KYAT depreciates against the hard currency US dollar at approximately K3,200 on the over-the-counter market although the Central Bank of Myanmar (CBM) set the reference exchange rate at K2,100, according to local forex traders.

To strengthen the domestic currency in the local forex market, the CBM set the CBM set the currency trading band at 0.3 per cent for the Kyat to fluctuate between these two specified upper and lower exchange rates for transactions, selling or buying, according to a directive issued by the CBM on 10 August 2022.

As Chinese potatoes cannot be used in potato chip businesses, it is relying on the consumers only in Yangon markets. Large Chinese potatoes were commonly seen in the market. Chinese potatoes which are the same size as Shan potatoes are not separately imported for now.

The wholesale price of medium and small potatoes (A1/OK/S1) from the Aungban area, Shan State stood at K1,400-1,600 per viss on 22 September. The supply of Shan potato (S2) variety to Yangon markets is pretty low so the price stayed elevated at K2,150 per viss, the GNLM quoted Ko Thein Myint, a potato seller, as saying.

Potatoes are easy to spoil. It has flaws and sprouts sometimes. So, the consumers always carefully choose potatoes in the market.

As potato rot disease can spread easily, infected potatoes are removed from the warehouses. Chinese potatoes are still flooding the market.

Bags of onions and potatoes were pictured being piled up at warehouses in the Bayintnaung Wholesale Market.

When onion prices touched a high of K3,850 per viss in the wholesale market on 2 September, Chinese onions started entering the Yangon market on 13 September at K2,750 per viss, Ko Kyaw Han, an onion buyer on Nguwah Street, told the GNLM.

After that, local onions from the Seikphyu area declined to K3,000 per viss. However, the price slightly increased again on low stocks.

Peanut prices slump again due to supply of newly harvested peanut

THE supply of newly harvested peanuts to Mandalay markets caused prices to dip again to around K6,000 per viss (a viss equals 1.6 kilogrammes), according to the Mandalay commodity wholesale centre.

On 1 September, the peanut prices moved in the range between K6,800 and K7,200 per viss depending on varieties, whereas the prices declined to K5,600-6,000 per viss on 22 September. The figures reflected a sharp decrease of K1,000-1,200 per viss within three weeks.

From the third week of August, a new supply of peanuts from Kyaukpadaung, Tatkon, Yamethin, Magway and Aunglan areas has been entering the markets in Mandalay city.

The peanut among edible oil crops has both domestic and foreign demands. Domestic oil millers are increasingly purchasing them in the competitive market at present.

Meanwhile, peanut oil is priced at K12,000 per viss in the Mandalay market.

In April, the world's top palm oil exporter Indonesia, which is one of the main oil suppliers to Myanmar, declared an export ban on cooking oil export to reduce the domestic shortage. Consequently, Myanmar's Trade Department under the Ministry of Commerce temporarily suspended exports of oil crops (peanut and sesame) from 9 May to have oil self-sufficiency.

Exports of Myanmar's edible oil crops resumed as the world's top palm oil exporters returned to normalcy, according to a notification dated 5 July 2022 released by the Trade Department. – NN/GNLM

Collectively participate in combatting fake news and false information

MEDIA is of great importance in Myanmar's endeavours of building a democratic nation in a discipline-flourishing multiparty democratic system. The role of the media is the fourth estate to ensure executive, judicial and legislative powers are straightening and righteous through a check and balance system.

Everybody and every organization need to abide by disciplines so as to strengthen the disciplined flourishing multiparty democratic nation. Only if they do, will they achieve success. First, they have to avoid the acts of derailing the activities against democracy from the democratic route. Any person or organization needs to follow the provisions stipulated in the Constitution.

As a fourth estate, the Myanmar Press Council has been constituted in order to manage the media issues in checking and balancing the national causes. All media persons need to keep the national interests fore. Although the Myanmar Press Council expresses true news of the country in a correct manner.

Everybody can see the least true information streamlining across the nation. Especially, powerful big countries abuse fake news and false information using sensitive news to be able to exploit and manipulate small countries. Media can be used easily to accredit or tarnish the image of a country. As such, not only media persons but the entire people need to combat and rebut fake news and false information, through a nationalistic spirit.

At the meetings, Myanmar delegates explained the streaming of misinformation in the international community and true news about Myanmar.

But, media encouraging terror attacks with instigation wedged by foreign countries are steadfastly mentioning the wrong information which may cause destruction to the country. It is because those who committed the destructionist acts do not wish to firmly emerge Myanmar as a disciplined flourishing multiparty democratic nation.

The Myanmar Press Council conducts training courses, holds talks with media persons in various regions and discusses the disadvantages of fake and fabricated news at universities, colleges and basic education schools across the nation to enhance the capacity of media persons and develop media measures. Moreover, the council often holds discussions and exchanges information with media countries from the ASEAN region and other global countries.

How to Solve Study Routine Abnormality

Some students would rather do their studies on their own, so they do not like to pay very long attention to their teachers' lectures quite often. IMAGE: ILLUSTRATION COURTESY OF FREEPIK

In the modern world, it can be possibly said that study and exams often go hand in hand to test whether a student has got an achievement in any subject that he studied, is studying, or will study. Some students are able to pass exams with their eyes shut, but others cannot do well in their exams even though they should not fail the exams. Most students who are like a bull in a China shop as to exams may neither be slow learners nor have short-term memories, actually. Perhaps the main reason why they tend to fail exams is that they surely have abnormal study routines such as not paying good attention to teachers' instruction, not having regular study hours, not making periodic study habits, not knowing self-learning styles, and not meeting objectives for study. Before the study, I think that every student needs to see the word 'study' in depth at first.

As far as I am aware, the term 'study' does have a more advanced meaning than just learning which is the educational process of being taught to be said better, an activity called study mainly consists of the five steps: reading or learning, memorizing, practising, revising, and repeating any subject matter. In other words, a study on anything will probably contain the six levels in order: knowing, comprehending, applying, analyzing, synthesizing, and evaluating in light of Bloom's Taxonomy Classification. The three tasks - scanning, skimming and cramming - might only be parts of a student's private study. More importantly, a usual case of forgetting should be considered in the procedure of pursuing studies even if a student has a long-term memory. In addition to these points, it usually takes time, energy, resources, and materials like money to conduct the very study.

Some students would rather do their studies on their own, so they do not like to pay very long attention to their teachers' lectures quite often. Of course, some studies do not absolutely need teaching, but others do - for example tutorials and practicals. Whatever those studies are, if a student gives great attention to teachers' tuition, maybe he will already have finished 50 per cent or even 100 per cent of a study before home-based learning, especially languages. The more attention students have in listening lessons of a language, the more acquisition they will get for that language. However, attention seems like one of the keys to studying success among students these days. After study must come attention. Young students are meant to pay 15-minute attention only during instruction time and pause for it at any time. Besides having this attention, students frequently show no interest in the subjects that they dislike studying. Any student has to catch his attention himself to all subjects, particularly for basic education, whether he likes them or not.

It is commonly found that average students do not keep regular study hours. Some study in the morning, but do not in the evening or vice versa. Moreover, most of them have not fixed an exact time for study at all. They extemporize studying only when they want to, or even when the exams are drawing near. In fact, every student must have put a regular time for study; the higher their grades or levels become, the more study time of their own they have got to set aside with regularity. Regular study hours will make students arouse their motivation for study without fail - that is, they will autonomously be keen as mustard to go and sit back at their study table or place only if they spend study time as always. Furthermore, students can not only acquire continuous learning in life but also get used to length-of-time studying via regular study. They should have set at least 30-minute time to study per subject every day. Also, they had better give more time study to the subjects in which they have a problem studying at all times. A highly motivated student, who is an outstanding one as well, finds it essential to have owned study hours of regularity to be.

How several students do studying has not yet turned into a good habit, which means that this does not happen periodically. Some students would like to study just in the early morning and this period of time, as they say, helps their heads to be clear and fresh. Thus, they do not study for the rest of a day, but nevertheless, they sometimes do nothing except for sleeping out of sheer boredom, for instance, feeling too cold and getting up so early in the morning. In reality, whatever kind of nice study duration must be quiet or in students' attention without any emotional disturbance. What is more, students ought to be ready to study during this time, anyway. Some students will not study for anything if they have no homework for a day or their teachers never check their homework, as sure as eggs are eggs. This is nothing but that students entirely rely on teachers' extrinsic motivation, not their intrinsic motivation. The study is everywhere. As soon as the known is getting larger, the unknown will lessen. On no account should each student have broken their periodic study habits of getting knowledge, skill, and attitude.

By Hu Wo (Cuckoo's Song)

It is really important that a student himself needs to know his self-learning style very well before his studies. Unless he sees his own learning style even a little bit, he will have trouble carrying out a study for certain, ineffectively and inefficiently. As regards learning styles, students should normally take notice of what kind of intelligence they possess, i.e., linguistic intelligence, mathematical intelligence, spatial intelligence, musical intelligence, kinesthetic intelligence, interpersonal intelligence, intrapersonal intelligence, or naturalistic intelligence to Howard Gardner's Theory of Multiple Intelligences, at first. Secondly, they need to be careful of which type of memory they have got, short-term memory, or long-term memory. Thirdly, they can think that they forget studies in a moment because of proactive inhibition or retroactive inhibition. Only if students perceive these three things of intelligence, memory, and forgetting will they be able to find out their private learning styles, and then grasp studies naturally and logically.

A number of students will not have set any aim and objective for studies, generally or specifically. Certainly, that should not be so. Should they continue their studies, they must have had at least one general objective for it. Otherwise, their future studies could be plunged into chaos with no directional control. With some objective, preparation, continuity, and love can be put into studies in order that students can feel happy and satisfied with the field of those studies at any time. There are an unlimited number of studies arising in the world; be that as it may, each human being's abilities and competencies are possible to be limited. We humans might, therefore, hardly bring about overall study apart from enough study. In order to attain enough study, good attention, regular study hours, periodic study habits, self-learning styles, and study objectives will have to be done by all students while they get rid of their abnormal study routines bit by bit.

Aviation chiefs warn of prolonged ticket price pain

International Air Transport Association director-general Willie Walsh said that airlines' recovery would be delayed if China maintains its coronavirus travel clampdown into 2023.

AVIATION industry leaders warned Wednesday that travellers must brace for even higher ticket prices as the sector battles fallout from the Covid pandemic, high oil prices and conflict fears.

International Air Transport Association director-general Willie Walsh also said that airlines' recovery would be delayed if China maintains its coronavirus travel clampdown into 2023.

The IATA head and Qatar Airways chief executive Akbar Al Baker said travellers around the world could expect more price pain in coming months because of higher fuel prices added to crippling losses from the past two years.

There was "little optimism" in the industry, Walsh told a news conference on the sidelines of an IATA meeting.

Walsh said that "the bottom line" is that if jet fuel prices keep going up "the only choice for companies is to have that reflected in ticket prices".

"The price is so volatile," he added. The IATA head and Qatar Airways chief said the ticket pressures would extend into 2023 and beyond.

IATA says airlines posted losses of $180 billion in 2020 and 2021 and expects another $9.7 billion in losses this year.

Baker, whose company this year recorded $1.5 billion in profit, slammed governments for "misleading" the public about the environmental damage of flying.

He said restrictions on airlines such as moves in many European countries to end flights of less than 500 kilometres (310 miles), was also adding to costs.

Baker said that if the cost of newer environmentally friendly fuels was higher then that would also be added to ticket pressures.

Both said any reopening of China's frontiers would play a key role in the aviation industry's recovery.

China had a "very important place" in international travel figures, said Walsh.

"If in 2023 China remains closed then it clearly will have an impact on the strength of the overall recovery," he said.

He said Hong Kong's aviation sector had been "devastated" by Covid restrictions, the city was no longer a global aviation hub and that Cathay Pacific was a "shadow" of its former importance.

Baker said many Chinese football fans may not be able to go this year's World Cup in Qatar because of restrictions caused by China's zero-coronavirus policy.

NASA says delayed Moon rocket passed fuelling test

NASA said Wednesday it had successfully trialled the fuelling process for its new rocket, after technical issues a few weeks ago halted two attempts to get the behemoth off the ground and headed towards the Moon.

“All of the objectives that we set out to do we were able to accomplish today,” said Charlie Blackwell-Thompson, launch director of the programme called Artemis 1.

The unmanned mission hopes to test the new 30-storey SLS rocket as well as the unmanned Orion capsule that sits atop it, in preparation for future Moon-bound journeys with humans aboard.

The last attempt in early September to launch NASA’s most powerful rocket yet had to be aborted because of a leak while its cryogenic fuels – liquid Repairs were carried out and Wednesday’s test involved filling those tanks again.

Though a small hydrogen leak was detected during the test, NASA engineers were able to get it under control.

How many ants are on Earth? 20 quadrillion, study says

THERE are at least 20 quadrillion ants on Earth, according to a new study that says even that staggering figure likely underestimates the total population of the insects, which are an essential part of ecosystems around the world.

Determining the global population of ants is important for measuring the consequences of changes to their habitat — including those caused by climate change.

Ants play a significant role, dispersing seeds, hosting organisms and serving as either predators or prey.

Some studies have already attempted to estimate the global ant population, but they resulted in a far smaller number than 20 quadrillion, which is 20 million billion.

For this new attempt — published Monday in the journal Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences (PNAS) — researchers analyzed 465 studies that measured the number of ants locally in the field.

The hundreds of studies used two standardized techniques: setting traps that captured ants passing by during a certain period of time, or analyzing the number of ants on a given patch of leaves on the ground.

While surveys have been carried out on all continents, some major regions had little or no data, including central Africa and Asia.

This is why “the true abundance of ants globally is likely to be considerably higher” than estimated, the study says. “It is of utmost importance that we fill these remaining gaps to achieve a comprehensive picture of insect diversity.” There are more than 15,700 named species and subspecies of ants that are found all over the planet, and probably an equal number that have yet to be described.—AFP

Batteries, community spirit help California fight heat wave

DIRE predictions of blackouts in California during a fearsome heat wave this month never came to pass, with technology — and a dose of community spirit — helping the creaking grid through its most testing period ever.

The mercury topped 110 Fahrenheit (43 Celsius) on consecutive days, as a thrumming heat dome parked itself over the western United States.

But the grid never failed, thanks in part to the state’s quietly acquired battery fleet.

“Batteries stepped in and... played a critical role” in rebalancing electricity demand, said Weikko Wirta, director of operations at AES Southland, a 400 megawatt installation at Long Beach near Los Angeles.

The huge electricity storage facility, which resembles an enormous server farm, is one of the largest in the state.

Pressure grows after World Bank chief dodges climate questions

CLIMATE groups called Wednesday for the World Bank’s president to be removed after he refused multiple times to say if he believed man-made emissions contributed to global warming.

Activists have previously called for David Malpass to resign or be removed for what they say is an inadequate approach to the climate crisis.

The head of the World Bank is traditionally an American while the other big international lender in Washington, the IMF, tends to be European. Malpass is a veteran of Republican administrations in the United States and was appointed in 2019 while Donald Trump, who famously and repeatedly denied the science behind climate change, was president.

The chorus against Malpass grew louder after his appearance Tuesday at a New York Times conference on climate finance.

Asked by a journalist to respond to former US vice-president Al Gore’s claim that he was a climate denier, Malpass said that some of his critics “may not know what the World Bank is doing.” He boasted that its climate funding is “by far the biggest” among international financial institutions.

After another attempt failed to get a straight answer, the journalist, David Gelles, said: “Let me just be as clear as I can: Do you accept the scientific consensus that the man made burning of fossil fuels is rapidly and dangerously warming the planet?”—AFP

Japan asks foreign guests to wear face masks at Abe's state funeral

JAPAN will ask foreign guests attending the state funeral for former Prime Minister Shinzo Abe next week to wear protective face masks to curb the spread of the novel coronavirus, the top government spokesman said Thursday.

“We will call for foreign dignitaries and other attendees to wear face masks and take infection prevention measures, such as preparing disinfectant, on the day of the state funeral,” Chief Cabinet Secretary Hirokazu Matsuno said at a press conference.

The request marks a sharp contrast with Monday’s state funeral for Queen Elizabeth II in London, at which attendees, including Japanese Emperor Naruhito and Empress Masako, took part without wearing face masks.

While the number of new COVID-19 cases has been declining in Japan, the government has still urged the public to wear face masks inside buildings and other facilities. The government, meanwhile, said Thursday around 4,300 people are expected to attend the service to be held Tuesday in a hall in Tokyo. Of them, roughly 700 people are likely to travel to Japan from 218 countries, regions and international organizations. The figure includes 49 incumbent and former leaders from overseas.

Of the 218, 117 will dispatch attendees from abroad, while the remaining 101 will be represented by individuals in Japan such as embassy officials, according to the government.

US leads new pledges to fight child malnutrition

THE United States on Wednesday led pledges for $280 million to fight childhood malnutrition through the supply of ready-to-eat packets in nations suffering from acute food shortages.

At an event on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly, the US Agency for International Development promised $200 million of the total $280 million as part of an event with UNICEF to stop childhood wasting, the low weight-for-height caused by poor nutrition.

“The truth is, wasting is treatable,” USAID chief Samantha Power said.

“Complex cases require more specialized medical attention, but for straightforward cases caught early, treatment is cost-effective and can be done at home,” she said.

“Yet only a third of children suffering from wasting today receive the treatment they need. And with more funding, better delivery systems and improved access to health care, we can empower communities to save their children’s lives.”

So-called ready-to-use therapeutic foods are pastes of high nutritional value that are given to children who suffer severe wasting.

Invented by French researcher Andre Briend, they can be consumed directly and have long shelf lives.

Power said that a full course of the therapeutic packets takes several weeks and requires monitoring by a health worker, with the treatment costing a little more than $100 per child.— AFP

Some hospitals in Yemen to shut down due to lack of funding

HOSPITALS and medical centres in parts of Yemen are on the brink of closure due to a lack of funding, a government official told Xinhua on Wednesday.

“A number of public hospitals in southern regions and the beleaguered northern province of Marib may stop offering healthcare services during the upcoming days as they are facing complicated financial problems,” the local government source said on condition of anonymity.

He indicated that other public hospitals in the country’s northern provinces controlled by the Houthi militia are facing the same obstacles.

On Tuesday, the state-run Saba news agency said that the only public hospital offering care to mothers and children in Marib has warned it may shut down at the end of September due to lack of a budget, after the withdrawal of international organizations that used to provide salaries for 65 staff including doctors, technicians and nurses.

‘Drink it anyway’: Syria water woes peak in cholera outbreak

IN a Syria hospital crowded with women and wailing children, Ahmad al-Mohammad writhed in pain beside his wife after they contracted cholera, which is resurging for the first time in years.

During his six days in treatment, Mohammad has watched patients stream into the Al-Kasrah hospital in the eastern province of Deir Ezzor, where the highly-polluted Euphrates River is a major source of contaminated water used for both drinking and irrigation.

“We have suffered from diarrhoea, vomiting and pain... because we drink directly from the Euphrates River,” the 45-year-old told AFP from the hospital, barely able to speak.

“The waters of the Euphrates are polluted but we have no other choice.”

Cholera is generally contracted from contaminated food or water and spreads in residential areas that lack proper sewerage networks or main drinking water.

The disease is making its first major comeback since 2009 in Syria, where nearly two-thirds of water treatment plants, half of pumping stations and one-third of water towers have been damaged by more than a decade of war, according to the United Nations. The Syrian government has announced 23 deaths and more than 250 cholera cases across six of the country’s 14 provinces since the start of the outbreak in September, with most cases concentrated in the northern province of Aleppo.— AFP

Asian economies rank toward bottom on digital environment for entrepreneurs, ADB’s global index shows

FOUR-FIFTHS of developing Asian economies place toward the bottom in a global ranking of digital environments and support systems for entrepreneurs, according to a new index developed by the Asian Development Bank (ADB) released on Wednesday.

According to the Global Index of Digital Entrepreneurship Systems, released as part of the Asian Development Outlook 2022 Update, Singapore has the world’s best digital environment and support system for entrepreneurs.

The index measures the quality of the environment for digital entrepreneurs by looking at the level of digitalization in eight areas: culture, institutions, market conditions, infrastructure, human capital, knowledge, finance, and networking.

The United States ranks second, while Sweden ranks third among 113 economies on the list. But 17 of the 21 developing Asian economies included are ranked toward the bottom, underscoring the need for these economies to nurture digital entrepreneurship.

“Digital entrepreneurship helped economies stay afloat during the COVID-19 pandemic, and it can become a major engine of growth and innovation in the post-pandemic world,” ADB Chief Economist Albert Park said.

“For this to happen, there needs to be a supportive environment enabled by conducive policies and incentives,” he added. —Xinhua

TANZANIAN Prime Minister Kassim Majaliwa on Tuesday launched a 15-year fisheries master plan aimed at boosting the sector’s contribution to the gross domestic product (GDP) from the current 1.8 per cent to 10 per cent by 2037.

Launching the master plan in the commercial capital of Dar es Salaam, Majaliwa said the plan scheduled to be implemented from 2021/2022 through 2036/2037 will contribute to the growth of the fisheries sector and the blue economy.

“The fisheries master plan ensures that every citizen benefits from the sector,” said the premier, stressing that the government will continue accommodating views from members of the public aimed at improving the fisheries sector.—Xinhua

Norway, Swiss central banks hike rates to tame inflation

THE Swiss and Norwegian central banks announced hefty interest rate hikes on Thursday as global monetary policymakers ramp up the battle against runaway inflation.

The moves follow big rate rises in Sweden and the United States this week and come ahead of another increase expected to be announced by the Bank of England on Thursday.

Norway’s central bank raised its rate to its highest level since 2011 while the Swiss National Bank ended its negative-rate era. The Swiss central bank raised its policy rate by 0.75 percentage points to 0.5 per cent. The SNB, which first pushed its rates down into negative territory in January 2015, said the move was needed to counter “the renewed rise in inflationary pressure and the spread of inflation to goods and services that have so far been less affected”.—AFP

UK’s new PM veers away from Biden’s economic script at UN

BRITAIN’S new Prime Minister Liz Truss was Wednesday to outline an economic rescue programme focussed on tax cuts — even as US President Joe Biden rejected that approach as the two prepared to meet at the UN.

“I am sick and tired of trickle-down economics. It has never worked,” Biden tweeted ahead of his first meeting with Boris Johnson’s successor in New York. “We’re building an economy from the bottom up and middle out,” the president said, contrasting his approach to Republican opponents whose philosophy is more akin to the UK’s new Conservative leader.—AFP

Rising obesity projected to hamper developing economies – report

RISING levels of obesity are set to cost the world economy 3.3 per cent of GDP by 2060, slowing development in lower-income countries and making it hard for people to lead healthy lives, according to a new study published Wednesday.

The peer-reviewed paper, published in BMJ Global Health, provides the first country-by-country estimate of the economic impacts of obesity, a major driver of other non-communicable diseases such as cancer, diabetes and heart conditions.

It also included projections for the numbers of people in each country who are overweight or obese — defined as a body mass index in adults greater or equal to 25 and 30, respectively.

“Globally, nearly two in three adults are now living with overweight and obesity. And we project that will be three in four adults by 2060,” lead author Rachel Nugent told reporters at a briefing on the margins of the UN General Assembly.

The conditions currently cost 2.2 per cent of global GDP, and the biggest increases are expected to be seen in lower-resourced countries.

China, the United States and India are projected to experience the highest impact in absolute terms — costing the countries $10 trillion, $2.5 trillion and $850 billion, respectively.

As a proportion of the economy, the worst impacted countries are set to include the United Arab Emirates, where obesity would account for 11 per cent of GDP, and Trinidad and Tobago at 10.2 per cent. —AFP

Cheap mealboxes a taste of Hong Kong’s economic woes

Swiss mull banning factory farms

THE Swiss will vote Sunday on whether to ban intensive livestock farming in the largely rural country, which already has some of the world’s strictest animal welfare laws.

The animal rights and welfare organizations behind the initiative want to make protecting the dignity of farm animals like cattle, chickens or pigs a constitutional requirement.

Their proposal, which received more than the 100,000 signatures needed to put any issue to a popular vote under Switzerland’s famous direct democracy system, would essentially eradicate all factory farming.

“We believe animal agriculture is one of the defining problems of our time,” animal welfare group Sentience, which presented the initiative, says on its website. It points to the “immense suffering experienced by animals on factory farms,”

US jury orders Meta to pay $174.5 mln for violating patents

A US jury on Wednesday ordered Meta to pay $174.5 million for violating live-streaming patents developed by a US Army veteran seeking to fix shortcomings in battlefield communications.

A trial in Texas federal court ended with jurors deciding that “live” features at Facebook and Instagram used technology patented by Voxer, a company co-founded by Tom Katis, legal documents showed.

“We believe the evidence at trial demonstrated that Meta did not infringe Voxer’s patents,” a company spokesperson said in response to an AFP inquiry.

“We intend to seek further relief, including filing an appeal.”

Greek tourism revenue nears pre-pandemic record

GREECE’S tourism revenue fell just short of pre-pandemic levels in the first seven months of the year, official data showed Wednesday.

Travel receipts in January-July totalled nearly 8.85 billion euros ($8.75 billion), the Greek central bank said in a statement.

This was 2.9 per cent below a record Greek year in 2019 prior to the coronavirus pandemic. Arrivals so far are 12.1 per cent lower at 13.26 million compared to 2019.

Against last year, receipts until July were up by 154.2 per cent, and arrivals increased by 191.4 per cent, the bank said.

Most of the visitors came from Germany, the UK, France and the US.

The Greek government had peeled back coronavirus restrictions early this year to boost visitor numbers. Mandatory screening tests for travellers who hold a European vaccination certificate were scrapped in February.—AFP

RUSSIA-UKRAINE CONFLICT

N Korea denies exporting weapons to Russia

Moscow-ally Pyongyang hit out at the United States in the statement, saying Washington and “other hostile forces” were “spreading a ‘rumour of arms dealings’ between the DPRK and Russia,” using the official acronym for North Korea. PHOTO: AFP/FILE

NORTH Korea on Wednesday denied it was providing arms to Russia, state media said, weeks after the United States said Moscow was turning to Pyongyang to replenish its stocks depleted by invading Ukraine.

“We have never exported weapons or ammunition to Russia before and we will not plan to export them,” an official at the defence ministry’s General Bureau of Equipment said in a statement carried by the official Korean Central News Agency (KCNA).

The statement comes after the White House said earlier in September that Russia was buying artillery shells and rockets from communist North Korea to support its war in Ukraine.

National Security Council spokesman John Kirby said the United States believed purchases “could include literally millions of rounds, rockets and artillery shells”.

However, citing declassified US intelligence, he stressed at the time that the purchases were not yet completed and that there was no indication the weapons were being used in Ukraine.

Moscow-ally Pyongyang hit out at the United States in the statement, saying Washington and “other hostile forces” were “spreading a ‘rumour of arms dealings’ between the DPRK and Russia,” using the official acronym for North Korea.

“We warn the US to stop making reckless remarks,” it said, while emphasizing North Korea maintains the right to export military equipment.

The White House indicated that the purchase of artillery ammunition from the isolated North Korean government, as well as a deal to buy military drones from Iran, showed Russia was in dire straits after months of Western economic and technological sanctions aimed at crippling its war machine.—AFP

Pressure on Putin as reservists called up for war

PRESSURE ratcheted up on President Vladimir Putin as his decision to send reservists to Ukraine triggered spreading protests and hundreds of arrests at home, and Western leaders tore into the Russian leader at the United Nations.

Training his fire on Putin as he addressed the General Assembly, US President Joe Biden accused him of “shamelessly” violating the UN Charter with a war aimed at “extinguishing Ukraine’s right to exist as a state”.

Speaking in unison with fellow NATO leaders, Biden on Wednesday denounced Putin for making “overt nuclear threats against Europe” as part of his latest escalation, and warned that “a nuclear war cannot be won and must never be fought.”

Addressing the assembly later via video — the sole leader allowed to do so — Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky urged the UN to punish Russia for the invasion, calling for a special tribunal and compensation fund and for Moscow to be stripped of its veto.—AFP

Trump, children sued for ‘incredible’ fraud in New York

DONALD Trump and family members lied to tax collectors, lenders and insurers for years in a scheme that routinely misstated the value of his properties to enrich themselves, according to a suit filed by New York’s attorney-general on Wednesday.

Top state prosecutor Letitia James said that with the help of his children and others at the Trump Organization, the former president provided fraudulent statements of his net worth and false asset valuations “to obtain and satisfy loans, get insurance benefits, and pay lower taxes”.

“In short, he lied to gain massive financial benefits for himself.” The sweeping investigation is one of many criminal,

US embassy in Cuba to resume ‘full visa processing’ in 2023

THE US embassy in Cuba said Wednesday it would resume “full immigrant visa processing” next year for the first time since 2017, when the mission was closed over alleged sonic attacks on diplomatic staff.

The announcement came as Cuba is experiencing an unprecedented exodus of undocumented migrants amid the communist country’s worst economic crisis in 30 years due to ramped-up US sanctions and the coronavirus pandemic.

“This change will... eliminate the need for Cubans applying for immigrant visas in family preference categories to travel outside of Cuba to Georgetown, Guyana for their interviews,” the embassy said in a statement.

The United States evacuated its diplomatic staff and their families in 2017 after at least two dozen people suffered brain injuries that resembled concussion, but with no exterior signs of trauma. US officials accused Cuba of carrying out “health attacks” using some sort of acoustic or microwave device, a charge Havana angrily rejected.

A US government report in 2020 said the illnesses suffered by staff and their families were most likely caused by “directed, pulsed radio frequency (RF) energy.”—AFP

Japan PM Kishida reiterates support for 2015 Iran nuclear deal

JAPANESE Prime Minister Fumio Kishida on Wednesday reiterated Japan's support for the 2015 Iran nuclear agreement in his meeting with Iranian President Ebrahim Raisi, as talks continue to salvage the accord reached between the Middle Eastern country and major powers, the Japanese government said.

Meeting Raisi in New York on the fringes of the UN General Assembly's annual session, they had a "candid" exchange of opinions with Kishida saying Japan has "consistently supported" the nuclear deal and hopes that Tehran returns to the agreement that restricts Iran's nuclear programme in exchange for sanctions relief, according to the Japanese Foreign Ministry.

They agreed to maintain close communication on the issue, the ministry added.

In return, Iran violated some of the restrictions under the agreement.

UN-backed tribunal upholds life sentence for ex-Khmer Rouge leader

A UN-backed tribunal in Cambodia trying former Khmer Rouge leaders over the 1970s genocide in the country upheld on Thursday a lower-court sentence of life imprisonment against Khieu Samphan, the radical communist regime's former head of state.

Thursday's decision was the final judgment of the Extraordinary Chambers in the Courts of Cambodia, which has adopted a two-tier trial system. With no one else being tried, it marks the end of the judicial process launched in 2006 to bring to justice perpetrators of the 1975-1979 reign of terror that is believed to have claimed nearly two million lives.

Khieu Samphan, 91, is among five Khmer Rouge figures indicted for trial at the tribunal. The court, comprised of Cambodian and international judges, convicted only three of them, including Khieu Samphan. Four of the five are already dead, three of them passing away before proceedings at the court in their cases were completed.

The initial hearing of Khieu Samphan's trial began in 2011. He was sentenced to life in prison in 2014 for crimes against humanity, mainly over the forced relocation of Phnom Penh residents that led to their deaths from starvation. The sentence was finalized in November 2016.

In a separate trial, Khieu Samphan was sentenced to life imprisonment in November 2018 for genocide against Cambodia's ethnic Vietnamese minority and other crimes. The defendant appealed the ruling, pleading not guilty.—Kyodo

South Korean leader's hot mic US criticism goes viral

ALREADY battling record-low approval ratings, South Korea's President Yoon Suk-yeol has landed in trouble again after his disparaging remarks about key ally the United States were caught on a hot mic.

Yoon, a political novice who took office in May, is in New York for the United Nations General Assembly, and chatted on Wednesday with Joe Biden during a photo op at the Global Fund where the US President had just pledged $6 billion.

"How could Biden not lose damn face if these fuckers do not pass it in Congress?" Yoon was caught saying to his aides afterwards in footage that went viral in South Korea.

A YouTube video of Yoon's comments racked up over two million views just hours after it was posted, and "fuckers" became the number one trending topic on Twitter in South Korea on Thursday.

"The president's words and actions are the national dignity of the country," one YouTube commenter wrote.—AFP

Kazakhstan to hold presidential vote on 20 November

KAZAKHSTAN will hold snap presidential elections meant to "radically reset" the ex-Soviet country's political system on 20 November, according to a decree published Wednesday on the presidential website. The announcement comes after the Central Asian nation's recently-installed leader passed legislation limiting presidential mandates to a single, seven-year term and reverted the capital's name away from that of its previous strongman leader.

President Kassym-Jomart Tokayev told lawmakers earlier this month that the vote was part of reforms to institute "completely new standards" for political life, with "fair and open rules".—AFP

Protests mark Australia's 'day of mourning' for queen

HUNDREDS of activists rallied in Australia on Thursday to decry colonial Britain's destructive impact on Indigenous peoples, as the country held a public holiday to mark the death of Queen Elizabeth II. "Abolish the Monarchy" demonstrators gathered in cities including Sydney, Melbourne and Canberra, protesting the persecution of Indigenous people since the British landed in Australia more than two centuries ago.

In Sydney, scores of people came together near a statue of Queen Victoria in the city centre before marching through the streets. "I think the monarchy needs to be aware that there's unfinished business happening here in Australia," said Gwenda Stanley, a 49-year-old activist of the Indigenous Gomeroi people.—AFP

Mayweather expects 'easy payday, easy opponent' in Japan fight

FLOYD Mayweather says that Sunday's exhibition boxing match against Japanese mixed martial artist Mikuru Asakura will be an "easy payday, easy cheque, easy opponent".

The 45-year-old boxing great, who is reportedly close to agreeing a rematch with UFC superstar Conor McGregor, beat Japanese kickboxer Tenshin Nasukawa after just two minutes when they fought in an exhibition in Japan in 2018.

The fight was widely seen as a farce but the American vowed to give the crowd this weekend at Saitama Super Arena, just north of Tokyo, their money's worth in his latest lucrative post-retirement performance.

"I think the last time I came here, it was so quick nobody got a chance to enjoy it," Mayweather, whose nicknames include "Money", said Thursday after a practice session which was delayed by an hour because he "overslept".

"I'll make it quick, but there's not many bouts on the card so I'll make sure to go to three (rounds), unless you all want me to make it quick."

Mayweather was reported this week as saying that he will fight McGregor for a second time next year. The two met in a much-hyped boxing match in 2017, with Mayweather winning by a 10th-round technical knockout to retire with a perfect 50-0 record. His previous exhibition match was against "Dangerous" Don Moore in Abu Dhabi in May. Mayweather was inducted into the International Boxing Hall of Fame in June.—AFP

Raducanu feels the love to surge into Korea Open quarter-finals

EMMA Raducanu enjoyed support from the Korea Open crowd on the way to a straight-sets win over 396th-ranked Yanina Wickmayer and a place in the quarter-finals on Thursday.

Raducanu, who crashed out of the US Open in the first round last month as her title defence fell flat, overcame some late resistance to beat the experienced Belgian 6-3, 7-5 in Seoul.

The 19-year-old Briton said that her serving, including nine aces, formed the backbone of victory and she next faces third seed Magda Linette of Poland.

"I think that serving big and serving well and a lot of aces, especially in the second set, helped me get off to a pretty good lead, 4-1 up, which gave me bit of a cushion because Yanina started fighting back and it was a competitive second set," said the sixth seed.—AFP

Noble returns to West Ham as sporting director

FORMER West Ham captain Mark Noble is to return to the club as its sporting director, the Premier League strugglers announced Thursday.

The 35-year-old Noble called time on a 18-year career with his boyhood club at the end of last season. He will begin his newly-created role in January.

West Ham said in a statement that the former midfielder would "work closely in support of Hammers manager David Moyes and the current board".

The London club are in the relegation zone after winning just one of their seven Premier League games.

"I'm really happy to be coming back and can't wait to get started," Noble said.

"I've spent the last 24 years as a player here, first in the academy and then in the first team, and obviously have a deep knowledge and understanding of the club."

He added: "I see it as a position that I can grow and develop in both personally and professionally.

"There are always difficult decisions to be made in football but along with my colleagues at the club, I will continue to put the best interests of West Ham United first." — AFP
