RESCUE teams stopped their search after the bodies of 33 jade scavengers had been discovered from a landslide, according to the civil society organizations that are involved in rescue efforts.

A sand cliff collapsed at a jade mining site near Manna village in Phakant township on 13 August, injuring eight jade scavengers and leaving nearly 39 people missing. Rescue efforts were started by 13 civil society organizations, discovering 33 bodies as of 16 August and they stopped their search, Ko Thar Gyi, a member of a civil society organization told The Global New Light of Myanmar (GNLM) yesterday.

The incident of the sand cliff collapse happened in the jade working area lake, spanning around 1,000 feet in length, 250 feet in width, and towering over 400 feet in height. The collapse caused the water to surge into the lake, tragically trapping jade miners in the murky waters.

"During four days of search, 33 bodies have been discovered by rescue teams. According to a register of workers, 39 persons were estimated to be working there before the collapse. If the remaining bodies are found, local civil society organizations will arrange for funeral services. Our organization has stopped the search," Ko Thar Gyi told the GNLM. — TWA/TH

MRF, affiliated associations contribute K110 mln to Rakhine State government

MYANMAR Rice Federation (MRF) and its affiliated associations donated K110 million to the Rakhine State government.

A team led by the president of the MRF, including 22 members, visited Sittway from 12 to 14 August. During the trip, they contributed K110 million to the Rakhine State government on 12 August to ramp up rice production, escalate commercialization and assist in the resettlement of the Cyclone Mocha-hit agriculture businesses in Rakhine State.

Furthermore, the Rakhine State's chief minister, regional ministers, department officials, rice millers, traders and farmers discussed the coordination matters during the resettlement activities, market stability, boosting production, development of rice milling and MSMEs in the industry, exportation to Bangladesh, irrigation project from the river, integrated farming and drawing a master plan for the Rakhine State' agriculture and livestock sector.

The prices of other rice varieties are on an upward trend. The prices of old Pawsan rice hit K105,000-110,000 per sack depending on producing areas (Myaungmya, Pathein, Pyapon and other regions), while Pawsan from the Shwebo area touched the highest of K140,000 per sack. The prices stood at K95,000 per bag for Kunni, K69,000 for Ngasein, K69,000 for Aemahta, K95,000 for Pawkywe, K69,000 for rice grown under intercropping system and K107,000 for new Pawsan rice variety, as per the price data released by Myanmar Rice Wholesale Centre (Wahdan).

The MRF, Myanmar Rice Traders Association and exporting companies worked together to sell off the rice from 7 August at Wahdan and Bayintnaung rice wholesale depots to control the price rallies.

The rice prices are set at K110,000-120,000 per sack of Shwebo Pawsan, K94,000-97,000 per sack of Ayeyawady Pawsan, K65,000 per sack of Aemahta variety (10 per cent broken) and K60,000 per sack of Aemahta (25 per cent broken). An individual is entitled to buy one Pawsan rice sack and one low-grade rice sack per month at Wahdan and Bayintnaung rice depots, by presenting the citizenship scrutiny card.

Additionally, civil service personnel, factory and company staff can buy them by contacting the MRF via email: admin@mrf.com.mm with presenting an official letter. For further detail, please contact the MRF

Myanmar has achieved self-sufficiency in rice and only the surplus rice is exported systematically. At present, rice crops are being harvested in the northern Bago Region and central Myanmar Region. With the electricity supply improving, rice mills could run operations fully. Therefore, the production meets the consumption for sure. Nevertheless, those unscrupulous are spreading malicious rumours and fake news to trigger consumers' concerns and spark panic buying. The federation hereby requested the consumers to stop panic buying and buy the rice only if necessary.

Myanmar Rice Federation will endeavour to stabilize the rice price and steer the market for the right price and the right product. The MRF will join hands with the rice millers, rice traders and companies. The federation called on them to balance the short-term and long-term benefits in trading, as per the MRF's notification dated 24 April.

Individuals and family entities can contact the rice wholesale centres for fair prices and the right products. For any difficulties, please contact the office of the MRF, as per the statement.

Myanmar Rice Federation notified on 24 April that tips-off about those manipulators who spread malicious rumours on digital platforms to spark concerns of the consumers and raise the rice prices can be done for the sake of the long-term benefit of the rice industry. The federation will forward the reports of those manipulators to the relevant authorities if they refuse to be persuaded. The MRF encouraged all the stakeholders in the supply chain to exert concerted efforts in this as well. — NN/EM

Enhance road safety:
A global imperative

IN A world fraught with traffic dangers that imperil countless lives, the paramount significance of traffic safety cannot be overstated. Across the globe, an earnest focus on road safety measures is being championed to counteract the scourge of traffic accidents.

The World Health Organization (WHO) recently released a sobering report, revealing that an alarming 1.3 million lives are claimed annually by road accidents worldwide, while over 50 million individuals suffer injuries. Tragically, this toll is steadily mounting year by year.

Historically, road accidents ranked as the eighth leading cause of mortality in the first decade. However, the report projects that this grim statistic might ascend to the third position during the 2020s. Notably, the majority of nations worldwide experience an annual economic setback of three to five per cent of their Gross Domestic Product (GDP) due to road accidents, a fiscal burden for developing countries.

To counter this crisis, the Decade of Action for Road Safety has been enacted, aligned with the five pillars of road safety strategy: road safety management, safer vehicles, enhanced road user behaviour, improved post-crash response, and the creation of safer driving environments. These pillars offer a holistic approach to road safety endorsed by the United Nations, providing a conceptual framework that informs road safety endeavours.

As the world confronts the relentless toll of road accidents, it is incumbent upon societies to champion a collective commitment to road safety. Only through resolute adherence to regulations and a steadfast dedication to creating safer road environments can the harrowing statistics of road accidents be curbed, ultimately preserving precious lives across the globe.

Presently, a comprehensive global plan for the second decade has been devised, augmenting the five pillars with 12 voluntary targets geared towards halving casualties resulting from road and traffic accidents by 2030. Active public involvement remains pivotal in preventing road accidents and ensuring traffic safety.

In Myanmar, the National Road Safety Council (NRSC) is at the vanguard, formulating essential policies and plans to oversee traffic and road safety initiatives. The annual NRSC report underscores that a staggering 94 per cent of traffic accidents stem from human recklessness, compounded by road conditions, designs, and standards.

Right from the inception of road projects, the integration of road safety measures becomes paramount. The installation of pertinent road signs and directional aids assumes heightened importance in fostering road and traffic safety. Consequently, adherence to traffic regulations by the populace should be unwavering, while authorities must redouble their efforts to fortify the safety of road users.

As the world confronts the relentless toll of road accidents, it is incumbent upon societies to champion a collective commitment to road safety. Only through resolute adherence to regulations and a steadfast dedication to creating safer road environments can the harrowing statistics of road accidents be curbed, ultimately preserving precious lives across the globe.

AGEING is an inevitable part of life's journey, and with it comes a unique set of challenges that affect individuals in various ways. One such challenge is the often-overlooked trouble faced by aged individuals. As the body and mind undergo natural changes, seniors must confront physical limitations, cognitive decline, social isolation, and a sense of diminishing independence. However, it is important to recognize that within these struggles lie opportunities for growth, resilience, and the wisdom that only comes with a life well-lived.

Physical Limitations

One of the primary difficulties that aged individuals face is the gradual decline of physical abilities. The body becomes more vulnerable to ailments and diseases, and even simple tasks such as walking, climbing stairs, or carrying groceries can become arduous. Chronic pain, mobility issues, and the risk of falls become daily concerns, altering the way seniors navigate the world.

To address these challenges, it is crucial to prioritize physical well-being. Regular exercise, tailored to individual needs and capabilities, can help improve strength, balance, and flexibility. Moreover, modifications to the living environment, such as installing handrails or non-slip mats, can enhance safety and independence. By adopting a proactive approach to physical health, aged individuals can mitigate the troubles associated with physical limitations and maintain a higher Conditions like Alzheimer's and dementia can cause profound emotional distress and hinder daily functioning. The frustration of forgetting cherished memories, losing track of time, or struggling to articulate thoughts can lead to feelings of isolation and vulnerability.

However, there are strategies to cope with cognitive decline. Mental stimulation, through puzzles, games, or reading, can help maintain cognitive abilities. Building routines and utilizing memory aids, such as calendars or reminder apps, can

Social Isolation

One of the most pressing troubles faced by the aged is the risk of social isolation. As friends and family members age or pass away, social circles tend to diminish, leaving individuals faced by aged individuals. Communities can establish programs that facilitate social engagement, organize events specifically tailored to seniors, and provide transportation services to help them participate in activities outside their homes. Additionally, family members, friends, and neighbors must make an effort to maintain connections with the elderly, whether through regular visits, phone calls, or virtual communication.

Diminishing Independence

A significant psychological challenge faced by aged individuals is the sense of diminishing independence. Tasks that were once routine and effortless may now require assistance, eroding self-esteem and creating a feeling of helplessness. This loss of autonomy can lead to frustration and a loss of purpose, contributing to mental and emotional distress.

Recognizing the importance of social interaction, it is vital for society to address the isolation and Finding Strength

among the elderly. Community centers, senior clubs, and local organizations can organize social events, group activities, and educational programs specifically tailored to their needs. Encouraging intergenerational interactions, where young and old can learn from one another, can also foster a sense of belonging and purpose for aged persons.

Establish Supportive Care Services

Providing adequate care services is essential for aiding the troubles of aged individuals. This includes both in-home care and residential facilities. Society should support initiatives that offer home assistance, allowing elderly individuals to age in the comfort of their own homes while receiving necessary help with daily tasks, medical care, and companionship. Additionally, well-designed and well-staffed residential care facilities can provide a supportive and safe environment for those requiring more comprehensive care.

tate intergenerational programs where young individuals volunteer or assist older adults. This not only helps the aged persons with tasks they may find challenging but also nurtures empathy, respect, and understanding among younger generations.

Raise Awareness and Sensitize Society:

To aid the troubles of aged persons, it is crucial to raise awareness about their challenges and sensitize society to their needs. Educational campaigns, public forums, and media initiatives can highlight the issues faced by the elderly, promote empathy, and challenge ageist stereotypes. By fostering a culture that values and respects the contributions of aged individuals, we can create a society that prioritizes their well-being and recognizes the importance of their wisdom and experience.

The trouble of an aged person encompasses physical limitations, cognitive decline, social isolation, and diminishing independence. However, through a combination of support, understanding, and proactive measures, these challenges can be mitigated, enabling aged individuals to lead fulfilling lives.

As a society, we must recognize the immense value and wisdom that seniors bring. By creating inclusive communities that prioritize the well-being and inclusion of aged individuals, we can harness their experiences and knowledge to enrich our collective lives. Ultimately, the troubles faced by the elderly can be transformed into opportunities for growth, resilience, and intergenerational harmony.

Aiding the troubles of aged persons requires a collective effort from society. By promoting age-friendly infrastructure, enhancing social connections, establishing supportive care services, encouraging lifelong learning, fostering intergenerational support, and raising awareness, we can create a society that supports and values its elderly population. Therefore, it will be crucial to work together and build a compassionate and inclusive society that ensures the well-being and dignity of aged individuals as they navigate the challenges of aging.

Encourage Lifelong Learning

Cognitive decline is a common trouble faced by the elderly. By promoting lifelong learning opportunities, society can help maintain cognitive abilities and mental well-being. Community education programs, workshops, and online courses tailored for seniors can stimulate their minds, provide intellectual engagement, and foster a sense of accomplishment. Creating platforms where older individuals can share their knowledge and skills with younger generations can also contribute to intergenerational understanding and bridge the generation gap.

Foster Intergenerational Support

Intergenerational support is vital for aiding the troubles of aged persons. Encouraging interactions and connections between different age groups can create a mutually beneficial environment. Schools, universities, and community organizations can facilitate aging population.

Promote Age-Friendly Infrastructure

Creating age-friendly environments is crucial to aid the troubles of aged persons. This involves designing cities and communities that are accessible and accommodating to individuals with varying physical abilities. Implementing ramps, handrails, and wider sidewalks can facilitate mobility, while well-lit public spaces and seating areas can provide rest stops for older individuals. Additionally, public transportation systems should be designed to accommodate the needs of the elderly, ensuring ease of travel and accessibility to essential services.

Enhance Social Connections

Social isolation is a significant concern for aged individuals, often leading to loneliness and a decline in mental well-being. To address this issue, society must actively promote social connections

Plus-size movement reshapes fashion in Brazil

DEFYING the fashion world’s narrow stereotype of beauty, Brazilian plus-size designer Amanda Momente poses confidently for the camera, wearing the clothing label she founded after failing to find other options that fit. More than half of all adults in Brazil are overweight, but Momente is part of a growing movement of entrepreneurs, activists and models who are fed up with a fashion industry they say fails to fit their needs and shames them for their bodies.

“Society judged me based on one thing, so I took that thing and used it... to launch my business,” says Momente, 34, dressed in a sheer black bodysuit created by Wondersize, the company she founded in 2017.

The former real-estate agent, who sports a pink mohawk and multiple tattoos, got the idea after feeling uncomfortable at the gym in clothes she says were too tight, turned transparent when stretched or bunched up around her thighs.

More than 50 per cent of Brazilian adults are overweight. A movement, including individuals like Momente, consisting of entrepreneurs, activists, and models, is gaining momentum. PHOTO: WONDERSIZE/INSTAGRAM

She decided to find a seamstress to help her make her own workout outfit.

It turned out so well she quit her day job and plunged headfirst into the fashion world, she says. The rise of colourful, stylish clothes for Brazilians with large bodies is part of a broader international trend rejecting unrealistic standards of beauty, especially for women.

“The fashion industry needs to fit our bodies, not the other way around,” says Momente.

‘Identity and dignity’

Major brands tend to dedicate at most a small portion of their lines to clothing in larger sizes, leaving “repressed” demand, says Marcela Liz, head of the Brazil Plus Size Association.

Chinese project places over 120 languages, dialects under protection

A Chinese language resource protection project launched in 2015 has completed research and protection work at over 1,700 sites in its first phase in China, covering more than 120 languages and dialects of the country, the Ministry of Education said Wednesday at a press conference in Henan Province.

A series of books about the languages and dialects of different ethnic minorities and places in China, as well as the related cultural phenomena, have been published under the project, said Tian Lixin, head of the ministry’s department of language information management. The project concluded its first phase in 2019 and started its second phase in 2021. — Xinhua

Piano great Argerich scraps more concerts over illness

PIANO virtuoso Martha Argerich has cancelled further concerts in Austria and Germany in August due to illness, organizers of the events said Wednesday.

The 82-year-old musician, considered one of the world’s best pianists, was scheduled to play a series of concerts with the West-Eastern Divan Orchestra conducted by Argentinian-Israeli maestro Daniel Barenboim.

Last week she scrapped two of the planned engagements but kept two concerts in Salzburg and Berlin on the programme.

“The pianist had hoped for a recovery soon,” the West-Eastern Divan Orchestra said.

But Argerich has now also dropped the remaining appearances “for health reasons”.

German pianist Igor Levit is taking her place at the concerts.

No details were provided about Argerich’s illness.

Dubbed the “lioness” for her impressive long, grey mane of hair, Argerich was born on 5 June 1941 in Buenos Aires and began playing the piano at the age of three.

She gave her first concert with an orchestra aged eight.

She moved to Europe with her family in 1955, learning from some of the continent’s top pianists.

At the age of 16, in the space of 10 days, she won two major music competitions in Bolzano, Italy and in Geneva, later becoming a naturalized Swiss citizen. — AFP

Push to free chained elephants at Hanoi zoo

LEGS in iron chains and unable to roam freely, the treatment of two elderly elephants at the Hanoi public zoo has drawn outrage in Viet Nam, with animal rights groups demanding the pair be relocated.

The groups are calling for the two female elephants — Thai and Banang — to be released to a national park, and close to 70,000 people have signed an online petition in support.

State media has also covered the story widely in recent weeks.

This morning, the pair’s legs were in chains as zookeepers fed them grass and sugarcane, AFP journalists observed.

“The elephants are quite fierce. With a broken electric fence, we had to chain them,” a zoo staff member told AFP on the condition of anonymity.

Zoo director Le Si Dung, however, has characterised the push to free the animals as “illogical”, according to state media.

“The two elephants, aged 60-70 years old, have been at our zoo for more than 10 years... They will die if they are put back to nature as they do not know how to seek food or protect themselves,” Dung was quoted as saying by the Dan Tri news site. — AFP

Action plan to boost China’s rural-region commerce

A three-year action plan released by the Chinese government will inject new economic vitality into the nation’s vast rural regions through efforts to boost local commerce activities.

At a government press conference held Tuesday, officials of multiple ministries spoke of the measures and targets under the plan, seeking to strengthen the commerce system across the nation’s counties to improve rural farmers’ income and upgrade their consumption trends.

Li Gang, an official with the Ministry of Commerce, said that the central government would continue funding counties to improve the local commerce networks and logistics distribution system and innovate and upgrade township business centers, bazaars, township markets, and village convenience stores.

funding will also support digital-ization and chain-store venture by rural business entities and encourage qualified rural areas to explore and develop smart logistics, instant retail, and other new business models.

“In terms of improving the supply of high-quality agricultural products, the action plan proposes to improve the quality of these product supplies, enhance the commercialization of agricultural products, and accelerate the establishment of agricultural brands,” Li said.

Song Danyang, an official with the Ministry of Agriculture and Rural Affairs, specified that the ministry would support local counties’ efforts to enhance the competitiveness of their agricultural brands. “From production to circulation and to consumption, we will promote improved seed varieties, quality improvement, brand building, and standardized production, strengthen the basic infrastructure facilities such as distribution centres, and facilities for processing, warehousing, packaging, and cold chains,” Song said. — Xinhua

Bank of Ireland apologizes for ‘free money’ tech glitch

The bank warned customers that withdrawals and transfers, including those over normal limit. PHOTO: AFP

BANK of Ireland apologized on Wednesday after fixing a technical issue that allowed customers to withdraw or transfer more money than was in their accounts.

The glitch saw large queues form at some cash machines on Tuesday and into the night, as word spread on social media, prompting police to be called in.

Some reports said customers with no money in their accounts were able to withdraw up to 1,000 euros ($1,100).

The bank warned customers that withdrawals and transfers, including those over normal limits, would be debited from accounts, potentially tipping them into costly overdrafts. — AFP

July foreign entries to Japan at 2.3 mln, 78% of pre-pandemic level

JAPAN saw an estimated 2,320,600 foreign visitors in July, the highest number since arrivals began to plummet due to the COVID-19 pandemic and about 78 per cent of the level in July 2019 before the outbreak, government data showed Wednesday.

The figure was up 16-fold from a year before and topped two million people for the second straight month as schools across many countries entered the summer holidays and Japan’s eased COVID-related border restrictions continued to attract travellers, the Japan National Tourism Organization said. Even excluding visitors from China, where restrictions on Japan-bound group travel for its citizens had been in place until last week, the number was 3.4 per cent higher than in July 2019. — Kyodo

Aldi to buy 400 supermarkets in US Southeast

DISCOUNT supermarket chain Aldi announced Wednesday a deal to purchase 400 grocery stores across the south-eastern United States, expanding its footprint as inflation tests American consumers. Under a deal with Southeastern Grocers, Aldi, the American affiliate of the German company, will acquire Winn-Dixie and Harveys supermarkets across Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana and Mississippi.

“The time was right to build on our growth momentum and help residents in the Southeast save on their grocery bills,” said Jason Hart, chief executive of Aldi’s US operations.

“The transaction supports our long-term growth strategy across the United States, including plans to add 120 new stores nationwide this year to reach a total of more than 2,400 stores by year-end.”

UK annual inflation drops under seven per cent

BRITAIN’S annual inflation rate dropped sharply in July to below seven per cent, official data revealed Wednesday, off the back of lower energy prices and in line with economists’ expectations.

The Consumer Prices Index rose by an annual rate of 6.8 per cent, down from 7.9 per cent in June, the Office for National Statistics said in a statement.

The CPI rate is the lowest in 15 months, and met the predictions of analysts, including the Bank of England, which had forecast that rate of growth for July.

However, the UK’s inflation rate has for months remained the highest among G7 nations despite the bank hiking its key interest rate more than a dozen times since late 2021 in a bid to tame it.

Although there was a fall in gas and electricity prices in July, food prices continued to rise, but less quickly than the same month a year earlier.

Prime Minister Rishi Sunak has set a target of halving inflation through this year to around five per cent by the end of 2023. — AFP

Ancient ritual rolled out as festival begins

The annual Shoton Festival kicked off Wednesday in Lhasa, China's Tibet, with an unrolling ceremony of a large Thangka painting of the Buddha.

THOUSANDS of residents formed long lines in Lhasa on Wednesday to visit a giant thangka exhibition — religious images embroidered in silk — to mark the beginning of the annual Shoton, or Yogurt Festival.

The festival, held in the Drepung Monastery, is one of the most important traditional holidays in the capital of the Tibet autonomous region. It is also known as Yogurt Festival, as sho is yogurt in Tibetan, and ton means banquet.

The event usually lasts for seven days, and the activities include artistic performances, Tibetan operas, horse racing, Tibetan chess competitions and concerts, along with activities to promote investment in Lhasa.

At around 7 am, monks from the Drepung Monastery started the preparatory work for the exhibition by transporting a giant thangka to the site.

Before the thangka was moved, a Tibetan Buddhist religious ceremony was held at the monastery.

At around 8 am, as the first rays of sunlight hit the summits of the distant mountains in the Lhasa valley, the giant thangka was gradually unfolded from top to bottom — its width reaching 37 metres and height 40 metres.

Israel says US okays ‘landmark’ missile defence deal with Germany

ISRAEL said the United States on Thursday approved the “landmark” sale of the Arrow 3 hypersonic missile defence system to Germany, in the country’s biggest military deal worth $3.5 billion.

The Arrow 3 system — an interceptor designed to shoot down ballistic missiles above the Earth’s atmosphere — is jointly developed and produced by the Israel and the United States.

Israel’s defence ministry said in a statement the US

State Department had notified it of the US government’s approval for Germany to procure the Arrow 3 system.

“The Israeli Ministry of Defence, German Federal Ministry of Defence, and Israel Aerospace Industries will sign the landmark $3.5 billion defence agreement, marking Israel’s largest ever defence deal,” it said.

The ministry said senior officials from the Israeli and German defence ministries would sign a letter of commitment to the deal with a preliminary payment of $600 million.

Israeli Defence Minister Yoav Gallant, quoted in the statement, called the agreement “the largest in Israel’s history”.

“This is a significant decision, which will contribute to Israel’s force buildup and economy,” he said.

“It is also particularly meaningful to every Jewish person, that Germany is acquiring Israeli defence capabilities.” — AFP

Nicaragua seizes Jesuit university

The Jesuit Central American University (UCA) of Nicaragua announced the suspension of all its activities after a court ordered the confiscation of its assets and funds after accusing it of being a “centre of terrorism”. PHOTO: AFP

A Jesuit university in Nicaragua said Wednesday it is suspending classes and all other activities after the leftist government announced the seizure of all its assets, accusing the school of terrorism.

The Central American University in Managua said the punishment stems from unfounded reports that it “operated as a terrorism center, organizing delinquent groups” during anti-government protests in 2018 that left more than 300 people dead.

The government’s National University Council said it was working to keep classes going at the Jesuit school.

‘How to win graciously’:
Sportsmanship melts hearts at World Cup

UNLESS there is an uncharacteristic outbreak of hostility and flurry of red cards in Sunday’s final, opposing players consoling each other after games will be among the enduring images of the Women’s World Cup.

England, who face Spain in the final in Sydney, have been notably quick to approach their emotional opponents after the final whistle to offer a heartwarming hug and words of sympathy.

The European champions dealt out some rough treatment to Australia’s skipper Sam Kerr in defeating the co-hosts 3-1 in their semi-final on Wednesday in front of 75,000 in Sydney.

But after the final whistle the Lionesses players and staff consoled an emotional Kerr, who plays in England for Chelsea and is one of the most respected forwards around.

Super Cup success does not mask cracks in Man City’s facade

MANCHESTER City’s treble winners have added more silverware to their collection, but a UEFA Super Cup victory over Sevilla only exposed some cracks in Pep Guardiola’s squad ahead of another demanding campaign.

Sevilla had begun their campaign last weekend with a disappointing 2-1 home defeat to Valencia and finished 12th in La Liga last season.

But the Europa League winners should have picked up another European trophy in Athens.

Youssef En-Nesyri’s header powered the Spaniards into a first-half lead, but the Moroccan was guilty of missing two huge chances when one-on-one with Ederson after the break.

Chudit Wanpraphao again scored at 32 minutes to set two goals at the top of the scoreboard at the end of the first half. Myanmar played more aggressively in the second half but Thailand stayed perfect.

In a first, Ecuador to vote in referendum on oil drilling in the Amazon

IN AN unusual example of climate democracy, it is Ecuadorians who will decide what is more important, drilling for oil or protecting the Amazon, in a closely watched referendum on Sunday. The drilling is taking place in the Yasuni National Park, one of the most diverse biospheres in the world, and home to three of the world's last uncontacted Indigenous populations. It began in 2016 after years of fraught debate and failed efforts by then president

Rafael Correa to persuade the international community to pay cash-strapped Ecuador $3.6 billion not to drill there. After years of demands for a referendum, the country's highest court authorized the vote in May to decide the fate of

This controversial drilling initiative began in 2016 after unsuccessful attempts by former President Rafael Correa to secure $3.6 billion from the international community to prevent it.

“block 43,” which contributes 12 per cent of the 466,000 barrels per day produced by Ecuador. The government of outgoing President Guillermo Lasso has estimated a loss of $16 billion over the next 20 years if drilling is halted. “The Yasuni has been like a mother to the world... We need to raise our voices and hands so that our mother can recover, that she is not injured, that she is not beaten,” said Alicia Cahuiya, a Waorani leader born in the heart of the jungle. The reserve is home to the Waorani and Kichwa tribes, as well as the Tagaeri, Taromenane and Dugakaeri, who choose to live isolated from the modern world. Cahuiya said the reserve was “a lung for the world”, capturing carbon dioxide and pumping out oxygen and water vapor. — AFP

German storm causes flight cancellations, floods

GERMANY'S biggest airport was today scrambling to book passengers on new flights after a massive storm caused dozens of cancellations, and also triggered flooding that deluged streets and toppled trees. The storm swept over southwest Germany late yesterday, dumping huge quantities of water and reportedly unleashing over 25,000 bolts of lightning in about an hour. Frankfurt Airport said it was forced to axe 90 flights while 23 more were rerouted to land at other airports. ‘Silent threat’: Bahrain to build walls against rising sea

ALREADY battling extreme heat, Bahrain is scrambling to ward off another environmental threat: rising seas that could swallow parts of its coast, the island nation's oil and environment minister told AFP. By next year, the tiny Gulf state will begin building its coastal defences against sea levels that have begun advancing, by widening beaches, constructing taller sea walls and elevating land. “Bahrain is vulnerable,” Mohamed bin Mubarak bin Daina, Bahrain's oil and environment minister and special envoy for climate affairs, said in an interview. “The main threat is a silent threat, which is the sea level rise,” he said at his office in the capital Manama. According to official estimates, an extreme rise of five metres (16.4 feet) would swamp most of the country, including its international airport.

Most of its population and major facilities are located in low-lying coastal areas less than five metres above the water.
