Strive for all-round development of mothers and children

Placing emphasis on public health, the government is promoting public health care with a national outlook. Health educative campaigns are being extensively launched for all the people to be able to enjoy good health and longevity.

More than 60 per cent of the nation's population is mothers and children. Myanmar Maternal and Child Welfare Association was formed on 30 April, 1991 with the aim of looking after the health of mothers and children. Now, the association has over 20,000 branches across the nation at different levels with more than 12 million members.

Under the aegis of MMCWA, Nutrition Week activities are being carried out seasonally. The Health Department and the people are participating in campaigns for breastfeeding, nourishing of children under five, pregnant women and breastfeeding mothers, and elimination of iodine deficiency.

Over-nutrition and malnutrition can affect the health of every person, including mothers and children. MMCWA is educating the whole nation to know the nutrition of mothers and children. It is also taking part in cooperative measures for vaccination, disease prevention, environmental sanitation, school health and taking care of mothers and children.

MMCWA is standing as a national voluntary force, giving a hand to implementing the health, education, economic and social tasks of the people including mothers and children.

The nation is striving to improve the socio-economy of each and ever family based on the health of mothers and children. With the concerted efforts of MMCWA members, health staff and the people, healthy, intellectual human resources will emerge.

The district headquarters houses police and other officials. The drill aims to display Iran's prowess in defending the country's territory and carries the message of "peace and friendship" for regional countries, Sayyari was quoted as saying.

Bear Stearns Execs say firm's collapse unavoidable

WASHINGTON, 5 May—As a special panel delves into the financial crisis, the executives who led Bear Stearns Cos. before the big Wall Street firm's implosion two years ago are saying they did all they could to keep it afloat before it fell victim to an unstoppable run on the bank.

James Cayne, who was Bear Stearns' CEO until January 2008, and Alan Schwartz, who succeeded him for a few months, are to testify Wednesday before the bipartisan panel investigating the roots of the crisis.

The firm's collapse "was due to overwhelming market forces that Bear Stearns ... could not resist," Cayne said in his testimony prepared for the hearing.

Bear Stearns was the first Wall Street bank to blow up in the recent crisis, caught in the credit crunch in early 2008 and foreshadowing the cascading financial meltdown in the fall of that year.

Two of Bear Stearns' hedge funds failed in June 2007 as a result of bad bets on the subprime mortgage market, costing investors $1.8 billion and touching off the domino chain that brought the firm to the brink in March 2008.

The congressionally chartered Financial Crisis Inquiry Commission, which has been holding a series of hearings on the causes of the crisis, is looking at Bear Stearns as a case history of what it calls the "shadow" banking system — a network of financial institutions and markets operating outside of the regulatory structure.—Internet

Consumers 'took a breather' in April

NEW YORK, 5 May—Consumers bought less clothing and footwear in April than they did in the same month last year but opened their wallets for electronics, major appliances and status goods, purchase data released Wednesday show.

The month's rainy weather contributed to mixed results, including a sharp increase in online sales, according to the latest numbers from MasterCard Advisors' SpendingPulse.

It was the ninth-straight month that online sales rose compared with a year earlier. The figures, which include transactions in all forms including cash, signal that spending is recovering but remained sensitive in April to one-time factors. Another factor dampening April's sales was a drop in tourism resulting from travel restrictions after Iceland's volcanic eruption, said Michael McNamara, vice president of research and analysis for SpendingPulse. He said spending is stabilizing and there wasn't any broad-based heavy discounting.

Surging food prices to drive CPI in April

BEIJING, 5 May—Surging food prices and the strong economic rebound may trigger a record surge in China's Consumer Price Index (CPI) during April, analysts said on Tuesday.

The key inflation gauge may increase by around 2.8 percent year on year in April, 0.4 percentage points higher than that of March. During February, the CPI grew by 2.7 percent — the fastest clip in 15 months.

Though the gauge did show a 0.7 percent decline on a month-to-month basis in March, analysts said that it would increase in April.

The National Bureau of Statistics is expected to issue April's economic data on 11 May.

Dong Xian'an, chief macroeconomic analyst with Industrial Securities, expects the CPI to rise by 2.8 percent in April, driven by a possible 5.5 percent year-on-year hike in food prices during the same time.

Agricultural food prices rose 5 percent between 29 March and 25 April compared with the same period a year back. The increase was led by a 32.3 percent surge in vegetable prices, and a 4.2 percent and 6.6 percent hike in egg and fishery product prices, according to data from the Ministry of Commerce. Some analysts said rising pork prices would also spur an increase in the CPI.

Stomach cancer up in young, white adults

CHICAGO, 5 May—Scientists are puzzling over a surprising increase in stomach cancer in young white adults, while rates in all other American adults have declined. Chances for developing stomach cancer are still very low in young adults but the incidence among 25 to 39 year old whites nonetheless climbed by almost 70 percent in the past three decades, a study found. National Cancer Institute researchers and colleagues examined new cases from 1977 to 2006 of cancer in the lower stomach, which can be caused by chronic infection with a common bacteria called H. pylori. It also causes stomach ulcers. Overall, there were 39,003 cases detected in a surveillance program that covers about one-fourth of the US population.

These included only 734 white young adults, but their incidence rate climbed from .54 per 200,000 to about 1 per 200,000. Among white adults aged 25 to age 84, the rate declined from almost 12 per 200,000 to 8 per 200,000; among black adults it declined from about 27 per 200,000 to 19 per 200,000. Rates also declined for other races, which weren't specified.—Internet

Telekom Austria turns phone boxes into car recharging stations

VIENNA, 5 May— If you've run out of juice for your environmentally friendly electric car, a recharge may be only a phone call away, literally, under a new scheme unveiled by Telekom Austria here Tuesday.

The telecommunications company has decided to turn its public telephone boxes — which are in danger of becoming obsolete anyway thanks to mobile phones — into battery recharging stations for electric cars.

Admittedly, the scheme is still in its infancy: there are just 223 electric cars currently registered in Austria at the moment, plus 3,559 hybrid cars, from a total 4.36 million cars on Austrian roads.

But the Austrian motor vehicle association VOEC is predicting that the number will rise to 405,000 by 2020.

In a bid to find new uses for its 13,500 phone boxes around the country, Telekom Austria has therefore come up with the idea of turning them into recharging stations for electric vehicles: cars, scooters and bicycles.

Telekom Austria chief Hannes Ametsreiter unveiled the first such phone box in front of the company's headquarters in Vienna on Tuesday.

And the aim is to convert 29 more phone boxes by the end of this year, Ametsreiter told journalists. “In the longer run, we'll have to sound out the market to see exactly how many phone boxes will be converted,” the telecom chief said. —Internet

Chemicals used to fight Gulf oil slick a trade-off

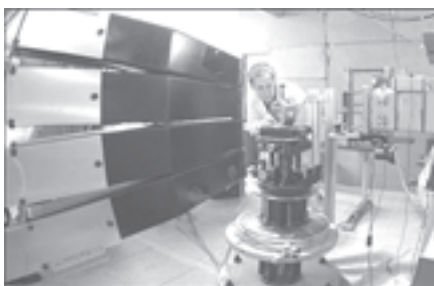

ROBERT, 5 May—A massive oil leak in the Gulf of Mexico has become the testing ground for a new technique where a potent mix of chemicals is shot deep undersea in an effort to stop oil from reaching the surface, and scientists are hurriedly weighing the ecological risks and benefits.

Crews battling the spill already have dropped more than 156,000 gallons of the concoction — a mix of chemicals collectively known as “dispersant” — to try to break up the oozing oil, allowing it to decompose more quickly or evaporate before washing ashore.

The technique has been undergone two tests in recent days that the US Coast Guard is calling promising, and there are plans to apply even more of the chemicals.

Inside Russia's 'nanotech park'

Russia wants to turn the fruits of research into real-world products. —INTERNET

MOSCOW, 5 May— With Russian science not at its best since the break-up of the USSR, Moscow is now attempting to follow an example from its Soviet past.

It plans to co-operate with nations from the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) — made up of former Soviet republics — in the areas of nanotechnology and innovation.

An organization with a grand-sounding name, International Innovative Nan-otechnology Centre (IINC) of the CIS countries, has been set up in Dubna, just outside Moscow.

The place is intended to propel Russian science to the heights it once enjoyed, by turning the fruits of pure research by scientists in the former Soviet states into real-life products

This year, Russia has assumed the rotating presidency of the CIS and declared 2010 a year of science and innovation in the territory uniting eleven of the former Soviet republics.

These are: Armenia, Azerbaijan, Belarus, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Moldova, Russia, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine and Uzbekistan.

But observers note that the CIS has always been a rather symbolic organisation, incapable of delivering any real results, and the establishment of the new centre is “more about appearance than substance”.

Phantasmal' bioweapon drug-sweat microfrogs bred in UK

Rumours persist that when their darts ran out, Ecuadorian blowgunners would sometimes simply shoot frogs at the Conquistadores.

INTERNET

LONDON, 5 May—Tiny, exceptionally toxic “phantasmal frogs” — of a type used by jungle-dwelling blowgunners to poison their darts — have reproduced in captivity for the first time at a Portsmouth aquarium, in a triumph for British batrachian-breeding boffinry.

The <1cm Phantasmal poison frog, aka Epipedobates tricolor, is native to the western Andean slopes of Bolívar province in Ecuador. They are part of a group of amphibians known as “poison dart” or “poison arrow” frogs, from their supposed use by locals to produce bioweapon-coated projectiles of various sorts*.

E tricolor is of interest to scientists as it sweats a chemical called Epibatidine, potentially a painkiller 200 times as strong as morphine. According to Jenna MacFarlane of Portsmouth's Blue Reef Aquarium, Epibatidine painkillers could also avoid “addiction and other serious side effects”.

But the diminutive drug-sweat dartgun frogs are becoming increasingly scarce in the wild, now being found in only seven places in Bolivia.

“These beautiful frogs are under increasing threat in the wild due to loss of habitat and pollution and we are delighted to have been able to breed them successfully here in Portsmouth,” MacFarlane tells the Beeb today.

“It's imperative we are able to mimic exactly their wild environment in order for the species to thrive in captivity and it's a real achievement they are breeding so successfully,” she enthuses.

Science

With sharp ears, sharp eyes, sharp minds...

An observer

Studying Myanmar's history in the post-independence period, it can be found that multi-coloured insurgents, expatriate insurgents and some organizations in the name of so-called political parties used to commit terrorist acts to get their nation and people into trouble whenever they failed politically or militarily.

These are much in evidence in the history. Places and organizations may be changed but terrorist attempts will be the same as usual. They continue to commit acts of terrorism.

Burma Communist Party (Red Flag) came to find fault with the local people when it had to retreat again and again because of the Tatmadaw's offensive. Realizing their ulterior motive, the local people were against the party. Shouting for the public interest, the red flag communists captured and brutally killed over 70 people of Hsinswe Village, Pakokku Township, with sticks and swords. They even threatened to kill all the people of the village if the latter were against them.

BCP (White Flag) did the same. It adopted the policy of winning over every war, formed troops and built power. Losing every war, it started killing the local farmers and people in Paukhaung region of Bago Division by accusing them of being government's supporters. And it has been common knowledge.

KNU and KNDO are also notorious for their acts. They brutally killed the rural people set fire to whole villages in the delta region, and blew up passenger trains. Hundreds or thousands of travelling people died because of them. What's more, they attempted to blaze the whole Yangon city by storing a great deal of fuel. But this was thwarted in time by authorities concerned. It was KNU that blasted a train carrying university girl students on their way home for summer holiday, captured and sold them to Chinese Nationalist Kuomintang intruders.

SSA-S was active and cruel in Shan State. It set fire to the whole Meethwaygon village and Pantawi village and committed murder. Its members not only robbed a convoy of passenger buses but also raped the women on board.

This is an act showing the difference between their words and deeds. Such terrorist groups put people's lives at risk by saying big words of proletariat revolution, democracy promotion and people's liberation. The national people, who suffered for over 40 years, have developed anti-insurgent spirit. They crushed any insurgents. The insurgents could not bear the strategic war waged by the people and the Tatmadaw.

That was why destructionist politicians adopted the strategy related to underground and aboveground and outside the country after 1988. Insurgents of BCP, the Red Flag, KNU and SSA-S rose against the government as underground political parties. They failed to form aboveground political parties. They had no time to trick the people.

In the era of Burma Socialist Programme Party, an exiled group of U Nu and U Law Yon emerged. They did not have an aboveground party either. But the group did have contact with some powerful nations. It can be said that it had ties with the international community. The exiled group trained operatives at the border and sent them to the country to commit subversive acts. Yet, the people did not surrender to their terrorist acts at all. They did not accept it either. At last, the people collaborated with authorities concerned in order that the terrorists could not set foot in the country.

It has been more than 20 years since the above-mentioned underground political parties (insurgent groups), exiled political parties (exiled insurgent groups) and legally formed aboveground political parties tricked the people.

It was a vivid example that the expatriate insurgents namely NLD (LA), NCGUB, DPNS, ABSDF, FTUB and NCUB have been committing destructive acts for over 20 years. The NLD (LA) or National League for Democracy (Liberated Area) was formed by NLD expatriates. The NCGUB was also formed with expatriate representatives-elect of NLD and former National Democracy Party. Likewise, the DPNS is a group organized by expatriates of old New Society Democratic Party. These groups do not carry out pro-democracy activities on their own policies. They all are anti-government groups supporting and representing a well-known aboveground political party that exists till today.

Their tactics are similar to those of the former expatriate group led by U Nu and U Law Yon. They made contact with international puppeteers to act as lackeys accepting assistance and following their directives. The groups operate in line with political maneuvers of the party that they support in the country. They sent bombers to blow up bombs in public in order to cause disorder. Initially, they blew up a bomb at Zawgyi House Restaurant near Bogyoke Market in Yangon on 20-12-2004 and another in the compound of Parami Bus Terminal in South Okkalapa on 17-3-2005. After that, they committed brutal terrorist acts that were beyond imagination. On 7 May 2005, they simultaneously rocked three busy places in Yangon with bombs, leaving 23 monks and people dead and 150 others wounded.

Actually, these terrorist attacks are their political attacks to make demands and political tricks to organize the people. But the people who are clever enough to understand their political maneuvers do not allow themselves to be swayed. The people totally neglect them. Therefore, they committed direct attacks against the public.

Myanmar where the majority of people are Buddhists does not accept or tolerate terrorist acts. But, Myanmar people have sympathy. Terrorist will ridicule us if we the Myanmar people think that they (the terrorists) will not target religious festivals, traditional cultural festivals and the public.

In fact, internal and external absconders are under the domination of the political party which made evil remarks that the Buddha was an ordinary person; and that as the term Bamar was changed to Myanmar, the term Buddha should be replaced with Muddha.

On 23 January 1988, the insurgents opened fire with heavy weapons and small arms at the platform of Kyaikhtyoe Pagoda, leaving five pilgrims dead and 16 wounded.

On 25 December 1996, a time-bomb exploded at the ceremony to pay homage to the sacred Buddha Tooth Relic in Maha Pasana Cave of Kaba Aye Pagoda. A total of five monks and people died and 18 persons were wounded in the incident.

On 15 April 2002 (Akyat Day of Maha Thingyan Festival), the blast of time-bomb killed five people on the spot and wounded 31 persons in Myawady.

On 16 April 2010 (Akyat Day of Maha Thingyan Festival), three bombs exploded in front of a water throwing pandal near Kandawgyi Lake in Yangon. The blasts left 10 people dead and nearly 170 persons wounded.

It was a cliché idea and act used by terrorist insurgent groups under the so-called banner of democracy, whenever they face decline in political and military fronts and public opposition.

Now, they have lost hopes and are in a state of decline. Therefore, they will not be reluctant to commit every form of attacks anywhere at any time.

In fact, an enemy pretending to be a friend is the most dangerous in the world. I would like to highlight the fact that only when all the people are vigilant and ready to conscientiously expose the activities of anti-government terrorist groups and completely wipe them out, will the entire people enjoy fruits of peace and stability.

“When the power plant was built in 1954, I was a child. The power plant gave light or development to the local people. Thanks to the power plant, the villages and wards have developed gradually. In the past, there was cart tracks in the region. Since 2004-2005, the region has been gaining development momentum. Now, the local people drive motorbikes and other vehicles conveniently,” explained U Aung Kyi.

Lawpita Village-tract has one station hospital, one Basic Education High School, one BEMS, one post-primary school and five BEPSs in addition to private-owned sawmills, rice mills and oil mills.

While in the village, I visited a rice mill of U Mee Yei (a) U Nyo Me. It was built at a cost of K 4 million and it started operation on 1 January 2010.

Lawpita Model Village that is located four miles from Loikaw, has one rural dispensary, one post-primary school, one TV retransmission station, one rural library and one monastery. According to the statistics in 2009-2010, a total of 867 people from 224 houses

Strong winds leaves loss and damage

NAY PYI TAW, 5 May—Some loss and damage were caused by strong winds in Magway Division on 3 and 4 May evening.

Strong winds blew off roofs of a primary school and some houses in Shandon village of Bahin village-tract in Myaing Township, Pakokku District on 3 May.

In Magway, strong winds and heavy rains fell down five lamp-posts, causing electricity outage. Officials of township electrical engineer's office carried out repairs for normal power supply. On 4 May, strong winds blew off roofs of 33 houses in wards 1, 2 and 3 in Minhla, collapsed some houses in Wards 1 and 3 and Latpanbin jetty.

The damage of communications towers by strong winds caused telephone disconnection and the fallen lamp-posts led to power outage. The department concerned has remained the people to be aware of strong winds that can occur some times during this season.—MNA

Secretary of Village-tract PDC U Kyi Tin, a retired employee of Biluchaung No. 2 Hydropower Plant, recounted his bitter experiences. He said, “Around 1960-1970, we faced difficulties to discharge night duty at the plant due to lack of security.”

While visiting the rural dispensary, we learned that Health Assistant Daw San Myint disseminated health knowledge to the local people.

I also visited

Lawpita Village Hospital (16-bed). I met Station Hospital Officer Dr Daw Khin Yutyi Hla and nurses. The doctor said, “I arrived here just a week ago. After discharging duty at Loikaw General Hospital for two years, I was assigned here. I have decided to reside here, not in Loikaw.”

Furthermore, I visited Electric Workers' Dispensary (Lawpita) of Biluchaung No. 2 Hydropower Plant and met Health Assistant U Than Htaik Aung. He said that about 200 patients of local people and workers underwent treatments for malaria monthly.

I also visited Lawpita Waterfall. I have learned that while searching water resources for generating hydropower, the Myanmar and Japanese experts fortunately found the waterfall near Lawpita Village, 14 miles from Loikaw. The waterfall is 1650 feet high.

Biluchaung No. 2 Hydropower Plant and Lawpita Village are inter-related in all aspects. The cultivation tasks of the village and residents rely on electricity and drinking water from the power plant. Most of the retired workers reside in the village. Therefore, they can help solve some difficulties of the plant.

During a week - long visit to Lawpita Village, I have won friends from the village and the power plant. I firmly believe that I cannot forget the images of smiling faces of the local people and the magnificent power plant.

Oil leak found in post flood Tennessee

NASHVILLE, 5 May—A potentially damaging oil leak was found on Tuesday in flood ravaged Nashville, capital of southern US state Tennessee, and authorities were working to contain it.

The oil leak was found in flood waters near a Metro Water Services Biosolids Facility on the bank of Cumberland River.

Xinhua reporters at the scene saw workers in Metro Water Services uniforms laying fabric-like material and boom in the water and on the shore.

The slick has darkened grass on the shore.

Workers at the scene said they are not authorized to speak to media, and phone calls to Metro Water Services went unanswered.

Rachel Vance, a spokeswoman with Nashville Emergency Operations center, which is responsible for responding to the floods that has killed 10 people in Nashville since Saturday, confirmed to Xinhua it was indeed an oil leak, and authorities were still trying to determine its origin.

"The fabric like material was meant to absorb the oil," she said, adding the Metro Water Services was focused to "clean it up."

Poor glycemic control increases cancer risk

HONG KONG, 5 May—Not only do people with diabetes have a higher risk of cancer, poor glycemic control in diabetic patients also increases cancer risk, said the latest report released by the Chinese University of Hong Kong (CUHK) on Tuesday.

Prof. Ronald Ma, Associate Professor at the Department of Medicine and Therapeutics of CUHK, remarked, while more studies are needed to clarify the cause underlying these findings, results strongly suggest that by improving glycemic control, including the early use of insulin, cancer risk can be substantially reduced in these subjects.

A team of CUHK

researchers found that for every 1 percent increase in glycated hemoglobin (an indicator of average blood glucose control in the last 8 weeks), there was a 26 percent increased risk of all-site cancer. Moreover, patients treated with insulin had up to an 80 percent risk reduction in developing cancer compared to those with no insulin treatment.

The above study was published on the website of the leading diabetes journal, Diabetes, in May 2010.

Churchill memorabilia sold at London auction

LONDON, 5 May—Christie's said on Tuesday it was auctioning what it said was the most important private collection of letters and books related to Britain's World War II prime minister, Winston Churchill.

The collection—which included diary entries, letters, photographs and an unsmoked cigar—was amassed over 30 years by Forbes Inc. chief executive Steve Forbes, the auction house said.

It was expected to raise at least 1 million pounds ($1.5 million).

One of the items was Churchill's engagement diary, which Christie's says is the most important surviving source for his daily activities.

The diary was kept by the leader's private secretaries and recorded the Churchill's appointments from 1939 to 1945, including summits with Josef Stalin and Franklin D. Roosevelt.

It is valued at between 80,000 pounds and 120,000 pounds.

Other highlights included a first edition of Churchill's book "Arms and the Covenant" that the leader gave to Guy Burgess, the infamous double agent who spied for Britain during the war but was later revealed to have been recruited by the Soviets.

The collection will be sold in three parts, in London and New York. The first part is due to go under the hammer in London on 2 June.

Man steals electricity with meat hook

German police are investigating a man for theft after he siphoned electricity off a high-voltage overhead transmission line for one month with the help of an ordinary meat hook, authorities said on Tuesday.

The 36-year old man from Sibbesse in Lower Saxony concocted the plan to steal electricity after the power company cut him off for failure to pay his bills, police said.

The man attached a cable to the meat hook and tossed it onto an overhead power line. He then drew power from the transmission line to his home, located about

An employee of the utility noticed the meat hook during a routine check. Lach said the man was lucky he is still alive and warned copycats not to try it: "It will kill you," he said.

World's oldest person, 114, dies in Japan

The world's oldest person, a Japanese woman on the southern island of Okinawa, has died a week before her 115th birthday, a spokeswoman said.

Kama Chinen, who witnessed three centuries, died Sunday, according to Kaoru Shijima, a spokeswoman at her care facility.

Petite and gray-haired, Chinen spent her final years at a care centre in Nanjo on southeastern Okinawa. She was born on 10 May, 1895, according to the Gerontology Research Group, which tracks individuals of extremely old age.

Her family guarded her privacy closely, and details regarding her death were not released to the press — many Japanese newspapers didn't even give her name.

Chinen became the world's oldest known person when Gertrude Baines died in a Los Angeles hospital at age 115 in September.

The oldest human is now 114-year-old Eugénie Blanchard, a French woman born on 16 February 1896, according to the research group.

The group has validated 75 "supercentenarians" worldwide who are at least 110 years old, according to its website.

German police say pigs find WWII anti-tank weapon

German police said a couple of hungry pigs digging for food came nose-to-nose with a long-buried World War II anti-tank weapon. Police said Friday the two pigs found the single-shot "panzerfaust" on private land southwest of Dresden. The pigs' owner secured the animals in their stall then called police who were able to remove the weapon and destroy it.

The inexpensive and easy-to-operate panzerfaust was used extensively during the defence of Germany and through the rest of the war. Such finds are still relatively common, even 65 years after the end of the war.

Police seek bank robber who handed out $100 bills

Police in Columbus are looking for a man they say robbed a bank near downtown, then handed two $100 bills to passers-by as he ran away. FBI Special Agent Harry Trombitas said the man robbed a Huntington Bank branch early Monday afternoon after showing a teller a gun in his waistband. Trombitas said the mother and daughter from the Cleveland area were in town for a visit to Ohio State.

They took the money to the nearest bank which turned out to be the Huntington branch that was just robbed, and there told police what happened.

More drivers servicing own cars

More motorists are doing their own car servicing. INTERNET

LONDON, 5 May—More motorists are doing their own car servicing but most are not sure they can make a good job of it, a survey showed. As many as 35% of car owners now carry out their own servicing, the poll by automotive parts company Kwik-Fit found. But 69% said they were not confident of servicing their own vehicle, while there has been a rise in the number of cars going completely unserviced.

The poll of 2,000 UK adults revealed that people were more confident of their servicing ability if they had an older car. As many as 37% of those with cars from 1999 or earlier felt their vehicle was simple enough to self-service. Only 6% of those with cars from 2007 to 2010 expressed the same confidence.

Kwik-Fit customer services director David White said: "Modern cars are increasingly reliant on computer technology so there are fewer tasks under the bonnet suitable for an amateur enthusiast as they won't have the necessary equipment."

Is it healthier than you think?

WASHINGTON, 5 May—Elaine Murszewski is a self-proclaimed coffee addict. "I have been a coffee drinker for more years than I can remember," she says. "My coffeemaker must have an auto-start feature so that when I wake up, it's ready."

The 53-year-old former software company representative from Aurora, Colorado, never uses cream or milk because they just "spoil the taste." She prefers coffee over alcohol—even at a bar. Murszewski has a lot of company. More than half of adults in the US, or 54 percent, are habitual coffee drinkers, according to the National Coffee Association. In fact, 146 billion cups are consumed in the US each year, nearly three times more than tea.

But for years, coffee had a bad reputation. Linked in many people's minds with smoking, coffee is associated with over-cafeination and insomnia. The caffeine found in coffee can stay in your system for up to 12 hours, making it more difficult to fall asleep, and it affects your quality of sleep as well. Caffeine is also a diuretic, meaning that it increases urine output, which can lead to dehydration.

Energy drinks work as soon as they touch your tongue

AUCKLAND, 5 May—If you spit out an energy drink after taking a sip, it could still boost your strength. This pre-digestive effect is immediate and seems due to a newly discovered neural pathway that links taste buds to muscles. Nicholas Gant at the University of Auckland in New Zealand previously showed that mouth-rinsing and then spitting out a carbohydrate solution immediately improved performance at sprinting and cycling—even though it takes at least 10 minutes for carbohydrates to be digested and utilized by muscles.

This time, Gant's team had 16 participants tire out their biceps by flexing them for 11 minutes before rinsing their mouths with either a carbohydrate drink or a non-caloric, taste-matched one. One second after rinsing, the team applied transcranial magnetic stimulation to the participants' scalps, which aided the detection of activity in the motor cortex, a brain area known to send signals to biceps.—Internet

More than 116,000 women in the state public service are of childbearing age and are potential beneficiaries, The Sydney Morning Herald says.

Under a variation of the industrial award for NSW public servants, women will get 60 minutes a day in addition to meal breaks to breastfeed their babies or express milk, and access to a suitable space with comfortable seating. They will also be provided with access to a refrigerator, where practicable, to store the milk.—Internet

Effects of violent video games

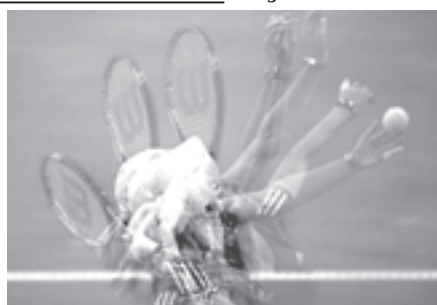

LOS ANGELES, 5 May — The US Supreme Court agreed last week to hear a case on California's attempt to restrict sales of violent video games to minors. Both the California lawmakers who approved the law in 2005 and the US 9th Circuit Court of Appeals judges who overturned the law in 2009 claimed that scientific research was on their side.

Lawmakers and judges aren't the only ones at odds over how to interpret research studies. Scientists who study media violence and its effects on children also are divided on what their results mean. "It's a highly polarized research field," says Chris Ferguson, a psychology professor at Texas A&M International University in Laredo.

Spain's second face transplant patient leaves hospital

MADRID, 5 May—The second person in Spain to receive a face transplant left hospital on Tuesday, local media said.

The patient, whose is identified only by his first name Rafael, has spent 14 weeks in the Hospital Universitario Virgen de Rocio in the Spanish city of Seville, after undergoing the operation on 26 January.

The operation, which lasted 30 hours, was carried out after a year of practice and preparation which involved testing on donated corpses and three-dimensional simulations.

Rafael, who suffered from benign tumors which had covered up to two thirds of his face, became the second person in Spain to undergo a face transplant. Spain carried out its first surgery of this kind in 2009.

Dr. Gonzalez Padilla, director of the Facial Surgery Clinical Unit at the hospital, said he was delighted with the patient's progress.

"He has been able to recover feeling in his lips, on his cheeks, he can tell the difference between cold and heat, and he has even been able to shave," Padilla said.

Microsoft losing share in browser market

BEIJING, 5 May—Microsoft is gradually losing its grip in the browser market with Internet users shifting to other platforms like Mozilla's Firefox and Google's Chrome browser.

According to new figures published by NetApplications, Microsoft's Internet Explorer (IE) web browser, now accounts for less than 60 percent of the market, down from 95 percent at its peak in 2003.

Meanwhile Firefox has risen to nearly a quarter. Google's Chrome browser remains a distant third, however it has widened the gap over Apple's Safari. Chrome now accounts for a 6.7 percent share of the market and has risen sharply in last year by nearly 2 percent Microsoft's loss of market share is largely due to concerns over security.

Messi brace pushes Barcelona closer to Spanish league title

MADRID, 5 May—Lionel Messi netted his 30th and 31st league goals of the season as Barcelona inched closer to retaining their La Liga title with a 4-1 home win over relegation-threatened Tenerife at Camp Nou on Tuesday.

The Catalans are now four points clear of Real Madrid at the summit with just two games left, but Real have a game in hand and must win at fourth-placed Real Mallorca on Wednesday to keep their title hopes alive.

Messi put Barcelona ahead on 17 minutes and added a second in the final minute to stay on course to win the Pichichi crown for the league's top scorer, as he is currently six goals ahead of his nearest rival, Real striker Gonzalo Higuain.

Argentine Roman Martinez stunned the champions by equalizing for Tenerife shortly before half-time following an error from home captain Carles Puyol. But second-half goals from Bojan Krkic (in the 63rd minutes)
