Among many driving forces, the economic driving force takes a leading role in the development of the nation and contributes to the peace and stability of the nation. The good economic driving force can affect the political and defence driving forces. The business based on agriculture and livestock farms needs to be emphasized for increasing the interests of the State and the citizens.

Efforts to be poured out for successfully operating agriculture and livestock farms in relevant regions

Sagaing Region needs to increase the yield of wheat. The Department of Agricultural Research, local farmers and wheat users are to cooperate with each other in seeking quality seeds of wheat. But, it can be seen that some 500,000 acres of allowed cultivable lands are not fully used in Sagaing Region.

If dairy cows and beef cows are systematically bred as well as agriculture and livestock zones are undertaken, Sagaing Region will have greater success. The government encourages the cultivation of staple cotton to have greater success. Local farmers need to cultivate quality cotton strains and the government will provide the necessary assistance to them. If the cultivation of cotton achieves success, it can be supplied for domestic use and for export purposes. So also, successful production of paddy, wheat, cotton and oil crops will help develop the region as well as the State.

The government is ready to allow the establishment of paper mills in the region and to provide assistance to the manufacturing of rubber products.

Arrangements for full electrification

The government is striving for a sufficient supply of electricity. Sagaing Region can generate electricity through solar power. Hydropower can be generated in many sites along Chindwin and Ayeyawady rivers. Businesspersons were urged to generate solar power which can operate river water pumping works for agriculture and livestock farms. Coal from Kalewa can be used in generating electricity. Implementation of the projects must emphasize the interests of the region and the country. Everybody needs to consider the instigation of those who seek political profit not to successfully implement the projects.

Encouraging education for the emergence of human resources

Agriculture, livestock and basic technical schools are opened in 50 districts for turning out human resources for the agriculture and livestock sectors.

The qualified students will have the chance to join the colleges and universities.

The Senior General continued to say that the manufacturing process using domestic materials will help the development of the region. MSME businesses also contribute to urban and rural development. As local authorities need to enforce discipline, local people are to follow prescribed rules and regulations for the development of their regions.

The Senior General presented foodstuffs to departmental personnel through officials. The Senior General then cordially greeted MSME businesspersons, town elders and departmental officials.

Avocado fetches handsome price in domestic market

AVOCADO traders are doing a roaring trade in the domestic market and the prices move up in the late season as well, said U Myo Nyunt, joint secretary 1 of Myanmar Avocado Producers and Exporters Association.

The domestic market sees dwindling stocks of avocados of local origins. Those are supplied by Chin and Shan states and PyinOoLwin and Nawnghkio areas. The prevailing prices stand at K35,000-40,000 per 35-viss bag.

“The avocados of local origin fetch a handsome price. They were priced at K28,000-30,000 per bag during the abundant avocado season. Now, the stock is decreasing. The price, therefore, goes up to K35,000 per bag on low supply during the near end of the season. This year, the avo-

Palm oil wholesale reference price for Yangon Region dips

THE wholesale reference rate of palm oil for the Yangon market slid again this week ending 27 March compared to that of the previous week, according to the Supervisory Committee on edible oil import and distribution.

The reference price stood at K4,635 per viss in the week from 13 to 19 March. For the week ending 27 March, the price was set slightly lower at K4,570 per viss, showing a small decrease of K65 per viss this week.

The Supervisory Committee on edible oil import and distribution under the Ministry of Commerce has been closely observing the FOB prices in Malaysia and Indonesia including transport costs, tariffs and banking services, and issuing the wholesale market reference rate for edible oil every week.

Regardless of the reference price, the current market price is too high at over K6,000-7,000 per viss.

If those edible oil retailers and wholesalers are found overcharging, storing inventory intentionally and attempting unscrupulous action to manipulate the market, they will face legal action under the Essential Supplies and Service Act, MoC released a statement.

The Ministry of Commerce is striving for consumers not to worry over the supply of edible oil. The ministry is also trying to secure edible oil sufficiency, supervise the market to offer reasonable prices to the consumers and maintain price stability.

At present, mobile market trucks operated by oil importing companies, in coordination with Myanmar Edible Oil Dealers’ Association, were back to business in some townships on 17 July in order to offer palm oil at a subsidized rate. They offer palm oil at a fairer price to the consumers directly depending on the reference price. However, there are limited sources of supply although they directly sell palm oil at a reference rate depending on the volume quota.

The domestic consumption of edible oil is estimated at 1 million tonnes per year. The local cooking oil production is just about 400,000 tonnes. To meet the oil sufficiency in the domestic market, about 700,000 tonnes of cooking oil are yearly imported through Malaysia and Indonesia. — NN/EM

Abundant supply of peanuts slashes peanut oil prices

THE large volume of peanut supply to the Mandalay market diminished peanut oil price to K12,000 per viss, Mandalay traders said.

The prices soared to K14,000 last month. Bulk supply from various regions reduced the price to K12,000 from K14,000 per viss. Following the peanut oil price slip, prices of other edible oil varieties have fallen accordingly.

“Mandalay market sees an abundant supply of peanuts. The price of peanuts hit the highest of K7,000-7,600 per viss in the last two weeks. The price dropped to K6,300-7,000 per viss this week on large supply. Peanut has both foreign and local demand. Chinese buyers are mostly purchasing them. Kyat’s value against Yuan appreciates for now. This being so, the oil prices declined. It brings positive impact on the consumers,” U Soe Win Myint, an owner of Soe Win Myint depot from Mandalay city. The peanut can be grown all year round. It is commonly found in Mandalay, Sagaing, Magway and Ayeyawady regions. Beyond self-sufficiency, peanuts are exported to external markets as well. — Min Htet Aung (Mandalay Sub-Printing House)/EM

Expand forest areas to lessen climate change

IMPACTS triggered by global warming and climate change are terribly on the rise across the world on which global peoples cannot be able to avoid such kinds of terrible impacts. They do not have any spare lands where they may safely evade gradually enlarging the areas of global warming and climate change.

But, those global countries and global people are able to defy aforesaid impacts by saving the freshwater and conserving forests so as to stop the degradation of the environment. To be able to do so, they have to efficiently consume freshwater on a daily basis while participating in nurturing saplings to be used in the establishment of more and more forests and conserving the existing forests not to be depleted.

If so, their activities will be a drive to directly or indirectly reduce the impacts of climate change. Consequently, relieving climate change will help save the life of global peoples as well as grant the life of new generations. As such, global peoples are to disseminate their knowledge about nurturing and protecting forests to new generations with far-sightedness to prevent deterioration of the planet Earth as much as possible.

Globally, the United Nations adopted the Sustainable Development Goals for the sake of the global peoples. Forests play a crucial role in poverty alleviation and in the achievement of Sustainable Development Goals. It is because forests can give food, clothing, and shelter to people at different levels, helping the improvement of their socio-economic life.

For example, a glass of water can make a great change in the world with the growth of trees. It is because a glass of water can change the situation of forests which can control the natural environment based on climate change which brings warming to the globe day by day. The efficient use of a glass of water can be a drive for ensuing lush and green forest areas. If so, global peoples can avoid unprecedented deforestation.

of water can be a drive for ensuing lush and green forest areas. If so, global peoples can avoid unprecedented deforestation.

The International Day of Forests is marked on 21 March, in accord with the resolution of the United Nations General Assembly on 28 November 2013. The United Nations Forum on Forests and the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), in collaboration with relevant governments, the collaborative partnership on forests, and other relevant organizations have been holding the commemorative International Day of Forests on a yearly basis. This year, the theme for International Day of Forests was set as the Forest and Health both of which cannot be separable for the interests of global peoples.

transportation sector, which includes gasoline-fueled cars, account for about 24 per cent of global CO2 emissions from fuel combustion in 2019.

It can vary depending on the country and region. In the United States, transportation accounts for about 28 per cent of greenhouse gas emissions, with light-duty vehicles (including gasoline-fuelled cars). In other countries where transportation infrastructure and fuel sources may differ.

The amount of carbon emission from gasoline-fuelled transportation varies depending on several factors, such as the fuel efficiency of the vehicle, driving habits and the type of gasoline used. On average, burning one gallon of gasoline produces around 8.89 kilograms of carbon dioxide emission. This figure takes into account the carbon content of gasoline and the chemical reaction that occurs when it is burned. Not only carbon dioxide but other harmful pollutants such as nitrogen oxides, carbon monoxide and volatile organic compounds are also released into the atmosphere during combustion.

Changing from fossil-fuelled cars to EVs has some pronounced benefits. On average, driving an EV produces 50-60 per cent fewer greenhouse gas emissions than driving a gasoline-powered vehicle. This figure takes into account the carbon emissions generated during the production of electricity, as well as emissions generated during the manufacturing and disposal of the battery.

If an EV is charged with electricity generated entirely from renewable sources, its carbon footprint would be close to zero. Besides, EVs have other benefits for their owner. Although the market price of EVs is still higher than fossil-fuelled cars, EVs are cheaper to operate than gasoline-fuelled vehicles. But with technological improvements and mass production worldwide the gap may be increasingly narrower in the future.

Currently, the battery price for EVs is much cheaper than five years before. And they offer a smooth and quiet operation, which is more comfortable and enjoyable for passengers. Also, EVs have fewer moving parts thus they are easy to repair and lesser maintenance cost. On the other hand, EVs have some technical obstacles to be solved. The first one is a limited driving range. In 2023, top EV models have improved their driving range of 400 miles. However, they are expensive and not affordable for most people.

Although the EV market is booming, charging infrastructure can't catch up with EV usage in most countries. With limited charging infrastructure, it is difficult to recharge on longer trips. And also takes significantly longer charging time than refuelling a gasoline-fuelled vehicle, which can be inconvenient for some drivers.

Besides, the higher upfront cost of EVs is not attractive for most people even with the government's tax incentives. The disposal of batteries used in EVs can be problematic, as they contain hazardous materials. Even when there are some weak points in EV technology, we should gradually change our path to EV.

It is deserved to change not only for environmental benefits that may reduce the carbon footprint and combat climate change but for the improvement of public health including respiratory problems, heart disease and cancer.

As technology improves and charging infrastructure becomes more widely available, the benefits of EVs are likely to become even more significant.

How the Black Death and Covid-19 are linked

A genetic mutation that spread thanks to the Black Death in the Middle Ages, could help its carriers today fight off respiratory diseases, including Covid-19. PHOTO: AFP

THE Black Death epidemic, which caused millions of deaths in the mid-14th century, is believed to have resulted in a genetic mutation that helped survivors fight off this bacterial disease.

According to a recent British study, this genetic variation is still present in some people today.

The modification of the ERAP2 gene is believed to help carriers fight respiratory diseases such as Covid-19 and pneumonia.

But in a trade-off of sorts, this genetic inheritance is also linked to an increase in autoimmune diseases, such as rheumatoid arthritis and inflammatory bowel disease.

To reach this conclusion, the researchers did a study to assess whether variation in the ERAP2 gene was associated with severe infection, autoimmune disease and parental longevity.

The scientists from the United Kingdom's University of Bristol, in collaboration with colleagues at the universities of Edinburgh, Oxford, Cardiff and Imperial College London, used health data from thousands of UK residents from three large databases (namely, the UK Biobank, FinnGen and GenOMICC).

"This gene essentially chops up proteins for the immune system," explains study lead author Dr Fergus Hamilton from Bristol, in a news release.

"Although we don't know the exact mechanism influencing disease risk, carriers of alleles that provide more protection against respiratory disease seem to have an increased risk of autoimmune disease.

"It is potentially a great example of a phenomenon termed 'balancing selection', where the same allele has different effects on different diseases."

"This is a theoretical story of balance - relating to historical and contemporary disease profiles - which reflects our past and is rarely seen in real human examples," adds study co-author and professor of genetic epidemiology Dr Nicholas Timpson.

Identifying causal links between genetics and disease susceptibility may pave the way for potential treatments, the researchers say.

"However, it also highlights potential challenges; therapeutics to target ERAP2 are currently being developed to target Crohn's disease and cancer, so it is important to consider potential effects on the risk of infection from these agents," the news release concludes.

Price varies in domestic palm oil market despite no change in foreign market

ACCORDING to oil traders in Yangon, there are five different oil prices in the Yangon palm oil market.

On 17 March, the palm oil wholesale price at the Nyaungpinlay Market in Lanmadaw Township was K6,050 per viss but each regular customer was sold only a limited number of barrels. Another wholesale outlet sold it at K6,800-K6,850 per viss while two oil outlets from Bayintnaung depot traded at K6,350-K6,750 per viss to their consumers, oil resellers told the Global New Light of Myanmar (GNLM).

Oil traders have started storing palm oil these days as the Thingyan holidays are approaching and this has given rise to different selling prices in the Yangon oil market.

Although it was said in early March that the delivery price of palm oil was expected to reach K6,000 per viss, it didn't happen until two weeks later. The current wholesale price of palm oil was K6,600, K6,700 and K6,800 per viss in the Yangon oil market. The Mandalay oil market also saw a wholesale price of around K7,000 per viss.

Although there are no visible changes in the foreign oil price, oil import and currency exchange rate, the wholesale price of palm oil went up to around K7,400 per viss in the Yangon market. Those who purchased palm oil in advance with a price of more than K7,000 per viss faced losses when the price dropped down below K7,000 per viss.

People are saying in the oil market that if authorities take effective measures against those who do not sell palm oil according to the wholesale reference price published weekly, selling at a higher price of around K2,000 per viss than the wholesale reference price in the Yangon market will decrease, and more and more oil sellers will get to know the actual prices on a daily basis. — TWA/CT

‘Floating toilets’ help Cambodia’s lake-dwelling poor

POINTING to the murky waters of the Tonle Sap, Si Vorn fights back tears as she recalls her four-year-old daughter dying from diarrhoea after playing in the polluted lake.

Her family of 12 is among 100,000 people living in floating houses on Cambodia’s vast inland waterway, and while their village has 70 houses and a primary school, it has no sanitation system.

Now a local social enterprise, Wetlands Work (WW), is trying to tackle the problem by rolling out “floating toilets” to filter waste, but the high cost of installation means for now they are available to only a lucky few.

For generations, villagers whose livelihood depends on fishing have defecated directly into the water that they use for cooking, washing and bathing — risking diarrhoea and even more severe water-borne diseases such as cholera.

“We use this water, we drink this water, and we defecate into this water. Everything!” Si Vorn, 52, told AFP, saying her family fell ill all the time.

“Every day, I worry about my health. Look at the water, there is no sanitation. I’m so worried but I don’t know what to do.”

Microbe magic

More than a million people live on or around Tonle Sap, the world’s largest inland fishery, but there is no system in place for managing human waste from the 20,000 floating houses around the lake. Cambodia, ravaged by war and the genocidal Khmer Rouge in the 1970s, is one of the poorest countries in Southeast Asia.

Around a third of the population does not have access to proper toilets, according to the WaterAid charity, and diarrhoea is a leading killer of children under five.

Wetlands Work hopes its HandyPods, as the floating toilets are properly known, can help Si Vorn’s village and others like it in other countries.

HandyPods use three small tanks to filter and clean the sewage.

Human waste passes from the toilet into the first tank, then

Unwanted visitor ruins spring break in Florida - toxic algae

WITH its brilliant sun, white sand and turquoise water, Lido Key Beach would make for a perfect postcard of Florida beaches if it weren’t for the dozens of dead fish lying on the shore, killed by a toxic algae bloom known as red tide.

The bloom usually hits Florida’s Gulf Coast in the summer, but this year it has come during spring, a time when thousands of American families flock to the Sunshine State during school break, and the outbreak bodes ill for its tourism sector.

On the terrace of the Lido Beach Resort, Jeff Napier, a 62-year-old employee, laments the effect red tide has had on business.

“We had a lot of cancellations. People get sick,” Napier told AFP. “Why would you want to spend that kind of money and stay here?”

High amounts of the harmful algae, known as Karenia brevis, can kill marine life and cause respiratory complications in some people. It also has a sulfurous, decaying smell.

Dick Bowser experienced that firsthand a few days ago. The 80-year-old tourist walks along the shoreline with a cane in each hand, happy that the ocean currents have turned the tide away from Sarasota, at least for now.

“It smelled horrible. I couldn’t stand to be near the beach,” Bowser said. “It bothered me in the form of coughing, continuous coughing. I got a sore throat every day, having trouble with my eyes or sinuses.”

In Napier’s case, the toxic algae gave him five days of migraines, something he doesn’t want to experience again.

“They just got to fix that red tide. They got to fix it,” he says. “But I don’t know what they’re going to do about it.”

- ‘Kill the algae’ -

Fifty kilometres (30 miles) from Lido Key Beach, scientists from the Mote Marine Laboratory have been working since 2020 to lessen the impact of red tide, a phenomenon first reported by Spanish explorers in the 15th and 16th centuries, based on accounts of the native populations in the area.

The goal of the research is to “kill the algae, denature the toxin and not have significant impacts on the nontarget species,” explains Dr Michael Crosby, president and CEO of the laboratory.

To achieve this, researchers cultivate specimens of Karenia brevis in huge tanks of seawater that imitate the ecosystem of the Gulf of Mexico and test various substances against it.

So far they have identified a dozen methods that work, and over the next two years they plan to test them in the ocean, Crosby says. — AFP

‘Ted Lasso’ cast to visit White House to promote mental health ACTORS from the smash-hit comedy series “Ted Lasso” will meet President Joe Biden at the White House on Monday to discuss the importance of mental health, the administration said Sunday.

The Apple TV+ series, whose third season premiered 15 March, delves into various characters’ mental health, with storylines tackling issues with bullying, anger, relationships and self-esteem, as well as panic attacks.

The show stars Jason Sudeikis as Ted Lasso, an out-of-his-depth American football coach who is recruited to lead a dysfunctional English soccer club in the aftermath of its owners’ divorce, and as Lasso faces his own mental health issues.

The president and First Lady Jill Biden “will welcome Jason Sudeikis and the cast of Ted Lasso to the White House to discuss the importance of addressing your mental health to promote overall well-being,” the White House said in a statement.

““Ted Lasso” has inspired the world through its universal themes around optimism, kindness, and determination, and the Lasso philosophy to ‘believe’,” Apple TV+ said in a statement, as reported by entertainment news outlet Deadline.

Biden on Sunday tweeted a photo of the Oval Office with a sign reading “BELIEVE” taped above the door — a reference to Lasso’s mantra.

The Biden administration said it has expanded mental health resources for young people and provided nearly $500 million to help states transition to the 988 Suicide and Crisis Lifeline.

Anyone experiencing a mental health or suicide crisis can access confidential counselling by calling or texting 988 in the United States to reach the hotline.

“Ted Lasso” won Emmys in 2022 and 2021 for best comedy, best lead actor in a comedy for Sudeikis and best supporting actor in a comedy for Brett Goldstein, among other wins.

After winning in 2021, Sudeikis said the show was about family, mentors and teachers, and teammates.

“And I wouldn’t be here without those three things in my life,” he said. — AFP

Stocks plunge despite Credit Suisse buyout, central banks' pledge

EQUITIES sank Monday on fears about the financial sector, despite news of UBS's takeover of embattled Credit Suisse and central bank pledges to provide liquidity to troubled lenders.

The losses came ahead of the Federal Reserve's latest policy meeting this week, with speculation mounting that it will pause its interest rate hikes to provide some stability to markets.

Asian traders tracked Friday's losses in New York and Europe.

on worries about its exposure to risky bonds related to Credit Suisse. Standard Chartered also sank.

The losses came even as the city's de facto central bank said its banking sector had "insignificant" exposure to Credit Suisse.

Other regional bank shares were also hit, including Japan's Mitsubishi UFJ Financial, National Australia Bank and India's ICICI.

The Japanese government said the country's "financial organizations on the whole have ample liquidity and capital, and the financial market is stable overall".

And ahead of the open in Europe, France's central bank chief said Credit Suisse's woes "don't concern" European banks.

London, Frankfurt and Paris all fell in early Monday trade.

Tokyo, Sydney, Seoul and Mumbai were also in the red.

Shanghai rose after the Chinese central bank cut the amount of cash banks must keep in reserve, hoping to boost the country's economy.

IDB predicts 'difficult' 2023 for Latin America

LATIN America and the Caribbean will experience a "difficult" 2023 with barely one per cent growth due to global uncertainty, the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB) said on Sunday.

The one per cent growth figure "is very low given the developmental challenges in our countries," said IDB chief economist Eric Parrado at the end of the financial institution's annual general assembly in Panama.

"In general, 2023 will be difficult for Latin America and the Caribbean, given the complexity of the global scenario and its major uncertainties," added Parrado.

The IDB projection is lower than the International Monetary Fund's expectation of 1.8 per cent growth in the region, or the 1.3 per cent estimation from the UN's Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC).

The IDB assembly, which gathers the heads of finance from the region, took place amid the backdrop of the collapse of three banks in the United States, among them the Silicon Valley Bank, and Swiss financial institution Credit Suisse. — AFP

Japan govt to spend additional 2 trillion yen to ease inflation pain

JAPAN will spend over two trillion yen ($15 billion) in reserve funds from the state budget for the current business year to March to give cash handouts to low-income families and cut liquefied petroleum gas bills as part of a fresh inflation-relief package, government sources said Monday.

As key pillars of the package expected to be compiled on Wednesday, the government plans to give 30,000 yen to each low-income household and an extra 50,000 yen per child to the same group, the sources said.

The ruling coalition of the Liberal Democratic Party and Komeito has been urging Prime Minister Fumio Kishida to take additional steps to ease the pain of accelerating inflation on households ahead of a series of local elections this spring.

The government will finalize the size of the package in consultation with the ruling parties, the sources said.

"We will draw up additional steps and implement them swiftly to protect people's livelihoods and businesses," Chief Cabinet Secretary Hirokazu Matsuno told a regular press briefing.

Many households in rural Japan use LP gas. The government has already lowered utility bills for households, targeting electricity and city gas, on top of subsidies given to oil wholesalers to keep gasoline and kerosene prices from rising sharply.

The government also handed out cash to low-income, child-rearing families as part of an earlier package. Japan's core consumer prices, which exclude volatile fresh food items, jumped 4.2 per cent from a year earlier in January, marking the fastest pace of gain in about four decades. As higher energy costs, amplified by a weaker yen, have been driving inflation higher, the government has moved to reduce utility bills this year. — Kyodo

European banks are solid, says French central bank chief

FRANCE'S central bank chief sought Monday to distance European and French banks from the problems at Credit Suisse and banking woes in the United States.

Credit Suisse and the banking volatility in the United States "don't concern French and European banks", Francois Villeroy de Galhau, a member of the European Central Bank's governing council, told France Inter radio.

He added that French banks were "very solid" and that "there are no problems for French banks".

He welcomed the takeover of stricken Credit Suisse by fellow Swiss bank UBS which he said would help guarantee "the stability of the whole financial system".

French Economy Minister Bruno Le Maire also welcomed the takeover, saying: "I'm delighted with this deal. It's a good deal."

He added: "At the same time... (Credit Suisse) is a heavyweight in Europe, so we will remain extremely vigilant about the reaction of the markets."

Asian and European stock markets fell on Monday morning, while Credit Suisse's stock price collapsed further, more than 60 per cent below the level UBS had agreed to pay to take it over.

Shares in UBS also took a hit, falling almost nine per cent. UBS agreed to buy its ri-

Europe gas under 40 euros for first time since 2021

EUROPE'S natural gas price slid Monday below 40 euros for the first time in more than a year and a half, dampened by mild weather and high storage levels.

In morning London deals, the price of benchmark Dutch TTF gas hit 39.65 euros per megawatt hour — last seen in July 2021.

Monday's low is almost nine times less than the record high struck after key gas producer Russia invaded Ukraine more than one year ago.

Energy bills remain high for many households and businesses, however, with wholesale costs taking time to filter down to the end consumer.

“We are now more than halfway through... the last winter month, and approaching spring with seasonally much weaker gas demand,” noted DNB Bank analysts.

“Gas inventories are still close to seasonal record levels, and 20 per cent above normal levels.”

Following Moscow's invasion, Western nations have been forced to source gas supplies from outside sanctions-hit Russia, with Norway becoming Europe's main supplier. — AFP

China's foreign trade off to a good start in 2023: official CHINA'S foreign trade has gotten off to a good start this year, with an upbeat trend to follow, a customs official said on Monday.

The number of containers for export has been rising since late February, Yu Jianhua, head of the General Administration of Customs (GAC), told a press conference, addressing recent reports of empty containers piled at Chinese ports that have sparked concerns over trade.

Weekly GAC data shows that trade has been improving since February, according to Yu. Although the foreign trade of goods

Demonstrators call for France’s withdrawal from NATO in Paris

THOUSANDS of demonstrators called over the weekend for France’s withdrawal from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and an immediate halt to arms deliveries to Ukraine.

According to RIA Novosti, the “March for Peace” kicked off near the site of the French Senate. The demonstrators waved banners “Stop the war provoked by the United States and NATO” and “Freedom, Truth, Resistance”.

Many French Internet users have posted photos and videos of this march on social media. “Thousands of people are asking for (France’s) withdrawal from NATO, the EU, and all the organizations that deprive us of our national sovereignty!” said one of the social media users.

An independent Lebanese geopolitical commentator Sarah Abdallah asked on her social media: “why is Western media ignoring the anti-NATO protests happening today in Paris, France?”— Xinhua

US beach city issues state of emergency, curfew after deadly shootings

THE City of Miami Beach, in the US state of Florida, issued a state of emergency and a curfew on Sunday after two deadly shootings.

The city said the curfew will be from 11:59 pm Sunday local time (0359 GMT Monday) until 6 am Monday (1000 GMT). Officials intend to impose similar additional curfew restrictions from Thursday through next Monday.

The measures came after a man died and another man was injured in a shooting in South Beach Friday night, and another deadly shooting in Miami Beach early Sunday morning.

Miami Beach Mayor Dan Gelber said in a video message posted on Sunday that the crowds and presence of firearms have “created a peril that cannot go unchecked”.

A south Florida island city, Miami Beach will hold a special commission meeting on Monday afternoon “to discuss the restrictions beyond Monday,” according to a press release.— Xinhua

Four Ukrainian soldiers killed by shell during training

UKRAINE said Monday that four soldiers were killed over the weekend in an accident at a military training ground in the north of the country.

Ukraine’s State Bureau of Investigation said that according to its preliminary findings, “on 18 March, a shell detonated during routine firing (drills) carried out by a military unit in the Chernigiv region”.

“The explosion killed four soldiers,” it said.

Investigators have opened a probe into possible violations of rules on handling weapons.

The Chernigiv region, an area the size of Belgium, borders both Belarus and Russia to the north.

It was partially taken by the Russian army in the first few weeks of the invasion launched in February 2022, before its forces withdrew in spring last year.

CHINESE President Xi Jinping met his Russian counterpart, Vladimir Putin, on Monday in Moscow.

The two countries share many similar development objectives and can work together via cooperation in this regard so as to push for the realization of those objectives, Xi said while meeting the Russian leader.

The comprehensive strategic partnership of coordination between the two countries has safeguarded the international fairness and justice on the one hand, and promoted common prosperity and development of the two countries on the other, he said.

Xi also thanked Putin for his constant appreciation and support for China’s development. At the invitation of Putin, Xi arrived earlier in the day in the Russian capital for a state visit. — Xinhua

20 years after US invasion, war-scarred Iraq faces uncertain future

IRAQ on Monday marked 20 years since the start of the US-led invasion that toppled dictator Saddam Hussein, but no official celebrations were held.

The oil-rich country remains traumatized from the years of war, occupation and bloody sectarian turmoil that followed the operation launched on 20 March 2003.

A semblance of normalcy has returned but Iraq still battles a range of entrenched challenges, from political instability to poverty and rampant corruption.

Neighbouring Iran, the major Shiite power and arch-foe of the United States, now wields much influence in Iraq, whose Shiite majority was freed from the oppression of Sunni strongman Saddam.

Prime Minister Mo-hamed Shia al-Sudani, who is backed by a pro-Iranian coalition, at an event Sunday did not speak of the US invasion but only of the “fall of the dictatorial regime” of Saddam, who was caught, tried and executed.

At a Baghdad conference on the eve of the anniversary, Sudani said: “We remember the pain and suffering of our people in those years that were dominated by senseless wars and systematic sabotage.”

The government planned no events to mark the anniversary, and Baghdad’s streets on Monday looked busy as ever, with most people more focused on the holy fasting month of Ramadan due to start later this week.

“It’s a painful memory” for the country, said Fadhel Hassan, 23, a journalism student. “There was a lot of destruction and too many victims -- innocent people, Iraqis and American soldiers.”

Only 4% of missile shelters in Japan located underground

ONLY four per cent of emergency evacuation sites designated by local governments in Japan as missile shelters are located underground, with the figure reflecting a lack of buildings with basements in regional areas, a Kyodo News survey showed Sunday.

With North Korea increasing its test-launches of missiles amid increased concern about the security environment in the region, the Japanese government has recommended municipalities increase the number of designated evacuation shelters under the civil protection law, especially those underground, over five years from fiscal 2021.

The Cabinet Office considers underground facilities more effective in reducing air blasts than those on the surface, but a survey of 67 prefectural and major city governments conducted in January and February found that only 2,390 of the total 59,132 were located below ground level.

Akita Prefecture in northeastern Japan had the lowest number at zero, while 17 prefectures had fewer than 10. Tokyo possessed the most underground facilities at 452, followed by Gifu and Ishikawa prefectures, both located in central Japan, with 306 and 176, respectively.

Nineteen prefectures said they increased the number of underground facilities during the current fiscal year, which started last April.

Gifu designated around 300 locations, including underground walkways, as shelters in that year alone. The move "was based on the international situation and national policy" in light of developments in North Korea and the war in Ukraine, a prefectural official in charge of the project said.

When asked about issues faced regarding the designation of underground shelters, the majority of the polled governments cited a lack of facilities.

In addition to the six prefectures in the northeastern Tohoku region and the four located on the western island of Shikoku, major hubs such as Osaka Prefecture and Sapporo city were also included among those who selected the response.

"For regional areas, having underground (shelters) is difficult," an Akita prefectural official said. — Kyodo

Sri Lanka seeks 10-year debt moratorium ahead of IMF bailout

CASH-STRAPPED Sri Lanka is seeking a 10-year moratorium on its foreign debt, President Ranil Wickremesinghe's office said Monday on the eve of a desperately needed $2.9 billion IMF bailout.

Wickremesinghe's office quoted him as saying the widely expected International Monetary Fund rescue "will only give us a breathing space where they will say we are no longer bankrupt".

"All the money we have to repay this year, I hope we will be given at least 10 more years to repay it," Wickremesinghe told a meeting of students in Colombo on Sunday.

He did not give details of his plans to restructure Sri Lanka's $46 billion external debt.

Sri Lanka defaulted on its foreign debt in April 2022 as the country plunged into its worst economic crisis, running out of cash to finance even the most essential imports and causing massive social unrest.

Widespread protests over economic mismanagement, acute shortages of food, fuel and medicines, and runaway inflation forced Wickremesinghe's predecessor Gotabaya Rajapaksa to flee the country and resign in July.

The IMF's executive board was expected to sign off on Colombo's bailout application later on Monday after a long delay in securing financial assurances from China, Sri Lanka's largest bilateral lender. — AFP

Oil from sunken tanker spreads to Philippines' vital marine reserves

THE massive oil leak from a tanker that sank off Oriental Mindoro province last month has reached one of the Philippines' marine reserves and sanctuaries, the Philippine Coast Guard (PCG) said on Monday.

PCG Batangas station commander Captain Victorino Acosta said the oil slick was sighted on Monday morning in the Verde Island Passage between Batangas province on the mainland Luzon, south of Manila, and the northeastern tip of Mindoro island.

The area is a body of water with the highest concentration of coastal fishes, corals, crustaceans, mollusks, sea grasses and mangroves, which is described as one of the global centres of marine biodiversity.

It is also home to endangered and threatened species, including the critically endangered hawksbill turtle, whale sharks, manta rays, dugongs, humphead wrasses, giant groupers and giant clams.— Xinhua
