Harassment and regime-imposed obstacles frustrate the visit of UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana. At the end of his visit, Ojea Quintana says that Burma’s human rights situation still faces “critical challenges.”

Regime authorities arbitrarily arrest 20 activists for participating in peaceful protests without obtaining the authorities’ prior permission as required by the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law.

Regime authorities in Arakan State continue to commit serious abuses against Rohingya. Police shoot and kill two Rohingya IDPs in Akyab [Sittwe] Township. The regime also jails 43 Rohingya in connection with the 2012 unrest.

The regime fails to halt threats and intimidation directed at humanitarian workers in Arakan State by members of the Rakhine community.

Rakhine political party introduces legislation to amend the Political Parties Registration Law. The proposed bill, if adopted, would strip Rohingya of their political rights.

Anti-Muslim violence continues for the sixth straight month. Buddhist mobs set fire to dozens of Muslim-owned homes and shops in Kantbalu Township, Sagaing Division.

Tatmadaw aggression continues in Kachin, Karen, and Shan States. Tatmadaw troops and Tatmadaw-backed Border Guard Force personnel attack the Kachin Independence Army, the Ta’ang National Liberation Army, the Shan State Army-North, the Shan State Army-South, and the Karen National Liberation Army.

Parliament examines the draft Association Bill, which requires all NGOs to register with a ministerial committee and prescribes prison terms for representatives of organizations that fail to register.

KEY STORY

Ojea Quintana’s visit frustrated by harassment and restrictions

On 11 August, UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana arrived in Rangoon for an 11-day visit to the country.1 During his visit Ojea Quintana traveled to Buthidaung and Akyab [Sittwe], Arakan State; Myitkyina, Kachin State; Mindat and Kanpetlet, Chin State; Lashio and Namhsan, Northern Shan State; and Mandalay and Meiktila, Mandalay Division. In Naypyidaw, the Special Rapporteur met with various regime ministers and officials, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, and other MPs. In Rangoon, he met activists and civil society organizations as well as five political prisoners in Insein prison.

Despite Ojea Quintana’s “sincere appreciation” for Naypyidaw’s cooperation, harassment and regime-imposed obstacles frustrated his visit.

- 11 August: Regime authorities in Buthidaung jail, Arakan State, transferred dozens of Rohingya detainees to other places of detention in Buthidaung and Maungdaw Townships to prevent them from telling Ojea Quintana about human rights abuses suffered by Rohingya.

- 12 August: Rakhine residents in Akyab and Buthidaung Townships, Arakan State, demonstrated against Ojea Quintana’s visit. In Akyab Township, protestors confronted the Special Rapporteur and accused him of bias in favor of Rohingya.

- 14 August: Regime authorities denied Ojea Quintana permission to visit the Kachin Independence Organization (KIO) headquarters in Laiza, Momauk Township, Kachin State.

- 19 August: A mob of about 200 residents attacked Ojea Quintana’s motorcade in Meikhtila, Mandalay Division. Protestors punched and kicked his car while shouting abuse at him. The incident forced the Special Rapporteur to cancel a planned visit to an IDP camp that sheltered about 1,600 Muslims.

Burma still facing critical human rights challenges: Ojea Quintana

On 21 August, UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana issued a statement at Rangoon International Airport before departing the country at the end of his 11-day visit. The statement, which said that Burma’s human rights situation still faced “critical challenges,” highlighted the following issues of concern:

- The regime granted UN humanitarian agencies access to IDPs in Kachin-Independence Army (KIA)-controlled areas only once between July 2012 and July 2013.
- The segregation of Muslim and Buddhist communities in Arakan State was becoming “increasingly permanent.”
- Severe restrictions remained on freedom of movement in Rohingya IDP camps and villages in Arakan State.
- The regime’s security forces used excessive force in dealing with protests by Rohingya IDPs in Arakan State.
- The regime arbitrarily detained and tried in “flawed trials” many of the hundreds of Rohingya arrested in connection with the unrest in Arakan State in 2012.
- There continued to be prisoners of conscience in the country.
- The Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law was not in line with international human rights standards.

INSIDE BURMA

Extrajudicial killings, arbitrary detention, and imprisonment of Rohingya continue

Regime authorities in Arakan State continued to kill, arbitrarily detain, and imprison Rohingya with impunity.

• 9 August: Police shot and killed two Rohingya and injured more than a dozen others during clashes with IDPs at two camps in Ohntawgyi Village in Akyab Township, Arakan State.\(^{14}\) The clashes occurred after a crowd of IDPs gathered outside the local police station and demanded custody over the body of a Rohingya fisherman.\(^ {15}\)

• 13 August: Police in Akyab, Arakan State, arrested Than Shwe, a 29-year-old Rohingya man, for posting online photos of the dead and injured from the 9 August police crackdown on IDPs.\(^ {16}\)

• 20-21 August: A court in Buthidaung, Arakan State, sentenced 43 Rohingya to prison terms ranging from six years to life in connection with the July 2012 sectarian violence.\(^ {17}\)

Aid workers in Arakan State face ongoing threats

In August, aid workers in Arakan State continued to face threats and intimidation from some members of the Rakhine community. On 18 August, it was reported that a significant number of local aid workers in Arakan State had resigned after being subjected to threats on social media for assisting Rohingya IDPs.\(^ {18}\) In addition, the regime continued to detain four INGO staff arrested in 2012 on charges described by UN Special Rapporteur on human rights in Burma Tomás Ojea Quintana as “unfounded” [See February 2013 Burma Bulletin].\(^ {19}\) On 19 August, UN Resident and Humanitarian Coordinator in Burma Ashok Nigam called for their immediate and unconditional release.\(^ {20}\)

More anti-Muslim attacks

Anti-Muslim violence that broke out in Meikhtila, Mandalay Division, in March, continued for the sixth straight month. On 24 August, a Buddhist mob set fire to dozens of Muslim-owned homes and shops in Htan Kone Village, Kantbalu Township,Sagaing Division, following rumors that a Muslim man had sexually assaulted a local woman.\(^ {21}\) The attack left over 300 people homeless.\(^ {22}\) As in previous anti-Muslim attacks, police failed to stop the violence.\(^ {23}\) Residents and local NLD MP Myint Naing blamed the authorities for their failure to contain the violence.\(^ {24}\)

Parliamentary session highlights

On 30 August, Parliament concluded its seventh session in Naypyidaw. Important developments in the month of August included:

• 5 August: The People’s Assembly Bill Committee presented the draft Association Bill to MPs. The proposed legislation, drafted by the regime Home Affairs Ministry without broad public consultation, requires all NGOs to register with a ministerial committee that would have the sole authority to approve or reject registration. The body would also be responsible for monitoring activities of registered organizations. Representatives of organizations that fail to register with the committee would face up to three years in prison, a 500,000 kyat-fine, or both.

• 12 August: The Rule of Law and Peace and Stability Committee, chaired by Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, submitted its annual report to the People’s Assembly. The report identified the lack of an independent judiciary as the major obstacle to the rule of law in the country. Since its formation in August 2012, the committee had received 11,259 complaints about the judicial system.

• 19 August: The National Assembly’s Bill Committee suggested several amendments to the Printing and Publishing Bill approved by the People’s Assembly on 4 July. Proposed amendments included the removal of a clause that authorized the regime’s Information Ministry to issue, suspend, and revoke publishing licenses.

• 21 August: New National Democracy Party (NNDP) MP Thein Nyunt introduced a proposal in the People’s Assembly to amend the draconian Electronic Transactions Law.

• 23 August: The parliamentary constitutional review committee held its first meeting in Naypyidaw and agreed to submit a report on its findings to the National Parliament by 31 December.

• 23 August: Rakhine Nationals Progressive Party (RNPP) MP Aye Maung introduced legislation in the National Assembly to amend the Political Parties Registration Law. The proposed bill, seemingly aimed at stripping Rohingya of their political rights, would prevent non-citizens from forming political parties, running for office, and voting in elections.

• 27 August: The National Parliament approved the Telecommunications Bill.

• 28 August: The National Assembly approved the Myanmar National Human Rights Commission Bill.

In early August, activists and people from all walks of life across Burma commemorated the 25th anniversary of the 1988 uprising. From 6 to 8 August, in the country’s largest commemoration, several thousand people gathered at the Myanmar Convention Center in Rangoon to mark the anniversary. Activists, including exiled Burmese, politicians, Buddhist monks, ethnic representatives, foreign diplomats, and journalists attended the event. President’s Office Minister Aung Min and USDP Vice-Chairman Hay Oo also made brief visits. Keynote speakers, including 88 Generation Student leader Min Ko Naing and Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, paid tribute to the victims of the 1988 crackdown and to the activists who had continued to campaign for democracy ever since. The event included discussion sessions focused on peace, national reconciliation, ethnic affairs, human rights, democracy, and development. On 8 August, at the conclusion of the three-day commemoration, civil society groups issued a statement that called for constitutional amendments and the establishment of a “democratic federal state.” In addition, on 8 August, about 50 people, including activists and former political prisoners, peacefully marched through downtown Rangoon and laid wreaths near Sule Pagoda.

While many ceremonies proceeded smoothly, there were many cases where regime authorities harassed those who commemorated the anniversary:

- 5 August: Regime authorities in Mergui, Tenasserim Division, removed posters and billboards commemorating the 1988 uprising.
- 6 August: Police in Pegu, Pegu Division, ordered local residents not to lay wreaths at the ‘Memorial Pillar,’ which honors victims of the 1988 uprising, because regime authorities had not approved the venue for the ceremony.
- 15 August: A public high school in Naypyidaw’s Zabuthiri Township fired teacher and former student activist Soe Soe Khaing, 48, because she participated in an event commemorating the 1988 uprising in Mandalay a few days earlier.
- 27 August: Regime authorities in Rangoon’s Kyauktada Township charged activists Phyu Phyu Win and Win Cho under the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law in connection with the 8 August peaceful march in downtown Rangoon.

In addition, on 8 August, regime authorities in Rangoon Division warned all restaurants, hotels, guesthouses, schools, and religious centers in Rangoon’s Bahan Township that they would face legal action if they hosted any political events without seeking the authorities’ permission 20 days in advance.44

Conflict continues in Kachin, Karen, and Shan States

In August, Tatmadaw attacks and abuses in ethnic nationality areas continued. Tatmadaw troops attacked the Kachin Independence Army (KIA), the Ta’ang National Liberation Army (TNLA), the Shan State Army-North (SSA-N), and the Shan State Army-South (SSA-S) in Kachin and Northern Shan States. In addition, Tatmadaw-backed Border Guard Force (BGF) troops clashed with the Karen National Liberation Army (KNLA) and the KIA in separate attacks.

• 4 August: Tatmadaw troops attacked KIA forces in Muse Township, Northern Shan State.55
• 12 August: Tatmadaw troops clashed with TNLA forces in Konslam Village, Kyaukme Township, Northern Shan State.56
• 15 August: Tatmadaw troops from LIB 504 injured a 34-year-old woman during mortar attacks against SSA-N forces in Namtu Township, Northern Shan State.57 Tatmadaw troops also arrested her 39-year-old husband and forced him to work as a guide.58
• 16 August: BGF troops clashed with KNLA forces in the Weigyi area of Papun Township, Karen State.59
• 17 August: BGF and Tatmadaw troops attacked KIA forces in the Pangwa area of Chipwi Township, Kachin State.60

Regime and ABSDF sign agreements

After several meetings over the past two years, the regime and the armed student group All Burma Students Democratic Front (ABSDF) signed two agreements within six days.

• 5 August: A regime delegation led by President’s Office Minister Aung Min and ABSDF representatives led by Chairman Than Khe signed a four-point Karen State-level ceasefire agreement in Rangoon.64 The agreement would allow the ABSDF to open a liaison office in Myawaddy, Karen State, and enable its members to move freely within certain regime-designated areas.65

• 10 August: A regime delegation led by President’s Office Minister Aung Min and ABSDF representatives led by Chairman Than Khe reached a 12-point union-level agreement in Rangoon. The agreement included: the formation of an independent ceasefire monitoring mechanism; the release of all political prisoners; the removal of the ABSDF from the list of unlawful organizations; the opening of four more liaison offices in Burma’s border areas; the drafting of a code of conduct for the Tatmadaw and the ABSDF; and a commitment to hold a second round of union-level talks in November.

Monywa copper mine continues to face opposition

Farmers and villagers affected by the Monywa copper mine in Salingyi Township, Sagaing Division, continued to oppose the mine and demand the regime address their grievances.

• 3 August: Residents of 26 villages in Salingyi Township, Sagaing Division, issued a statement that called for the implementation of key recommendations made by the Monywa investigation commission chaired by Daw Aung San Suu Kyi. Recommendations included protection against the mine’s negative environmental impact and compensation for land confiscation at “the appropriate market price.”

• 13 August: About 50 people peacefully demonstrated in Monywa, Sagaing Division, against the Monywa copper mine. The protestors called for the suspension of the mine’s operations and demanded that authorities hold police accountable for the 29 November violent crackdown against peaceful anti-mine demonstrators.

• 29 August: About 150 people demonstrated in Monywa, Sagaing Division, to mark the nine-month anniversary of the 29 November violent crackdown against peaceful anti-mine demonstrators. Protestors demanded an end to the mine’s operations and that authorities hold police accountable for the crackdown. Demonstrators also protested attempts by the regime to force villagers to accept compensation for land confiscation by a 30 September deadline.

Floods hit Burma

In August, heavy rains caused flooding in at least eight of Burma’s 14 States and Divisions. Karen State, where flooding began in late July, was among the worst affected areas, with six townships hit by heavy rains. On 1 August, state-run media reported that flooding in Karen and Mon States had displaced 38,000 people. On 5 August, the regime said that flash flooding had killed six people and left one missing in Karen State.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Arbitrary arrests and imprisonment continue

In August, the regime continued to use Article 505(b) of the Criminal Code and the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law to arbitrarily arrest and imprison activists and human rights defenders. Regime authorities arbitrarily arrested 20 activists for participating in peaceful protests without obtaining the authorities’ prior permission as required by the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law.

- 2 August: Regime authorities detained activists Htin Kyaw, Lu Aye, Sein Htwe, and Myint Naing under the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law and Article 505(b) of the Criminal Code in connection with a peaceful demonstration against land confiscation in Rangoon’s North Okkalapa Township on 30 July.⁷⁹

- 13 August: Police in Monywa, Sagaing Division, arrested 10 women, including former political prisoner Naw Ohn Hla, for participating in a peaceful protest against the Monywa copper mine.⁸⁰ In the evening, authorities released all women except Naw Ohn Hla.⁸¹ The next day, regime authorities in Monywa, Sagaing Division, leveled charges against all 10 women under the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law.⁸² Naw Ohn Hla faced additional charges of sedition under Article 505(b) of the Criminal Code.⁸³

- 27 August: Police in Rangoon arrested activists Tin Htut Paing, Hlaing Min Oo, Sithu, Kyaw Thu, Nilar Han, and Kyaw Nay Lin.⁸⁴ The six were among a group of 20 protestors who peacefully marched through seven Rangoon townships to protest against the Peaceful Gathering and Demonstration Law.⁸⁵

- 29 August: A court in Monywa, Sagaing Division, sentenced Naw Ohn Hla to two years in prison on charges of sedition under Article 505(b) of the Criminal Code in connection with the 13 August protest.⁸⁶

In addition, on 6 August, Special Branch police arrested four local villagers during a pre-dawn raid on a Buddhist monastery near the Monywa copper mine in Salingyi Township, Sagaing Division.⁸⁷ It was believed police raided the monastery in search of activists campaigning against the Monywa copper mine.⁸⁸

DISPLACEMENT

Concerns for Rohingya detained in Thailand

In August, several incidents involving Rohingya asylum seekers detained in Thailand underscored concerns for their welfare.

- 8 August: Thai police used water cannons to prevent the escape of scores of Rohingya from a detention center in Phang Nga Province.⁸⁹

- 9 August: Thirty Rohingya asylum seekers escaped from a jail cell at Sadao District police station, Songkhla Province.⁹⁰

- 20 August: At least 86 Rohingya asylum seekers escaped from an immigration detention centre in Sadao, Songkhla Province.⁹¹

⁹¹ AP (20 Aug 13) 86 Muslim Rohingya escape immigration cell in Thailand after nearly 8 months in detention
On 9 August, it was reported that the UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) said that the attempted escape on 8 August reflected the growing frustration among Rohingya at being held in detention and that such centers were not designed to hold “so many people for so long.”

On 20 August, Human Rights Watch called on the Thai government to release the over 2,000 Rohingya asylum seekers detained under “inhumane and unsafe conditions”; allow them to live and work in Thailand under temporary protection; and ensure the UNHCR and other international organizations have full access to provide them with protection and assistance. Human Rights Watch said that eight Rohingya men had died from illness while in detention.
