And as per that saying, children who were keen to read and had the habit of reading would not be lonely throughout their lives. As long as they have a book or two at arm's length, that book will be a good friend for them. There is no such thing as being lonely with a book. By reading books that they like, they would gain knowledge and their thinking will develop. Their views would widen as they read books and know more. They would learn lessons on how to overcome difficulties faced in life. It was expected and hoped that with the practice of reading from youth, as they grow older, their reading sectors would increase and they would become more mature and would benefit the country very much.

Persons who read a lot, gave a lot of time to read, who were learned and continue learning were seen in developed countries in this world. That was why our children who would become the elders one day must have the habit and willingness to read starting since they were children. The teachings and guidance of teachers and parents play an important role in this. Especially in a time when the communication technologies were so advanced, there were challenges that could lead them down the wrong path, get wrong ideas, become corrupt and weaken their moralities and ethics. Therefore teachers (and parents) need to guide their children towards reading good literature.

Help children develop a love of reading

There would be requirements for reading rooms and libraries. The willingness to read need to be cultivated. For children to read, they must be accessible to books. Reading rooms and libraries were required. Through reading books, children will become elders. Through lifelong reading, they would learn how to overcome a difficulty in life, how to cooperate, how to explore, cherish and love the natural environment, be considerate, and have a mindset that evil minds were not beneficial for their lives. Through lifelong reading, they would become mature and very valuable youngsters.

Many writers who wrote good literature that the children read were also much required. Good poems written well would also be required. Many writers who made the youngsters love, value and preserve the natural environment; create adventurous mind, have courage and self-reliance for security in life were required. He would also urge them to write too, said the former President.

Publishers also play an important role in publishing the great writings of the above mentioned writers and authors. Writings of great writers need to be published. So make some profit but make the books reachable (affordable) for children. Many good publishers who published book that encourage education and increased reading rate for our future generation are required.

Make sure books are affordable for children

No one would be able to do things that were not beneficial for them too. All were working for a living. That was why profit must be taken. But make sure that the books were affordable for the children. Another thing seen was translating and publishing of good children literature from abroad.

The quality of the publishing sector; pictures, papers were also seen to have improved. As the way children handled books were not the same as adults, children's books need to be bounded more strongly. It should be sturdy enough to be handed over from the elder to the younger among the siblings.

Another request would be in translation. Translated materials were good enough to be read by the parents to the children or for the children to read on their own. Some well-intentioned publishers/translators even publish books in both English and Myanmar paragraph by paragraph. However, if translation was not done well or accurately, it would give the wrong meanings to the children. So when translating, care should be taken to ensure that it was closest or nearest to the original writing.

This festival in Bago was reported to include sectors that were not included in earlier festivals. Technology was used to attract children to reading. It was said to be AR (Augmented Reality) and VR (Virtual Reality). These had increased. There were also competitions. There would be recitation of poems in ethnic languages. Through this children would at least hear the languages spoken by their ethnic brothers and sisters even if they did not understand it. They would get to love the way ethnic brethren spoke. They would want to learn the culture of the ethnic nationals. While attending boarding school, we met with ethnic nationals and spoke in a way for all to understand. It was a matter of increasing friendship and was a major force for the union.

The Ministry of Information, the Ministry of Education, the Ministry of Religious Affairs and Culture etc. together with literature enthusiasts, well-wishers, donors, civil society organizations and locals jointly conducted this festival and once the festival was over, all must not be forgotten. Continue the cooperation to make the children value and cherish books that would give assurance and security for life, develop children literature, increase the numbers of libraries etc. so that children became valued and learned people. Make them knowledgeable and ethical. Make them love the country and nature. Make them intuitive. Encourage them, said the former President.

Speech of Union Minister for Information Dr. Pe Myint

In addressing the event Union Minister Dr. Pe Myint said the festival was jointly organized by Ministry of Information, Ministry of Education and Bago Region government. Union level children's literature festivals have been held for eight times and the ninth time was being held in Bago Region. It would be continued in other states and regions. It had been conducted in districts and townships.

The main aim of the festival was to make the children happy. We want the children to be happy. However, it was important for all to be happy and the festival was held to provide long term sustainable happiness rather than short term happiness.

Even though the name was Children's Literary Festival, it was not a festival for the children alone but a literary festival. Books were on display and put on sale within and outside the hall. Children would be in touch with literature and books. Gift books and books purchased from the festival would be memorable for them. Not only would the children get in touch with literature and book but they would also be able to work together with others. The theme song was sung by 38 children and they need to practice together under the coaching of the teachers. They were taught how to sing together. Through this, they would get the habit of doing things together.

Children's Literary Festivals were usually held in the convocation hall of a university in the respective state/region/district/township/town. It was because the space was wide as well as enabling primary, middle and high school students to visit a university which they would not be able to do on their own. Children from the region who came to a university during the festival would get the idea of studying in universities later in their life.

Enthusiastic parents who were former university students of Mawlamyine University were seen to have supported a festival held in Mawlamyine University by constructing concrete floor in front of the hall where the festival was held. As a first time, more than 4,280 books were displayed at the 'All who can read should read' campaign held in Nay Pyi Taw. Some say people did not read much or literature was not much developed in our country. We do have some weaknesses but it was not true that we do not read much or books were not published much. To show how many books were published for those who want to read, books published in 2018 were collected as much as possible and displayed.

At the festival held in Myitkyina University, literature enthusiasts not only held literature talks but also displayed books. They requested holding children's literature festival in other townships of Kachin State while pledging to support in any way possible and thus a children's literary festival was held in Putao. Putao was such a far off and remote place that was difficult to travel and thus hard for books to reach but more than 4,200 books were displayed. Well-wishers, donors and enthusiasts asked not to take back the displayed books and pledged to provide donation for it. As we donated some books, they only needed to buy over 6 million worth of books only. The main point was to show the existence of such enthusiastic people. Through their cooperation the children's literary festival was held grandiosely.

In short, children's literary festivals were held with an aim to develop children, make them outstanding and good to make the country's future bright. Those in attendance were requested to come together and help not only this festival but also for the development of literature, encouraging children to read and to spread knowledge.

Following the speeches students from Bago Region provided entertainment performances.

Later on behalf of the Bago Region government, Bago Region Chief Minister U Win Thein delivered a speech of appreciation and thanked the Ministry of Information; Union Ministers; departmental officials from region, district and townships; town elders; Bago University rector and faculties, students; especially officials from schools in Bago Region for their collective support and hard work towards holding the children's literature festival successfully.

Former President U Htin Kyaw and party then inspected the exhibits that were displayed in the festival. The Children's Literary Festival (Bago) will be held daily from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. from 28 to 30 March in Bago University and all those who were interested can participate, it is learnt. —MNA

Help children develop a passion for reading from a young age

STUDIES have shown that citizens in developed countries read more books. According to science, kids who start reading at an early age go on to perform better on some intelligence tests.

We already know reading is good for developing children's minds and helps develop a healthy brain.

Sadly, with the development of digital technology and social media, reading for leisure is declining across the world, including in Myanmar. With the rapid increase in mobile phone density in our country, the number of teens who read daily has dramatically dropped in recent years. This decline in reading is a cause for concern.

To restore a vibrant reading culture among our children, we must invest in literacy. Reading helps expand vocabulary and creates stronger analytical thinking and writing skills.

games and see how people love reading. A variety of books must be within the reach of children at home or in a library. We must encourage older children to read to their younger brothers and sisters, or have the whole family set aside some time to read together.

Once a child considers a book as a friend, he or she will put down the phone and crack open a book, and he or she will never feel lonely. Because books are lifelong friends.

What can parents do to make teenagers put down the phone and pick up a book?

To restore a vibrant reading culture among our children, we must invest in literacy. Reading helps expand vocabulary and creates stronger analytical thinking and writing skills.

It can also contribute to improved focus, concentration, and overall knowledge.

Dear parents and teachers, we would like to encourage you to help children develop a passion for reading from a young age that will stick with them throughout their life. They will thank you later.

Among the challenges we face today is preventing our children from taking up a morally questionable path due to wrong use of information technology.

Hence, we would like to urge teachers and parents to encourage children and teens to read for pleasure and choose books on their own.

The knowledge gained from books, and the skill set and attention required to digest concepts in books is quite different from glancing at a text message or a status update.

We can broaden children's literary experience through constant encouragement at school and home. If we encourage children, teens, and adults to discuss books, we will see them develop a love for books later.

To achieve this, we must take children to a library often, or create a library for our children with new or used books. We must take children to activities such as children's literary festivals, where they can play

WITH the mention of "State owned newspaper," I'm sure everyone conjures up the image of the fine prints of the Global New Light of Myanmar, the Myanma Alinn and the Kyemon (The Mirror). It is a media platform set up by the publicly elected government which aims to report the public on their progress. The newspapers set out to follow The Ministry of Information's objective to "inform the public about government policy plans and implementation and support improvements to knowledge and education of the public."

The administration that was chosen through strong voter support has completed its third year in office. The newspapers, during this time, have continued without fail to report to the public the laws and opinions of the government, the workings of the parliament, law updates and other general knowledge information, entertainment accurately and truthfully.

In Myanmar's transition to become a democratic federal republic, the government owned newspaper serves as an important instrument in supplementing the public's knowledge pool so they are informed of all aspect of news.

Newspapers are the eyes and ears of the public. As a government newspaper that serves the public, Myanmar's state-owned newspaper continually tries to contribute to the nation's human resource development and the country's benefit by providing the news with the public wishes to hear, the progress of the government chosen by the people and other general knowledge and entertainment.

A Bridge That Connects

All newspaper has their own house styles and identities. The state newspaper's main purpose is to be a public leaning media platform. The state-owned newspapers aim to fulfill the State and the publicly elected government's objectives. Hence, the newspaper and journal businesses by the Ministry of Information serves as a bridge between the State and its people.

Not only do the newspapers report the progress of the government, it also informs the government about the needs of the public. These public opinions and requests even have a regular separate section in the newspaper as a special. Ever since the publicly elected government, the newspapers have been changing into its new form which is more public-oriented and caters to the locals.

A Variety of Sections for Knowledge Sharing

The newspapers have a variety of sections the readers can choose from media coverages and submissions across the whole country: the Next Generation section showcasing the works for students and youth from across the country, Cartoon Section to help young kids develop their reading and vocabulary, a Public Opinion section for a platform for the public to voice their suggestions, and a Transparency Section for the public to express their needs along with politics, law, business, entertainment and sports.

Additionally, the newspapers also provide different laws, draft of the laws/notifications from the various departments of the government, job postings and everyday market prices along with weather forecasts, seasonal advice for living and things public need to know.

Local Reader's Voices

The newspapers also have special editions and sections for the readers from different areas. There is the Today Yangon section for the Yangon residents which covers the social events, things to look out for and development news for the city. There is also a weekly Golden Rakhine Land mar Digital News's has been upgrading its digital newspaper and news portal capabilities to meet the international standards and provide its readers an enhanced experience.

Income tax and other taxes

The NPE is included in the state-owned businesses and does not have profit orientation. It is currently operating as a large-scale business operation via it's Other Account (OA) to fund the salary and retirement payment of up to 900 employees, along with printing cost, operating costs and other miscellaneous expenses.

The success and failure of a newspaper is directly related to public support. Only the media that people trust and support will continue to thrive.

Page for the locals in Rakhine State. There are also newspaper in the Mon language, Sakaw Kayin Language, Po Kayin language, PaO Language to help preserve the culture and traditions of the local language. There is also the Mandalay pages to inform readers about Mandalay and the rest of Upper Myanmar, adding supplementary pages weekly.

Digital News

The News and Periodicals Enterprise (NPE) recently launched the Myanmar Digital News online newspaper starting 2018. Myanmar Digital News serves as a news portal to bring the public real-time news, the government's initiatives and other public information. This serves as a multimedia platform for political, business, social, educational and ethnic news for the public. Starting Jan 1, 2019, Myanmar

The newspaper also does not enjoy special tax discounts and exemptions when buying its raw materials to produce the newspaper. Yet the newspaper never fails to deliver and fulfill its responsibilities to the public. The business pays 25% of its profit for income tax and 20% for the national government without fail every year.

Inevitable

The state-owned newspapers have been operating on the national budget and have not once lost money and have always brought profit for the government. The ad revenue generated from the papers have brought the cost of newspapers down for the general public and hence, made it more convenient and accessible for the public to buy and read.

In addition to the ad and sales revenues from the newspaper, there is also revenue generated from selling waste and recycles from the byproducts of printing such as the paper rolls, ink cartridges and other recyclable items. Unfortunately, even with tremendous care to keep the prices low from the part of the newspaper, rising dollar prices and the cost of paper skyrocketing globally has ultimately led to the increase of production costs and consequently, a rise in price of newspaper starting 1 April, 2019.

Transparency

As the NPE is owned by the government, it is crucial that the funds be managed responsibly on the different levels of the government. There are also audits by the Ministry's audit team to monitor the balance sheets of the newspapers monthly, yearly budget reviews by the Union Auditor General's Office for the respective newspapers whom also goes under the various regional/state's audit.

The employer of national newspapers is the State, the government and public. The Myanma Alinn, the Kyemon, the Global New Light of Myanmar (Joint Venture with Global Direct Link), Myanmar Digital News all abide by the code of conduct, ethics of not only the national but also the international standards and code of ethics and rules to provide the true and correct news for the benefit of the country.

The newspapers are also approaching news in a way that is easily interpreted and understandable by the general public and is beneficial to the public as a whole with true and correct news of events.

Upgrading to Modern Technology

From the old fashioned printing machine that was bought in 2006 that can print 16 pages, the newspapers have upgraded to a Goss Community 4 Hi Tower 4 Unit Web Offset (with splicer) that can print up at 32 pages at one time on 8 May, 2018 to provide the most updated news to the community in the fastest way possible.

When buying raw materials for the printing machines or general office equipment, there is the Local and Foreign Procurement Committee formed by the Ministry to abide by President's Office Notification 1/2017 so as to free it from corruption. The meetings on material purchases are recorded on video and are on CCTV as well.

Right to Information, Free Distribution

For the newspaper to reach nationwide, there are satellite offices, distribution centers and vetted distributors who continue to work towards delivering the papers in the fastest and smoothest way possible. For instance, for news, information and general knowledge to reach Rakhine, 2000 Myanma Alinn newspapers and 250 of Global New Light of Myanmar were distributed free of charge.

Choice for the Readers

The success and failure of a newspaper is directly related to public support. Only the media that people trust and support will continue to thrive. If one compares the Myanma Alinn and the Kyemon, there is a separate fanbase for each. Hence, the two newspapers will continue to be independent of each other. If public support starts to wane and the newspapers start to show a net loss, the respective authorities will review the paper's performance and the paper will struggle to stay in operation. In such times, the national businesses will have to choose a path that is most appropriate for their survival.

Another Perspective

Even if the main objective for the national newspapers isn't profit, the newspapers continue to operate as an government owned and operated entities that help bridge the gap between the government and public. The papers avoid harmful news, fake news and other events that damage the public and maintain the ethics and standards of the journalism world as its responsibility. Lastly, the newspapers provide another perspective for the public to supplement the many news that the public consume to the best of their abilities.

World's largest drum on display at Nyaungyan style building

THE world's largest drum, which was carved in Indaw Township, was hanged in a building constructed in the style of the Nyaungyan period at the Kaunghmudaw pagoda in Sagaing on 27 March, said U Ni Tin, the Vice Chairman of the pagoda's board of trustees.

The chief minister of Sagaing Region and other ministers took part in a ceremony on 19 March to place the drum on land belonging to the pagoda. They opened the ceremony by beating the drum. The drum was later shifted to the Nyaungyan style building on 27 March, according to the pagoda's board of trustees.

"The building needs to be finished and other necessary arrangements have to be made. The drum opening ceremony will not be held as it was held on 19 March on land belonging to the Kaunghmudaw pagoda," said U Ni Tin.

The Saya Pwel Myanmar Instrument Enterprise carved the world's largest drum out of Kokko tree wood and donated it to the Kaunghmudaw pagoda.

The face of the drum is about 54 inches in diameter. The drumhead, or drum skin, has been made from two layers of buffalo hide, while the drum's ropes have been made from 18 sheets of cowhide.

Rice supply to Muse halted as stores pile up

By Nyein Nyein

ABOUT 50,000 tons of rice meant for export to China has piled up at Muse, prompting merchants to halt supply of rice to the gate, said U Min Thein, vice chair, Muse rice depot.

“About 50,000 tons of rice is lying in the Muse border area. China has suspended trade since 25 February. However, some rice trade is being strictly conducted through permits. There is no space in Muse for storing more rice. Therefore, rice supply to Muse has been halted,” said U Min Thein.

“Soon, summer rice for this year is going to enter the market. The market will have a good potential only if the rice pile-up at Muse gate is cleared,” said rice merchants.

“The rice that has piled up at Muse is monsoon rice. Sure, trade of summer rice will be forced to a halt as long as monsoon rice stocks last. Entry of summer rice into the market will lead to a drop in price. Only merchants will suffer from this,” said a rice merchant.

At the 25th regular meeting with entrepreneurs, led by Vice President U Myint Swe, held on 15 March, Myanmar Rice Federation President U Ye Min Aung and Vice President U Aung Than Oo asked the government to prioritize negotiations with the Yunnan provincial government and buyers.

“It will be better if the Ministry of Commerce can negotiate a Government-to-Government (G to G) agreement for rice trade through the Sino-Myanmar border. This charge is apparently held by the central government, not the provincial government. Therefore, the governments of the two countries need to negotiate to deal with this,” said U Min Thein, vice chair, Muse rice depot.

At the meeting with Vice President U Myint Swe, the MRF also requested that the government help farmers get a decent price during harvest, a G-to-G agreement be reached to help small and medium rice enterprises conduct trade smoothly, the quota for rice and broken rice export to China be raised, and the MoU be implemented at the soonest.

Myanmar exports rice to its trade partners through the maritime routes and border gates. China has been clamping down on illegal trade, prompting its dealers to halt trade, resulting in a drop in rice exports through the Myanmar border channels.

“The Ministry of Commerce has forwarded a request to China, seeking a legal export channel for rice through the border gates, and so, Myanmar merchants need to make the necessary preparations for meeting China’s quality standards in order to pass its food safety inspection mechanism — the General Administration of Quality Supervision, Inspection, and Quarantine (AQSIQ),” said U Aung Htoo, the Deputy Minister for Commerce.

Between 1 April, 2018 and 15 February, 2019, Myanmar exported 2.115 million tons of rice and broken rice, worth an estimated US$699.46 million.

Of the 3.6 million tons of rice shipped by Myanmar, half was sent to China through the border gates.

Fish breeders eye artemia farming; lack of technology, equipment poses obstacles

By Aye Yamone

WHILE local fish farmers have expressed an interest in breeding artemia, or brine shrimp, for aquaculture, the lack of technology and equipment is hindering breeders from taking up artemia farming on a commercial scale, said Dr. Aung Kyaw Zaw, an artemia farmer.

An artemia production facility was opened on 26 March in Kyar Lake, Ngaputaw Township, Ayeyawady Region, with assistance from the Myanmar Sustainable Aquaculture Programme.

“There are many processes involved in artemia breeding. However, there have been no successful artemia breeders yet owing to the lack of technology and financial assistance. One breeder started artemia farming, but he faced technical problems and a slew of challenges. I also experienced many difficulties and challenges when I started this business,” said Dr. Aung Kyaw Zaw.

“In addition, faculty members from related universities have been unable to provide technical assistance for artemia breeding. The universities must produce experts by adding subjects related to artemia farming in their curriculum,” he said.

“Artemia can be bred twice a year. However, due to the weather conditions, it can only produce once in summer here. There is local demand for artemia. Myanmar also has several acres of salt fields suitable for artemia farming,” he said. “I am facing some difficulties to reach the market due to lack of technology and equipment. I still have to make efforts to enter the market. Earlier, I could not produce finished artemia feedstuff. I conducted a shrimp breeding trial in the lake and the growth rate has been good. Now, I have an artemia cyst drying machine for processing the shrimp and I am planning to make further preparations,” said Dr. Aung Kyaw Zaw.

MYSAP had handed over the artemia cyst drying machine to Dr. Aung Kyaw Zaw in January. It was installed by a Vietnamese University. The recently opened artemia production facility will produce quality artemia feedstuff for aquaculture.

A lucrative artemia breeding business model for the fisheries industry was forwarded to the President and the related governments by the Ayeyawady Region Chief Minister in 2015, but they did not show any interest in the business, said Dr. Aung

Kyaw Zaw.

“This project is supported by the European Union. It poses no harm to environmental and fishery resources. The production process will go well. Artemia is used in crab larvae production. Artemia fetches a decent price, too. It will help exports by crab farming businesses and substitute imports of feedstuff. I believe more businesses will eye artemia breeding,” said Kristian Schmidt, the EU ambassador.

The MYSAP, with help from the EU, is conducting a project to support artemia farming and production and is working with local farmers to get quality feedstuff at a cheaper rate.

The MYSAP 2017-2021 is being jointly implemented by the Fisheries Department and the German International Cooperation (GIZ), with 22.25 million euros funded by the European Union and GIZ. Yangon, Mandalay, Ayeyawady, and Sagaing regions, and Shan and Rakhine states have been identified for MYSAP. The Myanmar Sustainable Aquaculture Programme supports the sustainable intensification of the aquaculture sector to help realize its potential for food security, nutrition, and livelihoods.

Goods pile up in Zokhawthar Village as dispute halts trade with Mizoram

PHOTO: IPRD

STARTING 27 March, Myanmar’s border trade with Mizoram has been forced to a halt on account of a dispute between the Zokhawthar Village transport body and the All Vehicles Association of Champhai Transport Union (CTU) in Mizoram, India.

Myanmar exports goods through the Myanmar-India border gates to Mizoram State. Freight services were reportedly halted by the All Vehicles Association of CTU in response to the Zokhawthar Village transport body’s decision to collect funds for regional development from vehicles passing through the village, without conducting negotiations with the CTU. With the Zokhawthar transport body collecting fees, vehicles were reportedly queueing up in the village.

The closure of transport services by the CTU has resulted in Myanmar goods piling up in Zokhawthar Village. However, goods are being forced to continue to towns in Mizoram State.

Myanmar goods flow out of Rikhawdar border gate to Zokhawthar Village and then, they are transported to Champhai from where, goods are delivered to Mizoram State. Merchants are facing hardships on account of the closure at Champhai.—IPRD

Tokyo hotel to serve giant $900 wagyu burgers in honor of new emperor

TOKYO — A restaurant in a high-class Tokyo hotel unveiled Thursday giant wagyu beef hamburgers with gold-dusted buns, costing 100,000 yen ($908), in honor of the upcoming ascension of the new emperor.

Available at the Oak Door steakhouse in the Grand Hyatt Tokyo, located in the capital's posh Roppongi district, the 3-kilogram burgers will celebrate the succession and new imperial era using an array of expensive ingredients, also including foiegras and shaved black truffles.

The Golden Giant Burgers, approximately 25 centimeters wide and 15 cm high, recommended for six to eight people and accompanied by a bottle of wine, will be available from 1 April through the end of June, according to the restaurant.

The government will unveil the name of Japan's new era on 1 April. The country's 248th imperial era will start on 1 May, when Crown Prince Naruhito ascends the throne following his father Emperor Akihito's abdication the previous day.

The 85-year-old emperor expressed his wish to retire in a rare video message in 2016, citing his concern that he might not be able to fulfill his official duties due to his advanced age.

Too early to say 250 MP seats won by opposition parties: Thailand's pro-Prayut party

BANGKOK— Leader of Palang Pracharath Party, which supports the Prime Minister Prayut Chan-ocha, Uttama Savanayana said on Wednesday that they would wait for the complete election results to be announced by the Election Commission first before declaring to form a new government.

Uttama said it is not the time for the opposition parties to say they have won over 255 seats in the House of Representatives.

During a press conference held to respond to the joint declaration by the six opposition parties this morning, the Palang Pracharath leader said they would wait for the official election results first.

Uttama also confirmed that they are talking with other parties to form a coalition government.

He said he is confident that they can lead a coalition government that has over 250 seats in the lower house, adding that they have won some 7.9 million votes, the most, in the March 24 general election.

Palang Pracharath Party's Secretary-General Sontirat Sontijirawong said the general election this year is different from previous elections as proportional representation is much emphasized and he criticized the opposition parties for issuing the joint declaration.

He also said the opposition parties should not define themselves as "democracy side" and use the word "democracy" to divide Thais.

Earlier on Wednesday, leaders of six opposition parties, led by Pheu Thai Party, convened at a Bangkok hotel to sign a joint declaration on the common resolution to set up a coalition government.

Signing the joint declaration were Pheu Thai,

Thai Liberal, Prachachart, Pheu Chart, Palang Puangchon Thai and Future Forward parties.

The March 24 general election is the first since 2014. So far, the Election Commission has only announced unofficial results of the 95 per cent of the votes from constituencies nationwide.

It confirmed again on Wednesday that it would release how many votes each party get to figure out exactly each party's party-list seats in the lower house, which will be followed by the formal election results to be released on 9 May.

The voting for the post-election prime minister in parliament needs a simple majority of a total 750 lawmakers, consisting of 500 MPs and 250 senators picked by the ruling National Council for Peace and Order headed by Prayut, in accordance with the 2017 constitution.—AFP ■

Pakistan says it found no links to Kashmir suicide blast

ISLAMABAD — Pakistan Thursday said it had found no links between militants swept up in a recent dragnet and a suicide attack in Indian-administered Kashmir last month that brought the nuclear-armed rivals to the brink of war.

The announcement by Pakistan's foreign office comes after India provided Pakistani officials with a list of 90 suspected miliitants and 22 locations of alleged training camps.

"While 54 detained individuals are being investigated, no details linking them to Pulwama have been found so far," the foreign office said, referring to the area where the attack occurred in Kashmir in February.

"Similarly, the 22 pin locations shared by India have been examined. No such camps exist."

The statement said Pakistan was "willing to allow visits, on request, to these locations".

Tensions between old foes India and Pakistan soared after the suicide bombing, which killed 40 Indian security personnel and was later claimed by the Pakistan-based militant group Jaish-e-Mohammad (JeM).—AFP ■

Indonesian leader taps 'hologram campaigning' ahead of polls

JAKARTA — Indonesia's president has started beaming a hologram of himself to reach voters in key battleground provinces as he shuttles around the Southeast Asian archipelago ahead of national polls.

Joko Widodo, running for re-election in the world's third-biggest democracy, has a tight schedule so he and his vice-presidential running mate are projecting three-dimensional images of themselves at some campaign rallies, his team said.

The high-tech campaign launched this week and is targeting the heavily populated provinces of West, Central and East Java — seen as key sources of support.

More than 190 million people are registered to vote on April 17, with thousands running for seats in parliament and local councils across Indonesia, the world's biggest Muslim majority nation.

Like the candidate himself, Widodo's life-sized hologram will keep moving across the Southeast Asian nation in the coming weeks. The 57-year-old leader is believed to be the first Indonesian politician to rely on a hologram, but others including Turkey's Recep Tayyip Erdogan, India's Narendra Modi and a far-left French politician have used them in recent years.

Dressed casually in a white long-sleeved shirt, jeans and sneakers, the hologram pitches Widodo's economic record.

It also hits out against false claims, including that Widodo is an ethnic Chinese communist and not a devout Muslim.

Indonesia has been battling a wave of fake news and misinformation campaigns online in the lead-up to the polls.

Last month, three Indonesian housewives were arrested over an online video that claimed Widodo would ban prayer and make gay marriage legal if re-elected — deeply unpopular moves that the politician has never publicly pushed.

"I assure you it's all slander, lies. Don't believe it," his hologram said. "We must fight against it, explain this to those who do believe it."

Widodo's Muslim credentials — warned against letting religion influence voters.

"Islam has become a political commodity," the hologram said.

"Verses from the Koran are being used for political purposes."

Recent polls show Widodo and Amin hold a wide lead over rivals Prabowo Subianto, a retired general, and business magnate Sandiaga Uno. Widodo beat Subianto in a 2014 presidential contest. — AFP ■

North Korea woos Vietnam tourists after Hanoi summit

HANOI — North Korean tourism officials on Thursday urged Vietnamese travellers to seize a "golden" opportunity to visit the country following a summit between Kim Jong Un and US President Donald Trump in Hanoi last month.

With an economy crippled by international sanctions, isolated North Korea is keen to boost its nascent tourism sector by attracting more foreign visitors, the bulk of whom currently come from China.

A North Korean tourism official said it is prime time for Vietnamese visitors to travel to the country after Hanoi hosted Trump and Kim for a second round of nuclear talks in February.

"We had a very successful summit in Hanoi... this is the right chance, the golden chance for us to generate a tourist market of Vietnam to DPRK," Ham Jin of the official Korea International Travel Company (KITC) told AFP Thursday.

His company hosted a booth at a tourism fair in Hanoi this week — with brochures advertising a dolphinarium, a science and technology complex and the Victorious Fatherland Liberation War Museum in "ever-changing" Pyongyang — while others urged skiers to pay a visit to the Masikryong mountain resort.

Kim paid an official visit to Hanoi after his meeting with Trump, piquing curiosity among some Vietnamese eager to know more about the reclusive leader and his country.

"I want to discover this mysterious country because there are many things to see," said Do Thi Phuong Thuy, who signed up for a tour after Kim's trip.

Safety concerns

North Korea receives an estimated 100,000 foreign tourists a year, according to industry insiders, though Pyongyang does not publish visitor data.

Ham put the number at double that and said visitor numbers grew by as much as 50 percent last year, though his figures could not be verified.

"We (use) tourism to contribute to economic development," he told AFP.

A Vietnamese tour operator at the fair said his client numbers have surged this year, but that some travellers remain wary.

"People are concerned North Korea isn't safe or is closed to the world... there are the difficulties for us when we promote tours to North Korea," Nguyen Cong Hoan, director of Hanoi Red Tours, told AFP.

The United States has banned Americans from travelling to North Korea after the death of student Otto Warmbier, who was jailed after allegedly stealing a poster from a hotel.

He was released in a vegetative state and later died on US soil.

Once-popular tours from South Korea to Mount Kumgang near the border came to an abrupt end in 2008 when a North Korean soldier shot dead a tourist from the South who strayed off the approved path.

Trump has heralded North Korea's economic potential, praising its "great beaches" that he said would make ideal locations for condos.

North Korea is currently building a sprawling seaside resort known as the Wonsan-Kalma Coastal Tourist Area in a zone that has previously been used for artillery drills and ballistic missile launches.

In Iraqi Kurdistan, a robe for religious coexistence

ARBIL — With her robe featuring a cross, crescent, two stars and the winged symbol of Zoroastrianism, a Kurdish artist hopes to reconcile a part of Iraq ravaged by jihadists.

Shanaz Jamal, 40, says she has already been assured by the authorities in the autonomous northern region of Kurdistan that they will send her work to the Vatican to be put on display.

A Muslim, she explains how she embroidered "3,000 beads including semi-precious stones traditionally used for Kurdish crafts" onto the white ecclesiastical cloak.

After five months of endeavour, she stitched together eight symbols representing the main communities in Kurdistan and Iraq, which are both predominantly Muslim.

But there is also the Jewish Star of David and the sun and temples of the Yazidis — the minority in northern Iraq persecuted by the Islamic State group (IS) for their faith in what the UN has described as possible genocide.

From the beginning, Jamal says, she planned to offer her artwork to Pope Francis as a "symbol of peace and harmony in the world". "I want to show that women in Kurdistan want coexistence and fraternity between all religions," she told AFP. — AFP ■

Is it a horse? Is it a car? It's a Belarus horse-mobile

MOGILEV — Since he was a child, Alexei Usikov liked to make things.

His latest invention is what he proudly calls a “horse-mobile” — a dilapidated red car pulled by a horse that he rides through the Belarusian countryside.

“It’s more reliable than a car, it won’t let you down,” the 31-year-old farmer told AFP, flashing a toothless smile.

Usikov lives in the tiny village of Knyazhitsy in Belarus’s eastern Mogilev region.

When a neighbour offered him the remains of his old Audi 80, Usikov cut up the car’s frame and removed its engine.

He made holes where the steering wheel was and slid reins through plastic tubes to attach them to his horse. “Now it’s an Audi 40, as half of it is missing,” he joked. The young farmer uses his invention to get to the collective farm where he works, looking after livestock for around 200 euros a month. He also uses it for working in the field, including for ploughing and seeding.

“My colleagues could not believe it when I first arrived at work in a horse car,” Usikov said.

“They were surprised because you can play music in the car, the horn works and everything is well equipped.”

Usikov outfitted his car with a small coal stove. It is linked to a pipe on the roof that blows out smoke and keeps him warm in winter. The “horse-mobile” has made Usikov famous among villagers. “There are not many young people today who can do that,” said a local saleswoman.

“It’s the 21st century when there are computers and phones, but he’s trying to keep up the traditions of the old days.”

At first traffic police were not sure how to respond. Once a bewildered policeman stopped the vehicle and called his boss.

His chief praised Usikov’s creative spirit. “Well done,” he said. “Wish him a safe trip.” — AFP ■

‘Ugly’ prosthetics get French design treatment

PARIS — Evelyne Briand poses with a prosthetic leg made by Algo on March 13 2019

French manufacturers of prosthetics are breaking from tradition to develop fashionable artificial limbs with patterns and colour so that wearers don’t mind showing off some leg.

Two companies, AlgoOrthopedie and U-Exist, have taken the lead in France and are trying to redefine the image of replacement limbs, which are manufactured from plastic resin and are usually skin-coloured.

“A prosthetic worn with your granny’s stocking is just ugly,” said Alain Le Guen, an orthopedic surgeon and manager of AlgoOrthopedie, which was created in 2004 in Brittany in northwestern France.

“It has to be a bit of a work of art,” he added, so that “people aren’t shy about showing their leg.”

Le Guen believes that colourful prosthetics can help users accept their disability.

His company has seen rapid growth in the past few years, with production increasing from just a dozen designer limbs in 2016 to around 50 now.

Each limb costs between 25-26,000 euros (28,000 dollars) and is normally covered by the French public health system.

Users of Algo’s prosthetic limbs seem to take pride in them.

Bruno Paul, 55, sports an artificial left leg with a yellow-and-orange diamond motif.

Former metal-worker Paul lost his leg in 2016, nearly 20 years after an accident in a foundry which led to around 20 operations to try to prevent an amputation.

“I don’t have my leg anymore, so why pretend to still have one,” Paul said. “I might as well accept my disability along with some colour.”

Evelyne Briand, a 56-year-old who had her leg amputated in 2007, chose a striped blue-and-white design.

“The way people look at you changes when you have a coloured prosthetic,” she said. “I’ve got another one in leather to go with my black dress.”

She had her leg amputated in 2007 after rupturing cruciate ligaments in her knee during a tennis match at the age of 25, which led to more than 40 failed operations.

Throwing out the rules Another company, U-Exist, joined the competition in 2014 and trains prosthetic designers—between 150 and 200 annually—as well as manufacturing its own line of stylish limbs.

“A prosthetic created to mimic the human body is frankly deceptive for the mind, not to mention that the appearance of a false limb can be troubling to other people,” said Simon Colin, founder and director of U-Exist, to AFP. Colin, whose interest in designs for prosthetics dates back to research as a student on the impact of personalised prosthetics, is a fervent believer in what he considers a form of art therapy. Around 250,000 people use a prosthetic limb in France and around 160,000 of them are built each year, according to Colin. — AFP ■

Sackler donations rebuffed amid opioid crisis

NEW YORK — Large museums are rejecting funds from the Sackler family, underscoring the growing unease with the main source of the philanthropic dynasty’s riches: the painkiller at the center of the US opioid crisis.

With net worth estimated at more than $13 billion, the Sacklers are among the world’s richest families, according to Forbes. And they have used their wealth to become significant funders of the arts and education.

Their story is the epitome of the American dream: three brothers — Arthur, Mortimer and Raymond — born in Brooklyn to Jewish immigrants who arrived in New York after World War I, become psychiatrists, and then built Purdue Pharma after buying a struggling New York drug company in 1952.

Purdue became a dominant force in the pharmaceutical industry, largely due to the blockbuster painkiller OxyContin, the highly addictive drug now subject to more than 1,000 lawsuits over its role in the opioid crisis.

The company’s success helped the brothers amass enough wealth to become major philanthropists: the Sackler name is a visible presence at Harvard, Cornell, Columbia, Yale, Tufts and Oxford universities, as well as entire wings of two of the world’s greatest museums: the Louvre in Paris and the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York.

The donations earned Arthur the moniker of a “modern Medici” by art scholar Thomas Lawton. Arthur passed away in 1987, nearly a decade before OxyContin was introduced, and his heirs sold his stake in Purdue to the other two brothers when he died.

The wealth of the remaining branches was based on what the New Yorker magazine called “an empire of pain” through “ruthless marketing.”

- Cutting ties -

That tradition of giving continued in the next generation, with two of Raymond’s children endowing a professorship at the Yale Cancer Center.

“My father raised Jon and me to believe that philanthropy is an important part of how we should fill our days,” Richard Sackler said in 2009.

Richard, who lives in Austin, Texas, also has donated to both the Democratic and Republican parties and conservative think tanks.

Mortimer Sackler had luxurious mansions in London, the south of France and Switzerland. Several of his seven children have been on the board of Purdue, while one, Mortimer D.A. gave $9 million to the Guggenheim museum between 1995 and 2015.

But the museum has cut all ties with the family. — AFP ■

Aung La N Sang ready to defend his title in Japan

AUNG La N Sang, the ONE Middleweight and Light Heavyweight World Champion, is prepared to defend his Middleweight World Champion title against Japan's Ken Hasegawa on 31 March.

The five-round contest titled ONE: A NEW ERA will take place at the Ryogoku Kokugikan in Tokyo, Japan.

Aung La N Sang has arrived in Japan, and he is readying for the fight against Ken Hasegawa. He has continued his workouts in Japan, and stated on his social media page that it feels good to be in Japan and he is feeling confident about the bout.

"I'm fired up about the match. I am so blessed to be able to do what I love. Thank you to my fans for all the prayers and support. I'm so honored to be in Japan to give the fans a show. Thank you, One Championship, for making this happen. We are going to put on a great show on Sunday," said Aung La N Sang on his page.

The bout is a rematch of Aung La N Sang and Ken Hasegawa's fight in June last year, which was declared the 'Bout of the Year'. In the earlier fight, Aung La retained his title after a fifth-round knockout, delivering a resounding uppercut in the final moments of the contest.

Because the first bout was so entertaining, there were calls for a rematch, and ONE Championship has delivered, according to the organizers of the contest.

The first clash between 'The Burmese Python' and Hasegawa is considered 'The Greatest Bout In ONE Championship History', they said.

During a training camp earlier, Aung La had said: "I am starting the camp with 10 pounds more of muscle."

"I am also pushing my cardio, so you should see a more dynamic version of myself. I am working on my striking and grappling every day as well."

Now, nine months later, the fighters are set to meet again, and for Aung La, the match presents a chance to put on an even better display than last time.—Lynn Thit (Tgi) ■

Chapecoense plane crash survivor dies playing soccer

Rafael Henzel, survivor of plane that crashed carrying the Brazilian football team Chapecoense in 2016, has died playing soccer. PHOTO: AFP

RIO DE JANEIRO — Journalist Rafael Henzel, one of just six survivors of the 77 people on board the plane that crashed carrying the Brazilian football team Chapecoense in 2016, has died of heart attack that struck while he was playing soccer with friends, his employers Radio Oeste Capital announced on Thursday.

Henze, 45, had been on the plane to Medellin in November 2016 as a radio journalist when the aircraft ran out of fuel, with 19 members of the Chapecoense team losing their lives.

"He was playing football with friends when he had a heart attack. He was rushed to hospital in Chapeco, where unfortunately he was declared dead," Radio Oeste Capital reported.

The Brazilian club said on its website: "Throughout his brilliant career, Rafael told the story of Chapecoense,"

"We wholeheartedly hope that the family will have the strength to face yet another difficult time and this irreparable loss. The feelings and prayers of all the Chapecoenses, fans and listeners, are with you," the football club said on its website.

Henze published a book in June 2017 titled "Live each day as if it were your last". "I have two dates of birth," he said in his book. "I am Brazilian and Colombian and it won't be enough merely to live, I have to justify it," he explained. Three footballers and two of the plane crew also survived the crash.—AFP ■
