Ye, residents solved the problem by purchasing timber from Kha Zaw Town at 600,000 kyat per ton. A medium sized village of 170 households, the Dhamma Hall project cost each household 11,000 kyat for timber alone. Confirmed villages include Yin-Ye, Yin-Dein, Toe-Tat-Ywa-Thit, Sin-Gu and The-Khone.

IB No. 31’s Dhamma Hall project created even more problems for owners of chain saws in Kha Zaw. In the same confirmed villages above plus Kha Waing village, each individual saw machine owner was required to provide IB No. 31 another metric ton of timber. “Some of my friends who are running the chain saw like me already finished providing their quota to Lieutenant Colonel Tun Tun Nanging,” explained a saw owner in the area. “They solved the problem by buying some wood around the village and some owners went to Kha Zaw to find cheaper wood. I have to buy like that too. It will cost about Kyat 400,000 to 550,000 per metric ton. My wife promised me to sell out her gold necklace.”

Residents are also sometimes required to pay for ceremonies, concerts and events – regardless of whether they wish to attend.

In the 2nd week of December, all 19 villages in Kha Zaw Sub-township were required to pay for a celebration commemorating the 52nd anniversary of the formation of IB No. 31. The celebration included a week of festivities and a lottery, for which each household had to pay 500 to 1000 kyat, depending on their income, plus purchase one or two lottery tickets at 1000 kyat each. “They collected at least 500 to 1000 kyat. Everything is by force. The other thing was they sold lottery tickets. But I did not hear of anyone winning a prize in the lottery. For my family, I had to buy two tickets – one is for my parents and the other for my sister’s family,” said a betel nut plantation worker from Do Baung village.

Residents in Mudon Township have also repeatedly reported being forced to buy tickets for concerts put on as fundraisers by PDC officials and police. The tickets were “sold” using a variety of strategies. In February, villages in Mudon were allotted blocks of tickets for which they had to pay between 200,000 and 300,000 kyat. In some villages, this cost was relatively equally distributed between all households, who reported paying from 300 to 1000 kyat. In other places, people guilty of illegal, but common, crimes like driving without helmets or licenses or selling 3-digit lottery tickets were also targeted, and made to purchase tickets at 5000 to 7000 kyat per person. “No one wants to buy the tickets because now we have a very difficult time finding money,” a villager told HURFOM in December. “Many of us do not want to buy it because we do not have food for a meal. Where can we get the money for a ticket?”

C. Services and general opportunism

Villagers are routinely made to pay extra for basic services. Obtaining needed and wanted things like electricity, family lists or identification papers can be difficult, expensive and sometimes impossible. In northern Mon State, relatively affluent villages in Chaung Zone and Mudon Townships report multi-million kyat multi-year odysseys in which they have attempted – and continue to fail – to connect their villages to the weak and spotty government grid. Updating family lists or obtaining a government ID – vitally important tasks if one wishes to move outside the village – can also be a lengthy process fraught with extra fees and “tea money.”

Perhaps the best examples of this opportunism are the ample road checkpoints operated by army, police, immigration, People’s Militia Force and PDC officials. Passing through these checkpoints typically costs only 100 to 200 kyat, though reports or rumors of insurgent activity or other security concerns can cause the cost and scrutiny to increase. Though ostensibly there so that the population can be “secure,” multiple checkpoints sometimes follow each other by a few hundred yards, limiting an understanding of them as anything but fundraising opportunities.

The degree to which authorities in Mon State extract resources can also be seen in the way villagers are required to pay for things regardless of whether villagers desire or feel they need them.

In October, every village in Khaw Zar was ordered to pay for and participate in a Sub-township football tournament. Each household was required to pay 3000 to 4000 kyat, depending on income. Every village was required to field a team; Kaw Line village was ultimately fined 500,000 kyat for refusing to play after disputing an umpire’s call. Similar fees were reported in September, with villagers in M udon, Thaton and Pa’an Townships in Mon and Karen States ordered to pay for the 13th Inter State and Division under-15 Football Tournament.

Residents of many villages have to make monthly “village security” payments to the VPDC administration. The tax is for the maintenance of a village People’s Militia Force (PMF) as well as food and supplies for army columns should they pass through. In every village in K haw Zar Sub-township plus Kyaun Y war, Kyone L own and Kyaun Dat villages in eastern Ye Township, this amounts to a confirmed 2000 kyat per month. Similar monthly security fees of 1000 to 1500 kyat have been confirmed in Kayikmayaw Township, including Darana, Kayen, Chan gone, M ya G one, N ee D one, K awduu, K aw Panow, K aw K alart, Shan G yi, M yawe H ouse, Pan Gone, Kyun Y wa and M at K atar and Thanbyuzayat Township including Wagaru and Taung Phalu villages.

Villagers also report having their homes, businesses and agricultural projects taxed, for reasons unknown other than perhaps the fact that they are successful.

In M udon Township, during January the Forestry Department instructed 200 kyat to be collected per 400 trees on each rubber plantation in the area. VPDC headmen, however, took the opportunity to earn extra income and increased the tax by 600 to 3600 kyat. “Some villages nearby our village have to pay one thousand kyat for four hundred trees. But in our village, the headman collected four thousands kyat,” a resident of N aining H lone village told H UR FOM in January. “[VPDC headman N ai W in Shin] takes every opportunity on collect taxes from villagers. If upper levels order him to collect one thousand, he will collect two,” said a former resident. “There are many kinds of taxes: security taxes, for the pipeline, for militia. The cost of my labor is not enough to pay. I didn’t want to live that kind of life so I moved to Three Pagodas Pass.”

In February, residents of Hangan and Kaw Lot villages were told they have to register and pay for a certificate that says they own their land. Though most households live on “free hold land” which has been in their families for generations, they are still being required to pay. Regardless, residents have to pay high fees, the minimum reported at 100,000 kyat and the maximum 600,000 kyat. According to a H UR FOM reporter in the area, people are in shock. H UR FOM has also received unconfirmed reports of a similar registration recently being completed in northern Ye, but it has not been confirmed.

D. Support for the army

At any given time, Mon State is home to at least 24 SPDC battalions. These battalions have exploitative, extractive relationships with residents throughout the state, particularly in rural areas. The SPDC’s “self reliance” funding strategies encourage battalions to look to villagers for rations and other support. Lack of oversight or culpability for soldiers who abuse civilians means “self reliance” often manifests itself as extortion and thievery, in addition to organized quotas and formal demands. Money is sometimes demanded for general funds or specific expenditures like the provision of new equipment or food. Products and possessions are often commandeered for short term or permanent army use.

The SPDC army’s practice of demanding quotas of paddy for free or at below-market government prices has been widely reported throughout Burma. Though this officially ended in 2003, villagers continue to report being required to provide agricultural products for free or at a discount.

Following the end of harvest season, villagers began reporting paddy quotas in at least 4 townships in Mon State. In Lamine Sub-township, Ye Township, farmers have been required to bring LIB No. 587 a half sack of paddy. “Every family who has a paddy field has to pay. The soldiers said if people do not want to provide paddy, they have to pay 3,000 kyat of money,” said a farmer from Taung Pyin village. In Chaung Zone, Mudon and Paung Townships to the north farmers have also been required to pay a similar tax, though farmers are simply being required to pay money in lieu of actually providing paddy. Farmers are being required to pay 1000 kyat per acre.

Livestock and other small farm animals and garden products are also frequently demanded or simply stolen by soldiers.

“Because of [LIB] 583 and 591, my ox was stolen,” said a woman in Kyaun Ywar, in southern Ye. “When I went and met with the commander, he denied and said it was not by his troops. ‘You misplaced your ox,’ he said to me.” Another man in the same village recounted a similar experience: “I know for certain that a soldier from [LIB] 583 came and stole my hens. I saw with my eyes, but they deny it. Within two weeks, all 30 hens were gone.”

In rural areas, villagers’ possessions – often vehicles like trucks, motorbikes or tractors – are also borrowed or seized for army use. Villagers are occasionally reimbursed for fuel costs or lost business; more often, they are not.

For at least the last 5 years, IB No. 31 and IB No. 61 have been commandeering vehicles to use for army transportation in Ye Township. Each village typically has a land transport association, which organizes large vehicle owners and sets up a rotation so each owner provides their truck. In larger villages with multiple trucks, this rotation means that vehicle owners do not lose business opportunities as frequently. But villages like Ko Mile, Kyaung Kayna and Dot Paung have only one truck; in these places, the truck owners lose business more frequently. Beginning in June 2008, villagers also began being required to pay 300 kyat per month to cover army fuel costs.

Soldiers in Khaw Zar also take motorcycles daily – sometimes for short errands, sometimes for weeks at a time. Like with large vehicles, motorcycle owners are organized into a rotation by the VPDC. Villagers are reluctant to loan out their bikes, however, and say that soldiers treat them carelessly and provide no compensation for damage. “I bought my bike not so long ago,” IM NA quoted a young man in Yebyu Township, Tenasserim Division, during January. “But now my bike is nearly broken, because of soldiers and the headman.” Another source quoted by IM NA described similar damage, that he was never compensated for even after lodging a complaint. “If you are going to come and ask about your motorbike again,” the source quoted the officer, “I will introduce you to my gun.” The threat is not an idle one: in October, the Kaowao Newsgroup reported a 17 year old boy was shot in southern Ye Township after objecting to a soldier’s demand for his motorcycle.

IV. Livelihood consequences

Taxation, extortion and commandeering like that described from the last few months in the above sections continues. The economic situation of villagers, meanwhile, continues to deteriorate, making it more and more difficult for residents to provide what army and government officials demand of them.

Ko San, 30, H neepadaw, M udon Township. “The taxes in my village increased... compared with the last 2 or 3 years. We have to compare the market prices and what we earn – right now the market price is increasing in every sector and we are making less. But the taxes do not decrease. So it means the value of what we give them is higher. A person who owns a very small plantation like me, it will be a more difficult situation than last year. I have a lot of loans to pay back for my plantations maintenance costs.”
Mi Sein, 59, Ko Mile, Ye Township. “I have two sons working Thailand. Last year they could send 50,000 kyat. But right now they can only send 30,000 kyat per month. That is not enough for our family. We have to pay different kinds of taxes collected by the authorities.”

Nai Kon Blai, Thanbyuzayat Township. “Now the value of many products from our farms is very low and we can earn only a low income. But the cost of the security fees is very high. Where can we get the money to pay [the army]?”

Nai Chan Blai, Thanbyuzayat Township, discussing recently raised pipeline security fees in his village. “If the costs continue like this, we will have to sell our farms and leave the village.”

U Shwe, 50, Ye Town. “This year is the worst conditions I ever faced... Last year, I could spend my income [from the betel nut harvest] over the whole year. This year, I expect the harvest money can last only 5 months. During these last months, I had to pay a special tax to battalions like IB 31 and 61 and other military columns who came and made their offensives near my plantations. I have to pay them 10,000 kyat each time for their food supplies. Over all [in past years], I got good prices [for betel nut] but this year it is bad. I cannot even support my kids’ educations.”

Mi Hla, 28, Singu, Khaw-zar Sub-township. “They named this taking of money as a ‘donation.’ It is a nice word... but no one trusts [the army] to manage this money. And people are too poor for the various types of payment asked by the Burmese troops. Compared with the past ten years, the current conditions are the worst we have ever faced. As you know, people from these areas are surviving their life as betel nut producers. This year, no one gets fair prices for their betel nut fruits... [It] is very difficult to cover our family’s expenses for the whole year with these unlawful taxes forced by the government.”

Villagers with a variety of incomes – from relatively well-off plantation owners and skilled workers to day laborers – complained of the impact on their livelihoods. “The large tiger has large footprints,” said one source using a common Burmese proverb, explaining that the more successful a household is, the more it will be made to pay. Poorer families – smaller tigers – are still made to pay, though less.

Mi Kyae, 45, day laborer, Ayu Taung village, Ye Township. “I do not have a regular job. The maximum amount I can work is about 10 days a month. Each day I work I can earn 5,000 kyat per day. Overall my income for one month is around 55,000 kyat – the maximum is 60,000 kyat. This is based on working 10 to 12 days in a month. I wish I could work every day. But most of the betel nut plantation owners do not need me for the whole month. Income is different between men and women too. I cannot work as men do. It is still difficult for me to pay for basic food costs. I have to pay about 25% of my income to the different authorities. As you have learned, in our area the cost of oil, salt, chili and rice remain the same – they have not decreased. But the betel nut owners are making less than last year. Our income depends on the owners’ income. So for me, it is very difficult to take care of my family and all 5 of my children.”

Mi Aye Ma, 45, Ye Town. “The total sum of payments for the whole month required by IB No. 61 and IB No. 31 could reach Kyat 5,000. I could only earn 25,000 per month. With the current market prices of essential things and basic foods, it is very, very difficult to manage to find enough food for my family.”

Nai Thein, 40, mechanic, Ye Township. “For the last two years we have had to pay the same amount of taxes from different authorities. Every month we have to spend 5,000 for the fire brigade and TPD C... and sometimes special donations like repairing the school. Moreover, in some months like April the government forces us to build things for special events like platforms for celebrating the water festival. In April, I will have to spend at least 10,000 kyat. I can earn 60,000 to 70,000 kyat per month. But I am still not happy to pay them like that. I think it is not fair. People who have no job also have to pay. My friend earns only 30,000 kyat – he has to pay the same as me. His condition is worse than mine. Basic food prices are higher than the last two years, but the taxes remain the same. I want to mention that the expenses and the income are not equal. The market prices are higher and people have to pay the same taxes – it is not balanced. For other people who do not have a job like me, they will face even more difficulties.”

V. Conclusion

Villagers in Mon State are required to make a variety of payments to army and PDC officials, which the preceding report organized into 4 categories:

A. Payments in lieu of forced labor
B. Payments for development projects, special events and visits by VIP government officers
C. Payments for basic government services and general exploitative opportunism
D. Payments for support of the army

Every household did not have to make every payment documented as examples of these categories, but the general trend should be clear: villagers are required to make extraordinary numbers of payments. Though villagers are struggling through economic conditions that are going from bad to worse, the army and PDC officials have shown little willingness to reduce their demands. For many, these payments represent losses of worryingly high percentages of household income – and rising.

Taxation is a normal part of the operation of any government. In Mon State, however, the taxation is levied without input from residents. Villagers consistently reported seeing the money spent on unwanted, unneeded or failed projects. In many other cases, they just never saw the money again at all. For some sources who spoke with IMNA, it is this lack of transparency and accountability that frustrates villagers. “We never receive any kind of financial report. But a lot of people in our village... we want to be clear how the government uses money,” said a HURFOM field researcher in Kyaikmayaw, recounting a teashop conversation he had with a group of older men. “We need some kind of report in detail. That way people can understand how the government manages the money the people donate. We want some kind of financial report back from the government.”

The economic predation described in this report is not the only type of abuse suffered by villagers in Mon State. Villagers are also subject to interrogation, assault and summary execution, as well as travel restrictions, forced relocation, forced labor and other coercive abuse. As a result, according to a recent report by the Thailand Burma Border Consortium, at least 70 thousand people remain internally displaced in Mon on areas, with thousands more seeking work and safety abroad. While the other abuses suffered by residents are many and serious, the sheer scope of the economic demands made on villagers in Mon on State are in many cases sufficient themselves to drive people from their homes, even in non-conflict areas like Mudon and Kyaikmayaw Townships.
