Keynote speech delivered by State Counsellor Daw Aung San Suu Kyi at the Culture Innovation Summit

Busan, 25 November 2019

Distinguished Participants, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It is a pleasure to meet with so many representatives from the cultural industry working at the intersection of Arts, Cultures and Technology.

The success of the Culture Industry is making a significant contribution to the global economy. This sector created global revenues amounting to 2,250 billion US$ and 29.5 million jobs in 2014 while Korea's cultural exports reached 8.2 billion US$ in 2017.

Although the share of developing countries in the cultural trade is growing, ASEAN countries largely remain at the consumption side of the value chain and have yet to be part of the success stories in this sector.

In this context, today's Summit on "Culture Innovation" is most relevant for fostering collaboration among the experts on cultural content and technology.

There are a few thoughts I would like to share with you today.

First, talent and technology as the drivers for cultural industry growth.

The Culture Industry, unlike other industries, is unique. Creativity and innovative novelty are central, and talent is the life blood of the industry.

The people working in this industry constantly need to find innovative ways, not only in content value creation, but also in extending audience reach and managing businesses.

Thus, talents needs in the industry are not limited to creative education and cultural skills. The industry needs a talent pool of skills in information technology, networking skills and management.

As growing internet penetration and mobile access create new patterns of cultural consumption, the industry needs to invest more in nurturing digital talent and technology.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Let me turn to my second point: the role of the Culture Industry in promoting peace and addressing 21st century issues.

The Culture Industry, with its far reaching influence on diverse societies, is in a key position to ensure wider and better balanced cultural exchanges throughout the world, guiding inter-cultural respect and fostering a culture of peace.

The pervasive nature of the issues of our day make a holistic, societal approach essential for achieving sustainable solutions. Governments need greater collaboration and support from society and industry.

The growing soft power of media, artists and influencers, and the creative industries have a huge role to play in promoting peace and resolving the pressing problems of today.

Climate Change is one such issue, where the Culture Industry can make valuable contributions. As growing threats from climate change can only be effectively mitigated by behavioural changes in individuals, we need to find innovative ways of ensuring that the changes move in the right direction.

In this regard, the recent initiative of a classical orchestra in Germany in making climate change audible by reworking Antonio Vivaldi's "The Four Seasons," using algorithms based on climate data, is very innovative and impactful. More of such initiatives are needed to raise climate change awareness, based on different cultural values and themes.

The issue of extremism is another area where cultural influencers can make positive contributions. Although it is tempting to see cultural factors as the cause of conflict and extremism, they are often mere pretexts for conflict. The root causes of conflict need to be sought deeper, and we must use cultural literacy and 'inter-cultural competencies' towards the appreciation, respect and value of diverse cultures, thus bringing together hearts and minds.

The cultural industry can also make a positive impact on inequality reduction.

Studies suggest that 'cultural production is young, inclusive and entrepreneurial', as the sector employs younger people, favours women, and is driven by small businesses and individuals.

Therefore, the creative industry is a powerful development tool offering economic opportunities for youth, women, and small enterprises, with a huge potential for narrowing social inequality, as well as the development gap, between nations and regions.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

My third points relates to strengthening Culture Industry collaboration.

With the ROK, a global cultural sector leader, as ASEAN's valued partner, there are vast opportunities for strengthening cooperation for co-prosperity.

The strong and diverse cultural heritage of the region offers great opportunities for co-creation, co-production and co-distribution of cultural values.

Co-production not only allows cost sharing, but also provides opportunities for securing larger markets and more diverse contents for the film and TV industries.

I am happy to see that we are starting the co-creation of Arts between Myanmar and Korean artists.

The co-production of three films, "A Winter Once upon a Time", "A Flower above the Clouds" and "My Music Teacher Mingalabar" by JBJ Entertainment and SBS Medianet of Korea, and Big 5 Film Production and Fortune TV of Myanmar, are positive steps towards future collaboration in the film industry.

The Myanmar film industry, in its golden days was the biggest and most vibrant in South East Asia. As our film industry will be celebrating its centenary in the coming year, I hope that it will build on its past glory to create a glowing future through greater collaboration with regional players.

In this regard, the convening of the ASEAN Cinema Week 2019 earlier this month in Busan, and ongoing efforts to establish the ASEAN-ROK Film Organization, are harbingers of fruitful future cooperation in this sector.

Ladies and Gentlemen,

The prospects for music industry cooperation are also very encouraging. Music is a powerful tool for transcending barriers between different peoples and cultures.

The K Pop Girl Band, "Rose Quartz", a band comprising members from Myanmar, Thai, and Korea, is a clear symbol of friendship bonded by music.

Myanmar recently hosted an international percussion project called 'Gongs and Skins', bringing together performers and players from different ethnic groups in Myanmar as well as from Asia, Africa and Europe, promoting peaceful dialogue among different cultures in the region.

Project K, a Myanmar Boy Band, inspired by K-Pop, enjoys great popularity, and not just among our young : I count myself as one of their fans.

Recognizing the increasing cultural collaboration between ASEAN and the ROK, and the significant contribution of these cultural exchanges to the promotion of global peace and harmony, I would like to conclude by encouraging industry players to explore greater opportunities to work more closely to promote peace and prosperity not just between the peoples of our region, but throughout the whole world.

I wish you all an enjoyable and fruitful Summit.

Thank you.

Most importantly, this summit provides us with an opportunity to connect the dots between areas where progress has been made, and those where challenges remain: State Counsellor

Excellencies, Distinguished Guests, Ladies and Gentlemen,

It gives me great pleasure to be with you at today's ASEAN-Republic of Korea CEO Summit, here in the bustling port city of Busan.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank His Excellency, Moon Jae-in, President of the Republic of Korea, for inviting us to participate in this event, and also for his recent visit to Myanmar, which brought our two countries closer together than ever.

President Moon has been a tireless supporter of a stronger, more prosperous, and more holistic ASEAN-Korea relationship, a relationship bound by economic and business ties, inspired by people-to-people connections, and emboldened by our unique sense of ASEAN solidarity.

Both President Moon and I have spoken often of our wish to nurture this relationship, which will include creating new and ambitious win-win partnerships with those of us who hail from the Mekong region.

We in Myanmar place much value on such win-win partnerships and are eager to work together to further the co-prosperity of our nations and our region. This view has been most clearly articulated within our new Myanmar Sustainable Development Plan.

I believe we can find much in common between Korea's own New Southern Policy and our own Sustainable Development Plan, two plans united in shared intent, that is to unleash freedom and prosperity for our people and our region.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Today's summit takes place as we celebrate the 30th anniversary of the special bond between Korea and the countries of ASEAN. Our countries understand all too well that development results are hard won, and yet what we have achieved together in just one generation is truly remarkable. That is why Myanmar has always, and will continue to, welcome Korea's support for the achievement of our development ambitions.

Most importantly, this summit provides us with an opportunity to connect the dots between areas where progress has been made, and those where challenges remain. In today's interconnected world, we must avoid the tendency to address development issues in isolation. Solutions must be comprehensive, integrated and coordinated. From climate change to energy security, from food security to human development, addressing development challenges via partnerships offers the greatest chance of sustainable success.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Myanmar today is seeking to expand its investment and trading relationships, with a specific, but not exclusionary, focus on relationships with the rising economies of ASEAN, and Asia, more broadly.

The largest country in mainland South-East Asia, Myanmar is home to 53 million people, a majority of whom are of productive working age.

Growing between six and seven per cent annually, Myanmar is also amongst ASEAN's fastest-growing economies.

We offer a strategic land bridge that connects our region's two largest trans-national economies: the Greater Mekong Sub-region and the South Asia Sub-region.

With some 17 trillion cubic meters of natural gas, 3.2 billion barrels of crude oil, rare elements, metallic minerals and gemstones, and a vast range of agriculture and aquaculture products we are also resource rich.

We bring a range of complementary strengths vis-à-vis the Republic of Korea. However, to fully realize the peaceful, prosperous future to which we all aspire, we seek new business partnerships through which co-prosperity may spread.

Enhancing bilateral economic cooperation in this way requires not only the strengthening of business-to-business and people-to-people relationships, but also much greater attention to the institutional infrastructure and legal frameworks that underpin these relationships and allow them to flourish.

This is why we in Myanmar are fully committed to concluding the Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership (RCEP) negotiations as early as possible.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Trade flows between Korea and ASEAN have increased twentyfold since formal relations were established, and over time we have become Korea's second-largest trade partner. Myanmar has no doubt benefitted, with our industry sector expanding rapidly in recent years (23.9% of GDP in 2017 compared with 19.7% in 2011).

This growth has been boosted by increased manufacturing output (supported by strong growth in garment exports) and construction sector growth with the start of many new strategic infrastructure projects, including the Myanmar-Korea Friendship Bridge to Dala, and the newly opened Korea-Myanmar Industrial Complex.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Myanmar's re-integration into the global economy presents us with a unique opportunity to leverage new partnerships in ways that reduce poverty, to promote shared prosperity, and to continue our pursuit of peace.

My sincere appreciation of your commitment to supporting Myanmar's development efforts and strengthening ASEAN-Korea relations.

I wish you all good health, and peace of mind.

Real estate sector pulls in highest FDI of over $270 mln in Oct

THE real estate sector recorded the highest share of foreign fund inflows at US$274.68 million in October, the first month of the current financial year, after Hong Kong-listed Amata Company invested in the development and operation of Smart and Eco City and related businesses on 2,000 acres of land near East and South Dagon townships.

In October, six other enterprises invested over $10 million in the manufacturing sector, while two enterprises pumped in $6.47 million into the other services sector, according to statistics released by the Directorate of Investment and Company Administration (DICA).

So far, domestic investments from 87 enterprises in the real estate sector have reached K4,421 billion, according to the DICA.

More than 22 per cent of domestic investments made by Myanmar citizens have flowed into the real estate sector, while investments have also been made in manufacturing, hotels and tourism, construction, industrial estate, energy, mining, livestock and fisheries, agriculture, and other services sectors, according to the DICA.

Realtors are expecting the reduced income tax to stimulate the realty market, which has been cool for the last three years. They also anticipate the approval of a real estate service law, which would regulate informal deals and prevent buyers and sellers from being defrauded by unscrupulous realtors, according to real estate officials.

At present, buyers and sellers have been forced to avoid paying taxes, owing to high appraisal and tax rates. Most dealers are informally carrying out real estate deals using only the special and general power of attorney, said realtors.

The reduction in taxes is likely to persuade traders who evaded taxes in previous years to pay taxes and make changes in ownership, they added.

FDI crosses $500 mln in one and a half months; up $200 mln against previous fiscal

By Nyein Nyein

MYANMAR attracted over US$500 million in foreign direct investments during the first one and a half months of the current fiscal, an increase of $200 million compared with the corresponding period of the previous FY, said U Thant Sin Lwin, Director-General of the DICA.

Between 1 October and 16 November, FDI of $514.882 million flowed into the country, including expansion of capital by existing enterprises. According to a press statement issued by the DICA, 35 foreign enterprises obtained permits from the Myanmar Investment Commission (MIC) and endorsements from regional and state Investment Committees in the current fiscal, bringing in a capital of $496.28 million.

"The FDI inflow is higher than last year, when investments of over $300 million were recorded," said U Thant Sin Lwin.

"As large projects were allowed in the current fiscal, investments grew," he said.

"Infrastructure projects such as industrial parks and urban development projects are bringing investments into the country," said U Thant Sin Lwin.

There is investment potential for large businesses, he added.

Moreover, once offshore oil and gas and mining projects are approved in the current FY, heavy enterprises will enter the country, said U Thaung Tun, Union Minister for Investment and Foreign Economic Relations at the 30th regular meeting of the Vice President U Myint Swe with private entrepreneurs, held on 19 October at the Union of Myanmar Federation of Chambers of Commerce and Industry office.

The ministry is inviting responsible businesses to the country. The Myanmar Investment Promotion Plan (MIPP) was drawn up with the assistance of the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) and it is being implemented. As per the MIPP, Myanmar aims to reach its FDI target of $200 billion in 20 years, said U Thaung Tun.

In the 2018-2019FY, investments in Myanmar totaled $4.5 billion, and FDI fell short of the $5.8-billion target by around $1.3 billion.

China demand falls as low-quality watermelons flood Muse gate

LOW-QUALITY watermelons and muskmelons have been flooding the Muse 105th mile trading zone, driving down demand from China, which has dropped compared to the corresponding period of last year, according to traders.

"The demand dropped in early and mid-November on account of the supply glut at Muse gate. The fruits are of low quality. The demand is expected to rise in end-November," said Sai Khin Maung from the watermelon and muskmelon growers group.

Normally, watermelons and muskmelons see strong trade in December and January, ahead of the Chinese New Year Festival.

"Production of quality watermelons is required to maintain foreign market share. Trade of low-quality watermelons cannot even cover transportation costs," according to the fruit depot.

In addition, the market depends on security along the trade channel. In December, 2018, the closure of Kyin San Kyawt gate as part of security measures left hundreds of trucks stranded at the Muse trade zone, battering all stakeholders in the supply chain.

"Watermelon prices are ranging from 3,000 to 20,000 Yuan per 15 tons, depending on quality. Muskmelons are priced 2,200-3,000 Yuan per ton," according to the Khwar Nyo Trading Co. Ltd.

Watermelons and muskmelons top the list of fruits exported to China, and the export volume has been increasing significantly year over year, according to the Ministry of Commerce.

"If growers follow GAP guidelines, they can get higher prices. But, a majority of them are still using pesticides," said officials. Myanmar currently exports around 800,000 tons of watermelons per year.

The volume of watermelon exports was estimated at 500,000 tons in the 2014-2015 financial year, over 560,000 tons in the 2015-2016FY, and over 170,000 tons in the 2018 mini-budget period (from April to September).

Watermelons and muskmelons are primarily grown in Mandalay and Sagaing regions and Shan State. Myanmar's watermelons and muskmelons have grabbed a large market share in China. — GNLM

Bagan lacquerware businesses trying to penetrate international markets

Lacquerware handicrafts displayed at a shop in Bagan. HOTO: THAN HTIKE

TRADITIONAL lacquerware businesses in Bagan are currently working towards exporting to foreign countries in order to promote their products in international markets.

The art of making lacquerware — decorative articles, typically made of wood or bamboo, that have been coated with lacquer — has been preserved in the area since the 11th century, with businesses still continuing to practice it.

According to lacquerware businesses, the handicrafts are made using locally-sourced raw materials, and bamboos need to be trimmed into strips before making the designs. All kinds of lacquerware such as alm bowls, pickled tea leaves bowls, plates, mats, and baskets are being produced by hand. Nowadays, lacquerware arts are being used in consumer products and foreigners are likely to buy lacquerware as souvenirs.

“At present, most lacquerware handicrafts are being produced for local markets, and some businesses are making customized designs for foreigners. The quality and price of products depends on the use of resin paste. If the lacquerware is coated with several layers of resin paste, it can be used for many years,” said U Maung Maung, who owns a lacquerware business in Pyitainghtaung.

“A number of tangible and intangible arts from the 11th century are still being preserved. Bagan lacquerware products are not able to enter the international market due to lack of stable demand,” he added.

Bagan hosts a large number of international visitors every year and the high season is between November and April. During the high season, locals earn a good income. As tourist arrivals in Bagan remain normal, lacquerware businesses experience low demand.

It takes six to ten months to make lacquerware and businesses have to run for the whole year. In addition, most of the businesses in Bagan have to rely on the tourism sector.

The art of making lacquerware has been passed from generation to generation, and there are 10 such businesses in Bagan. Meanwhile, thousands of businesses in Myinkapar, Phwar Saw, Min Nan Thu, and Thahtaygon villages are also producing lacquerware on a manageable scale. —Than Htike

Black, white sesame markets open with high prices in Mandalay

WINTER black sesame from Bhamo, Katha, and Htigyaing townships and white sesame from Shwebo and Wetlet townships have fetched a good opening price in the Mandalay market, according to bean traders.

This winter season, good-quality white and black sesame have been harvested compared with the previous year. Although the rest of the rainy season sesame is fetching just K250,000 per basket, the price of winter black sesame is pegged at K258,000 per basket, and that of white sesame has increased to K152,000 per basket in the Mandalay market, said U Soe Win Myint from the Mandalay depot.

“Black sesame from Bhamo and Katha townships is sent to the Mandalay market each winter season. Earlier, a basket of black sesame fetched K230,000, but now, the starting price is higher at K258,000 per basket. Although the prices of other products have sloped downwards at the border gates, the market for black sesame is still stable. Meanwhile, farmers are expecting a high demand for corn and paddy in 2020,” he added.

Black sesame is mainly grown for the foreign market because of few consumers in the local market. China is the main buyer of black sesame, which is used to make medicines and cosmetics. Black sesame is also exported to Japan.

While black sesame is mainly cultivated as a monsoon crop in Mandalay, Sagaing, and Magway regions, farmers in Kachin State cultivate the crop only in the winter season. — Min Htet Aung (Mandalay Sub-printing House)

IMF urges Japan to double consumption tax to 20% by 2050

TOKYO — The International Monetary Fund on Monday urged Japan to double its consumption tax rate to 20 per cent by 2050 to cover its ballooning social security costs due to the rapidly aging population.

The Japanese government just raised the rate to 10 per cent last month, a move that has stoked fears the policy will stifle the country’s moderate growth. “From the perspective of the IMF, we believe that a gradual further increase of the consumption tax can help” Japan achieve its goal of fiscal consolidation by 2025, IMF chief Kristalina Georgieva said in Tokyo.

“Based on what other countries have done, we think there is more space, not immediately but over time, (for Japan) to rely more on consumption tax,” the new IMF managing director told a press conference following the fund’s annual consultation with the government.

In a statement released after the consultation, the Washington-based institution also called for Japan to extend a set of countermeasures to mitigate the negative impact on consumer spending from the 1 October tax hike from 8 per cent. Tokyo has already taken such measures as a reward points program for cashless payments and tax breaks on cars and houses. The IMF expects Japan’s economy to grow by a real 0.8 per cent this year while projecting the pace would slow to 0.5 percent in 2020. Looking forward, the report pointed out that the world’s third-largest economy faces a range of downside risks.—Kyodo News ■

Germany's 'treasury chamber' museum in Dresden robbed

BERLIN (Germany) — A German state museum with one of the biggest collection of baroque treasures in Europe has been robbed, police said Monday, with media estimating losses of up to a billion euros.

The Green Vault at Dresden's Royal Palace, which is home to around 4,000 precious objects made of ivory, gold, silver and jewels, was broken into early Monday morning.

"This morning there was a break-in at the Green Vault," police in Saxony state confirmed on Twitter, adding that an estimate of the damages was "not yet possible".

Bild newspaper reported meanwhile that "antique jewellery worth around a billion euros has been stolen" in what it called "probably the biggest art theft since World War Two".

One of the oldest museums in Europe, the Green Vault holds treasures including a 63.8-centimetre figure of a Moor studded with emeralds and a 547.71-carat sapphire gifted by Tsar Peter I of Russia. Bild said the criminals had broken into the well-protected palace by attacking a nearby power distributor and climbing through a window. They then proceeded to target smaller items of jewellery, leaving larger, bulkier items behind, Bild claimed, without citing sources.

Bild newspaper said the stolen items could be worth up to a billion euros.

'Hard-earned' treasures

Founded by August the Strong, Elector of Saxony in 1723, the Green Vault is one of 12 museums which make up the famous Dresden State Art Collections.

Its historic section, which contains around three quarters of the museum's treasures, was the one broken into on Monday.

With a strict limit on the amount of daily visitors, entrance to the historic vault can only be reserved in advance.

Exhibits are arranged into nine rooms, including an ivory room, a silver gilt room and the central "Hall of Treasures".

One of its most valuable pieces, the green diamond, is currently on loan to the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, where it is a headline attraction in the temporary exhibition "Making Marvels: Science and Splendor at the Courts of Europe".

After the Royal Palace suffered severe damage in World War Two, the Green Vault remained closed for decades before it was restored and reopened in 2006.

For Saxony's state premier, the heist went beyond the value of the artefacts stolen.

"The treasures that are found in the Green Vault and the Dresden Royal palace were hard-earned by the people of Saxony over many centuries," said Michael Kretschmer.

"One cannot understand the history of our country, our state without the Green Vault and Saxony's State Art Collections."

In 2010, the museum hosted a meeting between Chancellor Angela Merkel and then President of the United States Barack Obama, on the latter's first state visit to Germany.

Monday's theft is the second high-profile heist in Germany in recent years, after a 100kg, 24-carat giant gold coin was stolen from Berlin's Bode Museum in 2017. —AFP ■

Center-right victory on hold as Uruguay vote too close to call

MONTEVIDEO (Uruguay) — Uruguay's presidential election is too close to call and the result will not be known for several days pending a recount, the South American country's electoral court said late Sunday.

"The court is not going to give a winner tonight," Electoral Court president Jose Arocena told reporters after a night of drama in Montevideo.

The announcement came after unofficial results showed center-right candidate Luis Lacalle Pou only around 30,000 votes ahead of the ruling party's Daniel Martinez — turning opinion poll predictions of a comfortable victory on their head.

The court said the number of provisional or contested ballots — around 35,000 — exceeded the margin between the two candidates.

The recount of ballots, which could take two or three days, will begin Tuesday, meaning the result may not be known before Friday.

Lacalle Pou said he was confident his victory would be confirmed, however.

Opinion polls since last month's first round had indicated the 46-year-old former senator would comfortably win the run off.

But with almost all the votes counted, his lead over Martinez, a 62-year-old former Montevideo mayor, was just over 1.0 percent.

If confirmed, the result would mean defeat for the long-dominant leftist ruling Broad Front coalition after 15 years in power.

"They tried to bury us, but what they didn't know is that we are seeds," Martinez told his supporters.

Thousands of flag-waving Lacalle Pou supporters massed around the headquarters of his conservative National Party had earlier been ordered to hold back on celebrations as it became clear the result was on a knife-edge.

"Everybody knows it and they don't accept it," Lacalle Pou said when he addressed them after midnight, saying Martinez "has not called me and has not conceded a result that we believe irreversible." —AFP ■

Ship with 14,600 sheep aboard capsizes off Romania

BUCHAREST (Romania) — Rescuers were struggling Sunday to save 14,600 sheep loaded on a cargo ship that capsized in the Black Sea off the coast of Romania, they said.

The Queen Hind bound for Saudi Arabia overturned for yet unknown reasons shortly after leaving Romania's Midia port.

The crew of 20 Syrians and one Lebanese were rescued, together with 32 sheep, two of which were pulled from the water, said Ana-Maria Stoica, a spokeswoman for the rescue services.

"The rescue operation is ongoing... We hope that the sheep inside the ship's hold are still alive," she told AFP.

Rescuers supported by the military, police and divers were trying to right the Palau-flagged ship and pull it to the port, she said.

Romania's main livestock breeder and exporter association, Acebop, called for an urgent investigation.

"Our association is shocked by the disaster," Acebop president Mary Pana said in a statement. "If we cannot protect livestock during long-distance transports, we should outright ban them."

Gabriel Paun of NGO Animals International alleged that the ship had been overloaded. He added that the Queen Hind had already had engine problems last December.

"An investigation must be opened without delay," he told AFP. Romania, which joined the EU in 2007, is one of its poorest members.

It is the bloc's third-largest sheep breeder, after Britain and Spain, and a top exporter, primarily to Middle Eastern markets.

Activists have labelled the livestock transport vessels — about 100 of which leave Midia every year — "death ships", saying sheep risk being cooked alive on board during the hot summer months.

In July, Vytenis Andriukaitis, then European commissioner in charge of health and food safety, demanded that Bucharest stop the transport of 70,000 sheep to the Gulf, citing animal welfare.

He has asked the European Commission to investigate Romania's practices. —AFP ■

‘A friendly hand’: pope urges more help for Fukushima victims

TOKYO (Japan)— Pope Francis on Monday urged renewed help for victims of Japan’s 2011 earthquake, tsunami and Fukushima disaster, warning “nobody can start over alone” as he noted “concern” over nuclear power.

On the penultimate day of his Japan trip, the pontiff heard the stories of those who survived the so-called “triple disaster” — a 9.1-magnitude earthquake that triggered a devastating tsunami and sent a nuclear plant into meltdown.

In an emotional meeting, he embraced 17-year-old Matsuki Kamoshita, who spoke powerfully of his experience as an evacuee, saying he was so badly bullied he “wanted to die.”

The 82-year-old Argentine paid tribute to those who rushed to help following the disaster, but warned that more was needed.

“No one ‘rebuilds’ by himself or herself; nobody can start over alone. We have to find a friendly and fraternal hand, capable of helping to raise not just a city, but also our horizon and our hope.”

Some 18,500 were killed or are missing after the disaster. The waves swept away homes and farms, and engulfed the cooling systems at the Fukushima Daiichi power plant, triggering the worst nuclear disaster since Chernobyl. Nearly half a million people fled their homes in the first days after the quake and even today, roughly 50,000 remain in temporary housing.

Survivors shared painful memories of the disaster, with Toshiko Kato recalling finding her home had been swept away by the waves.

“I remember that when I stood in the rubble where my home had been, I was thankful for being given life, for being alive and for just being able to appreciate it,” she told the pope. —AFP ■

Bullying debate after death of K-pop star Goo Hara

SEOUL (South Korea) — Fans mourned and questions were asked Monday after K-pop star and revenge porn victim Goo Hara was found dead in a possible suicide, which would make her the second female singer in a month to take her own life in the high-pressure industry.

The body of Goo, a member of former girl group Kara, was discovered Sunday evening at her home in Cheongdam, one of Seoul’s wealthiest neighbourhoods.

Police were still investigating her cause of death and Yonhap news agency reported they were “keeping the possibility of suicide in consideration”.

In May, the 28-year-old star apologised to her fans after being hospitalised following a suspected suicide attempt, saying she had been “in agony over a number of issues”.

Goo was abused by an ex-boyfriend last year who — after they split — blackmailed her over their sex videos.

The ex, hairdresser Choi Jong-bum, threatened “to end her entertainment career” by leaking the footage, and a CCTV clip of the couple showed the singer kneeling before him apparently begging him not to.

In the conservative South, women who appear in such videos often feel shame — despite being the victims — and face ostracism and social isolation if the images become public.

The man was convicted of multiple crimes including blackmail in August and was given a suspended jail term, but the star had been targeted by abusive online comments since the incident.

Before her body was discovered on Sunday her Instagram account was flooded with hate comments about her appearance and her history with her ex.

Goo made her debut in 2008 with Kara — for several years one of the two biggest K-pop girl groups — and pursued a solo career after the group broke up, completing a tour of Japan last week.

Her death sparked an online petition on the website of the South’s presidential office calling for stronger punishments for cybercrimes and abusive online comments, which garnered more than 20,000 signatures in less than a day.—AFP ■

Hong Kong leader vows to ‘listen’ as voters send sharp rebuke to Beijing

HONG KONG (China) — Hong Kong’s deeply unpopular leader vowed Monday to “listen humbly” to voters after the pro-democracy camp scored a crushing victory in community-level elections that revealed broad public support for a protest movement that has stirred months of violence.

In a rout that stunned the semi-autonomous territory, candidates seeking to loosen control by China seized an overwhelming majority of the 452 elected seats in the city’s 18 district councils, bodies that have historically been firmly in the grip of a Beijing-aligned establishment.

The result, the first vote to be held since protests engulfed the city, was a humiliating rebuke to Beijing and Chief Executive Carrie Lam.

She has stubbornly dismissed calls for political reform and repeatedly suggested that a silent majority supported her administration and opposed the protest movement.

“The government will certainly listen humbly to citizens’ opinions and reflect on them seriously,” Lam said in a statement issued by the government.

But she gave no specifics on the likely response. China’s foreign ministry spokesman Geng Shuang said Beijing “resolutely supports” the leader and backs the police and judiciary in Hong Kong in “punishing relevant violent and illegal behaviours”.

Opponents quickly called on Lam to accede to a five-point list of demands, including direct elections for the city’s legislature and leadership and a probe into alleged police brutality against demonstrators.

“The government must squarely face public opinion,” said Wu Chi-wai, the chairman of the Democratic Party, Hong Kong’s largest anti-establishment party.

The Labour Party, another leading component of the pro-democracy bloc, attributed the election result to “the sweat, blood and tears” of protesters.

There has been no tear gas fired in Hong Kong for a week, rare respite for a city upturned by months of chaos and violence.

The lull follows some of the most intense clashes yet between police and protesters at the city centre PolyU campus.

Dozens of newly elected councillors marched on Monday evening on the campus urging police to allow the small number of hardcore protesters who remain holed-up inside to leave freely.

“The people of Hong Kong have spoken,” Paul Zimmerman, a pro-democracy councillor re-elected in Sunday’s poll, said in a speech outside PolyU.

“Now is time for the government to respond. Don’t fail Hong Kong again.”

Mourinho rules out Zlatan signing for Spurs

LONDON (United Kingdom) — Jose Mourinho says there is “no chance” of Tottenham signing Zlatan Ibrahimovic after the veteran forward was linked with a move to the club following his exit from LA Galaxy.

Mourinho worked with Ibrahimovic at Inter Milan and Manchester United but said signing the 38-year-old would not make sense with Harry Kane at his disposal.

“You are right about the connection, we have more than a connection,” Mourinho said when asked on Monday whether he would be trying to sign the Swede. “I would say also passion and understanding, an amazing player and an amazing guy, but I would say ‘no’. No chance.

“We have the best striker in England, we have one of the top two or three strikers in the world, it doesn't make any sense for a striker of Zlatan's dimension, obviously in his late 30s, but still a striker that can play in any club in the world.”

It has been a hectic first week for Mourinho at the Spurs helm following his appointment last week.

After his unveiling to the media on Thursday, he had his first game 48 hours later at West Ham, which Spurs won 3-2, and is now preparing for a Champions League clash with Olympiakos on Tuesday.

Tottenham, who reached the Champions League final last season, would qualify for the knockout stages with a win or if they drew and Red Star failed to beat Bayern. Mourinho said he had not yet contacted his friend Mauricio Pochettino, who was sacked by Spurs last week.

“I needed that little bit of space to process things when I left previous clubs,” said the former Chelsea and Manchester United boss. “It does not take just five or six days to be open again.

“You take a little bit of time to process things and understand and to think and rethink. You speak with people and in a couple of weeks he will be fine and I will call him.”
