Plantations for greening Bago Yoma mountain range

Byline & Photos: Khin Maung Than (Sethmu)

Now, relevant departments and local people are on the same page to achieve the goal of greening Bago Yoma mountain ranges in central Myanmar. They are expediting the tasks year by year in establishing plantations of teak and other species and plantations for firewood for villages.

The Forest Department under the Ministry of Forestry is undertaking the plans for greening Bago Yoma mountain ranges at the region, district and township levels. Thayawady District in Bago Region has hurled itself into the long-term project since 2004-2005.

As part of the drive, a 10-acre teak plantation was set up at block No (127) in Thewah Forest Reserve, about nine miles from Thayawady, to get rid of the slash and burn farming. In Natchaung Forest Reserve, teak plantations with a total area of 150 acres were founded one and a half years ago.

In Thayawady Township watershed area, over 60,000 saplings of various species were planted in Thonze and Kanni forest reserves in 2004-2005; and 100,000 saplings in Thonze Forest Reserve in 2005-2006. In Kanni Forest Reserve, 150 acres were put under trees

Beware of hypertension

Everybody wants to enjoy longevity and good health. The Ministry of Health constantly reminds the people about prevention of common diseases and ways to improve our health.

Hypertension is one of the common diseases the people should be well aware of. Today, it is estimated that over one billion people have hypertension worldwide. High blood pressure is one of the leading causes of such diseases as heart attack, paralytic stroke and kidney failure.

Those with hypertension may die without any signs and symptoms. So, everyone should ensure whether they have high blood pressure or not. Accelerated hypertension is associated with headache, drowsiness, vision disorders, nausea and easy tiredness. Therefore, we should regularly have our blood pressure checked, and if we have mild to moderate blood pressure, we must have our blood pressure taken regularly; we must be in diet and take medical treatment.

High salt intake is one of the major causes of hypertension. Accordingly, we should reduce salt content in the diet. According to the World Health Organization, the amount of salt a person needs a day is just a tea spoonful.

We should maintain a healthy diet and it is always advisable to avoid salted foods, rich foods and sweets. We should consume vegetables more. We can reduce the risk of hypertension by maintaining body weight, avoid drinking excessively and smoking, taking exercise regularly and avoiding stress levels.

The people are, therefore, reminded to stay away from the causes of high blood pressure in order for good health and longevity.

Iraqi soldiers killed by bomb; US-Iraq raid kills seven

MOSUL, 15 Sept—Nine Iraqi soldiers were killed on Wednesday when a roadside bomb destroyed a bus in the volatile north, while at least seven people were killed in a US-Iraqi raid in western Iraq, security sources said.

The US military said the overnight counterterrorism raid in the western city of Falluja, in which at least seven people died, was Iraqi-planned and -led. A local police commander said one of the dead was a former Iraqi army colonel.

A police major said the gunbattle lasted four hours. The two police officials asked not to be identified.

At least four other people, including a 90-year-old woman, were wounded in the raid, which took place in the Hay Jubail District of Falluja in western Anbar Province, the sources said.

Australian troops to stay in Afghanistan until mission done

CANBERRA, 15 Sept—Australian Foreign Minister Kevin Rudd on Wednesday said Australian forces will remain in Afghanistan for as long as it takes them to complete their mission.

In a press conference in Canberra, Rudd said Australia's commitment would remain contingent on "the fulfillment of our mission statement".

Australia's mission in Afghanistan includes training the Afghan forces to the point they can take responsibility for security in Oruzgan and helping the provincial government to become self-reliant.

The United States has a plan to begin withdrawing by mid-2011.

"Those are the benchmarks which would then determine when we would withdraw our military effort," Rudd said, ahead of leaving to Pakistan as one of his first tasks as foreign minister.

"We've been clear about this in the past. That is the benchmark against which we'll measure our policy end-points in the future."

The comments came on the back of one of the bloodiest periods for Australian forces in Afghanistan, which is now in the midst of its fighting season. So far this year, 10 Australian soldiers have been killed in Afghanistan.—Xinhua

30 militants killed in Afghanistan

KABUL, 15 Sept—Up to 30 militants have been killed in fighting in Afghanistan ahead of this week's parliamentary elections, which the Taliban want to undermine, NATO and Afghan officials said.

The military alliance said that up to 23 militants were killed in action in southern Helmand Province on Monday and three in eastern Wardak Province on Tuesday. An Afghan official said four Taliban were killed on Tuesday in southeastern Zabul Province.

There were no reports of casualties among joint NATO-Afghan forces.

Attacks and clashes are rising amid an allied offensive aimed at suppressing the continuing Taliban militancy.

Meanwhile, tensions were rising ahead of Saturday's parliamentary elections. The Taliban has vowed to target polling stations and warned Afghans not to participate in what it calls a sham vote.

NATO said the coalition forces killed three "known manufacturers" of improvised explosive devices in Wardak, just west of capital Kabul.

Skeleton of 18th century whale found by archaeologists in London

LONDON, 15 Sept—The skeleton of a huge whale, thought to have been butchered for its meat, bone and oils 300 years ago, has been discovered by archaeologists on the banks of London's River Thames. The remains of the headless beast, the now rare North Atlantic Right whale, were found submerged in the thick foreshore mud at Greenwich, an historic maritime centre in the east of the city. "This is probably the largest single 'object' ever to have been found on an archaeological dig in London," said Francis Grew, a senior curator at the Museum of London.

"Whales occasionally swim into the Thames, and there are historical accounts of the enormous public excitement they engendered." Historians believe the creature, estimated to have been 16 metres (52 feet) long, may have foundered in the river in the 17th to 18th centuries, or could have been caught by one of the many whaling ships that operated from close by. The skeletal remains, which weigh half a ton and are up to four meters wide have been perfectly preserved by the anaerobic nature of the sediment. Experts say the whale's resting place is inconsistent with a natural beaching and that it was probably dragged tail-first up onto the river bank to be butchered.

Whale oil was used for domestic lighting, while whalebone (baleen) had multiple uses, including for the manufacture of fancy jeweler, combs, riding crops and even ladies' corsets. Most of the items would have been taken from the front of the carcass which has been hacked off. A piece of missing bone from one of the massive vertebrae suggests the animal may have been harpooned, or that gaff-hooks were used to secure the carcass after slaughter.

Why women prefer "chill" men? Biology explains

BEIJING, 15 Sept—Calm, collected guys seem more attractive to women in real life, and now scientists think they have found out the biology behind it, said media reports Wednesday. The findings will be published online Proceedings of the Royal Society B. The researchers recruited 39 healthy young male students from the same university and measured their cortisol and testosterone levels, and then had 42 straight female students from a different university rate photos of these men for attractiveness, masculinity and health.

Men with low cortisol levels were often rated as more attractive than guys with high cortisol levels. Testosterone levels were not significantly linked with attractiveness, masculinity or health.

The researchers also had 43 heterosexual female university students look at the composite images at times both inside and outside the fertile phases of their menstrual cycles. This enabled the scientists to see what effects female hormones and fertility might have on perceptions of male desirability. When women were in the fertile phase of their menstrual cycle—that is, when they were more likely to get pregnant—those men with low cortisol levels (so were likely more chill) were seen as more attractive than men with high cortisol levels.

"We speculate, then, that males with low cortisol possess something desirable that women seek to secure for their offspring," one of the researchers Fhionna Moore said. "This could be, for example, good health or a healthy response to stress."

Google fires engineer for violating privacy policies

Google says that it has dismissed an engineer for violating the Internet giant's privacy policies. Google did not provide any details about the engineer's offences but the website Gawker.com said he was fired in July for allegedly accessing the accounts of four teenagers without their consent.—INTERNET

NEW YORK, 15 Sept—Google said that it had dismissed an engineer for violating the Internet giant's privacy policies.

"We dismissed David Barksdale for breaking Google's strict internal privacy policies," Bill Coughran, Google senior vice president of engineering, said in a statement on Tuesday.

Google did not provide any details about Barksdale's offences but the website Gawker.com said the 27-year-old engineer was fired in July for allegedly accessing the accounts of four teenagers without their consent.

Coughran said Google takes "seriously" any breach of its privacy rules.

"We carefully control the number of employees who have access to our systems and we regularly update our security controls," he said.

"For example, we are significantly increasing the amount of time we spend auditing our logs to ensure the controls are effective," Coughran said.

"That said, a limited number of people will always need to access these systems if we are to operate them properly, which is why we take any breach so seriously," he said.

The firing comes amid a continuing debate in the United States over the handling of private information collected by Google, the world's leading Web search engine, and Facebook, which has more than 500 million members.

Nikon's new D7000 DSLR to replace the D90

NEW YORK, 15 Sept—Continuing the Fall barrage of camera announcements, Nikon announced its newest DSLR on Tuesday, the D7000. This camera will replace the popular D90 in the company's DSLR line-up. The D7000 has a 16.2 megapixel CMOS sensor, dual memory card slots, and a 39-point autofocus system.

Like the Nikon's D3100 and Sony's a55, the D7000 shoots 1080p HD video with full autofocus capabilities while it's recording. At the touch of the dedicated movie button, video records as 1080p at 24 fps or as 720p at 24 or 30 fps. The camera can record up to 20 minutes of video at a time. While in video mode, it can autofocus on and track up to 35 faces. Clips can even be edited or trimmed in-camera.

The addition of dual card slots will allow shooters to split up video and still shots, split up raw and JPEG files, or record to two separate cards simultaneously for an instant back-up. The camera records to SD, SDHC, or SDXC cards.

Low light images get a boost in this model, with an ISO range of 100 to 6400 that's expandable to 25,600 in Hi-2 mode. Sports shooters can capture up to 6 frames per second (fps) in burst mode.

The sturdy camera body has a 3-inch LCD screen that tilts 170-degrees, and an optical viewfinder with 100% coverage. Continuing the trend of increased in-camera image editing, the D7000 can process raw files in-camera and apply a host of retouching effects, including tilt-shift and colour filters.

Non-smoking spouse will help Asian women live longer

The women in the study were followed up for around nine years, during which 2,860 of them died, 1,351 of cancer and 775 of cardiovascular disease.

Mass screening for prostate brings few benefits

PARIS, 15 Sept—Mass screening of men for prostate cancer has little impact on the toll from the disease and carries a risk of over-treatment, according to a review published by the British Medical Journal (BMJ) on Wednesday.

University of Florida professor Philipp Dahm looked at the outcome of six trials in which populations of men were tested either using a digital rectal examination or a blood test for an antigen linked to prostate cancer, or were untested.

Prostate cancer is the commonest non-skin cancer among men worldwide and, after lung tumours, is the second biggest cause of death from cancer among men in the United States. Most cases occur among men aged in their sixties.

Many countries have routine screening programmes for men in their middle age, but this policy is controversial.

One of the problems is that the so-called PSA antigen test, now 20 years old, cannot distinguish between low-risk tumours and aggressive lesions that are often fatal.

Antigen levels can also fluctuate according to the individual and may be skewed by prostate inflammation.

As a result, experts looking at systematic screening have squabbled over whether the benefit of detecting men in danger outweighs the potential harm of over-diagnosing and over-treating men who are healthy.

weight or obese, had higher waist-to-hip ratios, self-reported that they did not regularly exercise, and ate less fruit and vegetables than survivors, the study published by the Public Library of Science (PLOS) found.

But the women who died were also more likely than survivors to have had a spouse who smoked, and that was a tougher nut to crack.

"Environmental tobacco smoke is a particularly important exposure for women living in China and other Asian countries, given the high smoking prevalence among Asian men," the study said.

"Change in exposure to spousal smoking may start with increased awareness by both women and their husbands about the detrimental health effects of smoking," it said.

Boeing said it will provide engineering for hardware and software on the US part of the space station and for some hardware and software available to international partners. The extension begins with the new federal fiscal year on 1 Oct.

Boeing's work will include oversight of maintenance, monitoring system performance and other duties. It will cover buying spare parts and modifying current systems.

The work will be done at NASA facilities in Houston, Cape Canaveral, Fla, and Huntsville, Ala; and at Boeing sites in Houston, Huntsville, and Huntington Beach, Calif.

Boeing's programme manager for the space station, Joy Bryant, said the work will set the stage to keep the space station operating until 2020 and possibly through 2028.

Shares of Boeing fell $1.43, or 2.2 percent, to close at $62.76.

NEW YORK, 15 Sept—Best Buy Co, the world's largest consumer-electronics retailer, plans to start selling Apple Inc's iPad in all of its US stores on 26 Sept to boost holiday sales, Chief Executive Officer Brian Dunn said.

Expanding iPad sales to 1,093 US stores from 673 outlets reflects Best Buy's efforts to capitalize on the growing popularity of tablet computers, Dunn said by telephone today from Richfield, Minnesota, where the company is based. "We see the iPad as the magnificent shining light in what will become a whole new category, and that is tablets," Dunn said. "In many cases, it's an incremental device. In some cases, it's a substitute device for netbooks. We think that's going to stimulate a lot of customer interest."

Apple sold 3.27 million iPads last quarter, spurring rival personal-computer makers to release similar devices. Hewlett-Packard Co plans to make a tablet device with Microsoft Corp's Windows this year. Higher demand for mobile computers, including tablets, helped boost Best Buy's second-quarter profit by 61 percent to $254 million, or 60 cents a share, topping the average analysts' estimate of 44 cents. Best Buy climbed $2.08, or 6 percent, to $36.73 at 4 pm in New York Stock Exchange composite trading, the most in four months. The shares have slumped 6.9 percent this year.

Police find nothing after Paris bomb alerts

PARIS, 15 Sept— Not long after the Eiffel Tower and the square under it were evacuated after a bomb alert on Tuesday night, one Paris railway station near the tower also reported emergent evacuation, but police later confirmed they were false alerts.

Local reports said the first alert was triggered either by a threatening call or the discovery of a suspect package.

However, policemen searching the tower and nearby places told Xinhua reporters that they didn't find anything suspected at the site, adding that the site will open to the public soon. The evacuation began shortly before 9 pm local time as heavily armed policemen appeared ordering people, mostly tourists, to stay away from the Paris landmark, as well as from the square under the tower. Three coincident explosions rock south Yemen, separatists blamed SANAA, 15 Sept — Three huge, simultaneous explosions rocked the capital of Yemen's troubled southern province al-Dhalee, the country's Interior Ministry said on Tuesday.

In a statement posted on its website, the ministry said the explosions took place late on Monday when some separatist gunmen blew up explosive devices in three remote places of al-Dhalee City.

The ministry said no casualty was reported, but the explosions shook up local residents and interrupted stability and security of the city. Also on Monday, a group of al-Qaeda gunmen blew up a pipeline transferring liquefied natural gas (LNG) from Yemeni Marib Province to the Belhaf Port Terminal for export in the southern Shabwa Province on Monday, police and official of Yemen Gas Co told Xinhua.

The provincial police official in Belhaf said that the explosion, which took place in Shabwa Province, caused a huge fire and smoke as the pipeline was badly damaged and the LNG supply was cut off.

AMSTERDAM, 15 Sept—Dutch police say they have arrested and fined an intoxicated American pilot who was preparing to take off with a passenger jet.

The National Police Corps has not identified the pilot or his airline, but says he is a 52-year-old captain from Woodbury, New Jersey. He does not fly for a Dutch airline, according to a police statement published Tuesday.

Police say they arrested the man in the cockpit of his plane after an anonymous tip. A breath test found he had a blood alcohol content of 0.023 percent — a hair above the legal limit in the Netherlands.

The pilot was fined euro700 ($900) and released, the statement said. The flight was cancelled.

Big egg producer had history of contamination

Eggs sit in an egg carton. A major US egg producer tied to a recall of 500 million eggs over a salmonella outbreak.

INTERNET

WASHINGTON, 15 Sept—A major US egg producer tied to a recall of 500 million eggs over a salmonella outbreak repeatedly tested positive for the disease-causing bacteria over the past two years, lawmakers said Tuesday.

The 426 positives over the 2008-2010 period included 73 samples that were potentially positive for Salmonella Enteritidis, the same strain that has sickened 1,519 people and prompted the recall, they said.

The disclosure came in a letter from top House Energy and Commerce Committee Democrats Henry Waxman and Bart Stupak to the owner of Iowa's Wright County Egg, Austin DeCoster, who was set to testify before the panel on 12 September.

"As you prepare for the hearing, we ask that you come ready to address questions about disturbing environmental sample results at Wright County Egg," the lawmakers wrote. US health officials have blamed contaminated chicken feed as the likely culprit in the outbreak of salmonella, which is spread most often by the consumption of food contaminated by animal fecal matter. The microbe usually flourishes within the intestinal tracts of fowl and mammals. Some 1,700 people have fallen ill in the United States from salmonella found in fresh eggs between 1 May and 25 August, according to the US Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's food-borne diseases division.

Venezuela sends plane to Trinidad to fly home castaways

CARACAS, 15 Sept—The Venezuelan government said Tuesday that it has sent a chartered plane to Trinidad and Tobago to bring back home a group of 10 Venezuelans who were rescued after going missing at sea last Saturday.

"On Tuesday night, a plane went to bring back the compatriots rescued in Trinidad and Tobago," Venezuelan Interior and Justice Minister Tarek El Aissami said in a Twitter message.

El Aissami gave no further details. He said earlier in the day that the missing Venezuelans had been rescued by a Trinidad and Tobago fishing boat.

According to local media reports, three vessels sailing from Tositgos Archipelago to Margarita Island off the northeast of Venezuela went missing on Saturday. People aboard were attending a traditional Venezuelan celebration for Del Valle Virgin, the patroness of eastern Venezuela.

On Monday, Venezuelan authorities rescued 22 people aboard two boats off Margarita Island. On Tuesday, a small fishing boat of Trinidad and Tobago found and rescued the 10 Venezuelans. According to Venezuela's embassy in Trinidad and Tobago, the 10 were all "safe and sound."—Xinhua

Over 4,000 families flee flood in southern Philippines

MANILA, 15 Sept—Flash flood triggered by heavy rain have displaced over 4,000 households in the southern Philippines, authorities said on Wednesday.

Most of the homeless flood victims came from the nine low lying villages in Sultan Kudarat Province, regional disaster operation chief of Department of Social Welfare and Development said.

"Officials are still assessing the total damages brought by the natural disaster. There were no reported fatalities," he said.

Meanwhile, at least 500 people fled their homes as flood water engulfed low lying villages in the southern city of Koronadal.

The local officials of Koronadal said five people were killed due to landslides in the past two days.

The heavy downpour has persisted since Monday and the Philippine Atmospheric, Geophysical and Astronomical Service Administration (PAGASA) on Wednesday has announced that the prevailing intertropical convergence zone will continue to bring heavy rain and frequent thunderstorm over the western and southern Philippines.

Meanwhile, PAGASA said the active low pressure area located east of the northern Philippines has already developed into a tropical depression and was named "Inday."

Mexico ups security on bicentennial attack concern

MEXICO CITY, 15 Sept—Mexico's capital will stage its grand bicentennial celebration Wednesday with military helicopters buzzing overhead, heavily armed federal agents and metal detectors. In some cities, the traditional festivities highlighted by shouts of "Viva Mexico!" won't happen at all because of fears of what the drug cartels might do.

The 200th anniversary of Mexico's 1810 independence uprising comes at a time when drug gangs have adopted increasingly brutal and seemingly indiscriminate tactics, including the massacre of 72 migrants last month.

The possibility that they might target bicentennial events is taken seriously enough that a half-dozen cities and towns have canceled celebrations for security reasons, others have scaled them back drastically, and most are taking extra security precautions or urging people to stay at home and watch the ceremonies on television.

"There is psychosis among people here because of what has happened, there is fear, the parents don't want to participate, the students don't want to participate," said Mayor Victor Luque Clemente, whose town of Guadalupe Distrito Bravos has canceled its "grito," the traditional celebration, in which a local leader shouts a series of "vivas!" to the country's founding fathers.

In areas with less drug violence where cities have decided to hold public events, the celebrations are expected to be bigger than usual because of the bicentennial. The turnout in Mexico City alone is expected to be well over 100,000.

Julia major hurricane; TS Karl headed to Mexico

MIAMI, 15 Sept—Julia has intensified rapidly in the open Atlantic into a major hurricane but Tropical Storm Karl in the northwestern Caribbean could do more damage sooner along the Yucatan Peninsula.

Forecasters late Tuesday said Karl had maximum sustained winds of about 45 mph (75 kph) and is located about 185 miles (295 kph) east of Chetumal, Mexico. The US National Hurricane Centre in Miami says the strengthening storm's center could be over the Yucatan on Wednesday.

Mexico's government has issued a tropical storm warning for the peninsula from Chetumal northward to Cabo Catoche. Parts of Belize are under a tropical storm watch. Meanwhile, Julia had maximum winds near 125 mph (205 kph), making it a Category 3 storm. Also far from land over the Atlantic, Hurricane Igor's top winds increased to 155 mph (250 kph).

Smokeless tobacco products not 'safer'

CHICAGO, 15 Sept—Smokeless tobacco—snuff and chewing tobacco—is not a safer alternative to smoking and should not be used to quit smoking, US researchers say.

Mariann Piano, lead writer of the smokeless tobacco policy statement of the American Heart Association, says smokeless tobacco should not be used as an alternative to cigarettes or for smoking cessation. "No tobacco product is safe to consume," Mariann Piano, a professor at the University of Illinois at Chicago, says in a statement. "Smokeless tobacco products are harmful and addictive – that does not translate to a better alternative."

The idea that smokeless tobacco products may be a better alternative to cigarettes is based in part on the Swedish study that found men decreased smoking from 1976 to 2002, which corresponded to an increase in the use of smokeless tobacco.

However, a recent US study found no reduction in smoking rates among people using smokeless tobacco products. Nicotine gum or a nicotine-releasing patch placed on the skin are safer alternatives compared to using smokeless tobacco products, Piano says.

Long-term use of smokeless tobacco products increases the risk of heart attack or fatal stroke, several studies have found, Piano said.

The study is published online in Circulation: Journal of the American Heart Association.

Many adults fear vaccine needles

DALLAS, 15 Sept—Many people—not just children—have a fear of needles but that shouldn't keep adults from getting vaccinated, a US health psychologist says.

"It's very common to have a fear of needles," Dr Deborah Wiebe, a health psychologist at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Centre in Dallas, says in a statement.

"For most people, these are manageable fears that can be addressed through a variety of simple pain-management strategies."

Some ways adults can help ease needle anxiety:

- Some people prefer to know what to expect. Ask the health care professional to explain each step. An accurate, gentle reply such as, "You'll get a shot in the arm. It will sting briefly, then it will be over," can be reassuring.
- Imagine being on a relaxing beach, feeling the warmth of the sun and hearing the waves come in and go out.

- Take slow, deep breaths while concentrating on relaxing muscles.

"Different strategies work for different people, so if one thing doesn't work, try another," Wiebe says.

Grain rots in India as millions starve

NEW DELHI, 15 Sept—In India, thousands of tons of excess grain have been rotting away, officials said, as millions of people are starving.

Following news reports of the rotting grain, the government admitted that more than 67,000 tons—enough to feed 190,000 people for a month—had rotted outside overflowing granaries. Officials were ordered by the Supreme Court to distribute to the poor 17.8 million tons of grain that was in imminent danger of rotting. The government, however, has yet to work out how it will distribute the grain, The Hindustan newspaper reports.

With one-fifth of the country's population of more than 1 billion going hungry and nearly half of its children malnourished, the rotting grain issue calls attention to unresolved problems in India's grain storage and distribution infrastructure. The Indian government has enough storage for 15 million tons of grain and rented space to hold an additional 10 million tons. But in 2008-09, 55 million tons were procured and ended up being stored in the open, with no protection from the weather and vermin, Inter Press Service reports.

Devinder Sharma, a New Delhi food and trade policy analyst said free distribution of rotting grain to the poor should only serve as a one-time solution for the current surplus and should be limited to the 150 districts considered desperately poor.

Instead, to guarantee food security and fair prices for farmers, he said the solution lies in a system of local production and storage starting at the village level and moving up to the state level.

“Free distribution will lead to political problems with every politician trying to corner stocks for distribution in his state, if not constituency,” Sharma told IPS.

Calif blast responders first thought jet crashed

Utility workers walk past a destroyed car in San Bruno, Calif on 14 Sept, 2010 where a pipeline exploded on Thursday.—INTERNET

SAN BRUNO, 15 Sept—It took almost a half-hour to determine that the massive fireball consuming a San Francisco suburb wasn't a plane crash.

First-responders rushing against the fleeing crowds initially believed a jetliner from nearby San Francisco International Airport had gone down in the San Bruno neighbourhood or that terrorists had struck — or both. “I was concerned about a secondary explosion. I didn't know what we had,” San Bruno Fire Capt Bill Forester recalled Tuesday. “I breathed a sigh of relief when I saw it was not an airplane — there would have been more victims.”

What turned out to be a gas line rupture last Thursday fueled a roaring blaze so intense that it cracked windshields of the closest fire engines and sent four firefighters to the hospital for smoke inhalation. The blast also broke a water main, leaving all hydrants in the area dry.

“It was a sinking feeling,” Forester said. “We needed massive water for this thing—and we discovered there was no water.” While residents helped crews drag hoses from nearly 4,000 feet away to supply water, other first-responders, including South San Francisco police Lt Ron Carlino, pushed into smoke-filled homes to check for survivors. Searing heat prevented them from getting too close to the heart of the fire.

To save tigers, protect key breeding areas

JAKARTA, 15 Sept—Conservationists must protect tiger populations in a few concentrated breeding grounds in Asia instead of trying to safeguard vast, surrounding landscapes, if they want to save the big cats from extinction, scientists said.

Only about 3,500 tigers are left in the wild worldwide, less than one third of them breeding females, according to one of the authors of the study, John Robinson of the Wildlife Conservation Society. Much has been done to try to save the world's largest cat — threatened by over-hunting, habitat loss and the wildlife trade — but their numbers have continued to spiral downward for nearly two decades.

That's in part because conservation efforts are increasingly diverse and often aimed at improving habitats outside protected areas, according to the study, published in on Tuesday's issue of the peer-reviewed PLoS Biology journal.—Internet

Trapped Chile miner's wife gives birth to daughter

LONDON, 15 Sept—The wife of one of the 33 miners trapped underground in Chile has given birth to a baby girl.

Ariel Ticona, who has been trapped underground for 40 days, has asked his wife to name the girl Esperanza, Spanish for hope.

The couple already have two sons together.

Relatives recorded the delivery, and say they will send the video down through one of the shafts being used to ferry supplies to the trapped men.

Before the main access tunnel to the San Jose copper and gold mine collapsed on 5 August, Mr Ticona, 29, had promised to be in the delivery room for the birth.

When he was told that his rescue and that of the other 32 men trapped 700m below ground could take up to four months, he asked his wife Elizabeth Segovia to record the occasion.

World War II Dutch famine babies' brains 'aging faster'

LONDON, 15 Sept—People who were still developing in the womb at the time of severe World War II food shortages did worse than others of similar ages at mental tests almost 60 years later, researchers say.

Scientists, writing in the PNAS journal, said the 1944 Dutch "famine" may have accelerated brain ageing.

They studied nearly 300 adults who had been foetuses at the time.

UK experts said even severe morning sickness was unlikely to cause a similar level of malnutrition today. The so-called Hangerwinter was a six-month period during which food deliveries to the people of the northern Netherlands were restricted by German occupying forces.

Ageing populations and fewer workers strain pensions

LONDON, 15 Sept—The world is getting older. In most countries, the population is ageing.

That inevitably has dramatic consequences for pensions and other arrangements for supporting older people.

There are two factors behind the trend. The first is clearly, in itself, good news. People are living longer.

A child born in 1960 could expect to live for 52 years. Today, the figure is 69 years. By the middle of the century, it is likely to be higher still, well over 70.

At the same time, people are having fewer children. In 1960, there were 33 births for every 1,000 people. The number has fallen to 20, and it is expected to decline further as people in the developing world have fewer children.

That, too, is arguably good news. It should lead to the global population stabilizing, although at a substantially higher level than it is now.

Libya sorry for shooting at Italian fishing boat

The Ariete was peppered with bullet holes.—INTERNET

LONDON, 15 Sept—Libya has apologized to Italy after one of its patrol boats fired machine-gun shots at a Sicilian fishing trawler.

The trawler returned to Sicily on Sunday pock-marked with bullet holes. None of its 10 crew were injured.

The patrol boat was one of six supplied by Italy to Libya to help prevent migrants crossing the Mediterranean.

Italian ministers called the incident "serious", but said it was a mistake and would not affect relations between the two countries.

Several Italian military personnel were on board the patrol boat providing technical assistance to the Libyans, according to Italian Interior Minister Roberto Maroni.—Internet

Watchdog warns over fire service disruption

LONDON, 15 Sept—Fire services in England hit by strike action or a flu pandemic would struggle to cope with a major emergency, such as a natural disaster or a terror attack, a spending watchdog has warned.

An Audit Commission study of England's 46 fire authorities found the safety of the public would be at greater risk.

It looked at circumstances such as power failures and industrial action.

It found fewer than one third of services could guarantee specialist equipment in such situations.

Senators go two rounds to promote Thai boxing

Thai boxers and senators Direk Tungfang, 64, left, kicks at Payap Tongchuen, 59, during their fight at a temporary boxing ring in the compound of Parliament in Bangkok, Thailand, on 13 Sept, 2010. The senators fought in Muay Thai, or Thai kick boxing style for two rounds in a campaign to preserve the country's martial art.

Two Thai senators fought it out Monday in front of Parliament, but this was no political grudge match — they wanted to promote traditional Thai kickboxing.

"It's good that I can still stand," 59-year-old

Payap Tongchuen joked after donning gloves and trunks and going two rounds with Direk Tungfang in a boxing ring set up for the occasion in front of the parliament building in Bangkok. The referee declared the fighters — both former professional boxers — joint victors.

Spectators thought Direk, 64, from Nonthaburi Province just north of Bangkok, outclassed his opponent from the eastern province of Sa Kaeo, knocking him down once. Both men sit in the upper house where lawmakers have no party affiliation.

Billionaire puts money where his true heart lies Billionaire Chen Guangbiao, chairman of Jiangsu Huangpu Renewable Resources Utilization Co Ltd, volunteers as a traffic warden on 7 Sept at a road crossing in downtown Nanjing, capital of Jiangsu Province.

It was 1:30 in the morning and Chinese billionaire Chen Guangbiao wasn't able to fall asleep.

He had an important decision to make.

Rising from his bed, he sat and penned a letter, in which he promised to give his entire fortune to charity after he leaves the world.

It was, effectively, an acceptance letter to an invitation from fellow billionaires Bill Gates and Warren Buffett to attend a charity dinner on 29 Sept in Beijing, as well as a response to earlier pledges they made in the United States - agreed to by 38 other billionaires - to give, at least, half of their wealth to charity after their deaths.

Restaurant puts $85 bug plate on menu

A New York restaurant said it is holding an event for people who want to enjoy a four-course meal consisting entirely of insects.

The Brooklyn Kitchen said diners at the restaurant Saturday will be offered the chance to eat Mexican-style prepared caterpillars, mealworms and moth larvae for $85, the New York Daily News reported on Tuesday. Taylor Erkinen, owner of the restaurant, said only 40 of the meals will be served and about half of the slots had been filled as of Tuesday.

"People are kind of interested, but also skeeved out," she said of public reaction to the offer. She said diners will be given mescal, a Mexican liquor, to wash down the bugs.

Jay-Z, Eminem and all their friends rock New York

NEW YORK, 15 Sept—Jay-Z and Eminem kicked off the first concert at the new Yankee Stadium on Monday with a dizzying spectacle worthy of rap's two biggest stars.

A menacing burst of rain before the show yielded to clear skies, foreshadowing an evening of ups and downs, missteps and triumph and a relentless verbal assault during a once-in-a-lifetime showcase featuring some of the biggest names in pop music. Billed as the Home and Home tour, the show was part of a double-header featuring both headliners in their respective hometowns. Prior to Labour Day weekend, they appeared at a two-night stand at Comerica Park in Detroit, where Eminem headlined; Monday night it was Jay-Z's turn. That's the extent of the "tour," which made this such a hard ticket to come by.

Nicole Kidman sweats new producer role

TORONTO, 15 Sept—Nicole Kidman was feeling "very exposed and very nervous" as a first-time producer promoting her new film "Rabbit Hole" at a major film festival, she said on Tuesday.

The actress, who won an Academy Award in 2002 for her portrayal of early twentieth century English novelist Virginia Woolf in "The Hours," literally sweated through a news conference at the Toronto film festival.

"The reason I'm wearing this jacket is because I'm sweating under here and I can't take it off 'cause this shirt shows it," Kidman said.—Internet

George Michael jailed for drug-drive offence

LONDON, 15 Sept—British singer George Michael was sentenced to eight weeks in jail on Tuesday for driving under the influence of cannabis when he crashed his car into a north London shop in July.

Michael, wearing a grey suit and black tie, sighed as judge John Perkins sentenced him at a London court, while his long-term partner Kenny Goss threw his head into his hands.

The singer was told he would serve four weeks in prison and spend the remainder on license.

"It does not appear that you took proper steps to deal with what is clearly an addiction to cannabis," Perkins told Highbury Corner Magistrates' Court.

"That's a mistake which puts you and, on this occasion, the public at risk," he was quoted by the Press Association as saying.—Reuters

NEW YORK, 15 Sept—World number one Rafael Nadal completed a career Grand Slam title sweep by capturing his first US Open crown, defeating Serbian third seed Novak Djokovic 6-4, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2.

The 24-year-old Spanish left-hander overwhelmed Djokovic with uncanny shotmaking to win the 1.7 million-dollar top prize as well as his third consecutive Grand Slam crown and his ninth Grand Slam title overall.

Nadal became the seventh man to complete a career Grand Slam sweep, joining Roger Federer, Andre Agassi, Roy Emerson, Rod Laver, Don Budge and Fred Perry in having won Wimbledon and the US, French and Australian Open titles.

"It's a dream to have the career Grand Slam, but this is more dream to have the US Open," Nadal said.—Internet
