As the strength of the nation lies within, encouraging local manufacturing is contributing to the booming of the local economy: Senior General

EFFORTS are being made to peacefully utilize nuclear energy in electricity, agriculture, education and health in the future, said Chairman of the State Administration Council Prime Minister Senior General Min Aung Hlaing in a meeting with MSME businessmen at Yadana-bon Hall in Mandalay Industrial Zone yesterday morning to talk about the development of MSME businesses.

Ensuring prosperity of the nation and food sufficiency as national aspirations

In his speech, the Senior General said the residents of the nation need to ensure the prosperity of the nation and food sufficiency, and they have to strive for creating job opportunities and a booming local economy. In this regard, these processes must have plentiful raw materials, the sufficiency of inputs, the availability of capital, and an adequate number of human resources.

Sufficiency supply of electricity which is important for the development

Industries need energy and power. The supply of electricity is based on hydropower. On his tour of Russia, he discussed the generation of hydropower and nuclear energy. Myanmar has plenty of water sources to generate hydropower. Despite heavy capital, hydropower is beneficial for the long-term plan. Hence, efforts are being made to peacefully utilize nuclear energy in electricity, agriculture, education and health in the future.

It is necessary to encourage the public transport sector. To electrify public transport, efforts must be made for generating electricity through hydropower, nuclear power and solar power. Arrangements are being made to supply electricity to Mandalay at full capacity with proper installation of cables and implementation of solar power projects.

Efforts made for the development of industries based on local agriculture and livestock products

Mandalay Region produces agricultural raw, livestock raw and industrial raw materials, and the government pledged to provide assistance for necessary sectors. The government is striving for the availability of quality cotton strains. If the per-acre yield of cotton can be raised at home, it will contribute much to the clothing of the people. Mandalay Region needs to successfully engage in industries based on cotton.

If Mandalay Region systematically engages livestock farms, waste from these farms can be used as bio-fertilizer at the agricultural farms. High-quality livestock products can be exported to the foreign market, creating job opportunities for local people for improving their socioeconomic status.

It is necessary to encourage own operation and management of products instead of the efforts of foreigners.

Rocketing prices of goods are based on the imbalance of supply and demand. It is necessary to reduce production costs. All need to encourage businesses at home, domestic production and local investments. Only when job opportunities are larger at home will the number of migrant workers be down.

Reports on MSME development and industrial zone improvement

Before the speech delivered by the Senior General, Chairman of Mandalay Region Chambers of Commerce and Industry U Win Htay and officials from committees and associations reported on the availability of market share for products, supply of technologies and capitals, disbursement of loans to cotton growers at the soft interest rate, improvement of weaving industries, sufficient electricity for the industries, requirements of finished product manufacturers, levying proper

Tea leaves prices gain over higher demand in Shan State

TRADERS in the tea industry in Shan state said that the price of dried tea leaves is rising as the price of tea leaves is on the increase and farmers are no longer making dried tea leaves.

Soon, the time for Thadingyut and Tazaungdaing festivals will arrive, and the tea market is doing well.

"Now local farmers don't dry it anymore. Tea leaves price is good and when they pick them out, they immediately sell them. So, the dried one is scarce, and the price is high," said an owner of a tea leave industry.

Currently, the rainy season about to come and tea production is decreasing. The price of tea leaves is around K1,500 per viss, they no longer make dried tea leaves which takes a long time to do, local farmers say.

According to the Shan State Tea Market, the local price of pure dried tea leaves is around K8,000 per viss and the price of raw leaves is K3,500.

Due to the high consumption of tea leaves, local businesses are making preserved tea leaves, and prices are from around K6,000 to K8,500 per viss, according to the tea industry sources.

Local traders said that the months of September and October are the period when the tea stock is low, and the new tea leave will be harvested only in November and December.

Corn prices fall in Shan State

ACCORDING to the local farmers in Shan State, the corn price is decreasing, and the price is around K700 per viss while the dried corn price is around K980.

"Prices are going down now," said a corn farmer.

Currently, September is the season when corn starts to be produced, and the price has reached below K700, which is unreasonable due to the rising agricultural inputs this year, farmers said.

At the beginning of 2022, the price of corn only reached the highest level of around K1,050.

The price of clean corn (corn that can be exported abroad) that must have a moisture content of (14.5 per cent) is K1,100 in the Yangon market, K1,020 in the Mandalay Industrial Zone and K990 in the Nawnghkio market, according to market reports in Yangon and Mandalay.

In Shan State, the price of raw corn at the beginning of September was around K870, and at the end of the month, the price was around K700, and the dried corn price was around K980.

At present, there is a small amount of corn exported to China, and the Thai side has blocked the import of corn. As it can only be imported from February 2023, the market is in a state of monitoring, according to business people. – TPT/GNLM

High price of dried chilli pepper persists at nearly K20,000 per viss

THE prices of dried chilli pepper stayed elevated at nearly K20,000 per viss (a viss equals 1.6 kilogrammes), traders said.

During late July, the prices started to break above K10,000 per viss. The prevailing prices moved in the range between K15,000 and K19,500 per viss depending on different varieties (bell pepper, Shankyun, and Moehtaung chilli pepper varieties).

The strong demand by Thailand when Myanmar's output of fresh chilli pepper declined pushed up the price rise. The prices of dried chilli pepper, therefore, went up, said an official of the Seinyadana commodity depot in Mawlamyine city.

Additionally, the high cost of agricultural inputs and fuel price spike for farm machinery are contributing factors to the soaring prices of chilli pepper, traders shared their opinions.

The prices of dried Shankyun and Moehtaung chilli varieties were K18,000 per viss and dried bell chilli pepper was priced at K19,500 per viss in recent days.

The prices dip for now owing to the suspension of trade by Thailand.

"The price of chilli pepper is correlated with Thailand's demand. There is no other cause. The price falls slightly when Thailand stops buying," said an official of the Seinyadana commodity depot in Mawlamyine city.

Myanmar's chilli pepper is primarily conveyed to Thailand and China via cross-border trade channels, while it is exported to Viet Nam by sea.

It is commonly grown in Ayeyawady, Mandalay and Black gram prices fluctuate slightly, yet they remain high

Myanmar is the top producer of the black gram which is primarily demanded by India, while pigeon peas, green grams and chickpeas are cultivated in Australia and African countries besides Myanmar.

THE prices of black grams are moving up and down a bit yet they remain elevated, according to the Ayeya Trade Centre (ATC) under the Myanmar Trade Promotion Organization.

The prevailing price of black gram is approximately K1.9 million per tonne in the domestic market. The FOB prices of Myanmar's black gram to India are valued at US$790-810 for fair average quality and $930-950 for special quality.

The black gram price is fluctuating depending on the domestic gold price and the Kyat-dollar exchange rate in the local forex market. Tracking the hike in gold prices and a strong dollar, the black gram price was on the high side.

"Newly harvested black gram (urad) in India started to enter the market. Although it is of inferior quality, there is a steady supply in India's markets. The price is, therefore, not that high in India. The prices go up and down a bit in the domestic market following the dollar and gold market conditions. It happens for a while. Yet, we still cannot expect the price for the long term. We are not able to speculate on the price as we cannot look back at the events in the past seven years and the policies on pulses have changed. At present, it will be correlated with the gold price and exchange rate," said an official of the ATC.

In late August, the dollar against Kyat peaked at K4,500 on the black market. Following that, the black gram price reached a record high of K2.1 million per tonne. Additionally, the prices of black gram in Myanmar are highly related to India's import policy and weather impacts on pulse input and demand, the ATC forecasted.

According to a Memorandum of Understanding between Myanmar and India, India will import 250,000 tonnes of black gram and 100,000 tonnes of pigeon peas (tur) from Myanmar for five consecutive years from the 2021-2022 financial year to the 2025-2026 FY.

As per Agri World Mumbai, India's pulses output dropped compared to that of previous years. The torrential rain in India this year affected the interest of the growers.

Myanmar conveyed over 754,116 tonnes of various beans and pulses worth $590.149 million to foreign trade partners between 1 April and 16 September 2022 in the current financial year 2022-2023. The country shipped over 611,529 tonnes of pulses and beans valued at $493.56 million to foreign markets by sea, and over 142,587 tonnes valued at $96.589 million were sent to the neighbouring countries through land borders.

Myanmar exported over two million tonnes of various pulses worth US$1.57 billion to foreign trade partners last financial year 2020-2021. The country shipped 1.24 million tonnes of pulses and beans worth $966.4 million to foreign markets through the sea route, and 786,920 tonnes worth $604.3 million were sent to the neighbouring countries through land borders.

Myanmar yearly produces approximately 400,000 tonnes of black gram and about 50,000 tonnes of pigeon peas. Myanmar is the top producer of the black gram which is primarily demanded by India, while pigeon peas, green grams and chickpeas are cultivated in Australia and African countries besides Myanmar. – NN/GNLM

Promote education standards in order to uplift the socioeconomic status

SOCIO-ECONOMIC status representing people in individuals or in groups depends on education, income and employment. It is their social standing or social standard. Hence, the people of a country try hard to improve their social standing or social standard in order to upgrade their society.

The social standard is based on opportunity, authority and control. Socio-economic status is concerned with behaviours and social science arenas including research, practice, education and recommendation measures.

A downtrend in socioeconomic status, low grading of education, poverty and poor health can ultimately affect society. Currently, the globe sees a larger and larger gap between the rich and the poor, distribution of sources and inequality in life qualifications. Hence, the global people are striving for closing these greater gaps across the world in order to integrate the different parts of society.

Moreover, the education system without full facilities of relevant sources may be harmful to the mental situation of students. Practically, the students who are unable to overcome these challenges are sure to lose them en route to the target. As such, it is necessary to improve the socioeconomic status of society in order to correctly control the educational achievement of children.

order to correctly control the educational achievement of children. That is why not only the authorities but participants of the society should make concerted efforts to improve the school education sector and early assist in the education promotion programme of the students with their contributions. As a result, their efforts will bring an increasing number of educated youths capable of developing the socioeconomic status of society.

As such, it is necessary to place an emphasis on systematically doing research about bilateral relations between socioeconomic status and education, with a great plan to give a helping hand to participants of the society so as to escape from the low grading of socioeconomic status which can reflect the lower standard of the education sector. If everybody knows the root cause, they will be able to correctly solve the problems. If so, they will have to grasp the good result soon.

WE ALL have ever heard the Myanmar usage “The countenance that obtains mushroom.” That is completely right because one cannot conceal his delight when he finds the mushroom he is searching for. The curry of mushroom is a kind of delicious dish. Almost every Myanmar citizen has already tried its taste in any way. Some of the naturally found mushrooms are not edible because they can be poisonous. However, many species found in Myanmar are edible.

Today, agricultural mushrooms can be obtained everywhere in Myanmar and they are not poisonous. To be safe consuming, people often cook mushrooms together with some sweet potato leaves which can nullify the poison if present. I think my esteemed readers will also enjoy having a mushroom curry. Nevertheless, it is a rare dish found on the dining tables of Myanmar families. Mushrooms cannot be got easily. Generally, they can sometimes be found naturally. Whenever they are found, those who find them will never let them escape and will surely pluck them. To be frank, I, myself, do not happen to have a mushroom curry even once a year. Although I like it a lot, I cannot buy it due to being afraid of poison. One day, I read an article about mushrooms which made my interest rise and I would like to share my knowledge with readers who talso enjoy having mushrooms like me.

Yes, it is a smart article which you are going to read as an original one as follows:

Like most gardeners, Joe Perkins has typically been more excited by what goes on above ground than what goes on below it. The quality of the soil was always important, no question. But what was really going on down there? It felt mysterious and impenetrable.

As for fungi, they usually meant one thing in a garden: decay. And that was not good news.

“On a domestic level, our relationship and understanding of fungi in the past has very much been that it’s something about decay, it’s about the disease, and it’s something that we don’t particularly want in our gardens,” says Perkins, a 45-year-old landscape architect based in Sussex, who won three awards at the RHS Chelsea Flower Show in 2019 with a garden he created for Facebook. “It’s fair to say that, as gardeners, we’ve not always fully understood – and I still don’t – the importance of these systems.”

The kingdom of the fungi

What changed everything for Perkins was reading research that was carried out by the American mycologist and fungi guru Dr Paul Stamet as well as a revelatory book by British biologist Merlin Sheldrake: Entangled Life, published in 2020.

This year, the tech giant now called Meta has commissioned Perkins to make another Chelsea Garden. He decided to build an immersive environment that celebrates the symbiotic exchange between soil, fungi, and plants.

“Our relationship with fungi is changing, and I think it will be an irreversible change,” Perkins predicts. “You find yourself getting caught up in all the huge implications of it. It’s a totally separate kingdom from plants and animals, and it’s possibly the biggest kingdom about which we know very, very little.”

“If you imagine how the Victorian plant hunters felt when they were discovering all these new plants back in the 18th and 19th century, it’s almost like that. It’s the new frontier, isn’t it?”

What are fungi?

At this point, a glossary might be handy. “Fungi” is the overarching name of a kingdom of spore-producing organisms that feed on organic matter. “Mushrooms” are the fruiting bodies of fungi, the place where spores are produced.

Mushrooms are sometimes compared to icebergs, because most of the activity takes place under the surface of the earth, out of sight. Here, networks of “mycelium”, the vegetative part of the fungus, twist through the soil and make connections between plants. It is now understood that more than 90 per cent of plants depend on mycorrhizal fungi for improving their water and nutrient absorption, which has led to these networks being called the “Wood Wide Web”.

Jumping off from the theme of interconnectedness, Perkins’s upcoming Chelsea design will include a large wooden pavilion, based on hexagonal structures that represent mycelium pathways. His design will also feature two habitats: the woodland edge and a stylized meadow. If you choose to look for them, Perkins makes plenty of references to sustainability and the threats posed by climate change. But there will also be a vibrant colour scheme. “It has to be a beautiful garden as well because it’s Chelsea,” he says.

Leave the soil alone

Perkins’s new fascination with fungi and their mycorrhizal relationships with plants is not just theoretical; it has made an impact on how he gardens on a practical level, too.

“The old advice was to get air into the soil and get rid of all the weeds and everything. And actually, the process of digging up through that surface layer just pulls apart all the mycelial connections. So, from my observations, I would say don’t do that. Leave the soil alone.”

Perkins has other radical, even hair-raising tips for gardeners. “Don’t be too tidy,” he says. “Some fungi are decomposers, and they will take the dead plant material back into the soil and recycle it and make it available to the other plants for nutrients. If you really don’t want to do that, at least leave some towards the back of the borders, so there are some opportunities for that to happen.”

The sky is the limit

Of course, fungi are not only the horticulturist’s friend. These organisms are now finding innovative applications in fashion, health, technology, art, and the construction industry.

One company that pioneers research into bio-based materials is Biohm, based in Bermondsey, south London. It was founded in 2016 by Ehab Sayed, who is from Egypt. The company looks to the natural world for inspiration, and its team of 20 is currently experimenting with more than 300 different strains of mycelium to “train” them to consume food waste and the waste of building processes, even plastic, that would otherwise end up in a landfill.

Biohm has also developed mycelium insulation, which can compete with traditional petrochemical and plastic-based construction materials in its thermal and acoustic properties but is safer and non-toxic.

Last year, Biohm received backing from Waitrose. The British supermarket chain created a £1m grant from the sale of carrier bags, to fund Biohm’s work on breaking down plastics using mycelium. Sayed suggests that the results – which will be “transformational” – are just two years away from being available at scale.

“The sky’s the limit,” he says. “We’re exploring projects in outer space at the moment, seeing how we can grow mycelium in a vacuum, and looking at how we can break down toxins that have been completely irremediable.”

What really excites both Sayed and Perkins, though, is how little we know about fungi and their by-products. It is believed that we have only documented six per cent of all fungal species: there could be anywhere from 2.2 million to 3.8 million species in the world, which is up to ten times more than the estimated number of plant species.

“What I love about mycelium is it’s the source of life, really,” says Sayed. “It’s what enables the cycles of nature to take place. There’s so much we have to learn from it, and we’ve barely scratched the surface.”

Mushrooms are neither fruits nor vegetables, yet it is common knowledge that edible mushrooms exist. Mushrooms are classified as fungi, which makes some people avoid eating them. You can tell people about mushrooms’ nutritional value, having nearly zero fat, low calories, and low sodium, but that will not convince everyone to immediately add the fungus to their diet. As a fungus, you may associate mushrooms with the ground or dead tree roots from which they grow. This does not help make them more appetizing. So, what do mushrooms taste like? Do they all taste the same?

Mushrooms generally taste a bit earthy and depending on the variety somewhat spongy texture. The fungi’s slightly savoury flavour makes it a common meat substitute among vegans or vegetarians. There are different kinds of mushrooms, all of which may not offer the same earthy, savoury flavour. This article also discusses the flavours of common edible mushrooms you can find in your local supermarket.

Generally, mushrooms have an earthy, slightly savoury flavour. However, the answer is no because different types of edible mushrooms may offer different flavours that you might compare with chicken meat. Overall, mushrooms should taste like the dish you are adding the ingredient into. Mushrooms lend a unique texture that can pass for meat and absorb the spices of whatever dish you are cooking.

May all mushroom curry lovers have sweet pleasure and smiles by consuming its magical taste.

Global standard of care significantly reduced due to mental health of healthcare workers

INCREDIBLY high workloads and an increased level of workplace abuse since the start of the COVID-19 pandemic have taken a toll on the mental health of healthcare professionals, bringing down the standard of care delivery globally, an international study has shown.

59 per cent of the healthcare professionals surveyed from the UK, US, Saudi Arabia, Nigeria, India and Brazil, agreed that their mental health has suffered due to working throughout the COVID-19 outbreak. Nearly half (48 per cent) recognized that this has adversely impacted their ability to provide a high standard of patient care, with 56 percent saying they were inclined to leave their jobs since the global health crisis began.

The impacts of the ongoing pandemic

The survey was conducted by YouGov on behalf of the World Innovation Summit for Health (WISH), the global health initiative of Qatar Foundation.

The research examined the impacts of the ongoing pandemic on the lives of health and care workers to understand their experiences and feelings about their career and workplace, as well as explore how they see the future of healthcare as those serving on the frontline of care delivery.

Highlighting a major risk factor to their mental health, almost half of the healthcare professionals revealed that they had witnessed or experienced more physical and verbal abuse since the start of the pandemic.

Some private banks hike interest rate to 9% per annum

SOME private banks have increased the interest rate to 9 per cent per annum on fixed deposit accounts to attract new savers.

Kanbawza Bank (KBZ), which has the most branches across the country, increased the interest rate to nine per cent per annum for 90 days fixed deposit accounts and 9.25 per cent per annum for 180 days fixed deposit accounts. KBZ customers can enjoy the higher interest rate on their accounts. For that special interest rate benefit, the customers can easily open fixed deposit accounts through the nearest bank branches or KBZ mBanking between 26 September and 28 October.

Moreover, CB Bank also boosted the interest rate to 9.1 per cent per annum for 100 days of fixed deposit savings. That promotion period is by the end of November. The minimum amount of 100 Days Fixed Deposit account is K10 million, according to the statement of CB Bank.

As per AGD Bank's statement, AGD Bank introduced the savers with short-term saving benefits, with an annual interest rate of 9.25 per cent for one to three months fixed deposit account (below K5 million) and 9.35 per cent per annum for three months (above K5 million).

"I have to consider the banking option thoughtfully as we cannot withdraw our own money as much as we want in the pandemic. The customers faced bitter experiences in finding ATM cash availability. So, I will not fall for the new interest rates for now. It is easy to turn gold and dollars into cash. At present, holding dollars is restricted. Yet, gold is considered the safe haven asset in difficult times. If we resell the gold for the maximum cash, we can make greater profits than the interest rate of banks. We can withdraw only K1 million per week at the bank and K300,000 through ATM. As far as digital wallets are concerned, we are charged a percentage for withdrawals as shadow money, we cannot enjoy any saving benefit, U Sein Tun from Thingangyun Township stressed.

The saving customers lost trust in the banks due to cash withdrawal restrictions and past problems.

Some economists speculated in the banking sector that the banks are competitively trying to attract new customers with higher interest rates when they make cash from the dollar, gold and real estate investments.

When the local currency is weakening against the safe-haven dollar in the forex market, people turn to safe assets like real estate and gold rather than banking, and most of the residents in the Yangon Region shared their opinions. — TWA/GNLM

Booming fruit trade enhances China-ASEAN cooperation

IN a recollection from Chen Jiqing, a fruit trader in the border city of Dongxing in South China’s Guangxi Zhuang autonomous region, his first impression of ASEAN fruits was rambutan, mango and coconut brought by multinational traders near the border trade market when he was a child.

“There were only a few varieties and quantities of fruit from ASEAN member states at that time. Most of the fruit had to be sold that day or it wouldn’t be fresh,” Chen said.

At that time, due to backward logistics and a lack of cold chain technology, fruit from ASEAN member states was generally only sold in border areas.

Nowadays, cross-border fruit trade supported by express lines and cold chain logistics has already replaced small-scale fruit trade around border areas.

Chen’s company is already one of the largest fruit trading enterprises in Dongxing. In the peak season of durian production, it can ship more than 40 containers of fresh durian to the inland provinces of China in one month.

According to statistics, in 2004, China imported $300 million in ASEAN fruits. In 2001, China imported $15.22 billion of dried and fresh fruits and nuts, of which five ASEAN member states — Thailand, Viet Nam, the Philippines, Cambodia and Malaysia — accounted for more than 60 per cent.—Xinhua

EU sees sabotage in gas pipe leaks, Norway hikes security

THE EU said Wednesday that leaks from two Russia-Germany undersea gas pipelines appeared to be “a deliberate act”, as fossil fuel-rich Norway boosted security at its installations.

The three outflows from the Nord Stream 1 and 2 pipelines have sent natural gas prices soaring, exacerbating an energy crunch in Europe as it stands on the threshold to winter: Methane gas from the leaks are bubbling to the surface of the Baltic Sea close to Denmark and Sweden in discharges expected to last for a week, until depletion of the gas in the pipelines.—AFP

Large Wall Street firms fined $1.8 bn in US over lax recordkeeping

LARGE Wall Street firms agreed to pay $1.8 billion in fines over failures to keep electronic records such as text messages between employees on personal mobile phones, US authorities announced Tuesday.

Barclays, Bank of America, Deutsche Bank and Goldman Sachs were among the firms that agreed to fines over “longstanding failures” to maintain and preserve electronic communications that must be available to regulators in the course of oversight, the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) said in a statement.

The SEC announced a total of $1.1 billion in fines on 16 institutions in all. The 16 firms listed included some companies such as Morgan Stanley with affiliated firms also covered by the agreement.

In a parallel action, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission announced it reached settlements totaling $710 million from the same group of financial institutions over the same offences.—AFP

M’bishi Heavy, utilities to develop new nuclear reactor for 2030s use

MITSUBISHI Heavy Industries Ltd. said Thursday it will develop a next-generation nuclear reactor with Kansai Electric Power Co. and three other major Japanese utilities in what could be the first project in the government’s recent policy shift to push nuclear energy.

The five companies will develop an advanced light-water reactor, a new type of pressurized water reactor, or PWR, deemed safer than existing models, and plan to put it into use in the mid-2030s.

The other three utilities are Hokkaido Electric Power Co., Shikoku Electric Power Co. and Kyushu Electric Power Co. All four utilities operate Mitsubishi Heavy reactors at their nuclear plants.

The plan comes as the Japanese government announced in August that it would promote the construction of next-generation nuclear power plants to ensure a stable electricity supply without producing carbon dioxide emissions, in a major policy reversal from its policy of no new nuclear energy.

Among a variety of next-generation nuclear reactor types, the government plans to prioritize developing advanced light-water reactors as it could utilize existing supply chains, given the technological similarities to PWRs.

Chief Cabinet Secretary Hirokazu Matsuno welcomed the news, saying at a press conference, “I hope relevant minis-

VW, Umicore join forces in battery materials venture

VOLKSWAGEN and Belgian group Umicore will work together to produce battery materials, the German car group said on Monday, as the carmaker looks to speed its transition to electric vehicles. Volkswagen’s battery subsidiary PowerCo and Umicore will be equal partners in the project, investing a total of €3 billion, the car giant said in a statement. With the joint venture, Volkswagen aimed to “produce battery materials for 2.2 million fully electric cars per year by the end of the decade”, it said. In all, Volkswagen is ploughing tens of billions into an ambitious switch to electric vehicles, while opening a clutch of battery factories across Europe. By bringing more of the battery production supply chain in-house Volkswagen also hopes to reduce its reliance on Asian suppliers to equip its new-age models.

The founding of the joint venture was a “new step forward... to keep Europe more independent and more resistant, more resilient in (electric vehicle) supply chains”, Thomas Schmall, the head of PowerCo’s supervisory board, said at a press conference.—AFP

Apple App Store pulls Russian social network VKontakte

APPLE on Wednesday confirmed that it removed popular Russian social network VKontakte from its App Store globally due to sanctions imposed by Britain.

The British government on Monday sanctioned 92 Russian individuals and entities after President Vladimir Putin’s regime held referendums in Moscow-controlled areas of Ukraine — denounced by Kyiv and its allies as a “sham” — and stepped up threats against the West.

“Sham referendums held at the barrel of a gun cannot be free or fair and we will never recognize their results,” British Foreign Secretary James Cleverly said in a statement.

The sanctions target “those behind these sham votes, as well as the individuals that continue to prop up the Russian regime’s war of aggression,” he said. San Petersburg-based tech firm VK said in a blog post that some of its applications were no longer available from the App Store, which serves as the lone gateway for content onto Apple mobile devices.

VK apps are used for messaging, digital payments and grocery shopping as well as social networking.

The VK apps removed from the App Store were being distributed by developers controlled or majority-owned by parties sanctioned by the UK government, and Apple is complying with the law, according to the Silicon Valley tech giant.—AFP

Japan issues commemorative stamps marking 50th anniversary of normalization of Japan-China ties

An event to commemorate the 50th anniversary of ties between Japan and China is held at a shopping mall in Beijing on 24 September. PHOTO: KYODO

JAPAN released a set of commemorative stamps on Thursday to mark the 50th anniversary of the normalization of diplomatic relations between Japan and China, with pictures of giant pandas eating bamboo surrounded by crimson peonies and pale pink cherry blossoms.

Issued by Japan Post, the two stamps share a similar design featuring the ink wash painting style. One stamp shows a picture of a pair of adult giant pandas and the other depicts an adult giant panda with a pair of adorable giant panda cubs.

Akira Tamaki, designer of this set of stamps and chief stamp designer at Japan Post Co. Ltd., introduced his design concept to Xinhua recently.

In September 1972, Japan and China normalized their diplomatic relations, and about a month later, two giant pandas Kang Kang and Lan Lan arrived at the Ueno Zoo in Tokyo, setting off an unprecedented “panda craze” in Japan, Tamaki said.—Xinhua

India bans Islamist group for alleged ‘terrorist’ links

INDIA has banned an Islamist group and its affiliates for five years over alleged terrorism links, after nationwide crackdowns that arrested hundreds in the organization.

The notice seen by AFP said the Popular Front of India (PFI) had ties with militant groups such as the Students Islamic Movement of India, Jamat-ul-Mujahideen Bangladesh and Islamic State of Iraq and Syria.

Police arrested over 200 PFI members in a nationwide crackdown yesterday and last week a similar crackdown led to the detention of more than 100 people linked to PFI.

The group tweeted that the arrests were a “witch-hunt” against its members and supporters.

The government notice said PFI and its associates have been “indulging in unlawful activities, which are prejudicial to the integrity, sovereignty and security of the country and have the potential of disturbing public peace and communal harmony of the country and supporting militancy in the country”.

It said that the group and its affiliates had been working secretly to “increase radicalization of one community by promoting a sense of insecurity”.—AFP

Moscow says occupied Ukraine regions made ‘free choice in favour of Russia’

MOSCOW’S foreign ministry said Wednesday that Russian-occupied regions in Ukraine made a “conscious and free choice” to join Russia after Kremlin proxies organized so-called referendums in the territories they control.

“The results of the plebiscites speak for themselves: the people of the Donbas, Kherson and Zaporizhzhia regions do not want to go back to their old lives and have made a conscious and free choice in favour of Russia,” the ministry said in a statement.

The statement came after the Moscow-installed leaders in the three regions asked President Vladimir Putin to formally annex the territories. The statement said that an “overwhelming majority” had backed joining Russia, claiming almost one hundred per cent backing in the Donetsk region – “99.23 per cent.”

Moscow said the voting was “carried out in full accordance to the norms and principles of international law”, even though the territories were captured by force and the votes hastily organized in a race against Kyiv’s counter-offensive.—AFP

Ukraine unveils mechanism for post-conflict reconstruction

KYRYLO Tymoshenko, the deputy head of the Ukrainian president’s office, has unveiled a mechanism for Ukraine’s post-conflict reconstruction named the Fast Recovery Plan, the government-run Ukrinform news agency reported Wednesday.

Under the mechanism, Ukraine is planning to attract money from international donors to restore the infrastructure facilities which were destroyed or heavily damaged in the Russia-Ukraine conflict, Tymoshenko said.

“We work with our international partners on this plan. I have conducted more than 30 meetings with ambassadors of foreign countries, we invite all of them to cooperate,” Tymoshenko noted. According to him, 75 per cent of the recovery foundation’s supervisory board members will be representatives of the donor countries.

In a joint assessment released earlier this month, the Ukrainian government, the European Commission, and the World Bank estimated that the current cost of Ukraine’s reconstruction amounts to 349 billion US dollars.—Xinhua

Danish queen strips four grandkids of royal titles

DENMARK'S Queen Margrethe, Europe's only reigning queen and the continent's longest serving monarch, on Wednesday stripped four of her eight grandchildren of their titles, the palace announced.

The official reason was to allow the four children of her youngest son, Prince Joachim, to live more normal lives, and follows similar moves by other royal families in Europe to slim down their monarchies, the palace said. "As of 1 January 2023, the descendants of His Royal Highness Prince Joachim will only be able to use their titles of Count and Countess of Monpezat, their previous titles of Prince and Princess of Denmark ceasing to exist," the royal palace wrote in a statement. Prince Joachim, 53, has four children from two marriages: Nikolai, Felix, Henrik, and Athena, ranging in age from 23 to 10.

"With her decision, Her Majesty the Queen wants to create a framework for the four grandchildren, to a much greater degree, to be able to shape their own existence without being limited by the special considerations and obligations that a formal affiliation with the Royal House as an institution implies," it said.

"The queen's decision is in line with similar changes that other royal houses have carried out in recent years in different ways," it added. The mother of Prince Joachim's two eldest sons told Danish media she was "shocked" by the decision.

"This came out of the blue. The children feel excluded. They can't understand why their identity is being taken from them," Countess Alexandra told daily B.T.. The queen's four other grandchildren, born to Crown Prince Frederik, 54, will retain their titles but when they come of age only the future king, Prince Christian, will receive an appanage, a decision taken in 2016.—AFP

Beer Party founder vies to be Austria's next president

WITH his long dark hair and torn jeans, punk rock singer Dominik Wlazny of Austria's Beer Party seems an unlikely candidate for the country's next president.

But that's exactly what the 35-year-old aims to be, as he seeks to shake up a presidential race dominated by politicians mostly backed by more established parties -- several rocked by corruption scandals.

Running against six others, including incumbent Alexander Van der Bellen, Wlazny is the first-ever presidential candidate from the Beer Party, named for its advocacy of the popular beverage.

Wlazny describes his campaign for the 9 October vote as a "David vs Goliath fight", with Van der Bellen widely tipped to clinch a second mandate.

voters over with his party's unconventional approach to politics.

The party's goals include having a fountain in the capital that dispenses beer, saying in a proposal to the city it could "raise the quality of life" for residents and draw tourists.

Wlazny's bare-bones presidential campaign, dubbed "Let's talk about it", pushes for gender equality and animal welfare, among other issues.

His messaging is also unconventional, sending updates via online satirical clips, and Wlazny says his appeal is to anyone who "has a desire for change".—AFP

Bosnia goes to the polls as ethnic divisions grow

WITH ethnic divisions growing deeper, Bosnia will hold general elections on Sunday amid secession threats and fears of fresh political turmoil nearly three decades after war ravaged the Balkan nation.

The country is torn between secessionist Orthodox Serbs and Catholic Croats demanding greater autonomy, while Muslim Bosniaks calling for a more egalitarian state appear to be chasing little more than a pipedream.

For more than two decades, the impoverished Balkan state has been governed by a dysfunctional administrative system born out of the 1995 Dayton Agreement.

And while the accords may have succeeded in ending the war in the 1990s, the country has withered amid political paralysis ever since.

Analysts have warned that Bosnia is sinking ever deeper into troubled waters with divisions along ethnic lines appearing to grow even further on the eve of elections.

"Bosnia-Herzegovina is experiencing the most serious political crisis since the signing of the peace agreement," Ranko Mavrak, a Sarajevo-based political analyst, told AFP. "The ethnic divisions are so deep that they are now a real danger to Bosnia's survival and its integrity," he added.—AFP

US VP Harris lands in S. Korea after North's missile tests

US Vice-President Kamala Harris was in South Korea Thursday to tour the heavily fortified border with the nuclear-armed North, on a trip aimed at strengthening the security alliance with Seoul.

Pyongyang conducted two banned ballistic missile launches in the days before Harris's arrival, part of a record-breaking streak of weapons tests this year.

Speaking ahead of her meeting with South Korea's President Yoon Suk-yeol, Harris said the countries' alliance was "a linchpin of security and prosperity on the Korean peninsula".

"I'm here to reinforce the strength of our alliance and strengthen our work together," she added.

Washington stations about 28,500 troops in South Korea to help protect it from the North, and the allies are conducting a large-scale joint naval exercise this week in a show of force against the North.

Harris' trip to the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) is likely to infuriate Pyongyang, which branded United States House Speaker Nancy Pelosi the "worst destroyer of international peace" when she visited the border in August.—AFP

Neymar swept up in Brazil vote battle after video for Bolsonaro

FOOTBALL superstar Neymar was swept up in Brazil's presidential election campaign after posting a video on social media Wednesday thanking President Jair Bolsonaro for visiting the player's charitable children's foundation.

The Paris Saint-Germain and Brazil striker did not get into politics in the brief message to Bolsonaro, posted four days out from Sunday's voting.

But that did not stop Bolsonaro's camp from playing up the video from one of the country's biggest stars as the far-right incumbent seeks a come-from-behind win against leftist ex-president Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva (2003-2010), who leads in the polls.

"Hello, President Bolsonaro... I wanted to thank you for your illustrious visit," Neymar, 30, said on Instagram.

"I would have loved to be there with you, but unfortunately I'm too far away... I hope you enjoyed your visit to the institute, which is the greatest goal of my life." Communications Minister Fabio Faria and Bolsonaro's senator son Flavio promptly reposted the video on Twitter.

The message came after ex-army captain Bolsonaro visited the Neymar Jr. Institute, a charitable foundation the football star founded in 2014 that runs educational, cultural and sports programmes for 3,000 underprivileged children in the southeastern city of Praia Grande, where Neymar grew up.— AFP

Qatar says World Cup fans do not need COVID-19 vaccination

CORONAVIRUS vaccinations will not be mandatory for the million-plus fans going to the World Cup in Qatar this year, the Gulf state said Thursday.

But players and match officials may be forced into a secure "bio-bubble" if Covid-19 cases take off again, with the threat of expulsion from the tournament for those who breach the secure environment, the health ministry said.

The 29-day tournament will be the first major global sporting event with fans since the eruption in December 2019 of the Covid pandemic, which has since killed more than six million people.

Qatari organisers, who have predicted that more than one million people will pack Doha for the matches, and football's governing body, FIFA, have said they want the event to be a sign the world is getting over the devastating pandemic.

But Qatar's health ministry warned in its World Cup guidelines that special measures would be ordered "in the event of a worsening pandemic situation in the country", such as the emergence of a threatening new variant.

With Covid-19 currently considered under control, "there will be no vaccination requirement for participants and visiting spectators," the ministry said.

All visitors aged over six will have to produce negative Covid-19 tests before taking flights to Qatar for the tournament that starts 20 November. —AFP
